3240 3 Melos, who overcame the people of Sardis. 12.

3252 4 Candaules, who ſhewing his wife naked to Gyges, was by him ſlain; who marying his wife, ſucceeded him in his kingdom. The whole ſtory is this. Candaules had to his wife a woman of unparalleld beauty. And ſuppoſing the greatneſs of his happineſs, not to conſiſt ſo much in his own fruition, as the notice which others might take of it; intended to ſhew her in natures bravery to Gyges, the Maſter of his herds. Gyges at firſt diſſwaded him from an attempt ſo fooliſh; but ſeeing no perſwaſion coulſd prevail, he condeſcended. When he had ſeen the naked Queen, and was ready to depart, Candaules cried to him, Eſto fidelis, Gyges: which words the Queen marking, and ſeeing the back of Gyges as he left the chamber, the next morning ſent for him: When holding a poynyard in her hand, ſhe gave him his choice, either preſently to be ſlain, or elſe to kill the King, and take her to wife, with the Kingdom of Lydia for her Dower. Of which two evils he made choice of that which he thought the beſt, and ſo killed Candaules.

5 Gyges, the firſt of this new line, added Ionia to his other dominions. A Prince of ſo great wiſdom, for the times he lived in, that all other Kings his neighbours ſate as (it were) in the light to him; and he as in the dark to them: occaſioning thereby the fiction of a Ring he had, by which made inviſible, when and as often as he pleaſed.

3305 6 Ardis II. the ſon of Gyges. 37.

3342 7 Sardiattes. 15.

3357 8 Haliattes II. of whom before. 57.

3406 9 Cræſus, the laſt King of Lydia, ſubdued Doris, and Æolis; after which victories, he was overcome by Cyrus, King of Perſia: in which battel, a ſon of Cræſus who had been dumb from his cradle, ſeeing a Souldier ready to kill his father, ſuddenly broke out into theſe words, Rex eſt, cave ne occidas. After this overthrow, and the captivity of Cræſus (one of the richeſt Kings that ever was of old) Lydia was made a Perſian Province, A. M. 3420.

The Lydians after this rebelled, but being again ſubdued, Cyrus bereaved them of all their horſes of ſervice, deſpoyled them of all their armour, and trained them up in all manner of looſe and effeminate living; weakning by this means a powerfull Nation, which before that time had not only maintained its own liberty, but awed all the Provinces adjoyning. After this they continued Perſian till the Conqueſt of Aſia by the Macedonians, in the diviſion of whoſe ſpoils they fell to the portion of Seleucus and the Kings of Syria: following the common fortune of the reſt of this Aſia, till they came under the power of the Romans. Made by them one of the Provinces of their Empire; it had the Lower Myſia, or Myſia Olympena annexed unto it: by means whereof the limits of each became ſo confounded, that the Towns and Cities of the one, are many times aſcribed to the other. In the falling of the Eaſtern Empire it was made (as all the reſt of Anatolia) a prey to the Turks: that part of it which lieth next to Æolis, ſubject to the Caraſian Family; as the other parts towards Phrygia Major, were to the Aidinian.

12. CARIA.

CARIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with Lycia; on the North, with Lydia and Ionia; on the Weſt, with the Icarian or Ægean Sea; and on the South, with the Carpathian. So called from Cares, the Son of Phoroneus King of Argos, once the Lord hereof; who is ſaid to have invented the Science of Divination by the flying of Birds, called Augury; though others aſcribe it to the Phrygians, and others unto other nations, all alike uncertain.

In this Country is the Hill called Latmus, the dwelling or rather retiring place of Endymion, who being much addicted to the ſtudy of Aſtronomy, found out the changes and courſes of the Moon, and is therefore by the Poets feigned to have been her Paramour. Others add, that Jupiter hid him in a cave under this Hill, and caſt him into a dead ſleep; (which notwithſtanding, ſhe deſcended ſometimes to kiſs him) whence came the old By-word, of Endymionis ſomnium dormit. Here is alſo in this Country the River Salmacis, ſaid to infeeble all ſuch as either drink of it, or bath in it: from whence the Poets raiſe their fiction of Salmacis and Hermaphroditus deſcribed by Ovid; and the Proverb of Salmacida ſpolia ſine ſanguine & ſudore, mentioned by Tully in his book of Offices, and there uſed for effeminate and wanton exerciſes.

Places

Lycia. Places of moſt note in it, 1. Miletus, not far from the hill Latmus, the birth-place of Thales, one of the ſeven wiſe-men of Greece, from hence called Mileſius; and the Mother of no fewer than 75 (or as Plinie ſaith of 80) Colonies, diſperſed in ſeveral places of Greece and Aſia: antiently honoured with the Oracle of Apollo, ſurnamed Didymæus, whoſe Temple being burnt by Xerxes, was again rebuilt by the Mileſians, to ſo vaſt a greatneſſe, that it remained without roof; compaſſed about with a Grove, and dwelling houſes, and ſumptuouſly ſet out with coſtly workmanſhip. This is that Miletus mentioned Acts 20. to which Saint Paul called together the Biſhops of Epheſus, and of other the adjoyning Cities, ab Epheſo & reliquis proximis Civitatibus, ſaith St. Irenæus the renowned Biſhop of Lions, Lib. 3. cap. 14. Antiently it was called Lelegis and Anactoria. 2. Mindus, which being but a ſmall Town, had ſo great Gates, that Diogenes the Cynick cryed out, and ſaid, Ye men of Mindus, take heed that your City run not out at your Gates. 3. Heraclea ad Latmum, ſo called becauſe ſituate at the foot of that Mountain, to difference it from many others of that name. 4. Borgylia, or Borgylos, as Pliny calleth it, where antiently Diana had another Temple, though not to be compared with that of Epheſus. 5. Milaſa, in old times famous for two Temples ſacred unto Jupiter; the way to which for 60 furlongs was paved with ſtone for the eaſier travelling of Pilgrims, and the better ordering of Proceſſions; the principal of the Citizens ſerving there as Prieſts, which office they held unto their deaths. 7. Primaſſus, memorable for the Stratagem by which it was taken by Philip of Macedon, the Father of Perſeus. Who meaning to force it by Mine, and finding the earth ſo ſtony that it would not work, commanded the Pyoneers notwithſtanding to make a noiſe under the ground, and cauſed great Mounts of Rubbiſh to be raiſed ſecretly in the night, at the mouth of the Mine, as if the work went very well forwards. At laſt he ſent word unto the Townſ-men, that two parts of their wall ſtood only upon wooden props, to which if he gave fire, they ſhould find no mercy; which heard, the Citizens yeelded up the Town unto him. So uſefull in the art of war is a piece of wit, that it prevails ſometimes more than Mines or Batteries.

In the South-weſt of this Province, thruſting it ſelf into the Sea like a ſpacious Promontory, ſtands the Country of DORIS, ſo called of the Dores, a Greek people, who there inhabited. The principal Cities whereof were 1. Cnidus, not far from a foreland or Promontory of the ſame name, famous of old times for the Marble image of Venus, called hence Dea Cnidea. 2. Creſſa, a noted Haven-Town in the time of Ptolemie. 3. Halicarnaſſus (now called Neſi) the birth-place of Herodotus, and Dionyſius, named hence Halicarnaſſeus; two famous Hiſtorians; and the ſeat-Royal of Artemiſia Queen of the Carians (called from hence ſometmies the Queen of Harlicarnaſſus) who in the honour of her husband Mauſolus, built a ſtately monument, accounted one of the worlds ſeven wonders; of which thus Martial, ſpeaking of the Roman Amphitheatre erected by Domitian,

Aere nec vacuo pendentia Mauſolæa
Laudibus immodicis Cares ad aſtra ferant.

That is to ſay,

Mauſolus tomb filling the empty Air,
Let not the Carians praiſe beyond compare.

That the Carians were ſo called from Cares, the ſon of Phoroneus, King of Argos, hath been ſaid before. But Bochartus will rather have them ſo called from Car, which in the Phœnician language ſignifieth a Sheep, or a Ram; with numerous flocks whereof they did once abound. And this may ſeem more probable, in regard that the Ionians, next neighbours to Caria, borrowing this word from the Phœnicians, called ſheep by the name of Cara, Κάρα Ἴωνες τὰ πρόβατα, ſaith Heſychius, the old Grammarian. But from whomſoever they had their name, certain it is, they were a very warlike people, eo armorum pugnæq; amans, (ſaith Pomponius Mela) ut aliena etiam bella appetterent, who when they had no wars at home, would ſeek out for action. A little before the time of Xerxes, Mauſolus reigned here, whoſe wife Artemiſia (lately mentioned) aided that King in his undertakings againſt Greece. Afterwards, in the time of Alexander the Great, we meet with Ada Queen hereof, who aided him againſt the Perſians; adopting him for her ſon and ſucceſſor; Subject after her deceaſe to the Macedonians, it followed the ſame fortune with the reſt of theſe Provinces, till the defeat of Antiochus near Magneſia: in the diviſion of whoſe ſpoils it was given to the Rhodians, incorporated not long after to the State of Rome, and made a Province of the Empire. Wreſted from the Eaſtern Emperours by the Turks of the Selzuccian Family; the greateſt part hereof, on the death of Aladine 2d. was raiſed unto a petit Kingdom by the name of Menteſia, ſo called from Mendos (or Mindus) the chief City of it; the reſidue being laid to the Caraman kingdom: both long ago ſubdued by the Ottoman Family: that of Menteſia by Mahomet ſurnamed the great, who diſpoſſeſſed Elias the laſt Prince thereof, Anno 1451.

LYCIA.

LYCIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with Pamphylia; on the Weſt, with Caria; on the North, with parts of Lydia, and Phrygia Major; on the South, with the Mediterranean Sea. Environed on three ſides with the Mountain Taurus, which part it from the Countries above mentioned; by conſequence naturally ſtrong, and not very acceſſible: the Sea, for the ſpace of 20 miles ſhutting up the fourth. And here it is to be obſerved, that beſides, this there was a little Region of the ſame name, not far from Troy, not much obſerved by our Geographers either old or new; but mentioned ſometimes by the Poets; as in Virgil Æneid. 4. Qualis ubi hybernam Lyciam, Xanthiq; fluenta deſerit, &c. which is meant plainly of the Phrygian, or Trojan Lycia; the word hyberna being added becauſe of its Northern ſituation, in reſpect of this. Of this ſomewhat hath been ſaid before in Phrygia Minor.

The people hereof were ſometimes called Xanthi, from Xanthus the chief River hereof, which riſing in two Springs from the foot of Mount Cadmus, paſſeth by a Town called Xanthus alſo, and falleth into the Sea. But generally they were called Lycii, and the Country Lycia, from Lycius the ſon of Pandion King of Athens; who either conquered them, or did ſome memorable act amongſt them, which deſerved that honour.

The principal Mountain of this Country, and indeed of Aſia, is the Mountain Taurus, which hath his beginning in this Province, extending Eaſtward to the great Oriental Ocean: of which ſomewhat hath been ſaid already, and more is to be ſaid hereafter, when theſe hils are grown unto the greateſt.

One of the branches of it, and the moſt notable in this Country, is that called Chimæra, vomiting flames of fire like Sicilian Ætna: the bottom whereof was infeſted with Serpents, the middle parts grazed upon by Goats, and the higher parts made dangerous by the dens of Lions. Hence by the Poets made a Monſter, having the head of a Lion, the body of a Goat, and the tail of a Serpent; according unto that of Ovid in his Metamorphoſis,

Quoque Chimæra jugo mediis in partibus Hyrcum,
Pectus & ora Leo, caudam Serpentis habebat,

In Engliſh thus,

Chimæra from a Goat her mid-part takes,
From Lion head and breaſt, her tail from Snakes.

This dangerous Mountain was firſt planted and made habitable by the care of Bellerophon, a noble Grecian, who is therefore fabled by the Poets to have killed this Monſter; employed upon his buſineſs by Jobares the King of Lycia, to whom he had been ſent by Prœtus King of Argos, who was jealous of him; and ſent his letters to require that King to kill him. Whence came the ſaying, Bellerophontis literas portare; applied to thoſe, who were unawares employed to carry letters tending to their own deſtruction: ſuch as thoſe carried by Uriah, to Joab the General, by command of David.

This Country was ſo populous, that antiently there was reckoned threeſcore Cities in it, of which ſix and thirty remained in the time of St. Paul; now nothing left of them but the names and ruines. Thoſe of chief note were 1. Myra, the Metropolis of Lycia, when a Roman Province; by conſequence an Arch-Biſhops See, when Chriſtian. St. Nicolas one of the Biſhops hereof in the primitive times, is ſaid to have been a great Patron of Scholars: his feſtival annually holden on the ſixt of December, is celebrated in the Church of Rome with ſeveral paſtimes; and ſtill in ſome Schools here in England (as in that of Burford in the Couuty of Oxon (where I had my breeding and my birth) for a feaſt and a play-day. Of this City there is mention Acts 27. v. 5. 2. Telmeſus, the Inhabitants whereof are famous for South-ſaying, and accounted the firſt Interpreters of dreams. 3. Patara, or Patras, (formerly called Sataros) beautified with a fair Haven and many Temples; one of them dedicated to Apollo, with an Oracle in it, for wealth and credit equal unto that of Delphos. 4. Phaſelis, on the Sea-ſide alſo, a neſt of Pirates in the times of the Roman greatneſſe, by whom then haunted and enriched, as Algier is now: but taken by Servilius, a Roman Captain, at ſuch time as Pompey ſcoured the Seas. And unto the Pirates of this Town the former ages were indebted, for the firſt invention of thoſe ſwift Veſſels, which the Romans called a Phaſelus, by the name of the Town; we may render it a Brigantine. 5. Cragus, with a Mountain of the ſame name, thruſtiug out eight points or Promontories near to the Chimæra. 6. Rhodia, or Rhodiopolis, as Plinie calleth it, moſt probably the foundation of the neighbouring Rhodians. 7. Solyma, on the borders hereof towards Piſidia; the people of which were conquered and added unto Lycia by the ſword of Bellerophon, whom Jobares, with a mind to kill him, according to the requeſt of Prætus, imployed in that ſervice. 8. Corydalla, near the Mountain called Maſigrum, the Maſſycites of Plinie. 9. Podalea, the chief Town of Mylias; as 11. OEnoanda is of OEbalia, two little Regions in this Country.

The Lycians were in former times a puiſſant people, extending their power upon the Seas, as far as Italy. Subjected to the Perſian not without great difficulty; the people with ſuch obſtinacy defending their liberty, that ſome of them being beſieged by Harpagus, Lieutenant unto Cyrus, the firſt Perſian Monarch, they firſt burnt their wives, children, ſervants, and riches, in a common fire; and then made a furious ſally upon the Enemy, by whom put all unto the ſword. To Alexander in his march this way towards Perſia, they ſubmitted without any reſiſtance. After whoſe death they fell with the reſt of theſe parts into the hand of Seleucus. On the defeat of Antiochus at the battel of Magneſia, it was given to the Rhodians, for their aſſiſtance in that war; but governed as a free eſtate by a Common-Council of 14 Senators, elected out of their principal Cities: over whom was one chief Preſident, or Prince of the Senate, whom they called by the name of Lyciarchus. In theſe remained the ſole power of impoſing taxes, making war and peace, appointing Juſticiaries and inferiour Magiſtrates, and all things appertaining to the publick government. A ſhadow of which power they retained when brought under the Romans, and a ſhadow only: the Supreme power being no longer in the Senate of Lycia, but in that of Rome. Nor had their Lyciarchus any thing but an empty name, and the vain privilege or ordering and diſpoſing the publique games, wherein by his office he preſided. When made a Province of the Empire, it had the ſame fortune as the others had, till it fell into the power of the Turks: after the death of the ſecond Aladine made a part of the Kingdom of Caramania; of which more anon.

Lycaonia.

15. LYCAONCA.

LYCAONIA is bounded on the East with Armenia Minor, from which parted by a branch of the Mountain Taurus; on the West, with the Greater Phrygia; on the North, with Cappadocia; and on the South, with Pisidia. So called from the Lycaones a people of Lycia, or from the Lycaonians, inhabitants of Lycaonia, a Town of Phrygia Major; who inlarging themselves into these parts, gave this name unto it. Either of which I should prefer before their conceit, who derive it from Lycaon King of Arcadia, dispossessed by Jupiter of that Kingdom, or think that Lycaon was a King of this Conntry, and not of that.

Places of most note herein, 1. Iconium (now Cogni) the Metropolis hereof when a Roman Province: a place of great strength and consequence; situated advantagiously in the Mountains for defence and safety, and therefore chosen for the seat of the Turkish Kings in Lesser Asia, at such time as they were most distressed by the Western Christians; who under the command and presence of the Emperour Conrade did in vain besiege it, forced to depart thence with great losse both of men and honour. Afterwards made the Seat-Royal of the Aladine Kings, the former race being extinguished by the Tartars, and finally of the Kings of the house of Caraman, whose kingdom called the kingdom of Caramania, contained all the South parts of the Lesser Asia, that is to say, part of the Province of Caria, all Lycia, Pamphylia, Isauria, Cilicia, Pisidia, and this Lycaonia. 2. Lystra, the birth-place of Timothy the Evangelist: where Paul and Barnabas, having miraculously healed a Cripple, were adored as Gods; and not long after, on the instigation of some Jews, which came down from Antioch and Iconium, most despitefully treated; Paul being stoned into the bargain, though it pleased God to raise him to life again, Acts 14, v. 19, 20. Such was the divine pleasure of Almighty God, that he that did consent to the stoning of St. Stephen the Protomartyr, and took charge of the Cloaths of his Executioners, should suffer in the same kind wherein he had trespassed, and feel some smart remembrance of his former Actions. 3. Derbe, honoured by the preaching of the said Apostle. 4. Laranda, so called by Ptolemie; and still preserving its old name; the second place for reputation next unto Iconium. 5. Adopissus. 6. Paralais. 7. Canna. 8. Caratha, with others named by Ptolemie, but not else observable.

Nor indeed were the Lycaonians themselves, from whomsoever they descended, of any great note or observation in the former times: subject to Cappadocia when it was a Kingdom, and reckoned as part of it in the time of Ptolemy, when made a Province of the Empire. Dismembred from it by some of the following Emperours, either to create new Offices and preferments for some Court favourite; or to satisfie the ambition of some Prelates, aspiring to the dignity of a Metropolitan, it was made a Province of it self. Torn from the Empire by the Turks, it was at first a member of the Selzuccian Kingdom, as afterwards of the Caramanian. Which last founded by Caraman a great Prince of the Turks, on the death of Aladine the 2. the last king of the Selzuccian Family, was a great eye-sore unto those of the house of Ottoman, from the time Amurath the first, who first warred upon it, to the reign of Bajazet the second, who in fine subverted it, An. 1486. as shall be shewn hereafter when we come to Cilicia, the last of the Provinces of that kingdom, in the course of this work.

16. PISIDIA.

PISIDIA hath on the East, Armenia Minor; on the West, some parts of Lycia and Phrygia Major; on the North, Lycaonia; on the South, Pamphylia, and some part of Cilicia; from which parted by the Main body of Mount Taurus. So called from the Pisidæ, the Inhabitants of it; but the reason of their name I find not amongst my Authors.

The Country small, but furnished with great plenty of all provisions, as appeareth by that passage of Livie, where speaking of the expedition of Manlius unto these parts, he telleth us that he came into the fields of Sagalassa, (one of the Cities hereof) being of a rich soil, and plentifull of all manner of fruit. Inde ventum est (saith he) in agrum Sagallassarum, uberum fertilemq; omni genere frugum: But this to be understood only of the plains and champain; the mountainous parts hereof, being (like others of that nature) poor and barren.

Towns of most observation in it, 1. Antioch, the Metropolis hereof, when a Province of the Roman Empire, called for distinctions sake Antiochia Pisidiæ, mention of which is made Acts 4. and of the Jews Synagogue therein, honoured by St. Pauls preaching, the sum of whose divine Sermon is there repeated. Built by Seleucus, the first king of Syria of the Macedon race, and by him so called in honour of his Father Antiochus. 2. Seleucia, the foundation of the same Seleucus, called also to distinguish it from others of that name, Seleucia Pisidiæ. 3. Lysinnia, on the borders hereof towards Phrygia. 4. Selge, a Colonie of the Lacedemonians. 5. Sagalassa, situate in the most fruitfull part of all this Country, as appears by that of Livie before mentioned. 6. Cremna, which only had the honour of a Roman Colonie. 7. Termessus, strongly situate in the Streights of the Mounts; the hilly Country about which hath the name of Milyes. 8. Olbanassa. 9. Plutanessus, of which little memorable.

As for these Pisidæ, they were originally descended of the Solymi, Inhabitants of the borders of Lycia. A valiant people, and so affirmed to be by Livie, who calleth them longè optimos bello. Nor did he speak it without cause, this small Nation holding out against the Persians, and not conquered by them, when their great neighbours were subdued. Against these, Cyrus the brother of Artaxerxes Mnemon king of Persia did pretend a quarrel, as if they had trespassed on the borders of his Province.

Which

tending revenge on them; but intending to dispossess his brother of the Persian Monarchy: but Tisaphernes Lieutenant to the King in Asia, seeing greater preparations than were sufficient to oppose the weak Pisidians, made the King acquainted with his suspitions, who accordingly provided for resistance. The Army of Cyrus consisting of 12000 Grecians, and 100000 Persians: the kings forces were no fewer than 900000 fighting men. They met at Cunaxa, not far from Babylon, where Cyrus lost both the victory, and his life. The Grecians who had made their side good, and stood in honourable terms of composition, being by Tisaphernes betrayed, lost the best of their Company. The rest under the conduct of Xenophon, made safe retreat home in despight of 200000 men which followed at their heels. This Xenophon was an agent in, and the Historian of this expedition: by whose example the Spartans first, and after them the Macedonians were encouraged to attempt the conquest of Persia. But to return to these Pisidians, they fell with others of their neighbours, under the power of the Macedonians, and were made part of the Dominion of Seleucus. Abandoned by Antiochus to the will of the Romans, and setled in obedience by the Military progress of Manlius, spoken of before; they were in Ptolemies time annexed to Pamphylia, as a part thereof. Afterwards made a distinct Province of it self, and so continued till those parts of the Eastern Empire were subdued by the Turks: first part of the Selzuccian, and Aladinian kingdoms, after of the kingdom of Caramania; whereof more anon.

PAMPHYLIA is bounded on the East, with Isauria, and Cilicia; and on the West, with Lycia, from which parted by a branch of the Taurus; on the North, with Pisidia, separated from it by the main body of that Mountain; and on the South, with the Mediterranean Sea, which in those parts which lie next to it, is called Mare Pamphylium. The reason of the name I find not, unless we think with Metaphrastes, that it was so named, quod ex omnibus gentibus constata esset, because inhabited by a mixture of many Nations: for so Pamphylia in the Greek tongue doth expresly signifie. And probable enough it is, that lying near unto the Sea with an open shore, opposite to Africk, near Syria, and not far from Greece, several Nations from those parts might repair unto it; and from thence the name.

The Country for the most part is very mountainous, over-run with the branches of Mount Taurus; but these branches feed great store of Goats, of whose hair are made abundance of Chamlets and Grograins, not inferiour unto Silks for fineness. Towards the Sea, which for the space of a hundred and fifty miles coasts along this shore, more pleasant, populous, and fruitfull; well watered, and as well planted. The principal Rivers hereof, being 1. Cataractus. 2. Cestrus, and 3. Eurymedon; Nigh to which last, Cimon the son of Miltiades, Captain General of the Athenian Army, overthrew in one day, both the Sea and Land Forces of the Persians. The manner thus: having by plain force broke their Navy, of which he took and sunk no fewer than forty Ships, and three thousand Gallies, he stowed the Persian Vessels with his best men, attired in the habit, and wearing the colours of the Persians in the tops of their Ships. In their approach the Camp was opened, and all prepared to entertain their victorious Country-men; but the Greeks once in, suddenly put them to the sword, and took twenty thousand of them prisoners.

Principal Cities of it, 1. Attalia, founded by Ptolemy Philadelpus King of Ægypt, and for long time the greatest and most flourishing City of all this Province; well fenced, and seated very commodiously for Trade, on a very fair Bay, now called Golfo di Sattalia, by the name of the Town, but little altered. And though the Romans did confer the honour of the Metropolitan City upon Aspendus, yet still Attalia had the start in point of riches; and is to this day a wealthy and well-Traded Empory, the wealthier for the fair Tapestries which are herein made. Of this Town there is mention, Acts 14. v. 25. 2. Perge, famous in old times for a Temple of Diana, and the yearly festivals there held in honour of her; from hence called Diana Pergæa: more famous in the fullness of time, for St. Pauls preaching in it, mentioned Acts 14. v. 25. 3. Side, renowned in times of Gentilism, for a Temple of Pallas. 4. Magydis, on the Sea-side, not far from Side. 5. Aspendus, an inland Town, but strongly situate; made the Metropolis of the Province in the time of the Romans: remarkable for the Fidlers or Musicians of it, who with one hand both held their Harps and plaid upon them, keeping the other free for more gainfull uses; whence the Proverb of Aspendus Citharista, an Aspendian Harper, by which they signified a Theef. The Town first founded by the Argives, the Colony sent thither being led by Mopsus, from whom the Countty hereabouts had the name of Mopsia. 6. Olbia, not far from Attalia. 7. Caracensium, and 8. Colobrassus, two of the Towns of that part hereof, which had the name of Cilicia aspera: as 9. Cretopolis, and 10. Menedemium, of that part which was called Carbalia.

Of these Pamphylians there is little to be said in point of story, but that they were for the most part on the suffering hand; subject from time to time to those mightier Princes, who would not let their neighbours rest in quiet by them. Being on the same side of Taurus, and of easie access, they became first Vassals to the Syrian, and after to the Persian Kings. When Alexander passed that way, in his march towards Persia, he took all the Sea-Towns of it: the whole brought under with the rest of the Asian Provinces, by Antigonus first, after by Seleucus the great King of Syria. In the expiration of whose line, this people and their neighbours of Cilicia, being left to themselves, and tempted by Mithridates to his faction, began to be troublesom on the Seas, and proved notable Pirates, and were the first Authors or inventors of those Gallies of a hundred and forty, or an hundred and sixty Oars a-piece; which the Italians call from hence by the name of Pamphyli. But forced to leave this trade at laſt, being warred upon by the Romans with great forces both by Sea and Land (a fuller narrative whereof we ſhall have in Cilicia) in the concluſion of that war, they loſt that liberty which ſo ſmall a time they had enjoyed; and were made Vaſſals unto Rome. Afterwards made a Province of the Aſian Dioceſe, they ran the ſame fortune with the reſt, till ſubdued by the Turks: and at the death of Aladine, were ſeized on by Caraman, and ſo became a part of his kingdom. Of which we ſhall hear more when we come to Cilicia. And ſo much for the Provinces of the Aſian Dioceſe, (the Provinces of the Iſles excepted, whereof more anon) converted to the Chriſtian faith by three great Apoſtles; but moſt eſpecially by Saint Paul, of whoſe travels through moſt Cities and Regions of it, there is ſuch pregnant evidence in the book of the Acts. And that Saint Peter, and Saint John, had alſo their parts herein, appears by the Revelation of the one, and the firſt Epiſtle of the other: Paul planting, John and Peter watering, but God himſelf giving the increaſe. Pais we on next unto ISAURIA and CILICIA, which though Provinces of the Dioceſe of the Orient, were parts of the Caramanian Kingdom: of which having taken a Survey, and ſo cleared our ſelves of this Peninſula, we wil then ſail about ſuch Ilands as make up the remainder of the Aſian Dioceſe.

18. ISAURIA. CILICIA.

Theſe two, though diſtinct Provinces, I have joyned together, becauſe the firſt was only a part of the laſt; Cilicia antiently comprehending both. The fortunes of both being the ſame alſo in point of ſtory, which makes the conjunction the more natural.

ISAURIA, a mountainous and hilly Province, ſeated on both ſides of Taurus, hath on the Eaſt and South, the reſt of Cilicia, whereof antiently it was a part; on the North, Piſidia; on the Weſt, Pamphylia. So called from Iſaurus, the chief City of it, when firſt made known unto the Romans; which being taken by Servilius the Proconſul, imployed by Pompey in that ſervice, reduced the conquered Country under the command of Rome, and gave unto the Conquerour the ſurname of Iſauricus.

The quality of the Soyl, and whole eſtate of this ſmall Proviuce, take thus from Ammianus Marcellinus, who had ſeen theſe Countries. Ciliciæ lateri dextro adnexa Iſauria, uberi palmite viret, & frugibus multis; quam mediam, flumen navigabile Calicadnus interſcindit, &c. i. e. "On the right hand of "Cilicia lieth Iſauria, a Province of a wealthy ſoil, plentifull of Vines, and much other fruits, which "the River Calecadnus parteth in the very midſt. Beautified beſides many Towns with two principal Cities, 1. Seleucia, founded by Seleucus: and 2. Claudiopolis, into which Claudius the Emperour brought a Roman Colonie. For as touching 3. Iſauria, hereroforе a walled City, and of moſt eſteem, it hath been long ago deſtroyed, as yielding too ſecure a refuge to the neghbouring Rebels; inſomuch that now there are ſcarce any viſible tracts of its former greatneſs. And not much after, Hæ duæ Provinciæ bello quondam Piratico catervis mixtæ Prædonum, a Servilio Proconſule miſſæ ſub jugum, factæ ſunt vectigales; i.e. "Theſe Provinces (Cilicia and this) heretofore in the Piratical war joyning with "thoſe Robers, were brought under by Servilius the Proconſul, and made ſubject to the State of Rome. And here, we have in brief, the nature of the Country, the names of the chief Rivers, and the Principal Cities with ſo much of the ſtory as relates to the firſt ſubjugation of it. What further doth concern it we ſhall hear in Cilicia, upon the which it did depend.

2. CILICIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with Syria, or rather that part thereof which is called Comagena, ſeparated from which part by a branch of the Mountain Taurus, called Amanus; on the Weſt, with Pamphylia; on the North, with Iſauria, and Armenia Minor; on the South, with the Mediterranean, and Syria, ſpecially ſo called. It was thus named, as the old tradition was, from Cilice, the brother of Cadmus the Phœnician, a near neighbour to it: but as Bochartus (of whoſe humour I have told you often) from Callukim, a Phœnician word ſignifying ſtones, quia lapidoſa eſt Regio, becauſe in ſome parts, eſpecially in that which is called Cilicia Trachæa, or Cilicia Aſpera, it was very ſtony. It it is now called Caramania, as the laſt Province of the Caramanian kingdom, which held out for thoſe falling Princes, when the reſt was conquered by the Turks of the Ottoman race.

The Country ſaid by Marcellinus, to be terra dives omnibus bonis, wealthy and fruitfull of all neceſſaries. Which Character holdeth good, chiefly in the Eaſtern parts, which heretofore had the name of Cilicia Campeſtris; the weſtern parts lying towards Pamphylia, formerly called Cilicia Aſpera, being rough and ſtony. But generally where the lands lie in ſeveral, and are duly cultivated, it anſwereth to the former Character: being alſo very well watered, and having a fair and large Sea-coaſt, for the ſpace of three hundred miles and upwards. Which notwithſtanding, it is not much traded, and but meanly inhabited, a great part of the Country lying in large and common fields, to which none can lay any proper claim, and therefore planted only with Goats and Sheep: out of which the Commoners on all ſides raiſe good profit by cheeſe and butter, by their fleeces chiefly. Here is alſo a good breed of Horſes, of which ſix hundred yearly are culled out for the ſpecial ſervice of the Grand Signeur. But as they have ſome profitable and uſefull creatures; ſo have they others as dangerous and hurtfull to them; eſpecially thoſe which the Vulgar Grecians call the Squilachi, of a mixt making betwixt a Dog and a Wolf; which go in troops, and are ſo bold, and theeviſh withall, as they uſe to ſet upon a man as he is aſleep, and leave him neither hat, cloak, nor fardel, nor any thing they can conveniently get from him.

Chief Rivers hereof are 1. Pyramus, now called Malmiſtra, which riſing on the North ſide of the Taurus, and forcing his paſſage through that Mountain, makes ſuch a noiſe in falling down the precipices and rocks thereof, as reſemblanceth at a great diſtance a clap of Thunder. 2. Orymagdus. 3. Calicadnus cadmus ſpoken of before. 4. Cidnus, which riſeth in the Anti-Taurus; a River of a violent courſe, and ſo cold a water, that as Plinie writes, it cureth the Gout: the waters of which proved very dangerous to Alexander the Great, the coldneſs of them ſtriking violently into his ſtomack; and deadly to Frederick the firſt Emperour of the Germans, as he here bathed himſelf, the violence of the ſtream tripping up his heels, and he not able to recover was preſently drowned. Cilicia.

Of their chief hils I need add nothing, having already ſaid that the Country is parted by Amanus from Syria; and by Taurus it ſelf from Piſidia and Armenia Minor; not eaſie of entrance by the firſt, but very difficult by the laſt: the Streights therof called Pylæ Cilicia, or the Ports of Cilicia, being indeed ſo ſtreight, & almoſt impaſſable that had they been guarded or regarded by the Perſians, as they ſhould have been, the progreſs of Alexanders victories might have ended there. But Arſenes who had the charge of them, durſt not ſtand his ground, and ſo left them open to the enemy: whom by thoſe Ports he put into the poſſeſſion of the kingdom of Perſia. With better faith, though no better fortune, did the Souldiers of Peſceninus Niger, make good theſe Streights againſt the Emperour Severus; the Monarchy of the world lying a ſecond time at the ſtake, and to be tried for in this Cock-pit. For the Nigrians poſſeſſed of theſe Streights and entrances, couragiouſly withſtood the Severian party; till at laſt a ſudden tempeſt of rain and thunder continually darting in their faces (as if the very Heavens had been armed againſt them) they were fain to leave the paſſage, and therewith the victory to the adverſe faction; having ſold that at the loſs of 20000 of their own lives, which Alexander had the happineſs or the hap to buy for nothing.

In the borders of this Country towards Pamphylia, lived a Tribe or Nation called the Soli, originally of Attica: but in long tract of time diſuſed from converſe & communication with their Country-men, they ſpake that language ſo corruptly, that from their barbarous manner of pronunciation, and as rude expreſſion, came the word Solœciſmus. Yet amongſt theſe were born three men of eminent note, that is to ſay Chryſippus the Philoſopher, Philemon and Aratus the Poets; out of the writings of which laſt St. Paul vouchſafed to uſe this paſſage τοῦ γὰρ γένος ἐσμέν, i. e. for we are alſo his off-ſpring, Acts 17. v. 28. That bleſſed Apoſtle thought himſelf never the worſe Preacher, for being brought up in humane learning at the feet of Gamaliel: nor held it any diſparagement to the influences of the Holy Ghoſt, to make uſe of it in his Sermons, and divine diſcourſes, and therefore to prevent thoſe cavils which ignorance or miſprſion might chance to make in times ſucceeding, he hath thrice vouchſafed the words and teſtimony of the heathen writers; viz. of Epimenides, Tit. 1. v. 12. of Menander, 1. Cor. 15. v. 33. and that of Aratus before-mentioned. So lawfull is it in this Kind, for thoſe of the ſpiritual Iſrael to rob the Egyptians; and to make this Hagar ſerviceable to her Miſtreſs Sarah.

Principal Cities of this Province, 1. Solæ, the habitation of the Soli, before remembred; by ſome ſaid to be built by Solon the Athenian; but generally affirmed to have been planted by thoſe of Rhodes and Attica: miſtakingly called Heliopolis, by Qu. Curtius, which is as much in Latine as Solis civitas, or the City of the Sun. On the ſite hereof then decayed and ruinous (the Town having been deſtroyed by Tygranes the Armenian King in his late wars againſt the Romans) did Pompey build his City of Pompeiopolis after his victory over the Pirates; who not only lorded it over the Seas, and conſequently obſtructed trade and merchandize, but waſted and ſpoiled the Villages of Italy it ſelf. Pompey being Victor, and having inflicted exemplary puniſhment on the Ring-leaders, with the reſt peopled this new Town, and the Country adjoyning, allowing them competent poſſeſſions, leſt want and neceſſity ſhould again inforce them to the like courſes. An action truly commendable, and worthy ſo great a Captain, rather to take an occaſion of offending from the people, than after offence done to puniſh them. Hythlodæus in the Utopia, ſomewhat bitterly, though perhaps not unjuſtly, inveigheth againſt the laws of England, for ordaining death to be the puniſhment of theft, Cum multò potius providendum fuerit, uti aliquis eſſet proventus vitæ; ne cuipiam ſit tam dira furandi primùm, deinde pereundi neceſſitas. Where as (ſaith he) the laws ought to make proviſion for putting men into ſome orderly courſe of life, and not let them run upon the neceſſity of ſtealing firſt, and then being hanged for it. 2. Tarſus, the birth-place of Saint Paul the Apoſtle, for that ſufficiently famous, were there nothing elſe to commend it to conſideration. But it was a Town withall of great note and conſequence, the Metropolis firſt of all Cilicia, and after the diviſion, of Cilicia Prima. The Inhabitants whereof had the privilege of Roman Citizens. Situate in a goodly plain on the banks of the Cydnus, and by ſome ſaid to be the work of Sardanapalus the laſt King of Aſſyria; it being engraven on a Monument erected to him, that in one day he had built this Tarſus; and 3. Anchiala, another City of this Country, near the Sea-ſide, and not far from the Promontory Zephyrium. Of the ſame date (if the ſaid Monument ſpeak truth,) but neither of the ſame fortune nor continuance: that being utterly decayed, but Tarſus ſtill remaining of great wealth and ſtrength. Much ſpoken of in the wars of the Holy Land, and in the ſtories of the Caramanian and Ottoman Kings. And though the Tarſians to ingratiate themſelves with Julius Cæſar, would needs have their Country called Juliopolis; yet the old name ſurvived the new, and it is to this day called Terſia or Teraſſa by the vulgar Grecians; but Hamſa by the Turks, as Bellonius telleth us. 4. Adena, the Adana of Ptolemy, a large Town, but unwalled, inſtead whereof defended by a very ſtrong Caſtle. Situate in a fruitfull ſoil, both for wine and corn, wherewith the Town is always furniſhed for the uſe of thoſe that are to travel over the Taurus, who commonly take in here three days proviſion. 5. Epiphania, the birth-place of George the Arian Biſhop of Alexandria; thruſt on the world of late by ſome learned men (but of more induſtry than judgement) for George the Cappadocian Martyr. 6. Mopſueſtia, as famous, or infamous rather, for giving title to Theodorus Mopſueſtenus, Biſhop hereof, and a great Patron of the Neſtorian hereſies, in the time of St. Chryſoſtom. The City otherwiſe of good note, and of great conſequence, in the courſe of the Roman wars, described at large by Ammianus Marcellinus. 7. Issus, upon a spacious Bay, called hence Sinus Issicus, near the borders of Syria: memorable for the great battel here fought betwixt Alexander and an handfull (in comparison) of his Macedonians, and that vast Army of Darius (himself there in person) consisting of 600000 undisciplined Asians; whereof so many lost their lives, that the dead bodies seemed to have buried the ground. For partly by the unskilfullness of the Commanders, who chose so ill a place to fight in, that they could make no use of their mighty numbers: and partly by the effeminateness of the Asian Souldiers, unable to endure the charge; there fell that day no fewer than 200000 of the Persians, 40000 of them being taken Prisoners, amongst them the wives and daughters of Darius, and not above 100 of the Alexandrians, if Qu. Curtius be not partial in relating the Story. A victorie which assured Alexander of his former purchases, and opened a way unto the rest: the Persian not being able to make head again, till he had peirced into the bowels of their Empire, and added Syria & Egypt to his former Conquests. Of so great consequence is one full Victory to the losing and getting of a kingdom. This Town it self now called Aiazzo, and the great Bay on which it standeth Golfo di Aiazzo. 8. Alexandria, built by command of the Conquerour near the place of battel, commmodiously for trade, as upon the Sea; but otherwise in a fenny and boggy soil, which makes the air there to be very unwholsome to men not used to it; little now remaining, but a few houses on the Sea-shore built of straw and mud hardly affording it the reputation of a sorry Village, and would not long continue such, but that it is the neerest Haven to the Town of Aleppo (whereof more in Syria) which draweth unto it the resort of some Christian Factors, whose houses are of clay and timber; but of them not many. The Town at first called Alexandria, as before was said; diminished first to Alexandretta, now called Scanderone. 9. Nicopolis, another of Alexanders foundations, so named in memory of his great Victory before mentioned. 10 Amavarza, a City of great Antiquity in the time of Strabo, and the Metropolis of the Province of Cilicia Secunda. 11. Heraclea, mentioned by Bellonius, and by him placed in a fruitfull and wel-cultivated plain, at the foot of Mount Taurus; a fair and large Town, as he reporteth it, and distant from Adana towards the North-west about three days journey. But I find no such Town in Strabo, or Ptolemie, or any other of the Antients. 12. Scandeloro, a City of Cilicia Aspera; or that part of Cilicia, which lieth towards Pamphylia, heretofore with the adjoyning territory governed as a State distinct, when all the rest of this Country was under the Kings of Caramania: against whom the Prince hereof, being a Mahometan, had preserved his liberties, by the assistance of the knights of the Rhodes, and the king of Cyprus. And when the Caramanian kingdom was subdued by Bajazet, he made so good conditions for himself, that he had other lands and estates in the Lesser Asia, assigned to him in exchange for this, and so surrendred this to the will of the conquerour.

The first Inhabitants of this Country were of the Progeny of Tarshish, the son of Javan, by whom, or some of his posterity, to preserve his memory, the City of Tarsus was first built. Increased in tract of time by some new Colonies out of the neigbouring parts of Syria, it followed for the most part the fortunes of it; successively together subject to the Assyrians, Persians, and Macedonians. In the declining fortunes of the house of Seleucus they began to stand upon their own legs, and might have continued longer in so good a posture, had they not hearkned to ill Counsels. Tempted by Mithridates to joyn with him against the Romans, of whose greatness all the Eastern States were grown very jealous; and being naturally good Sea-faring men, they began together with the Pamphylians, to infest the Seas. At first they ventured no further than the shores adjoyning. But after emboldned with successe, and finding that the Romans were sufficiently embroiled in domestick troubles, and a sharp war with Mithridates, fell upon the Coasts of Greece, and in fine of Italy it self; Publius Servilius the Proconsul first employed against them, gave them an overthrow at Sea; and following his good fortune, set upon them in their Harbours and retiring places. In which pursute he not only took from them Phaselis, a strong Town in Lycia, one of their Retreats, and others of their best and strongest Receptacles; but wasting the whole Country of Cilicia, fell upon Isaurus, the most defensible Town thereof, which he took and ransacked. No sooner was Servilius departed home, but they broke out more violently than before; filling all the creeks and ports of the Eastern Seas with their Frigots, Brigantines and other light Piratical Vessels, insomuch that Pompey himself thought it to be an action not unbecoming his greatnesse, to undertake the war against them. And he pursued it to such purpose, that having armed 500 sail of all sorts, and stored his ships with 130000 men, he set upon them all at once; and in the space of one sole moneth made an end of the war. An action not sufficiently to be wondred at, if we consider either the speedinesse of it, done in so little time as a moneth; or the cheapness of the victory, purchased without the loss of one Roman Vessel; or finally the importance and consequence of it, the Pirates from that time not daring to infest the Seas, and all Cilicia subjected to the State of Rome. How they were afterwards disposed of hath been shewn already. After this they did very good service unto Pompey in his war against Cæsar; of whom thus Lucan, reckoning up his Allies and Aids.

Atq; Cilix justa, nunc non Pirata, carinâ.

And the reformed Cilician, now
No Pirate, in his fleet did row.

Nor were they pliant unto him only, as unto their Conquerour; but generally so tame and tractable in the time of Cicero, one of the first Proconsuls or Lord Deputies which were sent to govern them; that he writ merrily to Rome, that he found all quiet in his Province: save that the Panthars (some of which, one of his friends had prayed him to send to Rome, for the adorning of his triumph) were

for

for fear of him fled into Pamphylia. At the first conquest by the Romans, it was divided only into Campestrem and Trachæam, as was said before; of which Campestris was reduced immediatly to the form of a Province. Aspera or Trachæa was a while continued under the government of Kings, till the time of Vespasian, and then made a Province as the other. By the succeeding Emperours, on some reasons of State (if not those intimated in Lycaonia) the number of Provinces being increased (though the bounds of the Empire were no larger than they had been formerly) the whole was divided into three: that is to say, Cilicia prima, taking up all Campestris wholly; Cilicia secunda, containing the Maritime parts of Cilicia Aspera; and Isauria, taking up the mountainous part of this last division. Laid by the Emperour Constantine to the Diocese of the Orient; and consequently subject in spiritual matters to the Patriarch of Antioch, where the Præfectus Prætorio Orientis had his usual residence. In the falling of the Eastern Empire, it was conquered by the Saracens in the time of Muhaveas or Muavi, the sixt Caliph. Continuing under their command till their declination, it was recovered by the Greek or Eastern Emperours, and from them conquered by the Turks in the course of their victories. But the first race of Turkish Kings being worn out by the Tartars, and the Aladinian Kings ending in Aladine the second; it was part of the new kingdom of the Caramanians, continuing theirs till the destruction of that line by Bajazet the second, Anno 1486. by whom incorporated with the rest of the Ottoman Empire. Cilicia.

Thus having made our progress over all the Provinces of the Lesser Asia, and shewn how every one of them was made subject to the Turkish Tyranny: we must next draw down the succession of such Turkish Kings as have reigned herein, till it was wholly conquered by the Princes of the house of Ottoman. Concerning which we are to know in the way of Preamble, that the Turks having made themselves Masters of the kingdom of Persia, and following their successes into Syria also, fell to a breach amongst themselves. For making up whereof it was condescended unto by Axan, the then Persian Sultan, that Meloch and Ducat, two of his discontented Kinsmen, should be infeoffed in the Cities of Aleppo and Damascus, and their several Territories, with whatsoever they could conquer from the Caliph of Ægypt, possessed at that time of most part of Syria, and some of the adjoyning Provinces. It was also then agreed upon, that a third but nearer Kinsman called Cutlu Moses, another of the Leaders of the opposite faction, should have leave to conquer for himself, whatsoever he could win from the Christian Princes: And he accordingly being furnish'd with a competent Army, subdued the Provinces of Media and Armenia in the Greater Asia; with Cappadocia, Pontus, and Bithynia in Asia Minor. Which and the rest of their affairs take here in the ensuing Catalogue of

The Turkish Kings in Asia Minor of the Selzuccian Family;

1075 1 Cutlu Moses, Nephew to Trangolipix, the first Persian Sultan of the Turks, won Media, part of Armenia Major, Cappadocia, Pontus and Bithynia.

2 Solyman, son of Cutlu Moses, for a while dispossessed of most of his estates by the Western Christians, in their first passage towards the Holy Land.

3 Mahomet, the son of Solyman, recovered most of his estates in the Lesser Asia; but outed of them, and subdued by 4 Musat, Sultan, or Lord Deputy of Iconium; but of the same Selzuccian Family, who was thereby possessed of all the Turkish Provinces in the Lesser Asia.

5. Calisastlan, the son of Musat (to whom his Father left Iconium, with the adjacent Provinces,) wrested Amasia, and Ancyra, from his brother Jagupasan; Sebastia, and Cæsarea, from his brother Dodune; which with their several Territories were bequeathed unto them, by the will of their Father. He overthrew the Emperour Emanuel Comnenus, and united Phrygia to his kingdom.

6. Reucratine, the third son of Calisastlan, having dispossest his three brethren, Musat, Cappatine, Caicosrhoes, of the estates left them by their Father, became sole Monarch of all the Turkish Provinces in the Lesser Asia. In the later end of whose reign, Occata the Tartarian Cham having driven the Turks out of Persia, many of them under the conduct of Aladine, a Prince of the same Selzuccian Family, joyned themselves to their Countrymen here, with whose help they won Cilicia from the Grecian Emperours, who in the reign of Calo-Johannes, (the Turks being then embroyled by the Western Christians) had not long before regained it; and after the decease of Reucratine, advanced him to the whole estate.

The Turkish Kings in Asia Minor, of the race of Aladine.

7 Aladine, descended in direct line from Cussanes, the last Turkish Sultan in Persia, having with many of his Nation seated himself in Cilicia, first made Sebastia, one of the Cities thereof, his chief seat or residence: which after the death of Reucratine, he removed to Iconium, as the antient Regal City of the former kings.

8 Azalide, by some called Azadine, eldest son of Aladine, wasted the most part of his reign in wars with his brother Jathatine; whom at last he forced into exile.

9 Jathatine, on the death of his brother possesseth the kingdom, slain afterwards in single combat by Theodorus Lascaris, Emperour of the Greeks, at Nice.

10 Jathatine II. Son of the former, driven out of his kingdom by the Tartars, and died in exile: the Turks becoming Tributaries and Vassals unto the Tartarian.

Tenedos.

11 Maſut, and Cei-cubades, of the ſame Selzuccian family (but whether the ſons of the ſecond Jathatine, I am not able to ſay) ſubſtituted in his place; as Tributaries to the conquering Tartars.

12 Aladine II. ſon of Cei-cubades, ſucceeded his father in the kingdom, but as Vaſſal and Leigeman to the Tartars. After whoſe death, leaving no iſſue of his body, the great Princes of his Family, divided amongſt them his Dominions. To Sarachan fell Æolis, Ionia, and part of Lydia, from him named Sarchan, Sarachan, or Saracha-Illi; to Aidin the reſt of Lydia, Phrygia major, and the greateſt part of the Greater Myſia, from him called Aidinia, or Aidin-Illi; to Carajus, the Leſſer Phrygia, with the reſt of Myſia, from him denominated Caraſan, or Caraſa-Illi; to the Family of the Iſfendiars, the Cities of Heraclea, Sinope, and that part of Pontus which lyeth next to Bithynia. There were alſo leſſer Toparchies or ſubdiviſions, from whence we find a Prince of Smyrna, a ſecond of Amaſia, a third of Amiſus, a fourth of Scandeloro; beſides many others. But the main body of the eſtate was ſeized by Caraman, who for his ſhare had the whole Provinces of Lycia, Lycaonia, Piſidia, Pamphylia, Iſauria, Cilicia, with the Regal City of Iconium, the greateſt part of Caria, (the reſt of it appertaining to the Prince of Menteſia) with part of Cappadocia, and Armenia Minor, and ſome Towns in Phrygia; continuing in his family for as many deſcents (as either of the former had held before) in great power and luſtre, under

The Turkiſh Kings in Aſia Minor, of the houſe of Caraman.

13 Caraman, the firſt raiſer of this Family, Contemporary with Ottoman the firſt King of that race.

14 Aladine, ſon of Caraman, and ſon-in-law of Amurath the firſt of the houſe of Ottoman, by whom ſubdued, but pardoned and reſtored unto his eſtate, on the humble entreats of his wife.

15 Aladine II. ſon of the former, ſubdued by Bajazet the firſt, and hanged by Tertumaſes, one of Bajazets great Commanders.

16 Mahomet, ſon of Aladine the ſecond, recovered his Kingdom on the death of Bajazet, vanquiſhed and led captive by the mighty Tamerlane. Afterwards warred upon and vanquiſhed by Mahomet the ſon of Bajazet, redeemed his peace, by yielding up unto him many of his principal Towns; and was finally ſlain at the ſiege of Attalia.

17 Ibrahim, the ſon of Mahomet, and ſon-in-law of Amurath the ſecond, againſt whom unadviſedly raiſing war, he was forced to ſubmit and become his Tributary: after whoſe death, rebelling againſt Mahomet the Great, he was then alſo vanquiſhed, and a reconciliation made betwixt them.

18 Ibrahim II. by ſome called Pyramus, the ſon of Ibrahim the firſt, ſupported Zemes, brother of Bajazet the ſecond in his war againſt him: for which Bajazet having ſetled his affairs, invaded and ſubdued the kingdom of Caramania, killed the unfortunate King in battel, and ſo united that Eſtate unto the reſt of the Dominions of the houſe of Ottoman. The ſtrange ſucceſſes of which houſe, from the firſt riſing of it to theſe preſent times, ſhall be deferred till we come unto Turcomania; from whence this Nation firſt attempted and atchieved the conqueſt of Perſia, and which only of all their large poſſeſſions doth retain any thing of their name. In the mean time we will ſurvey the Iſlands of this Leſſer Aſia, and ſo proceed to their poſſeſſions in the Greater, as they lie before us.

19. The Province of the ASIAN ISLES.

The Province of the ASIAN ISLES comprehendeth all the Ilands in Aſia Minor, from the mouth of the Helleſpont to the Rhodes, reckoning that for one: united firſt into a Province by the Emperour Veſpaſian, next reckoned as a part of the Aſian Dioceſe, and afterwards, together with the Province of the Helleſpont, and that of Aſia properly and ſpecially ſo called, making up the peculiar or exempt juriſdiction of the Proconſul of Aſia. Thoſe of moſt conſideration are, 1 Tenedos. 2 Lesbos. 3 Chios. 4 Samos. 5 Coos. 6 Icaria. 7 Patmos. 8 Claros. 9 Carpathos. 10 Rhodes. Others of leſs note, having nothing memorable but their names, are ſcarce worth the naming.

1. TENEDOS, is ſituate at the mouth of the Helleſpont, over againſt the noted Promontory called of old Sigeum (but now Cape Janizarie) a Promontory of Troas, or the Leſſer Phrygia, from which diſtant not above five miles. The Iſle it ſelf in circuit no more than ten; ſwelling with a round Mountain towards the North, in other parts levell; in both producing as good wines as the beſt of Greece. It took name, as the general tradition was, from Tenes the ſon of Cycnus, King of a little City in the Leſſer Phrygia, who being falſly accuſed by his Step-dame for ſolliciting her to that inceſtuous mixture which ſhe had violently importuned, and he as pioufly refuſed; was by the command of his Father put into a cheſt, expoſed to the mercy of the Sea, and there miraculouſly preſerved. Here for a time he is ſaid to reign, with great commendation for his juſtice; and afterwards going to the aid of the Trojans, to have been ſlain by the hand of Achilles: of whom therefore it was not lawfull to make mention in any of the Sacrifices offered in the Temples hereof. But Bochartus caſting off all this as an old wives fable, will have it ſo called from Tin-edum a Phœnician word, ſignifying Red clay, which the Potters made uſe of in their earthen veſſels. A town it had of the ſame name with the Iland, in which a Temple ſacred to Apollo Smynthius; and another called Aſterion, ſituate neer a little River well ſtored with Crab-fiſh, whoſe ſhells were made in the form of an Ax or Hatchet. From which Town as the Ilanders have in ſome Authors the name of Aſterii; ſo from the other circumſtance, they are ſaid to have had the ſtamp of an Hatchet on their coin or money. Memorable for an old cuſtom obſerved amongſt them, which was, that at the back of the Judge there alwaies ſtood a man with an Ax advanced; as well to terrifie the Witneſſes from giving falſe evidence to the Judge, as the Judge from pronouncing a falſe ſentence upon the evidence. Whence the Proverb, Tenedia Securis. More memorable for the final deſtruction of Troy, which was plotted here, the Grecians withdrawing their forces hither, as if gone in earneſt; but from hence ſetting ſail again to ſurpriſe the Town, when they ſaw their plot had took effect. And ſo I leave it with that Character which the Poet gives it. Lesbos.

Eſt in conſpectu Tenedos, notiſſima fumâ
Inſula, dives opum Priami dum Regna manebant.
Nunc tantum ſinus, & ſtatio male-fida carinis.

In Engliſh thus,

In ſight of Troy an Iland ſtands, well known,
Call'd Tenedos: rich, and of great renown,
Whilſt Priams kingdom flouriſh'd; now (they ſay)
Grown a poor Road, for ſhips an unſafe bay.

2. LESBOS, the largeſt of theſe Aſian Iſles, is diſtant from the main land of Troas, about ſeven miles; 168 in compaſs: reckoned the ſeventh in bigneſs of the Mediterranean, which Ariſtotle in his Book de Mundo, ranketh in this Order following. τυγχάνει αἱ μὲν ἀξιόλογοι, Σικελία, καὶ Σαρδοὶ, καὶ Κύπρος, καὶ Κρήτη, καὶ Εὐβοία, καὶ Κύπρος, καὶ Λέσβος. That is to ſay, The moſt conſiderable of theſe, are Sicilie, Sardinia, Corſica, Crete, Euboea, Cyprus, and Lesbos. And though both Scylax in his Periplus, a nameleſs Poet in Euſtathius, Diodorus Siculus, Strabo, and others of the Antients, vary in ordering of the reſt, according as their information or fancies led them: yet Lesbos comes in the ſeventh place conſtantly, without change at all. Upon which ground Bochartus will have it called Lesbos from Esburith a Phœnician word, ſignifying ſeven: contracted firſt to Esbu, by leaving out the laſt ſyllable of it; and then by changing bu to bos, and prefixing L to the beginning. Far enough ſet, and were it but as dearly bought, would be good for Ladies: this Iland being reckoned in the ſeventh place for no other reaſon, but becauſe it lay furtheſt off, and moſt North from Sicilie, from whence they ordered their accompt, and not any myſtery in the name thereof.

It had then the name from Lesbos the chief City of it, as that from Lesbus the ſon of Lapythus, who maried Methymna the daughter of Macarius Prince here of: from which Macarius, it had ſometimes the name of Macaria; as that of Mitylene, by which it is now commonly called, from Mitylene, another of the daughters of the ſaid Macarius. And that the memory of the whole family might be preſerved in this Iland, Methymna alſo had a City called by her name, one of the principal of the Country.

The Country towards the Weſt, and South, reported to be mountainous and ſomewhat barren, the reſt level and fruitfull; plentiful of excellent corn, and abounding in delicious wines, compared by Athenæus to Ambroſia, the liquor of the Gods, as the Poets fable, affording alſo plenty of ſheep, and ſtore of horſes; theſe laſt couragious and ſtrong, though but low of Stature. More memorable for the eminent perſons which it hath produced, as 1. Sappho, an Heroick woman, whoſe invention was the Sapphick verſe, and therefore called the tenth Muſe. 2. Pittacus, one of the ſeven Wiſemen of Greece. 3. Theophraſtus, that notable Phyſician and Philoſopher. 4. Alcæus, the ſucceſſour of Orpheus in the excellency of Lyrical poeſie; and 5. Arion, the Muſician, who was ſo perfect on his Harp, that being caſt into the Sea playing on that inſtrument, a Dolphin took him on his back, and wafted him ſafe as far as Corinth, where he related the whole ſtory unto Periander, atteſted by the Marines who had thrown him overboard. And though this be by ſome rejected as a poetical fiction; yet paſt all doubt, the man was not only an excellent Muſician, but an eminent Poet, the firſt inventor of Tragedies, a chief Lyrick, and the Author of the verſe called Dithyrambick.

Principal towns herein, 1. Lesbos, ἀφ' οὗ ἡ ὅλη νῆσος Λέσβος ἐλέγετο, from whom (ſaith Stephanus) the whole Iland had the name of Lesbos. 2. Methymna, ſo named from Methymna one of the daughters of Macarius, ſpoken of before. 3. Mitylene, ſo named from the other daughter, and wife of Lesbus, now the chief City of the Iland; ſeated on a Peninſula looking towards the main land ſtrong by nature, and fortified by Art: enjoying on either ſide a commodious Haven, that on the South moſt fit for Gallies; the other capable of ſhips of burden. Beautified heretofore with magnificent buildings, and ſweetned with variety of delights and pleaſures: little now left of it ſince ſubdued by the Turks, but a ſtrong Caſtle, manned with an able Garriſon, and a well-ſtored Arſenal for Gallies, kept here in readineſs to preſerve thoſe Seas from Pirates, with which much infeſted. But the two firſt long ſince decayed and grown out of knowledge, thoſe of moſt note next Mitylene, are 4. Vaſilica. 5. Theodori. 6. Caſtel-Gera: all of late daies, and therefore of no obſervation in point of Story.

The Iland was firſt inhabited by the Pelaſgians, conducted hither by Zanthus the ſon of Triopus; whence named Pelaſgia: afterwards by ſome Ionians, and people of ſundry nations, planted here by Macarius, (the father of Mitylene and Methymna;) who by his prudence and the reputation of his juſtice, obtained a kind of Soveraignty over the neighbouring Iſlands. Lesbus the ſon of Lapythus ariving here with his Family, maried Methymna, and had the Iland for her Dower; though Mitylene had the hap to have the predominant City, and the Iland conſequently called by her name. Made ſubject to

Chios. to the State of Athens, in the time of the Peloponnesian war (when almost all Greece banded against that City) they revolted from it, and were so streightly besieged by Paches, an Athenian Captain, that they submitted unto mercy. The General sends to Athens to know what should be done with the Mitylenians; Answer was sent, that he should put them to the sword. But the Senate on the morrow after, repenting of that cruel Decree, sent a countermand. These latter Messengers made no stay, but eating with one hand, and rowing with the other, came to Mitylene, just as Paches was reading the former Order; by this speed prevented. So near were these miserable people to a fatal destruction. Subdued by the Romans with the rest of Greece, they fell together with it to the Constantinopolitan Emperours: from whom taken, with Chios, Samos, Andros, and some other of these Isles, An. 1124. by the State of Venice, upon a quarrel betwixt them and the Grecian Emperour. Confirmed unto that Signeury by the Emperour Baldwin, and all the rest of the Ægean added to their portion; those above-named were again recovered by the valour and good fortune of John Ducas the Greek Emperour, then residing at Nice. Afterwards in the year 1335. the Emperour Calo-Johannes gave it to Franciscus Catalusius, a Noble Gentleman of Genoa, with one of his sisters, for her Dower. By whose posterity enjoyed, till the year 1462. when Mahomet the Great incensed against Dominicus Catalusius the then Lord hereof, for the murder of his elder brother, a Vassal and Tributary of his Empire (those Princes paying to the Turk an annual tribute of 4000 Ducats;) but more for harbouring the Pirats of Spain and Italy, besieges him in Mitylene his principal City, which in 27 dayes (for so long it held) he constrained to submit unto him, and therewith all the Iland also. Some of the chief families being removed unto Constantinople, upon some reasons of State, the main body of the people were permitted to remain here to till the land; and so continue to this day, with some few Turks, inconsiderable for their strength or numbers, intermixed among them.

3. CHIOS, the next to Lesbos both in site and bigness, lyeth opposite to the shore of Ionia, from which distant not above four leagues, is in compass about 126 miles. So called, as some say, from Chione a fair Nymph hereof, much sought after by many Suters: as others say, from χίων, a Greek word signifying Snow, wherewith the mountains of it are sometimes covered. And some again will have it take name from Chios the chief City of it, which being built in the form of the Greek letter χ, first got that name unto it self, and afterwards did communicate it to the whole Iland. Isidore in his Origines gives another reason, and will have it called so from a Syriack word signifying Mastick, whereof there is plenty in this Isle. Chios insula (saith he) Syrâ linguâ appellatur, eo quod ibi Mastyx gignitur; Syri enim Mastychen Chion vocant. And were it so, that Chios in the Syriack did signifie Mastick, there could no better reason be assigned for the name: this Iland being more furnished with that commodity, than any place in the world besides. A gumm it is growing out of the Lentisk tree, which in the moneths of July and August the Inhabitants force out of those trees, by making with sharp instruments a deep incision into the barks of them; out of which the juice dropping is afterwards hardned like a gumm, and in the September following gathered. A Commodity which yieldeth yearly to the Inhabitants 18000 Sultanies, every Sultanie being valued at the rate of a Zechine of Venice: and therefore the selling of the Lentisck tree, at the time of the distilling of this precious juice interdicted, on the penalty of losing the right hand of him that doth it.

Other Commodities of this Iland are Corn and Oyl in indifferent plenty, some quarries of most excellent Marble, a certain green earth like the rust of brass; some Silks and Cotton-Wool, but short in worth to those of Smyrna, and other places: Honey as good as any the world affordeth; and a vein of most delicious vines, those specially which grow on the Mountain Arvis, now called Amista. Of which Pliny gives this commendation, In summa gloria fuere Thasium, Chiumque; ex Chio, quod Arvisium vocant. Of all wines (saith he) those of Thassus, and Chios, are of best esteem; and of those of Chios, the Arvisian. Strabo extolleth them in the Superlative degree, and calleth the wine hereof, οἶνον ἄριστον τῶν Ἑλληνικῶν, incomparably the best of Greece. And Plutarch, speaking of an Epicurean, or voluptuous liver, affirms, that he conceived it the supreme felicity Καὶ δὲ συγκῶμος, καὶ μετὰ οἴνου Ἀριστου, to lie with Thais, and drink these Arvisian wines. Here are also infinite store of Partriges, of a red colour, kept tame, and fed in flocks like Geese, in the Streets and Greenswarths of their villages: some little Boy or Girl driving them to field, and calling them home again with a whistle, when the night comes on.

The Iland divided commonly into two parts, the Higher, called Apanomera, lying towards the North and West; hilly and rough, but intermixt with fruitful vales and pleasant Rivers; the Lower opposite unto it, called Catamorea, swelled here and there with gentle hillocks, on which groweth the Lentisck. The whole inhabited by Greeks intermixt with Genoese, and (since their conquest by that people) some few Turks amongst them. Which mixture with the Genoese, tempereth the levity of the Greeks with Italian gravity: the better sort of people both in apparrel, and manners, coming neer the Genoese, once the Lords of this Iland; the common sort continuing their old Greek humor of mirth and jollity (not sensible of the Turkish thraldom under which they suffer) with as much licentiousness as ever. And though this intermixture hath so corrupted their language, that neither the Greek nor the Italian be here rightly spoken, but a compound tongue made up of both; yet keep they their Religions still distinct and separate, as if they had never known another.

Here are reckoned in it six and thirty Towns and villages, the principal whereof are, 1. S. Elias, in the North. 2. Pigrine, in the midst hereof; and 3. Chios it self, now called Sio (as is all the Iland) one of the seven Cities contending for the birth of Homer; whose Sepulchre they pretend to shew in an old Castle neer the Mount and Town of S. Elias, (which were it his, would be a better argument for his burial here, than it is for his birth.) The Town situate in the most pleasant and fruitful part of the Country,

Country, to which both industry and Art have given great advantage: here being few houses without Orchards of excellent fruits, as Oringes, Limons, Pomegranats, Citrons, and a kind of Fig, much praised for their quickness of tast by the antient Romans. It standeth on the East-side opposite to the shores of Asia, stretched along the bottom of the Haven, and on the West-side backed with a rocky Mountain, upon which it formerly did stand. The Buildings ordinary, the Streets narrow, and the Haven every day decaying; though otherwise secure once entred; and for directing of the entrance, a Lantern advanced by the Genoese (when Lords hereof) to give light by night, and serve for a land-mark in the day. Fortified on the North-side by a large and strong Castle, environed with deep ditches, well furnished with munition, and a Turkish Garrison. And because the Iland is on all parts accessible, not naturally fortified with rocks, and dangerous precipices, as many others; besides this Castle, they have all along the Coast small watch-towers, which with smoke by day, and fire by night, give notice unto one another of such Vessels as they see approaching: the Guards about the Castle being so intent also about their charge, that every minute of the night there goeth a word about the walls to declare their vigilancie. Samos.

The Chians were at first a free people, governing themselves as a Commonwealth; and by reason of their many harbours, able to furnish out a Navy of 80 Sayl, which gave them the Lordship of those Seas, till eclipsed by the Rhodians. Besieged by Philip the father of Perseus, with his utmost power, who when he could not get it by force, proclamed freedom to the Slaves (of which here were many) and liberty to marry with their Masters wives, if they would rebel against their Masters. And when this policy would not do it, the Town being held out with greater heat of indignation, he gave over the siege. At last they became subject to the Romans with the rest of Greece, and followed punctually the same change of fortunes, as did those of Lesbos; which we have spoken of before: till given by Andronicus Palæologus, one of the last Greek Emperours, to the Justinians, a noble Genoesian family, assistant to him in his wars. Under them it continued as tributaries to the Turks (after the Turks had made themselves Masters of Constantinople) to whom they annually paid eighteen thousand Ducats, till the year 1566. When Solyman the Magnificent picking a quarrel with them for some suspected correspondencie with the Knights of Malta, commanded Pial, one of his greatest Bassas, to seize the Iland. And he accordingly presenting himself before the City, with a strong Fleet of eighty Gallies, did so astonish and amaze the Inhabitants of it, that without any other summons than the sight of his Navy, they surrendered themselves unto his disposing, upon Easter-day, being the same day he came before it. Since that time it hath continued Turkish, all save their Religion, enjoyed by them with like liberty, as in former times.

4. SAMOS, is on the South-east of Chios, distant about five miles from the shores of Ionia; about eighty, or eighty seven in compass; environed for the most part, especially on the North-west, with inaccessible rocks, but beautified with a fair and capacious Haven; of little use by reason of the Pirates which infest those Seas. The soyl sufficiently enriched with most kind of fruits, abundantly plentifull of Oyl, and Olives, but of Vines altogether unfurnished; which is the more to be admired, in regard all the Ilands and shores about it, produce them in so great a plenty. It stretcheth from the East to the West: and on the South part of it stood the City of Samia, near unto the Haven before spoken of. In former times populous, and well inhabited, as was the rest of the Iland; now wholy desolate in a manner, because of the Pirates, and in most places very much over-grown with woods: becoming thereby very useful to those publick enemies, who find here Timber enough for Shipping, and can upon the sudden put a ship to Sea, for pursute of their Robberies. The chief commodity it affordeth besides those above, is a medicinal Earth, usefull for Chirurgery and Physick: of which in former times were those Vessels made, called Vasa Samia, in great request amongst the Romans.

Antiently it had the names of Dryusa, Anathemusa, Melamphylas, and Ciparissa; out-worn by that of Samos, which it still retaineth. Memorable in old times for the birth of Juno, of one of the Sibyls, hence called Samia; and finally of the wise-man Pythagoras (a wiser than any of the seven wise Masters so renowned amongst them) who first brought Philosophy into Greece, and from thence into Italy. Once a free Commonwealth of no small esteem, the Institutes whereof are mentioned by Heraclides, in his Books of the several Commonwealths then being: afterwards made subject to the Tyrant Polycrates, a man so fortunate, that for a long time he never fell into any mischance. Fearing lest such a long calm would bring on a tempest, he let fall into the Sea a most precious Ring, by him deservedly esteemed; that so it might be said he had some mis-fortunes. Which after he had found again in the belly of a fish brought accidentally to his table, he was overcome by Orontes a Persian, and brought to a miserable death. Leaving a notable example, that fortune is certain in nothing but uncertainties; and like a Bee with a sharp sting, hath alwaies some misery following in the train of a long concatenation of felicity. From this time forwards it ran the same fortune with the rest of these Ilands; subject successively to the great Monarchies in former times, as of late times to the Venetians, Greeks, and Turks, who do now enjoy it.

5. ICARIA, (now called Niceria) lyeth not far from Samos, to the West-ward of it, narrow, but extended out in length; the whole compass seven and thirty miles: neighboured by two great Rocks, or little Ilands, of old called Melanthii, now the Fernaces; formidable at all times to Mariners, in the night especially. Meanly inhabited at the present, though abounding in pasturage, and yielding sufficiency of corn; Havenless, and therefore the less frequented, yet that defect supplyed by commodious Roads. In former times called Doliche, then Macris, after Ichsiæsa: which name it held till the flight of Dædalus out of Crete. Who justly fearing the anger of Minos, for being Pandar to his wife

in

in her loves with Taurus, ſecretly with Icarus his ſon, fled out of that Iland. And becauſe he would be ſure to out-ſtrip the Rowers who purſued him, he added ſails unto his Boat, which it is ſaid he firſt invented. But Icarus, coming after in another Bark, delighted with the new device, clapped on too much Canvaſs, and bearing too great a ſayl, was here caſt away. Hence the new name both to this Iland, and the Seas adjoyning to it: and the occaſion of the Fable of Dædalus putting wings upon his ſhoulders, when he fled from Crete; and of his ſons flying too high, whereby the wax melted which his wings were faſtned with, and ſo he periſhed in the water. Of which thus Ovid,

Dum petit infirmis nimium ſublimia pennis
Icarus, Icariis nomina fecit aquis.

In Engliſh thus,

Whilſt Icarus weak wings too high did ſoar,
He fell, and gave name to th' Icarian ſhore.

6. PATMOS, now called Palmoſa, is ſituate on the South of the other two; A little Iland, not above 30 miles in compaſs. Mountainous, but indifferently fruitful, eſpecially of wheat and pulſe; of other commodities, and fruits, not ſo well provided. On one of theſe Mountains ſtands a town of the ſame name with the Iland; having on the top thereof a Monaſterie of Greek Caloires; and on the bottom a fair haven (I mean in reference to the Iland.) Forty ſail of Ships are ſaid to belong unto it; by the trading whereof they bring in thoſe proviſions which the ſoyl affordeth not: the ſoyl about the town being ſo incomparably barren, that nothing groweth on or near it, but on ſuch earth as is brought thither from other places. Unto this Iland (as to others in other patts of the world) did the Roman Emperours uſe to confine offenders. A puniſhment laid by Domitian on S. John the Divine, who in this place writ his Revelation to the Churches of Aſia. So much the Text affirms for certain, as to the writing of it in this Iland. And the Inhabitants by tradition point unto an houſe on the North-ſide of the Town, in which it was written, and not far off, the Cave where it was revealed. Both places equally honoured by the Greeks and Latines. They alſo ſhew a dead mans hand, which they affirm to be his, the nails whereof grow again as oft as cut. But the Turks (ſaith Maginus) claim it for the hand of oue of their Prophets. Let them diſpute the controverſie, whilſt we haſt to

7. CLAROS, another Iland not far off, containing about 40 miles in compaſs. Well ſtored with commodious Harbours, but very mountainous; ſome of thoſe hils of ſuch an height, that from the tops thereof, the City of Epheſus in Ionia, (though diſtant at leaſt eighty miles) may be eaſily ſeen. It is now called Calamo. Neighboured by Lero (of old called Ileron) a little Iland not above eighteen miles in circuit; but very populous, inhabited both by Greeks and Turks, and furniſhing the neighboring Countries with ſome ſtore of Aloes. Sacred in former times was Claros to Apollo; reckoned by him amongſt his honours, in his brags to Daphne: where he declares,

——————Mihi Delphica tellus, Et Claros, et Tenedos, Pataræaque Regia ſervit.

That is to ſay,

The folk of Delphos, Tenedos, and Clare,
And Royal Patara, my Vaſſals are.

8. COOS, COS, or COUS, for by all theſe names it was called of old, is ſituate over againſt Caria, in the very bottom of the Ægean, that is to ſay, in that part thereof whith is called Mare Myrtoum, the Myrtoan Sea. A Sea ſo called, as ſome ſay, from one Myrtilus, the Coachman or Charioteer of OEnomaus, who having betrayed his race with Pelops, and importunate for his reward, was by Pelops precipitated into this Sea. Plinie leſs probably conceiveth that it took name from Myrtos, a little Iland not far from Eubœa, a little too far off to extend its name to the ſhores of Caria. And therefore conſidering that Lydia antiently was called Myrtus, and that in thoſe times Æolis, and Ionia, lying on this Sea, were accompted but as parts thereof, I think we may reſolve with more probability, that it derived this name from that Lydian Myrtus.

In this Sea ſtands the Iſle of Coos, now called Lange, affording Saylers as they paſs by a moſt beautiful proſpect, lying for the moſt part flat and level, but ſwelling towards the Eaſt with ſome graceful mountains, out of which iſſue many ſweet and pleaſant ſprings to refreſh the Iland, which maketh it more than ordinary fruitful. Productive of Cypreſs trees, Turpentine, and ſundry others, both delightful and medicinal; but moſt eſpecially celebrated for thoſe rich wines, which the Good Fellows of Rome ſo much loved to quaff, called Vinum Cos. It is in compaſs 70 miles, having a Town of the ſame name, in the ſuburbs whereof, ſtood antiently the Temple of Æſculapius, famous and rich with the offerings of thoſe, who having by his aſſiſtance (as they ſuppoſed) recovered health, came hither to make payment of their vowes, and expreſs their gratitude. It is now fortified with a ſtrong Caſtle, held by a Garriſon of Turks: and beſides this, two Villages only in the Iland, and both inhabited by Greeks.

In elder times it had the name of Merope, Caria, and Nymphæa, and at laſt of Coos. Memorable in being the Country of many famous men who were herein born; viz. of Hippocrates, the Revivor of Phyſick, then almoſt decayed, who is hence called Hippocrates Cous. 2. Sinius, a Phyſician alſo; 3. Ariſton, a Peripatetick Philoſopher; 4. Philetas, as good an Oratour, as a Poet; 5. Nicias, who for a time oppreſſed the liberty of this peopl[e]; and 6. of Apelles, the famous Painter; who to expreſs his art in the picture of Venus, (rising naked out of the Sea) assembled together all the most beautiful women of this Iland, uniting in that piece their divided perfections. Which famous piece being afterwards hanged up in the Temple of Stomalimne, one of the principal of this Iland, was thence conveyed to Rome by Augustus, and there dedicated to Cæsar, as the mother of the Julian family: the Coans in regard hereof, being eased of a great part of their annual tributes. Not much less memorable for that fine thin stuff (such as now called Tiffanies) so much in use amongst the Chief Ladies of Rome; which at once shewed them cloathed and naked. Perlucida utuntur veste, ita ut nudæ conspici possint, as my Author hath it. These they called Vestimenta Coa, and Vestes Coas, so often mentioned by the Poets, especially in their Amatoria; as Coa puellis Vestis, in Tibullus; Induc me Cois, in Propertius; Sive erit in Cois, saith the Poet Ovid. So in others also, too many, and too long to be added here. I pass to Carpathos and Rhodes.

art

9. CARPATHOS, situate on the South of Caria, in the Mediterranean, from this Iland, called hereabouts the Carpathian Sea. A rugged and unpleasing soil, full of difficult mountains, but those mountains stored with quarries of most excellent Marble. In circuit about 60 miles, extending more in length than bredth. Heretofore beautified with four Cities, and thence named Tetrapolis. But three of the four Cities are long since perished, that of Carpathos being still remaining, and still the principal of the Iland; both now called Scarpanto. Some other Towns it hath all along the shore, and every one of them furnished with some Port or Haven; but small, and for the most part very unsafe. Situate in the middle as it were betwixt Crete and Rhodes, it hath continued hitherto in the possession of the State of Venice (if not taken from them very lately:) to whom being given with other of the Ilands of these Grecian Seas, at the taking of Constantinople by the Western forces, it hath the fortune or felicity to continue theirs, when almost all the residue were subdued by the Turks. The people Greek, of the communion of that Church, notwithstanding their subjection to a State of Italy.

10. RHODES, situate in the Rhodian or Carpathian Sea, lyeth over against the coast of Lycia, in Asia Minor, from which distant about 20 miles. Formerly called Ophiusa, Asteria, Æthræa, Trinachia, Paessa, Corymbia, Atabyria, and at last Macaria; it setled finally and fortunately in the name of Rhodes. So named by the Grecians from the abundance of Roses, which the soil produceth, Rhodos in that language signifying a Rose, the Isle of Roses, as it were: but as the Poets say, of Rhoda, a Nymph of these Seas, here deflowred by Apollo; or rather of Rhoda, one of the daughters of Apollo begat on Venus. For so one of them thus declareth;

Insula dicta Rhodos, de Sole et Cypride nata est.

Rhoda, from whom this Isle took name,
Of Venus and Apollo came.

The Iland 140 miles in compass, enriched with a most temperate air, and a fertile soyl, producing fruits in very great plenty, full of excellent pastures, adorned with trees which alwaies do continue green: and in a word, so blest with the gifts of nature, that it gave occasion to the fable of those Golden Shewers, which were once said to have fallen upon it. The wines hereof so excellent, and so rich of taste, that by the Romans they were used in their second courses, or reserved for the sacrifices of the gods, as too good for mortals, as affirmed by Virgil in the Georgicks. The cause of which perpetual flourishing, and continuall spring, is to be ascribed to the powerful influences of the Sun, so dearly cherishing this Iland, or so much in love with it, that it is constantly affirmed that no day passeth wherin he shineth not clearly on it, be the air in all other places never so much over-cast with clouds, or obscured by mists. Feigned for that cause to have been naturally a meer Marish, altogether inhabitable, if not covered with waters; til loved by Phœbus, and erected above the waves by his vigorous influences.

Of the People we shall speak anon; Look we in the mean time on the places of most observation. 1. Lindus, (now Lindo a pety Town, but formerly of more esteem:) of note in those times for the Temple consecrated to Minerva, by Danaus King of Egypt, landing here when he fled out of that Kingdom. As also for the birth of Chares, the Architect of the huge Colossus, whereof more presently; but specially for the nativity of Cleobulus, one of the seven wise men of Greece: the other six being Solon of Athens, Periander of Corinth, Chilo of Sparta, Bias of Priene, Thales of Miletum, and Pittacus of Mitylene. Seven men of whom the Grecians most immensely bragged, as if the World could neither afford them equals, or an equal number: for which derided handsomly by Lactantius, an old Christian writer, who scoffs their paucity, and calleth it a miserable and calamitous age, in quo septem Soli fuerunt qui hominum vocabula mererentur; in which there were no more than seven who deserved to be accompted men. 2. Rhodes, antiently, as now the chief City of it, the Iland from hence taking name, and formerly, as well as in later times, depending on the fortunes and strength hereof. No place in elder times held superiour to it, for the conveniency of the Haven, magnificent buildings, delightful Orchards, and other excellencies. Situate on the East part of the Isle, on the declining of an hill, and near the Sea, where it enjoyeth a safe and commodious Haven: treble walled, fortified with thirteen Turrets, and five strong Bulwarks, besides divers Sconces, and other out-works; this Town, and Famagusta in the Isle of Cyprus, being conceived to be the two strongest holds in the Turkish Empire. In former times, one of the principal Universities of the Roman Empire; this Rhodes, Marseilles, Tarsus, Athens, and Alexandria, being reckoned the old Academies of that Monarchy. And to this Town, as a most noted place of Study, Tiberius, (afterwards Emperour) did withdraw himself, when Augustus had declared his Rhodes. his 2 Nephews Lucius and Caius, for his heirs: pretending only a desire to improve himself in the ways of literature; whereas the true cause was his envy at their preferment. Honoured in those times with that huge Colossus, one of the seven wonders of the World, made by Chares of Lindum, before mentioned. Composed of Brass, in height seventy Cubits, every finger of it being as great as an ordinary man; and consecrated to the Sun, as the proper Deity of the Iland. Twelve years in making, and having stood but 66 years was pulled down in an instant by an Earthquake, which terribly shook the whole Iland. The Rhodians being forbid by an Oracle to erect it again (or possibly pretending such an Oracle to save that charge) yet held the brasse and other materials of it (in a manner) sacred. Not medled with, nor sacrilegiously purloined till Mnavias, the General of Osmen, the Mahometan Caliph, finding in himself no such scruple of conscience, (after he had subdued this Iland) made a prey hereof, loading nine hundred Camels with the very brasse of it. From this Colossus was the Iland sometimes called Colossa, and the people Colossians: not those Colossians (as some have very vainly thought) to whom St. Paul writ his Epistle, those being of Colosse, a Town of the Greater Phrygia, as hath there been noted. Here was also in this City antiently a Temple of Bacchus, enriched with many presents both of Greeks and Romans; of both which people the Rhodians were then held in a fair esteem; but the God and the good Wines in greater. Towns of less note, are 3. Villanova, 4. Russicare, and some others, but as little memorable.

This Iland was first peopled by Dodanim the son of Javan, and the Grand-child of Japhet, whom the Greeks call commonly, but corruptly Rhodanim; mistaking the Hebrew letter Daleth for that of Resh, letters so like as easily it might draw them to that mistake. Finding this Iland too narrow for him, he left here a Colonie, and with the main body of his people passed into Greece; where he planted the Country of Epirus, as hath there been said. Those which staid here being mistakingly called Rhodians (or called so by the Grecians, not looking with too curious eyes into their Antiquities, from the abundance of Roses herein growing) making the best use of their Haven, and other the advantages of their situation, became so expert in maritime affairs, that by Florus they are stiled Populus nauticus; and that not only in the way of Trade and Merchandize, but of power and government; holding for many years the command of these Seas, and prescribing Laws for the Regleiment of Navigarion. Which being called the Rhodian Laws, became the general Rule for deciding marine causes, and ordering the affairs of Sea, in all the parts and Provinces of the Roman Empire: and so continued till supplanted in these western parts by the Laws of Oleron. Fearfull of falling under the Macedonians, they applied themselves unto the Romans; whom first they aided in their wars against Philip, the Father of Perseus; and afterwards in that also against Antiochus. Rewarded for this last service with Lycia and Caria, two of the Asian Provinces, which Antiochus was to leave on his composition; they became so faithfully affected to the State of Rome, that when all the other Ilands of the Mediterranean and Ægean Seas revolted to Mithridates King of Pontus; this only adhered unto the Romans. Proud either of their strength at Sea, or of those good Officers, they began to take upon them as Mediators, and thought themselves fit men to advise their Masters. Grown troublesome by their frequent interpositions, and losing much of their esteem by such impertinencies; they began to grow jealous of the Romans, and incline to Perseus King of Macedon; whose Father they before opposed with their utmost power. A change which Parterculus expresseth with some admiration. Rhodii ipsi fidelissimi antea Romanis, dubia jam side proniores in Regis partes visi sunt, as his words there are. But yet they held for them against Mithridates, as before was said; and served their turn on all occasions, until insensibly they betrayed their liberty to the power of their friends; and of Confederates and Allies, became their Vassals. Made by Vespasian into a Province with the rest of the Isles, the Governour or President of that Province fixing here his residence, as the chief of those Ilands; which gave the title of Metropolitan to the Bishop of Rhodes. Under that Empire it continued, (or under that of Constantinople after the division) till the year 1124. when taken from the Grecians by the State of Venice; again recovered by the Greeks, in the time of their Emperour John Ducas, then residing at Nice. Won from the Grecians by the Turks, the Knights of Saint John of Hierusalem, being utterly driven out of Asia, possessed themselves of it, by the favour of Emanuel the then Emperour, who aided them in the conquest, An. 1308. Afterwards proving bad neighbours to the Turkish tyrants, whom they ceased not to infest upon all occasions, they were many times in vain invaded: Mahomet the Great, famous for taking Constantinople, and the Empire of Trabezond, spending some time before their City, with both loss and shame. At the last An. 1522. it was again besieged by Solyman the Magnificent, Lilladamus Villerius being then great Master: who did as much in defence hereof as policy and puissance could extend unto. But multitude in the end prevailed, and upon Christmas day, the Turk entred Rhodes as Conquerour; though possibly he might have said (as Pyrrhus once said of a like victory against the Romans) that such another victory would have quite undon him. Since that a Province of the Turks, by whom, and by some Jews banished out of Spain, the City of Rhodes is wholly inhabited: the Christians which are licensed to dwell in the Country, and have leave to trade there in the day time, not suffered upon pain of death to stay there all night. And so we pass from the Ilands of the Asian Diocese, to the Isle of Cyprus, a near neighbour unto Anatolia; but no member of it: the rest of that Diocese, and those Seas, as 11. Possidium. 12. Arcesine. 13. Bugiales. 14. Minyas. 15. Sirne, 16. Cesi, and the rest, yielding but little matter of observation besides their names.

OF CYPRUS.

CYPRUS is situate in the Syrian and Cilician Seas, extended in length from East to West two hundred miles; in breadth, sixty; the whole compass reckoned five hundred and fifty. Distant about sixty miles from the rocky shores of Cilicia, in Asia Minor, and about an hundred from the main land of Syria: towards which it shooteth it self out with a long sharp Promontory, extending heretofore to the main land, from which rent in former time by a violent Earthquake, as is said by Plinie; and worn unto this narrowness by the continual working of the Sea upon it.

No place hath oftner changed his name, or at least had more names on the By than this. Called at first Cethin, or Cethinia, from Ketim the son of Javan, who first planted in it. 2. Cerastis, from the abundance of Promontories, thrusting like horns into the Sea, (as the Word intimates in the Greek,) 3. Amathusia. 4. Paphia. 5. Salaminia; these three last from the principal Towns in those parts hereof. 6. Macaria, from the fruitfulness and felicities of it. Besides these it hath in some times had these By-names also, as 7. Asperia, from the roughness of the soil. 8. Collinia, from the frequency of Hills and Mountains. 9. Æroſa, from the Mines of Brass, which abound therein. 10. And finally, all those forgotten or laid by, it setled at the last in the name of Cyprus. So called, say some, from the abundance of Cypress Trees, with which most plentifully provided; as other, from Cryptos a Greek word, signifying Concealed, or hidden, because sometimes concealed by the Surges from the eye of Saylers; but most improbably said by others to take name from Cyrus, who founded here the City of Aphrodisia; whereas indeed six hundred years before Cyrus his birth we find it by this name in Homer. More rightly Stephanus, who deriveth it, ἀπὸ Κύπρου τῆς θυγατρὸς Κινύρου, from Cyprus daughter of Cinyras, one of the Kings hereof, living before the Trojan wars: though in my mind the first comes neerest to the truth, the Cypress Tree, not only growing here in so great abundance, but being antiently peculiar in a manner to this Iland only.

But on what ground soever it was called Cyprus, certain I am it had the name of Cerastis upon very good reason: no Iland or Region that I known of (for the bigness of it) thrusting out so many sharp Promontories. For on the West, there is 1. the Promontory called Acamas, now Capo S. Pisano. 2. Drepanum, now Trapano and Melechia. 3. Zephyrum, or Caput Calidoni, now Punta Malota. On the South, 4. Phrurium, now Capo Bianco. 5. Curias, or Capo della Gatte. 6. Gades, or Capo Chiti. 7. Throni, or Capo Pila. On the East, 8. Pendalium, now Capo di Griego. 9. Clides, now Capo S. Andrea. And on the North, 10. Crocyon, now Capo Cornochiette; besides some others of less note. Some of the Poets give another reason of this name, as that Venus offended with the people of Amathus for sacrificing their guests, should turn them into horned Cattel, Unde etiam nomen traxere Ceraſtæ, as it is in Ovid. But that meerly fabulous; somewhat of kin unto the Legend of Thomas Becket, and the Kentish Long-tails. Yet so far we may joyn with Ovid, that the Iland was not only called Cerastis, but that the people were also called Cerastæ, of which there wants not proof from some other Authors; with which we need not trouble our selves, that name being altogether worn out of use, and no other but that of Cyprus given it in common speech. Nor is it a matter of more strangeness, that Cyprus should be called so by the Grecians, from its abundance of Cypress Trees, antiently and originally peculiar to this Iland, as before was noted: than that the same Grecians should give unto the neighbouring Iland, the name of Rhodes, from its great plenty of Roses; or to the neighbouring Continent the name of Phœnicia, from its great plenty of Palm-trees; the words so signifying in that Language.

It is situate under the fourth Climat, so that the longest day in Summer is no more than 14 hours and a half; and for that cause the air in Summer time exceeding hot and sweltry: the soil moistned with some few brooks, meriting rather the name of torrents, than Rivers, which being generated for the most part by rain water, are not seldom dried up by the heat of the Sun; insomuch that in the reign of Constantine the Great; this Iland was for 36 years together almost utterly forforsaken, no rain falling all that time. These inconveniences notwithstanding, it is stored with such plenty of all things, that without the help of any forein Nation, it is of it self able to build a tall ship from the keel to the top-sail, and so put it to sea furnished with all things needfull for a voyage, or a Sea-fight. It also aboundeth in Wine, Oyl, Corn, Sugar, Cotton, Honey, Wool, Turpentine, and Allom; Verdegreece, all sorts of Metals, store of Salt, Grograms, and other commodities, whereupon this Iland was once called Macaria (i. e. happy.) By reason of which wonderful affluence of all necessaries, and that variety of pleasures (even to sensuality) which the place afforded, it was antiently consecrated unto Venus, who is hence called Venus Cypria, and Dea Cypri : Sic te diva potens Cypri, in Horace; and in Ovid,

Festa dies Veneris, tota celeberrima Cypro,
Venerat; ipsa suis aderat Venus aurea festis.

Venus feasts hallowed through all Cyprus came,
And Venus with her presence grac'd the same,

The people hereof are warlike, strong and nimble; of great civility, and hospitality to their neighbors, and love to strangers of all Nations, Jews only excepted. For in the Empire of Trajan, the Jews inhabiting Egypt and the adjoyning Countreys, drew themselves together, and chose one Alexander for their Captain: under whose conduct they entred into this Iland, and laid it desolate, killing in it 240000 persons of all sexes and ages; not without much bloodshed vanquished and slain by Lucius the Emperors Lieutenant. Since which time the Cypriots permit no Jew to enter into the Iland; but come he hither voluntarily or by force of tempest, they lay hands on him, and lead him presently to execution. A hated Nation, that neither innocence can protect, or equity reprieve from that cruel custom.

The women in former times much noted for their Unchastity, to which their worshipping of Venus was no small incentive; it being the custom of these women, to prostitute themselves on the shores, to the passers by: their very Virgins not refusing to be hanselled there, before their mariage; either to raise their portions by the sale of their bodies, or else to please their Godess with such beastly sacrifices. And if Volaterranus may be credited (as I think he may) the Ladies which attended on Qu. Carlotte, when she came to Rome, to seek for aid against James the bastard, who had dispossessed her of this kingdom, shewed themselves little chaster than those antient Cypriots. Somewhat more fortunate in the men, Æsclepiades, the Author of the verse so named; 2. Xenophon, an old Poet; 3. Zeno, and 4. Apollonius, the Philosophers; 5. Epiphanius, the learned Bishop of Salamis; and 6. above all, Saint Barnabas, the dear Associate of St. Paul, being all natives of this Country.

The Christian faith was first here planted by Saint Paul and Barnabas, as the very first fruits of their Apostleship, after they had been separated to the work of the Ministry by the Imposition of hands; as appeareth Acts 13. v. 4. &c. The Church hereof, by reason of the Antiquity of it, and the honour of this joint foundation, so privileged in the best ages of Christianity, that the Archbishop of this Iland had all prerogatives of a Primate; consecrated by his own Suffragan Bishops, and acting in all sacred and Ecclesiastical affairs, without dependence on, or relation to the See of Antioch; whereunto all other Bishops in the Eastern Diocese, were either subordinate or subject. Which privilege being questioned in the Council of Ephesus, was by the Fathers there assembled, on a full hearing of the cause, approved and ratified; confirmed by the Civil sanction of the Emperour Justinian, whose wife was a native of this Iland, and by the name of Jus Cyprium, the privilege or exemption of the Cyprian Church, transmitted to the Prelates of succeeding times. Which notwithstanding, they continued in good correspondence with the Eastern Churches of the Greek Communion, and officiated all Divine Acts after the rites and forms thereof; til the Venetians became Lords of it, who brought in the Latine Service into some of their Churches, and appointed Bishops and other Ministers of the Papal party, for execution of the same. And for the Government of these Churches, they had at first fourteen Bishops and Archbishops, to gratifie Queen Alice (who had a mind to enrich her friends with some of the spoils of them) reduced by Innocent the third to four only, that is to say, the Archbishoprick of Nicosia, the Bishopricks of Famagusta, Paphos, and Amathus; but each Sea furnished with two Prelates, the one for the Greeks, the other for the Latines: of which the Bishops for the Latines have all the Lands, and annual Revenues which of right belong to those Cathedrals; the Greek Bishops living upon stipends, levied on the Priests and Deacons of their jurisdiction.

Rivers, as formerly was said, here are very few; and of those few, the principal are called Lycus, and Lapithus; the first running towards the South, the last towards the North; both not seldom so dried up, that they leave their empty Chanels without any water. Both also have their Source from the hill Olympus (the highest Mountain of the Iland) garnished with trees and fruits of all sorts; in compass about eighteen Leagues (which make four and fifty Italian miles) and at the end of every League a Monastery of Greek Monks, or Caloires, and a fountain of fresh water for the use of the house. Here are also two other little Rivers, the one called 3. Bodeus, the other 4. Tolius; but of the same nature as the former.

By Ptolemy, or in his time, divided into four parts or Provinces, but since it fell into the hands of the Lusignan family, distributed into twelve Counties or Cantrades; most of them called by the names of their principal Towns. viz. 1. Nicosia. 2. Famagusta. 3. Paphia. 4. Audima. 5. Limissa. 6. Masorum. 7. Salines. 8. Messoria. 9. Crusocus. 10. Pentalia. 11. Carpassus. 12. Cerines. The whole containing, besides these Cities and great Towns, 805 Villages or thereabouts, which they they called Casales; whereof the one half antiently belonged unto the Crown; the other half divided betwixt the Lay-Nobility, and the Ecclesiasticks; the Patrimony of these last being computed at 80000. Crowns of annual rents, besides casualties, and the vails of the Altar. But because the tracing out of these Cantrades will be very difficult (as a way which none have gone before me) I will adhere to the division made hereof in the time of Ptolemy, into the Provinces of 1. Paphia, 2. Amathusia, 3. Lapethia, and 4. Salamine. Paphia, &c.

1. PAPHIA, so called of Paphos the chief town thereof, taketh up the West part of the Iland: in which the Towns of most importance and observation, are 1. Paphos, on the Sea-side, by Plinie called Palæ-paphos, or old Paphus; built as some say, by Cyniras, the Father of Myrrha, and so named in memory of Paphus his father: but as others say, by Paphos, the son of Pygmalion, King of Phœnicia, and Cyprus; to which last Ovid doth agree, who speaking of Pygmalions statue, turned into a woman by the power of Venus (or rather of his beautifull wife, fabled, for the surpassing whiteness of her skin to be made of Ivorie) he adds this of her,

Illa Paphum genuit de quo tenet insula nomen.

She Paphus bare, from whom the name
Of Paphia, to the Iland came.

Here Venus had her so much celebrated Temple, hence the name of Paphia; and here her Votaries of both sexes in their natural nakedness, did perform her sacrifices. Both Town and Temple ruined by a fearfull Earthquake: or as the Legends have it, by the prayers of Saint Barnabas; the ruins of it still remaining. 2. Paphos Nova, or New Paphos, now called Baffo, five miles from the old, built by Agapenor, one of the Nephews of Lycurgus the Spartan Law-giver, after the sack of Troy forced hither by a violent tempest: consecrate to the same impure Godess, and much frequented, but without injury to the other; those which here offered, not thinking they had done her sufficient service, unless they went in a solemn manner of procession, and paid their vowes also at the other. 3. Arsinoe, situate betwixt both; built by, or called so in honour of Arsinoe daughter of Ptolemy, the first King of Egypt, and Lord of Cyprus, of that house. 4. Drepanum, now called Trepano, under the Promontory so named, a well-traded Port, but miserably defaced by the Turks, when they took this Iland. 5. Connelia, one of the richest of the Iland, by reason of the plenty of Sugar, and Cotton-Wool, growing thereabouts. Built in the place of 6. Cithera, dedicated to Venus also, but differing from the Iland of that name in the Ægean Sea, rather in pronunciation than the purity of her oblations: the last syllable save one, in the name of that Iland, being short in verse, but this of Cyprus sounding long, as in this of Virgil.

Est Amathus, est celsa mihi Paphos, atq; Cithera.

Cithera, Amathus divine,
And lofty Paphos, are all mine.

2. On the South-East of Paphia lieth the Province or District of AMATHUSIA, taking up the South-parts of the Iland which look towards Egypt. Chief Towns hereof, 1. Amathus, giving name unto this division, then of most note, and much frequented for the annual sacrifices made unto Adonis the darling of Venus, who had here another of her Temples: the ruins of both hardly now discerned. Built, as some say, by Amasis, King of Egypt, when he conquered this Iland; but as others say, by some of the Anathutes descended from Anath one of the sons of Canaan. 2. Cetium, or Citium, (for I find it called by both names) the birth-place of Zeno the Stoick, hence called Κίτιος, or Citiensis; and memorable for the death of Cimon the Athenian General. A Town wherein the memory of Cittim, the son of Javan, is most apparently preserved. 3. Episcopio, one of the chief of all the Iland, built on the place, or out of the decay, of 4. Curias, not far from the Promontory of the same name, founded by the Argives, where Apollo had both a Grove and a Temple, by the name of Apollo Hylates: his Altars in those times held so sacred, that whosoever presumed to touch them, was thrown into the Sea from the Promontory or rocks adjoyning. 5. Salines, or Salinæ, so called from the rich Saltpits; one of the chief Towns of this part, and giving name to one of those twelve Cantrades, into which the whole is now divided.

3. LAPETHIA, the third part of the Iland, lyeth on the North thereof, opposite to Cilicia in Asia Minor. Places of most importance in it, 1. Nicosia, the Regal City of the Kings, the See of the Arch-Bishop, and the chief of the Iland: antiently called Ledronsis, and Lentenis; but those names long ago laid by. Situate in the middest of the Isle, and in a plain and champain Country, abundantly fertile and delightful. Enironed with a fair wall, so exactly round as if it had been drawn with a pair of compasses: in circuit about five miles, and both for situation, numbers of people, and magnificent buildings of all sorts both publick and private, compared by some to the most beautifull City of Florence. Fortified by the Venetians, when in their possession, with new walls, deep ditches, and eleven strong Bulwarks, with three great Out-works, all of them built according to the Art of modern fortification. But notwithstanding all these works, and the help of 250 piece of Canon planted on the walls and about the City, it was by the Turks taken at the second or third assault, Septemb. 9. Anno 1570. So evident a truth it is, that Fortifications are more strengthened by the gallantry and courage of the Defendants, than the Defendants are by their Fortifications. 2. Cerines, ſituate near the Sea, ſtrong by art and nature, and furniſhed with all things neceſſary to endure a ſiege; but yielded to the Turks by Alfonſus Palacins the unwarlike Governor, terrified with the great ſlaughter made at the ſack of Nicoſia, before the enemy came near it. At firſt called Ceurania, and ſaid to have been built by Cyrus the great Perſian King, when he firſt ſubdued the nine Kings hereof and united the Iland to that Crown; bleſt with a more temperate and wholeſom air, than any other in the Country. 3. Tremitus, the birth-place of Spiridion, a Biſhop of the Primitive times, renowned for miracles; many of which reported by Sozomen, lib. 1. cap. 10. and other Eccleſiaſtical writers. Wholly decaied, the ruine of it much contributing to the riſe of Nicoſia. 5. Lapithus (by Pliny called Lapeto) on the banks of a ſmall Riveret of that name. Of ſo great note in former times, that it gave to this Diviſion the name of Lapethia. In this part ſtandeth the hill Olympus, (now the Mountain of the holy Croſs) deſcribed before.

4. SALAMINE, the fourth and laſt Province of this Iland, taketh up the whole Eaſt-parts hereof: So named from 1. Salamis, once the chief City of the Iſle, and the See of the Primate, or Metropolitan hereof in the Primitive times. Deſtroyed by the Jews in the reign of Trajan, and re-built again; but being after that taken, ſacked, and razed unto the ground by the Saracens, in the time of Heraclius, it never could again recover: the Metropolitan See after that ſubverſion, being removed to Nicoſia. It was ſometimes, and by ſome writers, called Conſtantia alſo; but that name could give it no more perpetuity than the other of Salamis. Memorable whilſt it ſtood for the founder of it, being Teucer the ſon of Telamon King of Salamis, an Iſle of the Ægean Sea; baniſhed his Country by his Father, and ſeled in this Iland by the power of Belus, King of Phœnicia: as alſo for a famous Temple ſacred unto Jupiter, hence called Salaminius. Out of the ruins hereof aroſe 2. Famaguſta, now the prime City of theſe parts; built as is ſaid by Coſta, the Father of Saint Catharine; but that uncertain. Situate at the Eaſt end of the Iland, in a plain and low ground betwixt two Promontories, the one called the Cape of Saint Andrew, and the other Capo di Griego, or the head of Græcia. In compaſs not above two miles, in form four-ſquare, but that the ſide towards the Eaſt ſtretcheth out more in length than the other three. On two parts beaten on with the Sea, the other parts towards the Land defended with a Ditch not above fifteen foot in bredth, an old ſtone wall, and certain Bulwarks. The Haven (oppoſite to Tripolis, a Town of Syria) openeth towards the South eaſt, defended from the injury of the Sea by two great Rocks, betwixt which the Sea cometh in at a narrow paſſage not above forty paces broad: but after opening wider and wider, maketh a convenient Harbour, rather ſafe than large, aſſured both by the difficult entrance, and a chain croſſed over it. The whole Town, when the Turks appeared before it, but meanly fortified; the works of it of the old faſhion generally decayed except one Bulwark, which was built according to the modern Arts of Fortification, with Paliſadoes, Curtains, Caſemates, and all other Additaments: moſt gallantly defended by Bragadine the noble General, to the wonder and envy of the Turks, who ſpent no leſſe than 118000 great ſhot upon it; and at laſt yielded upon honourable terms, had they been as punctually performed. 3. Aphrodiſium, ſo named of Venus, whom the Greeks called Aphrodite, who had here another of her Temples. 4. Arſinoe, built alſo by one of the Arſinoes Queens of Egypt (there being two others of this name, and the ſame foundation,) now called Leſcare, and antiently renowned for the Groves of Jupiter. 5. Tamaſſus, of good note in the time of Strabo for rich Mines of Braſs, as afterwards for abundance of Verdegreece and Vitriol found plentifully in the fields adjoyning. 6. Idalium, neer a Mount of the ſame name, ſo called by accident. For Chalcenor the founder of it being told by Oracle, that he ſhould ſeat himſelf, and build a City, where he firſt ſaw the riſing Sun: one of his followers, ſeeing the Sun begin to riſe, cried out ἴδου ἅλιον, that is to ſay, behold the Sun. Which omen taken by Chalcenor, he here built this City. But whether this were ſo or not (as for my part I build not very much upon it) certain it is, that Venus had here another Temple, neighboured by the Idalian Groves, ſo memorized and chanted by the antient Poets. So ſtrong an influence had luſt and ſenſuality on this wretched People, that every corner of the Iland was defiled with thoſe brutiſh Sacrifices, which day by day were offered to that impure deitie: though to ſay truth, it was no marvail if having made their Belly their God, they made in the next place, their glory their ſhame.

The firſt Inhabitants of this Iland were the poſterity of Cittim the ſon of Javan, and grand-ſon of Japhet: who having ſeen his brother Tarſhiſh ſetled in Cilicia, (where his memory is ſtill preſerved in the City of Tarſus) planted himſelf and his retinue in this oppoſite Iland. The City of Cetium, as Ptolemy, or Citium, as Pliny calleth it, one of the antienteſt of the Iland; which with the authority of Joſephus, and others of the antient writers, put it out of queſtion. But being this Iland was too narrow to contain his numbers, and willing to ſeek further off for a larger dwelling, he left here ſo many of his followers as might ſerve in time to plant the Countrey; and with the reſt paſſed into Macedon, where we have already ſpoken of him. Made tributary firſt to Amaſis King of Egypt, from which diſtant about three or four dayes ſailing. Subjected afterwards to the Phœnicians, a near neigbour to them, who being a Sea-faring people, made themſelves maſters of the Sea-coaſts and maritime places. Cinyras the Father of Myrrha, (by whom both Father and Grand Father to Adonis) is ſaid to have been K. of both. The like affirm'd of Belus one of his Succeſſors, who is ſaid to have been the founder of the City of Citium, named ſo (if not rather repaired than new built by him,) with reference no doubt to Cittim, the firſt Progenitor of this People. By the power and favour of this Belus, Teucer the ſon of Telamon, baniſhed his Country, accompanied with many followers from Salamis, Athens, and Arcadia, was ſettled in the Eaſt parts hereof; where the City of Salamis, by him built, was his firſt plantation. Yet ſo, that the Phœnicians kept their former hold: it being evident in Story, that Elulæus one of the ſucceſſors of this Belus, (but a King of Tyre,) and a Co-temporary with Salmanaſſar King of Aſſyria, paſſed over into Cyprus with a puiſſant Navy to reduce the Citiæans to obedience, who had then rebelled. The Iland at firſt comming of Teucer hither ſo infinitely overgrown with woods, that the people were not able to till the land. Inſomuch, that notwithſtanding the great waſte made of them, both in building ſhips, and caſting metals, a law was made that every one which would ſhould fell them, and take as much ground in ſeveralty for his own inheritance, as he could overcome and make fit for tillage. Encouraged herewith, the natural Cypriots, together with the Colonies of Grecians, Phœnicians, Egyptians, ſo beſtirred themſelves, that at laſt they brought it unto Champagn: parcelled out in ſucceeding times amongſt nine Kings, for ſo many Cyrus the great Perſian Monarch found at his coming hither. But Cyrus, though he did ſubdue all thoſe petit Princes, yet he took not from them their Eſtates or titles: contented with the conqueſt of it, and an annual tribute. For after this, in the time of Artaxerxes Mnemon, we find Evagoras, and Nicocles, to whom Iſocrates inſcribed two of his Orations, to be Kings hereof. And in the time of Alexander the Great, Citium it ſelf (ſuch was the honour born unto the Mother-City) had a King apart, not ſubject unto any other. The King whereof to indear himſelf with the Conquerour, gave to him a ſword, μαχαίραν δαμασκὴν, ſaith Plutarch, an admirable ſword, both for colour and lightneſs, which he after uſed in all his fights. And after the death of Alexander, his great Commanders cantoning his eſtates amongſt them, the Princes and people of this Iland were in great diſtractions, not knowing to whom they might ſubmit for their beſt advantage. But Ptolemy, who had ſeized on Egypt for his part of the ſpoil, being ſtrong in ſhipping, ſetled them by a perſonal viſit; and fortifying ſome of the beſt pieces in it, aſſured the Countrey to himſelf. To him and his poſterity it continued ſubject till the time of Ptolemy Auletes, the ninth King of this line in our Accompt, who gave it for a portion to one of his Brethren: in whoſe time, the Romans, without any colour or pretence of quarrel, but only to enrich themſelves with the ſpoil of the Iland, ſent Portius Cato to ſubdue it. And he at firſt aſſayed to get it with the Kings conſent, offering him in the name of the Roman Senate, the Prieſt-hood of the Temple of Paphos, being a rich and gainfull Office, and of high eſteem among that people. But when Ptolemy for fear of a worſe miſchief had made away himſelf by poiſon, Cato without more ceremonie takes poſſeſſion of it. And becauſe Ammianus Marcellinus the Hiſtorian, hath ſo ſignificantly expreſſed this buſineſs, and withall deſcribed ſo punctually the eſtate of this Iland; we will adde to this diſcourſe from him, though ſomewhat be repeated which was ſaid before. Cyprum inſulam procul à Continente diſtantem, & portuoſam, &c. "The Iſle of Cyprus, far diſtant from the Continent, and well ſtored with Harbours, is famous, beſide, many Municipall Towns, by two principal Cities, that is to ſay, Salamis, and Paphos, the one ſacred to Jupiter, and the other to Venus. An Iſle ſo admirably fruitfull, and with all things furniſhed, that without the help of any forein Nation, it is able of it ſelf to build and rig forth a ſhip, from the very keel unto the top-ſail, and trim it with all tackle neceſſary for a preſent voyage. Nor do I ſhame to ſay, that with greater Avarice than Juſtice, the Romans did invade this Iland; King Ptolemy, our old Confederate and Ally, being unworthily proſcribed, for no other reaſon, but that our Treaſury was bare, our Exchequor empty. And he no ſooner had prevented this diſhonour by a quick and voluntary death, making away himſelf by poiſon, but the Iland was forthwith made tributarie, and the riches of it, velut hoſtiles exuviæ claſſi impoſitæ & in urbem adductæ per Catonem, as the ſpoils of ſome conquered enemy, were brought on Ship-bord, and conveyed by Cato unto Rome. So far, and to this purpoſe he.

I know there is another cauſe alleged for the ſending of Cato on this Errand, viz. that Clodius who was then Tribune, and ſped the Edict, might have opportunity by his abſence to revenge himſelf on Cicero, and ſome others of the oppoſite faction: but the main buſineſs was the money, as before was ſaid; the prey amounting to 7000 Talents, which comes to two Millions, and one hundred thouſand Crowns of coin now current. Which money and movables, amounting unto ſo vaſt a ſum, he fearing to loſe by Sea, divided it into many ſmall portions, which he put into ſeveral boxes, viz. in every box two Talents and fifty Drachms. At the end of every box he faſtned a long rope with a piece of cork; by which, floating above the water, the money, if by Shipwrack loſt, might be eſpied again: which was not much unlike the buoyes which Mariners faſten by long ropes to their Anchors, that they may be the ſooner found. We ſee by this, that the pretence of the Romans to this Country was very weak: Avariùs magis quam juſtiùs ſumus aſſecuti, are the words of Sextus Rufus alſo. But being made a Roman Province, it was in the diviſion of the Empire aſſigned to the Conſtantinopolitan Emperours: under whom it ſuffered, as all other parts of the Empire did, by the violent invaſion of the Saracens, who ſpoiled and ranſacked it in the time of Conſtans the ſecond, deſtroying then the City of Salamis or Conſtantia. But that tempeſt being overblown, they returned again unto that Empire, governed by a ſucceſſion of Dukes, till the year 1184. At which time Andronicus Comnenus uſurping the Greek Empire, compelled Iſaacius Comnenus, one of the bloud Royal, to ſhift for himſelf: who ſeiſing on this Iland made himſelf King thereof, and ruling till the year 1191. when Richard the firſt of England, being denyed the Common courteſie of taking in freſh water, and ſeeing his Souldiers abuſed by the Cypriots, not only took the King Priſoner, but ſubdued the whole Iland. And as Paterculus telleth us, that when Marcus Antonius had captivated Artamaſdes King of Armenia, Catenis, ſed ne quid honeri deeſſet, aureis vinxit; So did our Richard keep a decorum towards this Priſoner, binding him not in bonds of Iron, but ſilver. King Richard having thus poſſeſſed himſelf of this Countrey, ſold it for ready money, (which for the managing of his intended warrs againſt the Turks, he moſt needed) unto the Templers: and taking it, upon I know not what diſcontent, again from them, he bestowed it on Guy of Lusignan, the titulary and miserable King of Hierusalem; receiving in way of exchange, the title of that lost and shipwracked kingdom; with which title he and some of his Successors for a time were honoured.

In the posterity of this Guy, this Iland continued free and absolute, til the year one thousand four hundred twenty three; when Melechella (or Melechnaser) Sultan of Egypt, invaded this Country, took John King hereof Prisoner, ransomed him for 150000 Sultanies, restored him to his kingdom, and imposed on him and his Successors, the yearly tribute of 40000 Crowns. This John was father to another John, whose two children were Carlotte a legitimate daughter, and James a bastard Son. James after the death of his father, dispossessed his sister Carlotte of the Crown, by the consent and help of the Sultan of Egypt; and the better to strengthen himself against all opposition, he took to wife Catherine Cornari, daughter by adoption to the Venetian Senate: whom at his death he made his heir, if the child she went withall (having then none by her) should die without issue, as it did, not long after it was born; and she seeing the factious Nobility too head-strong to be bridled by a female authority, like a good child resigned her Crown and Scepter to the Venetian State, Anno 1473. These defended it against all claims, (paying only as tribute to the Ægyptian, and after to the Turkish Sultans, the 40000 Crowns before mentioned) till the year 1570. when Mustapha, General of the Turks, wrested it from the Venetians, to the use of his master Selimus the second, who pretended title to it as Lord of Ægypt. The governour of the Venetian Forces at the time of this unfortunate loss was Signior Bragadino, who as long as hope of succours, means of resistance, or possibility of prevailing continued, with incredible valour made good the Town of Famagusta, in whose defence consisted the welfare of the whole Iland. At last he yielded it on honourable conditions, had they been as faithfully kept, as punctually agreed on. But Mustapha the Turkish General inviting to his Tent the principal men of worth in the Town, caused them all to be murdered: and as for Bragadin himself, he commanded his ears to be cut off, his body to be flead alive, and his skin stuffed with straw, to be hanged at the main yard of his Gally. The chief of the prisoners and spoils were in two tall ships, and one Gallion, sent unto Selimus; but he never saw them. For a Noble Cyprian Lady destinated to the lust of the Grand Seigneur, fired certain barrels of powder; by the violence whereof both the vessels and the booty in them, were in part burned, in part drowned. A famous and heroick act; inferiour unto none of the Roman Dames, so much commended in their Stories, though more to be commended in a Roman, than a Christian Lady.

Thus having summed up the affairs of this Iland, from the first plantation of it, till this last sad conquest, I will lay down the succession of the Cyprian Kings of the Noble Lusignan Family, in this ensuing Catalogue of

The KINGS of CYPRUS.

1 Guy of Lusignan, the titulary King of Hierusalem, estated in the Kingdom of Cyprus, by Richard the first of England.
2 Almericus, the brother of Guy.
3 Hugh, the son of Almericus.
4 Henry, the son of Hugh.
5 Hugh II. son of Henry.
6 Hugh III. son of Hugh the second.
7 John, son of Hugh the third.
8 Henry II. the brother of John.
9 Hugh IV. son of Guido, the younger brother of John, and Henry the second.
10 Peter, the son of Hugh the fourth.
11 Petrinus, the son of Peter.
12 James, younger brother of Peter, and Uncle to Petrinus.
13 Janus, the son of James, made Tributary by Melechnaser, to the kingdom of Egypt.
14 John II. the son of Janus.
15 Carlotte, sole daughter and heir of John the second, first maryed to John the Prince of Portugal, and after to Lewis Prince of Savoy; outed of her estate and kingdom, by 16 James II. the bastard son of John the second, who by a strong hand seized upon it, and by help of the Venetians kept it during life.
17 James III. born after the decease of his father, whom he survived not very long. After whose death, being the last of this Family, the Venetians possessed themselves of Cyprus: which they invaded with no better title, than the Romans had done in former times; not likely to be blest with a long fruition, of that which they had so unjustly got into their hands. But of that already.

And here it is to be observed, that these Cyprian Kings retaining the title of Hierusalem (towards which they sometimes cast an eye) bestowed upon their greatest Subjects, and deserving Servitors, both titles of Honour and Offices of State, belonging antiently to that kingdom. So that we find amongst them a Prince of Antioch, a Prince of Galilee, a Count of Tripoli, a Lord of Cæsarea, and a Lord of Mount Tabor; a Seneschal of Hierusalem, a Constable, Marshal, and High Chamberlain of that kingdom also. With better reason, though no doubt with as little profit, as the Pope gives Bishopricks and Archbishopricks in Greece, or Egypt. But those titular Offices are now quite extinct, though possibly some of the titles of honour which were took from thence, may be still remaining.

But to return unto the Turks, having thus taken Famagusta, and Nicosia, on which the whole Iland did did depend, all other Cities of it, and the whole by consequence, were forced to submit to the Turkish Tyranny. The Noblemen, and Citizens of principal quality, either most cruelly massacred in the sack of those Towns, or banished for ever their native Country, as men whose living there might possibly endanger their new conquest. But the Countrey people, Artificers, and persons of inferiour rank, permitted to enjoy both their lives and livelyhoods; together with their several & respective religions, in the same manner as before: paying such ordinary taxes as were laid upon them. And so this goodly Iland came into the hands of the Turks, who have hitherto enjoyed the possession of it: For notwithstanding that the Venetians in the year next following, with the help of the Pope and King of Spain, gave the Turks that great and memorable overthrow, at the famous battel of Lepanto; yet did they nothing in pursute of so great a victory for the recovery of this Iland; and indeed they could not, the confederates returning home, and dissolving their Fleet, as soon as they had secured their own estates by the overthrow of the Turkish Navy. And though the Venetians, to put the best face they could on so great a losse, so highly pleased themselves with the following Victory, that they put the same in ballance with the lois of Cyprus; yet an ingenious Turk, to let them see the folly of so vain a boasting, compared the losing of Cyprus, to the loss of an Arm, which could not without a miracle be recovered; and the loss at Lepanto, to the shaving off of ones beard, which grows the thicker for the cutting, as indeed it proved: For the next year the Turks armed out another Navy, no less formidable than the other had been before; braving therewith the whole Christian Forces, either not then disbanded, or re-assembled.

What the Revenues of it were to the Kings hereof, I cannot certainly determine. The profits of Salt only, and that of the Custome-house, yielded yearly to the Seigneury of Venice, when it was in their hands, a million of Crowns. For the Customs and profits of the Salt were farmed for 500000 Crowns per annum, which being turned into the chief Cyprian commodities, were counted double worth that mony, when unladed at Venice. To which if we should adde the lands of the former Kings, and other wayes of raising mony on the Subject, I cannot see, but the Intrado of the Crown must needs amount constantly to a million and an half yearly, if it were not more.

The Arms hereof were quarterly, first Argent, a Cross Potent between four Crosses Or; secondly, Barre-wise of eight pieces, Arg. and Azure, supporting a Lion Passant Azure, Crowned Or; thirdly, a Lion Gules; and fourthly, Argent, a Lion Gules; as Bara a French Herald hath given the Blazon.

On the East of Cyprus towards Syria lie four small Ilands, which Ptolemy calleth by the name of Clides, not far from the Promontory of that name; both Promontory and Iland now called Saint Andrews: and towards the West another little knot of Islets, which he calls Carpasiæ; but nothing memorable in either. So I pass them over.

There are in Cyprus,
Arch-Bishops 2. Bishops 6.
And so much for CYPRUS.

OF SYRIA.

SYRIA is bounded on the East, with the River Euphrates, by which parted from Mesopotamia; on the West, with the Mediterranean Sea; on the North, with Cilicia, and Armenia Minor, from the last parted by Mount Taurus; and on the South, with Palestine, and some parts of Arabia. The length hereof from Mount Taurus to the edge of Arabia, is said to be five hundred twenty and five miles; the bredth from the Mediterranean to the River Euphrates, computed at four hundred and seventy; drawing somewhat near unto a square.

In the Scriptures it is called Aram, and the People Aramites, because first peopled and possessed by Aram the son of Sem; though Hamath, Arphad, and Sidon, the sons of Canaan, did also put in for a share: and yet not called thus by the Scriptures only, but by some of the Heathen writers also. For Strabo doth not only acknowledge, that the Syrians in his time were called Ἀραμαῖοι, but citeth Possidonius, a more antient Writer, for proof that the Ἄραμοι, which Homer speaketh of, must be those Syrians: further averring, that the Syrians called themselves by the name of Aramai, or plainly Aramites. But by the Greeks they are called Syrians, or Surians, from the City Tyre called antiently by the name Sur, or Tsur, (of which more hereafter:) either because the Tyrians or Tsurians, had in those times the command of the Sea-coasts of this Countrey; or else that Tyre or Tsur being the chief Mart-town of all those parts, was the place where they traded with these Aramites. Conform to which antient Appellations, the City of Tyre is again called Sur, and this Country Soria. Others conceive, that being when the Greeks first knew it, a part of the Assyrian Empire, the seat of which was then at Ninive, it was called Syria for Assyria: as afterwards Assyria had the name of Syria (of which more anon) when the seat of that great Empire was removed to Antioch. And this may very well be so, considering that by the like decurtation we have turned Hispania into Spain, as the Greeks before us did into Spania, by which name it occurs, Rom. 15. 28.

But here we are to understand, that though the Syria of the Romans, as it was a member of that Empire, was limited within the bounds before laid down, yet antiently as well the Aram of the Hebrews, as the Syria of the Greeks and Romans, was of greater Latitude: of which, because it may be usefull to the understanding of holy Scriptures, and of some Classick Authors also, I shall enlarge a little further. For Aram, taken in the largest acception of it, extendeth from the coast of Cilicia, North, to Idumæa towards the South; from the River Tygris in the East, to the Mediterranean Sea upon the West; conteining besides the Syria of the Greeks and Romans (in which Palestine also was included) Arabia the Desart, and Petræa, Chaldæa, Babylonia, and all those Provinces to which the name Aram is either prefixed or subjoyned in the Book of God, as Aram-Naharaiim, Aram-Sobah, Padan-Aram, Aram-Maachah, Sede-Aram, Aram-Beth-Rehob, all mentioned in the holy Scriptures. Some do extend it further yet, and do not only bring Armenia within the Latitude of this name, which they derive from Aram-minni, whose neighbourhood to Syria, may give some colour to the errour; but even those People of Cappadocia bordering on the Euxine Sea, the Inhabitants of which were antiently called Luco-Syri, or white Syrians. But this not having any good warrant or authority wherewithall to back it, shall not come under the compass of this consideration. But for the rest, I find it generally agreed upon amongst the learned, that Aram-Naharaiim, is the same with the whole Countrey of Mesopotamia, so named both by the Jews and Grecians, because it is environed with the two famous Rivers of Tygris and Euphrates; which Priscian by a meer Latine name, would have to be called Medamna (but Inter-Amna by his leave would express it better.) And as for Padan-Aram wherin Laban dwelt, which is called Sede-Aram by the Prophet Hosea, ch. 12. v. 13. that is a part onely of the other: the whole Country of Aram Naharaiim, or Mesopotamia, being divided into two parts; whereof the more fruitfull lying Northward, is called Padan-Aram, or Sede-Aram, to whose Inhabitants Xenophon gives the name of Syrians; the barren and more desart lying towards the South, which by the same Author is called Arabia. For Aram-Maachah, mentioned 1 Corin. 19. 6. it is conceived to be that part of Syria, which was after named Comagena, whereof Samosata was the Metropolis, or Mother City. And as for Aram-Sobah, of which and of Adadezar the King thereof, there is so frequent mention in the Books of the Kings and Chronicles, it was the Province lying on the North-East of Damascus, and so extending to the banks of the River Euphrates, and is the same with that which afterwards was called Palmyrena, from the City of Palmyra. South-west of which amongst the petty kingdoms on the North of Gessur in the land of Palestine, lay the kingdom of Aram-Beth-Rehob, confederate with Ammon, in the war which they had with David, 2. Sam. 10. 6. Nor did the Greeks lesse extend the name of Syria, than the Hebrews did the name of Aram, if they stretched it not further. Certain I am, that Strabo comprehendeth the Assyrians in the name of Syria, where he affirmeth, that the Medes over-ruled all Asia, καταλύσασι τὴν Σύρων ἀρχὴν, the Empire of the Syrians (he meaneth the Assyrians) being overthrown. And in Herodotus it is said, that those whom the Barbarians call Assyrians, ὑπὸ μὲν Ἑλλήνων ἐκαλέοντο Σύριοι, were called Syrians by the Greeks. And to that purpose Justine also, Imperium Assyrii, qui postea Syri acti sunt, Annos 1300 tenuere. But these all writ after the time that Seleucus and his race had the possession of the Eastern Empire: who living for the most part in Syria, from whence they might more easily furnish themselves with Souldiers out of Greece, (as they did most commonly for all their military expeditions) caused all the other parts of their large dominions to be called, in tract of time, by the name of Syria. But on the other side, as the Syria of the Romans extended not so far to the East and South, as the Aram of the Hebrews did: so it contained some other Regions, that is to say, those of Phœnicia and Palestine, which were not comprehended in the name of Aram; as being planted by a people of another race, and of different fortunes, till brought together under the command of the Babylonians. In which regard we will treat severally of the natures of the soil and people; their originals, government, and successes, till we have brought them into one hand: and then continue their affairs as one joynt estate. But first we will survey the antient and present fortunes of Christianity, and other Religions herein embraced or tolerated, wherein the whole, according to the bounds and limits before laid down, is alike concerned.

Syria,

And for Religions in this Country here is choice enough; those namely of the Mahometan, Christian, Pagan, and one compounded out of all, which is that of the Drusians. The Mahometan imbraced by the generality of the people throughout the whole, and by all that be in any office or authority, is only countenanced and approved of, though all the rest be tolerated. The Pagan entertained only in the mountainous Countries bordering on Armenia; inhabited by a people whom they call Curdi, or the Curdenes, supposed to be descended from the antient Parthians, as being very expert in Bows and Arrows, their most usual Arms. A race of people who are said to worship alike both God and the Devil; the one, that they may receive benefits from him; the other, that he may not hurt them. Se alios deos colere ut prosint, alios ne noceant, as Lactantius doth affirm of the antient Grecians. But their principal devotions are addressed to the Devil only, and that upon good reasons, as themselves conceive, For God they say is a good man, and will do no body no harm, but the Devil is a mischievous fellow, and must be pleased with sacrifices, that he do hurt them not. And for the Drusianss they are conceived to be the remainder of those Frankes, (by which name the Turks call all Western Christians) who driven unto the mountains, (when they lost the Soveraignty and possession of the Holy-Land) and defending themselves by the advantage of the place, could never be wholly rooted out by the Turks, contented at the length to afford them both peace, and liberty of their Religion. But they have so forgot the principles of that Religion, that they retain nothing of it but Baptism; and not that generally neither; accounting it lawfull most unlawfully to marry their own Daughters, Sisters, or Mothers: and yet conform unto the Turks in their habit only, wearing the white Turbant, as the Turks do; but abhorring Circumcision, and indulging to themselves the liberty of wine, by law forbidden to the Turks. A people otherwise very warlike, stout, and resolute; with great, both constancy and courage, resisting hitherto the attempts of the Turkish Sultans. The Country they possess environed with the confines of Joppa, about Cæsarea Palestinæ, betwixt the Rivers of Jordan and Orontes, extending Eastwards as far as the plains of Damascus: so that here is no part of Syria, except Comagena, unto which their habitations reach not.

But for the Christian Faith it was first preached here by some of the dispersed Brethren, (which fled from the rage of persecution) in Phonice and the City of Antiochia; amongst whom St. Peter, as he passed through all quarters, Acts 9. 31. is by the Fathers said to have been the chief. The Church more fully planted in it by Barnabas first, after by Paul and Barnabas joyntly. Who spending there a whole year together, inlarged the borders of the Church, and gained much people, as is said Acts 11. v. 19. &c. insomuch that here the Disciples were first called Christians, v. 26. Not called so accidentally, as a thing of chance, but on a serious consultation had amongst themselves, and a devout invocation on the name of God, to direct them in it. The word Χρηματίσαι used in the original, importeth somewhat of Oracular and Divine direction. And certainly it standeth with reason that it should be so. For if upon the giving of a name to John Baptist, there was not only a consultation had of the Friends & Mother, but the dumb Father called to advise about it; and if we use not to admit the poorest child of the parish into the Congregation of Christs Church by the door of Baptism, but by the joint invocation of the name of God for his blessings on it: with how much more regard of Ceremony and Solemnity, must we conceive that the whole body of Christs people were baptized into the name of Christians? And there is some proof of it too, besides probability and conjectures. For Suidas, and before him Johannes Antiochenus, an old Cosmographer, do expresly say, that in the days of Claudius Cæsar, ten years after the Ascension of our Lord and Saviour, Evodius received Episcopal consecration, and was made Patriarch trierch of Antioch the Great in Syria, ſucceeding immediatly to St. Peter: then addeth, that at that time the Diſciples were firſt called Chriſtians, τὸ πρῶτον ἐπικληθῆναι Εὐοδίου μεταμληθέντος αὐτοὺς, καὶ ἐπιθέντος αὐτοῖς τὸ ὄνομα τοῦτο, &c. i. e. Euodius their Biſhop calling them to a Solemn Aſſembly, and impoſing this new name upon them, whereas before they were called Nazarites and Galilæans. A people ſo hated by the Heathen, that they ceaſed not to ſlander them from the firſt beginning. For as concerning this Sect, we know that it is every where ſpoken againſt, ſaid the Jews of Rome to the Apoſtle, Acts 28. 22. Tacitus, a Roman, but a Gentile, goes yet further with them, calling them homines per flagitia inviſos, & noviſſima meritos exempla; the calumny in his time being ſtrong and general, that at their private meetings they devoured Infants, and had carnal company with their Mothers and Siſters. Which defamations notwithſtanding, they grew in few years to ſo great numbers, that they were a terrour to their Enemies; though grievouſly afflicted, tortured, and put to ſeveral kinds of death, under the ten Famous Perſecutions, raiſed againſt them, by Nero, Anno 67. 2. Domitian, Anno 96. 3. Trajanus, Anno 110. 4. Marcus Antonius, Anno 167. 5. Severus, Anno 195. 6. Maximinus, Anno 237. 7. Decius, Anno 250. 8. Valerianus, Anno 259. 9. Aurelianus, Anno 278. 10. by Dioclesianus, Anno 293. All, but this laſt eſpecially, ſo extremely raging, that (as St. Hierom writeth in one of his Epiſtles) there were martyred 5000 for each day in the year, except the firſt of January, on which they uſed not to ſhed blood. But Sanguis Martyrum ſemen Eccleſiæ. This little grain of Muſtard-ſeed, ſowed by Gods own hand, and watered by the blood of ſo many holy men, grew ſo great a tree, that the branches of it ſpred themſelves over all the world: and got ſuch footing, even in the Roman Army it ſelf, (men commonly not of the ſtricteſt kind of Religion) that when Julian the Apoſta had vomited out his ſoul, with Viciſti tandem Galilæe, they elected Jovinian, though a Chriſtian, for his Succeſſor, with this acclamation, Chriſtiani omnes ſumus, We are alſo Chriſtians. But ſee how the baptizing of Gods people by the name of Chriſtians, in the City of Antioch, hath drawn me out of my way. I return again, both to the place, and to the Author. In whoſe evidence, beſides what doth concern the impoſition of the name of Chriſtian upon the body of the faithful, we have a teſtimony for St. Peters being Biſhop of Antioch, the firſt Biſhop thereof (of the Church of the Jews therein at leaſt) as is ſaid poſitively by Euſebius in his Chronologie, St. Hierom in his Catalogue of Eccleſiaſtical writers, Saint Chryſoſtom in his Homilie de tranſlatione Ignatii, Theodoret Dialog. 1. St. Gregory Epiſt. lib. 6. cap. 37. and before any of them by Origen, in his ſixt Homily on St. Luke. With reference whereunto, and in reſpect that Antioch was accompted always the principal City of the Eaſt-parts of the Roman Empire (the Prefect of the Eaſt for the moſt part reſiding in it) the Biſhop hereof in the firſt Ages of Chriſtianity, had juriſdiction over all the Churches in the Eaſt, as far as the bounds of that Empire did extend that way. To which by Conſtantine the Great the Provinces of Cilicia and Iſauria, with thoſe of Meſopotamia and Oſroena were after added; containing 15 Roman Provinces, or the whole Dioceſe of the Orient. And though by the ſubſtracting of the Churches of Paleſtine, and the decay of Chriſtianity in theſe parts by the conqueſts of the Turks and Saracens, the juriſdiction of this Patriarch hath been very much leſſened: yet William of Tyre, who flouriſhed in the year 1130. reciteth the names of 13 Archiepiſcopal, 21 Metropolitical, and 127 Epiſcopal Sees, yielding obedience in his time to the See of Antioch. Since which that number is much diminiſhed, Mahometiſm more and more increaſing, and Chriſtianity divided into Sects and factions: inſomuch as of three ſorts of Chriſtians living in theſe Countries, viz. the Maronites, Jacobites, and the Melchites, only the Melchites are ſubordinate to the Church of Antioch, the others having Patriarchs of their own Religion.

And firſt for the Melchites, who are indeed the true and proper Members of the Church of Antioch, and the greateſt body of Chriſtiant in all the Eaſt; they are ſo named in way of ſcorn, by the Jacobite and Maronite Schiſmatick, ſeparating without juſt cauſe from their communion. The name derived from Malchi, ſignifying in the Syriack language a King, or Emperour: becauſe adhering to their Primate, they followed the Canons and deciſions of preceding Councils, ratified by authority of the Emperour Leo, by whom ſubſcription was required to the Acts thereof; and were in that reſpect, (as we uſe to ſay) of the Kings Religion. Conform in points of Doctrine to the Church of Greece, but that they celebrate divine ſervice as ſolemnly on the Saturday, as upon the Sunday: ſubject to their true and original Patriarch, who ſince the deſtruction of Antioch doth reſide in Damaſcus; and on no terms acknowleging the authority of the Popes of Rome.

Next for the Maronites, they derive that name either from Marona, one of the principal Villages where they firſt inhabited; or from the Monaſterie of Saint Maron, mentioned in the firſt Act of the Council of Conſtantinople holden under Mennas, the Monks of which called Maronites, were the head of their Sect. Some points they hold, in which they differ from all Orthodox Chriſtians; other in which they differ only from the Church of Rome. Of the firſt ſort, 1. That the Holy Ghoſt proceedeth from the Father only, without relation to the Son. 2. That the Souls of men were created all together at the firſt beginning. 3. That male Children are not to be baptized together, but at ſeveral times by one and one. 4. That Heretiques returning to the Church are to be re-baptized. 5. That the Child is made unclean by the touch of his Mother till her purification, and therefore not baptizing Children till that time be paſt, which after the birth of a Male Child muſt be forty days, of a Female eighty. 6. That the Euchariſt is to be given to Children preſently after Baptiſm. 7. That the fourth Mariage is utterly unlawfull. 8. That the Father may diſſolve the mariage of his Son or Daughter. 9. That young men are not to be ordained Prieſts or Deacons, except they be maried. 10. That nothing ſtrangled, or of blood, may be eaten by Chriſtians. 11. That Women in their monethly courſes are not to be admitted to the Eucharist, or to come into the Church. 12. And finally (which was indeed their first discrimination from the Orthodox Christians) that there was but one will and action in Christ; the Fautors of which opinion had the name of Monothelites. Of the last kind, 1. That the Sacrament of the Lords Supper was to be administred in both kinds, 2. and in Leavened bread; 3. that bread to be broken to the Communicants (and not each man to have his wafer to himself) according to the first institution. 4. Not reserving that Sacrament, 5. nor carying any part of the consecrated Elements to sick persons in danger of death. 6. That Mariage is nothing inferiour to the single life; 7. That no man entreth the Kingdom of Heaven till the General Judgement; 8. That the Saturday, or old Sabbath is not to be fasted; 6. Nor the Sacrament upon days of fasting to be administred till the Evening. They withdrew themselves from the See of Antioch, and set up a Patriarch of their own, many ages since (but the certain time thereof I find not) conferring on him for the greater credit of their Schism, the honourable title of the Patriarch of Antioch. His name perpetually to be Peter, as the undoubted Successor of that Apostle in the See thereof. Dispersed about the spurres and branches of Mount Libanus, where they have many Townships and scattered Villages, of which four are reported to retain in their common speech the true antient Syriack: that is to say 1. Eden, a small Village, but a Bishops See, by the Turks called Æchera. 2. Hatchieth. 3. Sherrie. 4. Belfa, or Blousa, little superiour to the rest in bigness or beauty, but made the seat of their Patriarch, when he comes amongst them. At such time as the Western Christians were possessed of these parts, they submitted to the Church of Rome; but upon their expulsion by the Turks and Saracens, they returned again to the obedience of their own Patriarch, on whom they have ever since depended. His residence for the most part at Tripolis, a chief Town of Syria; but when he came to visit his Churches, and take an accompt of his Suffragan Bishops (who are nine in number) then at Blousa, as is said before. Won to the Papacy again by John Baptist a Jesuite, in the time of Pope Gregory the thirteenth, who sent them a Catechism from Rome printed in the Arabian language (which is generally spoken by them) for their instruction in the Rudiments of that Religion: yet so that their Patriarch still retains his former power, and the Priests still officiate by the old Liturgies of those Churches, in the Syriack tongue. So that this reconciliation, upon the matter, is but a matter of complement on the one side, and ostentation on the other; without any increase of power or patrimony to the Pope at all. And for the Jacobites, though dispersed in many places of this Country; yet since they are more entirely settled in Mesopotamia, where their Patriarch also hath his abode or residence, we shall there speak of them.

The language vulgarly here spoken is the Arabick tongue, continued here ever since the subjugation of these Countrys by the Saracens. But antiently they spake the Syrian and Phœnician languages. Of which, the first (for of the other we shall speak when we come to Phœnicia) was the very same with the Chaldean, (as the learned Brerewood hath observed) either originally so, or else received by them when first conquered by the Babylonians. In which respect the Jews, when they returned home from their long Captivity, gave to the language which they brought with them, the name of Syriack; being a compound of the Hebrew and Chaldean tongues: Chaldean for a great part of it, as to the substance of the words; but Hebrew as to the notation of points, Conjugations, Affixes, and other properties of their former and original speech. And of this more hereafter also, when we come to Palestine. But whatsoever their language was in former time, it is now so overtopped by the Arabick, that it is spoken in some Villages of the Marorites only in all these Countries; the Arabick being generally used in all the rest, as was said before.

Principal Rivers of these parts, are, 1. Chorsæus, called Chison by the Hebrews, which hath its fountain in Palestine, but his fall in Phœnicia, not far from Mount Carmel. 2. Orontes, now called Saldino, and by some writers Jordan the lesse, ariseth out of the hills called Pieria, not far from Mount Libanus; and after a while running under the ground, breaketh forth again about Apamia, and passing by the great City of Antioch, falleth into the Sea not far from it. It was first called Typhon, and took this name from one Orontes, who built the first bridge over it, as we find in Strabo. 3. Eleutherus, which riseth out of some part of Libanus, and glided with a speedy course thorow a strangely-intricate Chanel, into the Mediterranean Sea: guilty of the death of the Emperour Frederick Barbarossa, who falling from his horse as he pursued the Infidels, and oppressed with the weight of his Armour, was here drowned, and lyeth buried at Tyre. It is now called Casmer. 4. Singas, by some said to be called Marsoas also, which arising in the mountainous parts of Comagena, and passing by the City of Aleppo, falleth into Euphrates. 5. Euphrates, the most famous River of the East; of which more hereafter.

Chief Mountains of it, 1. Carmel, which being properly of Phœnicia, we shall there speak of it. 2. Pieria, out of which the river Orontes hath its first original. 3. Casius not far from Antioch, said to be 4 miles high perpendicularly. 4. Libanus, famous for its multitude of Cedars growing thereupon; affording materials unto Solomon for the holy Temple. Besides which it affordeth such store of Frankincense, that some derived the name from λίβανος, signifying Frankincense in the Greek: and so repleniſhed with Honey falling from the Heavens, and hanging on the Boughs of the Trees, that the Husbandmen used to sing (as Gallen telleth us) that God rained honey; and yearly filled their pots and vessels with the sweets thereof. This the most famous and greatest Hill of all these parts, extending in length 150 miles, that is to say from Sidon a City of Phœnicia, to Smyrna, one of the Cities of Cœle-Syria: and taking seven hundred miles in compasse. Inhabited wholly in a manner by the Maronite Christians, who to keep that dwelling to themselves without the intermixture of Mahometans, do yearly pay to the Great Turk seventeen Sultanies a man, for every one above twelve years of Age: each Phoenicia. each Sultanie being reckoned at seven shillings and six pence of our money. And yet those Maronites, though intire, without intermixture, are held to be the smallest Sect, for numbers, in all the East; not estimated to exceed twelve thousand households, by reason of the indisposition of this Mountain, in most places unfit for habitation. For besides the craggines and steepnesse of it, which makes many parts hereof to be inaccessible; the higher Ridges of it are in a manner perpetually covered with snow, not melted in so hot a Climate at the nearest approaches of the Sun. And thence no doubt it took this name; the word Leban, in the Hebrew and Phœnician language, signifying White, or Whitenesse; even as from the like whiteness of snow, the highest part of the Pynæan hils had the name of Canus; and that perpetual Ridge of Mountains, which parts Italy from France and Germany, had the name of Alpes. 5. Anti-Libanus, opposite to the former, and from that so called; a rich, but little Valley only being interposed; out of which Valley the Orontes hath its Spring or Fountain, the hill Pieria there beginning to advance it self. Some make but one Mountain of them both, divided into two great Ledges or Chains of Hills. Of which the main body lying towards the North, hath the name of Libanus; that on the South, being but a branch or excursion of it, called Anti-Libanus. And to this the Scripture gives some hint, in which both pass for one, by the name of Lebanon.

The whole Country was antiently divided into these six parts, viz. 1. Phœnicia, 2. Palestine, 3. Syria specially so called, 4. Comagena, 5. Palmyrene, and 6. Cœle-Syria, or Syria Cava. But Palestine, coming under a more distinct consideration, we shall now speak only of the rest.

1. PHOENICIA.

PHOENICIA is bounded on the East and South with Palestine; on the North, with Syria, properly and specially so called; on the West, with the Mediterranean Sea. So called by the Grecians, from the abundance of Palm-trees therein growing, the word φοινιξ in that language signifying a Palm. And for a further proof hereof, (for I know there are other Etymons and Originations pretended for it) the Palm was antiently the special Cognisance or Ensign of this Country; as the Olive branch and Conie of Spain, the Elephant of Africk, the Camel of Arabia, and the Crocodile of Ægypt, being peculiar to those Countries. And in an old Coyn of the Emperour Vespasian's, stamped for a memorial of his conquest of Judæa, the Impress is a woman sitting in a sad and melancholick posture, at the back of Palm-trees, with these two words, Judæa Capta, inscribed thereon: in which, no question may be made, but that the desolate woman signifyeth the Land of Judæa, and the Palm Phœnicia; Phœnicia being seated immediatly on the North, at the back of Jewrie.

But it was thus first called by the Grecians only, the Latines and other People after them taking up that name. For by themselves, and the people of Israel their next Neighbours, they are called Canaanites, or the posterity of Canaan, five of whose sons, viz. Zidon, Harki, Arvadi, Senari, and Chamathi, were planted here: the other six inhabiting more towards the South and East, in the Land of Palestine. For further evidence hereof we may adde these reasons: first, that the same woman which in Saint Matthews Gospel, chap. 15. vers. 22. is named a Canaanite, is by Saint Mark, chap. 7. vers. 26. called a Syro-Phœnician. Secondly, where mention is made in the book of Joshuah, of the Kings of Canaan; the Septuagint (who very well understood the History and Language of their Country) call them βασιλεῖς τῆς φοινίκης, or the Kings of Phœnicia. Thirdly, the Pœni, or Carthaginians, being beyond all dispute a Tyrian or Phœnician Colony, when they were asked any thing of their Original, would answer that they were Chanæi; meaning (as Saint Augustine that Country-man doth expound their words) that they were Originally Canaanites, of the stock of Canaan. And lastly, from the language of it, which antiently was the old Hebrew, Canaanitish, or the Language of Canaan; spoken both here and in Palestine also, before that Country was possessed by the house of Jacob: as appears plainly by those names, by which the places and Cities of Canaan were called, when and before the Israelites came first to dwell amongst them, which are merely Hebrew. And so much, as unto the language is acknowleged by Bochartus also, who in the entrance of his Book inscribed Chanaan, declares what profit may ensue from that undertaking to the Hebrew tongue; cujus Phœnicia lingua dialectus fuit, of which the Phœnician language was a dialect only.

The Countrie of it self not great, extended in a good length, from the further side of Mount Carmel, where it joyns with Palestine; to the River Volanus on the North, by which parted from Syria: but withall so narrow, that it is little more than a bare Sea-coast, and therefore very rightly called terrarum angustissima by a modern writer. Rich rather by the benefit and increase of trade (to which no Nation under Heaven hath been more addicted) than by the natural commodities which the land afforded: yet for the quantity thereof, no place could be more plentifully furnished with Oyl. Wheat, the best sort of Balm, and most excellent Honey; the lower part hereof being designed for the seat of Asher, of whom Moses prophesied, Deut. 33. v. 24. that he should dip his foot in Oyl. So that the Country generally, it was well-conditioned, lovely to look upon, populous, and adorned with more beautifull Cities, than such a span of earth could be thought to hold. Of which thus writeth Ammianus, Acclivis monti Libano Phœnicia Regio, pleva gratiarum & venustatis, urbibus decorata magnis & pulchris, &c. i. e. Falling from Mount Libanus, lieth the Country of Phœnicia, full of all graces and elegancies, adorned with great and beautifull Cities, of which the most renowned for the fertility of their soyl, and the fame of their atchievements, are Tyre, Sidon, Berytus, &c.

The People antiently, by reason of their Maritime situation, were great Adventurers at Sea, trading in almost all the Ports of the then known World, and sending more Colonies abroad upon forein

Planti-

Plantations than any Nations in the Earth. An active and ingenuous people, ſaid to have been the first Navigators, the firſt builders of Ships, the firſt inventors of Letters, (of which hereafter more on ſome other occaſion) and the firſt authors of Arithmetick, the firſt that brought Aſtronomy to an Art or Method, and the firſt makers of Glaſs. Defamed in holy Scripture for their groſs Idolatries, by which they laid a ſtumbling block at the feet of the Iſraelites: Aſtaroth (or Aſturte) the Godeſs of the Sidonians (but whether Juno, Venus, or ſome other, I diſpute not here) being ſo highly prized amongſt them, that Solomon himſelf, when he fell from God, made this one of his Idols. Once yearly, as Euſebius telleth us, they ſacrificed ſome of their ſons to Saturn, whom in their language they called Moloch. And in the inmoſt retreats of Libanus had a temple to Venus, defiled with the practice of moſt filthy luſts; intemperately uſing the natural Sex, and moſt unnaturally abuſing their own. Nor could the purity and piety of the Chriſtian faith prevail ſo far, as to extinguiſh theſe ungodly rites, till Conſtantine finally deſtroyed both the Temples and Idols, and left not any thing remaining of them, but the ſhame and infamy. St. Auſtin addeth, that they did proſtitute their Daughters unto Venus, before they maried them: and it is moſt likely to be true. For the Phœnicians and Cypriots being ſo near neighbours, and ſubject for a time to the ſame Princes alſo; could not but impart their impure Rites and Ceremonies unto one another. Phœnicia.

Rivers of note there can be none in ſo narrow a Region, but what are common unto others, and ſhall there be ſpoken of. Moſt proper unto this is the River of Adonis, (now called Canis,) ſo named moſt probably from Adonis the Dearling of Venus, whoſe rites are here performed with as much ſolemnity, as they be in Cyprus. His Obſequies celebrated yearly in the moneth of June with great howlings and Lamentations, Lucian fabling that the River uſually ſtreameth bloud upon that Solemnity; (as if Adonis were newly wounded in the Mountains of Libanus,) to give the better colour to their Superſtitions. But the truth is, that this redneſs of the water ariſeth only from the winds; which at that time of the year blowing very vehemently, do thereby carry down the ſtream a great quantity of Minium or read Earth, from the ſides of thoſe hils, wherewith the waters are diſcoloured. Such uſe can Satan make of a natural Accident, to blind the eyes and captivate the underſtandings of beſotted people.

Chief Mountains of this Country are, 1. Libanus, ſpoken of before, which hath here its firſt advance or riſing. 2. Carmel, which Ptolemy placeth in this Country, of which it is the utmoſt part upon the South, where it joyneth with Paleſtine. Waſhed on the Northſide with the Brook Chiſon; on the Weſt, with the Mediterranean Sea: ſteep of aſcent, and of indifferent altitude; abounding with ſeveral ſorts of Fruits, Olives and Vines in good plenty, and ſtored with herbs both medicinable and ſweet of ſmell. The retreat ſometimes of Elias, when he fled from Jezabel; whoſe habitation here, after his deceaſe, was converted to a Jewiſh Synagogue. To this place (being then in the poſſeſſion of the Kings of Iſrael) did that Prophet aſſemble the Prieſts of Baal; and having by a miraculous experiment confuted their Idolatrous follies, cauſed them to be cut in pieces on the banks of the River Chiſon near adjoyning to it. Upon this viſible declaring of the power and preſence of the Almighty, the Gentiles grew perſwaded that Oracles were there given by God; by Suetonius called the God Carmelus. Where ſpeaking of Veſpaſian, who had then newly took upon him the Imperial dignitie, he addeth, Apud Judæam Carmeli Dei oracula conſulentem ita confirmavere ſortes, &c. that conſulting in Judæa with the Oracle of the God Carmelus, he was aſſured that whatſoever he undertook ſhould ſucceed well with him. In after-times the Order of the Friers Carmelites, as ſucceſſors unto the Children of the Prophets left here by Eliah, had their name from hence: the Ruines of whoſe Monaſtery are ſtill to be ſeen, with a Temple dedicated to the bleſſed Virgin; and under that a Cave or Chapell, ſaid to have been the lurking place of that holy Prophet, in the time of his troubles.

Places of moſt importance in it, 1. Ptolemais, now nothing but a ruine of what it hath been, but formerly of great ſtrength and conſequence. Named Ace at the firſt, a refuge for the Perſian Kings in their wars againſt Egypt: enlarged, or rather new built, by Ptolemy, the firſt of that race, by whom called Ptolemais, which name ſtill continued; though Claudius Cæſar planting there a Roman Colonie, would fain have had it called Colonia Claudii: after the conqueſt of it by the Saracens, in the time of Omer the great Caliph, it returned towards its firſt name, and was called Acon, or Acre; both names ſtill remaining in vulgar ſpeech, as that of Ptolemais amongſt Latine writers. Situate in the flouriſh of it on a flat or level, in form of a triangular-Shield; on two ſides neighboured by the Sea which comes up cloſe to it; on the third looking towards the Campaign: environed with a double wall, to each wall a Ditch, fortified on the outſide with Towers and Bulwarks; within the wals ſo ſtrongly houſed, as if the whole Town had been a Conjunction of fortreſſes, and not ordained for private dwellings. In the midſt of the City was one Tower of great ſtrength and beauty, which had ſometimes been the Temple of Belzebub, and was therfore called the Caſtle of Flies: on the top whereof was maintained a perpetual light, like the Pharos of Egypt, to give comfort and direction in the night to ſuch Mariners, as made towards this Port. Took from the Chriſtians by the Saracens in the time of Omer, and from them wreſted by the Turks with the reſt of Syria; it became Chriſtian again An. 1104. in the reign of Baldwin the firſt, brother of the famous Godfrey of Bouillon, and ſecond King of Hieruſalem, by the help of the Genoeſe; who for their pains had the third part of the City aſſigned unto them. Recovered by Saladine to the Turks, and from him taken again by the Weſtern Chriſtians, under the conduct of Philip of France, and Richard the firſt of England, An. 1191. it continued in the poſſeſſion of the Kings of Hieruſalem, notably defended by the Hoſpitalers (now Knights of Malta) till the year 1291. when beſieged by an Army of an hundred and fifty thouſand Turks, it was forced to yeeld, though loſt by inches: and the Turks fearing leſt the Chriſtians would again attempt it, razed it to the ground: demoliſhing the large walls and arches of it, which lie like many Rocks on their old foundations. Memorable in those times for the brave service here done by the Christians of the Western parts, of which none more renowned than those of our Richard the first, and Edward the first. This later here treacherously wounded by an Infidel, with a poisoned knife, the venom whereof could by no means be asswaged, till his most vertuous wife (herein proposing a most rare example of conjugal affection) sucked it out with her mouth. And for the former, he became so terrible and redoubted among the Turks, that when their Children began to cry, they would say, Peace, King Richard is coming: and when their horses started, they would spurre them, saying, What you Jades, do you think that King Richard is here? By the Mamalucks, when Lords of Syria, it was patched together, and made fit for habitation rather than defence: not Peopled by above 300 Inhabitants, nor would it have so many, but for the haven adjoyning: which though a small Bay, and of very ill anchorage, is much frequented by the Merchants of our Western world, trading here for their Cotton Wools; with which the neighbouring Country is abundantly furnished. I have staid the longer in this place, by reason of the great fame and importance of it, as being the last hold which the Christians had of all their conquests; with the loss whereof they laid aside all thoughts of those holy wars.

2. Tyre, seated in a rocky Iland; about seventy paces from the main Land; well built, and circular of form, as well by Art as Nature impregnably fortified. A Colonie of the Sidonians, and therefore by the Prophet Esay, ch. 23. v. 12. called the Daughter of Sidon: but by them built upon an high hill; the ruines whereof by the name of Palætyrus, or old Tyre, are remaining still. Removed unto the Ilands by Agenor, King of the Phœnicians, and by him named Sor, or Tzor, from the rockie situation of it (as that word importeth.) Mollified by the Greeks to Tyrus, and from them taken by the Latines, though known to them also by the name of Sarra (the Tyrian purple being by Virgil, and some others of the antient Poets, called Sarranum Ostrum:) and now at last returned to its first and original name, vulgarly at this day called Sur. A City in elder times of great trade and wealth: the Prophet Esay, ch. 27. v. 8. calling the Merchants hereof Princes, and her Chapmen the Nobles of the Word. Excelling all others of those times both for Learning and Manufactures, especially for the dying of Purple, first here invented; and that as Julius Pollux saith, by a very accident: the Dog of Hercules, (or if not his, some Dog or other) whose lips by eating of the fish called Conchilis, or Purpura, had been made of that colour. Grown to great pride, by reason of the wealth and pleasures, her destruction was fore-signified by the holy Prophets: accomplished in Gods own time by Nebuchadnezzar; who with great industry and toil joyned it to the Continent. But his works being demolished by the fury of the Sea, and the labour of the Tyrians, it was after seventy years again re-edified; and having flourished after that for two hundred years, by Alexander the great was again demolished; to whose indefatigable perseverance nothing was impossible. For having filled the Chanel with the stones and rubbish of old Tyre, and rammed them in with huge beams brought from Libanus, he made a passage for his Army: and having once approached the walls, so over-topped them with Towers, and frames of Timber, that at last he made himself Master of it; putting to the sword all such as resisted, and causing two thousand of them to be hanged in cold blood, all along the Shore, for a terrour to others. This rendition of the Town was divined by the South-sayers, who followed the Camp of Alexander, upon a dream which he had not long before. For dreaming that he had disported himself with Satyres; the Diviners only making of one word two, found that Σατυρος was no more than Σὰ τύρος, that is Tua Tyrus; and it happened accordingly. Recovering once again both her riches and beauties, she became a confederate of the Romans in the growth of their fortunes; endued by them with the priviledges of their City, for her great fidelity. Made in the best times of Christianity, the Metropolitan See for the Province of Phœnicia, the Bishop hereof having under him fourteen Suffragan Bishops. Subjected to the Saracens in the year six hundred thirty and six, and having groaned under that yoke for the space of four hundred eighty and eight years; was at the last regained by Guarimund Patriarch of Hierusalem, in the reign of the second Baldwin, the Venetians contributing their assistance in it, An. 1124. In vain attempted afterwards by victorious Saladine; but finally brought under the Turkish thraldom, Anno 1289. as it still continueth. Now nothing but an heap of ruines, but the very ruines of it of so fair a prospect, as striketh both pity and amazement into the beholders; shewing them an exemplary pattern of our humane frailty. Subject at the present to the Emir, or Prince of Sidon, and beautified with a goodly and capacious Haven, one of the best of the Levant; but of no great trading.

3. Sarepta, by the Hebrews called Sarphath, situate on the Sea-coast betwixt Tyre and Sidon. Memorable in holy writ for the miracle here performed by the Prophet Elijah, in raising the poor Widows Son: in Heathen writers, for the purest Wines, little inferiour unto those of Falernum in Italy, or Chios in Greece, Of which thus the Poet.

Vina mihi non sunt Gazetica, Chia, Falerna, Quæque Sareptano palmite missa bibas.

In English thus,

I have no Chian or Falernian wines,
Nor those of Gazas or Sareptas vines.

4. Sidon, the antientest City of all Phœnicia, and the most Northern of all those which were assigned for the portion of the sons of Aser: beyond which the Country of Phœnicia, having been hitherto nothing but a bare Sea-coast, beginneth to open towards the East in a fine rich valley, having Libanus upon the North, and the Anti-Libanus on the South; once closed up from the rest of Syria with a very strong ſtrong wall, long ſince demoliſhed. It was ſo called from Zidon, one of the ſons of Canaan, who firſt planted here; not (as ſome ſay) from Sida, the daughter of Belus, once a King hereof: this City being mentioned in the Book of Joſuah, when no ſuch Belus was in being. Situate in a fertile and delightfull ſoyl, defended with the Sea on one ſide, and on the other by the Mountains lying betwixt it and Libanus; from whence deſcended thoſe many Springs, with which they watered and enriched their moſt pleaſant Orchards. The Inhabitants hereof are ſaid to be the firſt makers of Chriſtal Glaſs; the materials of the work brought hither from the Sands of a River running not far from Ptolemais, and only made fuſible in this City. And from hence Solomon and Zorobabel, had their principal workmen, both for Stone and Timber, in their ſeveral buildings of the Temple. The People hereof ſo flouriſhing in Arts and Trades, that the Prophet Zecharish, chap. 9. v. 2. calleth them the wiſe Sidonians. A City which at ſeveral times was both the Mother and Daughter of Tyre; the Mother of it in the times of Heathenism, Tyre being a Colony of this People; and the Daughter of it when inſtructed in the Chriſtian faith, acknowledging the Church of Tyre for its Mother-Church. The City in thoſe times very ſtrong both by Art and Nature, having on the North-ſide a Fort or Citadel, mounted on an inacceſſible Rock, and invironed on all ſides by the Sea: which, when it was brought under the command of the Weſtern Chriſtians, was held by the Order of the Dutch Knights; and another on the South-ſide of the Port, which the Templars guarded. Won by the Turks with the reſt of this Country from the Chriſtians, and ruined by thoſe often interchanges of fortune: it only ſheweth now ſome marks of the antient greatneſs; the preſent Sidon ſtanding ſomewhat Weſt of the old, and having little worth a particular deſcription, in reſpect of what it was in her antient glories. The Haven at this time decayed, or ſerving at the beſt for Gallies; with a poor Block-houſe, rather for ſhew than ſervice: the walls of no greater ſtrength, and as little beauty, and the buildings ordinary; but that the Moſque, the Bannia or Bathes, and the Cane for Merchants, are ſomewhat fairer than the reſt: yet gives a title at this time to the Emir of Sidon, one of the greateſt Princes of all this Country, of whom more hereafter. 5. Berytus, originally called Geris, from Gergeſhi the fift ſon of Canaan, took this new name from Berith, a Phoenician Idol herein worſhipped; and now called Barutti. Deſtroyed by Tryphon in the wars of the Syrians againſt the Jews, it was re-edified by the Romans, by whom made a Colonie, and honoured with the name of Julia Felix; Auguſtus giving it the Privileges of the City of Rome. By Herod and Agrippa Kings of the Jews, much adorned and beautified; and of no mean eſteem in the time of the Chriſtians, when made an Epiſcopal See under the Metropolitan of Tyre. Being a place of no great ſtrength, nor aimed at by every new Invader, it hath ſped better than the reſt of theſe Cities (though ſtronger than this) retaining ſtill her being, though not all her beauties; well ſtored with merchandiſe, and well frequented by the Merchant. Nigh to this Town is a fair and fruitful Valley, which they call Saint Georges; in which there is a Caſtle, and in that an Oratory of the ſame name alſo. All ſacred to Saint George the Martyr, who hereabouts is fabled to have killed the Dragon, and thereby delivered a Kings daughter, but what Kings I know not, nor they neither. 6. Biblis, ſometimes the habitation of Hevi, the fourth ſon of Canaan, and then called Hevæa: afterwards made the Regal Seat of Cinyras, father and grandfather of Adonis, by his daughter Myrrha; whereof we have already ſpoken when we were in Cyprus. Of ſuch eſteem in the Primitive times of Chriſtianity, that it was made a Biſhops See; deſolate and of no repute ſince it loſt that honour, and became thrall unto the Turks. 7. Orthoſia, called alſo Antaradus, becauſe oppoſite to Aradus, another old City of this tract; but in after ages called Tortoſa, and by that name well known in the Hiſtories of the Holy War, undertaken by the Weſtern Chriſtians. To whom it made ſuch ſtout and notable reſiſtance, that though beſieged on all ſides with united Forces (the whole Army formerly divided, ſitting down before it;) yet after three moneths hard ſiege, they were fain to leave the Town behind them, and content themſelves with ſpoiling the adjoyning Country.

Phœnicia.

8. Tripolis, ſeated in a rich and delightfull plain, more fruitfull than can be imagined: one of which fruits they called by the name of Amazza Franchi, i. e. Kill-Frank, becauſe the Weſtern Chriſtians, whom they call by the name of French, died in great numbers by the intemperate eating of them. A Valley which is ſaid to have yielded yearly to the Counts of Tripolis, no leſs than 200000 Crowns. As for the Town, it ſtandeth about two miles from the ſea, at the foot of Mount Libanus; ſo called becauſe built by the joint purſes of 3. Cities, that is to ſay, Tyrus, Sidon, and Aradus. Of no great note among the Romans, for ought I can find, til made one of the Epiſcopal Sees, belonging to the Archb. of Tyre in the Primitive times. But thriving by degrees, it grew to principal Accompt by the time that the Weſtern Chriſtians warred in the Holy Land: when conquered by them, it was made one of the Tetrarchies, or Capital Cities for the 4. Quarters of their Empire; which were, Hieruſalem for Paleſtine; Edeſſa for Comagena, or Meſopotamia; Antioch for Syria, and this for Phoenicia. Committed at the firſt taking of it, to the cuſtody of Raymond Earl of Tholouſe in France: whoſe poſterity, whileſt it laſted, had from hence the title of Earls of Tripoli. A City, which, I know not by what good hap, hath ſped better than any of thoſe parts, retaining ſtill as much in ſtrength and beauty as ever it had; if not grown greater by the ruine of all the reſt. Situate two miles from the Sea, as before is ſaid, but not above half a mile from the Haven, which lieth upon the Weſt ſide of it; compaſſed with a wall, and fortified with ſeven Towers, of which the fourth is commonly called the Tower of Love, becauſe built by an Italian Merchant, who was found in bed with a Turkiſh woman; for which he had forfeited his life, if not thus redeemed it. Before the Haven is an ill-neighbouring bank of ſand, which every day groweth greater and nearer to it; by which in time there is a Prophecy which ſaith it ſhall quite be choaked: On both ſides of it many ſtore-houſes for the Merchant to ſtow his goods in, and ſhops to ſell them; the way from thence unto the City having on both ſides very pleaſant

Phœnicia. Gardens, more curiously kept, than usually amongst the Turks. The Town it self stretched out in length from South to North, is situate, as before was said, at the foot of Libanus, conveying a Brook into the Streets, and many pleasant springs into the chief of their gardens: in which, and in those towards the Haven, and on other sides of the Town, the Inhabitants keep great store of Silk-Worms; selling their Silks raw unto the Italians, and buying them again of them in the Stuff or Manufacture. There buildings generally low, and the Streets but narrow except that leading towards Aleppo, which is fair and open. Over the Brook, at the East-side of the City are built two Bridges; and on the South-side a strong Castle mounted on an hill, built by the French when they had the custody hereof; now garrisonned for the Grand Signeur with 200 Janizaries. At this time it is looked on as the Metropolis or chief City of Phœnicia, honoured with the residence of the Patriarch of the Maronites, for the most part dwelling in this Town; and enriched with a great part of the Trade of Scanderone, or Alexandretta, removed hither some forty years ago by the Turks appointment; that Haven lying unfenced and more open to Pirates.

That the Phoenicians were descended of the sons of Canaan, hath been proved already. And being descendants of that stock, they were at the first governed like them, by the Chiefs of their families, whom they honoured (as most Nations did) with the title of Kings. But most of the Canaanitish Kings being overcome and slain by Josuah, Agenor, a stout and prudent man, one of those many Kings which commanded in those parts of the Country, seeing how impossible it was to resist that enemy, borrowed some aid from Egypt, where he had his breeding, to make good the Sea-coasts of his Country: in which the Philistims, who interposed upon those coasts betwixt him and Egypt, concurred also with him. By which assistance, and by the fortifying of Zidon, Tyre, and Ace, (or Ptolemais) which were all the Cities of this Country that were then in being; he did not only preserve his own estate, from the present danger, but left it so assured to the Kings succeeding; that neither Solomon nor David, nor any of the Kings of Israel durst attempt upon them. To Agenor succeeded his son Phoenix, (Cadmus, his elder brother, going into Greece in search of his sister Europa, ravished by Jupiter, where he built Thebes, and therein reigned till his death) from whom, as some conceive, this Country had the name of Phoenicia. And though I have declared my self for another reason of this name, which I like much better; yet I shall rather yield to this, or to any other, than to that of Bochartus; who will have it derived from Ben-Anak, or the sons of Anak, (as if the old Phoenicians were such Giantly men) which must first be contracted in Beanack, then by the Grecians turned into Pheanac, and at last into Phoenix. Such farre-fetched and extorted Originations never please my Fancy, who had much rather hearken to the old received opinions touching the first Originals of names and nations, where there is not very pregnant reason to perswade me otherwise; than strain my self so far for a new invention, or hearken unto those that do. But for what cause soever they were named Phoenicians, certain it is, they were a very active and industrious people, trading in the most parts of the Mediterranean, and planting Colonies in many. Thebes and Sephyra in Bœotia, Nola in Italy, Gades in Spain; Utica, Leptis, Carthage, in Africk, were of their foundation. Nay, if we may beleeve Bochartus, there was no Iland, or Sea-coast in the Mediterranean, or on the Cantabrian, Gallick, or British Ocean, wherein they did not keep some factory, or erect some Colony. What Kings succeeded Phoenix in a constant and continued course, I can no where find. Most like it is, they were not under the command of any one Prince: and that besides the Kings of Sidon, where Agenor reigned, there were some others who called themselves Kings of Phoenicia also, as well as they. Of which sort were Cyniras, Paphus, and Pygmalion, who had their Regal Seat at Biblis, and lorded it over a good part of Cyprus, as did also Belus, who gave some part of that Isle to Teucer, as is said before. There is also found mention of one Phasis, a Phoenician King, at such time as the Grecians conquered Troy. After him none, till the subjugation of this Country by the Babylonians; Tetramnestus, Tennes, and Strato, mentioned in succeeding times, being Tributaries to the Persian, and no absolute Princes. Whether it were that the Phoenicians were made subject to the Kings of Tyre, or that the Kings thereof did nothing to preserve their memory, I am not able to determine. Certain it is, that the Kings of Tyre came in short time to be of very great repute, and to possess themselves of the coasts of Syria and Phoenicia, and a great part of Cyprus; whereby, and by the benefit of their trade and shipping, they grew rich, and powerfull, and of great consideration in affairs of the World. The names and history of whom I shall here subjoyn, in this ensuing Catalogue of

The KINGS of TYRE.

A. M.

1 Abibalus, as Josephus; Abemalus, as Theophilus Antiochenus calleth him, Co-temporarie with Samuel; supposed to be the same which the Sonne of Syrach mentioneth, Eccles. 46. verse 18.

2 Saron, the son of Abibalus, whom David, as Eusebius saith, compelled to pay tribute; complained of by that Prophet, Psal. 83. v. 7.

2931 3 Hiram, the son of Saron, confederate with David, to whom he sent Cedars, with Carpenters and Masons, towards his buildings in Jerusalem, after he had beaten thence the Jebusites; as he did afterwards to Solomon when he built the Temple. Much mentioned in the Books of Kings, and Chronicles. 53.

2955 4 Baleastartus, or Bazorus, succeeded Hiram. 7.

2983 6 Astartus,

2983 6 Aſtartus, brother of Abdaſtartus, recovered the kingdom to his houſe, out of the hands of the Uſurpers. 12.

2995 7 Aſtorinus, or Athorinus, as Theophilus calleth him, the younger brother of Aſtartus. 9.

3004 8 Phelles, the Brother of theſe three Kings, and youngeſt Son of Baleaſtartus, reigned eight moneths only.

9 Ithobalus, called Ethbaal, 1 Kings 16. 13. ſon of Aſtorinus, ſlew his Uncle Phelles, and ſo regained his Fathers Throne; before which he was the High-Prieſt of the Godeſs Aſtaroth, or Aſtarta, (a dignity next to that of the King.) He was the Father of Jezabel, the wife of Ahab, ſo often mentioned in the Scripture. 32.

3037 10 Badezar, or Bazar, ſon of Ethbaal. 6

3043 11 Mettimus, by ſome called Matginus, ſon of Badezer, and father of Eliſa, whom Virgil celebrateth by the name of Dido.

3052 12 Pygmalion, the ſon of Mettimus, who ſlew Sicheus the husband of his ſiſter Eliſa, to get his riches; but yet was coſened of his prey: his ſiſter Eliſa, accompanyed with her brother Barca (the founder of the Noble Barcine family, of which Annibal was) and her ſiſter Anna, flying into Africk; where ſhe built the renowned City of Carthage. 47. The names of his ſucceſſors we find not, till we come to 13 Elulaus, deſcended from a ſon of Pygmalion, who overthrew the Fleet of Salmannaſſer, the Aſſyrian, in the Port of Tyre.

14 Ethobales, or Ethbaal II. who vaunted himſelf to be as wiſe as Daniel, and to know all ſecrets, as ſaith the Prophet Ezekiel, chap. 28. v. 1, 2. And yet not wiſe enough to preſerve his kingdom from Nabuchadonoſor; who after a ſiege of 13 years took the City of Tyre, and ſubjected it unto his Empire.

15 Baal, the ſon and ſucceſſor of Ethbaal the ſecond, but a Tributary to the Babylonians. After whoſe death the Tyrians had no more Kings, but were governed by Judges, or by ſuch titular Kings only as were ſent from Babylon. And though Tyre and Sidon did recover breath in the fall of the Babylonian Empire, and the unſetledneſs of the Perſian: yet being of the Perſian faction, and having dependence on that Crown, they were by Alexander held unworthy to continue. Who therfore depoſed Strato the King of Sidon, and overthrew the City of Tyre; in the taking whereof he had ſpent more time, than in forcing all the Cities of Aſia.

After this time Phœnicia, being reckoned as a part of Syria, followed the fortune of the whole, ſubject unto the Syrian Kings of the houſe of Seleucus, till made a Province of the Romans; ſubject to the Conſtantinopolitans, till the fatal year 636. when ſubdued by the Saracens. Succeſſively conquered by the Turks, Chriſtians, and after their expulſion by the Turks again, then by the Mamalucks of Egypt, and finally with the reſt of Syria, by Selimus the firſt united to the Turkiſh Empire. Subject at this time, or of late, to the Emir of the Druſians, (commonly called the Emir of Sidon) of which people we have ſpoken before. A people who in the time of Amurath the third, were governed by five Emirs or Princes; one of which was Man-Ogli, who ſo reſolutely reſiſted Ibrahim Baſſa, Ann. 1585. This Man-Ogli then kept his Court or reſidence at Andirene, a ſtrong place ſituate on a hill, and was of that wealth, that he ſent to make his peace unto the above-named Ibrahim, 320 Arcubuſes, 20 packs of Andirene Silks, and 50000 Ducats. At a ſecond time he preſented him with 50000 Ducats more, 480 Arcubuſes, 1000 Goats, 150 Camels, 150 Buffes, 1000 Oxen, and 200 Weathers. By theſe rich gifts we may not a little conjecture of the Revenue of the preſent Emir of Sidon; who ſince the year 1600. hath reduced almoſt all the Countreys belonging once to five Princes, under his own Empire; containing the Towns and Territories of Gaza, Barut, Sidon, Tyre, Acre, Saffet, (or Tiberias) his ſeat of reſidence, Nazareth, Cana, Mount Tabor, Elkiffe, &c. This preſent Emir, by name Faccardine, was not long ſince driven out of his Country by the Turk, and forced to flye to Florence: but he again recovered his own, laid ſiege to Damaſcus, and cauſed a notable rebellion in Aſia; not quenched in a long time after. And finally, having poſſeſſed himſelf of the City and Caſtle of Damaſcus, prepared for the taking of Hieruſalem alſo; threatning to make the Chriſtians once more Maſters of it. This was in the year 1623. How he ſped afterward, and whether his Son, as ſtout and valiant as himſelf, hath ſince his death ſucceeded him in his Eſtates, I am not able to ſay: having of late heard nothing of them.

2. SYRIA PROPRIA.

SYRIA PROPRIA, or Syria ſpecially ſo called, is bounded on the Eaſt, with Palmyrene; on the Weſt, with the Mediterranean; on the North, with Cilicia, on the South, with Phœnicia, and ſome part of Cœle-Syria.

This part of Syria I take to be the Land of Hamath, ſo often mentioned in the Scriptures, the Kingdom of Toi or Tou, next neighbour, and ſworn Enemy to Adadezer King of Aram-Sobah: who hearing of the great diſcomfiture which David had given unto that King, ſent his Son Joram, or Adoram, (for the Scripture calls him by both names) with Preſents to him, as well to congratulate his ſucceſs, as to be aſſured for times to come of his love and amity. So called from Hamath one of the ſons of Canaan, who fixed his dwelling in theſe parts, and left many Cities of that name in Syria and Paleſtine (which we ſhall meet withall in the courſe of this work) either built by him or his poſterity. Now that the Land of Hamath was this part of Syria, I am perſwaded to believe by theſe

Syria propria following reasons, viz. 1. From the neighbourhood hereof to Arpad or Arphad, conjoined together, as in Esay 10. 9. and Jer. 49. 23. So in other places, viz. Where are the Gods of Hamath and Arpad? 2 Kings 18. 34. The King of Hamath, and the King of Arphad, Esay 37. 13. And we know well that Arvad was the name of an Iland over against the mouth of the River Eleutherus, one of the Rivers of this Countrey: so called from Arvad, one of the sons of Canaan, alluded to by the Greeks and Romans in the name of Aradus; by which this Isle was known unto them. 2ly, By the vicinity which it hath to Palmyrene, the Aram-Sobah of the Scriptures, to which it joyneth on the East, with the King whereof (as bordering Princes use to be) the Kings of Hamath for the most part were in open war. Of which see 2 Sam. 8. 9, 10, & 1 Chr. 8. 9, 10. 3ly, From the authority of Saint Hierome, who finding mention in the Prophet Amos, ch. 6. v. 2. of a City named Hamath the Great, determineth it to be that City which afterwards was called Antiochia (the principal City of this part, and indeed of Syria:) the title of Great being added to it, to difference it from some other Cities of this name of inferiour note. And 4ly, from comparing the places in Scripture, with the like passage in Josephus the Historiographer. The Scripture telleth us, that Hierusalem being forced by the Babylonians, Zedekias the King was brought Prisoner to Nebuchadnezzer, being then at Riblath, 2 Kings c. 2. v. 6. to Riblath in the Land of Hamath, v. 21. where the poor Prince first saw his children slain before his face; and then miserably deprived of sight, that he might not see his great misfortunes, was led away to Babylon. Ask of Josephus where this sad tragedy was acted, and he will tell us that it was at Reblatha (or Riblah) a City of Syria, Antiq. l. 10. c. 10. And if we ask Saint Hierome what he thinks of Reblatha, he will tell us that it was Urbs ea quam nunc Antiochiam vocant, the City which in following times was called Antioch. On these grounds I conceive this part of Syria to be the land of Hamath intended in the Texts of Scripture above-cited; though there were other Towns and Territories of the same name also.

The Countrey is naturally fertile; the hedges on the high-way sides affording very good fruits, and the adjoining fields affording to the Passenger the shade of Fig-trees. Were it not naturally so, it would not be much helped by Art or Industry; as being very meanly peopled, and those few people without any encouragement either to plant fruits, or manure the Land. Their Sheep are commonly fair and fat, but so overladed in the tail, both with flesh and fleece, that they hang in long wreaths unto the ground, dragged after them with no small difficulty. Pliny observes it in his time, that the tails of the Syrian Sheep were a Cubit long, and had good store of wool upon them. Natur. Hist. l. 8. c. 48. And modern Travellers report, that the tails of these sheep do frequently weigh 25 pound weight, and sometimes 30 pounds & upwards. The like hath also been affirmed of the sheep of Palestine comprehended in old times in the name of Syria. And that may probably be the reason why the rumps or tails of sheep (and of no beast else) were ordained to be offered up in sacrifice, of which Levit. 3. v. 9. But besides the store of Wooll which they have from the sheep, they have also great plenty of Cotton Wool, which groweth there abundantly; with the seeds whereof they sow their fields, as we ours with Corn. The stalk no bigger than that of Wheat, but as tough as a Beans; the head round and bearded, in the size and shape of a Medlar, and as hard as a stone: which ripening breaketh, and is delivered of a white soft Bombast intermixed with seeds; which parted with an instrument, they keep the Seeds for another sowing, and sell the Wool unto the Merchant: a greater quantity thereof issuing from that little shell, than can be imagined by those who have not seen it.

The people heretofore were very industrious, especially about their gardens; the fruitful effects whereof they found in the increase of their herbs, and plants. Whence the Proverb, Multa Syrorum Olera. But withall they were observed to be very gluttonous, spending whole daies and nights in feasting; great scoffers, and much given to laughter. Crafty and subtile in their dealings, not easily to be trusted but on good security: and so were the Phœnicians, their next neighbours also. Hence came the Greek Adage which Suidas speaketh of, Σύρος πρὸς Φοίνικας, Syri contra Phœnices, used by them when two crafty knaves endeavoured to deceive each other. They were noted also to be superstitious, great worshippers of the Godess Fortune, but greater of their Syrian Godess, whatsoever she was. Affirmed by Plutarch to be a womanish and effeminate nation, prone unto tears, and such as on the death of their friends would hide themselves in caves from the sight of the Sun. Herodian addeth, that they were wavering and unconstant, lovers of plaies and publick pastimes, and easily stirred up unto Innovations. But at this time, they are almost beaten out of all these humours, having been so often cowed and conquered, that they are now grown servilely officious to them that govern them: not without cause, defective in that part of industry which before enriched them.

Where by the way we must observe, that this Character of the people, and that of the Country belong not to this part alone, exclusively of those which follow; but to all Syria, and every part and Province of it, except Phœnicia, which being planted by a people of another Stock, hath had its character by it self. The whole by Ptolemy divided, besides Comagena, Palmyrene, and Cœle-Syria, into many petit Regions, and subdivisions, as 1. Pieria. 2. Casiotis, from the hils adjoyning. 3. Seleucis. 4. Apamene. 5. Laodicene. 6. Cyrrestica. 7. Chalcidice, and 8. Chalybanotis, from their principal Cities. Of which in all he musters up the names of an hundred and upwards, then of some note, most of them now grown out of knowledge, and many of them of no mark or observation in the course of business. So that omitting his method, we will follow our own, and take notice only of such places as antiently were, or at this present are, of most observation and importance in the course of Story: with reference notwithstanding to the subdivisions made by Ptolemy, as they come in in my way, reckoning Cyrreſtica, Chalybanotis, Caſiotis, and the territories of Seleucus, Laodicea, and Apamea, into Syria Propria; and Pieria into Comagena. Syria propria

First then to begin with thoſe Cities which lye moſt towards the Eaſt, we have in Cyrreſtica, 1. Zeugma, on the banks of the River Euphrates, memorable for the paſſage of Alexander the Great, who there paſſed over his Army on a Bridge of Boats. 2. Berrœa, ſuppoſed by ſome both antient and modern writers, to be that which is now called Aleppo, but the poſition of the place agreeth not with that ſuppoſition; Aleppo being placed by our modern Coſmographers, in the 72 degree of Longitude, and the 38 of Latitude: whereas Berrœa is aſſigned by Ptolemy, to the 36 degree of Latitude, and the 71 of Longitude. Beſides that, the River Singas, on which Aleppo is ſituate, keepeth it ſelf almoſt on an even courſe in the Latitude of 37. between 20 and 30 minutes over: which is more by a degree and a half than the ſite aſſigned unto Berrœa. 3. Cybros, as in the Latine Copies of Ptolemy, miſtook for Cyrrhus, once the chief City of this part, from hence called Cyrreſtica. 4. Heraclea, neer which Minerva had a Temple: in which, as in that ſacred to her in Laodicea, they uſed once yearly to offer a Virgin for a ſacrifice; but afterwards on the ſight of that groſs impiety, changed it to an Hart. 5. Regia, now Rugia, two dayes journey from Antioch, took by the Chriſtians in the beginning of the wars for the Holy Land. 6. Hierapolis, of great renown in thoſe dark times of ignorance and idolatry for the Syrian Godeſs therein worſhipped; from whence it had the name of Hierapolis, or the Holy Citie: being formerly by the Grecians called Callinice; by the Syrians, Magog; one of the firſt ſeats of Magog the ſon of Japhet, and from him denominated. The Godeſs ſo eſteemed of in thoſe wretched times, that from all parts, Aſſyria, Babylonia, Arabia, Cilicia, Cappadocia, and indeed what not, they brought her many rich gifts and coſtly offerings. Nero himſelf, who ſcoffed at all Religions elſe, being for a while a great Votary of this Syrian Idol, though afterwards he grew weary of her, and defiled her with urine. The Temple built by Stratonice, the wife of Seleucus, in the midſt of the City, compaſſed with a double wall, about the height of 300 Fathom: the roof thereof inlaid with gold, and made of ſuch a fragrant and ſweet-ſmelling wood, that the clothes of them which came thither retained the ſent thereof for a long time after. Without the Temple there were places incloſed for Oxen, and beaſts of Sacrifice; and not far off a lake of 200 fathom in depth, wherein they kept their ſacred fiſhes: the Prieſts attending here for their ſeveral Offices, amounting in number to three hundred, beſides many more ſubſervient Miniſters. The tricks and jugglings of theſe Prieſts to deceive the people, he that liſt to ſee, may find them copiouſly deſcribed in the Metamorphoſis of Apuleius: which, changing but the names and times, may ſerve for a relation of thoſe gulleries and Arts of Leger-de-main which the Friers and Pardoners have practiſed in the Church of Rome. 7. Chalyban, whence the parts adjoining were called Chalybanotis; conceived by Poſtellus, and ſome others to be Chalepium, or Aleppo, but on no good ground: this City having one degree leſſe of Northern Latitude, than Berrœa had. 8. Barbariſſus, in the ſame ſubdiviſion, near the banks of Euphrates. 9. Chalcis, the principal of that part of Syria Propria, which is called Chalcidice, but not otherwiſe memorable. 10. Telmedſſa, another Town of the ſame diviſion, and as little famous. 11. Seleucus, ſo named from the Founder of it, the firſt Eaſtern Monarch of that race, and the greateſt Builder of the World, founding nine Cities of this name, ſixteen in memory of his Father Antiochus, ſix by the name of Laodice his Mother, and three in honour of Apamia his firſt wife; beſides many others of great note in Greece and Aſia, either new built, or beautified and repaired by him. From this, the Country hereabouts had the name of Seleucis. 12. Laodicea, one of the Cities founded by Seleucus, in honour of Laodice his Mother, from which the Region adjoyning is called Laodicene. Built by him in the place where formerly ſtood the City Rhamantus, ſo called from a certain Shepherd, who being ſtrook with a flaſh of lightning, cryed out amazedly Rhamantus, that is to ſay, Deus ab excelſo; before which time it had been named Leuca Acte, from the whiteneſs of the Sea-cliffs near to which it is ſituate: the Country round about commended antiently for the beſt wines, and choiſe of very excellent fruits. 13. Apamea, ſo named in honour of Apamia, the wife of Seleucus; which, together with Laodicea and Seleucus before mentioned, having the ſame founder, and maintaining a ſtrict league of amity with one another, were commonly called the Three Siſters. From this the Country near is called Apamene. 14. Emeſa, (now Hamſe) the Epiſcopal See of Euſebius, hence called Emeſenus, who flouriſhed in the time of Conſtantius, the ſon of Conſtantine: in whoſe name are extant certain Homilies, juſtly conceived to be of a later date. The City ſeated in a ſpacious and fruitful plain of Apamene, watered with many pleaſant and cheerfull Riverets: once of great note, as may be eaſily conjectured from the walls hereof, which are ſtill perfect and entire, built of poliſhed ſtone, and of very large circuit; but the dwelling-houſes ſo decayed, that it affordeth nothing worthy obſervation. 15 Epiphania, in the cantred or ſubdiviſion of Caſiotis; called at firſt Hamath, from Hamath a Son of Canaan, the founder of it, and upon that account miſtaken by Saint Hierome for another Town of the ſame name, in the Tribe of Naphthali; ſo different from this place both in Longitude and Latitude (as we ſhall ſhew hereafter when we come to Paleſtine) that they can by no means be the ſame. But that old Town being gone to ruine, it was repaired, if not re-edified by Antiochus Epiphanes King of Syria, who thereupon commanded it to be called Epiphania; obeyed therein, as Joſephus telleth us, by the Macedonians, though the Syrians ſtill called it Amatha, as in former times, Antiqu. l. 1. c. 7. 16. Lariſſa, which ſtill preſerveth its old name, being now called Laris; much mentioned in the wars of the Holy Land, eſpecially for the death of Baldwin the firſt, Brother of Godfrey of Bouillon, and ſecond King of Hieruſalem, Anno 1118. 17. Gebal, the Gabala of Ptolemy, and others of the antient Writers, ſituate on the South of Laodicea, from which twelve miles diſtant; mentionned Pſal. 83. as a confederate with Tyre, and other uncircumciſed Nations, in their hatred and deſigns againſt the Iſraelites:

at this day called Gabella (with little difference from the old name of it) and by that name remembred in the Stories of the Holy Wars. 18. Aradus, one of the Co-founders of Tripolis, situate in a rocky Iland of a mile in compass, directly opposite to the mouth or influx of the River Eleutherus, and distant from the Continent about twenty furlongs. So called from Arvad, one of the Sons of Canaan, and mentioned by that name in the Prophet Ezech. ch. 27. v. 8, 11. This once a kingdom of it self, containing not this Iland only, but some part of the Continent; especially about Antaradus (so called because built over against it) situate on the Northern banks of the River Eleutherus, of which we have spoken in Phœnicia. 19. Daphne, about five miles from Antioch; but afterwards by the continual enlargements of that City, accounted as the Suburb to it; so named of Daphne, one of the Mistresses of Apollo, who was here worshipped by the name of Apollo Daphnæus, and had here his Oracle and his Groves, with other the Additaments appertaining unto those Idolatries: as much esteemed of, but more sumptuous than those of Delphos. The Grove about ten miles in circuit, environed round with Cypresses, and other trees, so tall and close to one another, that they suffered not the Sun to enter in his greatest heats: the ground perpetually covered with the choicest Tapestry of Nature, watered with many a pleasant stream, derived from the Castalian Fountains as it was given out; and yielding the most excellent fruits both for taste and tincture, to which the wind and air participating the sweetness of the place, did add a most delightfull influence.

A place devised for pleasure, but abused to lust: he being held unworthy of the name of a man, who transformed not himself unto a Beast, or trod on this unholy ground without his Curtezan; insomuch as they which had a care of their good names, did forbear to haunt it. A fuller description of it he that lists to see, may find in the first Book and 18 chapter of Sozomens Ecclesiastical History, who is copious in it. The Temple said to have been built by Seleucus also, renowned for the Oracle there given, by which Adrian was foretold of his being Emperour; and therefore much resorted to by Julian the Apostata, for that purpose also. But the body of Babylas the Martyr and Bishop of Antioch, being removed thither by the command of his Brother Gallus, then created Cæsar by Constantius, the Devil and his Oracles were both frighted away, as the Devil did himself confess to Julian. Who being desirous to learn here the success of his intended expedition into Persia, received this Answer, that no Oracle could be given as long as those divine bones were so near the Shrine. Nor was it long after, before the Idol and the Temple were consumed by a fire from Heaven; as was avowed by those who observed the fall of it: though Julian did impute it to the innocent Christians, and in revenge caused many of their Churches to be burned to ashes. 20. Antioch, situate in that part hereof which is called Casiotis, first built, or began rather by Antigonus, when Lord of Asia, by whom named Antigonia; but finished and enlarged by Seleucus, after he had overthrown and slain him at the battel of Issus. Built near the place, and partly out of the ruines of an antient City, in the second Book of Kings called Riblah in the Land of Hamath; Hamath the Great in the sixt of Amos; by Josephus and the Syrians, Reblata. Memorable in those days for the Tragedies of Johoahaz and Sedechias, Kings of Judah: the first of which was here deprived of his Crown and Liberty, by Pharaoh Neco King of Egypt, 2 Kings 23, 33. the other of his eyes and Children by the command of Nebuchadnezzar King of Babylon, as was said before. In following times it was by some Greek writers called Epidaphne, from the nearness of it to that Grove: as afterwards in the times of Christianity, by the name of Theopolis, or the City of God, either from the many miracles there done in the Primitive time; or from the great improvement which the Christian faith did here receive, where the Disciples first obtained the name of Christians. The Royal seat for many Ages of the Kings of Syria, and in the flourish and best fortune of the Roman Empire, the ordinary residence of the Præfect or Governour of the Eastern Provinces; next of the Præfectus Prætorio Orientis, who had not only the superintendency over the Diocese of the Orient, though that large enough; but also of the Dioceses of Egypt, Asia, Pontus, Thrace, extending so his jurisdiction into all the parts of the then known World. Honoured also with the residence of many of the Roman Emperours, especially of Verus and Valens, who spent here the greatest part of their times; and from the first dawning of the Gospel, with the seat of the Patriarch. A Title of such eminency in all times of the Church, the second in accompt to the See of Rome (till Constantinople being made the Imperial City, got precedence of it) that there are at this time no less than four great Prelates which pretend unto it: that is to say, the true Patriarch, governing the Christians of those parts, whom they call Syrians or Melchites; the Pseudo-Patriarchs of the Jacobite and Maronite Sectaries, both which, for the greater credit to their Schism, do assume this Title; and finally a titular Patriarch nominated by the Pope, who since the time that the Western Christians were possessed of these Eastern Countries, hath assumed a power unto himself of nominating Patriarchs for Alexandria, Hierusalem, and this City of Antioch.

The City seated on both sides of the River Orontis, about twelve miles distant from the shores of the Mediterranean; the River Parfar passing on the South-side of it. By Art and Nature fortified even to admiration; compassed with a double wall, the outermost of which was stone, the other of brick, with four hundred and sixty Towers in the Walls, and an impregnable Castle at the East-end thereof; and on the other side defended with big broken Mountains, whereunto was adjoyning a deep Lake, coming out of the River Parfar, before mentioned. Adorned in former times with many sumptuous Palaces, and magnificent Temples, answerable to the reputation of so great a City: till taken by the Saracens, and after by the Turks and Mamalucks, men careless of all State and beauty in their fairest Cities, it began to grow unto decay. Recovered by the Western Christians from the power of the Turks, after a siege of 7 moneths, June 3. Anno 1098. confirmed in their possession by a great and memorable Victory, got in the very sight hereof within few days after, (June 28) obtained against

Cor-

Corbanas, Lieutenant to the Perſian Sultan; in which, with the loſs of four thouſand and two hundred of their own, they ſlew a hundred thouſand of the Enemy. The Town and territory given by the Conquerours to Bohemund a noble Norman, and Prince of Tarentum: who by practiſing with one Pyrrhus, who had the command of one of the chief Towers thereof, afterwards called St. Georges Tower, was ſecretly let into the City, and ſo made way for all the reſt. Bohemund thus made the Prince, or as ſome ſay, King of Antioch, left it to Bohemund his ſon, about ten years after; ſucceeded in this principate by Tancred and Roger, Princes of great renown in thoſe holy wars: which laſt unfortunately ſlain by the Turks, not far from Aleppo, in the year 1120. Baldwin the ſecond having revenged his death by a ſignal victory, joyned this eſtate to the kingdom of Hieruſalem. Betrayed about ſixty years after this, that is to ſay, in the year 1188. it came into the power of Saladine, the victorious King of Egypt and Damaſcus; and therewithall no fewer than five and twenty Cities which depended on the fortunes of it: the glories of this famous City ſo delining after this laſt Tragedy (but whether laid deſolate of ſet purpoſe, or deſtroyed by the injury of the time, I am not able to declare) that it is grown the ſepulchre of what once it was, and lieth buried in its own ſad ruines; hardly preſerving the repute of a ſorry Village. Such is the inſtability of all worldly glories. Soms other Towns there are in this part of Syria, but not to be remembred the ſame day with Antioch. Of which the moſt obſervable is 21. Albaria, diſtant two daies march from Antioch, remembred in the wars of the Holy Land.

Comagena.

As for the ſtory of this Province, as a State diſtinct, we find it had a king of its own, called the King of Hamath (the kingdom of Toi, or Tou before remembred;) who together with the King of Arphad, commanded in this part of Syria, and the Iſles adjoyning. Vaſſals in time ſucceeding to the Kings of Tyre, who lorded it over all the Sea-coaſts hereof, and conſequently had great influence on the Inlands alſo. And it continued in this State till the Aſſyrian Kings began to turn their forces Weſtward; when added to that Empire by Tiglath Phileſer, after the ſubverſion of the kingdom of Damaſcus; or by Salmanaſſar, after the deſtruction of that of Iſrael. The proud but dreadfull vaunt which Senacherib, the Succeſſour of thoſe mighty Monarchs, made to Hezekiah, viz. Where are the Kings of Hamath and Arphad, ſhews clearly that thoſe Kingdoms had been conquered not long before; and therefore needs by Salmanaſſar, or Tiglath Phileſer. Afterwards in the ſtruglings betwixt the Babylonians, and Egyptians, for the chief command, it was a while at the devotions of the Kings of Egypt, it being at Reblatha in this Province, that Johoahaz King of Judah was put into bonds, by the command of Pharaoh Neco, as was ſaid before. But Neco being not long after vanquiſhed by Nebuchadnezzer King of Babylon, it returned again to that Crown; and after followed the ſame fortunes with the reſt of Syria.

3. COMAGENA.

COMAGENA is bounded on the Eaſt, with the River Euphrates, by which parted from Meſopotamia; on the Weſt, with the Mountains called Amanus, which divide it from Cilicia; on the North, with Taurus, by which ſeparated from Armenia Minor; on the South, with Palmyrene. Called alſo Euphratenſis and Euphrateſia, when a Roman Province; by reaſon of its ſituation bordering on that River.

The reaſon of the name I find not amongſt my Authors: but find that many learned men conceive it to be that part of Syria, which the Scriptures call Syria Maacha, mention whereof is made 1 Chron. cap. 16. verſ. 6. gain-ſayed by others, becauſe they find a place called Maacha in the Tribe of Manaſſes; but with no great reaſon as I take it. For being it is joyned (in the 2. of Chron. 19. v. 6. above-mentioned) in the ſame action with Meſopotamia, and Syria Sobah; and not ſo only, but placed between them in the Method of that holy pen-man; I dare not think but that they were all very near neighbours, and ranked according to the natural ſituation of them. Which agreeth very well with the ſite of Comagena, having Meſopotamia on the Eaſt, and Aram-Sobah on the South. Nor is it any ſtronger proof unto the contrary, that Maacha is a Town of the Tribe of Manaſſes; than if a man ſhould ſay that there is no ſuch Province as Mansfield in High Germany, becauſe there is a Town of that name in England; or no ſuch place as Savoy amongſt the Alpes, becauſe there is a houſe of that name in London.

As for the people hereof, beſides what they have common with the reſt of the Syrians, they were of old much given unto Divinations, and for that cauſe derided thus in the ſixth Satyr of Juvenal,

Spondet amatorem tenerum vel divitis orbi
Teſtamentum ingens, calidæ pulmone Columbæ Tractato Armenius vel Comagenus Aruſpex.
Pectora pullorum rimabitur, exta Catelli,
Interdum & pueri. Faciat quod deferat ipſe.

Thus Engliſhed by my honoured friend Sir Robert Stapylton.

A childleſs rich mans Legacy, or young love,
Are found i'th' Lights of a warm trembling Dove,
By Comagene Sooth-ſayers; they look into

Comagena.

A dead Chicks breſt, the ſame th' Armenians do.
They view the entrails of a Dog, and reach
A Childs perhaps: They do it, and then peach.

Chief places of this part, 1. Samoſata, the Metropolis, or head City of it, when a Roman Province, ſituate near the banks of Euphrates, over which it had a bridge for paſſage into Meſopotamia. Unfortunate for being the birth-place of Lucian that profane Scoffer of Chriſtianity, though otherwiſe a man of a quick wit, and of great abilities: as alſo of Paulus Samoſatenus, Patriarch of Antioch, condemned of Hereſie in a Council holden in his own City, An. 273. (by the great and moſt learned Biſhops of that Age, there aſſembled together) for teaching that our Saviour was no other than a natural man; but neither God, nor the ſon of God, as the Scriptures teſtifie. 2. Germanicia, (by ſome called Germanicopolis) on the other ſide of the Country, near the mountain Amanus; no leſſe unfortunate than the former, in being the birth-place of Neſtorius, Patriarch of Conſtantinople: who troubling the peace of the Church with Heterodoxie and impertinent niceties, about the bleſſed Mother of Chriſt, as alſo about the nature and perſon of Chriſt himſelf, was thereupon condemned of Hereſie in the Council of Epheſus, Anno 435. In former times called Adata, as ſome write Adapa; but took this new name from Germanicus Cæſar, in honour of whom it was made a Roman Colony by Auguſtus: teſtified by this inſcription extant in Onuphrius, viz. COLONIA JULIA GERMANICIA, SACRA, AUGUSTA, FELIX. 3. Singa, ſo called from the River upon which it is ſituate. 4. Antiochia penes Taurum, ſo called becauſe ſeated at the foot of that Mountain, to difference it from the other of this name in Syria. 5. Pinara, one of the chief Cities of that part which is called Pieria. 6. Doliche, a ſmall Town; but made an Epiſcopal See in the beſt times of the Church, as appeareth by the Acts of the Councils of Antioch, and Conſtantinople, in which there is ſome mention of the Biſhops of it. 7. Aleppo, now the principal of all the Country, ſuppoſed by ſome to be the Sepharvaim, mentioned 2 Kings 17. 24. It was thus called as ſome ſay from Halep, which in the language of thoſe parts ſignifieth milk, afforded liberally by the rich paſtures round about it: as others more improbably from Aleph, the firſt letter of the Hebrew Alphabet, becauſe the firſt in eſtimation of the Cities of Syria; Moſt probably from Alepius, Lieutenant here in the time of Julian the Apoſtata, who did here many notable exploits, and amongſt others, in or near the ruines of ſome old Town of theſe parts, not yet agreed on in caſe it be not Sepharvaim before mentioned) advanced this City. Situate on the banks of the River Singas, which riſing out of the hill Pierius, with many windings and turnings runneth thorow Comagena, and there falleth into Euphrates. Deſtroyed by Haalon, King of the Tartars, at ſuch time as the Weſtern Chriſtians were poſſeſſed of this Country, and the Holy Land: but being repaired and re-peopled, became by reaſon of the commodious ſituation of it, to be much frequented by Merchants from all parts of the world. Situate in the midſt betwixt Tripolis, Berytus, and Alexandretta, the three prime Ports of Turkie on the one ſide; and the Perſian territories on the other: it was made choice of for the Staple of the Eaſtern commodities, brought to Euphrates, and then boated to this Town by the River Singas. A City of great trade at preſent, the Engliſh Merchants (amongſt others which frequent the ſame) having here three houſes for the Stowage and diſpoſing of their commodities; and a chief Officer, or Super-Intendent over the whole Factory, whom they call the Conſul of Aleppo. But greater was the trade hereof in the former times, before the Portugals found out a way by Sea to thoſe Eaſtern Countries, ſince followed by the Engliſh, Hollanders, and other Nations. The building of it low, but of one Roof high, (as in moſt Towns of Syria) with a plain top plaiſtered to walk upon: and with Arches before their doors, or houſes, as well to paſſe dry under them in time of rain, as to ſhew their wares. Pleaſantly ſeated amongſt Gardens, with the ſweet ſmels whereof very much refreſhed; the ordinary Reſidence of a Turkiſh Baſſa; ſafe rather in the remoteneſſe of it from any Enemy, than the ſtrength of the place, as being nothing leſs than well-fortified. Near one of the Gates they ſhew a Sepulchre, by them affirmed to be Saint Georges (whom of all the Chriſtian Saints they only worſhip) before which they maintain a lamp which burns continually. 8. Aman, in the way betwixt Tripoli and Aleppo, ſuppoſed by ſome to be that Hamath, mention whereof is made 2 Kings, chap. 17. 12. A City of a large Circuit, pleaſantly ſeated on two hills, which give it a fair proſpect over ſix of the neighbouring Villages: a thing not to be boaſted of as the world now goeth, by many of the Syrian Cities. On a third hill once ſtood a Caſtle, now decayed and ruinous, beneath it a fair River which runs gently by it; environed round about with Orchards of Palm-trees, and very good fruits. 9. Chalmodora, ſeated by Ptolemy on Euphrates, of which no ruines now remaining; unleſs the name be changed to 10. Byrrha, as perhaps it may be: that being made by Ptolemy, the moſt Northern Town of Comagena; this the utmoſt Town which the Ægyptian Mamalucks (then Lords of Syria) had upon this River, and the boundary betwixt them and the Sultans of Perſia. Memorable for an old Ceremony here uſed by thoſe Mamalucks, who accounted not themſelves worthy of the name of a Sultan of Egypt, till in this place in ſolemn pomp in the ſight of their Army, they had forced their horſe into the River, and made him drink of the waters of it: teſtifying by that Ceremony as well the extent of their Dominions, as their readineſs to defend the ſame againſt all Invaders. A ceremony performed with great State by Campſon Gaurus, in the war betwixt him and Selimus the firſt. But for all this he loſt the field, and his life to boot in the fight near Aleppo: and therewith did not only leave him Syria, as the fruits of his Victory; but opened him a fair way to the conqueſt of Egypt, which ſoon after followed. And hereto I refer the Cities of 11. Hena, and 12. Ivah, with their ſeveral Territories; mentioned together with the City of Sepharvaim, Eſay 37. v. 13. and 2 Kings 18. v. 34. it being probable, that if Sepharvaim were the City now called Aleppo, as the

the Jews that dwell there say it was; that then the other two joyned together with it, must be hereabouts, though we find no tract of them in the old Geographers. Palmyrene.

And if they were (as it seems probable to me) we have then more Kings in this Province in the elder times, than the King of Maacha; unless perhaps it may be said that the kingdom of Maacha (or of Aram-Maacha) being broke in pieces, these petit States arose from the ruins of it. Of little observation in the course of business, whether entire or subdivided into parcels; but that the King hereof (the King of Maacha) aided the Ammonites against David with 1000 men: no very great number I confess (as one who lay more out of the danger than the rest of the Syrian confederates did) but sufficient to ingage him in the quarrel with them. Nor find we any thing after this touching their affairs, but that the Kings of Hena, Ivah and Sepharvaim (who shared the greatest part amongst them) being swallowed up by the Assyrians (as the forementioned Texts doe expresly say) some Colonies of the people hereof were sent by Salmanassar the Assyrian Monarch, to plant the desolate dwellings of the Tribes of Israel, as appeareth plainly in the 2 of Kings chap. 17. v. 24. A course in which the Conqueror dealt exceeding wisely; weakning thereby the great Cities and mightier States of this Country, which otherwise might have been apt enough to revolt again; and strengthning therewithall their conquests in the Land of Israel, which otherwise had lain open to the next invader, and yeelded little or no profit to the publike Treasury. More politick in this than the Babylonians in the like desolution and destruction of the Kingdom of Judah. After this time it followed the same fortune with the rest of Syria, till Tigranes the last King hereof was subdued by the Romans. At what time all the rest of Syria being reduced under the form of a Province, this part being then in the possession of Antiochus, son of that Antiochus surnamed Eusebes, whom Tigranes had spoiled of his estates; was left unto him by the Conquerours with the title of King. Continuing in his line till the death of another Antiochus, the last King hereof; when made a Province of the Empire by Tiberius Cæsar, as is said by Tacitus; Qu. Servæus being sent hither as the first Roman Prætor for the government of it; though Sueton doth refer it to the times of Vespasian.

PALMYRENE is bounded on the East, by the River Euphrates; on the West, by Syria properly and specially so called; on the North, with Comagena; and on the South, with Mount Libanus, dividing it from the Province of Cœle-Syria, and part of Arabia Deserta.

It took this name from Palmyra the chief City of it. When conquered by the Romans, and made a distinct Province of it self, it had the name of Syria Secunda, and Salutaris. Called Syria Secunda, to distinguish it from Syria specially so called, which by them was named Syria Prima; and Salutaris, in regard of the medicinal waters springing in many places of it. But before it had any of these names, it was in the Scriptures called Aram-Sobah, whereof Adad-ezar was King in the time of David, as we read 2 Sam. 8. 3. and 1 Chron. 18. 3.

The Countrey destitute of Rivers fit for Navigation; save that it bordereth on Euphrates; but liberally furnished with those hot springs, good for many diseases, which gave it the name of Salutaris. Of which thus writeth Marcellinus lib. 14. In his tractibus navigerum nusquam visitur flumen, at in locis plurimis aquæ suapte naturâ calentes emergunt, ad usum aptæ multiplicium medelarum. So he. The sense whereof we had before.

Places of most observation, are 1. Palmyra, seated in a desart and sandy plain, one of the Cities built by Solomon in the Wilderness, mention of which is made 1 Kings, chap. 9. v. 17, 18. this Palmyra being supposed to be that City which is there called Tadmer, or Tamer in the Vulgar Latine. The cause for long time of much contention betwixt the Parthians and the Romans, as situate in the borders of either Empire: not fully setled in the Romans, till that they had subdued Zenobia, then the Queen hereof. By Adrian the Emperour who repaired it, it was called Hadrianople, but it held not long; the old name in short prevailing above the new. 2. Gezer, 3. Bethhoron the upper, and 4. Bethboron the nether, said to be fenced Cities with Walls, Gates, and Bars, 2 Chron. 8. 4. and 5. Baalath, four of the other Towns here built by Solomon; but either quite worn out of knowlege, or called by new names in the time of Ptolemie, who saith nothing of them. 6. Adada, built, as the name doth intimate, by some of the Adads, Kings of this Country, or of Damascus, to which last made subject. 7. Sura, more towards the River Euphrates, in the Notitia, called Flavia Firma Sura; which sheweth that it was either repaired, or made a Colonie by the Emperour Vespasian, whose fore-name was Flavius: honoured with an Episcopal See also in the times next following, as appeareth by the Acts of the Council of Constantinople. 8. Alamath, on the banks of the River Euphrates, which if it were lawfull for me to criticize upon my Author, I should conceive to be that Hamath of the Scriptures, which is called Hamath-Sobah, 2 Chron. 8. 3. against which Solomon prevailed: the mistake from Camatha to Alamatha, being not uneasie in the transcripts. Confirmed herein by that passage in the second of Chron. ch. 18. v. 3. where it is said, that David smote Hadad-ezar King of Sobah unto Hamath, as he went to stablish his Dominion by the River Euphrates: By which it seemeth that Hamath stood upon that River, as the Camatha or Alamatha of Ptolemy is said to do. And if it were the same, as I think it was, I should conceive it to be the chief seat of those kings, and the principal City of this Kingdom: the word Sobah, being added to it, not only for distinctions sake, but in way of eminency. But if the judicious Reader approve not of this criticism, I should next think that this Alamatha of Ptolemy were that Ælam, or Helam, near unto which David discomfited that great Army of the Mesopotamians, mention whereof is made 2 Sam. 10. v. 16, 17. 9. Resapha, a Town of note

in

Cœle-Syria. in the time of Ptolemy; but of greater in the holy Scripture, where it is represented to us by the name of Reseph, Esay 3. 20. Reseph Civitas Syriæ, as St. Hierom hath it: and if a Town of Syria, then most like this. 10. Betah, and 11 Berothai, two other Cities of this kingdom, taken by David in his war against Hadad-ezar, 2 Sam. 8. 8. the last supposed to be the Barathene of Ptolemy, though placed by him among the Towns of Arabia the Desart, to which it seems it was alotted in the change of time.

This part of Syria, as the rest, was once a distinct kingdom of it self, by the name of the kingdom of Sobah, or of Aram-Sobah. The first King thereof, whose name occurs in holy Scripture, being Rehob, the Co-temperary of Saul King of Israel, by whom discomfited in battel, as is said 1 Sam. 14. 47. But Adad-ezar the Son of Rehob, a Prince of greater power and valour than his Father was, having brought all the neighbouring Kings under his command, (as is said 2. Sam. 10. 19.) conceived himself a fit match for David, and thereupon opposed his passage, as he went to recover his border at the River Euphrates. In which action though he lost a thousand Charets, and twenty thousand Foot, and seven hundred Horse, yet would he not so end the war; but first with the Syrians of Damascus, and after with the Ammonites and their confederates; and finally by the aid of the Mesopotamians, renewed the quarrel. But being discomfited also in this last enterprize with the loss of forty thousand and seven hundred men, and his life to boot, the kingdom of Zobah was brought under by the Kings of Damascus. The story of this war we have in the 2 of Sam. cap. 8. and 10. in the first of Chron. cap. 18. and 1 Kings 11. 23, 24. yet were not the Kings of Damascus so well setled in it, but that David had possessed himself of Betah and Berothai, and other peeces of importance: the Regal City of Hamath-Soba being won by Solomon, and many of the best Towns of it built by him to assure his conquest. But the kingdom of Solomon being rent in peeces in the next succession, the kingdom of Zobah fell again unto those of Damascus: and so continued till Damascus it self was conquered by the Kings of Assyria: unless perhaps that Hamath, which Jeroboam the second is said to have subdued (together with Damascus it self) to the Crown of Israel, 2 Kings 14. 28. were this Hamath-Soba, as perhaps it was.

After this nothing memorable in the affairs of this Country, till the time of Gallienus the Roman Emperour: during whose reign, amongst the rest who cantonned that Empire betwixt themselves (commonly called the Thirty Tyrants) Odenatus a man of great power and vertue assumed the imperial habit, and took unto himself the command of these parts of Syria, together with Mesopotamia, and some other Provinces, which he had conquered from Sapores the King of Persia; against whom he had so good an hand, that he discomfited him in battel, seized upon his Treasures, and took many of his Nobles, and most of his Concubines. For which great acts admitted partner in the Empire by Gallienus, he was not long after slain by Mœonius his Cozin German. Who by that murder hoped to obtain the principality of Palmyrene (for by that name it was now called) but in that deceived. For after his death, Zenobia his unfortunate widow, a most masculine Lady, not only preserved the principality of Palmyrene for the use of her Children; but took upon her both the Purple habit, and the command of his Army: which she managed with great wisdom and gallantry, the rest of the time of Gallienus, and all the reigns of Claudius, and Quintilius, his two next Successors. But vanquished and took Prisoner by Aurelianus (who had the happiness to unite the broken limbs of that Empire into as strong a body as ever formerly) she was led in triumph thorow Rome. The terrour of her name, and the unusualness of the sight, so heightning the general expectation; ut ea specie nihil unquam esset pompabilius, saith Trebellius Pollio; That never any shew was esteemed so glorious. A Lady of so strong a virtue, and of such command upon her self, that she is said never to have made use of her husbands company, when she perceived her self with child. After this nothing singular in the story of Palmyrene, but that when all the rest of Syria was subdued by the Christians of the West, this Province and the next only was made good against them by the Turkish Sultans of Damascus.

5. COELE-SYRIA.

COELE-SYRIA is bounded on the East with Palmyrene, and Arabia Deserta; on the West, with Palestine; on the North, with Palmyrene, and some part of Syria Propria, from which divided by the interposition of Mount Libanus; on the South, with Ituræa, and Arabia Deserta also.

This is the Syria so much mentioned in the Books of Kings and Chronicles, called by the Greeks Cœle-Syria, i. e. Syria Cava, because partly situate in the hollow vallies interjected betwixt Libanus and Anti-Libanus; and sometimes also Syro-Phœnicia, from the intermixture of those people; as the Phœnicians which went with Dido into Africk, were called Libo-Phœnicie. By the Romans, when made a distinct Province of that Empire, it had the name of Phœnice Libani, or Phœnicia Libanensis, to difference it from the other Phœnicia, which they call Maritima. But before all this by the Hebrews named Aram-Damasek, Syria-Damascena in the Latine, from Damascus the chief City of it: unless perhaps we should rather say, that Aram-Damasek contained only that which lay between the Mountains of Libanus and Anti-Libanus; the rest being added by the Romans, out of the neighbouring parts of Palestine and Arabia-Deserta, as perhaps it was.

Chief Rivers hereof, are 1. Abanah, and 2. Pharphar, the Rivers of Damascus, as the Scripture calleth them, 2 Kings ch. 5. The one of which is thought to be the River Adonis, spoken of already: the other that which Ptolemy callerh Chrysorrhoas, or the Golden flood; which rising in the Hills of this Country, passeth by Damascus, and so together with the other into the Mediterranean Sea. Chief Mountains of it 1. Alsadamus, by the Phœnicians called Syrion, by the Amorites, Samir; a ridge of Hills which beginning at the East point of Anti-Libanus, bend directly Southwards, shutting up on that side the land of Israel, whereof more in Palestine; 2 Hippus, a ledge of Mountains in the South parts of this Province, where it bordereth on Arabia Deserta. Cœle-Syria.

that

Towns of most consideration in it, 1. Heliopolis, so called from an Image of the Sun there worshipped in the time of Paganism; now Ballebec, or (as some say) Balbec. 2. Chalcis, more Eastward towards Damascus, which gave the title of a King to Ptolemy Mennæus, and his son Lysanias, the kingdom then extending over the City of Abila, and the whole Province of Iturea in Palestine. But that Family being either expired, or grown out of favour, and Abila with Iturea otherwise disposed of; the title of the King of Chalcis, with the Town and territory, was given to Herod, brother of Agrippa the first, King of Jewrie. Erroneously supposed by some learned men to be that Chalcis, from which the Country called Chalcidice takes denomination: that Chalcis being placed by Ptolemy a degree and a half more East than Damascus, and two degrees more towards the North; whereas this Chalcis lyeth on the West of that City, in the shades of Libanus, and in the very same degree of Northern Latitude. 3. Abila, seated at the foot of Libanus, betwixt Heliopolis and Chalcis, from whence the Country round about is called Abilene: given to Lysanias, the son of the former Lysanias, king of Chalcis, with the title of Tetrarch. Mentioned Luke 3. 1. with those other Princes which shared Palestine amongst them. Not that he was the son of Herod, as antiently Beda and Euthymius, and of late-times some very industrious men have been of opinion: but partly because the Cities of Chalcis and Abila of right belonged to those of the Tribe of Naphthalim (though never conquered or possessed by them) and so to be accompted a part of Palestine; and partly because the Tetrarchy of Abilene, when Saint Luke wrote that Gospel, was possessed together with the rest by King Agrippa. Restored (as it seemeth) to the former Family, after his decease; for known it was by the name of Abila-Lysania in the time of Ptolemy. 4. Adida, memorable for the victory which Aretas king of Arabia obtained near unto it, against Alexander king of Jewrie, the kingdom of Syria, then lying open as a prey to the next Invaders. 5. Hippus, or Hippone, as Plinie calleth it, not far from the Mountain of that name. 6. Capitolias, now called Suente. 7. Gadara. 8. Scythopolis. 9. Gerasa, and 10. Philadelphia, reckoned by Ptolemy as Cites of Cœle-Syria, but of right belonging unto Palestine; where we mean to take more notice of them. 11. Damascus, situate in a large plain environed with hills, and watered with the River Chrysorrhoas, which with a great noise descendeth from the Mountains, and so abundantly serveth the City, that not only most of the houses have their fountains of it, but their Orchards and Gardens have some Rivulets conveyed into them. The Country round about abundantly enriched with plenty of most excellent wines (the vines hereof bearing grapes all the year long) and great store of Wheat; as their Orchards with variety of most delicate fruits: our Damascens, (or Pruna Damascena as the Latines call them) coming first from hence; as also doe our Damask Roses, but infinite short of their natural sweetness, by the transplantion. A place so surfeiting of delights, so girt about with odoriferous and curious gardens, that the vile Impostor Mahomet would never be perswaded to come into it: for fear (as himself was used to say) lest being ravished with the ineffable pleasures of it, he should forget the business he was sent about, and make there his Paradise. But Muhavias, one of his Successors, having no such scruple, removed the Regal Seat unto it, where it continued (for the most part) till the building of Bagdat by Bugiafer the twentieth Caliph, about an hundred years after this Removal: the Regal seat before that time, being at Mecca, Cuta, or some other of the best Towns of Arabia Felix. The chief buildings of it of late times (till destroyed by the Tartars) were a strong Castle, in the opinion of those times held to be impregnable; and not without great difficulty forced by Tamerlane, whom nothing was able to withstand: and as Majestical a Church, garnished with forty sumptuous porches, and no fewer than 9000 Lanterns of Gold and Silver; which with 30000 people in it (who fled thither for Sanctuary) was by the said Tamerlane most cruelly and unmercifully burnt, and pulled down unto the ground. Repaired by the Mamalucks of Ægypt, when Lords of Syria, it hath since flourished in Trade, the people being industrious, and celebrated for most excellent Artizans: the branching of Satins, and fine Linen, which we call by the name of Damasks, being amongst many others, one of their inventions. Renowned in the Old Testament for the Kings hereof, and the birth of Eliezer, Abrahams Steward (so honourably antient was this City) and in the New, for the Conversion of Saint Paul, who first preached the Gospel in this place, and here so narrowly escaped the snares of his enemies, that he was fain to be let down out of the house in which he was, by the help of a Basket. 12. Eden, at the foot of Mount Libanus, now a Town of the Maronites; and antiently of such esteem, that the whole Country of Damascus was called Beth-Eden, Amos 1. 5.

But antient and honourable though this City of Damascus was, we find nothing of the story of it, til the time of David, the Kings thereof until those days, being conceived to have been Homagers and Tributaries to the kings of Zobah. The first exploit ascribed unto them in the Holy Scripture, is their coming to the aid of Adad-ezar, upon his first defeat by David: in which action having lost 22000 men, they were so broken, that they did not only suffer David to put Garrisons in the best Cities of Damascus: but patiently became his Servants, and brought presents to him, 2. Sam. 8. 5, 6. The name of this unfortunate Prince not made known in Scripture, is by Josephus affirmed out of Nicolas Damascenus, to have been Adad (a name much cherished and assumed by the kings Successors) who keeping constant to the party of Adad-ezer in his following wars, was at last slain with him in that great discomfiture which David gave them, mentioned in the 2 of Sam. ch. 10. v. 18. In which Text the Scripture telleth us nothing of the death of those Kings, that being supplyed to us by Josephus out of their Records. Who also addeth, that Rezin, one of the chief Commanders of Adad-ezer, taking this advantage, not only usurped his Masters kingdom, but made himself Master of the kingdom of Damascus also. From this time forward the Seat-Royal of the Kings of Syria. Nor is this the tradition of Josephus only only, but founded plainly on the Scriptures, of which see 1 Kings 11. v. 23, 24. the Scriptures after this taking no notice of any other Kings of Syria (by the name of Kings of Syria, but of those that reigned in Damascus; who in short time had swallowed up the petit kingdoms of Gessur, Ish-tob, Rehob, besides that of Sobah before mentioned.

The KINGS of SYRIA or DAMASCUS.

1 Adad, the Friend and Confederate of Adad-ezar King of Sobah, in whose quarel he was vanquished and slain by David.

2 Rezin, of whom the Scripture saith, in the 2 of Chron. that when David slew them of Sobah, he fled from Adad-ezar his Lord, and gathered men unto him, and certain Captains over a Band, and went to Damascus and dwelt therein, and reigned in Damascus.

3 Adad II. an Idumæan, supposed to be of the family of Adad-ezar, but rather as I think of Adad, for fear of David fled to Ægypt, where he maried Taphnes, the Queens Sister: and hearing that both David and Joab were dead, returned again into his Country, and as some write, expelled Rezin out of Damascus, and reigned there as King.

4 Hezion, Successor unto Adad.

5 Tabrimon, the son of Hezion, as is said 1. Kings 15. 18.

6 Ben-hadad, the son of Tabrimon, hired by Asa king of Judah, to aid him in his wars against Baasha of Israel.

7 Ben-hadad II. son of the former, twice invaded Israel in the reign of Achab; but both times notably repulsed; the first time by a sally of 700 men at the siege of Samaria; the next at Aphec, where with the like number in effect he was taken prisoner, and his Army routed.

8 Hazael, Captain of the host to Ben-hadad, annointed King of Syria by the Prophet Elisha, whom God appointed so to do, that by his hands he might avenge himself on Ben-hadad, whom Hazael slew; but he proved as ill a neighbour to the Kings of Israel, as those before him. He attempted upon Judah also in the time of Joas, but bribed with the treasures of the Temple, he withdrew his forces.

9 Ben-hadad III. Sonne of Hazael, discomfited in three set Battels by Joas King of Israel.

10 Ben-hadad IV. son of Ben-hadad the third.

11 Ben-hadad V. son of Ben-hadad the fourth.

12 Ben-hadad VI. son of Ben-hadad the fifth, in the time of one of which three kings, but which one we find not for a certain, Jeroboam the son of Joas king of Israel, subdued both Chamath, and Damascus: of which see 2 Kings 14. v. 18.

13 Rezin II. son of Ben-hadad the sixt, and the last king of Damascus, who joyning with Pekah king of Israel, against Ahaz of Judah; enforced him to call unto his aid Tiglat Phalaser, king of Assyria; by whom Rezin was taken and beheaded, and the City of Damascus won; the kingdom of Syria by that means united to the Assyrian Empire.

After this time, the Syrians continued subject to the Babylonian and Assyrian Monarchs; and in the overthrow of that Empire by the Medes and Persians, became a part of their estate: remaining so till the first battel betwixt Alexander and Darius, fought near Issus in Cilicia. The victory wherein falling to the Macedonians, gave him without more trouble than the siege of Tyre, the possession of Syria and Phoenicia. He dying not long after his conquest of Persia, this Country lay as it were at stake betwixt Ptolemy king of Egypt, and Antigonus the chief Lord of Asia: but the possession of it, together with the rest of the Persian Empire, in both Asias, fell in conclusion to the share of Seleucus, for his many great and signal victories surnamed Nicanor; a man strangely preferred. For being at the first, Governour of Chaldea only, he was forced to leave Babylon, and forsake his Province for fear of Antigonus, then dreadfull to all the Macedonian Captains; and to flie into Egypt, where he became Ptolemies Admiral. After which Ptolemie fighting a pitched field with Demetrius, son to Antigonus, took Seleucus with him, and having won the battel, gave him aid and license to recover his former goverment. Seleucus wel-beloved of the people, soon made himself Master, not of Chaldea only, but of all the Persian Provinces beyond Euphrates: and not long after (being seconded by his good friends Ptolemy, Cassander, and Lysimachus) he encountred Antigonus at Ipsus in Ionia, where Antigonus himself was slain, and his whole Army routed. This victory made Seleucus Lord of all Asia, from whence passing over into Europe, he vanquished and slew Lysimachus: Seven moneths after which victory, he was slain by Ptolemy Ceraunus, whose patron and Protector he had formerly been; being yet the last survivor of all Alexanders Princes, and the only possessor of all the Dominions which his Master had, by the way of conquest, Ægypt excepted. His Successours, although they were Lords of all Asia, yet since in Syria they kept their residence, to the end that they might the better furnish themselves with Souldiers out of Greece, upon all occasions, as was said before, they were commonly called the kings of Syria. But long they held not in that greatness of estate and power, which Seleucus left them: though being a ful-bodied tree, and of several limbs, it endured the lopping off of many branches, & many a sad blow at the very root of it, before it fell. For in the time of Seleucus Callinicus, the 4th. of this house, Arsaces a noble Parthian recovered from it all the Provinces of the Persian Empire, lying on that side of Euphrates; & erected the so much celebrated Parthian king-

Kingdom, whereof more in Perſia. And in the reign of Antiochus Magnus, ſo called for his victories in Egypt, Judæa, and Babylonia, the Romans extorted from it all the Aſian Provinces, on this ſide Mount Taurus; not wanting many provocations to incite them to it. For he not only had made war againſt Ptolemy Philopater King of Egypt, whom the Romans had taken into their protection; but ſtirred up the Cities and States of Greece againſt them; invaded Lyſimachia, and ſome other parts of Europe in defiance of them, and had received Annibal the Carthaginian, and Thoas the Ætolian, their moſt mortal enemies, into his dominions, governing his Counſels by the influences which they had upon him. Nor may we think but that ambition and avarice, to add to their fame and Empire by the overthrow of ſo great a Prince, did perſwade much with them. So that the point being brought to a ready iſſue, they pleaded it on both ſides in the battel of Magneſia, a City of Lydia; to which Antiochus brought an Army of 300000 foot, and as many armed Chariots, beſides ſtore of Elephants, if the Roman writers be not over laviſh in their reports. But rejecting the advice of Annibal, and commiting his affairs wholly to Evil-Conſellors, he was vanquiſhed by no more than four Legions of enemies; and for his peace compelled to quit all his Aſian Provinces, on that ſide of Taurus, and to pay 15000 Talents in ready money for the charge of the war. The reſt of his eſtates they were content he ſhould enjoy for a longer time, Et libentius quod tam facile ceſſiſſet (as Florus handſomly puts it on him) becauſe he had ſo eaſily relinquiſhed that. Afterwards in the civil broils among themſelves, about the ſucceſſion of the kingdom, Alexander, king of the Jews, took from them many of their beſt Towns in Paleſtine, as Joppa, Gaza, Anthedon, Azotus, Rhinocorura, almoſt all Samaria, and Gaulonitis, with Sythopolis, Gadara, and many other ſtrong Towns in Cœle-Syria. Finally, when they had conſumed almoſt all the Royal race, and changed their Kings no leſs than ten times in 40 years (a ſure ſign of a falling and expiring kingdom) they were fain to caſt themſelves upon Tigranes King of Armenia, a puiſſant and ſucceſsfull Prince, til ingaged in the quarrel of Mithridates againſt the Romans: by whom ſtripped of all his eſtates on this ſide Euphrates, he was fain to content himſelf with his own Armenia; leaving Syria to the abſolute diſpoſal of Pompey, who preſently reduced it to the form of a Province. This ſaid, we have not much more to do with the houſe of Seleucus, but to lay down their names, and times of their ſeveral governments, till we draw towards the laſt end of

The MACEDONIAN KINGS of SYRIA.

A. M.

3654 1 Seleucus Nicanor, the firſt King of this houſe. 31.

3685 2 Antiochus, ſurnamed Soter, or the Saviour; memorable for nothing ſo much, as marying with Stratonice his Fathers wife, in his Fathers life-time.

3704 3 Antiochus II. by his flattering Courtiers ſurnamed Theos, or the God; but being poiſoned by his wife he proved a mortal.

3719 4 Seleucus II. ſurnamed by the like flattery, Callinicus, or fair Conquerour; becauſe ſhamefully beaten by the Parthians.

3739 5 Seleucus III. called for the like reaſon Ceraunus, or the Thunderer; the eldeſt ſon of Callinicus.

3742 6 Antiochus III. ſurnamed Magnus, the younger ſon of Callinicus, a Prince that imbraced many great actions, and was fortunate in his ſucceſſes beyond Euphrates: he plagued the Jews, but loſt all Aſia Minor unto the Romans.

3778 7 Seleucus IV. called Philopator, the ſon of Antiochus, who firſt began to caſt his eye upon the riches of the Temple at Hieruſalem.

3790 8 Antiochus IV. ſurnamed Epiphanes, or the Illuſtrious, but more truly Epimanes, or the mad, the great ſcourge of the Jews; brother of Seleucus Philopator. With whom begineth the ſtory of the firſt Book of the Maccabees.

3802 9 Antiochus V. called by the name of Eupator, the ſon of Epiphanes; who by Lyſius his Captain tyrannized over the poor Judæans, for the little time that he reigned; as did alſo

3804 10 Demetrius, ſurnamed Soter, ſon of Seleucus Philopator, by the hands of Nicanor: having poſſeſſed himſelf of the diadem by the death of Eupator, ſlain in his favour by the Souldiers who revolted from him. He was afterwards depoſed for a time by Alexander Bala, pretending himſelf to be the ſon of Eupator, ſupported herein by the Antiochians.

3814 11 Alexander Bala, diſcomfited in his firſt battel by Demetrius, whom he ſlew and vanquiſhed in the ſecond; maried Cleopatra Daughter of Ptolemy Philometor, by whoſe aid he was victorious. But a quarrel breaking out between them, Ptolemy invaded Syria, and cauſed himſelf to be crowned King of it; Alexander being ſlain by ſome of his Souldiers.

3819. 12 Demetrius II. ſurnamed Nicator, Son of Demetrius the firſt, recovered his Fathers kingdom, a friend of the Maccabees, but ſo cruel to his own people, that he was driven out of his kingdom by Tryphon General of his Armies.

3821 13 Antiochus VI. ſurnamed Entheus, the Son of Alexander and Cleopatra, advanced unto the Throne by Tryphon, and after ſlain by him to make way for himſelf unto the Diadem.

3824 14 Tryphon, called alſo Diodorus, having driven out Demetrius, and ſlain Antiochus, made himſelf King.

3827 15 Antiochus VII. ſurnamed Sedetes, brother of Demetrius, having overcome and ſlain Tryphon, ſucceeded him in the eſtate; for a while victorious againſt the Parthians, but afterwards overcome and ſlain by them. After whoſe death Demetrius Nicator (having lived in Parthia ſince the loſs of his kingdom) was reſtored again unto the Throne; which having held about 4 years, he was again diſpoſſeſſed and ſlain by

3843 16 Alexander II. ſurnamed Zebenna, an Ægyptian of mean birth, ſet up by Ptolemy Euergetes, and pretending himſelf to be the adopted Son of Antiochus, afterwards vanquiſhed and ſlain by 3845 17 Antiochus VIII. from the crookedneſs of his noſe ſurnamed Gryphus, Son of Demetrius, aided herein by the Ægyptian, with whom reconciled: having reigned about eight years in peace; embroiled himſelf in war with his half brother Antiochus ſurnamed Cyzicenus; which with variable ſucceſſes on both ſides, continued till the time of his death, having reigned 29 years in all.

3874 18 Seleucus V. Son of Antiochus Gryphus, in the beginning of his reign overcame and ſlew his Uncle Cyzicenus; but being vanquiſhed by Antiochus ſurnamed Euſebes or Pius, one of the Sons of Cizicenus, he fled into Cilicia, and was there burnt in his Palace.

19 Antiochus IX. ſurnamed Euſebes, having firſt vanquiſhed Seleucus, and afterwards Antiochus, another of the Sons of Gryphus, was crowned King of Syria; but ſlain not long after in the Perſian wars.

20 Philip, and Demetrius III. ſurnamed Eucærus, younger Sons of Gryphus, joyntly Kings of Syria; but reigning in their ſeveral parts. Of which Demetrius intending to diſſeize his brother, was himſelf vanquiſhed, and forced to fly into Parthia; leaving the whole kingdom unto Philip. During which wars amongſt themſelves, Syria was invaded, and in in part conquered by Aretas King of the Arabians, and Alexander King of the Jews.

3884 21 Tigranes, King of Armenia, during theſe diſſentions was by the Syrians choſen king, that by his power they might be freed from the Jews and Arabians: the moſt puiſſant Prince that reigned in Syria, ſince the time of Antiochus the Great, as being king of Syria by election, of Armenia by ſucceſſion, of Media by conqueſt. But ingaging himſelf with Mithridates (whoſe daughter he had maried) againſt the Romans, was vanquiſhed by Lucullus: who with the loſs of five Romans only, and the wounds of an hundred, is reported to have ſlain of his Enemies above a 100000 men. Finally, being again broken and vanquiſhed by Lucullus, he yeelded himſelf to Pompey (who being appointed Lucullus ſucceſſor, deprived him of the honour of ending that war) and retaining to himſelf Armenia only, he left all Syria to the Romans, having reigned eighteen years. And though Antiochus Comagenus, the Sonne of Euſebes, petitioned Pompey for a reſtitution to the Throne of his Anceſtors; yet it would not be granted: Pompey replying, that he would not truſt the Country into ſuch weak hands as were not able to defend it againſt the Arabians, Parthians, and the like invaders; and ſo reduced it preſently to the form of a Province. The government of this Country under theſe new Lords, was accompted to be one of the greateſt honours of the Empire: the Præfect hereof having almoſt regal juriſdiction over all the Regions on this ſide Euphrates; with a ſuper-intendency over Ægypt. Niger, the concurrent of Severus, was Præfect here; and on the ſtrength hereof preſumed on that competition. So alſo was Caſſius Syrus, who being a Native of this Country, and well-beloved by reaſon of his moderate and plauſible demeanour, had almoſt tumbled M. Antonius out of his Throne. On this occaſion it was enacted by the Senate, that no man hereafter ſhould have any militer or legal command in the Province where he was born: Leſt perhaps ſupported by the natural propenſion of the people to one of their own Nation; and heartned by the powerableneſs of his Friends, he might appropriate that to himſelf, which was common to the Senate and people of Rome. But this was when it was entire, and paſſed but for one Province only, Phœnicia being alſo taken into the accompt; which made the Antiochians ſo proud and inſolent, that Adrian, in his time intended to ſubduct Phœnicia from it, ne tot civitatum Metropolis Antiochia diceretur (ſaith Gallicanus) that Antioch might not be the chief of ſo many Cities. But what he lived not to accompliſh, was performed by Conſtantine. By whom Phœnicia was not only taken off, but Syria it ſelf divided into four diſtinct Provinces, as was ſhewed before, each of them having its Metropolis or Mother City: but all ſubordinate to the command of the Comes, or Præfect of the Eaſt, as he to the command of the Præfectus Prætorio Orientis; the greateſt Officer of the Empire, of whom we have often ſpoke already.

For the defence hereof aſwell againſt all Forein invaſions, as the inſurrections of the Natives (a wavering and inconſtant people) the Romans kept here in continual pay four Legions, with their aids, and other additaments. For ſo many Mutianus had here in the time of Galba; and by the ſtrength and reputation of thoſe Forces, was able to transfer the Empire upon Veſpaſian. And though the Conſtantinopolitan Emperours to whoſe ſhare it fell, in the diviſion of the Empire, rather increaſed than diminiſhed any part of this ſtrength: yet when the fatal time was come, and that Empire was in the declination, the Saracens, under the conduct of Haumer their third Caliph, An. 636. poſſeſſed themſelves of it; Heraclius then reigning in Conſtantinople. And it continued in their power till Trangrolipix the Turk, having conquered Perſia, and the Provinces on that ſide of Euphrates, paſſed over the River into Syria, and made himſelf Maſter of a great part of that alſo. A quarrel falling out betwixt him and his neareſt Kinſ-men, and thereby a great ſtop made in their further progreſs, was thus compoſed, by the mediation of the Caliph of Babylon in the time of Axan his Succeſſor.

To

To Cutlu Moſes was aſſigned a convenient Army, to be by him employed againſt the Chriſtians, with Regal power over the Provinces by him gained; without relation or ſubordination to the Perſian Sultans: of whoſe ſucceſſes and affairs hath been ſpoke elſewhere. To Melech and Ducat, two others of his diſcontented kinſmen, but all of the ſame Selzuccian family, he gave the fair Cities of Aleppo and Damaſcus, and thoſe parts of Syria, with whatſoever they could conquer from the Caliph of Ægypt, who then held all Phœnicia, and the Sea-coaſts of Paleſtine; to be held in fee and vaſſalage of the Crown of Perſia. To theſe two brethren then we are to refer the beginning of the Turkiſh kingdom in Syria: who, with their Succeſſors, by reaſon that here they held their reſidence, cauſed themſelves to be called

The TURKISH KINGS of DAMASCUS.

1075 1 Melech and Ducat, the firſt Turkiſh Kings of Damaſcus, by the gift of Axon, the ſecond Sultan of the Turks in Perſia, added to their dominions all the reſt of Syria, together with part of Cilicia, and ſome neighbouring Provinces in the Leſſer Aſia.

2 ——— Sultan of Damaſcus, at ſuch times as the Chriſtians of the Weſt won the Holy Land: againſt whom he notably defended the City and Territories of Damaſcus; and in a ſet battel diſcomfited and ſlew Roger the Norman, Prince of Antioch.

1146 3 Noradine, (the ſon of Sanguin) General of the Armies, and Son-in-Law to the former King, ſucceeded him in the eſtate. A noble Prince, memorable amongſt other things for a gallant anſwer made to his Commanders, when they perſwaded him to take the advantage on the death of Baldwin the third, and to invade Hieruſalem whilſt the Chriſtians were buſie in ſolemnizing his Funerals. Not ſo, ſaith he, Compaſſion and regard is to be had of the juſt ſorrow of thoſe Chriſtians, who have loſt ſuch a King, as could not be equalled in the world.

1175 4 Melechſala, Son of Noradine, contemned by reaſon of his youth, by his Nobles, and Souldiery, who made choice of Saladine for their King; by whom diſpoſſeſſed firſt, and after vanquiſhed.

1176 5 Saladine the Turkiſh Sultan of Egypt, having vanquiſhed the Perſians, or Parthians, coming under the conduct of Cacobed, Uncle to Melechſala, to reſtore that Prince to his eſtate, remained King of Damaſcus: and by the puiſſance of his Armies, recovered from the Chriſtians all Syria, and the Holy Land, with the City of Hieruſalem alſo.

1199 6 Eladel, or El-Aphzel the eldeſt Son of Saladine, ſucceeded in the Realm of Damaſcus; which he exchanged for that of Egypt with his Brother Elaziz.

7 Elaziz, the ſecond Son of Saladine, ſucceeded upon this Exchange in the Realm of Damaſcus, murdered not long after by his Uncle Saphradine.

8 Saphradine the Brother of Saladine, having barbarouſly murdered eight of the Sons of Saladine, (the youngeſt called Saphradine eſcaping only, who was after Sultan of Aleppo) poſſeſſed himſelf of the kingdom of Damaſcus, left at his death to Corradine, his Son or Nephew.

9 Corradine, Son or Nephew to the Tyrant Saphradine, was by him at his death, left Sultan of Damaſcus; to which all Syria and Paleſtine were then made Provincials. But the treacheries and murders of Saphradine crying loud for vengeance, Haalon the Tartar, in the year 1262. having taken the King of Damaſcus Priſoner (but whether Corradine, or ſome other, I am not able to ſay) brought him before the walls of the City; threatning to kill him in the ſight of the people, if they did not deliver it unto him. Which the Citizens refuſing to do, the wretched King was torn in pieces, and the City taken by aſſault: the kingdom by the Conquerours conferred upon Agab the Son of Haalon. And ſo ended the Selzuccian family of the Kings of Damaſcus in the perſon of Corradine, or the ſon of Corradine, moſt miſerably murdered by the Tartars: as it had done in Egypt 17 years before, in the perſon of Melechſela, and Elmutam, the Son of Meledine, as villainouſly diſpoſed and murdered by the Mamalucks. So ſlippery is the foundation of thoſe kingdoms which are laid in blood.

Nor did this kingdom hold long in the hands of the Tartars, recovered from them in ſhort time by the Mamalucks, then Kings of Egypt; from them once more regained by the furious Tamerlane: who in the year 1400 beſieged Damaſcus with an Army of 1200000 men, (if the number be not miſtaken, and one Cypher added more than ſhould) in purſuite whereof he filled up the ditches with his Priſoners, put all the people to the ſword; and with great Art raiſed three Towers as a Trophey of his victory, built with the heads of thoſe whom he had ſo ſlaughtered. A man ſo ſtrangely made up of vice and vertues, that it is hard to ſay which had the predominancy. But the violence of this tempeſt being overblown, the Mamalucks, from whom he had alſo conquered the kingdom of Egypt, recovered Syria by degrees, and repaired Damaſcus, continuing in their power till the year 1516. when Selimus the firſt diſcomfited Campſon Gaurus the Ægyptian Sultan in the fields of Aleppo. Upon the news whereof the Citizens of Damaſcus, fearing the ſpoil of their rich City, then of very great trading, ſet open their gates unto the Victors; as did all the other Cities and Towns of Syria, by their example. By means whereof, without any more blows, the Turks became Lords of this Country; as the next year of Egypt alſo, by the vanquiſhment and death of Tonombeius who ſucceeded Campſon: ſo rooting out the name and government of the Mamalucks, and adding thoſe rich kingdoms to the Turkiſh Empire. And ſo much for Syria.

Mount Hermon.

MOUNT HERMON.

In our passage out of Cœle-Syria into Palestine, we must cross Mount Hermon; a ledge of Hills, which beginning at the East point of the Anti-Libanus, bend directly South: in different places and by several Nations called by divers names. By Ptolemy called Alsadamus; by the Amorites, Samir; by the Phœnicians, Syrion; and by that name remembred in the Book of Psalms. But Alsadamus they are called only where they border upon Cœle-Syria. Where they begin to part the Region of Traconitis from Arabia Deserta, they are called by Moses and the Scriptures Hermon; part of the kingdom of Og, the King of Basan, as is said, Josuah, ch. 12. v. 6. Syrion by the Sidonians, as is affirmed Deut. ch. 3. v. 9. Running farther after this unto the South, they are called Gilead or Galaad; by Strabo, Trachonita, after the name of the Region along which they passe, and are conceived to be the highest part of all Mount Libanus, or rather of that long ridge of Mountains which there take beginning. And so we are to understand the words of the Prophet Jeremie, saying, Galaad tu mihi Caput Libani, as the Vulgar readeth it. That is to say, that as the head is the highest part of a man; so these hills, or this part of them, was the highest of all the branches, or spurres of Libanus. Called Galeed by Jacob, from that heap of stones which was there laid by Laban and Jacob, to be a witness of the Covenant wch was made betwixt them, Gen. 31. v. 27. the word signifying in the Original, an heap of Witnesses. And Laban said, this heap is a Witness betwixt me and thee this day; therefore was the name of it called Galeed, ver. 28. By these hills, and the main body of the Anti-Libanus lying on the North, and the Mountains of Phœnicia and Idumæa on the West; the land of Palestine it so shut up on every side, that no Fortress can be stronger by wit or Art, than that Country by Nature: the passages in some parts so narrow, as hardly to afford passage for a single person. Clauditur undiq; montibus, hinc abruptis rupibus, & profundis vallibus concursu Torrentium, inde altis & implexis anfractibus sic contractis, ut per angustos colles vix pateat transitus viatori, as my Author hath it. I had almost forgot to add, that that part of these hills, which is commonly known in Scripture by the name of Hermon, is in one place thereof called Sihon, as Deut. 4. v. 48. where it is said that the Israelites possessed the Land from Aroer on the bank of the River Arnon, even to Mount Sihon, which is Hermon. As also that one of the highest tops or Summits of it, had the name of Amana, alluded to by Solomon in the fourth of the Canticles; by some mistaken for Amanus, a branch of Taurus, which divides Syria from Cilicia in the Lesser Asia, with which Solomon had but small or no acquaintance. And so having cleared our selves of so much of this Mountain, as lay before us in our way, we pass over to Palestine: where we shall meet with it again, (or rather with the Western parts and branches of it) under the names of Gilead and Traconitis, as a part of that Country.

OF PALESTINE.

PALESTINE is bounden on the East, with the Hills last mentioned, by which parted from Cœle-Syria, and Arabia-Deserta; on the West, with the Mediterranean Sea, and some part of Phœnicia; on the North, with the Anti-Libanus which divides it from Syria, and the rest of Phoenicia; and on the South, with some part of Arabia Petræa.

It was first called Palestine from the Philistims, the most potent Nation of those parts. A name first found in the History of Herodotus, but generally used in times succeeding, by the Greeks and Romans. And this I look on as the proper and adæquate name of the whole Country, according to the bounds before laid down: the others, by which commonly called, being more restrained, and properly belonging to so much hereof, as was in the possession of the Tribes of Israel. And of this sort, are 1. Canaan, or the Land of Canaan, so called from Canaan the son of Cham, by whom first peopled after the floud. 2ly, The Land of Promise, because by God promised to Abraham, and his seed, for an habitation; 3ly, Israel, from the Israelites, or sons of Jacob, whose firname was Israel; 4ly, Judæa, and by us Jewrie, from the Jews, or people of the Tribe of Judah, the most prevalent of the Tribes of Israel; And 5ly, Terra Sancta, or the Holy Land, because the subject of the greatest part of the Holy Scripture; and that the work of our Redemption was herein accomplished by our Lord and Saviour. Which notwithanding we must know, that though these names do many times by a Synechdoche, express the whole Country of Palestine; yet neither the Canaanites or the Israelites were ever Masters of the whole: except only in the times of David, and of some of the Maccabean Princes, as also in some part of the reign of Herod the Great; all which had the good fortune to command it totally.

But being the most considerable people of it were the Tribes of Israel; we will first look upon the Country People under that capacity. And for so much hereof as was held by them, it is situate between the third and fourth Climats; the longest day being fourteen hours and a quarter. The whole length, but 200 miles, and not above 80 in the breadth; yet was of such a fruitful soil, that before the coming in of the Israelites, it had 30 Kings: and after the coming in of that people, so extremely populous, that David numbred a Million and 300000 fighting men, besides those of the Tribes of Levi, and Benjamin. But of the fruitfulness hereof more shortly.

As for the People they were by composition of a midle stature, but strong of body: in their best times a murmuring and stiff-necked generation, never well pleased either with God or man, with their Priests or Princes; seldom conform unto the Commandments of their God, nor very much constant to themselves. So crippled in their goings betwixt superstitions and Idolatry, that they knew not how to walk uprightly. Idolatrous above measure, and incorrigible in it, till their coming back from the Captivity of Babylon: and after that as superstitious and severe, in the point of their Sabbath, as they had formerly been exorbitant in the worship of Idols. No Medium on either side, but extreme in both. Divided antiently into these four ranks, that is to say, 1. Jews, 2. Hellenists, 3. Profelytes, and 4. Samaritans; all of them pretending a right unto this Countrey, though not all of them dwelling in it.

Of these the first called Jews, from Judah, the predominant Tribe; and Hebrews, from Heber the son of Sela, grand-son of Sem, and one of the Ancestors of Abraham; were such as naturally descended of the Tribes of Israel, and lived for the most part in their own Country; adhering to the Law of Moses, and embracing the whole Canon of the Old Testament, from the book of Genesis to the book of the Prophet Malachi. Called also Israelites, because descended from the loins of their Father Jacob, to whom God gave the name of Israel, for his greater honour. But after the ten Tribes were carryed away by Salmanassar to an endless captivity; and the two tribes (with the remainder of the rest) returned from that temporary one which they found in Babylon, the name of Israelites was laid by, and that of Jews assumed, as more proper to them. These read the Scriptures, and executed all Divine Offices in their natural Hebrew.

2. The Hellenists, were such as were Jews by parentage, but lived dispersed in most Provinces of the Roman Empire: called by that name (we may English it, the Græcizing Jews) because they read the Scriptures in the Greek or Septuagints translation; and performed all publike offices in that language also. In other things, as superstitious in their Sabbaths, as tenacious of their Circumcision, and others of the rites and ceremonies of the law of Moses, as the Jews of Palestine: and for that reason, scorned and derided by the Gentiles, amongst whom they lived; Credat Judæus apella, saith one of their Poets, relaring to their circumcising; Recutiaq; Sabbata palles, saith another of them, with scorn enough unto their Sabbaths. Novi illic ritus & cœteris mortalibus contrarii, saith Tacitus, a graver Author, of the whole body of their Rituals, or Acts of worship.

3. The

3. The Proselytes were such, as not being Jews by birth, or descent of parentage, conformed themselves unto their customs, and desired to be admitted into their Religion. And these were also of two sorts, the one called Proselyti Portæ; and the other Proselyti fœderis. The first of these, admitted by the Jews to the worship of God, and instructed in the hopes of the life to come; were only tied to those precepts which the Hebrew Doctors call the Precepts of the sons of Noah: but were neither circumcised, nor otherwise conform to the Law of Moses. Which Precepts of the sons of Noah, so called, because supposed to be given by Noah unto his Sons, when he came out of the Ark, were seven in number: that is to say, 1. That they dealt uprightly with every man, 2. That they blessed and magnified the name of God, 3. That they worshipped not any false Gods, but to abstain from Idolatry, 4. To refrain from all unlawfull lusts and copulations, 5. To keep themselves from theft and robbery, 6. And from shedding bloud, And 7. not to eat the flesh or member of any beast, taken from it when it was alive, by which all cruelty was forbidden. These, though they were admitted to the worship of God, and might repair unto the Temple; yet because of their Uncirumcision they were not suffered to converse with the Jews, nor to come into the same Court of the Temple with them: but were accounted as unclean, and had their Court apart assigned them in the worship of God, which was called Atriam Gentium, or Immundorum, and was the outermost of all. The other Proselytes, which were called Proselyti fœderis, conformed in all things to the Jews, as in Circumcision, Sabbath-keeping, and all other Ceremonies: and were accounted of as adopted Jews, privileged as they were, to worship in the Inner Court; bound as they were, from eating or drinking with a Gentile; and in a word, partakers with them in all things both divine and humane, and different in nothing from them but their race or parentage. These last in the New Testament called simply Proselytes, without any addition: the former by the name of Σεβόμενοι, or the worshipping Gentiles, of which see Acts 16. v. 14. & ch. 17. v. 4. 17. & ch. 18. v. 4. &c.

4. As for the Samaritans, they possessed a great part of this Country, which the Proselytes did not; yet were not so much Jews, as they. But of these more anon when we come to Samaria, the proper place of their abode.

As for the natural Jews themselves they are divided also into several Sects; as viz. 1. Esseni, 2. the Sadduces, 3. the Scribes, 4. the Pharisees, 5. the Herodians, and 6. the Gaulonites, or Gallileans. The Essenes or Esseni, derive their name, as some conceive, from Asca, which signifieth facere, to doe, because they laboured with their hands; as others say, from Asa, which signifieth θεραπεύειν, or to cure diseases, because they were much given to the study and practise of Physick. Their beginning is not yet agreed on. The first time they were heard of, was in the time of Jonathan, the brother of Judas Maccabæus, about 150 years before Christs nativity; then mentioned by Josephus, Antiqu. Judaic. lib. 13. cap. 9. A Pythagorean kind of Jew, and not much differing in opinion from those old Philosophers, professing as they did, 1. Community of goods, 2. Abstaining even from lawfull pleasures, 3. Forbidding of Oaths, 4. Forbearing Wine, & drinking Water, 5. Ascribing the conduct of affairs to fate or destiny, 6. And Using only inanimate or unbloudy Sacrifices. Some other Dogmata they had, but these the principal: forbidding mariage not being common to the Sect, but onely to some few amongst them. And though we find no mention of them in the New Testament, the Sect in those times being small and inconsiderable; yet it is thought that Saint Paul alludeth to their Tenets: as where he adviseth Timothy to make use of Wine, and glanceth upon those who prohibited mariage, 1 Tim. 4. 3. or condemned others in the use of meat and drink, 2 Colloss. 16. As for the manner of their life, they lived together as it were in Monasteries, or Colleges, and in every one had their συμνεῖον, or Oratory: admitting none into their fellowships or society, unless he brought all he had into their common Treasury; and not then neither under a three years Probationership. More of them he that listeth to see, may satisfie himself in that tract of Philo, intituled De vita contemplativa, where he most copiously describeth their Institutes and course of life: mistakingly applyed by Eusebius to the Primitive Christians, as if that Tract had purposely been composed of them, by that learned Jew.

2. The Sadduces either derive their name from Sadoc, who lived about the time of Alexander the Great, and is thought to be the first founder of them; or from Sadock an Hebrew word, signifying Justice; the men pretending to be so exact and strict Justiciaries, as if they would justifie themselves before Gods Tribunal. The occasion of the Sect or heresie (for both it was) said to arise from a mistake of Antigonus, a right learned man, Who teaching that we ought not to serve God, as Servants do their Masters, for the hope of reward; occasioned Sadoc and Baitus, two of his Auditors, to conceive that there was no reward nor recompence for a godly life; and consequently no Resurrection nor World to come, neither Angels nor Spirits. These were the most capital of their Errors, as appeareth Act. 23. 6. 8. Matt. 22. 3. Luke 20, 20. 27. &c. But other Dogmata they had, not mentioned in the holy Scripture: ascribing nothing unto Fate, or Predestination, but all things altogether to a mans free-will; 2. Teaching the soul to be annihilated, at the hour of death; 3. Rejecting all Traditions; and 4. Allowing no more Scripture than the five Books of Moses. In most of their opinions contrary to the Scribes and Pharisees, but joyning with them both in opposing Christ: and though like Sampsons foxes they looked divers wayes, and were tied together by their tails onely; yet in those tails they carried fire-brands to destroy Gods harvest, and had done it, if they had been able.

3. But indeed the Pharisees were the men, who were the Master-wits in the Arts of mischief, Homines robustioris impietatis, in the Fathers words. Fellows of such a perfect and concocted malice, that they were almost able to possess the devil. Their name they derive from Pharez, which is to separate. Separists we may rightly call them. For they were first ἀφορισμένοι εἰς τὸν νόμον, separated to the study of the Law of God, as Saul was brought up to that purpose at the feet of Gamaliel: And 2ly, ἀφορισμένοι εἰς τὸ ἁγιωσύνη, separated from the rest of mankind, by a more strict profession of sanctity; as the Pharisee boasted of himself that he was not as other men, or as that Publican. And that they might so seem unto ſimple men, they did thirdly ſeparate themſelves from the ſociety and converſation of others not ſo pure as themſelves, whom they called populum terræ, or the Sons of the earth, upbraiding Chriſt that he kept company with Publicans and Sinners: and more than ſo, uſed a particular kind of habit, and had a garbe unto themſelves which no others had; uſing it for a by-word amongſt themſelves, that Veſtes populi terræ, ſunt conculcatio Phariſæorum. To which end, as their countenances were more clouded and ſevere than others; ſo did they wear their Phylacteries of a broader ſize than others did: which, by the way, were ſcrols of Parchment bound about their heads and upon their hands, wherein were writ the Ten Commandements of God; fooliſhly ſo interpreting the words of Deut. And they ſhall be as frontlets between thine eyes, chap. &c. 6. v. 8. They began at the ſame time with the Sadduces; which was about 300 years before Chriſts nativity. As for their Dogmata, beſides thoſe ſpecified above, which were alſo practicable, they mentioned 1. a Pythagorean Metempſuchoſis, affirming that the ſoul of a righteous man paſſed from one into another, at the time of his death: from whence the divers opinions touching Chriſt our Saviour, Mat. 16. v. 14. are ſuppoſed to ſpring; as if his body had been animated with the ſoul of Elias, John the Baptiſt, Jeremy, or ſome other Prophet. 2. They adhered ſo tenaciouſly to unwritten traditions, that in compariſon of them, they neglected the written Law, as either inſufficient or impertinent: And 3. aſcribed ſo much ſanctity unto frequent waſhings, eſpecially when they came from Market, Mark 7. v. 4. (where poſſibly they might meet with ſome unclean perſons) and before their ſitting down to meat, Mat. 15. 2. that if they came unto a place where there was not water enough both to drink and waſh, the Phariſee would rather chooſe to waſh than drink, though he died for thirſt. More of them he that liſt to ſee, may find it copiouſly ſet down in the four and twentieth chapter of Saint Matthew; and thither I refer the Reader. By means of which pretenſions to ſo great a ſanctity, and ſome other arts they had to abuſe the people; they grew ſo ſtrong, and had ſuch ſtore of followers, and dependants on them, that they became formidable in ſhort time, to their Kings and Princes. Inſomuch that Alexandra durſt not enter on the government, in her Childrens nonage, as Joſephus relleth us, Antiqu. lib. 13. cap. 23. untill ſhe had permitted all things unto their diſpoſing; ᾧ μηδὲν δίχα τῆς ἐκείνων γνώμης, &c. and promiſed to do nothing without their advice. And this ſhe did be the direction of King Alexander, her dying Husband: whoſe Government, as ſhe found by too ſad experience had in many things proved unſucceſsfull, διὰ τέτες ὑβριζόμενος παρ' αὐτῶν, becauſe ſhe had put ſome ſcorns upon them, and otherwiſe offended that prevailing faction. A faction ſo predominant amongſt the People, ſaith the ſame Joſephus, Antiqu. lib. 19. cap. 18. ὡς ᾧ ΧΡ βασιλέως πλέγοντες, ᾧ καθ' Ἁρχιερέως, &c. that whatſoever they pleaſed to ſpread abroad either of the High Prieſt, or the King himſelf, how falſe or ſcandalous ſoever; it was received for truth without more diſpute, or any enquiry made into it.

4. But of the Phariſees enough, of the Scribes anon. Proceed we now to the Herodians and the Gaulonites, whom I look not on, as either the Authors or Promoters of any Sect of Religion in the Jewiſh Church; but as the names of two oppoſite factions in the Civill State. The firſt were ſuch who depending upon Herods fortune, as he did on the pleaſure of the Roman Emperors; ſollicited the paying of tribute to the Romans: and earneſtly preſſed upon that point, that Herod might be thereby the more indeared to his Maſters of Rome, and they to him. Upon this ground nick-named Herodians by the People, as men that more endeavoured the greatneſs and eſtate of Herod, than the proſperity and liberty of their native Country. And poſſible enough it is, that ſome amongſt them ſeeing the magnificence of Herods Palace, and experimentally knowing his prowels; might fancy him to be the Meſſiah, ſo long looked for: and thereby own this name with a better Title, than the others did. Oppoſite unto theſe were thoſe called the Gaulonites (we may call the one the Court-faction, the other the faction of the Country or Common-people:) ſo named from one Judas, a Gaulonite as Joſephus calleth him, from the place of his birth; a Galilæan, as Gamaliel calleth him, Acts 5. 37. from the place of his abode or habitation. By him the Iews were practiſed with to deny this tribute, telling them that it was a manifeſt token of their ſervitude, and that they ought to know no Lord, but the Lord of Heaven: drawing them finally on this grouud into open arms, in which action he and his adherents periſhed, and were brought to nothing. Moſt of his followers were of Galilee, though he had ſome Diſciples in Hieruſalem and Samaria alſo: and of theſe Galilæans were thoſe poor men, whoſe bloud Pilate is ſaid to mingle with their Sacrifices, Luke 13. 1.

The language of this people by them called the Hebrew, was naturally and originally the ſame which Abraham found in the land of Canaan, at his coming thither: as hath been ſhewn before when we were in Phœnicia. Uſed by them conſtantly till their ſubjugation by the Babylonians, when being led captive to that Country, and conforming themſelvs to the ſpeech and dialect of it; they came at laſt to ſpeak a kind of broken language, neither true Chaldean, nor good Hebrew, but one made of both. Chaldee as to the main body of it, but Hebrew as to the affixes, points, and Conjugations; being the ſame with that which we now call the Syriack. And at their coming home, after ſeventy years, had ſo far loſt the knowlege of their Mother-tongue; that they were not able to underſtand the words of the Holy Scripture, when Ezra read it in their hearing: inſomuch that he was forced to employ ſome learned in that tongue to expound it to them. To this the Scribes ſo often mentioned in the New Teſtament, muſt refer their original: there being no ſuch Office heard of till the time of Ezra, though long before that time the Law had ordinarily been read unto them in the feaſt of Tabernacles. For this cauſe they were called Scribes of the Law, Ezra 7. 6. Doctors of the Law, Luke 5. 17. and ſimply by the name of Lawyers, Luke 7. 30. as men whoſe office was to expound the Law, and make it intelligible to the people. Theſe we may beſt reſemble to the Canoniſts in the Church of Rome, or the Divinity Reader in ſome School or College: and grew to ſo great eſtimation in the Jewiſh State, that it was hard to ſay at laſt whether the Phariſees or they were the better men. For what the Phariſees gained on the common people by pretence of ſanctity, theſe got more juſtifiably by their zeal to the written word; which they endeavoured to preſerve from the common dangers both of corruption, and contempt. And though I look on those men especially, as the name of a function, not a Sect: yet being they held so close to the Pharisees, and concurred with them in most of their superstitions, as appeareth, Mat. 23. I consider them as a strong and potent faction, of great authority and influence in affairs of moment.

For matters of Religion, the people of this land were privileged above all others, had they had the grace to make good use of it: the Law being given to them by God the Father, the Gospel preached amongst them by God the Son, and that Gospel countenanced and confirmed before their eyes, by the miraculous operations of the Holy Ghost. The Government of that Church in the time of the Law, by a subordination of Priests and Levites to their several heads; the Priests divided by King David into 24 ranks or Classes, each Classis serving in their turns at the holy Temple: the Chiefs or Heads of which several Classes made but that body of men which are called Principes Sacerdotum, or chief Priests, so often mentioned in the writings of the holy Evangelists. Over all which there was one supreme, whom they called Summum Sacerdotem, or the High-Priest, descended lineally from Aaron, till the Romans out of avarice and reason of State made the Office saleable. And because possibly the High-Priest might be under some pollution, and so uncapable by Law to perform his Office; he had his Suffragan (or Sagan) to discharge it for him. Of which sort was Zephaniah, the Sagan or second Priest to Semiah, mentioned Ier. 52. 24. And of this sort is Annas thought by some to have been to Caiaphas; and for that cause the title of High Priest to be given to both, Luke 3. 2, though others think that Annas was High-Priest in right, and the other in fact; the one being deposed by the Romans, and the other super-induced into the place. In time of Christianity they were governed as in other Churches, by a subordination of Priests to Bishops, the first Bishop said to be Saint James, the son of Alphæus, commonly called the Lords Brother: affirmed by Ignatius, Scholar to the Apostles, in his Epistle ad Trallianos; by Egesippus, who lived in the Apostles times, as Saint Hierom and Eusebius cite him; as also by Clemens of Alexandria cited by Eusebius, hist. lib. 7. cap. 14. by Cyrill of Hierusalem, Catechism 4. and 14. Epiphanius, Hæres. 78. n. 7. Saint Ambrose in Gal. 1. Saint Chrysost. on the last of Saint Johns Gospel; Saint Hierom in his Catalogue of Ecclesiastical writers; Saint Augustine cont. Crescon. lib. 2. cap. 37. To whom there may be added the joint consent of 289. Prelates, assembled in the sixth General-Council holden at Constantinople, affirming Iames the Lords Brother to be the first Bishop of Hierusalem: all of them, with the Fathers before mentioned, taking the word Bishop in that sense, in which it generally passed for the times they lived in. His successors subject at the first to the Bishop of Cæsarea, as their Metropolitan; though privileged in their own Diocese, with the rights of Patriarchs, as appears evidently by the Acts of the Nicene Council. But afterwards for the greater honour of the Holy City, wherein our Saviour wrought the work of our redemption, it was ordained at Chalcedon, that the Bishop of Hierusalem should have as well the jurisdiction as the name of a Patriarch; the three Palestines (for Constantine had before divided it into so many Provinces) being suducted from the power of the See of Antioch, to make up his Patriarchate. So stood it in elder times; but now by the incroachment of Mahometanism the Christian faith is so obscured, and the beauties of it so ecclipsed, that were it not for some Sects of Christians dwelling in Mount Sinai, and about Hierusalem, it might be said without any manifest untruth, to be quite extinguished.

But to look back upon the Country, it cannot be described more fully, and significantly, than Moses hath done it to our hands, in the 8. of Deut. Where it is said to be a land of Brooks and Waters, of Fountaines and depths, that spring out of the Vallies and Hills; a land of Wheat and Barley, and Vines, and Figtrees, and Pomegranates; of Oyl-olive, and Honey; a Land, wherein was bread, without scarceness; a Land whose stones were as Iron, and out of whose Hills one may dig brass. An ample commendation; and yet in some sort short of the fertility of this flourishing Country; which did not only consist in the choice & plenty, but the perpetuity of its fruits: it being on record in the Epistles of the Emperour Julian (surnamed the Apostate) that the Fig-trees, and other fruit-trees herein, were seldom or never without fruits; the old not fully falling off, till the new come on. Which his report, if true, (as certainly he did not love our Saviour so well as to flatter the Country for his sake) we have then an answer to the difficulty, which hath so much perplexed all Commentators of former times; and that is, why our Saviour should curse the Figtree for not bearing fruit, when the Text saith, that the time of fruits was not yet come, Mar. 14. 13. For though the time for new fruits was not come as yet (it being then but early Spring) yet our Saviour being hungry might expect to find some of the old, and failing of his expectation lay that curse upon it. Nor is this solution of the doubt discountenanced, (rather much confirmed) by the Character and condition of the Country, as it stands at present; naturally adorned with beautifull mountains, and luxurious valleys, the rocks affording excellent waters, and the Air never pinched with colds, nor scorched with heats. And though either by the negligence of the Inhabitants, or some curse laid upon the land, far short of that fertility with which once it flourished; Yet still Figs, Olives, Pomegranates, Palmtrees, are here very frequently to be seen; some store of Wine, with Oranges, and the Apple of Paradice, which they preserve upon the trees all the year long (which agrees very well with that of Julian spoken of before) as well-furnished with Honey and Sugar-canes; as also with Goats, Swine, Hares, Quailes, and Patriges: but pestred so in many places with Rats and Mice, that if it were not for certain Birds which feed upon them, it were not possible for the people to have any Harvest. Balm they had antiently, not now. Nor any Nuts, Pears, Plums, or Cherries, but what are brought hither from Damascus.

Principal Rivers of this Country, are 1. Chison, the Chorsæus of Ptolemy, which riseth out of Mount Tabor in Galilee, and falleth into the Mediterranean Sea, not far from Mount Carmel in Phœnicia. 2. Cedron, a Torrent rather than a River, passing betwixt Hierusalem and the Mount of Olives; but more remarkable for many notable actions, than many others of a greater both name and course. For over this Brook did David pass when he fled from Absalom; and over this our Saviour the Son of David passed, when he went to his passion. On the Banks hereof did Asa the King of Judah, burn his mothers Idols, 1 Kings 15. as Josiah did the Vessels which were made for Baal, 2 Kings 23. 3. Zared, and 4. Napthea, which arising out of the hills of the Tribe of Iudah, have their fall into the Mediterranean. 5. Arnon, which hath his spring in the hils so called, and endeth his course in the Mare Mortuum. 6. Iaboc, oft mentioned in the Scriptures; which issuing out of the Mountains of Galaad, and 7. Hermon, which springing from the Hils so named, lose themselves in Iordan. 8. Iordan, so called from Ior and Dan, two neighbouring fountains, out of which he seems to take his source: though they do also fetch their spring from Phiala, a round deep well at the foot of Anti-Libanus, about twenty four miles from these Fountains, into which he maketh his way like a Mole under ground. A River of more fame, than length, breadth, or depth, running from North to South, almost in a strait line to the Dead Sea, where he endeth his course; not navigably deep, nor above ten yards in breadth, where broadest; shadowed on both sides with Poplars, Tamariks-trees, and reeds of many several sorts, of some of which the Arabians make darts and Iavelines, of others Arrows, and some again they fashion into pens to write with. Passing along it maketh two Lakes, the one in the Upper Galilee, by the antients called Samachonitis, dry for the most part in the Summer, and then covered with shrubs and sedge; not mentioned in the Holy Scriptures: the other in the Lower Galilee, about an hundred furlongs in length, and about fourty in breadth; called the Sea of Galilee from the Country, the Lake of Tiberias from a City of that name on the banks thereof, and for the like cause called also the Lake of Genezareth. And here it is to be observed, that the River passeth thorow this Lake with so swift a course, that it preserves it self distinct from the waters of it both in tast and colour, as is affirmed of Nilus for a long space in the Mediterranean, and other great Rivers in their falls. Finally, having run thorow the plains of Hierichо, it finisheth its course at last in the Mare mortuum, or Dead Sea. Honoured with the name of a Sea, because salt, and large, seventy miles long, and sixteen broad; furnishing with salt the whole Land of Iewry: but called the Dead Sea, either because it had no visible efflux into the Ocean, nor is at all increased with the waters of this River and many other Torrents which fall into it; or because no living Creature is nourished in it, suffocated with the bituminous savour which it sendeth forth, from the aboundance of which matter it is also called Lacus Alphaltites. Nigh hereunto stood the once-famous Cities of Sodom and Gomorrah, with three others more, whence the valley had the name of Pentapolis, destroyed for their abominations by a fire from heaven: now fruitfull in shew only, but not in substance; the fruits here growing, being very fair unto the eye, sed levi tactu pressa in vagum fatiscunt pulverem, but if touched, to moulder in ashes, as Solinus hath it.

David

Chief Hills and Mountains of it, besides Anti-Libanus, and Mount Hermon, spoken of already, which be only borderers, are, 1. Mount Sion. memorable for the Tower of David, which was built upon it, called frequently the Holy Hill of Sion, 2. Mount Moriah, famous for the intended sacrifice of Isaac, and the Temple of Salomon. 3. Mount Chalvarie, on which CHRIST suffered, supposed to be the burial place of our Father Adam. 4. Mount Tabor, on which our Saviour was transfigured. 5. Mount Olivet, from which he ascended into Heaven. 6. Mount Garizim, whereon stood the Samaritans Temple, their ordinary place of worship, mentioned Iohn 4. 20. 8. The Mountains of Saron, stretching with intermixed Vallies, from the Sea of Galilee to the Mediterranean, not far from Tyre, there ending in a white clif, and for that cause called Capo Bianco by the Sayler. The whole Mountain pleasantly enriched with the fragrant smels of Rosemary, Sweet Marjoram, Hyssop, Baies, and other odoriferous plants which do grow there naturally: but for all that, destitute of any other Inhabitants than Leopards, Boars, Jaccalls, and such savage Creatures. 9. The Mountains of Gilboa, the highest on the West of Iordan; as 10. those of Basan, celebrated for their height in the Book of Psalmes; and 11. those of Abarim, on the East side of it: from one of the Summits of which last called Nebo, by some writers Pisgah, the Lord gave Moses a Survey of the Land of Promise.

As for this whole Country comprehended in the name of Palestine, it hath had divers divisions, according to the quality of the People, or the will of those who have been formerly masters of it. Divided first betwixt the Philistims, Perezites, Hutites, Jebusites, and others of the Sonnes of Canaan, on this side Iordan; the Moabites, Ammonites, Midianites, and Amorites, dwelling on the other. When conquered by the sonnes of Iacob, it was divided into the twelve Tribes, of 1. Iudah, 2. Benjamin, 3. Simeon, 4. Dan, 5. Aser, 6. Nepthhali, 7. Zabulon, 8. Issachar, 9. Gad, 10. Reuben, 11. Ephraim, and 12. Manasseth. When that great breach was made by Ieroboam, in the Kingdome of David, it was broken into the two Kingdomes of Judah and Israel; of which the first contained only the two Tribes of Judah and Benjamin, the latter comprehending the other ten. When the Israelites were led Captive into Assyria, and a new set of People planted in their rooms, those new-comers, from Samaria, their Capitall Citie, had the name of Samaritans: and when the men of Judah were released of their long captivity, and came back from Babylon, they took to themselves the name of Jews. After which time, the whole Country of Palestine antiently possessed or subdued by the seed of Abraham, was divided into 1. Peraea, 2. Iturea, 3. Galilee, 4. Samaria, 5. Iudaea, and 6. Idumaea. When conquered by the Romans, all these were joined into one Province, which for a time was reckoned as a part of Syria, or at lest subordinate. But Constantine not liking of the one or the other, went a way by himself, and cast it into three Provinces, viz. 1. Palestina Prima, 2. Palestina Secunda, and 3. Palestina Salutaris; the Metropolis of the first being Cæsarea Palestina; of the second, Samaria; of the third, Hierusalem. But this division of Constantines growing out of use, we will adhere unto the former: Beginning first with those parts hereof which lay on the other side of Iordan, because first conquered and possessed by the house of Israel; who at that Gate found entrance into all the rest; and comming round to Idumaea, which last of all these Provinces was added to the State of Iewry. In the Chorographie whereof, I must confess my self a Debter to Sir Walter Raleigh, whose industry herein hath saved me a great deal of search; though sometimes I make bold to differ from him, and adde to him, as I see occasion.

PE-

Peræa,

PERÆA.

PERÆA, is that part of Paleſtine, which lyeth betwixt the River Jordan, and the mountains of Arnon, (which divide Paleſtine from Syria and Arabia) Eaſt and Weſt; and reacheth from Pella in the North, to Petra the chief Town of Arabia Petræa, in the South. By Pliny it is made to bend more towards Egypt, who deſcribes it thus. Peræa Judeæ pars eſt ulterior, Arabiæ & Egypto proxima, aſperis diſperſa montibus, & à cæteris Judæis Jordane amne diſcreta. Peræa (ſaith he) is the furtheſt part of Judæa, neighbouring Arabia and Egypt, interſperſed with rough and craggy mountains, and parted from the reſt of the Iews by the River Iordan. So called from the Greek word περαν, in regard of the ſituation of it on the other ſide of that River; and not improperly might be rendred by Tranſ-Jordana. Bleſſed with a rich ſoil, and large fields beſet with divers Trees, eſpecially of Olives, Vines, and Palms. The habitation in times paſt of the Midianites, Moabites, and Ammonites; as alſo of the two Tribes of Gad and Reuben. Of all which I ſhall ſpeak in order, beginning with the Midianites, and the Children of Lot, as the firſt occupants hereof; upon the knowledge of whoſe affairs, the State and ſtory of the Iſraelites hath ſo much dependance.

And firſt the MADIANITES inhabited on the South-Eaſt of the Dead Sea, at the very entrance of the Country; deſcended from one or more of the five ſons of Madian, the Son of Abraham by Keturah, mentioned Gen. 25. v. 4. Who leaving the reſt of their brethren to ſeek themſelves new habitations, more towards the Banks of the Red Sea, and the deſarts of Arabia Petræa; continued near unto the place of Abrahams dwelling: and mingling with the Moabites and Canaanites in blood and mariages, came in ſhort time to loſe all the knowledge of the true God, and to worſhip Idols, as the reſt of their Neighbours did.

Their chief Cities were 1. Recome, built by one of the five Kings of the Midianites, which was ſlain, by Ioſuah, afterwards called Selah, 2 Kings 14. 7. accounted at that time a City of the Edomites; next of the Iſmaelites or Arabians, and by them called Hagar. Beſt known unto the Greeks and Romans, by the name of Petra, and by that name we ſhall take further notice of it when we come to Arabia. 2. Midian, on the Banks of the Dead Sea, the ordinary reſidence of their Princes, abſolute of themſelves at firſt, as in other places; but at the time when Moſes and Ioſuah led the people into their poſſeſſions, ſubjected unto Sehon King of the Amorites; whoſe Dukes their five Kings or Princes, are ſaid to be, Joſuah 13. 21. A people whom the Iſraelites had neither Commiſſion or intent to make war upon, if they had not cauſeleſly provoked them, at the requeſt of the Moabites, by ſending amongſt them (as Balaam the falſe Prophet had adviſed) the moſt beautifull of all their women, not only to intice them to prohibited mixtures, but to allure them to the worſhip of their Idols alſo. A miſchievous and ſucceſsfull plot, but alike dangerous to both parties: God ſending a fierce plague amongſt the Iſraelites, which coſt them the lives of 24000 perſons, beſides ſuch as periſhed by the Sword; and giving a command to Moſes, to avenge him of the Midianites, who had ſo provoked him. On which Commiſſion, Moſes culled out 12000 men, and ſent them under Phineas againſt the Midianites: by whom all their Princes were ſlain, their Cities and goodly Caſtles burnt with fire, their men, women, and male-children put unto the ſword; as is related in the one and thirtieth Chapter of the Book of Numbers. Yet notwithſtanding this great ſlaughter, they recovered their former power, if not a greater; and after the death of Barac the Judge of Iſrael, did for the ſpace of 4 years ſo afflict that people, that they were fain to hide themſelves in the Caves and ſtrong holds of the Mountains, as is ſaid Judg. 6. 2. their Enemies having left them neither ſheep, oxen, nor aſſe, or any ſuſtenance at all, v. 4. But Gideon being raiſed up by God for their deliverance, encountred with their four Kings, and put them to flight: of which four, Oreb and Zeb were taken and ſlain by the Ephraimites at the paſſage of Iordan; Zebah and Salmanah, taken by Gideon himſelf, and executed by his own hand as the ſtory telleth us. In this war there are ſaid to have periſhed of this people and their Confederates, no fewer than 120000 perſons, by which ſo weakned that we hear no more of them from this time forwards, in any action of importance: their name and Country being firſt incorporated into that of the Edomites; and after into that of the Iſmaelites, and other the Inhabitants of Arabia Petræa.

2. The MOABITES poſſeſſed all the Country, from the Midianites in the South, as far as to Eſebon in the North, on both ſides of the River Arnon: having Iordan on the Weſt, and the hills of Abarim on the Eaſt. Poſſeſſed at the firſt by the Emmims, a race of Giants, whoſe chief City was Sheneth Kiriathaim. But theſe being vanquiſhed and broken by Cherdorlaomer and his Aſſociates, of which ſee Gen. 14. 5. their forlorn ſeats were taken up by the Moabites, deſcended from Moab one of the ſons of Lot; who lived here in great proſperity, till the time of Vaheb. Grand-father unto Baalac, the ſon of Zippor; from whom Sehon King of the Amorites had taken all the parts of Moab, on the North of the River Arnon, and made that River, which before was the middle of Moab, to be the North bound or border of it. In which eſtate it ſtood in the time of Moſes.

Chief Cities of it at that time were 1. Rabbat, the Regall ſeat of Baalac the King of Moab, the Rhalmathum of Ptolemy. 2. Diblatham, deſtroyed with the reſt of Moab by Nebuchadnezzer, as is ſaid Ier. 48. 22. 3. Gallim, the principality of Phalti the ſon of Laiſh, to whom Saul gave his Daughter Michal, formerly maried unto David, 1 Sam. 25. 44. 4. Muthana, and 5. Nathaliel, thorow which the Iſraelites paſsed, after they had left the well called Beer. 6. Bamath, where Moſes was encamped when he ſent to Sehon to demand a paſſage thorow his Country, Numbers 21. 19, &c. 7. Mizpah, the City of Refuge to the Father and mother of David, in the time of his troubles under Saul. 8. Hor, the chief City of Moab, not medled with by Moſes in his march this way, the Lord himſelf forbidding him to touch upon it, or diſtreſs it; becauſe it had been given by him for an inheritance to the Children of Lot, Deuter. 2. 9. Which probibition was only for this place particularly; (though this particularly there mentioned) but for all the lands and territories then in their poſſeſſion. 9. Kir-haſareth, of chief note for the barbarous and inhumane fact of Meſha the Moabitiſh King, who being beſieged herein by the Kings of Judah, Iſrael, and Edom, without hope of eſcape, ſacrificed his own eldeſt Sonne on the wall hereof; which ſo moved the Kings of Judah, and Edom, that they forſook the King of Iſrael whoſe the quarrel was. So the ſiege was raiſed, 2 Kings 3. 17. Peræa.

Now as Moſes did not at the preſent diſobey Gods Order, in leaving the Moabites in quiet; ſo neither did the Moabites on their parts provoke him to it; giving him a free and open paſſage in his march for Canaan: out of an hope that when the Amorites were ſubdued, they ſhould be put into poſſeſſion of their loſt eſtates. And though they were deceived of that expectation, the Iſraelites looking on that Country which they had conquered, as the ſpoils of the Amorites, and giving it for a poſſeſſion to the Tribe of Reuben: yet durſt they not do any thing in the way of Armes, but ſent for Baalam the falſe Prophet, to caſt them by his curſes and incantations into ſome diſeaſes, wherby their ſtrength and courage might be taken from them. Baalac the Sonne of Zpppor was at this time King. After whom we find not the name of any other, till we come to Eglon, who with the help of Ammon, and Amalek, over-maſtered Iſrael, and for the ſpace of 18 years tyrannized amongſt them: when ſlain in his own houſe, and afterwards 10000 of his people, by the hand of Ehud. But this indignity was in the times ſucceeding revenged by Saul in ſome part, who made war upon them; but more by David who ſubdued them, and made them Tributaries. And not ſo only, but ſubjected them to the vileſt offices, as is intimated in that form of Speech, Moab is my waſh-pot, Pſal. 60. 8. Taking their opportunity they withdrew themſelves from the houſe of David, and put themſelves under the command of the Kings of Iſrael, to whom they paid for tribute in the time of Ahab, 100000 Lambs, and 200000 Rams, with their fleeces on: but quickly weary of thoſe payments, and revolting from the houſe of Ahab alſo, they were invaded by Jehoram, aided herein by the Kings of Judah and Idumæa; by whom being vanquiſhed, Meſha their King was fain to ſhut himſelf up in Kir-haſareth, as was ſaid before. After this joyning with the Ammonites, and the Idumæans or ſons of Edom, they invaded Jehoſophat King of Judah; to whom God gave a memorable and ſignal victory, without blow or battel: the Ammonites firſt ſetting upon the Edomites, and after upon one another, till they were almoſt all deſtroyed, 2 Chron. 20. 23. From this time we hear nothing of them; but probably they recovered ſome part of their former dwellings, when that two Tribes and a half on the Eaſt of Jordan, were carried away captive by Tiglath-Pileſer. Poſſeſſed hereof and of other their habitation, till the reign of Zedekias King of Judah; when vanquiſhed, with the reſt of theſe Nations, by the Babylonians and Aſſyrians under Nebuchadnezzar. Nor find we any mention of them in the ages following; the name of Moab being forgotten, or grown out of uſe: the South parts of their Country laid to Arabia Petræa, as the Eaſt parts were to that of Arabia Deſerta; and all the reſt, as well as that which had been conquered by the Jews, ſwallowed up in the general name of Paleſtinians.

3. The AMMONITES inhabited on the North-Eaſt of the River Arnon, and poſſeſſed all that tract from Arnon, on the head of the River, to the City of Rabbah; and on both ſides of the River Iaboc, as well within the Mountains of Galaad as without the ſame. The ſeat in elder times of the Raphaims, and Zamzummins, a Giant-like race of men, as the Emmins were; but vanquiſhed alſo, as the others, by Cherdorlaomor; Aſhtaroth, and Heth, being then the principal of their habitations. Succeeded to, in their deſolate and forſaken dwellings by the children of Ammon, the other Sonne of Lot, and the brother of Moab; both houſes running the ſame fortune; theſe Ammonites being conquered, and deprived of the beſt part of their Countrey on the South-ſide of Jaboc, by Og King of Baſan; as the Moabites, at the ſame time, of theirs by Sehon. A monument of which ſubjection was the bed of Og, found in the City of Rabbah, the chief City of Ammon, there to be ſeen, when Moſes had ſubdued the Kings of the Amorites, as appeareth Deut. 3.

Chief Cities at ſuch time as the Iſraelites firſt conquered the Land of Canaan, were, 1. Rabbah, the Regal City of their Kings; taken by Og of Baſan, as is ſaid before; but again quitted as it ſeemeth on the comming of Moſes, that he might be the better able to keep the field. Memorable in ſucceeding times for the death of Uriah, ſlain here by a deſign of Davids when beſieged by Joab. Who having brought it to terms of yielding, ſent for the king to come before it, that he might have the honour of taking a place ſo defenſible; environed in a manner with the River Jaboc, and therefore called the City of waters, 2 Sam. 12. 27. Afterwards repaired and beautified by Ptolemy Philadelphus, King of Ægypt, who having made himſelf Maſter of thoſe parts of Arabia, which lie near unto it, and liking the conveniency of the ſituation, honoured it with the name of Philadelphia. 2. Dathema, ſuppoſed to be Rithma by the learned Junius, mentioned Numb. 33. 18. (the Hebrew letters D. and R. being much alike) a place of great ſtrength amongſt the Ammonites. 3. Minneth, in the South border, and 4. Abel vinearum in the Eaſt border of Ammon; both mentioned in the purſuit of that people when ſubdued by Iephthe. 4. Mitſpa, ſometimes one of the Cities of the half Tribe of Manaſſes, and at that time honoured with the reſidence of Jephta; but afterwards recovered by the children of Ammon: in whoſe hands it was, when utterly deſtroyed and burnt by Judas Perea. Maccabæus. 1. Macc. 5. 35. 6. Magod, and 7. Bosor, two other strong places of the Ammonites, there also mentioned; but said to be in the Region of Galaad, by which name, or by that of Gileadites, all the Country of the Ammonites lying on this side of the Mountains, was at that time called.

As for those Ammonites, they had nothing at all to do with Israel as they passed towards Canaan; neither provoking them, nor provoked by them, to any acts of hostility. Afterwards not well pleased, that they were not restored to the possession of those lands, which had been taken from them by Og of Basan, (conferred by the decree of Moses on the Tribe of Gad;) they joyned with the Midianites in their expedition. But worsted by the puissance and good fortune of Gedeon, they lay still a while, till stirred up by some secret motion from Almighty God, to avenge him on that sinfull and Idolatrous people, who by worshipping the Gods of the Heathen, had provoked him to anger. Prosperous in it for a time, till his wrath was pacified; who having made use of them to chastise his people, delivered up his rod to be burnt by Jephthe, vanquished and driven home by him with a very great slaughter. Not so much chrushed by the unsuccessfullness of this attempt, but that in the time of Saul they brake out again, and besieged Jabesh Gilead; Nabas, a cruel tyrant, being then their King; who having brought the City into great extremity, would give them no other conditions than the loss of every mans right eye; to the end that using to carry a great Target on their left Armes, wherewith the eye on that side was wholly shadowed, they might by this means be disabled from all future service. But Saul came time enough to save them from that shame and loss; for that cause so offensive to Nabas, that to despight him, he shewed friendship to David, in the time of his trouble. A curtesie which David was so mindfull of, that he sent Ambassadours to Hanan the Son of Nabas, to make acknowledgement of it, and to confirm the amity which he had with his Father: but found so ill requital from him, that instead of thanks and kind acceptance, his messengers were despitefully handled, their beards half shaven, and their garments cut off by the knee. Incensed wherewith he sent Joab against them; by whom the Country was laid wast, and Rabbah their chief City taken, their Kings Crown, weighing a Talent of Gold, set on Davids head, and all the Prisoners executed with great severity, some of them being cast into lime-kils, and the rest torn in peeces with saws and harrows. Quiet a long while after this, we hear no great news of them till the reign of Jehosophat, against whom confederated with the Edomites and Moabites, they made open war; but fell by one anothers swords, as was said before. Not well recovered of this blow, they were subdued and made Tributaries by Ozias King of Judah, and so continued in the time of Joatham his son; who so increased the tribute laid upon them by his father, that it amounted to a hundred Talents of Silver, ten thousand measures of Wheat, and as many of Barly. Taught by this lesson how to value the Kings of Judah, they continued either quiet neighbours, or obedient subjects, though much improved in power and reputation, by regaining the greatest part of their antient dwellings, on the removal of the two Tribes and an half, on the East of Jordan, to the land of Assyria, by Tiglath Phul-Assur. For after this (with reference to the common danger) Baulis their King was so strict a confederate with Zedechias, that when Nebuchadnezzar had taken Zedechias with him unto Babylon, and left Gedaliah as his Deputy to command the Country; Ismael, one of the blood of the Kings of Judah, was sent by Baulis to slay him. But he paid dear for his attempt; his Country being shortly conquered by the Babylonians, and the name of Ammonite forgotten: changed by the Grecians when they came to Lord it over them, to those of Gileaditis, and Philadelphia; according to the new name of their principal City, and the old one of the Mountains and hills adjoyning.

4. The REUBENITES took name from Reuben, the eldest of Jacobs sons by Leah; of whom in the first muster which was made of them at Mount Sinai, there were found 46000 fighting men; and 43700 at the second muster, when they passed over Jordan. Their dwelling was on the East of that famous River; having the Gadites on the North, the Desart Arabia on the East, and the Land of Moab on the South, from which parted by the River Arnon.

Places of most observation here, 1. Abel-Sittim, seated in that part of the Country, which was called the Plains of Moab; the last incamping place of Moses: afterwards by the Jews called simply Sittim; memorable for the wood so often mentioned in the Scriptures, of which the Ark of the Lord was made. In after times by the Greeks and Romans it was called Abila, mistook by some for that Abila or Abilene whereof Lysanias was Tetrarch: that Town and Territory, as Josephus doth affirm expressly, being situate amongst the spurres and branches of Libanus, far enough from hence. 2. Bethabora, or Beth-Bara, where John baptized, and Moses made his last and most divine exhortations to the Tribes of Israel, contained in Deuteronomy. 3. Macherus, the strongest in-land City and Castle in those parts of the world, standing aloft upon a Mountain every way unaccessible: first fortified by Alexander Jannæus King of the Jews, as a frontire Town against the Arabians; and afterwards demolished by Gabinius, one of Pompeys Lieutenants, in the war against Aristobulus. Unfortunately remarkable for the death of John Baptist, where murdered by the command of Herod the Tetrarch of Galilee, and Lord of this Countrey of Perea. 4. Lasa, or Leshah, of which Gen. 10. 19. by the Greeks called Callirhoe, by reason of the fair fountains rising from the Hills adjoyning, out of which issue springs both of hot, and cold waters, as also bitter and sweet; all which soon after joyned into one stream, make a wholsom Bath, especially for convulsions and contraction of sinews. 5. Medeba, famous for the defeat given to the Syrians and Ammonites by the conduct of Joab,

1 Chron.

1 Chron. 19. 7. In the time of the Greeks laid with ſome other Towns of this Tract unto Cœle-Syria; but in the declining times of the Seleucian Family, regained unto the Crown of Jewry by Alexander, he being of the race of the Maccabees; and finally with eleven others in thoſe parts, delivered by Antipater the father of Herod into the hands of Aretas King of the Arabians, hoping thereby to gain him to the ſide of Hyrcanus the ſon of Alexander, whoſe cauſe Antipater moſt favoured. 6. Boſor, or Bozra, a City of Refuge, and one of thoſe that were aſſigned unto the Levites on that ſide of the water. 7. Livias, a Town new built by Herod in honour of Livia, the Mother of Tiberius Cæſar; different from that which the Geographers call 8. Libias, (though by ſome confounded) the ſame with Laban, mentioned Deut. 1. 1. 9. Kedemoth, another City of the Levites, giving name unto the adjoyning Deſart, from whence Moſes ſent his ambaſſage to Sehon King of the Amorites. 10. Bamath-Baal, the chief City of the worſhippers of Baal, to which Balaam was brought by Balaac to curſe the Iſraelites. 11 Hesbon, the Regal City of Sehon King of the Amorites. 12 Adam, or the City Adam (Joſ. 3. 17.) where the Tribes paſſed dry-foot over Jordan, oppoſite unto Gilgal in the Tribe of Benjamin. Within this Tribe is the Mountain Nebo, from which Moſes took a view of the land of Canaan: an hill as it ſeemeth, of two tops, whereof that which looketh towards Jerico, is called Paſgah; that which looketh toward Moab, being called Hnir. Here is alſo an high hill named Peor, where the filthy Idol Baal was worſhipped alſo, who hath hence the addition of Baal-Peor. Peræa.

5. The GADITES, were ſo called from Gad the ſeventh ſonne of Jacob, begot on Zilphah the hand-maid of Lea; of whom were found at the firſt muſter when they came out of Egypt, forty five thouſand five hundred and fifty fighting men; and at the ſecond when they entred the land of Canaan, forty five thouſand bearing armes. Their ſituation was betwixt the Reubenites on the South, and the half Tribe of Manaſſes upon the North; the River Jordan on the Weſt, and the Mountains of Arnon on Eaſt; by the which laſt parted from the dwellings of the Children of Ammon.

Cities of moſt obſervation, 1. Aroer, on the banks of the River Arnon, the principal City of the Gadites. 2. Dibon, more towards Jordan; of great note in the time of Joſuah, and of no ſmall accompt in the time of Saint Hierom. 3. Beth-nimrah, of which Eſay propheſied that the waters thereof ſhould be dried up; ſeated upon the Arnon alſo. 4. Nattoroth, more in the body of the Tribe. 5. Bethharam, mentioned by Joſuah, chap. 13. v. 27. by Joſephus called Betaramptha; new built by Herod Antipas, and called Livias, in honour of Livia the wife of Auguſtus Cæſar, tranſlated into the Julian family; who alſo laid unto it fourteen villages, to make it of the greater power and juriſdiction. 6. Beth-ezob, by Joſephus called Vetezabra, the habitation of Miriam, who in the ſiege of Hieruſalem when deſtroyed by Titus, was compelled by famine to eat her own ſon. 7. Succoth, not far from the River Jordan, ſo called from the Tents or Booths which Jacob ſet up there, in his paſſage from Meſopotamia to the land of Canaan: the People of which Town having denied relief to Gideon as he followed the chace of Zeba and Zalmanah, were by him miſerably tortured at his return, under a tribulum or threſhing carre, wherewith he tore their fleſh, and bruiſed their bodies. 8. Jahzer, another of the Regal Seats of Sehon King of the Amorites; firſt taken by Moſes, after recovered by the Moabites (as appeareth Eſay 16. 8.) then poſſeſſed by the Ammonites; and finally from them regained by Judas Maccabeus, 1. Macc. 5. 8. 9. Mahanaim, ſo called from the Army of Angels which appeared to Jacob (Gen. 32. 2.) as ready to defend him againſt all his enemies, the word in the original importing a double Army. A place of very great ſtrength and ſafety, and therefore made by Abner the ſeat Royal of Iſhboſeth, the ſon of Saul, during the war he had with David; as afterwards the retiring place of David, during the rebellion of his ſon Abſolom. 10. Rogelim, the City of Barzillai the Gileadite, ſo faithfull to David in that war. 11 Ramoth, or Ramoth Gilead, ſo called from the ſituation of it near the Mountains of Gilead; a Town of ſpecial note in the book of God; particularly for the pacification here made, betwixt Jacob and Laban; for the death of Ahab King of Iſrael, who loſt his life in the recovery of it from the hands of the Syrians; and finally for the election of Jehu to the Crown of Iſrael, Anointed at the ſiege hereof, by a Son of the Prophets. 12. Penuel, ſo called from the enter-view which the Lord pleaſed to beſtow there on his ſervant Jacob, at his return out of Meſopotamia, mentioned Gen. 32. 32. the word ſignifying the place of the face or viſion of God: defaced by Gedeon for their churliſh uſage of him, when he craved relief of them againſt the Midianites; to whom together with the Moabites, and Ammonites, the whole territory appertaining to theſe two Tribes, did once belong. But being from them taken by Og King of Baſan, and Sehon King of the Amorites, it came by the overthrow of thoſe Kings to the hands of Moſes; by whom aſſigned unto the Tribes of Gad and Reuben for their habitation. Continuing theirs till the fatal period of the Kingdom of Iſrael began to approach; at what time theſe two Tribes with the half Tribe of Manaſſes lying on the Eaſt of Jordan, being carried captive into Aſſyria, by Tiglath Philaſer, the Moabites and Ammonites recovered a great part of their antient dwellings. Of which poſſeſſed till their ſubverſion by the Babylonians. Afterwards this whole Country coming into the hands of the Kings of Syria, had the name of Peræa, for the reaſon formerly delivered. And being won peecemeal by the Maccabeans, came with the reſt of the kingdom of Judah, to the poſſeſſion of Herod the Great; by whom bequeathed at his death unto Herod Antipas one of his ſons, who held it, together with both Galilees, under the name of Tetrarch of Galilee and Peræa, as Joſephus; or of Galilee only, as Saint Luke; who being dead, it was beſtowed on Agrippa King of the Jews, of whom more hereafter.

Ituræa.

ITURÆA.

ITURÆA hath on the East and North, Cœle-Syria; on the West, the River Jordan; and on the South, Peræa. So called from Ietur one of the Sonnes of Ismael, seated in this tract; though lost by his posterity to the Amorites, one of the most powerfull Tribes amongst the Canaanites; and by them made the patrimony of the Kings of Basan. The race of which Kings ending in Og, the wealthiest and best parts hereof, were given by Moses to the half Tribe of Manasses; such parts of it as lay towards Damascus being seized on by the neighbouring Aramites, and made a Kingdom of it self, called the Kingdom of Gessur; and the more mountainous and unpleasant left to the first Inhabitans, as not worth the conquering. But both the Kingdom of Gessur, and those of the half Tribe of Manasses, shifting from one Lord to another, till they came into the hands of the Grecians; the name of Ituræa revived again and grew into very good esteem: the Ituræans being reputed for good Soldiers, especially at the Bow and Arrows; of which thus the Poet in his Georgicks lib. 2.

Of the best Eugh that can be had
The Ituræan Bows are made.

The whole Country in the times of the Greeks and Romans, divided into Trachonitis, and Ituræa specially so called: this last again being subdivided in Batanea, Gaulonitis, Auranitis, and Paneas. For whereas it is said it Saint Lukes Gospel, that Philip the Brother of Herod was Tetrarch of Ituræa, and the Region of Trachonitis; and by Josephus, that for his Tetrarchy he had the Provinces of Trachonitis, Batanea, Gaulonitis, Auranitis, and Paneas: it must needs be that the four last mentioned Provinces make up that one, which by Saint Luke is comprehended in the name of Ituræa; distinct from that of Trachonitis, though a part thereof. Inhabited in the time of Josephus, as in those of Josuah and David, both by Jews and Syrians; the Syrians dwelling in the mountainous, and more barren parts, the Jews in that which was assigned them in the time of Moses: the whole not yeelding unto Galilee for extent of ground, but far inferior to it for wealth and fruitfullness; not well inhabited where best, and in some places which are desart and very barren, hardly inhabited at all, or bearing any thing but wild fruits. Such was it in the time of Josephus, and not bettered since.

1. TRACHONITIS is that mountainous and hilly Countrey, which beginning at the borders of the Ammonites, where the Hills are called the Mountains of Gilead; extendeth it self Northwards as far as Libanus: the Hills in those parts being by the Jews called Galeed, Syrion, and Hermon; but by the Grecians, for the craggedness and roughness of them, by the name of Trachones. The people mischievously bent and much given to witch-craft, as we find in Strabo. Montanam regionem incolunt Ituræi & Arabes, malefici omnes. So he, or his Translator rather, for I have not the original by me. Where by Arabians, he meaneth those of Trachonitis, which every where he maketh to be the same with Ituræa, though differing from it as the Cots-wold Countreys doe from the rest of Glouceſterſhire, or as a part doth from the whole, because united by that name into one estate, at the time he lived in. Solet & Trachonitis Iturææ nomine appellari, saith the learned Grotius, according to the general consent of the antient Writers. A people generally addicted to spoil and robberie, living especially on the spoil of those Merchants which traded to and from Damascus: till with some difficulty restrained to a more orderly life by Herod, on whom Augustus Cæsar had bestowed the Country, to the end that by strong hand he might hold them in.

The People and the Country by Josephus are thus described. "The Trachonites (saith he) have neither towns nor lands, nor heritage, or any other possessions, but only certain retreats and caves under "the ground, where they lived like beasts: and having made abundant provision of water and "victuals, were able to hold out a long time against any assailant. For the doors of their "Caves were made so narrow, that they could be entered but by one at once; and the way "to them not direct, but full of turnings and windings, not possibly to be found out but by "the help of a Guide: The whole Countrey naturally consisting of craggy Rocks. The passages "of the Caves once entred, they were found to be very large and spacious; sufficient to contain "great multitudes of those Theevish people, who when they had not opportunity to spoil their "neighbours, would rob one another, and omitted no kind of wickedness; being so accustomed to theft, that they could not live otherwise. So he. But I conceive this is not meant generally of all the people, but only of some body of theeves or out-laws, which possessed themselves of the streits of the Mountains; and from thence issued to assault and spoil the Passengers. For it is afterwards expressed, that revolting upon the news of Herods death, and cōmitting new out-rages; they no sooner heard of his recovery but they fled the Country, and betook themselves unto a strong Castle in Arabia, where they increased to the number of 1000 persons. So that there is no question to be made at all, but they had had Villages, and Towns, and Lands, and Heritages, in the more civil parts hereof, though not amongst those Mountainers which Josephus speaks of. And amongst those, I reckon, 1. Gerra, 2. Elere, 3. Nelaxa, 4. Adrama; all named by Ptolemy, and all placed by him in the Longitude of 70 degrees, or upwards: more towards the East than well agreeth with the position of this Country, or with any part of Batanea, lying more towards the West than Trachonitis, though to that part of Iturea, by him ascribed. Hither also I refer the City of 5. Tishbe, the Countrey of old Tobit, and of the Prophet Elias, 6. Tob, where Jephta lived in exile, when oppressed by his Brethren, till the necessities of his Countrey called him to the publike government: 7. Hippus, at the foot of those Mountains, reckoned amongst the Cities of Cœle-Syria, differing in soil as well as Etymologie from another of the same name in Batanea: this being so named from the Mountain Hippus under which it standeth; that, from a Garrison of Horse there placed, as shall there be shewn. 8. Bathira, on the borders of this Country towards Batanea, built there by Herod, and planted with a Colonie of the Jews which came thither from Babylon; the better to suppress the insolencies, and prevent the Robberies of this theevish people, accustomed (as before is said) unto spoil and rapine. Iturea.

2. BATANEA is that part of Iturea which antiently made up the best and greatest part of the kingdom of Basan, whence it had this name: the changing of S. to T. as Assyria into Attyria, and the like, being usuall among the Greeks. But that kingdom being brought to an end by Moses, it was given to the half Tribe of Manasses, so called of Manasses the sonne of Joseph; of whom there were found at the first muster near Mount Sinai, 32200 men able to bear armes; which though consumed in the Desarts, yet were they of such a swift increase, that there were found 52700 fighting men of them, when they passed over Jordan. Their Territory on that side of the River, stretching from Jaboc on the South, to the Realm of Gessur on the North; and from the Mountains unto Jordan, East and West, was exceeding fertile: repleniſhed with all sorts of Cattel, and adorned with the goodliest woods in that part of the world; the Oaks of Basan being celebrated in the Holy Scriptures.

It had in it sixty fenced Cities when first conquered by those of this Tribe. The principal of which, 1. Pella, formerly called Butis, but being rebuilt by Seleucus, the Great King of Syria, was by him called Pella; with reference to a City of that name in Macedon, the birth-place of Alexander, to whom Seleucus owed his greatnesse and whole estate. Destroyed by Alexander Jannæus King of the Jews, because not willing to admit of the Law of Moses; it was afterwards restored by Pompey to its former lustre. Memorable in Church-story for the Admonition or premonishment, given by a voice from Heaven, to the Christians dwelling at Hierusalem, to remove thence and dwell at Pella, that so they might escape that destruction, which the Roman Army under Titus was to bring upon it. 2. Edrey, the Seat-Royal of the Kings of Basan. 3. Carnaim, on the banks of Jaboc, taken by Judas Maccabæus, who set fire on the Temple of the Idols there; and burnt therein all such as fled thither for sanctuary. 4. Ephron, a strong City upon Jordan, taken and burnt by the same Judas Maccabæus, for refusing to give a passage to his Army. 5. Jabesh Gilead, more near unto the Mountains, whence it had that Adjunct; memorable in the Scriptures, for the siege of Nabas, king of the Ammonites, the raising of that siege by Saul, and the gratitude of the people towards him again, in taking down, imbalming and intombing the bodies of him and his Sonnes, which the Philistines had most despitefully hanged on the walls of Bethsan. 6. Astaroth, a City of great note in the elder times; the seat of the Rephaims, a Giant-like race of men, of whom descended Og of Basan; from whence the Country adjoyning had the name of the Land of Giants. Astaroth the Godess of the Sidonians had here her worshippers. 7. Gaulon, sometimes possessed by Og of Basan, and afterwards made one of the Cities of Refuge; of such esteem in the times of the Greeks and Romans, that the North part of Basanitis or Batanea was called Gaulonitis; divided into Superior and Inferior, so often mentioned by Josephus. And of this City or Country was that Judas of Galilee, spoken of in the fift of the Acts, the Founder of the Gaulonites, or Anti-Herodians. 8. Gamala, in the Lower Gaulonitis, so called because the Hill upon which it stood was fashioned like the back of a Camel: invincibly situate, strengthned both by Art and Nature; and at the last with so great difficulty and hazard of Vespasians person, stormed by Titus, that the Romans in the heat of the execution, spared neither Women nor Children; insomuch that all the Inhabitants perished, except some few Women which had hid themselves. 9. Gadara, after ten moneths siege, taken and destroyed by Alexander Jannæus King of the Jews; repaired by Pompey, and by Gabinius made one of the five seats of Justice for the whole Country of Palestine: the other four being Hierusalem, Jericho, Hamath, and Sephorah. 10. Gerasa, or Gergesa, the chief City of the Gergesites, the people whereof on the loss of their Swine, intreated our Saviour to depart out of their coasts, as Saint Matthew hath it. Saint Luke, and Saint Mark ascribe it to the people of Gadara. Not that the Cities were both one, or the Evangelists at ods in their Relation; but because they were two neighbouring Cities, and their fields lay in Common pour cause de vicinage, as our Lawyers phrase it: and so the story might be common to both alike. 11. Hippus, not far from the River Jordan, so called from a Garrison of Horse there placed by Herod: not from the Mountain Hippus, as some suppose, which is too far off to have any influence upon it. 12. Iulias, built by Philip the Tetrarch of Iturea, in the Southern border of his estate, in imitation of the like work of Herod the Tetrarch of Galilee and Perea; to ingratiate himself with Julia, the wife of Tiberius Cæsar. 13. Abel, by Josephus called Abel Maacha, for distinctions sake: where Sheba that Grand Rebel besieged by Joab, and the City brought into some danger, had his Iturea. head cut off, and thrown over the wall, at the perſwaſion of a wiſe woman of the Town. So the rebellion ended, and the City was ſaved.

North of Baſanitis, or Batanea, lyeth the kingdom of GESSUR, by a latter name called AURANITIS, from Hauran, a chief City of it, mentioned by the Prophet Ezechiel, chapter 16. 18. A kingdom ſpoken of by Moſes as the Northern bound of the half Tribe of Manaſſes on that ſide of Jordan; Deut. 4. 14. by Joſuah as the Northern border of the kingdom of Baſan, chap. 12. 5. but reckoned as a part of Syria, becauſe held by the Aramites, 2 Sam. 15. 8. A kingdom, though of no great territory, yet of ſome conſideration in the eye of the world: David eſteeming the alliance of the kings hereof of ſome uſe unto him; and therefore marying Maacha the daughter of Tolmui, king of Geſſur, by whom he had Abſalom and Tamar. And to this king it was that Abſolom fled on the killing of Amnon, abiding here three years, as the ſtory telleth us.

Conterminous to this, or at leaſt not very much diſtant from it, was the petit kingdom of Iſh-tob, which ſent 12000 men to the aid of the Ammonites againſt David: and not far off, but more towards Palmyrene, or Aram-Zobah, that of Beth-Rehob, confederate in the ſame war alſo with the other Syrians; mention whereof is made in the ſecond book of Samuel, chap. 10. verſ. 6. Which whether they belonged to Syria, or to thoſe North-parts of Iturea, is of no great certainty, and as little conſequence. For after this their greateſt and laſt exploit we hear no more news of them; ſwallowed up not long after (as it ſeems) by the Kings of Damaſcus.

To return therefore into Geſſur, as more certainly within the limits of Paleſtine, the places of moſt obſervation in it were, 1. Geſſur, then the chief City of it, and giving name unto the whole. 2. Mahacath, of Macuti, as ſome call it: conceived to be that Maacha mentioned 1 Chron. 19. 6. But of this we have already ſpoken in Comagena. 3. Chauran, or Hauran, mentioned by the Prophet Ezekiel chap. 47. whence theſe Northern parts of Paleſtine were called Auranitis. 4. Chatſar-Hevan, there mentioned by that Prophet alſo. 5. Uz, near the borders of Damaſcus, the firſt habitation of Uz the ſonne of Aram and Grandchild of Sem, by whoſe name ſo called: ſuppoſed to be the founder of Damaſcus alſo, and that more probably, than that the Country thereabouts ſhould be the Land of Hus, enobled by the dwelling and ſtory of Job. 6. Sueta, mentioned by Brochardus, and by ſome conceived to be the habitation of Bildad, ſurnamed the Shuchite, one of Iobs three friends, mentioned in that ſtory: but both of him, and Iob himſelf, and the Land of Hus, we ſhall ſpeak more at large when we come to Arabia. More certainly remarkable for a Fort of great ſtrength and uſe, for the commanding of the Country; recovered from the Turks in the time of Baldwin the ſecond, by digging with incredible labour through the very rock upon which it was ſeated.

As for the fortunes of this part, after the Tribes on that ſide of Jordan were led Captive into Aſſyria, and the kingdom of Damaſcus ſubverted by Tiglah-Phalaſſar; it followed the fortune of the Babylonian, and Perſian Empires, together with which it came to the Macedonian kings of the race of Seleucus. In the declining of which houſe it was conquered (or at leaſt the greateſt part thereof) by Alexander the 2 king of the Jews, of the race of the Maccabes; but loſt again for the moſt part in the time of Hircanus the ſon of Alexander; yet afterwards made up the greateſt part of the kingdom of Chalcis; poſſeſſed by Ptolemy the ſon of Mennæus, in the beginning of Herods greatneſs: who dying, left it to Lyſanias his eldeſt ſon, murdered about ſeven years after by Marc. Antonie, on the ſuggeſtions of Cleopatra, who preſently ſeized on his eſtates. But Antonie and Cleopatra having left the Stage, Lyſanias a ſon of the murdered Prince entreth next upon it, by the permiſſion of Auguſtus. During whoſe time Zenodorus, Lord of the Town and territory of Paneas, farming his demeſnes, and paying a very great rent for them, not only ſuffered the Trachonites to play the Robbers, and infeſt the Merchants of Damaſcus; but received part of the booty with them. Auguſtus, on complaint hereof, giveth the whole Country of Trachonites, Batanea, Gaulonitis, and Auranitis, to Herod the Aſcalonite, before created King of Jewrie; that by his puiſſance and power he might quell thoſe Robbers, and reduce the Country into order: Leaving unto Lyſanias nothing but the City of Abila, (of which he was the natural Lord) whereof and of the adjoyning territory, he was afterwards created Tetrarch, by the name of the Tetrarch of Abilene, mentioned Luke 3. Nor did Herods good fortune end in this. For preſently on the death of Zenodorus, not long after following, Auguſtus gave him alſo the diſtrict of Paneas (of which we ſhall ſpeak more when we come to Galilee) which with the Countries formerly taken from Lyſanias, made up the Tetrarchie of Philip his youngeſt Son; affording him the yearly Revenue of 100 Talents, which make 37500 l. of Engliſh money. On Philips death, his Tetrarchy was by Caius Caligula, conferred on Agrippa the Nephew of Herod by his ſon Ariſtobulus; whom he had alſo dignified with the title of King; after whoſe death, and the death of Agrippa Minor, who next ſucceeded, his eſtates eſcheated to the Romans, and have ſince had the ſame fortune with the reſt of Paleſtine.

5. GALILEE.

GALILEE is bounded on the East, with Batanea, and part of the half Tribe of Manasses on that side of Jordan; on the West, with the Sea-coast of Phœnicia, on the Mediterranean; on the North, with Anti-Libanus; on the South, with Samaria. So called, as some say, from Geliloth a Phœnician word, signifying as much as borders; because the bordering Country betwixt them and the Jews.

The Country not so large as that on the other side of the River, but far more fertile; naturally fertile of it self, every where producing excellent fruits without much pains to the Husbandman, and so well cultivated in old times, that there was hardly any waste ground to be found in it. Thick set with Cities, Towns, and Villages in the time of Josephus, and those so populous and rich, that the smallest Village in it is affirmed by that Author, to comprehend no fewer than 15000 Inhabitans. A number beyond all parallel if reported rightly, and not mistaken in the transcripts. The people from their childhood very stout and warlike, not daunted for fear of want, or dread of penury: which seconded by their vast, and almost incredible numbers, made them experimentally known for a tough peece of employment, when subdued by Titus. And this, together with their zeal to the Jewish Religion, makes it more than probable, that there was something in them of the antient Israelite, and that they were not meerly of an Assyrian, either stock or spirit; but intermixt with such remainders of the Tribes as had saved themselves, either by flying to the Mountains, or hiding themselves in Caves and Desarts, or otherwise were inconsiderable for strength and numbers; in the great transplantation of them made by Salmanasser. And in this I am the more confirmed by their speech or language, which was the same with that of the natural Jews, differing no otherwise from it than in tone, and dialect; as our Northern English doth from that which is spoke in London: as appeareth by the communication which the Damosel had with St. Peter, in the High-Priests Hall; in which she plainly understood him, but so, that she pronounced him for a Galilean. For had the Transplantation been so universal, as some think it was, and that both sick and sound, old and young had been carried away, and none but Colonies of the Assyrians to fill up their places; it must needs be that those New-comers would have planted their own language there; as the Saxons did on the extirpation of the Britans, on this side of the Severn. The like may be affirmed of the other Tribes on this side of Jordan, especially Simeon and Dan, which either bordering upon Judah, or having their lands and Cities intermingled with it, continued in great numbers in their former dwellings, under the Patronage or subjection of the Kings thereof.

Divided it was antiently into the Higher and the Lower. The Higher so called from its situation more amongst the Mountains, had also the name of Galilea Gentium, or Galilee of the Gentiles. And that either because it lay betwixt the Gentiles and the rest of the Jews; or because a great part of it had been given by Solomon to the Kings of Tyre. But for what cause soever it was called so first, certain it is, it held this name unto the last; known by it in the time of the Apostles, as appeareth by Saint Matthews Gospel, Chap. 4. v. 15. The Lower Galilee is situate on the South of the other, memorable for the birth and Education of our blessed Saviour; whom Julian the Apostata called, for this cause, in scorn, the Galilean: as for the same, the Disciples generally had the name of Galileans imposed upon them, till that of Christian, (being a name of their own choosing) did in fine prevail. Both, or the greatest part of both, known in the New Testament by the name of Decapolis, or Regio Decapolitana, mentioned Mat. 4. 25. Mark 7. 31. So called from the ten principal Cities of it, that is to say, 1. Cæsarea Philippi, 2. Aser, 3. Cedes-Nepthalim, 4. Sephet, 5. Chorazim, 6. Capernaum, 7. Bethsaida, 8. Jotopata, 9. Tiberias, and 10. Scythopolis. By which accompt it stretched from the Mediterranean to the head of Jordan, East and West; and from Libanus to the hills of Gilboa, North and South; which might make up a square of forty miles. With reference to the Tribes of Israel, the whole Galilee was so disposed of, that Aser, Nephthali, and a part of the tribe of Dan, had their habitation in the Higher; Zabulun, and Issachar in the Lower: according to which distribution we will now describe them.

1. The Tribe of NAPHTHALI, was so called from NAPHTHALI the sixt son of Jacob, begotten on Bilhah the handmaid of Rachel; of whom at their first muster were found 53400 fighting men, and at the second 44540 able to bear arms. The land alotted to them lay on the West-side of the River Jordan, opposite unto the Northern parts of Iturea; where before we left: having on the West, the Tribe of Aser, and that of Zabulun on the South. Within which tract were certain Cities which they never conquered; and one which appertained to the tribe of Dan: the chief of those which were with-holden by the Gentiles, being Chalcis, Abila, Heliopolis, Cities accompted of as belonging to Cœle-Syria; where they have been spoken of already.

That which did appertain to the Tribe of DAN, lay on the North-east part hereof, confronting the most Northern parts of Iturea, as before was said; where the Danites held one Town of moment, besides many others of less note. And it seemed destined to this Tribe by some old presage; the Eastern fountain of Jordan (which hath its originall in this tract) being called Dan, at the time of the defeat which Abraham gave to Cherdorlaomer and his Associates, hundreds of years before this Tribe had ever a possession in it. Of which see Gen. 14. v. 14. The Town of moment first called Leshem, by some Writers, Laish: afterwards subject or allied to the Kings of Sidon, and upon strength thereof made good against those Galilee. those of Naphthali, but taken by some Adventurers of the Tribe of Dan. Of whom it is said Josuah 19. 47. That finding their own Country too little for them, they went up and fought against Leshem, which they took, and called D A N. Accompted after this exploit, the utmost bound Northward of the Land of Canaan, the length thereof being measured from Dan in the North, unto Beersheba in the South: remarkable for one of the Golden Calves which was placed here by Ieroboam, and for the two spring-heads of Iordan, rising near unto it. When conquered by the Romans, it was called Paneas, from a fountain adjoining of that name: which, with the Territory about it, after the death of Zenodorus, who held it of the Roman Empire, as before is said, was given by Augustus Cæsar unto Herod the Great; and by him at his decease to Philip his youngest Sonne, with the Tetrarchy of Ituræa and Trachonitis. By him repaired and beautified, it was called Cæsarea Philippi, partly to curry favour with Tiberius Cæsar; partly to preserve the memory of his own name; and partly to distinguish it from another Cæsarea situate on the shore of the Mediterranean, and called Cæsarea Palestinæ: and being so repaired by him, it was made the Metropolis of that Tetrarchy. Mentioned by that name Mat. 16. 13. when Saint Peter made that confession or acknowledgement of his Lord and Master, That he was C H R I S T the Sonne of the living God. By King Agryppa, who succeeded him in his estates, in honor of the Emperor Nero, it was called Neronia. But that, and the Adjunct of Philippi, were of no continuance: the Town being called Cæsarea Paneæ in the time of Ptolemy; and simply Paneas, as before, in the time of Saint Hierome. Of this Cæsarea was that woman whom our Saviour cured of the bloody Flux, by touching but the hem of his garment: who in a pious gratitude of so great a mercy, erected two Statuaes in this place, representing C H R I S T, and her self kneeling at his feet; remaining here entire till the time of Julian the Apostata, by whose command it was cast down, and a Statua of his own set up in the place thereof, miraculously destroyed by a fire from Heaven. The City being at that time, and long time before, an Episcopall See. Of less note there were, 1. Haleb, and 2. Reccath, both situate in the confines of it. And not far off the strong Town and Castle of 3. Magdala, (the habitation as some say of Mary Magdalen) where the Pharisees desired a Sign of our Saviour C H R I S T, as is said Mat. 15. 39. 16. 1. the same, or some place near unto it, being by Saint Mark (reporting the same part of the Story) called Dalmanutha. Chap. 8. 10, 11. But whether this Castle did antiently belong to these Danites, or to those of Naphthali, or to the Half Tribe of Manasses beyond the River, I am not able to determine.

Of those which were in the possession of the Tribe of N A P H T H A L I, the Cities of most eminent observation were, 1. Hazor, or Azor, by Junius and Tremelius called Chatzar, the Regal City and Metropolis of all the Canaanites: memorable for the Rendez-vous of 24 Canaanitish Kings in the War with Josuah; by whom it was taken notwithstanding, and burnt to ashes. But being afterwards re-built it became the Regal Seat of Jabin the King of the Canaanites, who so grievously for the space of 20 years, afflicted Israel; till vanquished by Deborah and Barak. Destroyed in that war, and repaired by Solomon, it continued in so good estate in our Saviours time, that it was then one of the ten Cities of Decapolis: in being still, but known by the name of Antiopia. 2. Capernaum, seated on the River Jordan, where it falleth into the Sea of Galilee; of which Country it was accompted the Metropolis, in the time of our Saviour, with whose presence and preaching often honoured, and one of the principal of the Decapolitans. Some marks of its former greatness it retained when Saint Hierome lived, who confesseth it to be a Town of some good capacity; but so decayed in the time of Breidenbech and Brochardus, that it consisted but of six poor Fishermens Houses. 3. Hamath, so called from Hamathi the Son of Canaan, planted in these parts; a Town of such esteem in the elder times, that it was reckoned one of the Gates of the Land of Canaan; and therefore called in Scripture, introitum Hamath, or the entrance of Hamath; as Numbers 34. 8. Jos. 13. 5. Judg. 3. 3. &c. Mistaken by Saint Hierome for another of the same name in Syria, by the Greeks and Romans after them, called Epiphania. And in this I say he is mistaken; Epiphania being placed by Ptolemy two degrees more Eastward than Cæsarea Philippi, the most Eastern City of all Galilee; and two degrees more North than that, though the the most Northern City of all Palestine. The ground of this mistake we have seen before. Won by the Syrians of Damascus, it was again recovered to the Crown of Israel, by Jerboam the second the Son of Joas: and after added by the Romans (as were Scythopolis, Pella, Gadara, and some other of the Cities of this tract) unto Cœle-Syria. 4. Kadesh, to difference it from others of the same name, called Kadesh-Naphthalim, high seated on the top of an Hill, as is said Jos. 20. 7. the King whereof being taken and slain by Josuah, it was made one of the Cities of Refuge, and given to the Levites. Most memorable for the birth of Barac, who discomfited Sisera, Lieutenant of the Host of Jabin before mentioned, in the infancy of the Jewish State; one of the ten Cities of Decapolis, in the time of the Romans; and an Episcopal See in the first ages of Christianity. 5. Riblah, watered with the fountain of Daphnis, a little Riveret, which hereabouts falleth into Jordan: to which City, as some say (but I think erroneously) Zedechias the unfortunate King of the Jews was brought Prisoner unto Nebuchadnezzar, who caused his Children to be slain before his face, and then put out his eyes. But this I look on as an Error in them that say it, the scæne of this sad Tragedy being by Josephus laid in Riblatha (or Riblah) a City of Syria; the same which in succeeding times had the name of Antioch. And certainly Josephus, who for so long was governour of both the Galilees, cannot be conceived to be so ignorant of the State of this Province, as to transfer that bloody execution to a City of Syria, if it had been acted in this Country. Nor can I think that this Riblah, none of the greatest Towns in the Tribe of Naphthali, should be capable of the Court and train of that mighty Monarch; especially for so long a time, as he is said to have attended in that place, the success of his forces then before Hierusalem, and the disposal of the State when the Town was taken. 6. Saphet, another of the Decapolitan Cities, strongly if not impregnably seated; one of the strongest Fortresses of the Western Christians, as it was after their expulsion, of the Turks and Saracens; who from hence wasted and subdued all the neighbouring Country, as far as to the very Sea. The only place, not of this Country only, but of all the East, in which the Jews (who possessed a third part of this Town) have any shew or shadow of a Comuon-wealth. 7. Bethsomes, mentioned Ios. 15. 38. made tributary unto those of this Tribe; though otherwise possessed by the Cananites who held out against them. 8. Carthan, or Kiriathaim situate near the Mountain which in following times was called Moas Christi, because much frequented by our Saviour; who here made choise of his Apostles, as is said Mark 3. 13. and where he also made that Divine Sermon, recited in the 5, 6, & 7 Chapters of Saint Matthews Gospel. 9. Masoloth, a place of great strength, but forced by Baccludes General of the Armies of the Kings of Syria, in the time of the Maccabees. 10. Cinnereth, a strong City, after called Gennesareth; whence the Lake or Sea of Tiberias, neighbouring near unto it, is sometimes called the Lake of Gennesareth, as Luke. 5. 1. &c.

2. The Tribe of ASER, was so called from Aser, the 8th. son of Iacob, begotten on Zilphah the hand-maid of Leah: of whom at their first muster when they came out of Egypt, were found 41500 persons, able to bear Arms, all above 20 years of age; and at the second muster when they entred the Land of Canaan, 53400 fighting men of the new increase. The portion of the Land allotted for their habitation was plentifull in wine, oyl, and wheat, with great store of Balsam; extending from the Coast of Sidon, to Ptolemais, 30 miles in length; and from the Mediterranean Eastward, to the Tribe of Naphthali, some twelve miles in breadth. And though they never were of power to reduce the maritime Cities of Ptolemais, Tyre, Sarepta, and Sidon, under their command: yet had they in this narrow compass many beautifull Cities, and Towns of note; which they were quietly possessed of, till their subjugation by the Kings of Assyria.

The principal of those, and others which have since been founded, 1. Aphek, memorable for the great slaughter there made of the Syrians, when besieged by Benhadad: of whom 100000 were slain by the Israelites under the leading of Ahab, and 27000 killed by the fall of the Wall. 2. Gabala mentioned by Ptolemy amongst the mid-land Cities of Phœnicia; but belonging properly to this Tribe; one of those twenty which were offered by Solomon unto Hiram, and upon his refusal peopled by the Israelites. Fallen to decay, it was afterwards re-built and strongly fortified by Herod the Great. 3. Giscala, a Town of great strength and consequence; the birth-place of Iohn or Iehochanan, one of the three seditious in Hierusalem when besieged by Titus, where he did more mischef than the Enemy. Attempting to betray this City to the power of the Romans, he gave the Tyrians an opportunity to be Masters of it, by whom it was burnt unto the ground. But being re-built by the Authority of Iosephus, then Governor of Galilee for the Iews, it was afterwards yielded to Titus upon composition. 4. Cana, for distinction sake called Cana-Major, to difference it from another of that name in the Lower Galilee, affirmed for the dwelling of that woman, whose Daughter, Christ delivered of an evil Spirit: called by Saint Matthew a woman of Canaan, Chapter 15. a Syro-Phœnician by Saint Mark, Chap. 7. the Syro-Phœnicians of this Tract, being originally of the race of Canaan, as was said before. 5. Hethlan, or Cethlan, the furthest City of the North; as 6. Messal, or Masheal, to the South, of the Tribe of Aser. Of later date there are 7. Thoron, a strong piece built by the Christians on the Hills near Tyre, to hinder the excursions of the Turks, when they held that City. Situate in a pleasant and fruitfull Soil, of great importance in the wars of the Holy Land, and giving name to the noble family of the Lords of Thoron: one of which being Constable to King Baldwin the third, lyeth buried in the Chapel adjoining to it; a curious piece of work-manship, and Dedicated by the name of the blessed Virgin. 8. Belfort, so named from the strength and beauty of it, seated on the high grounds near the River Naar: and memorable for the great repulse which Saladine the Victorious King of the Turks received before it; being forced to raise his siege with dishononor and loss, on the comming of the Christian Armies. Some other Forts here are of the same erection, as 9. Montfort, and 10. Mount-Royall (or Castrum Regium) belonging to the Dutch Knights (of whom more hereafter) and by them valiantly defended against the Infidels.

3. The Tribe of ZABULON, was so called from Zabulon the tenth Son of Jacob by his Wife Leah: of whom there mustered near Mount Sinai, 57400 able men; and 65000 at their second muster, when they came into Canaan. Their Teritory lay on the South of Aser and Nephthalim, and the North of Zabulon; extending from the Lake of Tiberias, to the Mediterranean.

Places of most observation in it, 1. Jokneham, the King whereof was slain by Josuah, and the City given unto the Levites. 2. Zabulon, or the City of men, a stately and magnificent City, till burnt to the ground by Cestius, a Roman President. 3. Cana-Minor, so called to difference it from the other in the Tribe of Aser, the birth-place of Nathaneel, and as some say of Simon Zelotes: memorable for the mariage, at which our Saviour wrought his first miracle, of turning water into wine. Called in St. Johns Gospel Cana of Galilee. 4. Bersabe, standing in the border betwixt both Galilees, and therefore strongly fortified by Josephus against the Romans. 5. Dothan, where Joseph found his brethren as they fed their flocks; and where the Prophet Elisha strook blind the Syrians, who besieged him in it. 6. Bethsaida, situate on the Sea of Galilee, one of the ten Cities of Decapolis, the birth-

Galilee. place of Peter, Andrew, and Philip; but moſt renowned for the miracles and preaching of our Lord and Saviour. 7. Nazareth, now a ſmall village, ſeated in a vale betwixt two hills, not far from Ptolemais or Acon; upon one of which two hills it was formerly built; where ſtill are to be ſeen the ruins of many Churches, here founded by the Chriſtians; it being in the flouriſhing times of Chriſtianity, an Arch-biſhops See. Of great eſteem, for being, if not the birth-place, yet the habitation of the Virgin Mary; who was here ſaluted with thoſe joyfull tidings by an Angel, as ſhe ſate in her chamber. Of which Chamber it is ſaid in the Popiſh legends, that it was after the Virgins death had in great reverence by the Chriſtians; and remained in this Town, till the Holy Land was ſubdued by the Turks and Saracens, Anno 1291. Then moſt miraculouſly tranſported into Sclavonia; but that place being unworthy of the Virgins Divine preſence, it was by the Angels carried over into the Sea-coaſt of Italy, Anno 1294. That place alſo being infeſted with theeves and pyrats, the Angels removed it to the little Village of Loretto, where her miracles were quickly divulged: inſomuch that Paul the 2d. built a moſt ſtately Church over this Chamber, and Xiſtus the fift made the Village a City. And thus we have the beginning of our famous Lady of Loretto. Here did our bleſſed Saviour ſpend a great part of his life before his Baptiſm; from whence both he and his Diſciples had for many years, the name of Nazarites. 8. Iotopata, ſtrongly ſeated on the top of a Mountain, near the Lake of Genneſareth; fortified by Joſephus in the war with the Romans, but after a long ſiege taken by Veſpaſian, and in it Joſephus the Hiſtorian, Chief Governor of the City, and of both the Galilees. 9. Tiberias, raiſed out of the ground by Herod the Tetrarch, and named thus in honor of Tiberius Cæſar. Situate in a fruitfull ſoil, on the edge of the Lake, which afterwards took the name of the Lake or Sea of Tiberias: this City being held to be the greateſt of the Lower Galilee, and the Metropolis of the Decapolitan Region. In this City it was that our Saviour CHRIST called Saint Matthew from the receipts of the Cuſtome-houſe; and near unto it that he raiſed the Daughter of Jairus. 10. Bethulia, more within the Land, ſeated on an high Hill, and of very great ſtrength, as appears by the ſtory of Judith and Holofernes. 11. Iapha, a place of like ſtrength, but forced by Titus; who in the fury of the ſtorm ſlew in it above 15000 perſons, and carried away with him 2000 Priſoners. 12. Sephoris or Sipphora, the habitation of Ioachim and Anna, the Parents of the bleſſed Virgin; fortified with ſtrong walls by Herod the Tetrach, who made it his Regal Seat for the Lower Galilee. Before that time, it had been made by Gabinius, one of the five Iuridical Reſorts for the Paleſtinians: after that, not without great difficulty forced by Veſpaſian; and is nothing now but a Caſtle known by the name of Zaphet, or Saffet. The ordinary Reſidence, for the moſt part, of the Turkiſh Sanziack who hath the Government of this Province; and lately, if not ſtill, of the Emirs of Sidon; Faccardine the late Emir having been made the Sanziack of it, before his falling off from the Turks. Not far off is Mount Tabor, famous for the transfiguration of our Saviour; for a ſumptuous Chapel built on the top of the hill in memory of it, by the Empreſs Helen, mother of Conſtantine the Great: and for the Fountain of the brook Chiſon, which preſently divided into two ſtreams, runneth Eaſtward with the one to the Sea of Tiberias; and Weſtward with the other to the Mediterranean.

4. The Tribe of ISSACHAR is ſo called from Iſſachar the ninth ſon of Iacob, by his wife Leah, of whom were found at the firſt muſter 54400 fighting men, and 64300 at the ſecond muſter. Their lot, in the partition of the land amongſt the Tribes, fell betwixt Zabulon, and the Half Tribe of Manaſſes on this ſide Iordan, North and South; extending from that River to the Mid-land Sea. A territory not ſo well repleniſhed with ſtrong and eminent Cities, as was that before; nor yielding ſo much matter of obſervation in the courſe of buſineſs.

Thoſe of moſt note in it, 1. Tarichæa, on the ſide of the Lake, about eight miles from Tiberias, of great ſtrength both by Art and Nature; as witneſſed the notable refidence which Veſpaſian found when he beſieged it, by whom taken with great difficulty and incredible ſlaughter. 2. Ciſhion, a City of the Levites. 3. Remeth, called alſo Iarmuth, an other Cty of the Levites; where the Hills of Gilboa take beginning, and thence range as far as the Mediterranean Weſtward, and the City of Iezreel towards the Eaſt. 4. En-hadda, near which Saul being diſcomfited by the Philiſtims, ſlew himſelf for grief; or elſe for fear of falling into the hands of thoſe mercileſs Enemies, againſt whom he had ſo often returned victorious. 5. Naim, on the Banks of the River Chiſon, where CHRIST raiſed to life the Widdows Son. 6. Hapharaim, or Aphraim, on the banks of the ſame River alſo. 7. Endor, of chief note for the Witch with whom Saul conſulted; and the diſcomfiture of the Midianites by Gideon, who periſhed at Endor, and became as the Dung of the Earth, ſaith the Royal Pſalmiſt. 8. Dabarath, one of the Cities of refuge. 9. Arbela, not far from the Cave of the two Theeves, which ſo greatly infeſted Galilee in the time of Herod. And 10. of a later date the Caſtle of Pilgrims (Caſtrum Peregrinorum in Latine Writers) built by Raymond Earl of Tholouſe, and after fortified by the Templers, for the ſecurity of ſuch as travelled to the Holy Land; and for long time the Magazine or Store-houſe of the Weſtern Chriſtians: now called Tortora. Situate on the ſhores of the Mediterranean near a ſpacious bay; on the North-ſide whereof Mount Carmel, deſcribed already.

As for thoſe Galileans which ſucceeded in the place of theſe Tribes, they were for the moſt part originally ſuch as were ſent hither by Salmanaſſar to inhabit there, when the Iſraelites were led away into endleſs thraldome; but intermixed with ſome Remainders of the ten Tribes, as was ſaid before. And yet as if they had been wholly of the ſame extraction, with the reſt of the Samaritan Nations, they were as much deſpiſed as the Jews, (as witneſſeth that ſcornfull by-word, Can there any good come out of Galilee?) as the others were: though theſe as Orthodox in Religion as the Jews themſelves.

In

In which ſo zealouſly affected, that neither threats nor force could make them offer ſacrifice for the health of the Roman Emperors; whom they looked on as the enemies of their Law and liberty. Brought under the command of the King of Iewry by the Maccabeans, and with the reſt of that Kingdome beſtowed on Herod by the Romans. Left by him at his death to Herod, ſurnamed Antipas, the ſecond of his ſons then living, with the Title of Tetrarch, which he enjoyed till the death of our Saviour: and on his deprivation (being baniſhed to Lyons in France by the Emperor Caligula) beſtowed upon Agrippa his Brothers ſon, the firſt King of the Iews ſo named. Under him and his ſon Agrippa the ſecond, it continued till the general revolt of the Jewiſh Nation. Subjected by the ſword of Titus to the power of the Romans, it hath ſince followed the ſame fortune with the reſt of Paleſtine. Samaria.

4. SAMARIA.

SAMARIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with the River Jordan; on the Weſt, with the Mediterranean Sea; on the North, with Galilee; and on the South, with Judæa. So called from Samaria, the chief City of it, of which more hereafter.

The Country interchangeably compoſed of Fields and Mountains, excellent good for tillage, and full of trees, yielding variety of fruits: watered both with the dew of Heaven, and many freſh ſprings which the Earth affordeth it; occaſioning thereby abundance of graſs, and conſequently of Milch-beaſts exceeding plenty. Heretofore very wealthy, and no leſs populous, but now famed for neither.

The people for the moſt part, were originally the deſcendents of thoſe Aſſyrians, whom Salmanaſſar ſent hither to poſſeſs the dwellings of the Captive Iſraelites. Gentiles at firſt, till better inſtructed by the Lions whom God ſent amongſt them, and after by the Prieſts ſent hither by the Kings of Aſſyria; they entertained the five Books of Moſes, and out of them learned the manner of the God of the Land, 2 Kin. 17. Further than this they would not go, rejecting all the reſt of the ſacred Canon; and no ſtrict obſervers of this neither. And though at firſt they ſo embraced the worſhip of God, as that they ſtill adhered to the Gods of the Nations, where before they dwelt, as Nergal, Aſhimah, Nibhan, Tartak, and the reſt of that rabble, mentioned 2 Kings 17: yet they were ſoon taken off from thoſe impieties, and became zealous in the worſhip of one only God; erronious chiefly in the place which was deſtined to it. The wicked policy of Jeroboam the Son of Nebat, was as natural to them, as if they could not have poſſeſſed his eſtates without it: and therefore would not ſuffer their people to go up to Hieruſalem to worſhip, as the Law required. More pious in this than their Predeceſſors, that they erected no Golden Calves in Dan, and Bethel, or any other parts of their Dominions: though to divert the people from the Temple of God, they would have a Temple of their own. Mount Garizim, and the Temple there (of which more anon) as ſacred unto them, as that of Solomon to the Jews. Schiſmatical enough in this, but not idolatrous and Schiſmatical too, as the others were; yet ſo conceited of themſelves, and their own perfections, that they imagined themſelves defiled by any company but their own. If therefore they had viſited any of their neighbour Nations, at their return, they uſed to ſprinkle themſelves with urine: but if by negligence, or the neceſſity of buſineſs, they had touched any not of their own Sect, they drenched themſelves, cloaths and all, in the next fountain. But in this the Jews cryed quittance with them, not ſo much as eating or drinking with them, nor having with them any kind of commerce or dealing, as appeareth John 4. 9. but loading them, on the other ſide, with all the bitterneſs of reproach and hatred. There are two manner of people (ſaith the Son of Sirach) which mine heart abhorreth, and the third is no people: they that ſit on the Mountains of Samaria, the Philiſtims, and the fooliſh people that dwell at Sichem. Eccluſ. 50. And this continued to the times of our bleſſed Saviour; whom when the Jews endeavoured to reproach with their heavieſt calumnies, they could find out none ſo great, as to ſay that he was a Samaritan, and (which they thought came all to one) a man that had converſe with Devils and familiar ſpirits.

Of theſe there were ſome Sects alſo as amongſt the Jews, 1. The Doſitheans, ſo called from Doſitheus or Doſthai, ſuppoſed to be the firſt Prieſt who was ſent thither by the King of Aſſyria: agreeing with the Jews in Circumciſion, and the Sabbath, and the doctrine of the Reſurrection (in which laſt they differed from the common Samaritan, who was a Saducee in that point) but differing from them in ſome points of as ſignal conſequence. For they rejected the writings of all the Prophets, as not θεοπνευστοι, inſpired by the holy Ghoſt; they ate of nothing that had life, like the Pythagoreans; abſtained from mariage, like the Eſſenes; and in the point of Sabbath-keeping out-went the Phariſees; it being reſolved upon amongſt them, that in what poſture ſoever a man was found on the Sabbath-day-morning, in the ſame he was to continue without alteration the whole day after. 2. The Sebvians, ſo called from Sebva or Sebviah one of the Companions of that Doſthai; who though they kept all the publike Feſtivals, as the Jews and the other Samaritans did, yet they kept them not at the ſame time: transferring the Paſſeover to Auguſt, the Pentecoſt to Autumn, and the feaſt of Tabernacles to the time of the Paſſeover; not ſuffered for that cauſe to worſhip in the Temple of Garizim. 3. The Gortheni, who kept the ſame Feſtivals, and obſerved the ſame times of thoſe Solemnities, as the Law required; but kept only one of the ſeven days of thoſe great Samaria. great Festivals, and laid by the rest, as dayes of ordinary labour. In other points not differing from the other Samaritans, who though at first possessed of all the land belonging to the ten Tribes of Israel, were yet reduced at last to a narrower compass: shut up betwixt Galilee and Judæa, within the antient territories of the Tribe of Ephraim, and the other half Tribe of Manasses, on this side of the water.

1. The half Tribe of MANASSES on this side of Jordan, was situate betwixt Issachar on the North, and the Tribe of Ephraim on the South, extending from the Mediteranean, to the banks banks of that River. In which the places of most consequence and consideration, 1. Beth-san, environed almost with the land of Issachar, situate near the banks of Jordan, where it beginneth again to streighten and be like it self, having been almost lost in the Sea of Galilee: first called Nysa, and so called by Bacchus or Liber Pater the founder of it, in memory of his Nurse there buried; but the children of Manasses not being able to expell the natives out of it, as in other places, gave it the name of Beth-san, or the house of an Enemy. Afterwards when the Scythians invaded those parts of Asia, and compelled some of the Jews to serve them against the rest (whom notwithstanding their good service they put all to the sword) they new-built this City: called therfore by the Grecians, Scythopolis, or the City of Scythians; and by them reckoned as a City of Cœle-Cyria. Memorable in the old Testament for the hanging of the dead bodies of Saul and his Sons on the walls hereof, by the barbarous Philistims; in the time of our Saviour for being the greatest of all the Decapolitan Region; as afterwards in the flourishing times of Christianity, for being the See of an Arch-bishop: now nothing but a desolate village, and an heap of rubbish, out of which many goodly Pillars, and other pieces of excellent Marble are often digged. 2. Terzah, used by the Kings of Israel for their Regal Seat; till the building of Samaria, and the Removal of it thither. 3. Acrabata, the Territory whereof called Acrabatena, was afterwards made one of the ten Toparchies of Judæa. 4. Thebes, not far from Samaria, where the Bastard Abimilech was wounded with a Stone which a woman threw at him from the Wall; and perceiving his death to be drawing on, commanded his Page to slay him, that it might not be said he perished by the hands of a Woman. 5. Ephra, or Hophra, in which Gideon dwelt: near whereunto there stood an Altar, consecrated to Baal, defaced by Gideon; and not far off, the fatal Stone on which Abimilech slew 70 of his Brethren. An heathenish cruelty, and at this day practised amongst the Turks. 6. Asophon, an ignoble Village, made famous only for the great and notable defeat which Ptolemy Lathurus here gave to Alexander the King of the Jews: which victory he used with so great barbarity, that he slew all the Women as he passed along, and caused young Children to be sod in Caldrons. 7. Bezek, the City of the bloody Tyrant Adoni-Bezeck, whose story (touched upon before) see at large in Judges Chap. 1. By Josephus it is called Bala; and seemeth to be the place in which Saul assembled the chief strength of Israel and Judah, to the number of 33000 men, for the relief of Jabesh Gilead then distressed by the Ammonites. 8. Jezreel, the Royal City of Ahab, and the Kings of his race, situate on the foot of the Mountains of Gilboa; So near unto the borders of Issachar, that some have placed it in that Tribe. Memorable in sacred story for the stoning of Naboth by the procurement of Iezabel; and the breaking of Iezabels neck, by command of Jehu. A City which gave name to the plains adjoining, called the valley or Plains of Jezreel, (but by the name of Campus Magnus in the Book of Maccabees, lib. 1. cap. 12.) extending from Scythopolis to the Mediterranean: famous for the great and many battels which have been fought in it, as namely of Gideon against the Midianites, of Saul against the Philistims, of Ahab against the Syrians, of Jehu against Jehoram, and finally of the Christians against the Saracens. 9. Megiddo, unfortunately observable for the death of the good King Iosiah, slain hereabouts in a battel against Pharoah Neco, King of Egypt; and before that, of Ahaziah King of Judah, who received his death-wound at Gaber, a Town adjoining: when pursued by Iehu. 10. Dora, or Dor, as the Scripture calls it, on the Mediterranean, not far from the Castle of Pilgrims in the Tribe of Issachar. A very strong and powerfull City, and therefore chose by Tryphon for his City of Refuge, who having first treacherously taken, and barbarously murdered Ionathan the Maccabean, after he had received 200 talents for his Ransome; and no less villanously slain Antiochus the sixt of Syria, his Lord aud Master, whom he succeeded in his Throne: was by Antiochus the seaventh, with an Army of 120000 foot, and 8000 horse, besieged in this City, and most deservedly put to death. 11 Cæsarea, antiently called the Tower of Straton, from Straton a King of the Zidonians; new built by Herod, and by him not only beautified with a large Theatre and Amphitheatre, both of polished Marble, with a fair and capacious haven, which with incredible charge and pains he forced out of the Sea. And having in twelve years brought it to perfection, in honor of Drusus Cæsar, Son-in-law of Augustus, he caused one of the chief Towers thereof to be called Drusus; the City it self to be called Cæsarea Palestina. The stateliness and magnificence of which City (when first built by Herod) he that lists to see, may find the same described at large by Iosephus the Iew, in the 15th Book of Antiq. cap. 13. In this City was Cornelius baptised by St. Peter; Here did St. Paul plead in defence of Christianity, before Festus then the Roman President; and finally, here Herod Agrippa was smitten by an Angel, and devoured by worms, after his Rhetorical Oration, which his Parasites called the voice of God and not of man. The Metropolis of all Palestine, when one Province only; as afterwards of Palestina Prima, when by Constantine, or some of his Successors, cantoned into three: the first Bishop hereof being said to be that Cornelius, whom Saint Peter here initiated in the faith of CHRIST. 12. Antipatris, another City of Herods rods building, in the place where Kapharſalama, mentioned 1 Maccab. 7. 31. had ſometimes ſtood, who in honour of his Father Antipater, gave it this new name. Near hereunto did Judas Maccabæus overthrow a part of Nicanors Army: and not far off, the Mountain where Abdia, the Steward of Ahab, hid the hundred Prophets, whom he preſerved againſt the fury of Jezebel: Finally to this City it was that Saint Paul was conveyed by the command of Lyſias, to ſave him from the Iews, who lay in wait to deſtroy him. Samaria.

2. The Tribe of EPHRAIM was ſo called from Ephraim, the ſecond and youngeſt Sonne of Joſeph; of whom were muſtered in the Deſarts 45000 fighting men, and 32500 in the Land of Canaan: where their lot fell betwixt this half Tribe of Manaſſes, on the North; and the Tribes of Dan and Benjamin, upon the South; extending from the River Jordan, to the Mediterranean.

Places of moſt conſideration, 1. Saron, on the Mediterranean, to the South of Antipatris, mentioned Acts 9. 35. and giving name unto that fruitfull Valley, which reacheth from Cæſarea Pateſtinæ, as far as Joppa. 2. Lydda, upon the ſame ſhores, where Saint Peter (virtute Chriſti, non ſua) cured Æneas of the Palſey. By the Gentiles it was called Dioſpolis, or the City of Jupiter; but by the Chriſtians in the time of the holy wars, it had the name of Saint Georges: partly from a Magnificent Temple which the Emperour Iuſtinian there erected to the honour of that bleſſed Martyr; but principally from an opinion which they had amongſt them, that he ſuffered Martyrdom in that place. An opinion founded on miſtakes, firſt of a Cenotaphium, or an empty Monument, erected in this City to preſerve his memory, for the grave in which he was interred: the other, in taking the word Paſſio, uſed in the Martyrologies, for the place of his ſuffering, which is meant only of the ſtory or celebration. But howſoever they intituled it by the name of Saint Georges, as was ſaid before, and made it on that account alſo an Epiſcopal See. 3. Ramatha, or Aramathea, a City of the Levites, ſuppoſed to be the dwelling of Joſeph, who begged of Pilate the body of CHRIST. 4. Helon, or Aialon, a City of the Levites alſo; by ſome placed, and perhaps more fitly in the Tribe of Dan, and there we ſhall hear further of it. 5. Themnath-Chares, given by the Iſraelites to Ioſuah, who enlarged the ſame, and made it a ſtrong and goodly City; honoured with the Sepulchre of that brave Commander, one of the nine Worthies of the world; and afterwards made one of the Prefectures of Judæa, by the name of Thamnitica. 6. Adaſa, or Adarſa, where Iudas Maccabæus with 3000 Iews, overthrew the Army Nicanor. 7. Ieſleti, called otherwiſe Pelethi, which gave name and birth unto the Pelethites, part of Davids guard, under the governance of Benaiah. 8. Silo, ſituate on the top of a lofty mountain; the receptacle of the Ark, till taken and carried thence by the Philiſtims. 9. Michmas, the habitation of Jonathan, one of the Maccabæan Brethren, ſituate in the middle way from Samaria to Hieruſalem, now called Byra. 10. Naioth, where Saul propheſied. 11. Bethoron, a City of the Levites, beautified by Solomon, but made more famous by the great and notable overthrow, which Judas Maccabæus here gave to Lyſias. 12. Pirhathon, on the Mountain Amalec, the City of Abdon the Judge of Iſrael. 13. Sichem, called alſo Sichor, the habitation in the old times times, of Sichem the Father of that Hamor, who deflowred Dinah the daughter of Jacob; the City for that cauſe deſtroyed by Simeon and Levi: repaired again, and afterward by Abimelech levelled with the ground; a third time re-edified by Jeroboam the Sonne of Nebat, and a third time ruined by the Kings of Damaſcus: yet notwithſtanding theſe blowes it was of good eſteem in the time of our Saviour, who abode in it two days, and converted many. Memorable for Jacobs Well which was very near it; more for its neighbourhood to Mount Garizim, where the bleſſings were to be read to the people (of which ſee Deut. 11. 27. and Joſ. 8. 23.) and where afterwards was built a magnificent Temple for the uſe of the Samaritan Nation, at the coſt and charge of Sanballat a great Prince amongſt them. Who having married his Daughter to Manaſſes, brother of Jaddus the High Prieſt of the Jews, and fearing he would put her away, to avoid the ſentence of excommunication, which he was involved in for that match: promiſed him, that if he would retain her, he would build a Temple anſwerable unto that of Hieruſalem, and make him the High Prieſt thereof, which was done accordingly. But this Temple had not ſtood above two hundred years, when deſtroyed by Hyrcanus the Maccabæan; the place remaining notwithſtanding a place of worſhip, as appeareth Ioh. 4. 20. As for the City of Sichem or Sichor, it was by the Grecians called Nicopolis, afterwards made a Colony by the Emperour Veſpaſian, who cauſed it to be called Flavia Cæſarea: of which Colony was that renowned Iuſtin Martyr. 14. Samaria, the Metropolis of the kingdom of Iſrael, founded by Omri one of the Kings thereof, on the top of the Mountain Samron, (which overlooketh all the bottom as far as the Sea-coaſt) whence it had the name. A ſtately and magnificent City, conjectured by Brochardus, who had traced the antient ruines of it, to be bigger than Hieruſalem. Deſtroyed by the Aſſyrians when they carryed away the Ten Tribes; but afterwards repaired again, and again beaten to the ground by the Sonnes of Hyrcanus above-mentioned. But Herod the Great, who was pleaſed with the ſituation of it, did again re-edifie it, in more ſtately manner than before; as appeareth by the great ſtore of goodly Marble pillars, and other carved ſtones, in great abundance found amongſt the rubbiſh: and having re-built it to his mind, incloſed it with a ſtrong wall, and beautified it with a goodly Temple; in honour of Auguſtus Cæſar, whom the Greeks call Sebaſtos, he cauſed it to be called Sebaſte. Memorable after this new erection from the Sepulchre of John Baptiſt, and being Judæa. made the Metropolis of Palestina Secunda, (by consequence an Arch-Bishops See) now nothing but a few cottages filled with Grecian Monks.

Nor were the Samaritans themselves (so called from this their principal City) less subject to the vicissitudes and change of fortune, than the City was. Descended for the most part from the Assyrians, and such other Nations, as were sent thither to fill up the empty places of the Captive Tribes: but called Cutheans by the Jews, either because most of them were of Cuth, a Region of Persia, as Josephus telleth us, which is now called Chuzestan; or else by way of scorn, for Chusites, as being of the posterity of the accursed Cham, by Chus his son. Having imbraced the Law of Moses, they began to think better of the Jews than the other Nations, but fitted their affections to the change of times: it being the observation of the said Josephus, that as often as the Jews were in any prosperity, then they called them Cozins, and would be of the same Nation with them; but when their fortunes were on the declining hand, then they were strangers which came thither out of forein Nations, and no kin at all. Nor doth he wrong them in that Character. For when Alexander the Great had granted the Jews a release of the seventh years tribute, the Samaritans desiring the like exemption, pleaded for themselves Ἑβραῖοι μέν ἐσμεν, &c. that they indeed were very Hebrews, though it pleased the Sidonians to call them Sichemites. But when Antiochus raged against them with fire and sword, the Samaritans sent Letters to him, disclaiming all relation to those of Judah, and challenging their descent from the Medes and Persians. Nor were they content only to disclaim all kinred with the Jews, in the times of trouble, when any persecution rose against them for the Law of God; but did them also all ill Offices, and joyned with their Enemies to their destruction: especially after the Jews had refused to admit of their assistance, in the re-building of the Temple; which after that they hindred with great malice, and no less perverseness. But the fortune of the Jews did at last prevail, the whole Nation being subdued by Hyrcanus the Maccabæan, who destroyed their Schismatical Temple also, and levelled Samaria it self to the very ground. After this subject to the Jews, who possessed themselves of most of their Cities, and contracted them into a narrower compass than they were in formerly: but still so hated and contemned, that nothing was able to appease that inveterate malice, which they had conceived; till both Nations were extirpated in the time of Adrian, and made to seek their dwellings in other Countries. Made afterwards a Province of the Roman Empire, by the name of Palestina Secunda; successively subject with the rest, to the Persians, Saracens, and Turks, who doe now possess it.

IUDÆA.

IUDÆA, is bounded on the East, with the Dead Sea, and the River Jordan; on the West, with the Mediterrancan; on the North, with Samaria; and on the South with Idumæa. So called from the Jews, or people of the Tribe of Judah, who after their return from the Captivity of Babylon, communicated the name of Jew unto all the Nation, as they did that of Iudæa, to this part of the Country.

The Soyl of the same nature with that of Samaria, before described; but that it is more swelled with Hills, and more stored with Rivers, though of no great fame. And therefore we shall say no more, as to the general character and description of it; but look on the particular parts as it stood divided betwixt the Philistims, the Tribes of Dan, Simeon, Iudah, and Benjamin.

And first, the PHILISTIMS commanded all the Sea-coasts from the South of Phœnicia, to the North of Idumæa; or from the Castle of Pilgrims, to the City of Gaza, taking both into the accompt. But Ioppa, and all the Towns on the North of that, being taken in by the Israelites; they held no more than six Towns of any importance, with the Countries and Territories adjoyning to them: but those so populous and strong, that by their own power, and the assistance of the Edomites, and the rest of their neighbours, not well affected to the Tribes, they kept them under harder terms, and lay more heavy on them than all the Canaanites together; as will appear when we sum up the story and successes of their affairs.

In the mean time let us survey the Country which was holden by them, notwithstanding all that could be done against them by the kings of Israel: and therein we shall find worth our observation, 1. Geth, or Gath, the birth-place of the huge Giant Goliah, slain by David; as also of many others of the like Gigantine proportion, slain by Davids worthies. Destroyed by David, or rather slighted and dismantled, it was re-built by Reboam the sonne of Solomon; but again razed by Ozias King of Iudah, who found the Philistims there garrisoned but ill neighbours to him, and finally laid wast by Hazael the King of Syria. Not much regarded after that, though it kept the name of Gath in S. Hieroms time; till in these last Ages Fulk the King of Hierusalem erected there a new Castle, from the antient ruins. From hence as I conceive, the Idol Dagon, so much worshipped by these Philistims, was by the Syrians and Phœnicians called Ater-Gatis; and not from Gatis a Syrian Queen, as is said by many. 2. Accaron, on the South of Gath, of great wealth and power, and one that held out notably against the Danites and Judæans. Much spoken of in the holy Scriptures, but for nothing more than their Idolatrous worship of Bel-zebub, that is to say, the Lord of Flies: so called by the Jews, either in contempt of the Idolatries committed to him, or because of that great multitude of flies which attended his Sacrifices, whereof some say, the Temple of Hierusalem was wholly free. But whatsoever he was, or for what cause so named, certain it is that he was here had in especial honour, and therefore called in Scripture the God of Accaron: and hither Ahaziah the King of Israel sent his messenger, to enquire of this Idol, concerning his health. 3. Ashdod, (by the Grecians called Azotus) memorable in Holy Writ for the Temple of Dagon, into which the Ark of the Lord was brought; that Idol falling down before it, as not able to stand upright when the Ark so near. Near to this Town was Iudas Maccabæus overcome and slain by Bacchides, Lieutenant to Demetrius the King of Syria, and not long after the Town it self was taken by Ionathan the brother of Iudas, who put the Citizens to the sword; and burnt all such as fled into the Temple of Dagon, together with the very Idol, consumed in the same fire with the Idolaters. Re-built by Gabinius a Roman General, in the times of Christianity it was made an Episcopal See; and continued a fair Village till the dayes of St. Hierom. 4. Ascalon, on the Sea-side also, said to be built by Ascalus a noble Lydian, employed by his King in a war against the Syrians; but this very uncertain. One of the chief and strongest Cities of the Philistims, of great note amongst the Gentiles for a Temple dedicated to Dirceto, the Mother of Semiramis, here worshipped in the form of a Mer-maid: and for another of Apollo, wherein Herod the father of Antipater, and Grandfather of Herod the Great (from his birth in this City called Herod the Ascalonite) is said to have served as the Priest. It had in the first times of Christianity, an Episcopal See; and in the course of the holy wars, was beautified with a new wall, and many fair buildings by King Richard the first. 5. Gaza, more within the Land, on the River Besor; a fair and strong Town, formerly called Assa, from whence perhaps the name of Gaza was derived by the Heathens; or else it was so called by the Persians, in regard that Cambyses here laid up the Treasure which he had provided for the war of Ægypt, the word Gaza, in the Persian language, signifying treasures. Of which Cambyses it is said by Pomponius Mela, cum armis Ægyptum peteret hoc belli opes & pecuniam invehi curavit. After which it was made the Receipt or Treasury, in which the Persians laid the tributes of the Western Provinces; whence all riches had in time the name of Gaza. Once Caleb took it, but not able to hold it against the Philistims, he again deserted it. Destroyed by Alexander the Great, and re-built again, it made notable resistance against the Maccabees; till at last forced by Simon, the brother of Iudas, who liked the place so well, that he intended to have made it his place of residence: not so decayed in length of time, but that it was a goodly City in the days of Brochardus; And it is still the best of all this coast, built on an hill encompassed with rich and pleasant vallies; the building low and mean, as in other places; but some of them adorned with Pillars of fair Parian marble, digged out of the remaining ruins. 6. Maioma, the Port Town of Gaza, but made a City of it self by Constantine, by whom called Constantia: but restored again by Julian unto those of Gaza, and by him commanded to be called Gaza Maritima.

These were the chief places holden by the Philistims, a strong and Giantlike race of men, such as the Scripture calls by the name of Anak, or the Sons of Anak. Originally descended from Casluhim, and Capthorim, of the race of Mizraim the son of Cham: as appeareth both by the common consent of antient Writers, and plain Texts of Scripture, Jerem. 47. 4. and Amos 9. 7. These being setled first in the borders of Egypt and Idumæa, where the Casluhim gave name unto the Province of Casiotis, and the Mountain Casius; proceeded North-wards and subdued the Avim, a Canaanish people, planting themselves in their habitations, as is said expressely Deut. 2. 23. Here Abraham found them in his time, and here they were when Isaac went down to Gezar. Governed at first by one King whom they called alwaies by the name of Abimelech, as the Egyptians theirs by the name of Pharaoh; sometimes by five, according to the number of their principal Cities; but still united in the times of approaching dangers. Too strong to be subdued by the Tribes of Israel, they made head against them, and mastered them at several times, for above a 150 years, Tyrannizing over them, till broken by Sampson, and for a time kept off by Samuel. Recovering again, they vanquished the Israelites in the time of Saul, whom they dicomfited, and hanged his dead body barbarously on the Walls of Bethsan. But David a more fortunate Prince, overthrew them in many set battels, and at length took the Town of Gath, one of the strongest Towns they had; and by that means so weakned them, that they durst not stir all the time of David, nor a long while after. Beginning to be troublesome in the daies of Ozias King of Judah, they were warred on by him, their army overthrown, Ita and Amnia, two of their strong Forts, took and razed; and the Town of Gath again dismantled. In the time of the Idolatrous Achaz, associating with the Edomites, (who evermore attended the destruction of Judah) they brake out again; took Bethsemes, Aialon, Timnah, and some other Towns; carried away many Prisoners, and slew much people. But the good King Ezekiah made them pay dear for it, taking from them the greatest part of their Country, betwixt Gath and Gaza. Which notwithstanding, they recovered to so great esteem, that the whole Country had from them the name of Palestine. But broken by degrees by the Maccabæans, they lost both their power and reputation, passing in common estimate as a part of Jewry; the fortunes of which it followed for the times succeeding.

2. The Tribe of DAN, is so called from Dan the fifth son of Jacob, by Bilhah the hand-maid of Rachel, of whom were mustered at Mount Sinai 62700 fighting men; and 66400 at the second muster, in the Land of Canaan: where their lot fell betwixt Ephraim, on the North; Simeon, on the South; the Tribe of Benjamin, on the East; and the Mediterranean on the VVest.

Places of most note in it, 1. Joppa (now called Jaffa) once of a famous Mart-town, and the only Haven to Judæa in foregoing times: the Town, where Jonah took ship to fly unto Tarshish; where Peter raised Dorcas from death to life; and where he lying in the house of one Simon a Tanner, was in a vision taught the conversion of the Gentiles. This City they report to have been built before the flood. And here they say reigned Cepheus, whose Daughter Andromeda was by Perseus delivered from a seamonster; some of whose bones the people used to shew to strangers, even to the flourishing of the Romans. Just as our Citizens of Coventry and Warwick, shew the bones of the Dun-Cow of Dunsmear heath, and the bones of I know not what Giant, slain by Guy Earl of Warwick. In the time of the Maccabees it was garrisoned by the Syrians; who having in the Port a Fleet of good power and strength, invited 200 of the chief Citizens to go aboard with them, and there drowned them all: for which their Fleet was fired by Judas, and such as did escape the Fire fell upon his Sword. Twice taken by the Romans, and the second time burnt unto the ground: new walled, and fortified with Towers, by King Lewis of France, in the year 1250, the Holy Wars then drawing to their final end. Now nothing standing of it but two little Turrets where are certain Harquebusses for defence of the Haven; none of the best; defended from the South and VVest winds with eminent Rocks, but exposed to the fury of the North; which makes it more unsafe than the open Seas, when inraged by Tempests. Not much frequented by the Merchant, who trade here but for Cottons only; and hold their Factory not far off in a Town called 2. Rama, by the Moores called Ramula, situate in a sandy plain on the rising of a little Hill; built of free-stone, but the streets thereof narrow, and the Houses contemptible. More beautifull in the ruins of some Christian Churches, and a Monastery built by Philip the Good of Burgundy, where the House of Nicodemus stood; than in any of the remaining edifices. 3. Iamnia, near Joppa, where Judas burnt the rest of the Syrian Fleet, the flame whereof was seen to Hierusalem, 240 furlongs off: mentioned by Ptolemy, and in the times of Christianity an Episcopal See; now not discernable in the ruins. 4. Cedar or Cedron, fortified against the Jews by Cendæus one of the Lieutenants of Antiochus, who hereabouts was overthrown by the Maccabees. 5. Modin, a small Town, but honored with the birth and sepulchre of those Maccabæans; the Sepulchre being seven Marble Pillars of so great an height, that they served as a mark for Seamen. 6. Gibbethon, in the Country called Makats, a City of the Levites, but afterwards possessed by the Philistims; at the siege whereof Nadab, the son of Jeroboam King of Israel, was slain by Baasha, who succeeded; and Omri chosen King on the death of Zimri. 7. Cariathiarim, where the Ark of the Lord was kept for 20 years, in the house of Aminadab; that is to say, from the sending

it

it home by the Philiſtims, till brought to Hieruſalem by David. 8. Beth-ſemes, to which the Ark was brought by a yoke of Kine, turned looſe by the Philiſtims: for irreverent looking into which, there were ſlain by the immediate hand of God, no fewer than 50070 perſons of this City. 9. Tſarah, near which is a fountain, called the Fountain of Ethiopia, becauſe Philip there baptized the Ethiopian Eunuch. 10. Caſpin, taken with great ſlaughter by Judas Maccabæus. 11. Lachis, remarkable for the death of Amaziah King of Judah. 12. Aialon, a City of the Levites alſo, touched upon before in the Tribe of Ephraim, in the borders whereof we find it ſituated; and therefore by ſome Authors reckoned to the ſame Tribe, and by ſome to the other, in the valley whereof the Moon is ſaid to have ſtood ſtill at the prayers of Joſuah, as the Sun did over the City of Gibeon: the motion of the Heavens being ſtaid, that he might have the more time for execution on the Kings of the Canaanites. To this Tribe alſo belonged the Town and Territory of Dan, or Leſhem, afterwards called Cæſarea Philippi, in the Tribe of NEPHTHALIM; whereof we have there ſpoke already. Judæa.

3. The Tribe of SIMEON was ſo called from Simeon the ſecond Sonne of Jacob, by his firſt Wife Leah: of whom were found at the firſt muſter 59300 able men; and but 22200 at the ſecond muſter, when they came into Canaan. Where they enjoyed but a ſmall Territory to themſelves, their lot falling amongſt the Philiſtims, whom they were not able to expel: and therefore they were taken into the Tribe of Judah, where they were permitted to enjoy ſome Towns and Villages, intermixed with that more potent Tribe. Afterwards, in the reign of King Hezekiah, ſome of them poſſeſſed themſelves of Gedar, belonging to the Children of Ham; and others paſſing Southwards into Idumæa, ſmote the Amalekites which inhabited in the Mountains thereof, and dwelt in the places by them conquered. But for all this, wanting room for themſelves and their Children, many of them undertook the Office of Scribes or Scriveners, and diſperſed themſelves amongſt the reſt of the Tribes, teaching their children to write, and giving themſelves to the employment of Publike Notaries: God herein verifying the curſe which Iacob had denounced on Simeon, that he ſhould be divided and ſcattered in Iſrael. But for their fixed habitation which fell to them by lot, it lay betwixt Dan upon the North, and Idumæa on the South; the Tribe of Judah on the Eaſt, and the Philiſtims upon the Weſt.

Places of moſt obſervation in it, 1. Gerar, the Royal ſeat of the two Abimelechs, Kings of the Philiſtims, with whom Abraham and Iſaac had to doe; and probably of ſome other of their Kings and Princes, till ſubdued by the Iſraelites. Situate in the South border of Canaan, not far from the wilderneſs of Beerſheba, but in a very healthfull air; called therefore Regio Salutaris in the times ſucceeding. 2. Siceleg, or Ziglag, belonging to the Philiſtims till the time of David, to whom given by Achiſh King of Gath, for his place of retreat, when perſecuted by Saul; from whom flying he lodged here all his goods and carriages: ſacked by the Amalekites, but the booty recovered from them ſpeedily by the diligence and good fortune of David. 3. Hain, a City of the Levites. 4. Cariath-Sepher, that is to ſay the City of Books, ſeated within the bounds of Simeon, but belonging to Judah: which ſome hold to be the Univerſity or Academie of old Paleſtine. A City of the Levites alſo, and at firſt poſſeſſed by the Sonnes of Anak, or men of a Gigantine ſtature; but taken by Othoniel, the Sonne of Kenan, on the promiſe and encouragement which was given by Caleb, that whoſoever took it ſhould have his Daughter Achſah to Wife. Afterwards it was called Debir, Judg. 1. 11. known in the time of Saint Hierom by the name of Daema. 5. Chorma, conceived by ſome to be that place mentioned Numb. 14.45. to which the Canaanites and Amalekites purſued thoſe of Iſrael. 6. Beerſheba, or Puteus juramenti; ſo called of the Well of waters, and the Oath which was there ſworn betwixt Abraham and Abimelech, Gen. 21. 31. Memorable in the Scripture for the Grove which Abraham there planted; the wandring of Hagar thereabouts, when ſhe was caſt out of Abrahams houſe with her young ſon Iſmael; and the dwelling of Iſaac, for which cauſe called the City of Iſaac. Situate in the extreme South border of the Land of Canaan, the length whereof is often meaſured in the Scripture from this Town to Dan; and for that cauſe well fortified by the Weſtern Chriſtians, when they were poſſeſſed of this Coutry; as ſtanding on the borders of Idumæa, and the Deſarts of Arabia, in the way from Egypt.

4. The Tribe of JUDAH was ſo called from Judah the fourth ſon of Jacob, by his wife Leah: of whom there were numbred at the firſt general muſter taken near Mount Sinai, 76600 fighting men; and no fewer than 76500 at their entrance into the Land of Canaan. The greateſt Tribe, and therefore anſwerably fitted with the largeſt Territory; bordering on the Dead Sea, Eaſt; upon Simeon, Weſt; the Tribe of Benjamin on the North; and the Idumæans on the South. Comparatively large, with reference to the other Tribes; but otherwiſe unable to contain or feed thoſe infinite multitudes, without the extraordinary providence of Almighty God, which are recorded to be in it: King David muſtering 470000 fighting men of this Tribe alone; which was more than half the number found in the reſt of the Tribes. A Tribe which had a native Soveraignty over all the others; the Scepter, the Legiſlative power, and the Worlds Meſſiah, being all promiſed unto this.

Places of moſt obſervation in it, 1. Arad, ſituate in the entrance of Judæa, in the way from the Wilderneſs of Edom. 2. Hebron, one of the antienteſt Cities of Canaan: the Seat of Giants, called Anakim, or the ſons of Anak. This word Anak ſignifieth a chain worn for Ornament, and it

Judæa. seemeth that this Anak enriched with the ſpoils of his enemies, wore a chain of gold, leaving both the cuſtom and name to his poſterity. We read the like of Manlius Torquatus in the Roman Hiſtories. This Town did Abraham buy for a burial-place for his dead; in which his Wife Sarah was firſt buried, and after her four of the Patriarchs. Adjoyning to this Town is the plain of Mamre, where Abraham the Father of the faithfull, ſitting in his Tent, was viſited from Heaven by God in the ſhape of a man. Here David kept his Court before the winning of Hieruſalem; to this place came the Tribes to anoint him King over Iſrael; and hither came Abſalon, under the pretence of paying his vowes, to uſurp the kingdom of his Father. 3. Tecoa, the City of Amos the Prophet; and alſo that woman, who by the words which Joab put into her mouth, perſwaded the King to call Abſalon from exile. In the wilderneſs of this Tecoa, there aſſembled the Inhabitants of Moab, Ammon, and Mount Seir, to overthrow Juda. But the Lord being appeaſed by the publique Faſt, proclaimed and kept by Jehoſaphat and the people, ſowed diſſentions amongſt them. So that the children of Ammon and Moab ſtood up againſt the inhabitants of Mount Seir, utterly to ſlay and deſtroy them; and when they had made an end of the Inhabitants of Mount Seir, every one helped to deſtroy one another. 4. Cerioth, or Carioth, the birth-place of Judas, hence ſurnamed Iſcariot (or the man of Carioth) who betrayed our Saviour. 5. Jether, or Jatter, in the North border of this Tribe, towards Eleutheropolis, a City antiently of the Levites, and called in Sr. Hieroms time Jethica, and then altogether repleniſhed with Chriſtians, now nothing but the name remaining. 6. Mareſa, the native Soyl of the Prophet Michah, near whereunto firſt Aſa King of Iudah diſcomfited the vaſt Army of Terah the Arabian or Ethiopian, conſiſting of above a Million of men; and afterwards Gorgias was overthrown by Iudas Maccabæus. 7. Emaus (after called Nicopolis) memorable for the third overthrow which Iudas gave to the ſaid Gorgias; for our Redeemers ſhewing himſelf after his Reſurrection to Cleophas and another of his Diſciples; and for the hot Bathes hereabouts, which gave the name of Salutaris to this part of Paleſtine. The Sovereign vertue of which waters Sozomen a Chriſtian, attributes to the waſhing of Chriſts feet in them, as he paſſed by at that time; but Ioſephus, a Iew, aſcribes (as it is moſt likely) unto natural cauſes. 8. Haſor, or Chatſor, one of the frontier Towns towards Idumæa. 9. Odalla, or Hadullan, an antient and magnificent City, taken and deſtroyed by Ioſuah, and long after much enlarged and beautified by Ionathan, one of the Maccabees. 10. Ceila, or Keila, where David ſometimes hid himſelf when he fled from Saul; by him delivered afterwards from the aſſaults of the Philiſtims. 11. Eleutheropolis, or the Free City, not farre from Hebron; a City of later date than any of Judah, mentioned by Ptolemy, and much remembred by St. Hierom. 12. Azecha, not far from Emaus, to which Joſuah followed Dabir the King of Eglon, and his four Aſſociates, whom he diſcomfited in the cauſe and quarrel of the Gibeonites; moleſted by them for ſubmitting to their common Enemy. Seated in the Valley of Terebinth, and of very great ſtrength; preſuming upon which, it revolted from Ioram King of Iudah, at the ſame time that Libna and the Edomites had revolted from him. 13. Beth-Sur, or (Beth-Sora) that is to ſay, the houſe on the Rock, ſo called from the ſituation on a rocky hill, one of the ſtrongeſt places of Iudah: Fortified firſt by Roboam the ſonne of Solomon, after by Iudas Maccabæus, and finally made impregnable by his brother Simeon. 14. Adoram, bordering on the Dead-Sea, beautified alſo by Roboam. 15. Zoar, in former times called Bela, but took his name from the words of Lot, alleging that it was but a little one, Gen. 19. 20. as the word Tſohor doth import, in whoſe eſcape it was preſerved, being otherwiſe one of the five Cities of the Region called Pentapolis, doomed unto deſtruction; the other four, Sodom, Gomorrha, Adama, and Seboim, being at the ſame time deſtroyed by fire and brimſtone. 16. Maſſada, frequently mentioned by Joſephus, as a place of great ſtrength both by Art and Nature, and as it is by him deſcribed (in the 7 Book de Bello Jud. cap. 28.) to be thought impregnable; and therefore made by Herod (in the time of his troubles) the place of Refuge, in which he diſpoſed of Mariamne his betroathed wife, her mother Alexandra, with divers honourable Ladies, and where they were preſerved in ſafety againſt all his Enemies, till he came armed with power from Rome, to diſlodge their forces, which was done accordingly. Firſt built by Jonathan the brother of Judas Maccabæus, as a ſure place of Refuge againſt the Syrians; and afterwards ſo eſteemed by Herod for the reaſon above mentioned, that he not only much enlarged it, with all the requiſite additions of ſtrength and beauty, but built within the verge thereof, a magnificent Palace. The whole environed with a wall of 7 furlongs compaſs, 12 cubits high, and 8 cubits broad, built of white ſtone, and ſituate on an high Mountain called Collis Achillæ, waſhed on the Eaſt-ſide by the Dead Sea, or Lacus Aſphaltites, and by that ſecured; on the other ſides fenced with ſuch deep ditches, that it was a terrour to any man to look down into them: beſides which natural ſituation it was fortified by Herod with 27 Turrets, who left therein as in a place impregnable and inacceſſible, a Magazine of Armes, and all warlike furniture, for an Army of 10000 men, all ſorts of victuals to ſuſtain them, and ground enough within the walls to yeeld corn ſufficient, when time and a long ſiege ſhould conſume thoſe victuals. A place of ſuch ſtrength and ſo great concernment, that it held out againſt the Romans (when Veſpaſian and his ſon Titus managed that great war) after all the reſt of Judea had been conquered by them. 17. Libna, a ſtrong City ſeated in a Corner of Judah, running between the Tribes of Dan and Benjamin. This City revolted from Joram King of Judah, at the ſame time the Edomites did, and continued a free State, even as long as Judah continued a kingdom. 18. Ziph, in the wilderneſs, wherein David hid himſelf frō the fury of Saul. Hither, when Saul purſued him, David came into his Camp (the watch being all aſleep) and took thence his ſpear, and a Cruſe of oyl, and departed. Abiſhai indeed would fain have killed him: but David, though he knew that Samuel had by Gods com-command abdicated Saul from the Kingdom, and that himself was appointed in his stead, would not touch him; but left him to the judgement of the Lord, whose annointed he was. 19. Bethlem, or (to distinguish it from another of this name in Zabulon so called) Bethlem-Iudah, where Christ was born; and the Innocents suffered for him, before he had suffered for them. In this general Massacre of young Children, a son of Herods, which was at nurse, was also slain; which being told unto Augustus, he replyed, he had rather be Herods Swine than his Sonne: His swine being safe in regard the Jews were forbidden hog-meat; but his sonnes frequently made away, upon fears and jealousies. A Town for this cause had in great respect by the Primitive Christians, beautified by Helen with a stately Temple, which yet standeth entire; by the Lady Paula (much extolled by Saint Hierom) with some goodly Monatteries, in one of which the body of that Father lieth; and by the Western Christians, with a See Episcopal. 20. On the frontier of this Country towards the Philistians, was that strong Castle which Herod repairing, called Herodium; seated on a hill, the ascent unto which was made with 200 steps of Marble, exceeding fair and large. In this Country also are the hills of Engaddi, in a Cave of which David cut off the lap of Sauls garment; and all along the bottoms whereof were the Gardens of Balsamum or Opobalsamum, the trees of which, were by Cleopatra (at such time as she governed M. Antony, and the East) sent for to be replanted in Heliopolis of Ægypt; and Herod, who durst not deny them, plucked them up by the roots, and sent them to her. Judæa.

5. The Tribe of BENJAMIN took name from the twelfth and youngest son of Jacob, by Rachel his best beloved wife, who died in that Child-birth: of which at the first muster near unto Mount Sinai, were numbred 35000 able men; and at the second muster, when they entred the Promised Land, there were found of them fit for Arms, 45600 persons. A Tribe in great danger to have been utterly cut off, by the folly of the men of Gibeah, all Israel arming against it as one man. For besides those that perished in the former battels, there fell in one day 25000 men that drew the sword: the fury of the Conquerours after that great victory sparing neither man nor beast, nor any thing that came to hand, and burning down all their Cities also which they came unto. So great an havock was there made even of innocent maidens, that when the edge of this displeasure was taken off, there were not Wives enough found for those young men which had escaped; The other Tribes having bound themselves by a solemn Oath, nor to bestow their Daughters on them: insomuch that they were fain to provide themselves of Wives of the Daughters of Jabesh-Gilead, a Town of the Manassites beyond Jordan, which they took by assault; and of the Daughters of Shilo, whom they took by Stratagem. The whole story see at large in the book of Judges, chap. 19, 20, 21.

The Territories of this Tribe lay betwixt those of Ephraim on the North, and Judah on the South; having the Dead-Sea to the East, and the Tribe of Dan to the West-ward of them. The chief of their Towns and Cities were, 1. Michmas, the incamping place of Saul, 1 Sam. 13. 2. and the abiding place of Jonathan, one of the Maccabean brethren. 1. Macc. 9. 73. 2. Mispah, famous in being the ordinary place of assembly, for the whole body of the people, in matters of war or peace: as also in that standing in the midst of Canaan, it was (together with Gilgal) made the seat of justice, to which Samuel went yearly, to give judgement to the people. 3. Gebah, the North border of the kingdom of Judah toward Israel. 4. Gibeah, the Country of Saul, the first King: where the abusing of the Levites wife by the young men of this Town, had almost rooted the Tribe of Benjamin out of the Garden of Israel. 5. Ai, a great and strong City, in the siege of which the Israelites were first discomfited: but when by the death of Achan, who had stoln the accursed thing, the Camp was purged, Josuah by a warlike stratagem surprized it. 6. Gibeon, the mother City of the Gibeonites, who presaging the unresistable victories of the Israelites, came to the Camp of Josuah, and by a wile obtained peace of him and the People. Employed by them in hewing wood, and drawing water for the use of the Tabernacle, after the fraud was made known unto them; called Nethinims, Ezr. 43. from Nathan, which signifies to give, because they were given to the service of the Tabernacle first; of the Temple after. Saul about four hundred years after, slew some of them, for which fact the Lord caused a famine on the Land: which could not be taken away till seven of Sauls Sonnes were by David delivered unto the Gibeonites, and by them hanged. This famine did God send, because in killing those poor Gibeonites, the Oath was broken, which Josuah and the Princes swore concerning them. In defence of those Gibeonites it was that Josuah waged war against the Kings of the Canaanites; and stayed the motion of the Sun by his fervent prayers. 7. Iericho, destroyed by the sound of Rams-horns, was not only levelled by Iosuah to the ground; but a curse inflicted on him that should attempt the re-building of it. This curse notwithstanding, at the time when Ahab reigned in Israel (which was about five hundred years after the ruine of it) Hiel a Bethelite, delighted with the pleasantness of the place, re-edified it. But (as it was foretold by Iosuah) as he laid the foundation of the walls, he lost his eldest Son; and when he had finished it, and was setting up the Gates thereof, he lost also the younger. It may be Hiel when he began this work minded not the prophecy; it may be he believed it not: peradventure he thought the words of Iosuah, not so much to proceed from the spirit of prophecy, as from an angry and vexed heart; they being spoken in way of wish, or execration. And it is possible, it may be, he chose rather to build the eternity of his name on so pleasant and beautifull a City, than on the lives and issues of two young men. 8. Anathoth, the birth-place of the Prophet Jeremy, and the patrimony of Abiathar the high Priest, sent hither by the command of Solomon, as to a place of his own, when deposed from Judæa. from his office by that King. 9. Nob, called, 1 Sam. 22. 19. the City of the Prieſts, deſtroyed by Saul, for the relief which Abimelech the high Prieſt had given to David; the Ark of the Lord then reſiding there. 10. Gilgal, upon the banks of Jordan, where Joſuah did firſt eat of the fruits of the Land, and kept his firſt Paſſeover; where he circumciſed ſuch of the people, as were born during their wandring in the Wilderneſs; and nigh to which he ſet up twelve ſtones for a memorial to poſterity, that the waters of Jordan did there divide themſelves to give paſſage to the twelve Tribes of Iſrael. Here Agag, King of the Amalekites, was hewn in pieces by Samuel, and here Samuel once every year adminiſtred Juſtice to the people. For being ſeated in the midſt of the Land of Iſrael betwixt North and South, and on the Eaſt-ſide of the Country near the banks of Jordan, it ſerved very fitly for that purpoſe: as Miſpah alſo did, which ſtood in the ſame diſtance, in regard of the length of the Land of Canaan, but ſituate towards the Weſt Sea, near the Land of the Philiſtims; uſed therefore interchangeably for the eaſe of the people. 11. Bethel, at firſt called Luz, but took this new name in remembrance of the viſion which Iacob ſaw here, at his going towards Meſopotamia, as is ſaid Gen. 28. 19. It ſignifieth the houſe of God, and was therefore choſen by Jeroboam, for the ſetting up of one of his Golden Calves; though thereby, (as the Prophet ſaith) he made it to be Beth-aven, the houſe of vanity, Oſee 4. 15. and 10. 5. For then it was a part of the Kingdome of the ten Tribes, and the Southern border of that Kingdome on the coaſts of Ephraim: but taken from it by Abijah the King of Judah, and after that accounted as a member of his kingdome, till the deſtruction of it by the Chaldæans. Called with the reſt of thoſe parts, in the time of the Maccabees by the name of Apharema, which ſignifieth a thing taken away; becauſe taken away from the ten Tribes, to which once it belonged, 1 Maccab. 11. 34. where it is ſaid, to have been taken from the Country of Samaria, and added unto the borders of Iudæa. 12. Ramath, another place there mentioned, and ſaid to have been added to the Realm of Iudah, having been formerly the South border of the kingdome of Iſrael; and therefore ſtrongly fortified by Baaſha, in the time of Aſa King of Iudah. 13. Chadid, or Hadid, one of the three Cities (the other two being 14. Lod, and 15. Ono) which were inhabited by the Benjamites after the Captivity. Deſtroyed in the wars with the Kings of Syria, and afterwards rebuilt by Simon the Maccabæan.

But the chief glory of this Tribe, and of all the reſt, and not ſo only, but of all the whole world beſides, was the famous City of Hieruſalem; ſeated upon a rocky Mountain, every way to be aſcended with ſteep and difficult aſcents (except towards the North) environed on all other ſides alſo with ſome neighbouring Mountainets, as if placed in the midſt of an Amphitheatre. It conſiſted in the time of its greateſt flouriſh of four parts, ſeparated by their ſeveral Walls, as if ſeveral Cities; we may call them the Upper City, the Lower City, the New City, and the City of Herod: all of them but the Lower City, ſeated upon their ſeveral Hills. Of theſe, that which we call the City of Herod, had formerly been beautified with the Houſes of many of the Prophets, as in our Saviours time with that of Mary the Mother of Iohn Mark, mentioned Acts 15. 37. converted to a Church by the Primitive Chriſtians: the Weſtern part whereof was wholly taken up by the Palace of Herod (a wicked, but magnificent Prince) for coſt exceſſive, and for ſtrength invincible; containing Gardens, Groves, Fiſhponds, places deviſed for pleaſure, beſides thoſe for exerciſe. Fortified with three Towers at the corners of it, that on the South-eaſt of the VVall, 50 Cubits high, of excellent workmanſhip, called Mariamnes Tower, in memory of his beloved but inſolent wife, raſhly murdered by him. Oppoſite to which on the South-weſt corner, ſtood the Tower of Phaſcolus, ſo called by the name of his brother, 70 cubits high, and in form reſembling that ſo much celebrated Ægyptian Pharos: and on the North wall on an high Hill, the Tower of Hippick, exceeding both the reſt in height by 14 Cubits, and having on the top two Spires; in memory of the two Hippici, his very dear Friends, ſlain in his ſervice by the wars.

2. On the South-ſide ſtood that part which was called the Old City, poſſeſſed if not built by the Iebuſites, and therein both the Mountain and Fort of Sion: but after called the City of David, becauſe taken by him; who thereon built a ſtrong and magnificent Caſtle, the Royal Court and Manſion of the Kings ſucceeding. In the VVeſt part hereof ſtood the Tower of David; a double Palace built by Herod, the one part whereof he named Agrippa, and the other Cæſar, compoſed of Marble, and every where enterlaid with gold; and not far off, the houſe of Annas and Caiaphas, to which the Conſpirators led our Saviour to receive his tryal,

3. That which was called the Lower City, becauſe it had more in it of the Valley, was alſo called the Daughter of Sion, becauſe built after it, and did in Majeſty and greatneſs exceed the Mother. For therein upon Mount Moriah, ſtood the Temple of Solomon (whereof more anon) and betwixt it and Mount Sion, on another Hill, the Palace which he built for his VVife the Daughter of Ægypt; and that which he founded for himſelf, from which by an high Bridge he had a way unto the Temple. Weſt hereof on a lofty rock over-looking the City, ſtood the Royal Palace of the Princes of the Maccabæans, reedified and dwelt in by King Agrippa (though of Herods race:) and not far off the Theatre of Herods building, adorned with admiral Pictures, expreſſing the many Victories and Triumphs of Auguſtus Cæſar. In this part alſo ſtood Mount Acra, and on that once a Citadel built by Antiochus King of Syria, but razed by Simon, one of the Maccabæan Brothers, becauſe it over-topped the Temple; the houſe of Helena Queen of Adiabene, who converted from Paganiſm to Iudaiſm, had here her dwelling, and here died; and finally Herods Amphitheatre, capacious enough to contain 80000 people, whom he entertained ſometimes with ſuch ſhews and ſpectacles, as were in uſe amongſt the Romans. And in this part alſo on an high and craggy rock, not far from the Temple, ſtood the Tower of Baris, whereon the ſame Herod built a ſtrong and impregnible Citadel, in honor of Marc. Antonie, whoſe Creature ture he firſt was, called by the name of Antonius; having a fair and large Tower at every corner, two of them 50 Cubits high, and the other 70. afterwards garriſoned by the Romans, for fear the Iews preſuming on the ſtrength of the Temple, might take occaſion to rebel. Judæa.

4. As for the New City, which lay North to the City of Herod, it was once a Suburb only unto all the reſt; inhabited by none but mechanical perſons, and the meaneſt Tradeſmen; but after incompaſſed by Agrippa with a Wall of 25 Cubits high, and fortified with ninety Turrets. The whole City fenced with a ſufficient circumvallation on all parts thereof, having a Ditch cut out of the main Rock, as Joſephus an eye-witneſs writeth, ſixty foot deep, and no leſs than two hundred and fifty foot in breadth. Firſt built, ſay ſome, by Melchiſedeck the King of Salem; by the Jebuſites themſelves, ſay others: by whomſoever built, called at firſt Jebuſalem, afterwards Jeruſalem, with the change of one letter only: inlarged in time, when made the Royal Seat of the Houſe of David, to the magnificence and greatneſs before deſcribed, till it attained unto the compaſs of ſixty furlongs, or ſeven miles and an half. Unconquered for the firſt four hundred years after the entrance of the Children of Iſrael: and when David attempted it, the people preſumed ſo much on the ſtrength of the place, that they told him in the way of ſcorn, that the blind and the lame which they had amongſt them (as the Text is generally expounded) ſhould defend it againſt him. But as I think, the late learned Mr. Gregory of Chriſt-Church in Oxon, hath found out a more likely meaning of the Text than this, who telleth us, that the Iebuſites by the blind and lame (as they knew well the Iſraelites called blind and lame) did underſtand thoſe Tutelar Idols, on whoſe protection they relied (as the Trojans did on their Palladium) for defence thereof: and then the meaning muſt be this, thoſe Gods whom you of Iſrael call blind and lame, ſhall defend our Walls. Why elſe ſhould David ſay (had they meant it literally) that his ſoul hated the lame and the blind? 2 Sam. 5. 8. or why ſhould the people of Iſrael be ſo uncharitable, as to ſay that the blind and lame ſhould not come into the Houſe (or Temple of God) were it meant no otherwiſe? But notwithſtanding theſe vain hopes, the Town was carried under the conduct of Ioab, that fortunate and couragious Leader; and made the Royal ſeat of the Kings of Iudah.

Proceed we now unto the Temple built by Solomon, in providing the materials whereof there were in Lebanon 30000 workmen, which wrought by the ten thouſand every month; 70000 Labourers, which carried burdens; 80000 Quarry men, that hewed ſtones in the Mountains; and of Officers and Overſeers of the work, no leſs than 3300 men. The deſcription of this Stately Fabrick, we have in the firſt of Kings, cap. 6. 7. In the year of the World 2350 it was deſtroyed by Nebuchadnezzar at the taking of Hieruſalem: rebuilt again after the return from the Captivity; but with ſuch oppoſition of the Samarians, that the Workmen were fain to hold their Tooles in one hand, and their ſwords in the other, to repulſe, if need were, thoſe malicious Enemies. But yet this Temple was not anſwerable to the magnificence of the former; ſo that the Prophet Haggi had good occaſion to ſay to the people, cap. 1. ver. 3. Who is left amongſt you that ſaw this Houſe in her firſt glory? is it not in your eyes as nothing, in compariſon of it? Nor fell it ſhort thereof only in the outward ſtructure, but ſome inward Additaments. For it wanted, 1. The Pot of Mannah, which the Lord commanded Moſes to lay up before the Teſtimony for a Memorial, Exod. 16. 32. &c. 2. The Rod of Aaron, which only budded of all the Rods of the Princes of Iſrael, and was commanded to be kept before the (Ark of the) Teſtimony, for a token againſt Corah, Dathan, and Abiram, Num. 17. 10. 3. The Ark of the Covenant, the making whereof we have Exod. 25. 10. and the placing of it in the Oracle, or Sanctum Sanctorum, 1 Kings 6. 19. 4. The two Tables of the Law, writ by Gods own finger, and by Moſes laid up in the Ark of the Covenant, Exod. 40. 20. and Deut. 10. 5. And 5. The fire of Sacrifice, which came down from Heaven, mentioned Levit. 9. 24. 2 Chron. 17. 1. which by the Prieſt was to be kept continually burning, never to go out. This ſecond Temple, partly becauſe it was grown ruinous, partly becauſe it ſeemed not magnificent enough, but principally to curry favour with the Jews, Herod the Aſcalonite pulled down, and ſet up another in the place: making it not much inferiour (if at all) unto that of Solomon, but far ſuperiour to the other; immenſæ opulentiæ Templum, as Tacitus moſt truly called it. And this was it to which our Saviour did ſometimes vouchſafe his preſence.

But here we are to underſtand, that by the Temple is not meant the Fabrick only, or the houſe it ſelf; but alſo all thoſe ſeverall Courts with which encompaſſed, being four in number. That is to ſay, Atrium Sacerdotum, or the Prieſts Court, which was next unto the Temple; wherein ſtood the brazen Altar for the daily ſacrifice, and the Laver for the waſhing of the Prieſts and the Sacrifice alſo: into which Court might none enter but the Prieſt alone. 2. Then there was Atrium populi, or the Peoples Court, ſeparated from the other by a Wall of three Cubits height; to which the people did repair to perform their Sacrifices, to ſay their prayers, and to make payment of their vows. In the middle of this Court, did Solomon make a brazen Scaffold for the Kings his Succeſſors, 2 Chron. 6. 13. and afwards in imitation of his Porch built before the Temple, were many Porches built about it, for the people to repair into in rainy weather; which gave to this whole Court the name of Solomons Porch, whereof ſee John 10. 23. Acts 3. 11. Without that ſtood 3. Atrium Fœminarum, or the Womens Court, divided from the other, as is collected out of 2 Chron. 20. 5. in the time of Jehoſophat King of Judah; in which ſtood their Treaſury, or poor-mans Box, mentioned in the one and twentieth Chapter of Saint Lukes Goſpell: from whence this whole Court had ſometimes the name of Treaſury, as appeareth John 8. 20. where it is ſaid that theſe words ſpake JESUS in the Treaſury, that is to ſay in the Womens Court, where the Treaſury or Alm-Box ſtood. Betwixt theſe laſt was an Aſcent of 15 steps, on which the Levites used to sing those 15 Psalms, which do immediatly follow the hundred nineteenth Psalm; upon each step one: from whence they had the name of Psalmi Graduales, or Cantica graduum, i.e. the Psalms or Songs of degrees. And so far all was counted holy Ground, upon which none might tread but either natural Jews, or circumcised Proselytes, whom they called Proselyti fœderis, as before was said; or such of the other Sex (not natural Jewesses) who having received all outward initiations, had bound themselves unto the observation of the Law of Moses. 4. So was it not with the fourth and last Court, called Atrium Gentium, or the Court of the Gentiles; designed for the use of those Gentiles, whom they called Proselyti Portæ, bound only unto the keeping of the Precepts given the Sons of Noah. For in that, as unsanctified ground (though counted part of the Temple also) did they permit a market of sheep and oxen, the sale of Doves and Pigeons, and the Tables of money-changers, for the oblations of the people: stabling the poor Gentiles amongst their Cattel, and ranking them with the worst of men. And out of this Temple, or Court of the Temple, did CHRIST our Saviour cast the buyers and sellers, and overthrew the Tables of the money-changers; asserting it to its primitive and original use, which was to be an house of prayer for all the Nations. This last Court separated from the other by a wall of three Cubits height, adorned with certain pillars of equal distance, bearing this inscription, Μη δεῖ ἀλλόφυλον ἐντὸς τοῦ ἁγίου πορεύεσθαι, i.e. Let no Alien (or one that is no Jew) enter into the holy place, And to this wall it is that the Apostle alludeth, saying, He hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us (i. e. between the Jews and Gentiles) making one of twain, Ephes. 2. 14, 15. inferring hereupon, that the Gentiles are no more strangers and foreiners, but fellow-Citizens with the Saints, and of the houshold of God, v. 19.

But to go forwards with the Temple, having continued in the glories to which Herod brought it, not above 85 years, it was finally destroyed by Titus, the son of Vespasian, in the 69 year after Christs nativity. At what time the Temple of Delphos was utterly overthrown by Earth-quakes, and Thunderbolts from Heaven; neither of them ever since repaired, though much endeavoured. The concurrence of which two miracles evidently sheweth, that the time was then come in which God would put an end both to the Jewish Ceremonies, and Heathen Idolatries, that so the kingdom of his son might be all in all. For this destruction of the Temple of Hierusalem I may call a miracle, in regard it was done against the command of Titus; who was not only carefull to preserve it, before his Souldiers had put fire to it, but did all that possibly might be to quench it. His reason was, Ῥωμίων γὰρ ἴσως ἡ βλάβη, as Josephus hath it, because the loss thereof would redound so highly to the prejudice of the Roman Empire, in being deprived of such a glorious and magnificent structure. But do he what he could with his utmost industry, there was no quenching of it till it was consumed. And it adds somewhat to the marvel, that this should happen on the tenth day of August, on which day the first Temple had been burnt by Nebuchadnezzar. And certainly it is worth the noting (I hope I shall not be accounted superstitious for this observation) to see how happy or unfortunate, one and the same day hath been found unto divers persons. In the wars betwixt the French and Spaniards for the Realm of Naples, Friday was observed to be very lucky to that great Captain Gonsalvo; he having on that day given the French many notable overthrows. Wednesday is said to have been fortunate to Pope Sixtus the fifth; for on that day he was born, on the same made a Monk, on that day created General of his Order; on the same made Cardinal, then chosen to be Pope, and finally on the same inaugurated. To Henry the seventh of England, Saturday was observed to be very fortunate in all his actions; as was the 24 of February unto Charls the fifth, on what day soever: for on that he came into the world, and in that he took King Francis Prisoner at the battel of Pavie, and on the same received the imperial Crown. But to return unto the Temple, we find that on the Sabbath, or Saturday it was taken by Pompey, on the same by Herod, and on that also by Titus.

But go we forwards to Hierusalem as now it standeth, it lay in rubbish and unbuilt (after the destruction of it by Titus) till repaired by Adrian: and then the Temple not so much as thought of, till out of an ungodly policy, in the reign of Julian that Politick Enemy of the Church; who to diminish the infinite number of Christians by the increase of the Jews, began again to build this Temple. But no sooner were the foundations laid, but a terrible Earth-quake cast them up again, and fire from Heaven consumed the Tools of the Workmen, together with the Stones, Timber, and other materials. As for the City it self, after the desolation in it which was made by Titus, it was re-edified by the Emperour Ælius Adrianus, who named it Ælia, drave thence the Jews, and gave it to the Christians. But this new City was not built in the place of the old. For within this Mount Calvary is comprehended, which was not in the old before. As on the other side, a great part of Mount Sion, part of the City of Herod, and the Soyl where the New City stood, are left out of this: the ruins of the other still remaining visible, to shew the antient greatness and magnificence of it. To look upon it then as it stands at present, it is now only famous for the Temple of the Sepulchre, built by Helena (whom most report to have been daughter to Coylus a British King) Mother to Constantine the Great. Much adoe had the good Lady to find the place where the Lords body had been laid; for the Jews and Heathens had raised great hillocks on the place, and built there a Temple of Venus. This Temple being plucked down, and the earth digged away, she found the three Crosses, whereon our blessed Saviour, and the two Theeves had suffered. To know which of these was the right Cross, they were all carried to a woman, who had been long visited with sickness, and now lay at the point of death. The Crosses of the two Theeves did the weak woman no good, but as soon as they laid her on the Cross on which the Lord died, she leaped up and was restored to her former health. This Temple of the Sepulchre, even at the first building, was highly reverenced and esteemed, by the

Judæa.

Christians of these parts. And even untill our daies, it is much resorted to, both by Pilgrims from all the parts of the Romish Church, who fondly and superstitiously hope to merit by their journey: and also by divers Gentlemen of the reformed Churches, who travel hitherward, partly for curiosity, partly for love to the antiquity of the place, and partly because their generous spirits imitate the Heaven and delight in motion. Whosoever is admitted to the sight of this Sepulchre, payeth nine crowns to the Turkish Officers; so that this tribute only is worth to the Grand Signeur, eighty thousand Ducats yearly. The other building generally very mean and poor, if not contemptible. Built of flint stones, Low, and but one roof high; flat on the top for men to walk on, and fenced with battlements of a yard in hight to preserve them from falling: the under-rooms no better than vaults, where they repose themselves in the heat of the day. Some houses near the Temple of Solomon, and the Palace of Herod, adorned with Arches towards the Street, where the Passenger may walk drye in a showre of rain; but not many such: nor any thing but the ruins left of the antient buildings. The whole circuit of it reduced to two or three miles; and yet to those that take a survey thereof from some Hills adjoining, where the ruines are not well discerned from the standing edifices, it affordeth to the eye no unpleasing prospect. And as the place is, such is the people, inhabited for the most part by Artizans of the meanest quality, gathered together of the scum of divers Nations: the greatest part consisting of Moores, and Arabians; a few poor Christians, of all the Oriental Sects, which dwell there for devotion; and some Turks, who for the profit which they make of Christians, are content to stay in it. Insomuch that when Robert Duke of Normandy, being then not cured of his wounds, was carried into this City on the backs of some of this rascal people; he called to a Gentleman of his, who was going for England, and bad him say, that he saw Duke Robert carried into Heaven on the backs of Devils.

Come we now to the Tribe of LEVI, though indeed not reckoned for a Tribe, because not planted close together as the other were; nor had whole Provinces to themselves, but mingled and dispersed amongst the rest of the people; having forty eight Cities assigned them for their habitation, proportionably taken out of the other Tribes. So was it ordered by the Lord, partly that they being set apart for his service, might be at hand in every place to instruct the People; and partly to fulfill the Prophecy which he had spoken by Jacob, who had fore-signified to Levi at the time of his death, that he should be divided in Jacob, and scattered in Israel. The like fortune he had propheſied of Simeon also; of the accomplishment whereof, so far as it referred to him, and the dispersion of his Tribe, we have spoke before. Now to make up the number of the twelve Tribes, Joseph was divided into Ephraim, and Manasses; and the Levites were reckoned to belong unto that Tribe, within whose Territory, that City which they dwelt in, stood. Their maintenance was from the tenths or tithes, the first fruits, offerings, and Sacrifices of the people: and as it is in the eighteenth of Joshua, v. the seventeenth, The Priesthood of the Lord was their Inheritance. There were of them four kinds. 1. Punies or Tirones, which from their childhood, till the five and twentieth year of their age, learned the duty of their offices. 2. Graduates, ἀυλαὶ, which having spent four years in the study of the Law, were able to answer and oppose in it; 3. Licenciates, μεσαυλαὶ, who did actually exercise the Priestly function; And. 4 Doctors (Rabbins they use to call them) who were the highest in degree. For maintenance of whom, they had (as before is said) the tithes, first fruits, and offerings of all the rest of the People; besides the 48 Cities assigned for their habitation: which last, with the severall Territories appertaining to them, extending every way for the space of two thousand Cubits; seems to have been a greater proportion of it self, than any of the other Tribes (with reference to the small number of Levites) had in their possessions. Then for the Tithes, there was not only a full tenth set out of all kinds of increase; but such an imposition laid upon all sorts of grain, as came to more than a sixth part of the Crop it self. For first, out of six thousand bushels (and so accordingly in all after that proportion) a sixtieth part at least, (and that they termed the Thermah of the evil eye, or the niggards first fruits) was to be set forth as the first fruits of the threshing-floor; which was an hundred in the total. Out of the residue being five thousand and nine hundred Bushels; the first Tithe paid unto the Levites, came to five hundred and ninety Bushels; and of the residue, being five thousand three hundred and thirty Bushels, five hundred thirty and one were paid for the second Tithe, unto the Priest, which ministred in the holy Temple; yet so, that such as would decline the trouble of carrying it in hand unto Hierusalem, must pay the price thereof at the Priests own estimate. Laying which several sums together, it appears demonstrably, that of six thousand Bushels (& sic de cæteris) there will accrew one thousand two hundred seventy and one Bushels to the Priests and Levites; and but four thousand seven hundred seventy and nine to the Lord or Tenant; which is not fully a sixt part, as was said before. Then had they the first born of mankind and all unclean beasts, redeemed at a certain rate; the first fruits of Wine, Oyl, and Wool; the first fruits of the dough, and of the firstlings of clean Beasts (their bloud being sprinkled on the Altar, and the fat offered for a burnt offering) the Flesh remained unto the Priest. They had also the meat-offerings, the sin-offerings, the trespass-offerings, the shake-offerings, the heave-offerings, and the Shew-bread: as also of all Eucharistical Sacrifices the breast and the shoulder; of others the shoulder, the two cheeks, and the maw; and of the whole burnt-offering they received the Skin; besides the free gifts of the people, appearing thrice yearly before the Lord: and all this brought in unto them without charge or trouble. Which makes it evident, that they were far more liberally provided for, than the rest of the Tribes, though they had no whole Country allotted to them, as the others had. And so much for such parts of the Land of Palestine as were possessed in part, or wholly, by the Sonnes of Jacob; proceed we now to the Inheritance of the Sons of Esau.

IDUMÆA.

Idumæa.

IDUMÆA.

IDUMÆA, or the Land of EDOM, is bounded on the East and South, with Arabia Petræa; on the North, with Judæa; and on the Weſt, with the Mediterranean Sea. So called from the Edomites, or Children of Eſau, whoſe name is Edom, Gen. 36. 1. the Father of the Edomites, verſ. 43. by whom it was planted and poſſeſſed: or as others ſay, from the Idumæi, a people of Arabia; who in a mutiny being forced to forſake their Country, came and ſetled here. The firſt the more certain of the two, and therefore I adhere to that.

The Country towards the Sea ſide very fat and fruitfull; but where it bendeth towards Arabia, exceeding mountainous and barren. Heretofore it afforded Balm, not now: but ſtill it hath ſome ſtore of Palmtrees, for which much celebrated by ſome writers of antient times; as Arbuſto Palmarum dives Idume, in the Poet Lucan. Sandy, and full of vaſt deſarts, for which, and for the want of water, it is thought unconquerable. For though they have many Wells there for the uſe of the natives, yet to them only are they known, and not obvious at all to the eyes of ſtrangers, no not upon the ſtricteſt ſearch that can be imagined. But all places are not ſo well furniſhed, as appeareth by the ſad condition which the Kings of Judah, Iſrael, and Edom were fallen into, when they led their Armies through the Deſarts of this Country, againſt the Moabite, finding herein no water for man or beaſt: inſomuch that the King of Iſrael ſaid, Alas, that the Lord hath called theſe three Kings together, to deliver them into the hand of Moab, 2 Kings 3. 10. Not otherwiſe delivered out of this perplexity, but by a miracle from Heaven: God ſending them the next day an abundance of water, without wind or rain, or any other viſible means, ver. 17, 20.

The people antiently rude and barbarous, greedy of change in government, eaſily ſtirred to inſurrections, and in love with tumults. Profeſſed enemies to the Jews, till conquered by them: and when compelled by Hyrcanus to the Jewiſh Religion, they were at the beſt but falſe friends; and in the ſiege of Hieruſalem by Titus, did them more miſchief than the Romans. At this time ſubject to the Turk, and differ not much in life and cuſtome from the wild Arabians.

Rivers of note there can be none, where ſo little waters. One Lake it hath, though poſſibly it had been better had they been without it, now ſmall, and every day growing leſs; the paſſage being long ſince barred which it had to the Sea. Antiently, though then narrow, it was two hundred furlongs, or five and twenty miles long; bordered on each ſide by hills of ſand, which born by the winds into the water did ſo thicken the ſame, that it was not eaſie to be diſcerned from the dry land; inſomuch as whole Armies have been ſwallowed up in it. Thence called Barathrum by the Latines; The true name of it formerly was the Lake of Sirbon. By the Italians it is now called Lago di Teveſo, by the Natives Bayrema; the utmoſt bound of Paleſtine, where it joyneth on Ægypt.

The chief Mountains of it, are, 1. Mount Seir, the firſt habitation of Eſau, after he left his dwelling in the Land of Canaan, to make room for Jacob, as is ſaid Gen. 36. 7, 8. Not called ſo unleſs by Anticipation (a thing not unuſual in the Scriptures) till the coming of Eſau thither; the word Seir ſignifying hairy, or briſled, ſuch as Eſau is deſcribed to be, Gen. 27. 11. To this St. Hierom doth accord, deriving the name of Seir from Eſau, Sumpto ab autore nomine. His reaſon is, Seir quippe interpretatur hiſpidus & piloſus qualis Eſau fuit. So he in his Comment on Eſaiah, cap. 21. For the ſame cauſe, is the whole Country of Edom, ſometimes called Mount Seir in Scripture, by the name of this Mountain, as 2 Chron. 20. 10, 23. The 2d. hill of note is that called Caſſius, not far from the Lake of Sirbon, now nothing but an huge heap of ſand; formerly famous for a Temple of Jupiter, and the Sepulchre of Pompey the Great. Who being baſely murdered here (after his defeat near Pharſalia by Julius Cæſar) by the command of Ptolemy the younger, King of Ægypt, unto whom he fled (or rather by the command of Acrillus who then governed his Counſells) by the piety of a ptivate Souldier was here interred, in an obſcure and homely, but honeſt Sepulchre. The Sepulchre afterwards re-edified, and made more ſuitable to the man, by the Emperour Adrian. The piety of the Souldier not a whit the leſs for the coſt of the Emperour; in whoſe name Lucan had beſtowed this Epitaph, on that firſt Monument.

Hic ſitus eſt Magnus, placet hoc, Fortuna, Sepulchrum
Dicere Pompeii; quo condi maluit illum, Quam terrâ caruiſſe Socer.

Which may be Engliſhed to this purpoſe.

Here Magnus lies, Such, Fortune, is thy doom
That this vile earth ſhould be great Pompeys Tomb.
In which even Cæſars ſelf would rather have
His Son-in-Law interr'd, than want a grave.

Places

Idumæa

Places of moſt conſideration in it, 1. Dinhabath, the City of Bela, the firſt King of Edom. 2. Anith, the City of Hadad, and 3. Pan, the City of Hadar, two others of the Kings hereof: which three are mentioned Gen. 36. 32. 35. 39. 4. Berzamna, placed here by Ptolemy, ſuppoſed to be the ſame with Berſhabee in the Tribe of Simeon, the utmoſt border South-wards of the Land of Canaan, of which more there. 5. Caparorſa. 6. Gammararis, and 7. Elaſa, all of them mentioned by Ptolemy; which ſheweth them to be of ſome conſideration in thoſe times; though now forgotten with the former. 8. Anthedon, on the South-ſide of the River Beſor, oppoſite to Gaza in the Tribe of Simeon, which is ſituate on the Northern bank. A port Town, once of good repute, till defaced by Alexander King of the Jews: re-ediſied afterwards by Herod the Great, and named Agrippias, in honor of Agrippa the favourite and Son-in-law to Auguſtus Cæſar. 9. Roſſa, a Fort of conſequence, not far from Maſſada, before mentioned, when we were in Judæas; taken by Herod in his way to relieve that Caſtle. 10. Raphia, memorable for the great defeat which Ptolemy Philopater there gave unto Antiochus ſurnamed Magnus. 11. Rhinocurura, ſo called from a miſhap which befell the Inhabitants hereof, by mangling and defacing their noſes. By Pliny and Strabo called Rhinocurula; and at this time Pharamica. Memorable for an old but ill-grounded tradition, that here the world was divided by lots, betwixt the poſterity of Noah: and ſo conſiderable in the wars of the Holy Land, that it was ſtrongly fortified by Baldwin the firſt, to obſtruct the paſſage of ſuch forces as uſually came out of Egypt, to aid the Turks. 12. Oſtracine, now Stragioni; on the Sea-ſide beneath Anthedon, and in that part of the Country which from Mount Caſius hath the name of Caſiotis: aſcribed by Ptolemy to Egypt; but being they are both on the North of the Lake of Sirbon, more properly belonging to Paleſtina. But moſt of theſe being now buried in their ruins, there are left none but a few Caſtles and ſcattered Villages: the Villages inhabited for the moſt part by Arabians, the Caſtles garriſoned by Turks. The chief of which lying on the Sea, in the road to Egypt, are, 13. Hamones, a ſmall Caſtle not far from Gaza, uſed chiefly for a Toll-booth, to receive cuſtome of ſuch Merchants as paſs that way. 14. Hariſſa, a ſmall Caſtle alſo, ſerving ſpecially for the ſame uſe; but ſtronger, and of more importance becauſe near the Sea, from which not above two miles diſtant; and for that cauſe garriſoned with an hundred Souldiers: environed with a few houſes, by reaſon of the commodity of the water, which is ſweet and wholeſome; elſe little better than a Deſart. 15. Catio. another Caſtle, or rather Toll-booth, with a garriſon of about 60 Souldiers in it: ſeated in a place ſo deſert and unfruitfull, that nothing vegetable groweth in it, but a few ſtarved Palm-trees; The water which they have there, ſo bad and brackiſh, though eſteemed good enough for the common Souldiers; that all which the Captain drinketh is brought from, 16. Tina, a Town upon the Sea-ſhore, about twelve miles diſtant, and the laſt upon this Coaſt towards Egypt.

The firſt Inhabitants of this Country were the Horites, the Horites which dwelt in Mount Seir, as we read in Geneſis cap. 14. v. 6. that is to ſay, which dwelt in that hilly Country which afterwards was called Mount Seir. But whether it was ſo called from Eſaus dwelling here, as is ſaid before, or from Seir the Horite, mentioned Geneſis 36. 20. as perhaps may probably be ſuppoſed; need not now come into diſpute. Broken by Cherdorlaomer, and his Aſſociates, they were the more eaſily ſubdued by Eſau. Who leaving the Land of Canaan to his brother Jacob, Geneſis 6. 7, 8. becauſe thoſe parts in which they dwelt did not afford them room enough for their ſeveral Cattel; came into this Country; and having deſtroyed the Horites from before them, ſucceeded in their habitations, and dwelt there in their ſtead even unto this day, Deut. 2. 22. Tis true, we find Eſau in Mount Seir, before this remove: for it is ſaid, that Jacob at his firſt comming out of Meſopotamia, ſent Meſſengers before him to Eſau his brother, unto the Land of Seir, the Country of Edom, Gen. 32. 3. And hence a queſtion hath been moved, how Eſau dwelling there before Iacobs comming, can be ſaid to remove thither to make room for him. To this Sir Walter Ralegh and ſome others anſwer, that at the time when Jacob came out of Padan-Aram, Eſau dwelt in thoſe parts of the Mountains which lye on the Eaſt of Jordan, called afterwards Galaad and Mount Hermon, by which Iacob muſt needs paſs in his way to Canaan; which Mountains then were called by the name of Seir, and from thence Syrion by the Zidonians, or Phœnicians in the ages following: from whence driven by the Amorites at ſuch time as they vanquiſhed thoſe of Moab and Ammon, they were forced to ſeat themſelves on the South of Canaan, where Moſes found them. But with this I am by no means ſatisfied. For beſides that it maketh Eſau to carry a Mount Seir with him, whereſoever he went; it doth expreſſely differ from the plain words of Scripture, both in the occaſion, and the time of his ſetling there: the victories which the Amorites had over the Ammonites and Moabites, being then freſh and newly gotten, when Moſes with the children of Iſrael came into theſe parts; which was at the leaſt 200 years after Eſau did withdraw himſelf to the Land of Edom. And therefore I ſhould rather think, that Eſau finding himſelf diſtaſted by his Father and Mother, in regard of his Canaanitiſh mariages, and the hatred which he bare to Jacob; departed from them, and ſojourned in the South parts amongſt the Horites of Mount Seir; that thither Iacob ſent his Meſſengers, to make peace betwixt them, that the reconcilliation being made, Eſau returned unto the place where before he ſojourned; and having brought thence his children, cattel, and the reſt of his ſubſtance, fixed himſelf again near the houſe of his Fathers: and finally, that on Iſaacs death, finding his family increaſed, his heards and flocks augmented, and the reſt of his ſubſtance alſo doubled by the death of his Father; he thought it fit alſo to enlarge his dwelling, and ſo removed once more to Edom. A thing not needfull to be done had he dwelt in Galaad, Hermon, or any other part of that Mountainous Tract: conſidering the great diſtance betwixt thoſe Idumæa. Mountains and the City of Hebron, in which Isaac dwelt; nigh to which Iacob also had set up his dwelling.

But on what ground soever Esau left the possession of the land of Canaan, to his brother Iacob, certain it is, he did it not without some strong impulsions from the Spirit of God, by whom the possession of that Land was designed for Iacob; to whom the blessing and the birth-right had been both preferred. And though Esau over-ruled by Almighty God, seemed to have forgotten all displeasure against his brother: yet the quarrel began by them in the womb of Rebecca, brake out more violentlie in the time of their posteritie. Insomuch that Moses could by no means obtain a passage thorow Edom, into the Promised Land, though he sought it by fair address, and pressed it by all those motives and inducements, which a wise and an understanding man could have set before them. For though the King of Edom then being, seemed to pretend nothing but the safety of himself and his people; both which he might have hazarded (in all humane reason) by opening the closures of his Mountains, and letting in a Nation mightier than his own: yet it is possible there might be as much of stomach as worldly policy; and that as well the buying of the birth-right for so sleight a trifle, as the getting of the blessing by such fraudulent means, might not be forgotten. For he not only denyed them passage, and sent word expressely they should not go thorow; but came against them with much people and a strong band, as is said Numbers 20.20. But the Edomites could not for all this prevent their destiny, or make the word of God to be ineffectual; by which it had been signified, when they were yet in their Mothers womb, that the elder should serve the younger. Not verified in Esaus person, for Jacob called him his Lord Esau, professed himself to be his servant, and willingly submitted to his superiority; but in the issues of them both: then specially when David had subdued the Edomites, and made them homagers and vassals to the Crown of Judah. 2 Sam. 8. 14. Nor is less intimated in those words of the 60 Psalm, where it is said, Over Edom will I cast my shooe; it being a custome of old times to fling their shooes upon a Country conquered or designed for conquest. Projectio calceamenti super Regionem aliquam, denotat subjicere, as my Author hath it. And in allusion unto this, there is a story in the Chronicles of the Kings of Man, how Magnus King of the Isles sent his Embassadors to Murchard a King in Ireland, commanding him on the next Christmas day to carry openly the shooes of King Magnus upon his shoulders; in testimony, saith the story, that he was his Vassal. The casting of the shooe on a conquered Country, or the treading of it under feet, another ceremony of this nature mentioned Deut. 33.29. do come both to one, and signifie that vassallage or bondage, which such a captivated Country was reduced unto.

But on the other side, there was another part of the heavenly Oracle, which made for Edom: Isaac had signified to Esau, that though the blessing given to Iacob could not be revoked, and that he must content himself with being a servant to his brother for a certain season: yet there should one day come a time, in which he should not only break that yoak from off his neck, but obtain the dominion over him. Gen. 27. 40. The first part verified, when the Edomites revolted from the kings of Iudah, in the time of Ioram, or Iehoram, the Son of Iehosophat: and instead of a Vice-Roy sent unto them from the Court of Hierusalem, set up a king of their own Nation; never returning after that to the house of David. For though Joram made war presently upon them, and got the victory; yet he did not prosecute it unto any effect, nor beat them out of any of their strong holds, nor reduce any of their Cities unto his obedience: as if he had got honor enough in the eye of the world, by being master of the field; or shewing his abilities in command of a greater army, than the Edomites could bring against him. The like error was commited also by Amaziah, who by a vast army of 300000 fighting men, did no greater wonders, than the killing of 10000, and the taking of as many Edomites; but neither left garisons in any of their defensible places, nor reduced any part of their Country under his obedience. And for the latet part thereof, it was as punctually fulfilled in the time of Antipater an Idumæan, Herod the Ascalonite his Son, and their Successors; who in the decrepit age of the house of Iacob, became king of the Iews, and lorded over them with insolence and contempt enough.

Mean time to look upon the intermediate passages of their state and story: It seemeth that at first they were governed by Dukes, each having the command of those several families, of which they were the heads or Princes. But as ambition and power did prevail among them, the more potent having vanquished or awed the rest, took to himself the name of King: which by the names of their Fathers, and their several Cities in which they reigned, seem to have been chosen by election; or otherwise to come in by strong hand, as the sword could carry it. The names of which are thus set down in the book of Genesis.

The Kings of Edom.

1 Bela, the Son of Beor.
2 Jobab, the Son of Zerah.
3 Hasham, of the Land of Temani.
4 Hadad, the Son of Bedad, who warred against the Midianites, and vanquished them in the fields of Moab, Gen. 36. 35.
5 Samlah, of Masrekah.
6 Saul, of Rehoboth, by the River Euphrates.
7 Baal-Hanan, the Son of Achbor.

8 Hadar,

8. Hadar, the Son perhaps of Baal-Hanan, for I find no mention of his Father. After whose death, the heads of the several Families resumed the Government again; ruling over their own Tribes, without any one Soveraign or Supreme. And all these Kings they had, before there reigned any King in Israel, Gen. 36. 31. that is say, before any form of Supreme Government was established amongst them, in the person of Moses, called by the name of a King in the book of Deut. ch. 35. v. 5. But this distracted Government did not long continue, the Edomites being under a King again, at such time as the Children of Israel came out of Egypt: for it was unto the King of Edom that Moses sent Messengers from Kadesh, to desire a passage thorow his Country. Which being denied, and the Edomites in Arms to defend their passes, Moses forebore to force his way, though the nearest for him: partly because he had no mind to spend those forces in fighting with hills and desarts, which were designed for the conquest of another Country; but principally because God commanded him not to meddle with them, or to take so much as a foot of their Country from them, Deut. 2. 5. But David, upon whom lay no such obligation, having vanquished the Syrians, and other Nations round about him; followed his fortunes unto Edom, whom he overcame, and put Garrisons into all their Cities, and the Edomites became his servants. Governed from thenceforth by a Deputy or Viee-Roy (as is said before) till the time of Joram the Son of Jehosophat King of Judah; in whose Reign they revolted, as before was said. Never regained to that Crown, and but twice endeavoured; that so the word of God might be all in all. Only the Simeonites in the Reign of Hezekiah, wanting pasture for their Cattel, and room for themselves, seized on the parts that lay nearest to them, destroyed the Inhabitants thereof, and dwelt in their habitations, because there was pasture for their flocks, 1 Chron. 4. 39. Provoked herewith, and with the natural Antipathy which was between them, no people were more mischievously bent against Judah, than these Edomites were: no men so forward of themselves, to assist Nabuchadonosor against Hierusalem; none that so vehemently cryed Down with it, down unto the ground; none half so ready to set fire to the holy Temple. But they got little by this service to the Babylonians, their own thraldome following close upon that of Judah: with whom made fellow-subjects to the Chaldæans; as afterwards to the Persians, and Kings of Syria of the race of Seleucus. In the declining of that house, subdued by Hyrcanus the Son of Simon, the fourth of the Maccabæan Princes; by whom they were compelled to be Circumcised, and to receive the Law of Moses: not only reckoned after that, as a Province of the Iewish Kingdome, but as natural Jews. Which notwithstanding, and that the setting of that Crown on the head of Herod and his house, being originally Idumæans, might in all reason have extinguished their inveterate malice: yet was their hatred of that Nation as great as ever. Forgetting therefore how they had been rewarded by the Babylonians, they would needs aid the Romans against them also: putting themselves into Hierusalem, when besieged by Titus, only of purpose to betray it; joining with the seditious there, doing more mischief in the City than the enemy had done without; and finally, setting fire to the second Temple, as they had done unto the first. Subjected afterwards by the Romans, they followed the same fortune with the rest of Palestine. Idumæa.

Having thus gon thorow with the story of those neighbouring Nations which encompassed Canaan: it will be seasonable to look on the affairs of the Canaanites first, and after of the house of Iacob, who possessed their Country. First for the Canaanites, they descended from Canaan the son of Cham, who with his eleven sons were here settled immediatly after the confusion at Babel. Of those twelve (taking in the Father) five planted in Phœnicia, and the coasts of Syria, that is to say, Sidon, Harki, Arvadi, Semari, or Hamathi: the other seven in those parts which we now call Palestine, though not all of that; the Edomites, Moabites, Midianites, Ammonites, and Ituræans, being Occupants or Tenants with them. And of those 7 came those 7 Nations, which by Gods appointment were totally to be rooted out, viz. the Canaanites, the Amorites, the Hittites, the Iebusites, the Hivites, the Gergeshites, and the Perizites. But from which of the sons of Canaan these last descended, is not yet agreed on; unless perhaps they were descended of the Sinites, (not otherwise reckoned in this muster) and got the name of Perizites, on some new occasion. Governed at first by the chiefest of their several Families, with the names of kings; the number of which increased, as their Families were subdivided into smaller branches: insomuch as Ioshuah found 31 kings of the Canaanites only, besides what might descend from those who were setled in Phœnicia, and the borders of Syria. The most potent of those Nations were the Amorites, the Iebusites, and the Chanaanites properly so called. Of which the Amorites had not only inlarged their borders beyond Iordan, but in the reigns of Og and Sihon, ruling at the same time in their several parts, had thrust the Ituræans, Ammonites, and Moabites, out of most of their Countries: and so restored the same again to the race of the Emmims, and Zanzummims (of which line Og and the Kings of Bason were) who had been dispossessed thereof by the sons of Lot. These vanquished in the time of Moses, and their habitations assigned over to the Tribes of Reuben, Gad, and the one half-tribe of Manasses. The Canaanites properly so called, as they were the first which fought with the house of Iacob; so they were the last of all these people that contended with them. They first fought with them under the conduct of Arad their king, who thinking it more safe and prudent to encounter the enemy in an other mans Country, than to expect them in his own; gave battel unto Moses in the desarts of Moab: & having cut off some of the out-parts of his army, and taken a few Prisoners, he went home again. But Iabin, under whom they made their second onset, went to work more resolutely; and taking a time when the iniquities of that people cried aloud for vengeance, so prevailed against them, that he tyrannized over them for the space of 20 years. After which time, his army being discomfited by Barak, in the time of Debora; Sisera his great Captain slain by Iael the wife of Heber the Kenite, and most of his Cities taken and possessed by the Israelites; he perished himself in the close of that war: for it is said, that they prevailed against Iabin the King of Canaan, till they had de- Idumæa. destroyed him, Judg. 4. 24. As for the Jebusites, they were grown so formidable (at the time of the comming of the Hebrews) to the rest of their Neighbours, that their King Adonibezek bragged that he had cut off the Thumbs and great toes of 70 Kings, and made them eat the crums which fell under his Table. But being vanquished by Judah, he was served in the same kind himself by Iudah and Simeon, and carried to Hierusalem, where he died: the whole Country of the Iebusites, and the City of Hierusalem it self, the fortress of Mount Zion excepted only, being made a prey unto the Victor. And though the Iebusites held that fortress till the time of David, yet being they were only on the defensive side, and made no open war against those of Israel, I reckon the Canaanites as the last which did contend with them for the chief command.

The Canaanites thus conquered, and for the most part worn out of the Country, the Israelites succeeded in their possessions; according to the promise of God made to Abraham, renewed to Isaac, and confirmed to Jacob. Governed after the death of Moses and Josuah, by the Congregation of the Elders, as appears by many passages in the book of Iudg. the Judges (as the Scripture calleth them) not being the ordinary Magistrates, but raised up occasionally by God for some special purpose, according to the exigence of their affairs. Carrying in this a likeness unto the Dictators in the State of Rome. So that the government at the first was an Aristocratie; though to say truth, it rather was a Theocratie, as the Fathers call it; that is to say, a Government wherein GOD presided more immediately, than in other Nations. And thereupon when the people cryed out to Samuel to have a King, God said unto him, Hearken unto the voice of the people, for they have not rejected thee, but they have rejected me that I should not reign over them, 1 Samuel 8. 7. God was their king, and he had mightily reigned over them since they came out of Egypt; but they desired to have a King like other Nations, to go in and out before them, and to fight their battels; a king whom they might see with their bodily eyes, and converse with him in such manner as the people did, which dwelt round about them. And so came in the Monarchy or kingly Government, begun in Saul, but confirmed in David, the first a Benjamite, the second of the Tribe of Iudah; of which Iacob had fore-told at the time of his death, that the kingdome of his people should be vested in it. But there were only three in all, reckoning Saul for one, who had Dominion over the whole house of Israel; the kingdome after Solomons death, being rent in twain: ten of the twelve Tribes revolting unto Jeroboam the Son of Nebat; and only Benjamin and Judah, and so much of the Tribes of Dan, and Simeon, as lay intermingled with and in the Tribe of Iudah, remaining firm to Rehoboam the Son of Solomon, who misguided by some evil Counsellers which were about him, had given occasion to the breach. A breach that could never be soldered or made up again, notwithstanding the fair opportunities which were after offered, of uniting Iudah unto Israel (for so the two kingdomes were distinguished) in the time of Ioas; and rejoining Israel to Iudah, in the time of Asa. The opportunity offered to Asa king of Iudah for regaining the revolted Tribes, was the confusions which in his time had fallen out amongst them, by several factions; each challenging the privilege of making a king unto it self: Nadab the Son of Ieroboam being slain by Baasha, Ela the son of Baasha murdered by Zimri, Zimri deposed by Omri the Father of Ahab, and Tobni a Competitor against Omri also. During which time, as the people must needs suffer many great oppressions, which might make them think of their allegiance to the house of David: so could not Asa have wanted many fair advantages (had he made his best use of them) of working on that divided kingdome, and reducing it back unto this House. But there were two reasons which prevailed more against this re-union, than any that could be presented to invite them to it. First the imperiousness, and arbitrary Government of the kings of Iudah, putting to death without formality of Law, those that had displeased them, as in the case Shimei, Ioab, and Adonijah, in the daies of Solomon: and raising on the Subject what sums they pleased, though more for ostentation of their own magnificence, than the necessities of the State. Of which exactions Rehoboam the son of Solomon was so far from promising a release, or some mitigation at least; that he threatned to make them more than double what they had been formerly: and how knew they, but that Asa, and all such as descended from him, might be of the same temper also, and act according to those Principles which their Fathers left them. Whereas the kings of Israel holding by no other title than the love of their people, and the moderate and regular form of their government over them; had put their mouths in such a tast of the sweets of libertie, and made them so much masters of their own both lives and fortunes, that Naboth durst deny his vineyard to Ahab, though offering full compensation for it; and Ahab durst not question the life of Naboth, but by suborning witnesses to accuse him of blasphemy. So that the present confusions under which they suffered, by the change and violent death of so many kings one after another, being only temporatory, and not likely to continue long, were no perswasions unto them to accept of Asa, and much less to offer themselves unto him; who conceived all adversity to be far more tolerable, than the weighty Scepter of that house. And there was something also of preceding profit, which swaied the business. The people were obliged by the Law of Moses to make 3 chargeable journeys yearly to Hierusalem, to worship there in the Holy Temple; and to pay a double tenth yearly out of their estates (beside offerings and other casualties) to the Priests and Levites. Jeroboam out of an ungodly policy, fearing these frequent journeys unto Hierusalem might be an occasion of reducing them to the house of David, released them of that charge and trouble, by setting up a new form of worship: erecting golden Calves for them in Dan, and Bethel; and leaving every man unto the liberty of his own opinion, so it tended not to the establishment of the old Religion. And on the other side the Levites which dwelt amongst them, and received their Tithes, not willing to conform these new impieties, and finding that their Ministry was no longer usefull, withdrew themselves into the king-

Kingdom of Judah, and left the antient places of their habitations: by means whereof, the people were releaſed of thoſe payments alſo. If they returned again to their old obedience, and accepted Aſa for their King, they muſt return again alſo to their old Religion; the golden Calves of their own imaginations and inventions, muſt no more be worſhipped: and (which no doubt prevailed moſt on the common people, who like that Religion beſt which coſts them nothing) the antient payments to the Prieſts, and Levites, muſt come up again. Rather than ſo, they were reſolved to ſuffer yet a little longer, to pleaſe themſelves in expectation of more ſetled times: and ſo no falling off to Aſa, though as moderate and religious a Prince as they could have wiſhed for, had they had power of faſhioning a King to their own deſires. Now as this opportunity of rejoyning Iſrael unto Judah, proved unſucceſsfull unto Aſa, ſo did the like of uniting Judah unto Iſrael, prove as unprofitable unto Joas the Son of Jehoahaz, and grand-child of Jehu King of Iſrael, who being provoked by Amaziah King of Judah, made war upon him; and not only diſcomfited him without battel, and took him priſoner without blows, but led him captive to the very walls of Hieruſalem; and by his authority, got the gates thereof to be opened to him. But not contented with his honour, (greater than ever had befallen to the Kings of Iſrael) he cauſed 400 Cubits of the wall to be broken down; thorow which breach he entred triumphantly in his chariot, carrying the unhappy Prince before him: and being entred, ſacked both the Royal Palace and the Holy Temple. This was the opportunity which was given to Ioas, of uniting Judah unto Iſrael; and this the loſs of it. For the people, otherwiſe like enough to have accepted him for their King, as a Prince of whoſe noble Acts they had heard much ſpeech; were ſo exaſperated by theſe raſh and unſeaſonable outrages, that they looked upon him as a Sacrilegious Church-Robber, whom the Holy Altars were not ſafe from; and as a covetous and ungoverned Tyrant, not able to concoct the fullneſs of his own proſperities. If he were thus unſatiable in his covetouſneſs, and inſupportable in his pride, when he was a Candidate for their Kingdom; when in all common prudence he ſhould have ſought their loves, and inſinuated into their good opinions, by eaſing them of former taxes, and ſhewing them fair hopes of his moderate government: what muſt they look for when their Towns were fill'd with garriſons, Hieruſalem ſtuffed with armed troops; and all the Princes of the houſe of David, from whom they might expect Redemption from cruel bondage, deſtroyed or baniſhed, or otherwiſe made unable to afford them ſuccours? Rather than ſo, they were reſolved to riſe as one man againſt him, and let him ſee, that neither their Army was ſo ſcattered, nor themſelves ſo cowed, but that they durſt adventure it to a farther tryal. The fear of which made Joas ſenſible of the loſs of his opportunity: and ſo content with hoſtages for his ſafe retreat, he returned home again without other benefit of his victory, than the ſpoil and honour. And that this poſſibly might be the motive of his going back, without putting the ſucceſſe of the affair to a further hazard, may be made probable by the like occurrence in the ſtory of Guicciardine, which in brief is this. Peter de Medicis had very weakly opened the gates of Florence to Charls the eighth, then in his paſſage towards Naples. Charls entreth it triumphantly as a conquered City, armed in compleat manner, and his lance on his thigh; his whole Army with him. Many inſolencies being committed by the French, the Citizens prepare to fight in defence of their liberties. Charls willing to go forwards on his march towards Naples, propounds conditions in writing: but ſo intollerable, that Peter Capponi one of the chief Citizens catching the papers out of the Kings Secretaries hands, and tearing them before his face, Do you, ſaith he, ſound your trumpets, we will ring our bells, and ſee what will follow. Which ſtout and peremptory dealing did ſo daunt the French, that they condeſcended upon very eaſie terms to abandon the City; and reſtore all the places appertaining unto their eſtate, which were then in his power. The like conſideration probably might prevail with Joas, as did then with Charls; and prompt him not to fight with an inraged multitude in the ſtreets of a City, where he could make no uſe of his horſe: and where he might be more galled with women and children, throwing ſtones or darts out of their windows, and from the tops of their houſes; than with an armed enemy in the open field. Nor wanted Joas an example of this kind, in the times before him; even that of Abimelech, in the book of Judges: who having taken the Town of Thebet, and forced all the men and women into the Caſtle, was ſlain there by a peece of a Mill-ſtone, thrown at his head from one of the Turrets of it by the hands of a woman. Idumæa

To proceed further in the ſtory of theſe ſeveral Kings, or recapitulate the ſumme of their principal actions (as in other places we have done) may be thought unneceſſary: the Scripture being in the hands of all ſorts of perſons, in which their actions and ſucceſſions are at large contained. So that I only ſhall ſubjoyn their names, with the time of their reigns, and the year of the world in which they did begin their Empire: leaving the reſt unto the induſtry and ſearch of the Chriſtian Reader, of whoſe acquaintance with the Scriptures I dare make no queſtion. This only I premiſe as concerning the Judges, that the time of their continuance in that authority, is not to be meaſured from the time of their coming to it, til the entrance of the next Succeſſor, as in that of the Kings: theſe being occaſionally raiſed by Almighty God, for ſome preſent ſervice, and no ſtanding or eſtabliſhed Magiſtrates; except Moſes and Ioſuah only, who held the government during life, and managed it as abſolute Princes.

3110	12 Ioaſh, the Son of Iehoahaz. 16.
3126	13 Ieroboam II. the Son of Ioaſh. 41.
3178	14 Zachariah, the Son of Ieroboam the ſecond, after an Interregnum of 11 years ſuc-

3141 10 Azariah, the Sonne of Amaziah, called alſo Uzziah; ſmote with a Leproſie by the Lord. 52.

3192 11 Iotham, the Son of Uzziah, or Azariah. 16.

3208 12 Achaz, the Son of Iotham, in whoſe time, and on whoſe occaſion, the kingdom of Damaſcus was ruined by Tiglath Pileſer king of Aſſyria; and the Tribes on the farther ſide of Iordan led into captivity. 16.

3224 13 Hezekiah, the Sonne of Ahaz, a religious Prince; in whoſe time the kingdom of the ten Tribes was deſtroyed by the Aſſyrians, and that of Aſſyria, by the Babylonians.

ſucceeded in the Throne of his Father: ſlain at the end of 6 moneths by 15 Shallum, who at the moneths end was ſlain by 3178 16 Menahem, the Son of Gadi. 10.

3188 17 Pekahiah, the Son of Menahem; ſlain by 3190 18 Pekah, the ſon of Remaliah; ſerved in the ſame kind after a reign of 20 years by 3210 19 Hoſeah, the Son of Ela; in the fifth year of whoſe reign, and the 18 year from the death of Pekah, Salmanaſſer king of Aſſyria, having by a ſiege of three years carried the City of Samaria, deſtroyed the kingdom of Iſrael, and led the greateſt part of the people into Captivity.

3253 14 Manaſſes, the wicked Son of the good King Hezekiah, reſtored Idolatry, and put to death the Prophet Eſaiah, for oppoſing his irreligious courſes. 55.

3308 15 Amon, the ſon of Manaſſes, and as bad as he; ſlain by a conſpiracy of his Servants, when he had reigned but two years only.

3310 16 Joſiah, the ſon of Amon, a right godly King; unfortunately ſlain by Pharaoh Necoh king of Egypt, at the battel of Megiddo. 31.

3341 17 Jehoahaz, the ſon of Ioſiah, a king of three moneths only, depoſed and ſent Priſoner by Pharaoh Necoh, to Riblah in the land of Hamath, ſince called Antiochia.

18 Jehoiakim, the ſon of Ioſiah, and half Brother of Iehoahaz, advanced unto the Throne by Necoh, who changed his name from Eliakim, by which he formerly was called, into that of Jehoiakim. 11.

3351 19 Iehoiachia, or Iechoniah, the ſon of Iehoiakim, at the end of three moneths led captive unto Babylon, with his Wives and Mother, and the great Officers of the Realm, by Nebuchadnezzar.

20 Zedekiah, another of the ſons of Joſiah, and brother by the whole blood of Jehoahaz, made king by Nebuchadnezzar in the place of Jehoiachin, or Iechoniah; his name being changed from Mattaniah, by which called before. But rebelling againſt his Benefactor, contrary to the Counſel of the Prophet Jeremy, he was taken Priſoner in the 11th. year of his reign, Hieruſalem deſtroyed, the Temple ruinated, and the People carried Captive to the land of Babylon, A. M. 3362. where they lived in exile 70 years. Which time expired, Cyrus the king of the Perſians, gave them leave to return to their Coutry, and to re-edifie their City and Temple. Which work being finiſhed, by the encouragement of Ezra, Nehemiah, and Zorobabel; and the Nation again ſetled in ſome part of their old poſſeſſions; they were after governed by their High-Prieſts, and the Counſel of the Elders, which they called the Sanhedrim, the High-Prieſt bearing the chief ſtroke, and being looked on as a man of the greateſt power. And therefore I will here ſubjoyn the Catalogue of ſo many of them, as governed the affairs of this Country, from the Return of the People from the Captivity of Babylon, till the time of the Maccabees; who managed the eſtate hereof both as Prieſts and Princes, till their ſubjection by the Romans.

The High-Prieſts of the JEWS after the Captivity.

A.M.

3427 1 Ioſuah, the High-Prieſt at the time of the Return, aſſiſtant to Zorobabel in re-building the Temple, which he lived not to finiſh; though continuing (as ſome ſay) in the Government 100 years. But I believe rather, that the names of his Succeſſors being loſt, the whole time is aſcribed to him.

3530 2 Joiakim, ſaid to be the ſon of Joſuah, in whoſe time, by the diligence of Ezra and Nehemiah, the Temple was finiſhed, and the worſhip of God reſtored.

3580 3 Jonathan, or Johanan. 30.

3610 4 Jaddus, who entertained Alexander the Great, coming to Hieruſalem (of whom more anon) the brother of that Manaſſes, for whoſe ſake, and on whoſe occaſion, the Temple on Mount Garazim, was built by Sanballat, with the leave of Alexander. 20.

3630 5 Onias ſucceeded Iaddus, as Iaddus had done Ionathan; not by birth (as formerly) but by the Election of the People.

3651 6 Simon, ſurnamed Iuſtus. 9.

3660 7 Eleazer, the brother of Simon. 32.

3692 8 Mene-

3692 8 Menelaus, the brother of Eleazer, and Simon.
3718 9 Onias II. 14.
3732 10 Simon II. 10.
3742 11 Onias III. the ſon of Simon the 2d.
3787 12 Iaſon, the Brother of Onias the 3d.
3789 13 Menelaus II. the brother of Iaſon, in whoſe time the Temple was profaned by the Syrians, at the command of Antiochus Epiphanes.
3794 14 Alcimus, under whoſe Government the Maccabees began to appear in defence of their Country, and Religion, by whom ſucceeded in the office of High-Prieſt, after his deceaſe. Among theſe none of greater note than Iaddus, High-Prieſt at ſuch time as Alexander the Great having conquered Syria, marched towards Hieruſalem, and was encountred by this Iaddus in his Prieſtly veſtments; aſſuring him in the name of the moſt high God, and making it demonſtrable from the Prophecy of Daniel, that he ſhould proſper in his enterprize againſt the Perſians. An hope which Alexander did imbrace with the greater confidence, becauſe (as he affirmed to Parmenio his chief Commander) he had once at Dia, a City of Macedon, ſeen in a dream or viſion ſuch a perſon as Iaddus was, ſo habited, and profeſſing the ſame one God; by whom he was encouraged to purſue the action which he had in hand, with aſſurance of victory. And upon this the Iews were ſo much favoured by him, that he gave them leave to live according to their own Laws, and to enjoy with freedom their own Religion. But it held only for his own time. For ſhortly after his deceaſe, they were on both ſides plagued by the kings of Egypt, and Syria, who ranſacked their Cities, ſlaughtered their People, made havock of their goods, and compelled many of them both to eat of forbidden meats, and offer ſacrifice unto Idols. At the laſt God raiſed up Mattathias, and his five ſonnes to reſiſt theſe inſolencies; who in the reign of Antiochus Epiphanes king of Syria, undertook the protection of the People, and gave unto the Syrians many notable overthrows, inſomuch that the Iews made choice of Iudas ſurnamed Maccabæus (the eldeſt of the five brethren) for their Prince or Governour.

The MACCABÆAN Princes of IEWRY.

A.M.

3799 1 Iudas Maccabæus, one of the nine Worthies, vanquiſhed three great and puiſſant Armies of the Syrians, conducted by Apollonius, Gorgias, and Lyſias, men of great renown, being Commanders of the forces of Antiochus Epiphanes, before mentioned.
1805 2 Ionathan, the brother of Iudas, vanquiſhed the forces of Bacchides and Alcimus, Captains of Demetrius king of Syria; and after many notable exploits and deeds of Arms, was treacherouſly murdered by Tryphon, aſpiring at that time to the Syrian Diadem.
3823 3 Simon, the brother of Iudas and Ionathan, ſubdued the Cities of Gaza, Ioppe, and Iamnia, and cleared Iudæa of the Syrians: perfidiouſly ſlain in the courſe of his fortune, by his Son-in-law Ptolemy. 8.
3831 4 Iohannes Hyrcanus, the third ſonne of Simon (his two other Brethren being in the power of Ptolemy) ſucceeded in the Government. He deſtroyed the Temple on Mount Garazim, conquered Alſamaria, and ſubdued the Idumæans, compelling them to be Circumciſed; transferred the war into Syria, and dying left the Sovereignty to his eldeſt ſon Ariſtobulus.

The MACCABÆAN kings of IUDAH.

3862 1 Ariſtobulus, cauſed himſelf to be crowned, and was the firſt king of Iudah after the Babylonian captivity; he ſtarved his mother, and ſlew Antigonus his brother.
3863 2 Alexander, the brother of Ariſtobulus, exceedingly inlarged the kingdom of Iewrie; by the conqueſt of all Ituræa, and ſome parts of Syria; but was withall ſo great a Tyrant, that he cauſeleſly ſlew of his own Subjects fifty thouſand in battel; and commanded 800 of his principal enemies to be hanged before his face, he left behind him 2 ſons: Hyrcanus who was himſelf ſlain by Herod after all his troubles, leaving no iſſue male behind him; and Ariſtobulus the father of Alexander, and of Antigonus, of whom more anon, of which two Alexander was the Father of another Ariſtobulus, the moſt beautifull Prince of all his time, and of Mariamne the Wife of Herod, by whoſe command they were moſt villanouſly murdered.
3905 3 Alexandra, by ſome called Solome, the wife of Alexander, following the counſell of her husband at the time of his death, committed her ſelf and her Children into the hand of the Phariſees, then in great power and credit amongſt the people; by means whereof ſhe procured an honourable burial for her husband, obtained the kingdom for her ſelf, and finally left it to her Children, whoſe diſagreements cauſed the ruine of this famous Family.

4 Hyrcanus,

3899. 4. Hyrcanus, elder ſonne to Alexander a Prince of weak parts and of little action, and therefore at the firſt diſturbed in his ſucceſſion by his younger brother Ariſtobulus; but was at length firmly eſtabliſhed in his Throne, by Pompey: who carried Ariſtobulus with his ſonnes, Alexander and Antigonus, captives to Rome; from whence Alexander eſcaping out of priſon, troubled the quiet of his Countrey, till he was ſuprized by Gabinius, and ſlain by Scipio, two of Pompeys Captains: after whoſe death, Antigonus by the aid and power of the Parthians, deprived Hyrcanus of his Kingdome, and cut off his eares; But Revenge ſuddenly followed this villany; he being not long after ſlain by Marcus Antonius, and his Kingdom given to a ſtranger. As for the unfortunate Hircanus the rightfull Prince of this Country, he remained priſoner for a time amongſt the Parthians, till hearing of the death of Antigonus, he returned into Iewry, and lived contentedly under the Government of Herod, of whoſe greatneſs he had layed the firſt foundation, and was by him in fine moſt wickedly murdered.

The Idumæan Kings and Princes of Jewry.

A. M:

3940. I. Herod the Aſcalonite, ſurnamed the Great, ſonne of Antipater an Idumæan, was by Mark. Antony created, and by Auguſtus confirmed King of Jewry; under whom that Kingdome was more enlarged, and in greater ſplendour, than ever it had been in the time of David. A Prince of great magnificence, but of great vices. During his reign, the Scepter being now departed from

A.C. Judah, the Lord CHRIST was born.

6. 2 Archelaus, eldeſt ſonne of Herod at the time of his death, ſucceeded with the title of King but in truth and reality poſſeſſed onely of a Tetrarchie, or fourth part of the Kingdome, though the beſt and largeſt of the four, containing Judæa, Samaria and Idumæa. The reſt of Herods Kingdome was divided into three other Tetrarchies, i.e. the Tetrarchie of Galilee and Petræa, given to Herod Antipa; Secondly that of Ituræa, given to Philip, another of the ſonnes of Herod; And thirdly, That of Abilene, conferred on Lyſanias. Baniſhed into France, his Tetrarchie was made a Province of the Roman Empire; governed by Pontius Pilate, at our Saviours Paſſion.

16. 3. Herod II. ſurnamed Antipas, Tetrarch of Galilee and Petræa, on the baniſhment of Archelaus, ſucceeded him, as chief of the Herodian family, but not in his Tetrarchie; and at laſt followed him in his baniſhment alſo. This is he who murdred Iohn Baptiſt, and in whoſe time CHRIST ſuffered.

40. 4. Herod III. ſurnamed Agrippa, in honour of Agrippa the ſon in law, and moſt truſty favourite of Auguſtus Cæſar Nephew to Herod the Great, by his ſon Ariſtobulus begotten on Mariamne of the race of the Maccabees; was by Caligula firſt inveſted in the Tetrarchy of his Uncle Philip, with the title of King, and next in that of Antipas alſo; and finally by Claudius, in that alſo of Lyſanias; ſome part of the Tetrarchie of Archelaus being added unto his dominions. This was the man that murdered Iames, and impriſoned Peter; and in the end was ſtricken by an Angel, and devoured by wormes.

47. 5. Agrippa Minor, ſon of Herod Agrippa, was he before whom Saint Paul pleaded in defence of the Goſpel; and the laſt which had the title of King of the Iews: for in his time the City of Hieruſalem was deſtroyed by Titus, and the whole Kingdom made a Province of the Roman Empire. Anno 73.

And here it is to be obſerved, that when Salmanaſſar had ſubdued and captivated the ten Tribes of Iſrael, he ſent new Colonies of his own to plant this Countrey; that ſo fruitful and well-ſituate a part of his Empire might yield its juſt tribute, and not lye open to the fury of the next Invader. But the Romans not having (it ſeemeth) ſo much policy or providence, as thoſe whom they accounted barbarous; having laid the Countrey deſolate, left it unfurniſhed of new Colonies: whereby the Perſians, next the Saracens, and after them the Turks, entring the Roman Empire at this door; have ſucceſſively driven the Romans out of the whole houſe. Now that we may the better perceive how the Romans had weakned, and almoſt utterly rooted out the Iewiſh Nation, we will relate ſome of their particular maſſacres: which were not more cruelly inflicted on them by the enemy, then juſtly deſerved by themſelves; they whiſhing, though (I ſuppoſe) not deſiring, that the innocent Bloud of our Saviour ſhould be on them and their children. Firſt then the inhabitants of Cæſarea ſlew of the Iews in one day, about 20000, and ſuch as fled were took and impriſoned by Florus the Roman Lieutenant of Iudæa. To revenge this ſlaughter, the Iews ſet upon the Syrians; in which ſkirmiſh 13000 of them were ſlain. The people of Alexandria put 50000 of them to the ſword; they of Damaſcus, 10000; Antonius a Roman Captain, ſlew in Aſcalon 10000 of them; and Geſtius another Captain, 8040 perſons. Now to come to the wars here managed by Veſpaſian. This Veſpaſian in the ſiege of Aphaca, ſlew and took priſoners, 17130 perſons; In Samaria, 11600. perſons; in Iotopata, 42200 perſons: In Ioppa, ſo many killed and drowned themſelves, that the Sea threw up again 4200 dead bodies; and the reſt ſo totally periſhed, that there remained none to carry tidings unto Hieruſalem, of the loſs of the Town. In the City of Tarichea, were ſlain, and made captives, 45000 perſons; beſides thoſe which were given to the King Agrippa. In Gamala there periſhed 90000. and none left alive but only two women: In Gaſcala 5000. men dyed by the ſword; in the City of Gadera there were ſlain 32200, beſides an infinite number of ſuch as had drowned themſelves. In Hieruſalem it ſelf, there died 1100000 of them, partly by the ſword, and partly by the famine; the worſer enemy of the two, there were found 2000 in prives and ſinks; and 9700 taken priſoners, inſomuch that 30 Iews were ſold for a penny. So punctual was the Divine Iuſtice in retaliating to this wretched people, according to the meaſure of their iniquities; that they who bought their Saviour for thirty pence, ſhould be ſold at thirty for a peny in the open market.

Now that Jeruſalem was able to contain ſuch a number of people, is evident, in that when Ceſtius was Lieutenant of Jewry, the High-Prieſt did at his requeſt, number the people which came thither to eat the Paſchal Lamb; and found them to be two millions and ſeven hundred thouſand living ſouls, all ſound and purified: For to leapers, or men having a flux of ſeed, or women in their monethly terms, or to ſtrangers, it was not lawful to eat of it. And when Titus laid ſiege to the City, it was in the feaſt of the Paſſover, when moſt of the people were there aſſembled; God (as it were) having thus impriſoned them. All theſe maſſacres, beſides divers others which I have omitted, and infinite number which were ſlain in the fields and villages, which drowned themſelves, and which were privately made away, amounting all to almoſt 2000000 of people, hapned in the compaſs of four years; beginning at the 12 of Nero, and ending at the 2 of Veſpaſian; yet was not the whole Nation rooted out, till the year 136. For then this miſerable people, having ſtirred two notable rebellions; the one under Trajan, and the laſt under Adrian the Emperors: were generally baniſhed their native Countrey, and never again permitted to inhabit it, otherwiſe then as ſtrangers. After this diſſolution, the Jews were diſperſed all over the world, and eſpecially in Spain, where Adrian commanded many of them to dwell: yet they found every where ſo little favor, that having divers times been put to grievous mulcts and ranſoms, they were at laſt thruſt out of moſt of the Kingdoms of Europe alſo. They were baniſhed out of England by Edward the firſt, Anno 1290 Out of France, by Philip the Fair, 1307. Out of Spain, by Ferdinand the Catholique, 1492. Out of Portugal by Emmanuel, 1497. Out of Naples and Sicily, by Charls the fift, 1539 Yet are they found in great numbers in the Romiſh parts of Germany and Poland, in moſt Cities of Italy, eſpecially Rome it ſelf, where there are no leſs then 15000. or 20000 of them; and alſo in the Popes Countrey of Avignion. The reaſon why they are permitted to live thus under the Popes noſe, is pretended to be an expectation of their converſion, which is a meer pretence indeed; the true reaſon being the benefit hence ariſing to his Holineſs coffers: the hopes of their converſion being very ſmall, and the means leſs. For beſides the ſcandal, datum & acceptum, by the Papists fond worſhipping of Images, ſo peremptorily contrary to the firſt table of the Law: they are not permitted to ſee any book of the Chriſtian Religion, no not ſo much as the New-Teſtament. And (which worketh much upon men of their metal) becauſe at their converſion they muſt quit all their goods unto the Church, as being ill-gotten, and by conſequence the works of the Devil, which in their Baptiſm they promiſe to renounce. They have alſo a Synagogue at Amſterdam, and are pretty thick ſpred over the Dominions of the Turks: who notwithſtanding ſo hate them for crucifying of CHRIST, that they uſed to ſay in deteſtation of a thing, I would I might dye a Jew. Neither will they permit a Jew to turn Turk, unleſs he be firſt baptized. And though their multitudes be ſo great both in Theſſalonica, and Conſtantinople, that it is conceived they do amount to the number of 160000 perſons; yet are they not only contemned and hated, but there, and in all other places of their habitation, upon every tumultuous aſſembly of the common people, and conſtantly every Eaſter, whereſoever they be, in danger of death. Inſomuch that if a Jew do but ſtir out of doors betwixt Maundie Thurſday at noon, and Eaſter Eve at night; the Chriſtians of the Eaſt amongſt whom they dwell (though far fewer in number) will be ſure to ſtone them; becauſe at that time, they buffeted, derided, and in fine crucified their Saviour. Hated in all the parts of the Turks Dominions, becauſe imployed as Publicans in gathering and enhauncing the publike tributes, which they exact with all ſeverity that may be, and improve unto the moſt. And no leſs hated in all parts of the the Chriſtian world, as enemies to the Croſs of CHRIST: ſo unclaimably addicted to their ancient Judaiſm, and ſo abhorring from the converſation of other men; that is not poſſible that they ſhould reap any other harveſt, then contempt and ſcorn, from thoſe amongſt whom they dwell.

To give you their Character in brief. They are a people which know how to comply with the times, and the condition which they live in; eſpecially if their profit be concerned in it: reviled like dogs, and uſed like ſlaves, yet never ſhew ſo much as an angry countenance. A Nation which will thrive whereſoever they come, but moſt by uſury and brocage; not lending any thing but on pawns, and thoſe once forfeited, never more redeemable. The beſt of both Sexes ſaid to have an unſavory rankneſs, not incident (if not cauſed by ſluttiſhneſs) to other people: from whom as different in their habit, as in their Religion. And as for that, they retain ſtill Circumciſion, as the bade and cognizance of their Nation; but mingled with many ceremonies not preſcribed by the Law, nor obſerved by the Antients: placing a void chair for the Prophet Elias, whom they believe to be preſent, though unſeen, at the ſolemnity. And upon this they are ſo beſotted, that they conceive the female ſex uncapable of eternal life, becauſe not capable of Circumciſion; and therefore uſe to name them with no other ceremony, then at the ſix weeks end to have ſome yong wenches lift up the Cradle with the childe in it; which ſhe that ſtandeth at the head, giveth the name unto. Of their Sabboth ſo extreamly doting, that they have added to the ſuperſtitions left them by the Phariſees: And herein they are ſo preciſe, that if a Jew travel on the Friday, and in the evening fall ſo ſhort of his journeys end, that it amounts to more then 2000. Cubits, or ſix Furlongs, which they account a Sabbath-days journer; there muſt he ſit him down and keep his Sabboth, though in a wood, or field, or the high-way ſide, without fear of winde or weathes, of Thieves or Robbers, and without taking order for meat or drink: periculo latronum prædonumq; omni, penuria item omni cibi potuſq; neglectis, as Buxdorfius hath it. And ſo far have they gone in deſpight of Chriſt, as to declare it unlawful to lift the Ox or Aſs out of a ditch; permitted in the ſtricteſt times of Phariſaical rigor. So pertinacious in retaining the difference of meats and drinks, that they will by no means ſit at the ſame table with other men, and ſo preciſe in the dreſſing of it, that they will eat of no fleſh but of their own killing onely; and that too with ſuch cautions and reſervations, that if any of the entrails be corrupt or diſlocated, they will ſell the whole beaſt to the

Chriſtians

Christians for a very trifle. Beneficial in that onely to the neighbouring Christians. Wine they forbear except it be of their own planting, not so much out of dislike of that liquor, for they are generally good fellows, and love their bellies; as for fear the wine would be baptized: a Ceremony much used in the Eastern parts. Of the coming of their Messiah so full of hopes, that there is no great Warrier stirring, but they look upon him as the man; till some sad tragedy or other, which they suffer under that perswasion, makes them see there error: promising to themselves whensoever he cometh, a restitution of their Kingdome; and such felicities ther ein, in the literal sense of some Texts of Scripture, which carry in them a more mystical and sacred meaning. That in good time (but Gods, not theirs) they shall be made partakers of the several blessings which those Texts do speak of, is both the hope and wish of all pious men; who cannot choose but grieve to behold the natural branches, so long dismembred and cut off from the tree of life. And this they neither hope nor wish for but on some fair grounds, presented to them by Saint Paul: who said expressely, that when the fulness of the Gentiles is once come in, that then all Israel shall be saved; Rom. 11. 25, 26. The words are so plainly positive that they need no commentary. Or if they did, we have the general consent of the antients, besides the constant current of most modern writers; who cherish the glad hopes of their conversion to the Gospel, which the Apostle doth there aim at. Origen, Athanasius, Hierome, Augustine, Chrysostome, for the primitive times; Beda and Hugo Cardinalis, in the times succeeding; Gorram, and Thomas Aquinas, for those of Rome; Calvin, Beza, Bullinger, and Peter Martyr for the Reformed Churches; besides divers others of great note, so expound that Text. Nor want there other Texts of Scripture to affirm as much; which he that doth desire to see, may find them with the expositions of most Christian Writers, in a Book writ by Doctor Willet, entituled De generali & novissima Judæorum vocatione; and thither I referre the more curious Reader. Out of all I shall take these words of Peter Martyr, written on that passage of Saint Paul to the Romans, viz. Non ita Judæi perierunt, ut nullæ de illorum salute spes super sit; The Jews (saith he) are not so wholly fallen from the favour of God, but that there still remain some hopes of their salvation. Of their Salvation then by the Gospel of Christ, when the fulness of the Gentiles is once come in, we conceive good hopes: but whether there be any of their restitution to their temporal Kindom, is a further question; and not so cleerly evidenced in the Book of God, though there be somewhat in that Book which may seem to intimate it. That the opinion of being restored by the Messiah to that temporal power which was taken from them by the Romans, was prevalent as well amongst Christs Disciples, as the rest of the Iews; is, as I take it, clear enough in the holy Gospel. In such a Kingdome and no other, did the two sonnes of Zebedee desire to sit on both hands of their Master: and the same was it and no other, which all of them expected, as appeareth by the words of Cleophas, Luke 24. 21. that Christ should have restored unto them. We thought said he, that this would have proved the man, that should have redeemed Israel. Redeemed Israel? from what? from sin and Satan, or the curse and bondage of the Law? Not so, ἀλλ' ἀπὸ τῦ ζυγῦ τῆς δουλείας; but from the yoke of vassallage, which the Romans had so lately imposed on them, say the Fathers rightly. Touching the same it was that they moved him saying, Lord wilt thou at this time, restore again the Kingdome of Israel? Acts 1. 6. In answer whereunto, our Saviour makes them no deniall, as unto the thing, nor tells them that they never must expect such a restauration; but only puts them off as unto the time, and bids them rest themselves on the pleasure of God the Father, in whose hands the disposing of all Kingdomes was. It is not for you (saith he) to know the times and seasons, which the Father hath in his own power, ver. 7. By which answer (as it seems to me) there is a possibility of restoring them to their Kingdome also; though not in the τὸ νῦν, at that very instant when they were most desirous to have it done, or at any other time fit for them to know; that being a secret, which the Father hath reserved to himself alone.

But leaving these speculations of a restitution of the Throne of Israel, and the great power and privileges it may then enjoy; let us look back on the estate in which it flourished in the former times, when the forces and Revenue of it were at the highest. And first for the Revenues, they amounted in the time of Solomon (as is said 2 Chron. 9 13) to 666 Talents of Gold, besides the benefits of his Customes and Impositions; which cometh to two Millions, and nine hundred ninety and seven thousand pounds, of yearly income. A vast summe for such a litle Kingdome. Nor can we reckon them at less, if they were not greater, in the time of David: of whom it is affirmed, 1 Chron. 22. 14. that he left to Solomon an hundred thousand Talents of Gold, and ten hundred thousand Talents of Silver, towards the building of the Temple: besides three thousand Talens of Gold, and seven thousand Talents of Silver, formerly deposited for that purpose, as is said 1 Chron. 29. 4. Which if it be computed at the ordinary rate of a Jews Talent, reckoning a Talent of Gold at four thousand and five hundred pound, and a Talent of Silver, at three hundred seventy five pound; will amount in our money to eight hundred and forty millions, and one hundred twenty and five thousand pounds. So past a summe, that it had been sufficient to have built a Temple of pure Gold and Silver, far greater than the Temple of Solomon, without other materials. I conceive therefore with our learned and industrious Brerewood, that by the Talent in those places we are to understand a far lesser summe, than the ordinary Hebrew Talents: which whether it doth there signifie a Sicle onely, which is half a Crown of English money, as Eupolemus, cited by Eusebius, was of opinion; or that every Talent of Gold, came to three golden Crowns of Athens, which maketh forty five shillings of English money, as Julius Pollux hath it in his Onomasticon; I am not able to determine. But measuring it by the last estimate, which I more approve of, it will amount to two millions & two hundred ninety & five thousand pounds: a vast summe for a King to leave in ready money, which was alwaies exercised in war. And though I doe not find expressly what the Revenues of Judah might amount unto, after the division: yet by one circumstance I find them to be very great. For it is written 2 Kings 18. 14. that the yearly tribute imposed upon Hezekiah, by the King of Assyria, was three hundred Talents of Silver, and thirty Talents of Gold; amounting (according to the ordinary Hebrew Talent, (which questionless is there intended) to two hundred forty seven thousand and five hundred pounds of English money: and therefore probably his ordinary Revenue must be thrice as much, above that tribuet; Else the Assyrian had not left him a subsistance for a King to live on. Nor can I think that the Revenues of this Crown were less to Herod, than formerly to Solomon, or David: considering his vast expences, the many and magnificent Structures which he brought to perfection, the immeasurable donatives bestowed upon Augustus, Livia, and the Court of Rome, together with the large Legacies he gave at the time of his death; not paralleld by any King before or since, though of a larger and more ample territory than he stood possessed of.

What forces the Kings of the Hebrews were able to bring into the field, may best be estimated by the muster which David made, when he numbred the People: the enrolment of such as were able to bear arms, and fit for service; coming in all to five hundred thousand fighting men, in Judah onely, and eight hundred thousand men, in the Tribes of Israel. Tis true, that David never brought into the field so vast a multitude; but when the Kingdomes were divided, and warre denounced betwixt Jeroboam and Abijah, we find almost the whole number brought into the field: that is to say, eight hundred thousand on the side of Jeroboam, the King of Israel; and four hundred thousand by Abijah, the King of Judah. After this, out of that small Kigdome, Asa the Son of Abijah, being invaded by Zerah the Arabian or Ethiopian, advanced an Army of five hundred and eighty thousand men which was more than the enrolment made in the time of David. An infinite proportion for so small a Kingdome; and were it not avouched in the holy Scriptures, far above belief: had not that God who said to Abraham, that his seed should be as the stars of Heaven for multitude, been able to have made it good.

As for the story and affairs of this Countrey since the time of Adrian, the Iews being all expelled their native Soyl, and Christianity in fine prevailing over all those parts; it was inhabited as the rest of the Empire was, by men of that Religion onely: in this Countrey so advanced and countenanced, that Helena the Mother of Constantine, is reported to have built in it no less than two hundred Temples and Monasteries, in places of most note for the miracles of Christ our Saviour, or the dwelling of some of his Disciples. In the year 615. the Persians, under the conduct of Chosroes their King, became Masters of it; and possessed themselves of Hierusalem also: expelled thence by the valour and good fortune of the Emperour Heraclius, who recovering the Cross on which Christ suffered, out of the hands of the Pagans; carried it with as great a triumph into Constantinopole, as David once did the Ark into Hierusalem. But this glory and rejoycing did not long continue: For within twenty years after the recovery of this City from the power of the Persians, it was again conquered and subdued by Homar, or Aumar, Caliph of the Saracens, Anno 637 Under this yoak the captivated Christians had long suffered, when they changed the Tyrant but not the tyranny: the Turks about the year 1079. overcoming the Saracens, and domineering in their steed. Twenty years did the Christians languish under this oppression, when one Peter an Hermite, travelling for devotion to the holy Land, and being an eye-witness of the miseries under which they groaned; at his return, made his addresses to Pope Urban the second, acquainting him with the sad condition of the poor Christians in those Countries. A Councill thereupon is called at Clermont in France, where the Pope (willing to imploy the Christian Princes farther off, that he might the better play his game at home;) did so effectually advance and endeer the business: that no fewer than three hundred thousand fighting men, under severall Leaders, undertook the service. And it prospered so well with them in the first beginning, that having beaten the Turks out of Asia Minor, taken the great City of Antioch, and most of the strong Towns of Syria; they incamped before Hierusalem, and in short time took it, Anno 1099. after it had been four hundred years and upwards, in the power of the Infidels. The City being thus gained, was offered with the title of King, to Robert Duke of Normandy, Son of William the Conquerour: but he upon the hopes of the Kingdome of England, refused honour; never prospering, as it was observed, after that refusall. Godfrey of Bouillon, Duke of Lorreine, had the next offer of it, which with a religious joy he accepted of, though on the day of his inauguration he refused the Crown: affirming that it was not fit for a Christian Prince, to wear in that City a Crown of Gold, where the Redeemer of the World ware a Crown of Thornes

The Kings of Hierusalem.

1099. 1. Godfrey of Bouillion, Duke of Lorreine.

1100. Baldwin of Lorreine, brother of Godfrey, wonne Ptolemais, and many other Cities of Syria.

1118. 3. Baldwin II. surnamed of Bruges, Cousin of Godfrey, and Baldwin, the Former Kings; overcame the Sultan of Damascus, and inlarged his Kingdome by the addition of Tyre.

1131. 4. Fulk, Earl of Anjou, having maryed Millisent the daughter of Baldwin the 2d. succeeded after his decease; unfortunately killed with a fall from his horse.

1142. 5. Baldwin III. Son of Fulk and Millisent, fortified Gaza against the Calph of Ægypt; and recovered Paneade from the King of Damascus.

1164. 6. Almericus, the Brother of Baldwin the 3d. so distressed the great Caliph of Ægypt, that he was forced to call in the Turks to aid him; by whom slain, and his Kingdome transferred on Sarracon, the Turkish Generall.

1173. 7. Baldwin IV. Son of Almericus, overthrew Saladine the victorious King of the Turkes in a fight neer Ascalon, and valiantly defended his Dominions.

1185. 8. Baldwin V. Son of Sibyll the Sister of Baldwin the 4th. by William Marquess of Montferrat; unnaturally poisoned by his own mother, having reigned onely five moneths, to make way for her second husband, called

sours

fours defended against all invasions, till the year 1517. in which Selimus the first, Emperour of the Turks, added the Holy Land, together with Ægypt, to his Empire. When Hierusalem was taken by the Christians, it is said that the German Emperours name was Fredericus; the Popes, Urbanus; the Hierosalymitan Patriarch, Heraclius; and that so also were they called, when the Christians again lost it. This is the conceit of Roger Hoveden, in the life of Henry the second; but how it can agree with Chronology, I do not see.

After the taking of Hierusalem by Sultan Saladine, the Christians retired their forces into some of the other Towns of the Holy land; which they made good against the enemy: and defended them under the government of these three Kings following, viz.

10. Conrade Marq. of Monferrat, husband of Isabel the daughter of Almericus King of Hierusalem.

11. Henry Earl of Campagne, second husband of Isabel.

12. John di Brenne, husband of Mary, or Yoland as some call her, daughter of Conrade and Isabel, the last Christian King that ever had possession in Syria or Palestine: inhabited ever-since by Moores and Arabians; few Christians, and not many Turks but such as be in garrisons onely. Yoland the daughter of this John di Brenne, was wife to Frederick King of Naples, who in her right intituled himself King of Hierusalem: and so now do the Kings of Spain, as heirs unto, and possessors of the Kingdome of Naples. Concerning which title it would not be amisse to insert this story. When the wars, in Queen Elizabeths time, were hot between England and Spain, there were Commissioners of both sides appointed to treat of peace. They met at a Town of the French Kings, and first it was debated in what tongue the negotiation should be handled. A Spaniard thinking to give the English Commissioners a shrewd gird, proposed the French tongue as most fit: it being a language which the Spaniards were well skilled in; and for these gentlemen of England, I suppose (saith he) that they cannot be ignorant of the language of their fellow-subjects; their Queen is Queen of France, as well as of Engeland. Ny in faith my masters, replyed Doctor Dale, (a Civil Lawyer and one of the masters of the Requests) the French tongue is too vulgar for a business of this secrecy and importance, especially in a French Town. We will therefore rather treat in Hebrew, the language of Hierusalem, whereof your master is King; and I suppose you are therein as well skilled, as we in the French. And thus much for this title.

The Armes of the Christian Kings in Hierusalem was Luna, a cross crosset crossed, Sol; which was commonly called the Hierusalem Cross. But for their forces and Revenues, I cannot see how any estimate may be made hereof, in regard they subsisted not by their own proper strength, but by the Purses and the Forces of the Western Christians; more or less active in that service, as zeal, or emulation, or desire of glory, were predominant in them.

Chief Orders of Knight-hood in this Kingdome after the recovery thereof from the power of the Turks, Were

1. Of the Sepulchre, said to be instituted originally by Queen Helena, the Mother of Constantine the Great, by whom the Temple of the Sepulchre was indeed first built: but more truly by Philip King of France, Anno 1099. at such time as that Temple was regained from the Turks. Their Armes the same with that of the Kings before blazoned, representing the five wounds of our Saviour CHRIST. At the first conferred on none but Gentlemen of blood and fortunes; now saleable to any that will buy it of the Pater-Guardian, who with a Convent of Franciscans doth reside neer that Temple.

2. Of Saint John of Hierusalem, begun by one Gerrard, Anno 1114. and confirmed by Pope Paschalis the second. Their badge or Cognizance, is a White Crosse of eight points. Their duty to defend the Holy land, relieve Pilgrims, and succour Christian Princes against the Infidels. They were to be of noble parentage, and extraction: and grew in time to such infinite riches, especially after the suppression of the Templars (most of whose lands were after given unto this Order) that they had at one time in the several parts of Christendome, no fewer than 20000. Mannours; and of such reputation in all Christian Kingdomes, that in England the Lord Prior of this Order, was accompted the Prime Baron in the Realm. But now their Revenue it not a little diminished, by the withdrawing of the Kings of England, and other Protestant Princes, from the Church of Rome: who on that change, seized on all the Lands of this Order in their several Countries, and either kept them to themselves, or disposed them to others as they pleased. Of these we shall speak more when we are in Malta, where they now reside: advertising onely at the present, that their first Great Master was that Gerrard by whom they were founded; the last that had his residence in the Holy land, one John de Villiers, in whose time being driven out of Palestine, they removed unto Cyprus, and in the time of Fulk de Villaret Anno 1309. to the Isle of Rhodes. Outed of which by Solomon the Magnificent Anno 1522. they removed from one place to another, till at last by the magnificence of Charles the fift Anno 1530. they were setled in Malta: and there we shall speak farther of them.

3. Of the Templers, instituted by Hugh of Payennes, Anno 1113, and confirmed by Pope Eugenius. Their ensign was a Red Cross, in token that they should shed their blood to defend Christs Temple. They were burried Cross-legged, and wore on their backs the figure of the Cross; for which they were by the common people called Cross-backs or Crouch-backs, and by corruption, Crook-backs. Edmund Earl of Lancaster, second son to our Henry the third, being of this Order, was vulgarly called Edmund Crook-back; which gave Henry the fourth a foolish occasion to faign, that this Edmund (from whom he was descended) was indeed the eldest son of King Henry the third, but for his crookedness and deformity, his younger brother was preferred to the Crown before him. These Knights had in all Provinces of Europe their subordinate governours, in which they possessed no lesse than 16000 Lordships: the greatness of which Revenue was not the least cause of dissolving the Order. For Philip the fair, King of France, had a plot to inveſt one of his ſons with the Title of King of Heruſalem, and hoped to procure of the Pope the revenue of this order to be laid unto that Kingdome, for ſupport of the Title: which he thought he might the better do, becauſe Clement the fift then Pope, for the love he bare to France, had transferred his ſeat from Rome to Avignion. But herein his hopes deceived him; for this Order being diſſolved, the lands thereto belonging were given to the Knights Hoſpitallars, or of Saint Iohn. The crimes objected againſt this Order were, firſt, their revolt from their profeſſed obedience unto the Patriarch of Ieruſalem, who was their viſitor; Secondly, their unſpeakable pride; and thirdly their ſins againſt nature. The houſe of our Law-ſtudents in London, called the Temple, was the chief houſe of the Knights of this order in England: and was by the Knights of Saint John, whoſe principal manſion was in Smithfield, ſold unto the ſtudents of the Laws, for the yearly rent of 10 l. about the middle of the reign of Edward the third.

Theſe three orders M. Selden (and deſervedly) putteth not in his Titles of honour, in that they were prohibited to kiſs a woman, honourary Knight-hood, and the love of Ladies, going together like vertue and reward.

Thus much for Paleſtine.

ARABIA.

ARABIA hath on the East, Chaldæa, and the Bay or Gulf of Persia; on the West, Palestine, some part of Ægypt, and the whole course of the Red-Sea; on the North, the River Euphrates, with some parts of Syria and Palestine; and on the South, the main Southern Ocean. But at some times the name extended somewhat further. Pliny enlargeth it as far as to Comagena, the North part of Syria; in regard that many Arabian Colonies had been there planted by Tigranes; and Xenophon comprehended in it the greatest part also of Mesopotamia; because situate on the West of the River Tigris, and consequently the Western part of the Assyrian Empire, as the word Ereb doth import; from whence some derive the Etymon, and name hereof. Which notwithstanding, in the general esteem of Authors, it is bounded only as before.

As for the name, there be some that derive it from Arabus, a supposed Son of Apollo and Babilonia; others from three suppositious Sons of Janus Pater, one of the pretended Grand Sons of Cham. Who is fabled to have sent his Son Arabus into Arabia Deserta; Petreius, into Arabia Petræa: and Sabus, into Arabia Felix, the dwelling place of the Sabæans. And for this trim conceit, we are beholding to the Berosus, of Frier Annius. More probable is their conjecture, who derive the name from the Hebrew, Arab, signifying black; by reason of the swarth or tawny complexion of the inhabitants, who are inter nigrum & fulvum, as Vertomannus an eye-witness hath informed us of them; on the same reason as one of the Provinces of Affrica, is commonly entituled the Land of Negroes. But the most likely origination of it, as I conceive, is from Harabi, which signifieth in the Hebrew a Thief or Robber, such as the Arabians in all ages, have been known to be. According unto that of the Prophet Jeremy, In the ways thou hast sate for them, as an Arabian in the wilderness, as our English reads it; Tanquam Latro insidians in solitudine, saith the Vulgar Latine, Jer. 32. St. Hierome, though he render it, quasi Latro, as the Vulgar doth, yet in his Commentary he informs us, that the word doth also signifie an Arabian, quæ gens latrociniis dedita usq; hodie incursat Palestinæ fines, &c. which people being addicted to theft and robbery, do to this day (saith he) infest the coasts of Palestine which border neer them; and lay in wait for those which had any occasion to travel thither. Agreeable hereunto is the observation of Martin del Rio; Adeo latrociniis infames sunt, ut Hebræis Arabs, latronem denotat, sicut Chananæas Mercatorem, Chaldæus Mathematicum; i. e. So infamous were they for their theft and frequent robberies, that it was as familiar with the Jews to call a thief by the name of Arabian, as by Chanaanite to signifie a Merchant, or to use the word Chaldean for a Mathematician. In the same sense they came in the succeeding times to be called Saracens, from Sarak or Saraka, an Arabian word, which signifieth to steal; whereof more anon: No otherwise then one of the American Islands had the name of Ladrones, or Insula latronum, given by Magellanus, from the thievishness of the Inhabitants, who had stoln his Cock-boat.

I have staid the longer on the name, because it doth express so much of the Character of the people also; living for the most part upon spoil and robbery, as all that travel that way know by sad experience. Of mean statures, raw-boned, tawny or swart-complexioned, having feminine voyces; of swift, but noiseless gate, and upon you ere you are aware. Of no set-dwellings (except onely in Arabia Felix) living in tents, which they remove like walking Cities, for the benefit of pasturage, and hope of booty: for this last cause hanging about the skirts of more habitable Countreys; and having robbed, retire with a marvellous speed. Mounted on Dromedaries for that purpose, a beast of most incredible swiftness, satisfied with little food, though without water to it, and will easily carry a man a hundred miles a day, without any refreshing. Nor are such horses as they have, though but poor and lean, of less speed, or less patient of travel: whom they feed twice a day with the milk of Camels, and think them not worth keeping, if not able to outgo an Ostrich. As now, so formerly, all horsemen, and but ill appointed; fitter to rob and spoil than to deal with Souldiers; as riding stark naked, and trusting rather to the swiftness of their horses than any other way of resistance, where they were opposed.

Their language is the Arabick, so called from this Countrey, but not proper to this Countrey onely. Spoken in all places where Mahometanism hath got any footing: The Alcoran being written in it, the publick offices of their Religion performed in it, and the tongue taught in Schools as generally, as with us the Latine: but made the natural language in Mesopotamia, Syria, Palestine, the three Arabia's, Egypt, and all Barbary, except the Kingdom of Morocco. A great extent, but short of that which some give to it, who will have it spoken in two parts of the whole habitable world.

The Christian faith was first here planted by St. Paul, of whose being in Arabia, after his conversion, he telleth us, Gal. 1. 17. to which the coming in of the Saracens gave a great increase, in the time of Maviæ their Queen, during the Empire of Valentinian the first; Moses a man of exemplary piety, and famed for many miracles, being created their first Bishop; after more generally propagated over all the Countrey, by their their King Alamundarus; Anastasius then reigning in the East. But long it had not been received, when supplanted by Mahometanism, which had its first beginning here; and hath so universally overspred the whole face hereof, that now there are no Christians left in all the Country, except onely in Eltor, a Port Town in the Bay of Arabia Felix; in Petra, the chief City of Arabia Petræa; and in two small Monasteries about Mount Sinai.

It is in circuit about 4000 miles, but of so unequal and heterogeneous composition, that no general Character can be given of it: and therefore we must look upon it, as it stands divided into Arabia Deserta, 2. Arabia Petræa, 3. Arabia Felix, and 4. the Arabick Islands.

1. ARABIA DESERTA.

ARABIA DESERTA (called Beriara by the Turks) is bounded on the East, with Babylonia; on the West, with parts of Palestine, and Arabia Petræa; on the North, with Palmyrene and Mesopotamia, from which last it is parted by Euphrates; and on the South, by some parts of Petræa, and Arabia Felix.

It hath the name of Deserta, from the vast deserts which are in it, and the un-inhabitedness thereof; called also by Aristides, Aspera, from the roughness; by Servius, Inferior, or the Lower, in regard of the situation of it more towards the River; by Lucian, from the frequent bottoms and valleys in it, Arabia Cava; and finally, by the Jews it was called Kedar, from the blackness or swarthiness of the People, the word in Hebrew signifying as much as Sun-burnt; whence the people are by some writers called Kedareni; and by Pliny Cedræi.

But the common and most usual name of it, is Arabia Deserta, agreeable to the nature of it, being generally a sandy Country full of vast deserts; in which all such as travel use to carry their Provisions with them, and to guide themselves in their journey by the course of the Stars, though in some parts which lie neer Euphrates, and the Mountains of Arabia Felix, it have some few towns, and those resorted to by Merchants. But this is onely in those parts, the residue of the Country being so desolate and waste, that one who had travelled in it, doth describe it to be so wilde a place, ut nec homines nec bestiæ videantur, nec Aves; imo nec arbores nec germen aliquod, sed non nisi montes saxosi, altissimi, asperrimi, A Country, saith Guilandinus Melchior, where are found neither men nor beasts, no not so much as birds or trees, nor grass, nor pasture, but onely stony, high, and most craggy mountains.

The people for the most part, used to dwell in Tents, alluded to by David, Psal. 120. v. 5. which they removed from place to place, as the pasture for their cattel failed them: taking no other care for houses than the boughs of Palm-trees, to keep them from the heat of the Sun, and other extremities of weather. Hence by the Ancients called Scenitæ, or men dwelling in Tents (in which respect the Jews call the Tartarians Kedarim, from the like course of life which these Kedareni or Arabians lived:) but the name reaching into the other parts of Arabia also, where they use the same kinde of living: of whom more anon.

Yet notwithstanding most memorable is this Country in sacred story, both for the dwelling place of Job, and the habitation of those Wise-men, who came out of the East unto Hierusalem, to worship Christ, the new-born King of the Jews. That Job was an inhabitant here, appeareth by the situation of his dwelling, being in the East, as is said in the story of him, chap. 1. v. 3. that is to say, in the Country lying East to the Land of Canaan, as this part of it doth; and therefore called simply by the name of the East, as Judg. 6. 3. where by the Children of the East, are meant expresly the inhabitants of Arabia the Desart, who together with the Midianites, and Amalikites oppressed those of Israel. Secondly, by the ill neighborhood which he found from the Sabæans, who inhabited in this part also; and of the Chaldeans mentioned, v. 17. the next borderers to it: and Thirdly, by the inconsequences which needs must follow, if we place him, as some do, in the land of Us, neer unto Damascus. For how improbable must it be for the Sabæans of the Red-Sea, or the Persian-Gulf, or the Chaldeans, dwelling on the banks of the River Euphrates, to fall upon Jobs Cattel grazing neer Damascus, the Countreys being dis-joyned by such vast Desarts, and huge Mountains, that it is impossible for any strangers to pass them, especially with any numbers of Cattel, in respect of those large Mountains, deep Sands, and the extreme want of water in all that passage? and how impossible must we think it, that the pen-man of the story of Job, who certainly was guided in it by the Holy Ghost, should be so mistaken, as to place Jobs dwelling in the East, if the Land of Us, wherein he dwelt bordered on Damascus; which lay not on the East, but the North of Canaan? A City called Us, or Uz, there was, situate neer Damascus, so called from Uz, the son of Aram, Gen. 10 23. A Land of Uz also amongst the Edomites, spoken of in the Lamentations of the Prophet Jeremy, chap. 4 v. 21. so called from Uz, one of the posterity of Esau, mentioned Gen. 36. 28. And finally, a Land of Us or Uz, so called from Huz the son of Nachor, the brother of Abraham, mentioned Gen. 22. 21. which is that situate in this Tract, the habitation and possession of that righteous man: the Country hereabouts being called Ausitis, and the people Ausitæ, though by mistaking in the transcripts, we finde them named Αυσιται, or Æsitæ, in the fifth of Ptolomy. The like I say also of the Wise-men, or Magi, who came to Hierusalem from the East, that they dwelt in this Country, where the said Ptolomy placeth the City Saba; according unto that fore-signified by the Royal Psalmist, that the Kings of Arabia and Saba should bring their gifts, Psal. 72. 10. Confirmed herein by the situation of the Country lying East of Canaan; the authority of those Fathers who lived neerest to the time of our Saviours birth, Justin Martyr, Tertullian, Cyprian; and by the testimony of Guillandinus Melchior abovementioned, affirming on the credible report of the people hereof, that they came neither out of Mesopotamia, or Arabia Felix, as many wisemen do believe, but out of Saba in Arabia the Desert, which City (saith he) when my self was there, was, as I judged, called Semiscasach. Arabia Petræa.

Cities of note, in a Countrey so desart and uninhabited, we must look for few; yet some there are, inhabited by a more civil sort of people, whom they call by the name of Moors, giving that of Arabian to those onely, who live roming and robbing up and down. Ptolomy gives the names of forty Cities and villages in it (civitates & vicos, saith the Latine) the memory of most of which is now utterly perished. Those of most observation, 1. Sabe, or Saba, the habitation of those Sabæans who pillaged Job; so called from Sheba, the grand-son of Abraham by Keturah, mentioned *Gen.*25.3. Of whom, and of the rest of that line, it is said, in the sixt verse of that chapter, that Abraham gave them gifts, and sent them away from Isaac East-ward unto the East Countrey: now called Semiscasac, as is thought by Melchior. 2. Theman, which possibly may be the Countrey of Eliphaz the Themanite, one of the visitants of Job. As 3. Shuah, on the North hereof, was probably of Bildad, another of them, hence surnamed the Shukite. 4. Tharsacas, by Pliny called Aphipolis. 5. Zagmais, near the Persian Gulf, in the Countrey of the Raubeni, supposed to be descended from Mishma the fourth son of Ismael. 6. Phunton the 36th 7. Oboth the 37th mansion of the Children of Israel. 8. Rheganna, another of those named by Ptolomy, in the Greek Copies called Beganna. Of any Town of note now being more then Semiscasac, before named, I finde nothing certain.

The first Inhabitants of this Countrey, of whom there is any certain Constat, were the posterity of Huz, the son of Nachor, and the sons of Abraham by Keturah; of whose being settled in these parts, we had before good testimony from the Book of God: and intermixt with them lived some of the descendants of Ismael also. For if the Adubeni, whom Ptolomy calleth the Agubeni, fetch their original from Adbeel the third, and the Raubeni, from Mishmai the fifc son of Ismael, as some say they do, I see no reason but the whole Countrey might be called Kedar, from Kedar the second son, as well as from the tawny complexions of the people of it. From them descended the Tribes or Nations spoken of by Ptolomy, that is to say, the Orcheni. Chaucabeni, Ausitæ, Masæi, Materni, and Agræi, besides the Adubeni, and Raubeni, already specified. But being a dis-joynted people, not under any settled form of Government, not possessed of any thing worth looking after, they were either held not worth the conquering, in regard of their penury; or else unconquerable, in respect of their Countrey, impassable for great Armies, by reason of the rolling sands, and want of all things. Yet I conceive, that lying so near to the Chaldeans, they followed the fortunes of that mighty Monarchy; subjects unto it whilst it stood, and after Tributaries unto those who successively possessed themselves of the Supreme power. Not looked at by the Romans, or regarded by them, who aimed at wealth and honor, in their expedition: nor otherwise subject to the Turk at this present time, then as they can make use of him and his protection in their frequent robberies: but counted of as a part of the Turkish Empire, because the more civil Arabians are indeed his subjects.

2. ARABIA PETRÆA.

ARABIA PETRÆA (now called Barra, Baraab, and Barthalaba) hath on the East, Arabia Deserta, and part of Sinus Persicus, or the Bay of Persia; on the West, the Isthmus, which joyneth Affrica to Asia, and part of the Red Sea, or Gulf of Arabia; on the North, Palestine; and on the South, a long ridge of Mountains, which divide it from Arabia Felix.

It had this name either from the rockiness of the soil hereof, or more properly from Petra, the chief City of it, called also by Æthicus, Sicaria, but I know not why: by the Hebrews, Chus, generally translated Ethiopia; by William of Tyre, Arabia secunda, Felix being reckoned for the first. By Strabo, Ptolomy, and Pliny, it is called Nabathæa, which name it had from Nabaioth, the eldest of the twelve sons of Ismael, though properly that name belonged onely to those parts of it, which lay next Judæa: fruitful, though joyning to the Desarts: and thus remembred by the Poet, as an Eastern Countrey.

Eurus ad Auroram, Nabathæaque regna recessit.
Eurus unto the East did flie,
Where fruitful Nabathe doth lie.

The Countrey much of the same nature with the other, but in some parts thereof more fertile if well manured: and in the time of Marcellinus, affirmed to be a rich land, flourishing with variety of trade and traffick. But for the most part, full of untravelable Desarts, except to those which carry their provisions with them for fear of starving, and go in great companies, or Carvans for fear of robbing: and yet much travelled by Merchants who traffick into Egypt, and Babylonia; the commodities whereof they lay on Camels, which are the ships of Arabia, as their Seas, the Desarts. For upon one of these Camels, they will lay ordinarily 600. and sometimes 1000. pound weight: yet not afford him water above once in four days, not oftner in fourteen, if there be occasion. So that the Camel carrying so great a burden, and seldom fewer then 500. going in one voyage; the Merchant, if he scapeth robbing, makes a rich return. Of these Desarts, the most memorable are those of Sin and Pharan, in which the Israelites so long wandred: not beautified with grass nor adorned with trees, the Palm onely excepted; nor furnished with water, but by raign or miracle.

The people of it for the most part, descended of the sons of Chus, and Ismael, intermixed with the Madianites, descending from Abraham by Keturah, and the Amalekites, descended probably from Amalek, the grand-son of Esau, mention *Gen.*36.6. but all united at the last in the name of Saracens. This name name derived, as ſome think, from Sarra, ſignifying a deſart, and Jaken which ſignifieth to inhabit, becauſe they live for the moſt part in theſe deſart places: as others ſay, from Sarak, ſignifying a Thief or Robber, agreeable to that of Arabia, before delivered. This laſt moſt ſuitable to their nature, and beſt liked by Sclaiger. Saraceni à vicinis dicuntur ab Eſarak; i.e. λωστρικοὶ νομαδικοὶ, quod rapinis victitent. So he, in his ſecond book de Emend. Temp. A people not reckoned of in the former times, till made remarkable by their conqueſt of a great part of the world; but always counted warlike and martial men. Of whom take this Character out of Marcellinus, 'The Saracens (ſaith he) whom we are neither to wiſh 'for our friends, or enemies, are a martial people, half-naked, clad as far as the groin with painted 'Caſſocks, ranging up and down on Camels, and ſwift horſeſs as well in peace as troubleſome times. 'Not uſed unto the Plough, to plant trees, or get their living by tillage, they wander from one place to 'another, without houſe or home, or any conſtant dwelling place, or the uſe of Laws; nor can they 'long endure the ſame either Air or Soil, the manner of their lives being always flitting, like ravenous 'Kites; which if they chance to ſpy a prey, ſnatch it up in their flight, or if they chance to faſten on it 'as it lieth on the ground, they make no long ſtay. Their food is chiefly upon Veniſon, and ſtore of 'milk, herbs which they gather from the ground, and birds which they get by fowling; but altogether ignorant of corn and wine. Their wives they hire onely for a time, though for a ſhew of Matri-'mony they preſent their husbands, with a ſpear and a tent, as in way of dowry; but they part with 'them when they pleaſe. Both Sexes moſt extremely given to carnal luſts; the women as rambling as 'the men, married in one place, and brought to bed in another; leaving their children where they fall, without more care of them. So far, and to this purpoſe he.

Rivers of note here are not many. The principal are, 1. That called Trajanus amnis, or the River of Trajan, which paſſing thorow this Countrey endeth his courſe in the Red Sea. 2. Rhinocorura, called in Scripture the torrent of Egypt, which riſing in this Countrey, and paſſing by the borders of Idumæa, hath its fall in the lake of Sirbon; and together with the waters thereof, loſeth it ſelf at laſt in the Mediterranean.

With Mountains it is better ſtored, and thoſe of eminent obſervation, as 1. Mount Sinai. famous in all ages, for the promulgation of the Law; and of late times, for a Monaſtery of Maronites on the top thereof. The hill ſo high, that both ſhores of the Red Sea may be thence ſeen; but eaſie of aſcent, by reaſon of ſteps cut out of the rock: which notwithſtanding, he that beginneth to go up it at the break of day, will hardly overcome the top of it till the afternoon. The Monaſtery made an Epiſcopal See, and formerly very well endowed, as appeareth by the letters of Eugenius Biſhop thereof to the Arch Duke Charls, anno 1569. complaining that the Turk had ſold all their lands, and that himſelf and the Monks were fain to pawn their holy Veſſels, and take up money on uſury. Here is alſo a Meſque, or Meſquit of Turks, who reſort in pilgrimage to this hill, as well as the Chriſtians. 2. Mount Horeb, where the Iſraelits worſhipped the Molten Calf, about a mile and an half diſtant from Mount Sinai, but not ſo high: on the top of which is a Church alſo; and a Monaſtery of Coloires, or Greek Monks, at the bottom, exceeding hoſpitable to ſtrangers, whom they entertain of free coſt, and cheerfully ſhew them all the places worth obſervation, which the Scripture memioneth in that tract. Both hills by Pto'omy called Melani, or the Black Mountains; the laſt now called Orel. 3. Mount Hor, bordering on Idumæa; and memorable for the death of Aaron.

Places of moſt obſervation, 1. Petra, the name-giver to this part, at firſt called Recem, and at that time belonging to Midian: afterwards called Selah, when pertaining to the Idumæans. But falling under the power of the Arabians, it is now called Crat. Beſt known in holy Scripture by the name of Selah, beforementioned, which ſignifies the ſame with the Latine Petra. A City of great note and ſtrength in all times foregoing, taken by Amaziah the King of Judah, 2 Kings 14.7 and by him called Jock-heel, but in vain beſieged by Scaurus, a Roman General, who finding the place to be impregnable, was content by the perſwaſion of Antipater, to take a ſum of money and raiſe his ſiege. Nor did the Emperor Trajan ſpeed much better at it, his Souldiers being ſtill beat off in all their aſſaults, the very next man to him ſlain with a dart, and himſelf forced to caſt away his Imperial habit, and flie for his life; the heavens themſelves, if Dion (who is never ſparing of the like prodigies) may be believed, fighting againſt the Romans with thunder, lightning, whirlewinds, and tempeſts, as often as they made any approaches to it. But in the end ſubdued with the reſt of the Countrey. In ſuch eſteem, by reaſon of the ſtrength of it, by the Soldans of Egypt, that they kept here their choiceſt treaſures; and in the courſe of the Holy Wars, much aimed at by the Turks and Chriſtians, as the key that opened the Gates of Paleſtine; on the South border whereof, not far from Mount Hor beforementioned, the Town is ſituate. The Metropolis of the Province when firſt under the Romans; and made the Seat of a Latine Biſhop, when the Chriſtians of the Weſt were the Lords thereof. 2. Boſra, ſaid to have been built by Auguſtus Cæſar, becauſe by him repaired, when decayed and ruined; afterwards by Alexander Severus made a Colony of the Romans. This laſt moſt certain, and for ſuch teſtified by this ancient inſcription, in an ancient coyn, C O L. BOSTRAN. T. R. ALEXANDRIANÆ? Memorable alſo for the birth of Philip the Emperor, one of that Alexanders next Succeſſors; by whom it was cauſed for a time to be called Philippus; for the Metropolitan dignity removed hither from Petra, ſomewhat before the time of Juſtinian, but by whom I finde not; and for being the Epiſcopal See of Titus (hence ſurnamed) Boſtrenus, a Reverend Father of the Church in the time of Julian the Apoſtate. A City of as great antiquity as the moſt that be, mentioned Gen. 36.33. though there accounted of as a City of Edom, to which at that time it did belong; and is ſtill remaining, and well known by the name of Buſſereth. 3. Elama, on a bay of the Red Sea, called hence Sinus Elaniticus. 4. Phara, reckoned by Ptolomy for a chief Town of this Tract, from whence the Wilderneſs of Paran ſeems to take its name. 5. Berenice, ſo called called from some of the Queens of Egypt, but better known by the name of Esion-geber, one of the Stations or Incamptings of the Children of Israel; and made by Solomon the ordinary harbour for his Ships, which sailed to Ophir in the East-Indies. 6. Sur, the chief City of the Amalekites, giving name to the Wilderness or Desart of Sur, coming close up to it: remarkable for the first incamping of the Tribes of Israel after their miraculous passage over the Red Sea; and the defeat which Saul gave to the Amalakites, whom he smote from Havilah to this place. 7. Havilah, so called from Havilah the son of Chus, being the furthest border of these Amalikites, and Ismalites, on the Gulf of Persia, as Sur was on the Red Sea, or Gulf of Arabia. 8. Madian, so called of Madian, the son of Abraham by Keturah, situate towards the Red Sea also; the City of Jethro, whose daughter Zipporah was the wife of Moses: who flying from the Court of Pharaoh King of Egypt, was by Gods secret providence directed hither; that keeping the flocks of Jethro in the Desarts adjoyning, he might acquaint himself with the ways and passages, thorow which he after was to lead the house of Israel. 9. Rephaim, the incamping place of Moses, where he discomfited the Amalekites: and to which the said Jethro came to him with his wife and children, advising him to ease himself of some part of that burden, which the government of so great a people would else bring upon him. 10. Kadish-barnes, the station of the Tribes, when the spies which were sent to discover the Land of Canaan, returned back unto them; memorable for the death of Miriam the Propheteſs. And 11. Thara, no less memorable for the mutiny and punishment of Corah, Dathan, and Abirom, the place remembred Numb. 33. 27. But others will have 12. Makheloth, mentioned v. 25. of that Chapter, to be the stage of that action; the Scriptures being silent in this particular. The rest of their encamping places, being most of them in this part of Arabia, I omit of purpose, as obvious in the Scripture unto every Reader: as I do also some of the Cities of Moab and Ammon, accompted of by Ptolomy, as Cities of this Province; but spoken of already in our Description of Palestine, to which more properly belonging.

Judæa.

The old Inhabitants of this Countrey, were the Madianites, the Ismalites, the Amalikites, and the Children of Chus; who dwelling promiscuously together, are sometimes used for one another: the Merchants which bought Joseph of his Brethren being indifferently called Midianites, and Ismaelites, Genes. 37. 28. and Zipporah the wife of Moses, who questionless was a daughter of Madian, being by Miriam, and Aaron, called an Ethiopian or Chusite, as in way of reproach, Numb. 12. 1. But being they were different Nations, and such as had some special engagemen with or against the Children of Israel; we will consider them by themselves, till we have brought them into one body, by the name of Chusites, Ethiopians, or Arabians, which are all the same.

And first, the MADIANITES were such of the posterity of Madian, the son of Abraham by Keturah, who preserving the knowledge of the true God, withdrew themselves from all communion with the idolatrous Canaanites, at such time as the rest of their brethren did associate with them; and setled themselves more towards the banks of the Red Sea, where they did all good offices to the children of Israel, as they passed thorow their Countrey. Of these the Kenites were a branch, as appeareth Judges 1. 16. where Jethro the Prince or Priest of Madian, is called a Kenite: some of which turned Proselites, and dwelt with the Israelites in Canaan; of which race Heber the Kenite, the husband of Jael, who slew Sisera, was undoubtedly one. The rest, continuing mingled with the Amalekites, till the time of Saul, were by him warned (in memory of former courtesies) to withdraw themselves from them; lest they should perish with them in the same destruction. Aftewards we hear little of either people, losing their name in the greater Nation of the Ismalites, with whom intermingled; or passing with them into the same common notion of Arabians, Chusites, or Ethiopians.

Secondly, Nor were the AMALIKITES, though a greater and more powerful Nation, of much more continuance; descended, as it is conceived, from Amalek, the Grand-son of Esau (though I deny not but there are some reasons to be urged against that opinion) and planted on the back of the Edomites, as their Guard or Out-work. A people mischeivously bent against those of Israel, as if they had inherited the hatred which Esau their fore-father did bear to Jacob, whom they violently set on at Rephidim, when they supposed them spent and wearied with their flight from Egypt. And though discomfited in that battel, yet they continued in their malice against the Tribes, joyning first with the Canaanites against them when they were in their March; and after with the Midianites, when not well setled in their new possessions. A provocation so ill taken by the Lord oo Hosts, because unnatural, and ill grounded, that he declared his resolution from the time of the Battel of Rephidim, to put out the remembrance of Amalek from under Heaven, Exod. 17. 14. Accordingly, when the Children of Israel were provided for it, he commanded Saul to set upon them, ond to slay both man and woman, infant and suckling, yea, their sheep and cattel. But some of them escaped this slaughter, and fell not long after upon Ziglag, the retiring place of David, which they took and ransacked; but being by him followed on the first intelligence, they were easily overthrown, and the prey recovered. Their malice yet survived their power; and what they could not do by their forces, they endeavored to effect by joyning with the Ammonites, Moabites, and other enemies of David, in their wars against him. And this was ultimum conamen, one of the last flashes of their dying light: nothing done by them worth remembrance of the times succeeding, most of the Nation being worn out, and those few which were left, retiring to the Mountains of Edom, but thereof also dispossessed by the Simeonites, during the reign of Hezekiah.

Thirdly, The ISMAELITES, descending from Ismael, the son of Abraham by Hagar, branched into twelve great Nrtions, and grown wondrous populous, spred themselves over a great part of

of these three Arabia's: all of them either Theives or Merchants; trading to Egypt in spicery, and balm, and myrrhe, or robbing those which traded in the like commodities. Called also Hagarens in the Scripture, as 1 Chron. 5. 10. Psalm 83, 6, &c. and by that name well known to many of the ancient writers. A people for the most part of a vagabond and roguish life, more given to spoil, than any honest course of living, which made every Traveller and Merchant to be armed against them; so verifying the prediction which was given of Ismael, that he should be a wilde man, having his hand against every man, and every mans hand against him. Saint Hierome so conceives that Prophecy to have been accomplished. More fitly verified perhaps, when in and under the name of Saracens (by which, and by the name of Scenites, they were most generally known to the Greeks and Romans) they made such foul havock in the world, and were esteemed the common enemies of all Civil Nations. Never so governable in their best and most orderly times, as to acknowledge King or Law, till made one body with the Chusites, and the rest of those Nations: and then no further, then it stood with their lust or liking.

Fourth, As for the Chusites, though they permitted the Nations above specified, to inhabit in those Desarts and waste places, which themselves either could not people, or cared not for; yet were they always of most power, and gave name to that whole tract of ground, containing now all Petræa, the South part of Deserta, and the mountains which divide Petræa from Arabia Felix; which from them was called Chus, or the Land of Chus. Rendred in all places of the Old Testament, by the name of Ethiopia, first by the Septuagit, and afterwards by all the Fathers Greek and Latine, the Vulgar Translation of the Bible, and almost all the other Translations at this day extant. And rendred right enough at first, as in all times since, though by some mistaken: who having never heard of any other Ethiopia then that in Affrick, have transferred thither all those actions and Texts of Scripture, which are meant of this. The Septuagint, no doubt, were not so ignorant of the affairs of their next neighbouring Nation, as not to know by what name they were called by the Greeks, their then Lords and Masters. And he that looks into the History of Herodotus, who lived 150. years before that Translation; will finde, that by the Grecians they were called Ethiopians; and called so questionless from the self same reason; that is to say, the swarthiness, or Sun-burntness of their complexion, as the Ethiops of Affrick were; that name being framed of the Greek word Αἴθω, signifying to burn; and Ὤψ, a countenance; by reason of their tawny and Sun-burnt Countenances. For speaking of the huge Army of Xerxes against the Greeks, he doth thus proceed, Ἀραβίων δ' ἦν Ἀρσάμης, ὑπ' ὑπερ Αἰγυπτίε οἰκημένων ἦρχε Ἀρσάμης, &c. "Arsames, "(saith he) was Captain of the Arabians (he meaneth the Troglodites) and Ethiopians, which are be- "yond Egypt: but the Eastern Ethiopians were ranked with the Indians, nothing differing from the other "in the structure of their bodies, but their hair and voyce onely; the Eastern Ethiopians wearing their "hair smooth, those of Lybia curled. The Ethiops of Asia were armed like the Indians, but the Ethiops "of Affrica were arrayed with the skins of beasts. Here then we have an Asian Ethiopia in the time of Herodotus; the same acknowledged by Pausanias an old Greek writer, and by Philostratus after him, though they look for it in the wrong place: the first amongst the Seres, in the North of Asia; the other on the River Ganges, too much in the East. Nor doth Æthicus, one of the old Cosmographers, published by Simlerus, shoot more neer to the mark, who speaking of the River Tigris, saith that it burieth it self, and runneth under the ground in Ethiopia: Which though Simler doth interpret of these parts of Arabia, yet questionless that Authour meaneth it of the Countreys about Mount Taurus; where that River doth indeed run under ground, and having passed under those vast mountains, riseth up again.

But what need further search be made to finde out the situation of this Ethiopia, when it is bounded out so plainly in the holy Scriptures? For when it is said of Zipporah the wife of Moses, that she was an Ethiopian woman, Num. 12. 1. who is well known to have been a native of this Countrey, and when it is said in 2 Chron. 21. 16. that the Lord stirred up against Jehoram the spirit of the Philistims, and of the Arabians that were neer the Ethiopians: it must needs be that the Ethiopia there spoken of, must be conterminous to the rest of Arabia, and be intended of that Countrey wherein Madian was. So where God threatneth by the mouth of the Prophet Ezekiel, that he would lay waste the land of Egypt, from the Tower of Syene, even unto the borders of Ethiopia, chap. 29. 10. that is to say, from one end thereof unto the other: it followeth necessarily, that Ethiopia there meant, must be this part of Arabia, or the Land of Chus, as the bound of Egypt most remote from the Tower of Syene, which all Geographers acknowledge to be in the extream South parts thereof, towards the Cataracts of Nilus. For to expound it as some do, of Ethiopia in Affrick, on the borders whereof Syene stood; and stood so indifferently betwixt it and Egypt, that Stephanus an ancient Writer makes it very doubtful to which of the two it did belong, were to make the Scripture speak plain non-sense: as plain as if a man should say, that the French conquered all the Netherlands, from Graveling to Flanders; or that the sword hath ranged over all England, from Berwich to Scotland. As when we have found this Ethiopia of the Old Testament, to be neer the Philistims on the one side, and the Land of Egypt on the other; so may we finde it to be bounded also on the East, with Babylonia or Chaldea: the River Gihon, which is said to compass the whole Land of Ethiopia (or the Land of Chus) Gen. 2. 13. being no other then a branch of the River Euphrates, which falleth into the Lakes of Chaldea. So that the translation of the Septuagint in reading Chusites, or the Land of Chus, by Ethiopia, needs no such alteration or emendation as some men suppose. The mistakes (whereof there have been many) which arise from hence, not being to be charged on them or on their Translation, but on the ignorance of the Reader, or error of such Expositors, who dreaming of no other Ethiopia then of that in Affrick, have made the Scriptures speak such things as it never meant, and carried these Chusites into the African Ethiopia, where they never were. And yet perhaps it may be ſaid, that this poſterity of Chus, being ſtreightned in their own poſſeſſions, or willing to ſeek new adventures, might have croſſed over the Red-Sea, or Gulf of Arabia (being but ſeven miles broad where narroweſt) and mingling with the ſons of Ludim on the other ſide, might either give the name of Ethiopians to them, or receive it from them. Arabia Felix.

Now to go forwards with the ſtory, the firſt great action attributed to theſe Chuſites, or Arabian Ethops, incorporated with the reſt of thoſe mingled Nations, is the expedition of Zerah, the King hereof, againſt Aſa King of Judah, drawing after him an Army of a million, and three hundred Chariots of war (the greateſt Army ever read of in unqueſtioned ſtory) but for all that, diſcomfited by the Lord of Hoſts, on the prayers of Aſa, and all the ſpoil of that huge Army carried to Hieruſalem. After this Tirrakah, another of theſe Ethiopian Kings, finding how dangerous the great growth of the Aſſyrian Kingdom might prove unto him, prepared a puiſſant Army againſt Senacherib, then beſieging Libna, threatning the conqueſt of all Judah, and invading Egypt: upon the news of whoſe approach, Senackeribs forces which were even upon the gaining of Peluſium, the Gate of Egypt, were fain to diſlodge and provide for their ſafety. For though Herodotus call Senacherib King of Arabia, and Aſſyria, yet was he Maſter onely of thoſe parts of Arabia, which had been formerly poſſeſſed by the Kings of Iſrael, being no more then ſome few Cities of Petræa, bordering next unto them: or perhaps called ſo onely in reſpect of thoſe parts of Syria, and Meſopotamia, which were ſometimes comprehended under the name of Arabia, as before is ſaid. What part they after took in the great war betwixt Nebuchadnezzar, and Pharaoh Necho King of Egypt, is not hard to ſay. For beſides that, the ſame reaſons of ſtate obliging them to ſide with the Egyptian, were ſtill in force; their giving Necho leave to paſs through their Countrey with his Army, to invade the Babylonians on the banks of Euphrates, make that plain enough. Now that both Tirrakah and Zerah; were Kings of this Aſian, and not of the African Ethiopia, is moſt clear and evident: partly in regard the Kings of Egypt would never ſuffer ſuch huge Armies to paſs thorow the whole length of their Dominions; but principally becauſe it is ſaid in the holy Scriptures, that Aſa having overthrown that vaſt Army of Zerah, ſmote all the Cities about Gerar, which formerly had belonged unto the Philiſtims, but were then poſſeſſed by theſe Chuſites, and their Aſſociates. After this, either as Confederates or Subjects, we finde them aiding unto Xerxes, in his war on Greece: and like enough it was, that in Alexanders march from Egypt towards Perſia, they ſubmitted to him, as did all the other Countreys thorow which he paſſed. He being dead, Antigonus, one of his great Commanders, ſent Athenæus with an Army to bring them in, who being trained into an ambuſh was diſcomfited by them. Demetrius the ſon of Antigonus, thinking that he had done enough in revenge of that overthrow, by compelling them to ſue for peace. In the time of the Seleucian race in Syria, we finde them governed by Kings of their own, moſt of them called by the name of Aretas; of which one was of ſpecial note in the declining fortunes of the Seleucidans, for bidding very fair for the Crown of that Countrey; and being a great ſtickler in the wars of Jewry, in the time of Hirlanus the fourth, King of the Race of the Maccabees, to whom at the requeſt of Antipater, the father of Herod, he gave hopes of aid; and on thoſe hopes was poſſeſſed of Medaba, and other Towns of good importance, which Alexander the Father of Hirlanus had regained from the Syrians, and laid unto the Crown of Jewry, to which, as parts of Ilgrea, and anciently poſſeſſed by the Tribes of Iſrael, he might make ſome claim. Another there was of the ſame name, and of no leſs power, whom we finde to have been warred upon by Herod, about the time of the battel of Actium, and for the moſt part vanquiſhed by him; and finally a third of more power then either, mentioned by St. Paul, 2 Cor. 11. 32. as Lord of Damaſcus. In the flouriſhing of the Roman fortunes, the Kings hereof having firſt aided Mithridates and Tygranes, in the war againſt them, ſubmitted themſelves unto Lucullus, being then no neerer to them then Armenea major. The like they did to Pompey alſo, being then in Judea. Firſt vanquiſhed by Ælius Gallus in the time of Auguſtus; but the victory not improved to an abſolute conqueſt, till the time of Trajan, when partly by his perſonal preſence, and partly by the valour and good fortune of Palma, his Lieutenant, they were fully vanquiſhed, and brought into the form of a Roman Province: but ſo that they had Kings of their own (Vaſſals and Feudataries of the Empire) as in former times; continuing in that condition till the riſe of Mahomet. Of which more hereafter.

3. ARABIA FELIX.

ARABIA FELIX is bounded the Eaſt, with the Perſian; on the Weſt, with the Arabian Gulf; on the North, with a long ridge of of mountains, which part it from Deſerta and Petræa; and on the South, with the boundleſs Ocean. Environed on three parts with the Sea, on the fourth with rough, impaſſable mountains; in ſituation and figure much reſembling Italy.

It had the name of Arabia Felix from the fertility and happy condition of it, being eſteemed the moſt fruitful and pleaſant Countrey in all Aſia, abounding with Myrrhe, Balſamum, Frankincenſe, Gold, and Precious Stones: by Curtius called Odorum fertilitate nobilis Regio, from the abundance of Frankincenſe, wherewith enriched beyond all others. Concerning which there goeth a ſtory, that when Alexander in his Adolaſcency or boyage was ſacrificing to the Gods, and caſt into the fire with both hands great ſtore of Frankincenſe and Myrrhe; Leonidas, his Governor, bid him be more ſparing of thoſe precious and dear commodities, till he was Maſter of the Countrey in which they grew. Which Alexander remembring, when he had brought almoſt all the Eaſt under his obedience, he ſent unto Leonidas a ſhip laden with Frankincenſe, biding him from thenceforth ſerve the Gods more liberally But aſwel for the reaſon of this adjunct, as a more perfect character and deſcription of it, take along this of Ammianus Marcellinus, who deſcribes it thus, 'On the eaſt and ſouth hereof (ſaith he) are the happy Arabians, ſo called be-
'cauſe ſo rich in corn; aſwel as plenteous in cattel, vines, and odoriferous ſpices of all kinds; ſhut up betwixt
'the Red Sea, & the Perſian Gulf, and ſo acquainted with all bleſſings, which either element can afford:
'well furniſhed with Roads, and quiet harbors fur ſhipping, the Towns of trade and merchandize ſtanding
'very thick; the retiring houſes of the Kings, paſſing neat and ſumptuous. Beſides moſt wholeſom foun-

Arabia Felix.

"tains of medicinall waters, they enjoy divers Brooks and Rivers very cleer and pure, and a temperature "of Air exceeding healthy; ſo that whatſoever conſidereth all things aright, may well conclude, that "there is nothing wanting to the accompliſhment of its felicity in the higheſt degree. So Ammianus "Marcellinus. To which we need adde nothing more to ſet forth its happineſs, than that Danæus in his comment on Saint Auguſtines Echiridion ad Laurentium, is perſwaded that it was the local place of Paradiſe. Dicitur (ſaith he) Paradiſi terreſtris Regio pars quædam eſſe Arabiæ, quæ nunc dicitur Felix. But it hath other names beſides this of Felix. By the Arabians themſelves called Jeman, and Al-jeman (Ayaman corruptly by the Turks) which in that tongue ſignifieth the South, or Southren Region, By Virgil it is named Panchaia, quaſi tota dehiſcens, becauſe of the many chops and chinks which the ardour of the Sun makes in the ſands thereof, though by him much extolled alſo for its plenty of Frankincenſe.

Totaque thuriferis Phanchaia pinguis arenis,
Famed are the whole Panchaian lands
For rich and incenſe-bearing ſands.

The People antiently, though more civil than the reſt of the Arabians, had yet many ſtrange and barbarous cuſtomes. Adultery amongſt them was puniſhed with death, as in other places, but onely he was held an Adulterer, which enjoyed any that was not his own kinſwoman, be ſhe his Siſter or his mother: and ſo they kept themſelves in their own families, community of wives or women was eſteemed no crime. And of this there is a tale in Strabo, that a King of this Countrey had 15. ſons, and but one daughter, who according to the cuſtomes hereof, was the common wife of all her Brethren: every of which had a ſtaff of like making, which when he went in unto his Siſter he did leave at the door; and by ſo doing did forbid entrance to the reſt, till it were removed. The young Lady wearied with a continual exceſs of dalliance, ſecretly procured a ſtaff like unto the reſt, which when ſhe was deſirous to prohibit their acceſſes to her, ſhe left at her chamber door; and by that means did many times enjoy her deſired privacy. At laſt it hapned that all the Brothers being together, one of them departed towards his Siſters lodging; Where finding a ſtaff before the door, and knowing that he had left his Brethren in one place together, he accuſed her of Adultery: but the truth being made known, the Lady was quitted, and there viſits afterwards reſtrained. Of dead bodies, they took no care, not ſo much as of their Chiefs, or Princes; but left them to the cuſtody of the next dung-hil. They bragged much of their deſcent from Jupiter; and neglected all ſciences and arts, as diſparagements to ſo great nobility. Commendable onely in the keeping of their faith and promiſes, and in that moſt punctual. Much of the ſame condition are the preſent Inhabitants, ſave that leſs faithful in their contracts; and by their law reſtrained from medling with the wives of others, permitted many of their own. Some there are of them which apply themſelves to the grazing of cattel, and the reſt to Merchandize, wherein very cautious, and cunning; but hating to this day all Mechanical Arts. A Nation from the beginning unmixed with others, till the coming of the Turks amongſt them, of which but few, and thoſe diſpoſed of in garriſons: boaſting of their nobility, and glorying in nothing more than their greateſt ſhame, namely that the falſe Prophet Mahomet was their Countrey-man; whoſe impieties are here generally embraced, and followed.

Amongſt the rarities of this Countrey, ſome account the Phœnix, which growing old burneth her ſelf in a neſt of ſpies, and from thence a young one is ingendred; one of them onely at a time, which after a life of five or ſix hundred years, thus reneweth her kind. But this tradition, queſtioned in former times by Pliny and ſome others, is now proved a fiction; contrary both unto divinity and natural reaſon: though ſome of the Fathers made uſe of it as an argument to prove the Reſurrection againſt the Gentiles, by whom the tradition was believed. More common, but of no leſs obſervation, is the Oſtrige, a Bird which ſwalloweth all it findeth, be it ſtones or Iron, They delight chiefly in the Deſarts, in the ſands whereof they lay their eggs, and then forgetting where they left them ſit on thoſe they meet next. In that reſpect accounted for a ſimple fowl, though otherwiſe of wit enough to preſerve themſelves; keeping in flocks, and oftentimes with their fearful ſhreeches affrighting Paſſengers, to whom they do appear a far off like a Troop of horſemen. Their wings too little for their bodies, ſerve them not for flight, but to run more ſpeedily; and by that means not eaſily caught, though much laid in wait for for their ſkins, which the people ſell unto the Merchant with the fathers on them. Nor of leſs note is the Frankinſence, though of common uſe; almoſt peculiar to this Countrey, and here but to thoſe parts thereof which were formerly poſſeſſed by the Sabæi: the wood out of which this gum proceedeth being about 100 miles long, and 50 broad; gathered onely in Spring and Autumn. More of this anon.

The Countrey is much commended by Ammianus for plenty of Rivers, the principal whereof are ſaid by Ptolomy, to be 1. Betius. 2. Prion. 3. Harman. 4. Lar; but the modern names thereof I find not. Many fair lakes, and ſtore of large capacious Baies on each coaſt of the Sea, as 1. Sinus Eliniticus. 2. Sachalites. 3. Leanites. 4. Sinus Magoram. 5. Sinus Ichthy-phagorum. 6. Meſſanites 7. Sacer Sinus or the holy Bay, and 8 the Road or Naval ſtation called Neogilla. Mountains of moſt note, 1. Thoſe which are called Melanes, at the entrance of the Perſian Gulf. 2. Cabubuthra, at the entrance of the Red Sea or Gulf of Arabia. 3. Hippus. 4. Prionotus, not far from the River Prion, from whence ſo denominated. 5. Climax. 6 The Mountains called Dedymi, &c.

Towns of good note in ancient times it had very many, no Region affording unto Ptolomy the names of more; and amongſt thoſe, many commodious Ports for traffick, the ſea begirting it for the ſpace of three thouſand miles, and upwards. Of moſt importance and obſervation in thoſe times, were 1. Zebrum, 2. Badeo. 3. Rhabana. 4. Carman, 5. Manambis, 6. Sabe, 7. Are; the Royal ſeats of ſo many ſeveral Kingdomes, and therefore honored by Ptolomy with the title of Regiæ. Then there are 1. Macoſmos, 2. Meara, 3. Nagara, 4. Sabbatha, 5. Mapha, and 6. Saphar, which he called Metropoles; as being the head Cities of ſome ſeueral Nations. Amongſt the Ports, he reckoneth, 1. Seſippus pus, 2. Trulla, 3. Tretos, 4. Cryptus, 5. Itamos, and 6. Moscha: amongst the most noted Empories or Towns of Trafick, 1. Musa, 2. Ocelis, 3. Arabia, 4. Cane. Besides which there are some which do preserve the memory of their first Plantations, as, 1. Saphta, upon the Persian Gulf, so called from Sabta, the third Sonne of Chus, 2. Rhegama, or Regma (as the Greek copies of Ptolomy have it) so named from Regma or Raama his sixt Sonne; on the same Gulf also. 3. Sabe, on the shores of the Red Sea. And 4. Sabe Regia, more within the Land, so named from Seba the eldest Sonne of the same Chus, from whom the rich and potent nation of the Sabæans are to be derived. Out of all which, and many others by him named, we shall take more particular notice of some that follow. 1. Musa, a noted Port on the entrance of the Red Sea, frequented antiently by the Ethiopian and Egyptian Merchants; who there laded their ships, with Frankincense, Myrrhe, Spices, and other commodities of this Countrey, bringing in, in exchange thereof, Saffron, corn, wine, ointments, purple dies, &c. 2. Sabe, the Regal Seat of the Kings of the Sabæans, particularly of that Queen so memorized in holy Scripture; called in the old Testament the Queen of Sheba, from her Countrey and place of dwelling, in the New Testament, the Queen of the South, because of the Southern situation of it in respect of Judæa: said there to come from the furthest parts of the world, because there was no part of the world which lay south to the Countrey of the Sabæans, over which she reigned. Situate on a little Mountain, affirmed by Agatharcides to be πολὺ κάλλιστον τῶν κατὰ τὴν Ἀραβίαν, the most beautiful by far in all Arabia, and the Metropolis of the rich and potent Nation of the Sabæans: rich in all the excellencies of Nature, especially in Frankinsence, a gum peculiar to them only, and growing here in a wood of about 100 miles long, and 50 broad; not gathered but in the Spring and Autumn, nor then without great care, and many ceremonies. The Countrey hereabouts from hence called Thurifera, and this sweet gum appropriated soly to it. Sabæi Arabum propter thura clarissimi, as we find in Pliny; Solis est thurea virga Sabæis, as it is in Virgil; and finally---Thuriferos, felicia Regna, Sabæos, in the Argonauticks of Valerius Flaccus. It was called also Mariaba, and by that name occurreth in some antient Writers. 3. Saphar, more towards the Persian Gulf, on the South-side of the mountain Climax, the chief City of the Homeritæ; adorned in times of Christianity with a beautifull Temple. 4. Sabbatha, or Sabota, as Pliny calleth it, seated about the middest of the Countrey, on the top of an high and lofty hill, from whence it had a gallant prospect on the fields adjoyning: antiently large and populous, and strongly fortified, having no fewer than 60 Temples within the walls; the principal that consecrated unto Sabis, the God of their Nation, to whom they offered the tith of their Frankincense, ubi decimas Deo quem Sabin vocant, mensuræ non pondere capiunt Sacerdotes, as we read in Pliny. Arabia Felix.

But these and almost all the rest being grown out of knowledge, there have risen in their rooms, 1. Egra, on the shore of the Red Sea, neer the Bay called Sinus Elaniticus; by Ptolomy called Arga, by the Arabians themselves, Algiar: the Port Town to Medina, from which about three daies journey distant. 2. Jathrib, or Jatrib, in the way betwixt Aygiar, and Medina, the birth-place of Makomet; by whom fortified with a mud-wall as his place of retreat in the first beginnings of his fortunes. 3. Medina, commonly called Medina Talmabi, corruptly for Medinatho luabi, that is to say, the City of the Prophet: so called from the Sepulchre of Mahomet, that vile Imposture, which is there to be seen; although not in such an iron coffin, or drawn up to the roof of the Temple by vertue of an Amant there placed, as some deliver. The Town situate in a defolate and barren place, bordering on Arabia Petræa; but of great trade, rich, and well inhabited: the Sepulchre of that false Prophet drawing thither a continuall resort of Pilgrims. The Temple gorgeous, having 3000 lamps in it, which burn continually. The Sepulchre or Tomb inclosed within an Iron grate, but of no magnificence or beauty: covered with a carpet of Green Velvet, which is sent hither yearly by the Grand signeur; the old one being taken off, and cut into innumerable shreds or peeces, and sold for Relicks by the Priests, (to such as come in Pilgrimage thither) to their great enriching. 4. Cufa, the ordinary residence of the fift Caliphs, till the removing of the Imperiall Seat to Damascus, in Syria; and after that, the usuall place of meeting for consultation in affairs of State, relating to the peace of this Countrey, and the common interest of this People: as memorable for the Sepulchre of Mortis Hali, the Progenitor of the Persian Sophies, as Medina is for that of Mahomet. 5. Mecca, supposed to be the Mechara of Ptolomy, situate in the like barren soyl, not far from Medina, but of far greater resort and trafick: the whole wealth in a manner of this Countrey, together with the commodities of Persia, and India, being first brought hither; and from hence on Camels backs, transported into Ægypt, Syria, Palestine, and other parts of the Turkish Empire. Unwalled, and either for that cause, or for concealement of their fopperies from the eyes of Christians, it is made death for any Christian for to come within five miles of it. Utterly destitute of water, but what they keep in cisternes, from one shewer of rain to another, or else brought thither with great charge; otherwise pleasantly seated, rich, and containing about 6000 families: every year visited with three Caravans or troops of Merchants and Pilgrims, from India, Damascus, and Grand Caire: who having done their business and devotions there, go afterwards in Pilgrimage to Medina also, to the great enriching of both places. 6. Ziden, the Haven Town to Mecca, from which distant about 40 miles, situate on the Red Sea, in a sandy soyl, unwalled and much exposed both to wind and weather; but wealthy, well-built, and of great resort. 7. Zebit, now the Metropolis of the Countrey, situate about half a daies journey from the Red Sea, in a large plain, between two mountains; a Riveret of the same name passing by it: well-traded for Sugars, spice, and fruits; the ordinary residence of the Turkish Beglerbeg, by whom taken, not longe after Aden. 8. Eltor, a Port Town of this Countrey, and the onely town where the Christians are suffered to inhabit. 9. Aden, on the very entrance of the Red Sea, neer the Streights called Babel-Mandell; supposed by some to be the Madoce of Ptolomy, but more agreeing in situation, with the famous Emporie by him called Arabia. The fairest Town of the whole Peninsula, of great strength, both by Art and Nature; well-traded, and well-fortified, having a large capacious Haven, seldome without good store of shipping, and containing to the number of six thousand persons. Once a distinct Kigdome of it self, but treacherously surprized by the Turks, Anno 1538. and therewith all the rest of the Countrey: made afterwards the seat of a Turkish Beglerbeg, under whom, and him of Zebit, are supposed to be no fewer than thirty thousand Timariots. 10. Oran, the Lock and Key of the Southern Ocean. 11. Thema, or Theman, the same I take it, which our later travellers call Zeman, situate more within the land: affirmed by Benjamin the Jew, surnamed Tude Censis, to be a Town of 15 miles square, but to have within the walls thereof great quantity of ground for tillage. 12 Zarval, a retiring place of the Caliphs, when they lived in this Countrey. 13. Hor, on the point or Promontory called Chorodemus, a Garrison not long since of the Kings of Ormus. 14. Muskahat, on the Persian Gulf, neer the point of Land called Cape Rozel gate: opposite to Surat, in the East India, and possessed by the Portugals, who have fortified it with a well-built Castle, for defence of their Ships and Frigots which frequent those Seas. Of no great note till the taking of Ormus by the Persians, many of the Inhabitants whereof were since setled here. Of the affairs of this Countrey we shall speak anon; having first took a brief view of the Ilands, which belong unto it.

The Arabick Ilands.

4. THE ARABICK ILANDS.

THe ILANDS which lie round about the shores of Arabia Felix, and have been antiently accompted as parts thereof, are dispersed either in the 1. Red-Sea, 2. Southern Ocean, or 3. the Gulf of Persia.

1. The RED-SEA, (called also by the Antients Sinus Arabicus, and now Golfo di Mecca) is that part or branch of the Southern Ocean which interposeth it self betwixt Egypt on the East; Arabia Felix, and some part of Petræa, on the West; the North-East bound of it touching upon Idumæa, or the Cost of Edom. Extended in length from the Town of Sues, antiently called Arsinoe, in the bottom of it, to the streights of Babel-Mandel, where it openeth into the Southern Ocean; for the space of one thousand and four hundred miles: in breadth, for the most part but one hundred, but in some places almost two; the Streights themselves not being above a mile and an half, antiently chained by the Kings of Ægypt, as is said by Strabo, but now left open by the Turk, who is Lord hereof. A violent and inquiet Sea, full of sands and shelves; insomuch as they who passe in and out, are fain to make use of Pilots which dwell thereabouts, and are experienced in the channel. Sufficiently famous in all times and stories, for the miraculous passage of the Children of Israel, and the drowning of Pharaoh, King of Egypt.

It took the name of the Red-Sea, as some conceived, from the redness of the sands; as others have delivered, from the redness of the waters: but later observations have discovered the weakness and absurdity of these Etymologies; the Sea, and Sands being coloured here, as in other places. By the Grecians it was called Erythræum, which in that tongue signifieth Red also, not from the colour either of the sands or waters; but from one Erythras supposed to be the Sonne of Perseus and Andromeda, who commanded the Eastern shores hereof. And these come neerer to the mark than the others did. For the truth is, it was originally called the Sea of Edom, because it took beginning on the coasts of that Countrey: which word in the Hebrew, signifying Red, as appeareth Gen. 25. 30. first given as a nick-name to Esau, and from him afterwards to Mount Seir, or the Land of Edom, Gen. 36. 31. was by the Greeks rendred Erythræum, and Mare Rubrum by the Latines. Whence the name of the Red Sea became known to all, but the reason of the name to few.

Of the great traffick which was antiently driven up this Sea, we shall speak hereafter, when we are in Egypt, on the other side of it. Look we now on the Ilands which belong to Arabia, as they all generally do. Known in the times of Ptolomy by the names of 1. Adani, 2. Æni, 3. Are, 4. Cardamine, 5. Combusta, 6. Damanum, 7. Hieracum, or the Isle of Hawkes, 8. Maliaci, 9. Polbii, 10. Socratis, 11. Timagenis, and 12. Zygena. But by what names now called, and of what note then, is a thing so doubtfull, that I dare not offer a conjecture. Late Travellers report almost all of them to be small, desolate, or but meanly inhabited, described by them under other names. One there is of indifferent largeness, said to be an hundred twenty and five miles long, though but twelve broad, called Dalaqua; with a City in it of that name, where they gather Pearls. 2. Then there is Camaran, most extreamly hot, of most note for the many spoils there made by the Portugals. 3. Xamoa, the earth whereof is said to be Red, (perhaps to countenance the vulgar tradition, of calling this the Red Sea from the colour of the sands or shores) and the King a Moore. 4. The Samaritan Iland, spoken of by Scaliger, inhabited by a remainder of that people; who assoon as they saw any stranger land upon their coasts, would most religiously desire him not to touch them. Such other Ilands as lie upon the opposite shores, and seem to appertain unto Ethiophia shall finde their place, in our description of the African Ilands.

II. The SOUTHERN OCEAN comprehendeth that vast body of waters, which from the Eastern banks of both Æthiopia's, coast along on the South of Arabia Felix, and so directly East-ward, to the furthest India: in this regard called by some Writers Oceanus Indicus, by others Mare Australe, from the situation; and by some also Mare Rubrum or the Red Sea, from Erythras a great King (as they suppose) reigning hereabouts, and giving name not onely to the Red Sea (or Gulf of Arabia) strictly and specially so called, but to all the Sea-coasts also from the opening of the Bay of Arabia to the coasts of India, by them called Mare Erythræum.

In this vast Ocean Ptolomy placeth many Ilands which belong to Arabia, but of little note, viz. two Ilands by the name of Insulæ Agathoclis. 2. Three more by the name of Cocconati. 3. Dioscoris, by Pliny called Dioscurias, with a City of the same name in it. 4. Seven others in the Bay called Sinus Sachalites, Sachalites, by the name of Zenobii. 5. Organa, by Strabo called Tyrrina, memorable for the Sepulchre of Erythras before mentioned, being a great Hill planted with trees. 6. Sarapias, by Ammianus Marcellinus called Turgana, famed for a Temple of Serapis, the Egyptian Idol. None of them now of any Credit, nor formerly of any great note, the two laſt excepted. Arabia Felix.

III. On the Eaſt-ſide of Arabia Felix, betwixt it and Perſia, lieth another large Arm of the Southren Ocean, antiently called Sinus Perſicus, or the Bay of Perſia, now Golfo di Elkadiffe. A turbulent and unruly Sea, the Southern Ocean breaking in at the one end, and the River Euphrates at the other: the continual combatting or claſhing of which two great waters, makes it ſo unquiet. Ptolomy placeth in this Bay (but as parts or members of Arabia,) 1. Tylus, which Arianus ſets at the mouth of Euphrates, Solinus in the Indian Seas, affirming it to be well ſtored with vines, and olives: another of this name being placed by Theophraſtus in the Bay of Arabia (but probably the place miſtaken) affording good materials for ſhipping. 2. Apphana. 3. Tharo. 4. Ichara; of which nothing memorable. To theſe ſome late Travellers have adjoyned two others, if not ſome of the former under thoſe new names, that is to ſay, 5. Bayren, and 6. Gonfiar, where they take the beſt Pearles in the World, in beds of Oiſters. Other Ilands of this Bay (if any) do belong to Perſia; where, if occaſion ſo require, we ſhall ſpeak more of them.

To return therefore to the main-land of Arabia-Felix, the firſt Inhabitants thereof were the ſonnes of Chus, and the families which they brought with them. Their memories preſerved in the names of ſome of the chief Towns and Nations, till the dayes of Plinie, Ptolomy, and ſome others of the antient writers. Divided afterwards into the ſeverall Tribes or Septs of the Caſſanitæ, Cinædocolpitæ, Homeritæ, Adramitæ, Eleſari, Sachalitæ, Anaritæ, Gerræi, Ægæi, Sabæi, Minæi, Leanitæ, Cattabani, Abuceni, and divers others: each governed ſeparately and apart by their ſeveral Chiefs; whom they honoured, as in other places, with the name of Kings. One of which ſpoken of by Juſtine, named Hierotimus, is ſaid to have been the Father of 500 Children. Eaſie to have been overcome, becauſe ſo divided, if any potent neighbour had attempted the conqueſt of them: as it is wondrous ſtrange they did not, conſidering the richneſs of the Countrey, and the many temptations which it had to invite them to it. More worthily deſerving the name of Felix in that never conquered, than in all the other rarities and delights thereof. By Alexander once deſigned for the ſeat of his Empire, who probably had endeavoured the conqueſt of it, having finiſhed his warre againſt the Perſians, had he not died in Babylon at his coming back. Nor did the Romans ever extend their Empire beyond Petræa, though once Auguſtus did attempt it; employing in that action, Largus, his Lieutenant in Egypt: one Sames being then King of thoſe parts which lay neereſt to him. The Romans at their firſt entry found no reſiſtance. But when by the extraordinary heat of the air, and drinking ſalt waters, they began to grow diſeaſed and ſickly; the Arabians fell luſtily upon them, and made them return back both with loſs and ſhame. After this nothing done by the Romans, to diſturb their quiet; nor much done by the Chriſtians, to advance their glories: the whole divided into almoſt as many Religions, as Principalities and Eſtates. Moſt of them Gentiles, but Circumciſed, as the Iſmaelites and other Arabians had been of old; many Jews intermingled with them, and ſome ſtore of Chriſtians, but thoſe divided alſo into Sects and factions. And in this ſtate it ſtood, when Mahomet firſt began to broach his blaſphemous dotages. By birth, of Jathripp, an obſcure village then, not far from Medina; his Father called Abdalla, an Idolatrous Pagan; his mother named Hemina, as perverſe a Jeweſs. Deprived of both his Parents when but two years old, he was left unto the care of an Uncle: who not able to give him education, nor willing to be at the charge to keep him longer, ſold him at ſixteen years of age to the Iſmaelites; by whom expoſed to ſale in the open markets, he was bought by one Abdalmutalif, a wealthy Merchant. By him employed at firſt in drudgery, and ſervile offices, till noting his great wit, and fitneſs for better ſervices, he at laſt uſed him as his factor: ſending him with his Camels and loads of Merchandize, into Syria, Perſia, Egypt, and other places; wherein he did behave himſelf with ſuch dexteritie, that he much increaſed his Maſters wealth, and his own eſtimation. Of perſon he is ſaid to be low, and withall ſcald-headed; but otherwiſe comely to the eye, and of good aſpect. Much troubled with the falling ſickneſs, which infirmity he made good uſe of afterwards; affirming that thoſe fits were nothing but heavenly raptures, in which he did converſe with the Angel Gabriel. He is ſaid to have been alſo well skilled in Magick, by which he taught a white Pigion to feed at his ear, which he gave out to be the Holy Ghoſt, by whom he was inſtructed in the law which he was to publiſh: but this not till afterwards. By Sorceries, comelineſs of perſon, and the great knowledge which he had in his maſters buſineſs; he gained ſo farre on the affections of his Miſtreſs, that on the death of Abdalmutalif, ſhe made him her husband. Poſſeſſed of all his maſters wealth, he affected eaſe; and being till then of no Religion, or at beſt a Pagan, he began to hearken unto Sergius, a Neſtorian Monk: who flying out of Syria for fear of puniſhment (the hereſies of Neſtorius being newly both revived and cenſured) came into Arabia; where he found entertainment in the houſe of Abdalmutalif, the Maſter of Mahomet. By his perſwaſions, who found him a fit Inſtrument for the devil to work on, he began to entertain the thoughts of hammering out a new Religon; which might unite all parties in ſome common principles, and bring the Chriſtians, Jews, and Gentiles, (into which the world was then divided,) under one Profeſſion. Reſolved on this, he retired himſelf unto a Cave not farre from Mecca, as if he there attended nothing but meditations: Sergius in the mean time ſounding in the ears of the people, both his parts, and piety. The people being thus prepared to behold the Pageant, outcomes the principal Actor with ſome parts of his Alcoran (pleaſing enough to ſenſual minds) which he profeſſed to have received from the Angel Gabriel. And finding that this edified to his expectation, he next proclamed liberty to all ſlaves, and ſervants as a thing commanded him by God, by whom the natural liberty of mankind was moſt dearly tendred: which drew unto him ſuch a rabble of unruly people, that without fear of oppoſition, he diſperſed his doctrines, reducing them at laſt to a book or method. The Book of this religion he calleth the Alcoran, that is to ſay, the Collection of Precepts: the Originall whereof they feign to be written on a Table which is kept in Heaven, and the Copy of it brought to Mahomet by the Angell Gabriel. A Book ſo highly reverenced by the Mahometans, that they write upon the cover of it, let none touch this but he that is clean. The body of it (as it now ſtandeth) was compoſed by Oſmen the forth Caliph, who ſeeing the Saracens daily inclining to divers hereſies, by reaſon of ſome falſe copies of Mahomets Lawes; and that the Empire by the ſame means was likely to fall into civill diſſention; by the help of his wife, who was Mahomets daughter, he got a ſight of all Mahomets papers, which he reduced into four Volumes, and divided into one hundred twenty and four Chapters; commanding expreſly upon pain of death, that that book, and that onely, ſhould be received as Canonicall, through his Dominions. The whole body of it is but an expoſition and gloſs on theſe eight Commandments.

1. Every one ought to believe that God is a great God; and one onely God, and Mahomet is his Prophet. They hold Abraham, to be the friend of God; Moſes, the meſſenger of God; and Chriſt, the breath of God: whom they deny to be conceived by the Holy Ghoſt, affirming that the Virgin Mary grew with child of him by ſmelling to a Roſe, and was delivered of him at her breſts. They deny the myſtery of the Trinity; but puniſh ſuch as ſpeak againſt Chriſt; whoſe Religion was not (ſay they) taken away, but mended by Mahomet. And he who in his pilgrimage to Mecca, doth not, comming or going, viſit the Sepulchre of Chriſt, is reputed not to have merited, or bettered himſelf any thing by his journey.

2. Every man muſt marry to encreaſe the Sectaries of Mahomet. Four wives he alloweth to every man, and as many Concubins as he will: between whom the Husband ſetteth no difference, either in affection or apparrell; but that his wives onely can enjoy his Sabbaths benevolence. The women are not admitted in the time of their lives to come into their Churches; nor after death, to Paradiſe: and whereas in moſt or all other Countries, Fathers give ſome portions with their daughters, the Mahometans give money for their wives; which being once paid, the contract is regiſtred in the Cadies book, and this is all their formality of Marriage. More of this theam we ſhall ſpeak hereafter, when we are in TURCOMANIA, and among the Turkes.

3. Every one muſt give of his wealth to the poor. Hence you ſhall have ſome buy ſlaves, and then manumit them; buy birds, and then let them flie. They uſe commonly to free Priſoners, releaſe bond-ſlaves, build caves or lodgings in the waies for the relief of Paſſengers, repair bridges; and mend highwaies. But their moſt ordinary almes conſiſt in ſacrifices of Sheep or Oxen, which when the ſolemnity is performed, they diſtribute among the poor; to whom alſo, on the firſt day of every year, they are bound to give the tith or tenth part of their gettings in the year fore-going: inſomuch that you ſhall hardly find any beggers amongſt them.

4. Every one muſt make his prayers five times a day. When they pray they turn their bodies towards Mecca, but there faces ſometimes one way, ſometimes another way, believing that Mahomet ſhall come behind them, being at their devotions. The firſt time is an hour before Sun-riſing; the ſecond, at noonday; the third, at three of the clock after noon; the fourth, at Sun-ſetting; the fift and laſt, before they go to ſleep. At all theſe times the Cryers keep a bauling in the ſteeples (for the Turks and Saracens have no bells) for the people to come to Church. And ſuch as cannot come, muſt when they hear the voice of the Cryers, fall down in the place where they are, do their devotions, and kiſs the ground thrice.

5. Every one muſt keep a Lent one moneth in a year. This Lent is called Ramazan, in which they ſuppoſe the Alcoran was given unto Mahomet by the Angel Gabriel. This faſt is only intended in the day time, the law giving leave to frollick it in the night as they beſt pleaſe, ſo they abſtain from Wine, and Swines fleſh; prohibited by their Law at all times, but never ſo punctually abſtained from, as in the time of their Lent.

6. Be obedient to thy Parents; which law is the moſt neglected of any; in all the Alcoran; never any children being ſo unnatural as the Turkiſh.

7. Thou ſhalt not kill; and this they keep unviolated among themſelves; but the poor Chriſtians are ſure to feel the ſmart of their fury. And as if by this law, the actual ſhedding of bloud only were prohibited, they have invented puniſhments for their offenders, worſe than death it ſelf. As firſt the Strappado, which is hanging of them by the arms drawn backwards: when they are ſo bound, they are drawn up on high, and let down again with a violent ſwing, which unjoynteth all their back and armes. Secondly, they uſe to hoiſe up their heels, and with a great cudgell to give them three or four hundred blowes on the ſoles of their feet. Thirdly, it is ordinary to draw them naked up to the top of a Gibbit or Tower, full of hooks; and cutting the rope to let them fall down again; but by the way they are caught by ſome of the hooks, where they commonly hang till they die for hunger.

8. Doe unto others as thou wouldeſt be done unto thy ſelf. To thoſe that keep theſe Lawes he promiſeth Paradiſe, a place of all delights, adorned with flowry Fields, watered with Chryſtalline Rivers, beautified with Trees of gold; under whoſe cool ſhade, they ſhall ſpend their time with amourous Virgins, whoſe manſion ſhall not be far diſtant. The men ſhall never exceed the age of thirty; nor the women of fifteen; and thoſe to have their virginities renewed, as faſt as loſt.

Fryday he ordained to be the Sabbath-day, partly to diſtinguiſh his followers from the Jews and Chriſtians, who ſolemnize the daies enſuing; but principally becauſe he was on that day proclaimed King or Emperor, & ſolemnly ſo created. Wine and Swines-fleſh are the principall things forbidden by the Alcoran: from the laſt whereof they all unanimouſly refrain; but on the firſt they are ſo ſotted, that when they come at it, they ſeldome go home again unled; inſomuch that all the wines in Conſtantinople have been thrown about about the ſtreets, and death made the penalty for any that will preſume to bring any more into the City. Mahomet taught them that every one ſhould be ſaved by his own Religion; him onely excepted that revolted from the Alcoran, unto another Law: but ſo that under the notion of Religion, he means onely ſuch as worſhip the one and onely God, excluding by that means the old Idolaters of the Gentiles, from the hopes of ſalvation. And he taught too, that at the end of the world all men that profeſſed any ſuch Religion, ſhould go into Paradiſe, the Jews under the banner of Moſes, the Chriſtians under the banner of Chriſt, and the Saracens under the banner of Mahomet. They compel no man therefore to abjure the faith in which he was born, but commend and approve ſecretly ſuch as they finde zealous and conſtant in their own Religion; yet holding it an eſpecial honour to have daily new Proſelytes, they incite them by hope of freedom and preferment, which with many are motives too much prevailing. Hence I have heard many ſay, that it is better for a man that would enjoy liberty of conſcience, to live in the Countreys profeſſing Mahometaniſm, then Papiſtry; for in the one he ſhall never be free from the bloody Inquiſition; in the other he is never moleſted, if he meddle not with their Law, their Women, or their Slaves. The Arabick Ilands.

The opinions which they hold concerning the end of the World, are very ridiculous; as that at the winding of a horn, not all fleſh onely, but the Angels themſelves ſhall dye, that the Earth with an Earthquake ſhall be kneaded together, like a lump of dough; that a ſecond blaſt of the ſame horn, ſhall after fourty days reſtore all again; that Cain ſhall be the Captain or Ring-leader of the damned, who ſhall have the countenance of dogs, and ſwine; that they ſhall paſs over the bridge of Juſtice, laden with their ſins in ſatchels; that the great ſinners ſhall fall into hell, the leſſer into purgatory onely; with a thouſand of the like fopperies: which it is needleſs to adde here, conſidering that the Alcoran it ſelf is now extant in Engliſh, and every one that liſts may read it. A thing ſo full of Tautologies, incoherencies, and ſuch groſs abſurdities, of ſo impure and carnal mixture, that he muſt lay aſide the uſe of his natural reaſon, who is taken by it, if force, ambition, or the want of Chriſtian education do not lead him on. For if we ſeriouſly look into the cauſes of the deplorable increaſe and long continuance of this Religion, we ſhall finde them to be chiefly theſe, 1. The Greatneſs of the Victories gotten by the Saracens; who eaſily compelled the conquered Nations to receive their Law. 2. The great zeal and diligence of the Arabians themſelves, who being a numerous people, and much given to Merchandize, have poſſeſſed themſelves of all the Sea-coaſts of Affrick, from the ſtreights of Babel-Mandel, almoſt as far as to the Cape of good hope; of all the Ilands in thoſe Seas, and many Factories and good Towns on the coaſts of India: in all which they have ſetled their Religion alſo, as a thing inſeparable from their Nation. 3. A peremptory reſtraint of all diſputation, in any point of Religion whatſoever it be. 4. The ſuppreſſing of Philoſophy, and the ſtudy of Humane Sciences; the light whereof might eaſily detect the groſſeneſs of their Superſtitions. 5. The ſenſual liberty allowed of having variety of wives, and as many Concubines as they are able to keep. 6. The promiſe of the like ſenſual pleaſures in the other world, with which a ſenſe not illuminated with the Spirit of God, doth for the moſt part uſe to be more affected, than with the ſpeculative hope of ſpirituall happineſs. 7. The forbidding of Printing and printed Books, by which the People might come to ſee the verity and purity of the Chriſtian faith; the falſhood and impurity of the Law of Mahomet. Theſe laſt not uſeful, or at leaſt not able to enduce belief, if the firſt had not opened and prepared the way.

For indeed force of Armes was the ſtrongeſt Argument by which Mahomet himſelf confirmed, and his Succeſſors in their times have ſince propagated and diſperſed his doctrines. Strengthened by the reſort of that raſcal Rabble which repaired to him, he aſſaults Medina, pretending a quarrel to the Jews, who had there a Synagogue. Repulſed at firſt with loſs of men, and a wound in his face, by which ſome of his fore-teeth were beaten out; there likely to have made an end of his new Religion, if not recovered by his Souldiers for a further miſchief. At the next onſet he prevailed, the battel being fought neer a place called Bedez, ſituate betwixt Mecca and Medina, frequently mentioned in the Alcoran. After which fight he took the City, converting the Synagogue to a Temple for his own impieties: the news whereof ſo ſtartled the Phylarchæ, or nobility of Mecca, that they armed all their powers againſt him, and ſped ſo well in the beginning of the warre, that they drove him forcibly from their territories; which not long after he ſubdued, and ſet his chief ſeat at Mecca. From that his flight, the Saracens began their computation of years (as we from CHRISTS Nativity) which they call the Hegira; which beginneth about the year of our Redemption, 617. Concerning which time, I cannot but obſerve, that Mahomet compiled his deviliſh doctrine, beginning his Empire; and Boniface the third aſſumed his Antichriſtian title, beginning his unlimited Supremacy, nigh about the ſame year. It was called the Hegira, from the Arabick Hegirathi, which by the learned in that tongue, is rendred by διωγμὸς ὑπερτὴς θρησκείας, i. e. the perſecution raiſed about Religion. Joſeph Scaliger in the firſt edition of his moſt laborious work de emendatione temporum, caſteth off this Etymology with purum putum mendacium. He will not have it called Æræ fugæ or perſecutionis, but Æra Hagarenæ: becauſe for ſooth the Arabians were by ſome called Hagarens. I believe it would have puzled Joſeph, with all his reading, to ſhew unto us any Epoche or Æra, which is taken from the name of a Nation. And therefore other reaſon he giveth us none but this. Nos autem ſcimus vocem illam primogenia ſignificatione ab Hagarenis, non à fuga duci. But time, and oppoſition, at the laſt reclamed him from this error: and in the ſecond edition of his work, he is conten to follow the common opinion of thoſe men, whom in the firſt he whiſtled off with the infamous appellation of mendaces.

But to proceed, It hapned much about this time, that the Saracens revolting from Heraclius the Eaſtern Emperour, joyned themſelves unto him. They had long been diſpleaſed with their condition, and now hoped to mend it. Exaſperated by Julian the Apoſtate, when they ſerved in his warres againſt the Perſian, Emperours of the Saracens.

Persian, for telling them when they demanded their pay, that he had more store of steel than Gold: but then they wanted a fit head to resort unto. Now serving Heraclius in the same warre, they were used by his Officers in the same ill manner. Asking their pay, the Treasurer of the Army made them this churlish answer, that there was scarce mony enough to pay the Roman, and Grecian Souldiers; and must those dogs be so importunate for their wages? Provoked herewith, and hearing the fame of Mahomet, they betook themselves to him: who strengthned by their forces, and the coming in of the rest of their Countrey-men soon brought the three Arabias under his subjection. To which, having defeated the Emperors forces sent against him, he added some parts of Syria, and Egypt; and returning to Mecca, there dyed frantick and distempered, in the 70th. year of his Age, and three and twentieth of his impostures: of which he had spent thirteen at Medina, and the rest at Mecca; from his first setling in which City, the years of his Empire were computed. His dead body being kept four daies in expectation of a resurrection, which he promised to perform at the end of three; grown full of stench and putrefaction, was carried to Medina, and there interred: his Successors out of wicked and worldly policy, keeping up the reputation of that Religion after his decease, which they derided in his life; and calling themselves Caliphs, or Vicars Generall, to him, their Prophet, to the Catalogue of which we hasten; made intricate, not more by their own confusions, than by the difference of those names by which they are presented to us by severall Writers; according to the times and Languages in which they writ.

The Calips or Emperours of the Saracens.

A.C.	A.H.
622	5	1. Mahomet the Impostor, of whom before.
632	15	2. Ebubezer, or Uquebar, Mahomets Father-in-Law, and one of his Great Captains, supplanted Ali, to whom the Empire was designed by the will of Mahomet; and took unto himself the name of Caliph. 2.
634	17	3. Haumar, the second of Mahomets Great Captains, having the command of the Army under Ebubezer, succeeded him in the estate; and added to it Persia, Egypt, Palastine, with great part of Syria, and Mesopotamia. 12.
647	30	4. Osmen, the third of Mahomets great Captains, Husband of Zeineb, his second daughter; succeeded under that pretence, and added all Barbary to his Empire. Distressed by the faction of Hali, and besieged in his own house, he slew himself, in the eighty seventh year of his Age, and the tenth of his Reign.
657	40	5. Hali, the Kinsman and next heir of Mahomet, and the husband of Fatime his eldest daughter, succeeded on the death of Osmen: murdered by the procurement of Muavias, neer Cafa, in Arabia Felix.
650	43	6. Muhavias, having murdered Hali, his Sonne Hasem or Ossan, and eleven of the Sonnes of that Hasem, the twelfth onely escaping with life (from whom descended the Family of the Alaveci, and the Persian Sophies) assumed the Government as rightfull Successor to Osmen, whose widow, the daughter of Mahomet, he had took to wife. He conquered Rhodes, Cyprus, and a great part of Asia Minor, and was the Founder of the Family of Aben Humeya.
681	64	7. Gizid, the Son of Muhavias, more skilled in Poetry than in Armes. 8. Habdalla and Marvan, Competitors for the Supreme dignity; but carried at last by Marvan.
685	68	9. Abimelech, the Sonne of Marvan, established the begun conquests of Armenia, and Mesopotamia 22.
707	90	10. Vlidor Vlit, under whom the Saracens or Moors first conquered Spain. 9.
716	99	11. Zulcimin, Brother to Vlit, whose Captain Mulsamas besieges Constantinople, till his Ships were burnt, and his men consumed with the Plague. 3.
719	102	12. Homar or Haumar II. Son of Vlidor Vlit 2.
721	104	13. Izit, or Gizid II. the brother of Haumar, with whom during his life he was joynt Caliph, and after his decease enjoyed it wholly to himself.
725	107	14. Evelid, by some called Ischam, in whose time Charles Martel made such havock of the Moores in France Anno 734 their General then named Abderamen. 18.
743	125	15. Gizid III. the Son of Gizid the second.
744	126	16. Hyces, by some called Ibrahim, the brother of Gizid the third, slain by Marvan.
745	127	17. Marvan II. the last of the house of Ben-Humeya, slain by Abdalla, of the house of Fatime and Hali.
752	134	18. Abdalla, of the house of Alaveci, or Alabeci, descended from Hali, and Fatime, the eldest daughter of Mahomet: called also the Family of Abas, because of their descent from Abas the Uncle of Mahomet, and perhaps Father unto Hali.
756	138	19. Abdallas II. 20. Mahomet II. surnamed Bugiafer, or Abugefer, who built the City of Bagdat, made from that time the constant seat of his Successors till their fatall period.
777	156	21. Mahadi. 9.
786	168	22. Musa, or Moyses. 1.
787.	169.	23. Aron, or Arachid, who compelled Irene Empress of Constantinople, to pay him tribute. 23.
810.	193.	24. Mahamad, or Mahomet III.

825. 198. 25. Abdalla III. who took and ſpoyled Crete, and overthrew the Greeks; he alſo ſpoiled Sicilia, Sardinia, and Corſica. 17.
832. 215. 26. Mahomet IV. waſted Italy, burnt the ſuburbs of Rome, and haraſſed the fore-named Ilands. 40. The Babylonian Caliphs.

Others reckon theſe Caliphs to have ſucceded Mahomet 2d.

858. 241. 31. Almatez 4.
863. 245. 32. Motadi Bila 7. After whoſe death, the Ægyptians with-drew themſelves from their obedience due to the Babylonian Caliph, and choſe one of their own, to whom all the Arabians, and thoſe of the Mahumetan religion, in Africa, and Europe, ſubmitted themſelves. Of the Ægyptian Caliphs, when we come into that Countrey: take now with you the names onely of the Syrian, and Babylonian Caliphs; for ſtory of them I find little or none: the power being totally in the hands of the Sultans of the ſeverall Provinces, and nothing left unto the Caliphs but an aiery title, the ſhadow of that mighty Tree, which formerly had ſpread it ſelf over moſt parts of the World.

		20. Muſtenatzar.
1255	638	21. Muſtatzem, the laſt Caliph or High-Prieſt of the Saracens of Bagdet, or Babylon, living in the accompt of a Prince or Emperour; or looked on as the Supreme Lord of the Saracen Empire: ſtarved in his Caſtle of Bagdet, and his whole poſterity rooted out, by Allan, or Haulon the Tartar, in the firſt year of his reign. Yet there is ſtill remaining a carcaſs of the old body, one whom they call Caliph, at whoſe hands the neighbour Princes uſe to receive their Diadems and regalities: ſo do we find that Solyman the magnificent, after his conqueſt of Chaldæa, Meſopotamia, and Aſſyria, to have been by one of theſe poor titulary Caliphs, Crowned King of Babylon, Anno 1513.

This unwieldy body of the Saracen Empire, having thus two heads, began apparently to decline: loſing to the Kings of Oviedo, and Navarre, a great part of Spain; to the Genoeſe, Sardinia, and Corſica; to the Normans, Naples, and Sicily; and finally moſt of their Empire, with their very names, to the Turks and Tartars. For Allan, or Haallon, a Tartarian Captain, ſtarved Muſtatzem the Babylonian Caliph, in his Tower of Bagdet, and rooted out all his poſterity: and Sarracen the firſt Turkiſh King of Egypt, brained the laſt Ægyptian Caliph with his horſemans Mace; leaving not one of his iſſue or kindred ſurviving. The office of the Caliphs (as to matters which concern thier religion, and the ſupreme determination of the doubts and controverſies which occur therein) is now executed in the Turks Dominion, by the Muſti or chief Prieſt of the Turkiſh Mahometans.

As Mars ſhewed himſelf a friend unto thoſe Saracens, in their wars and triumphs; ſo alſo did Phœbus powre down no leſs celeſtial influence, on ſuch as addicted themſelves to Scholarſhip. Bagdet in Chaldæa Cairoan, Feſs, Morocco, in Barbary, and Corduba in Spain, were their Univerſities: out of which came the Philoſophers, Avicen, and Averroes; the Phyſicians, Rhaſis, and Meſue; the Geographers, Leo, and Abilfada; and almoſt all the Textuaries and profound Writers (as Hali, Algazel, Albumazar, &c.) in Aſtrology; from whom a great part of our Aſtronomicall, and Aſtrologicall termes are borrowed.

There is now no Kingdome, Iland or Province, which acknowledgeth the Empire of the Saracens, but the Kingdome of Feſs and Morocco onely: Arabia it ſelf, the very firſt ſeat of their power, acknowledging a ſubjection to the Turkiſh Empire. For firſt Petræa, and Deſerta, being ſubdued by the Turks, when they conquered Perſia, or otherwiſe following the fortunes of the preſent Victor, were afterwards accounted of as ſubject unto the Mamalucks of Egypt, who out of that Countrey and all Syria, had by degrees diſſeized the Selzuccian Family. And as the vaſſals of that Crown, though but Subjects at will, they more moleſted Selimus in his march towards Egypt, by falling on his Rear, and terrifying him with their night-Alarms; than all the forces of the Mamalucks, in the field againſt him. But Egypt being ſubued, and the Mamaluoks utterly deſtroyed, ſome of their Chiefes being gained by money, and the reſt by promiſe of preferment; the whole Nation of theſe wild Arabs ſwore alleageance to him: continuing in accompt as Subjects, unto his Succeſſors, but in effect doing what they liſt; governed as formerly by the Chiefes of their ſeverall Clannes, and in their Robberies taking no more notice of the Turk, than they do of the the Christians. And as for Felix, it continued also in a free condition, in respect of any foreign power; till of late times the Turks, and Portugals, entrenched upon them. For in the year 1538. Solyman Bassa, Admiral of the Turkish Fleet against the Portugals, who had diverted the trade of the Red-Sea, and otherwise given offence to Solyman the Magnificent, by aiding the Persians, went with a strong Army to take Diu, a Town and Island of East-India, then in their possession. But being unable to effect it, at his coming back he called in at Aden, one of the best traded Ports of Arabia Felix; invited the King thereof aboard, most treacherously hanged him, and surprized the City. The like he also did to the King of Zibit, the Port Town to Mecca: and by that means got possession of all the Coasts of this Countrey, bordoring on the Red-Sea, or Gulf of Arabia; of which the Turks still continue Masters. But in the Inland parts, and towards the Persian Gulf, of no power at all; not suffered to travel up and down without a Pass, from some of the Arabian Chiefs; or if they do, in danger to be set upon by the Natives, who brook them not. Some parts hereof which lie next unto the Isl. of Ormus, made one Kingdome with it; but the Kings originally of this Countrey, by whom the City of Ormus was first builded; and so continued till the taking of Ormus by the Portugals, anno 1622. who since the taking of that Isle by the King of Persia, hold Muskahat, and some other pieces upon this Continent. The residue of the Countrey cantonned amongst a company of petit Princes, as in former times; before ambition taught them to devour one another.

And so much for Arabia.

6 CHALDÆA.
7 ASSYRIA.
8 MESOPOTAMIA.

THese Provinces, which properly and originally constituted the Assyrian Empire, I have joyned together in the Title, becaus united in the Story, and affairs thereof; though severally to be considered in the Description, and Chorography of them.

CHALDEA is bounded on the East, with Susiana, a Province of Persia; on the West, with Arabia Deserta; on the North, with Mesopotamia; and on the South, with the Persian Bay, and the rest of Deserta. Originally called Chasdim, from Chesed the fourth Son of Nachor, the brother of Abraham. Chesed quoq; quartus est, à quo Chasdim, id est Chaldæi postea vocati sunt, as St. Hierome hath it. But why the Chaldeans should derive their name from Chæsed, being a People long before Chesed's birth, I am not able to determine: unless he taught them the first Principles of the Art of Astronomy; or was the Author of some signal benefit unto them, which we know not of. It was called afterwards Babylonia, from Babylon the chief City of it; and at this day by Bellonius, Azamia; by the Arabians, Keldan, by the Turks, Curdistan.

But the name of Chaldea sometimes went beyond thrse bounds, taking in some part also of Mesopotamia, as appeareth by that passage of St. Stephen, saying, Acts 7. v. 2, 3, 4. That the God of glory appeared to our father Abraham, when he was in Mesopotamia, before he dwelt in Charran; and said unto him, Get thee out of this Countrey, and from thy Kindred, and come into the Land which I shall shew thee. Then came he out of the Land of the Chaldees, and dwelt in Charran, &c. Where clearly that part of Mesopotamia which lay next unto Assyria, where then Abraham was, is included under the name of Chaldea, or the Land of the Chaldees. Which I desire the Reader to take notice of, because I must make use of this observation in another place.

The Countrey by Heroditus said to be so fruitful, that it yielded ordinarily two hundred, and in some places three hundredfold; the blades of wheat and barley being (as he affirmeth) four fingers broad. By Pliny it is said of the Babylonians, that they mowed their corn twice, and feeded it a third time, or else it would be nothing but blades: and yet so, that the worst of their Land yielded fifty, and their best an hundredfold encrease. Nor is the nature of the soil so altered in long tract of time, but that (as late Travellers have observed) it would in all likelihood attain to its first fertility, if it were ordered with like care and diligence, as in former times. But what need more be said as to the natural fruitfulness and delights of this Countrey, then that it pleased Almighty God to make choice of some part hereof for the terrestrial Parndise or Garden of Eden, in which he placed our Father Adam, at his first Creation. For here that Paradise, by men both skilled in Divinity, and Geography, is affirmed to have stood. Yet amongst all sorts of Writers we finde different opinions. Some make Paradise to be a place of pleasure, and the four Rivers to be the four Cardinal Vertues; but these allegories on the Scripture are not warrantable. Others place it in the air, under the circle of the Moon; and tell us that the four Rivers in the Scriptures mentioned, fall down from thence, and running all under the Ocean, rise up again in those places where they are now found: but this is so vain a foppery, that I will not honor it with a confutation. Such as make Paradise local, are divided also into three ranks (for I omit the rest) whereof some place it under the Æquator; but this agreeth not with the bounds prescribed by the Holy Ghost. Some conceive the four Rivers to be Tigris, Euphrates: Nilus, and Ganges; and that Paradise was the whole world; but this cannot be: for then when Adam was driven out of Paradise, it must also follow that he was driven out of the world, which were absurd. Those of the soundest judgements place it here, in an Island which is made by the Rivers Tigris and Euphrates, and some branches running from them both: the uppermost of which is called Pison (falsly rendred Ganges) which watereth the land of Havilah, or that part of the land of Havilah, which is now called Chusestan, or Susiana, a Province of Persia; and the lowermost is named Gihon (improperly by some translated Nilus) which compasseth the East parts of Arabia Petræa, by the Septuagint for the reasons abovementioned, rendred Ethiopia. And this agreeth both with the position of this Countrey, and the course of those Rivers. For that Tigris and Euphrates (which the Hebrew text called Hiddekel, and Perah) do here joyn their streams, is confessed on all sides. Then as for Pison, it is no other then that River by Ptolomy called Basilius, or Regius; by Curtius more neerly Piso Tigris, or Pasi-Tigris, Pervenit ad fluvium, Pasitigrin incolæ vocant, as his own words are. A little stream, which watering the Land of Havilah, or the Countrey of the Charelei, or Chaulasei, or Chaulterrei (for by these several names they are called amongst the Antients, who place them betwixt the Babynians, and the Nabatheans, an Arabian people) poureth it self into the Tigris, and falls together with it in the Gulf of Persia. And finally for Gihon, by Ptolomy called Maarsares, and by others Marsyrus, it is no other then a branch of Euphrates, which watering the Land of Chus, or Ethiopia Asiatica, take which name you will, loseth it self at last in the Lakes of Chaldea.

But though in general the Countrey was extremely fruitful, yet in some places was it covered with a slimy matter, which the overflowing of the waters, and the nature of the soil together, did bring forth abundantly. Used by them in their buildings, instead of morter, then which more durable and binding; and therefore chosen for the cement of the Tower of Babel, Gen. 11. 3. Some also tell of a clyff, which opening sendeth out such a stink, that it killeth birds as they flie over it; and others of a like open place neer a Town called Ait, which continually throweth out boiling pitch (named therefore Hell-mouth by the Moors) filling therewith the adjoyning fields; and that herewith the people use to pitch their boats. But this in some places onely, the Countrey generally being both healthy and delightful, as before was said.

The people anciently were much addicted unto Sooth-saying and Divinations; and no less noted for being Authors of the first Idolatry, that was ever practised in the world. Induced unto the last perhaps by the power of their Kings, who would needs confer divine honors upon some of their Ancestors. But to the first inclined by their own disposition, and the situation of their Countrey, yielding a fair sensible Horizon (for the Rational is alike in all places both in hills and valleys) and consequently profitable to the observation of the rising and setting of the Stars, whether Heliacal, Acronical, Matutine, or Vesperline, as the Artists phrase it. Whereunto may be added the length of life in those elder times, furnishing them with the greater measure of experience, concerning the distinct motions of each several Orb, and the full period of the courses of each several Planet. Certain it is, that they grew so noted in this Art, that at the last every Astrolagaster, or Figure-flinger, was called a Chaldean: Gentis nomine ad eos homines translato, qui sese illius sapientiæ specie venditabant, as Beza hath observed in his Annotations. For giving too much credit to them, the people thus flouted by the Satyrist.

Chaldeis sed major erit fiducia, quicquid
Dixerit Astrologus, credent à fonte relatum
Ammonis, &c.

That is to say,

Joves Oracles no greater credit have,
Then Sooth-sayings of a Chaldee cozening knave.

The language which was spoken here, had the name of the Chaldee, or Chaldæan tongue; of great antiquity; and sanctified by the Holy Ghost, some Chapters of the prophecy of Daniel being written in it. So different from the Hebrew in its primitive purity, that the Jews did not understand it, as appeareth by the words of the Officers of Hezekiah, 2 Kings 18. 26. desiring Rabsheketh to speak to them in the Chaldee tongue, that the common people of the Jews might not hear his blasphemies. A further proof may be, that a man may have some knowledge in the Hebrew, and yet be ignorant of thee Chaldee; as many are, no doubt, at this present day. But whatsoever it was in its primitive purity, it altered afterwards, when the Jews came to live amongst them, during the Captivity: out of whose long commerce with them, both Nations lost their proper languages, and fell upon a third, made out of both, which was called the Syriack. Of this we spake before when we were in Syria and Palestine. And this is now the natural language of this Countrey, and its neighbor Assyria, but with a little mixture of the Greek and Arabick: not vulgarly spoken elsewhere, for ought I can finde, but used by many others, in their sacred offices, by whom not commonly understood. For in this language, all the Sects of the Eastern Christians do officiate their publike Liturgies; that is to say, the Nestorians, Jacobites, Maronites (for I reckon not the Melchites, who use the Greek Liturgy, amongst the Sectaries.) The like do also the Indians or Christians of Saint Thomas, the Cophties or Christians of Egypt, and the poor remainder of the Christians in the Isle of Zocatara, an Island on the coast of Affrick. Used to those Liturgies, when the language was more understood amongst them; though now worn out of Vulgar knowledge by the overspreading of the Arabick, Tartarian, and Turkish Conquests. In which the Prelates of these Churches have fallen into the great error of the Church of Rome: and without taking notice of the alterations, hapning in the Vulgar tongues of those several Naations, which are united under them into one opinion, keep up a language in their Liturgies which they understond not: as if the capacities of the people could be sooner raised, to the understanding of an unknown language, then the publike Liturgies be fitted unto their capacities. The ancient piety of the Church, and the modern languages of Gods people, are not inconsistent; though out of private ends some have taught us otherwise. But I fear this error (as some others) will not be so easily remedied, as reprehended. From the tongue in which they celebrate the Divine Offices of their Religion, pass we to the Religion it self, whose Sacred Offices are so celebrated.

The Christian faith was first preached in this Countrey by St. Peter, of whose being in Babylon, (the chief chief City hereof) himſelf aſſureth us in the laſt words almoſt of his Firſt Epiſtle: and other buſines he had none here, but to preach the Goſpell. Much perſecuted by the Perſians, (who were then poſſeſſed of all theſe parts) it prevailed at laſt; Chriſtianity growing up the faſter for the cutting down. The Patriarchall See, originally planted in Seleucia, ſucceſſour unto Babylon in repute and greatneſs, if not alſo in name: the Biſhop whereof, by order of the Nicene Councill, had the Eccleſiaſticall juriſdiction of theſe parts with the name of Catholique; and the next place in Seſſion, at all publick aſſemblies of the Church, next after the Patriarch of Hieruſalem. And beſides this the Indians or Chriſtians of Saint Thomas, acknowledge him for their Primate or Metropolitan; as they did afterwards in his right, the Patriarch of Muzal. At this preſent here are ſome remainders of Chriſtianity, part of them Jacobites, but the moſt Neſtorians; of whom more anon.

Of the chief Rivers hereof we have ſpoke already; and Mountains there are none to hinder us in our paſſage forwards. So that without more delay we may take a view of their principall places. And in the firſt place we meet with Babel; (in the Hebrew ſignifying confuſion) famous for the confuſion of languages which here happned. For immediately after the Univerſal deluge, Nimrod the Son of Chus, the Son of Cham, perſwaded the people to ſecure themſelves from the like after-claps, by building ſome ſtupendious Edifice, which might reſiſt the fury of a ſecond deluge. This Counſel was generally imbraced, Heber onely and his Family, (as tradition goeth) contradicting ſuch an unlawfull attempt. The major part prevailing, the Tower began to rear a head of Majeſty, 5146 paces from the ground: having its baſis and circumference equal to the height. The paſſage to go up, went winding about the outſide, and was of an exceeding great breadth; there being not only room for horſes, carts, and the like means of carriage, to meet and turn; but lodging alſo for man and beaſt, and (as Verſtegan reporteth) graſs and corn-fields for their nouriſhment. But God beholding from on high this fond attempt, ſent amongſt them (who before were of one language) a confuſion of tongues. which hindred the proceeding of this building, one being not able to underſtand what his fellow called for.

2. Babylon, on the Bank of Euphrates, the antienteſt City in the World, on this ſide of the flood firſt built by Nimrod, in the place deſtinated to the raiſing of the Tower of Babel, and by him made the Seat of his Kingdom: afterwards beautified and enlarged by Semiramis, the wife of Ninus, one of his Succeſſors; and finally much increaſed both in bulk and beauty by Nabuchadnezzar, who therefore arrogated to himſelf the whole glory of it, ſaying in his pride, is not this the great Babel that I have builded? Dan. 4. 30. A City of great fame and ſtate, accompted one of the worlds nine wonders, and deſervedly too.

The compaſs of the walls 365 furlongs, (or 46. miles) according to the number of the dayes in the year; in height 50. Cubits, and of ſo great breadth, that carts and carriages might meet on the top of them; finiſhed in one year by the hands of 200000 workmen, employed dayly in it. Situate on both ſides of Euphrates, over which there was a ſumptuous bridge, and at each end of that bridge a magnificent Palace: beautified alſo with the Temple of the Idol Bel, and famous for the Penſile Gardens, made with great charge, and born up with moſt ſtately Arches. In a word, ſo great and vaſt it was, that Ariſtotle ſaith, that it ought rather to be called a Countrey, than a City: adding withall, that when the Town was taken, it was three dayes before the furtheſt parts of the Town could take notice of it. Which taking of the Town muſt be underſtood of the ſurprize thereof by the Medes and Perſians; and not of the taking of it by the Macedonians, as Pet. Ramus (as great a Clerk as he was) in his marginal notes upon the Politicks of that Author, hath moſt vainly told us. Which, whether it were that there were Gares at the end of every ſtreet, which made it be ſo long in taking; or that the Babylonians were not wakened from their drunken feaſt, in the time whereof it wes ſurprized, I determine not. Revolting in the time of Semiramis, the news came to her as ſhe was ordering her hair: whereupon, leaving her head half-dreſt ſhe went and beſieged it; never ordering the reſt of her hair, till ſhe had recovered it. How it fell into the hands of Cyrus, we learn out of Xenophons Cyri-paideia, which was in this manner. The River Euprathes ran quite thorow the Town, round about whoſe banks, the politick Prince cut many and deep chaunels: into which when the Babylonians were ſecurely merry at a general feaſt, he ſuddenly drained and emptied the River, conveying his own forces into the Town all along the dry and yielding Channel; and in a little time made himſelf maſter of it. From the Perſians it revolted in the reign of Darius Hyſtaſpes: and that ſuſtenance might not be wanting to the men of warre, they ſtrangled the moſt part of the women, being thought in actions of this quality, not ſo much as neceſſary evils. When they had for twenty moneths ſo obſtinately defended the Town, that the Perſians had leſs hope than ever of prevailing; Zopyrus one of Darius Captains, mangling his body, and diſfiguring his face by cutting off his noſe and ears, fled to the Babylonians, complaining of the tyranny of his King. They crediting his words, and knowing his proweſs, committed the charge of the whole army unto him, as a man, to whom ſuch barbarous uſage had made the King irreconcilable. But he taking the beſt opportunity, delivered both the Town and Souldiers into the hands of his Soveraign. Which made Darius often ſay, that he had rather have one Zopyrus, than twenty Babylons. Here died Alexander the Great, after whoſe death the Grecian Captains regardful rather of their own ambitions, than the common loyalty, divided the Empire among themſelves; leaving the body of the King 8 dayes unburied. A wonderful change of fortune, that he who living, thought the world too ſmall for his valour, being dead ſhould find no place big enough for his body. After this taking of it by the Macedonians, the glories and magnificence hereof began to decline, leſſned unto a fourth part in the time of Qu. Curtius the hiſtorian; in ſolitudinem redacta, reduced to deſolation in the dayes of Pliny; & being turned into a Park, in which the Kings of Perſia did uſe to hunt, in the time of Saint Hierome. That wondrous change occaſioned partly by the injury of time, partly by the neglect of the Macedonians, who removed the Seat Royal of their Empire more towards Greece: but principally by Seleucus Nicanor, who offended with the Babylonians, built the City of Seleucia.

3. Seleucia, the second City of note in all this Countrey, ſituate in a place more commodious and healthy, neer the meeting of Tigris, and Euphrates, and about 40 miles more North than Babylon; out of which he drew 500000 perſons for the peopling of it. Nor did this new City rob the old onely of its power and greatneſs, but alſo of its very name; being called Babylon in ſome of the antient Authors; Βαβυλων περσικὴ πόλις, Μητρόπολις, Σελευκία καλεμένη, as (for one) by Stephanus. In the primitive times of Chriſtianity, the Biſhop of this See was accounted for the Primate of the Chaldæans; with a ſuperintendency over the Chriſtians of India alſo, as before was ſaid. But this Supplanter was in time brought to ruin alſo, And

4. Bagdad, a new City raiſed from the ruins of it: built neer the foundations of Seleucia by Bugiafer the twentieth Caliph of the Mahometans, at the expence (as ſome write) of eighteen millions of Crowns; which becauſe of the many Gardens contained in it had the name of Bagdad, the word ſo ſignifying in the Arabick tongue. Firſt built upon the Weſtern bank of the River Tigris, neer to its confluence with Euphrates; but in the year 1095. removed to the other ſide of the River, by Muſtetaher, the 45 Caliph of the Saracens; becauſe leſs ſubject to the inundations of that furious River. But it was reckoned ſtill for the ſame City, as if built by Bugiafer; By whom being made the ſeat of his Royall Reſidence (whoſe Succeſſors were from hence called the Caliphs of Babylon) it flouriſhed in great pride and ſplendour: till taken and ſacked by Allan, or Haalan a Tartarian Captain, who here ſtarved Muſteatzem, the laſt Caliph of it, and rooted out his whole poſterity; as if the Caliphate and the City were to end together. But the Town revived again, though the Caliph could not; continuing to this day a City of great wealth and traffick, but nothing comparable unto what it was for beauty and bigneſs; being not above ſeven miles in compaſs, and having nothing in the buildings to be juſtly bragged of. Taken by Solyman the Magnificent with the reſt of the Countrey, it became ſubject to the Turks; from them recovered by Abas the King of Perſia, Anno 1625. and again recovered by the Turks, about the year 1640. In which changes it can be no marvell that ſhe hath loſt much of her former ſplendour. Maintained eſpecially at the preſent by the trade of Aleppo, to which, beſides ſuch goods as go up the water, there paſſe yearly many Caravans, or troops of Merchants, each of them having in it ſome hundreds (if not thouſands) of Camels laden with commodities. For whoſe ſafe lodging, as they paſs (the waies being generally ill provided for Travellers, in theſe Eaſtern Countreys;) there are ſome houſes of receipt built at the publick charge, or by ſome ſpeciall Benefactor, to preſerve his memory: moſt of them ſtrong, and many very fair and lovely, which in the dominions of the Perſians they call Caravane Ruwes; in the Turkiſh, Canes. And for communicating the ſucceſs of their buſineſs unto the place from whence they came, they make uſe of Pigeons, which is done in this manner. When the Hen-Pigeon ſitteth, or hath any young, they take the Cock, and ſet him in an open Cage: whom, when they have travelled daies a journey, they let go at liberty, and he ſtrait flieth home to his Mate. When they have trained them thus from one place to another, and that there be occaſion to ſend any advertiſements, they tie a letter about one of their necks, which at their return home is taken off by ſome of the houſe, advertiſed thereby of the eſtate of the Caravan. The like is alſo uſed betwix Ormus, and Balſora. But of this enough.

5. Cteſiphon, on the River Tigris, not far from Seleucia, by whoſe fall it roſe; occaſioning the decay thereof, as that did of Babylon. So Pliny, ſpeaking of the fall of Babylon, by the building of Seleucia ſo neer unto it; then adding, invicem ad hanc exhauriendam, Cteſiphontem juxta tertium ab ea Lapidem condidere Parthi. Firſt built, ſaith Marcellinus, by Vardanes, afterwards beautified and walled by Pacorus, a Parthian King; and by him made the Seat-Royall of the Perſian Kingdome. Many times beſieged and aſſaulted by the Roman Emperors; but moſt commonly without ſucceſs; and amongſt others, by Julian the Apoſtate, that bitter enemy of the Goſpell, who here breathed out his ſoul to Satan, in theſe dying words, Vicisti tandem Galilæe. But Vardanes (whoſoever he was) cannot of right be called the firſt founder of it, who raiſed it rather from the rubbiſh of an old foundation: this City being the ſame with that which Moſes calleth Calne; and Ezekiel, Canneh, Gen. 11. and Ezek. 27. 23. and therefore rightly ſaid by Pliny to be built in Chalanitide, or the Region of Chalne.

6. Sipparum, remarkable for the great Trench made neer it, to receive the over flowings of Euphrates, which otherwiſe might have annoyed the City of Babylon: in compaſs 1280 furlongs or 160 miles; in depth 20 fathoms. A vaſt and expencefull work; but that nothing was to be admired, when Babylon it ſelf was up and in full proſperity.

7. Apamia, a City of Seleucus foundation alſo, ſituate at the fall of Piſon into the River of Tigris.

8. Vologeſia, placed by Ptolomy amongſt the Cities of Chaldæa, but by Marcellinus in Aſſyria; built or repaired by one of the Vologeſes, Kings of Perſia, and from him denominated.

9. Borſippa, by Ptolomy called Barſita, memorable for the great victory, which Cyrus the firſt Perſian Monarch obtained here againſt Nabonidus the King of Babylon, by Scaliger called Darius Medus, (of which more anon): whom having vanquiſhed, he pardoned him (as he ſaith) his life, and gave him the government of Carmania.

10. Balſora, the Port Town to Babylon, ſituate at the fall of Euphrates into Sinus Perſicus, and conſequently of great weath and trading: The riches of Arabia, Perſia, and ſome part of India, being landed here, and ſo carryed to BABYLON, and thence up the water to Aleppo. Suppoſed to be the the City of Teredon, mentioned by Ptolomy; built or repaired by Nebuchadnezzar, and not long ſince taken from the Turke by Abas, the Perſian,

7. ASSYRIA.

ASSYRIA is bound on the East, with Media, from which parted by the mountain called Coathras; on the West, with Mesopotamia, from which divided by the River Tigris; on the South with Susiana; and on the North, with some part of Turcomania, and part of Chaldæa. So called from Assur the Son of Sem; by whom first inhabited. But having long since lost that name, as to vulgar speech, it is by Niger called Adrinsa; by Murcator, Sarh; by the Turks, Arzerum.

The Countrey very plain, and levell, exceeding fruitfull, and abounding in Rivers. For besides Tigris, which washeth one whole side thereof, Ptolomy assigneth to this Countrey the Rivers of 2. Lycus, 3. Cuprus, and 4. Gorgos; all of good note, and all of them increasing, with their tributary Streams, the greatness of Tigris.

The people were antiently great warriers, and together with the Babylonians or Chaldæans, commanded a great part of the East; extending their dominion from the Mediterranean Sea, to the River Indus; insomuch that not the people of this Province only, but of all the Provinces almost of this spacious Empire, had the name of Assyrians. The men for all this, exceeding formall in their habit, wearing long robes which trailed on the very ground, their hair long, their hats or Caps Pyramidall like the Persian Miters; not stirring out of doors but perfumed with Musk, rings on their fingers, and a Scepter in their hands; and very frequent in their washings, especiall after copulation. As for their women, it was an antient custome with them, to expose the fairest unto sale in the open Market; and with the money given for those, to put off such as were deformed and not so amiable. And hence perhaps the Fathers of our times have learnt this lesson, of giving less portions with such daughters as will sell themselves; but greasing the fat sow (as the saying is) with the addition of some hundreds: which made the merry fellow say, That the money were a good match if the wench were away.

The Christian faith was first here planted by Saint Jude, and took such deep root in that plantation, that it could never be pulled up; notwithstanding the cruel persecutions raised against it, by the Kings of Persia: who when they saw there was no means to destroy it by violence, attempted in the next place to corrupt it with heresie. And to that end, as also to revenge himself upon the Emperor Heraclius, a great Champion of the Orthodox belief against Nestorianism, Chosroes the great King of Persia inforced all the Christians of his Empire unto those opinions, which he knew that Emperour condemned; permitting none who were counted Catholicks within his Dominions. By means whereof, and afterwards for want of Preachers to instruct them otherwise, (the Saracens having conquered the Persian Empire) Nestorianism prevailed so far, that it extended over all the Countreys East of Tigris, as far as India; and Northwards too amongst the Tartars, of which more hereafter. Governed by their own Patriarch, who resideth at Mosul, now the chief City of this Countrey; and honoured by his people with the Title of Jacelich, mistaken or pronounced amiss for Catholique: an atribute given antiently to all Orthodox Prelates.

The Opinions held by them as Nestorians, were, 1. That there were two persons in our Saviour, as well as two natures; but yet confessing that CHRIST from the first instant of his conception, was both God and man. 2ly. That the blessed Virgin ought not to be called Θεοτόκος, or the Mother of God; but yet acknowledging her to be the Mother of God the Son. 3ly. That Nestorius, condemned for these opinions in the third and fourth Generall Councills, was an holy man; for whose sake they condemn Saint Cyrill his profess'd Antagonist, and all those Councils wherein any censure was laid upon him. In other points, though differing from the Church of Rome, they are right enough, (their rejecting Episcopall Confirmation excepted only.) As 1. in celebrating the Sacrament of the Lords Supper with leavened bread; 2ly. communicating in both kinds; 3ly enjoining no necessity of auricular Confession; 4ly. contracting marriages in the second degree of Consanguinity; 5ly. permitting second and third mariages unto men in Orders, after the death of their first wives: 6ly. not praying before the Cross, nor giving religious worship to the Crucifix, or other Images. So much for these Nestorians, if so named aright, considering the qualifications added unto their opinions; now (but corruptly) called Nostranes: the greatest Sect of Christians in all the East.

The solemnities which these Christians use in contracting mariage, because not very usual, I will here relate. Their Wives they never see till the day of their mariage, but hearing a good report of the young Woman, negotiate with her parents for her. Agreed upon the business, they meet in the Chancell of the Church, wherein there is a partition with an hole in it: the Bridegroom and his friends standing on the one side; the Bride and her kindred, on the other. When there, the Cassisse or Church-man biddeth the Bridegroom to put his hand thorow the hole in the Partition, and take his Bride by the hand, which he doth accordingly: the mother of the Bride, with a sharp-pointed instrument, made of purpose, pricking the Bridegrooms hand all over, with sufficient eagerness. If when he feeleth the smart, he lets go her hand, they take it for a sign that he will not love her; but if he hold her fast, and wring her hand till she cry again, they take it for a very good Omen, and are glad they have so well bestowed her. After the mariage is consumate, if a male-child be born unto them, the Father loseth his own name, and is called by the name of his eldest Son: so as if the Fathers name be Moses, and his Sons name Joseph; the Father is no more called Moses, but Abda-Joseph, or the Father of Joseph. So highly do they reverence mariage, and the fruit thereof, posterity.

It was antiently divided into these six parts, 1. Arraphachitis, bordering on Armenia Major; so called for Arphaxaditis, or the plantation of Arphaxad, the Son of Sem. 2. Adiabene, bordering on Mesopotamia, so called, quasi Ἀδιάβατος, or inaccessible, because fenced with such unfordable Rivers, Tigris, and Euphrates, that there was no easie comming to it; δια δυχερεσίαν ϑ διάβασιν, as it is in Sidas: or rather for Adiavenena, from Diuvas, and Adiavas, the chief Rivers of it (the same which Ptolomy called Lycus, and Caprus) as in Marcellinus. 3. Calacine, and 4. Sitacene from Sittace, and Calach, two chief Cities of it; of which more anon. 5. Arbelites, and 6. Apolloniates, from Apollonia and Arbela, two other of the principall Cities.

Here then we have four of the Cities of Assyria brought unto our hand, 1. Calach, one of those fou which Nimrod built in the Land of Assur, Gen. 10. 11. and one of them to which the Ten Tribes were transplanted by Salmanassar, 2 Kings 17. 6. & 18. 11. of such esteem in those elder dayes, that Calacine as Ptolomy, or Calachene as Strabo more rightly calleth it, did take name from hence, 2. Sittace, situate about two miles from the banks of Tigris, in the way from Babylon to Susa. A City, when it gave name to the parts adjoyning, both great and populous; well seated, in a fruitful soyl, and well shaded with trees of several sorts; supposed by the situation of it to be that Accad, (or rather built in or neer the place of it) which was one of the first four Cities of Nimrods Kingdome. 3. Arbela, on the banks of the River Caprus, built as some say by Belus, (or Belochus) Priscus, an Assyrian King, whence it had the name. Neer unto which there is a place which Strabo calleth Κυπρεήσσων, or Cupressetum, conceived by some to be the place where Noah framed the Ark. 4. Apollonia, built after the Macedonian conquest, as appeareth by the name, which is wholly Greek: not otherwise observable, but for giving the name of Apolloniates to the Countrey adjacent. Adde unto these, 5. Geguamela, situate in the middle space betwixt Lycus, and Caprus, memorable for the last and greatest battel betwixt Alexander and Darius the King of Persia; who had he made good the Eastern banks of the River Tigris, might easily have hindered the Macedonians from coming over: the River being so extremely swift and violent, that the Macedonians were not able to pass it, but by linking their hands and armes together, and making one entire body to oppose the current; and therewithall of so great depth, that the footmen were fain to hold their Bows and Arrows over their heads, to keep them from being moistned and made unservicable. But having miserably lost this opportunity by the cowardise of Mazeus, who had the keeping of this pass; he was inforced to venture all upon a battel: drawing unto this place an Army of 50000 horse, and 200000 foot, in their accompt who speak least of it (for Arrianus makes it above a Million.) Opposed by Alexander with no more than 40000 foot, and 7000 horse of his Europæans; but those victoriously successeful: 40000 of the Persians slain, (but Diodorus Siculus speaks of 90000) with the loss of 300 Macedonians onely, as is said by Curtius. In memory of which notable victory, a Mountain neer the place of the battel, was by Alexander called Nicator, known by that name to Strabo, and some other antients. 6. Rehoboth, another of the four Cities, which Nimrod is said to have built in Assur; by some supposed to be Birrha, an antient City upon Tigris, and bordering so neer unto Mesopotamia, that by Ptolomy it is placed in it. Of which more anon. 7. Rhesen, another of the Cities of Nimrods building, seated by Moses between Calach and Ninive, Gen. cap. 10. v. 12. and there commended for a great City. Which Character with the site thereof, have induced some learned men to think it to be the same, which is by Xenophon called Larissa; seated by him on the River Tigris, much about this place, and said to be a City of such strength and greatness, that it was no less than two Parasangs, or four miles in compass: the walls in height a hundred foot, twenty five in breadth; so strongly cemented, that Cyrus, who besieged it, could have never taken it, if a casual Eclipse of the Sun had not discouraged the defendants. But whether this conjecture be good or not, we have here Larissa for another of the principal Cities. 8. Ninive, by the Greeks and Latines called Ninus; first built by Nimrod, and called Ninive with relation unto Ninus, his Son or Nephew, after the example of Cain whose steps he followed; of whom it is said that he built a City, and called it after the name of his Son, Enoch, Gen. 4. 17. I know the building of this City is by some ascribed to Assur, grounding themselves on that of Moses, Gen. 10. 11. Out of that land went forth Assur, and built Ninive, &c. But I like better of their judgement, who take Assur in this place for the name of the Countrey, and not of the man; making the Text to speak of Nimrod, and to say of him, Et egressus est in Assur, &c. that is to say, And he went forth to Assur or the land of Assyria, and there built Ninive, Rehoboth, and the rest there named. A City so enlarged by some of the succeeding Kings, that it came at last to be bigger than Babylon, in compass 480 furlongs, or 60. miles; and therefore said in the Book of Jonah, to be a City of three dayes journey, in circuit, as indeed it was: accompting 20 miles for a dayes journey, according to the common estimate of those elder times; as also of the Greeks, and Romans, in the times succeeding. Nor was it of less strength than greatness, the walls an hundred foot high, and so broad that three Carts might go abrest on the top thereof: and in those walls 1500 Turrets, each of 200 foot in height. So strong, that it was thought to have been impregnable, especiay because of an antient Prophecy, which signifyed that the Town should never be taken, till the River became an enemy to it. A Prophecy which induced Sardanapalus to make it the seat of his war against Belochus, and Arbaces, then in armes against him: who having besieged it three years without hope of success, at last the River over-flowing, carried before it twenty furlongs of the Wall. Which accident so terrified the effeminate King, that he burnt himself in the midst of his enemies, and left the Town to the Besiegers. Threatned destruction by the preaching of the Prophet Jonah, it escaped then upon repentance. But the people going on in their wicked courses, it was destroyed by Astyages King of the Medes, that it might no longer be an encouragement to the Assyrians to rebel against him, as formerly against some of his Predecessors: and so destroyed, that in the time of Saint Cyril of Alexandria, as himself affirmeth in the commont on the Propht Nahum, ὡς μηδὲ ὅπου ποτὲ γέγονεν ὀφθῆναι λοιπὸν, that one could scarse discern in what place it stood. 9. Mosul, at this time, and for long since, the chief of Assyria; seated on the Tigris, and raised out of the ruins of Ninive: of most note for being the ordinary abiding place of the Nestorian Patriarch, who either in the City it self, or the Monastery of Saint

Hermes

Hermes neer adjoyning to it, hath his constant Residence. The Nestorians in this City so considerable, both in power and number, that though it be in the hands of Mahometans, either Turks or Persians; yet there are numbred in it fifteen Christian Churches, and at least 40000 souls. A Sect so maligned by the Pope, (whom they commonly call the Reprobate Bishop) for the greatness of the jurisdiction which this Patriarch hath: that not contented to withdraw the Indians from him, (whereof more hereafter) Pope Julius the third, set up an Anti-Patriarch against him, to whom he gave the title of the Catholique of Musal also; to whom the Nestorians dwelling in the Northern parts of Mesopotamia, (if some writers of the Papal party may be believed) do submit themselves. 10. Arzeri, of greater strength than Mosul, though of less antiquity and repute; from which the whole Province of Assyria, is now called Arziruni. And 11. Scheheruzal, at this time of the greatest note, as being the ordinary Residence of the Turkish Beglerbeg or Bassa; who hath 10000. Timariots, under his command, to defend this Countrey, and be ready for any service, as occasion is.

MESOPOTAMIA.

MESOPOTAMIA, is bounded on the East, with the River Tigris, by which parted from Assyria; on the West, with Euphrates, which divideth it from Comagena, a Province of Syria; on the North, with Mount Taurus, by which separated from Armenia Major; and on the South, with Chaldæa, and Arabia Deserta, from which last it is parted by the bendings of Euphrates also.

In the Scripture it is called most commonly by the name of Padan Aram, that is Syria Culta; but that name properly belonging to the North-parts of it; Aram or Syria, because inhabited originally by the Aramites, whom the Greeks call Syri; and Padan, or Culta, from the fruitfulness and riches of it, exceeding plentifully stored both with corn and wine, and furnished with all necessaries for the life of man; in that regard by Strabo called Mesopotamia Felix. The Southern parts hereof being barren and full of Desarts, not having any herbage in them, ἃ δὲ ἄλλο δένδρον, nor any kind of Tree, as we read in Xenophon; amongst some of the antient Writers, had the name of Arabia: partly because so like in nature to Arabia Deserta, and partly because planted with Arabian Colonies. The name which comprehends both parts is sometimes Syria Trans-fluviales, or Syria beyond the River (Euphrates,) of which see 2 Sam. 10. 16. But generally in the Hebrew it is called Aram-Naharaijm, which the Greeks render properly by Mesopotamia, or the Countrey in the middle of Rivers: environed by Tigris on the East, and Euphrates on the West and South; the River Chaboras or Abaras, passing also thorow it. The Latines generally call it by the same name which the Greeks had given it; Priscian only to shew his faculty in Grammar, calling it Medamna; By the Turks it is now called Diarbech.

As is the Countrey, such the People, the most Adjective of any we have met with hitherto; able at no time to stand by themselves, but still requiring the addition of some neighbour Nation to be joyned unto them. Nothing that they can call their own, their Name, their Language, nor their Countrey. Beholding for their Name in the North, to Syria; in the South, to Arabia: the Chaldæans also putting in for a share, and challenging those parts which lie next Assyria, to belong to them. Their Language antiently the Syriack, at this day the Arabick. Their Countrey successively subjected to the Babylonians, Assyrians Medes, and Persians. From them first conquered by the Romans, under the conduct of Pompey; reduced into the form of a Province, by the Emperour Trajan; more fully setled and confirmed by Aurelianus. But being recovered by the Persians, they fell together into the power of the Saracens, and are now commanded by the Turks. Never appearing of themselves on the Stage of action, but when once God shewed his mighty power in their many weaknesses; and raised them up to be a Scourage to the house of Israel, of which see Judges chap. 3. v. 8. Hired afterwards by Adadezer King of Syria Zobah, in his war against David; by whom most shamefully defeated, 2 Sam. 10. 16, 18. Yet notwithstanding memorable in the Book of God, for the birth of Abraham and Rebecca; the long abode of Jacob, and the birth of his Children in that respect affording an Original to the Hebrew Nation.

The Christian faith was first preached here by Saint Thaddæus, one of the 70. Disciples; Anno 43. upon this occasion. Agbarus the Toparch, or Prince of Edessa, one of the chief Cities of this Countrey, having been long afflicted with an incurable infirmity, and hearing of the fame of JESUS; beseeched him by a special message, to come and help him: whereunto our Saviour made this Answer, that he could not visit him in person, the things he was to do, whilest upon the earth, being to be performed onely in the land of Canaan; but that he would take care of his health in convenient time. Accordingly, not along after his Ascension, Saint Thomas the Apostle, by immediate revelation from our Saviour, sent Thaddæus thither; by whom the Prince was cured, and the Gospel preached, and many of the Nation converted to it: the Acts whereof, together with the Copies of the several Letters from Agbarus to CHRIST, and from CHRIST to him, preserved in the Archives of Edessa; were by Eusebius translated out of the Syriack, and inserted into the body of his Ecclesiastical History, lib. 1. cap. 14. Once planted, it found good increase, continuing in the purity of it till about the year 530. at what time one Jacobus Syrus (so called from his birth and abode in Syria) took on him the defence of the Errors of Eutyches, touching the unity of natures in CHRIST our Saviour. Whose followers finding the Patriarchs of Antioch too vigilant over them, removed for the most part further off; setling themselves in Babylonia, and Mesopotamia, where they continued in great numbers: Governed by their own Patriarch, to whom the Jacobites in Syria are also subject, who takes unto himself the title of Patriarch of Antioch, and is successively called Ignatius, as if the undoubted Successor of that Saint and Martyr; superior in that regard, to the Patriarch of Hierusalem, who is also a Jacobite. The Patriarchal Sea, fixt in the Monastery of Saphran, neer the City of Merdin; but the Residence of the Patriarchs for the most part, at Garamit: the number of Chri- ſtians under his obedience, computed formerly at 160000 Families, reduced ſince unto 50000. That which they hold as Jacobites, diſtinct from all other Chriſtians, is 1 The acknowledgement but of one nature, one will, and one operation (as there is but one perſon) in Chriſt our Saviour. 2ly. In ſigning their Children before Baptiſm, in the Face or Arm, with the ſign of the Croſs, imprinted with a burning iron. 3ly Retaining Circumſion, and uſing it in both Sexes. 4ly. Affirming the Angels to conſiſt of two ſubſtances, Fire, and Light; and 5ly. Honouring the memory of Dioſcurias (of Alexandria) and Jacobus Syrus, condemned by the antient Councils. The points wherein they differ from the Church of Rome,

1. Not enjoining the People the neceſſity of Confeſſion to a Prieſt, before they admit them to communicate.

2. Not admitting Purgatory, nor Prayers for the Dead.

3. Adminiſtring the Sacrament of the Euchariſt in both kinds.

4. Allowing the mariage of Prieſts; And

5. Teaching that the ſouls of men deceaſed, are not admitted preſently to the Viſion of God, but remain ſomewhere in the Earth, to expect Chriſts coming. In which laſt, (ſetting aſide the determination of the place) as they have many of the Fathers concurring with them; ſo to the firſt (touching the unity of natures in our Saviour Chriſt) they have of late added ſuch qualifications; as poſſibly may make it capable of an Orthodox ſenſe.

Chief Rivers of this Countreys (beſides Tigris and Euphrates, of which more hereafter,) 1. Chaboras, which riſing in Mount Maſius, paſſing directly South, falleth into Euphrates; as alſo doth, 2. Syngarus, by Pliny, called Maſca, ariſing out of the Mountain Syngarus; which is but the more Weſtern part of the ſaid Mount Maſius. Which names of Maſca, Maſius, and the Maſieni (being the name of a People dwelling thereabouts) ſhew plainly that they go upon very good grounds who place Maſch, or Meſech, one of the ſons of Aram, in theſe parts of the Countrey.

It was divided antiently into, 1. Anthemaſia, 2. Chalcitis. 3. Caulanitis. 4. Accabene. 5. Aucorabitis and 6. Ingine: each part containing ſeveral Cities or Towns of name. Theſe ſix when conquered by the Romans reduced unto two Provinces onely, viz. 1. Meſopotamia, lying on the South of Mount Maſius, or the head of Chaboras; and 2. Oſrhoene on the North: this laſt ſo named from one Oſrhoes, the Prince or Governour of theſe parts in the time of the Perſians, as Procopius telleth us.

Chief places of the whole, 1. Edeſſa, the Metropolis of Oſrhoene, ſituate on the River Scirtas, which runneth thorow the middeſt of it, not far from the fall thereof into Euphrates. Memorable for the Story of Agbarus before related, amongſt Church-Hiſtorians: and in the Roman Hiſtories, for the death of the Emperor Caracalla, ſlain here by the appointment of Macrinus, Captain of his guard. The occaſion this. The Emperour conſcious to himſelf of his own unworthineſs, employed one Maternianus to enquire amongſt the Magicians in the Empire, who was moſt likely to ſucceed him: by whom accordingly adverti ſed that Macrinus was to be the man. The letters being brought unto Caracalla, as he was in his Chariot, were by him delivered with the reſt of the Packets, to the hands of Macrinus, (who by his Office was to be attendant on the Emperours perſon) that he might open them, and ſignifie unto him the contents thereof at his better leiſure. Finding by this the danger in which he ſtood, he reſolved to ſtrike the firſt blow; and to that end entruſted Martialis, one of his Centurions, with the execution; by whom the Emperour was here killed, as he withdrew himſelf, Levandæ veſicæ gratiâ, as my Author hath it. So impoſſible a thing it is to avoid ones Deſtiny; ſo vain a thing for any Prince to think of deſtroying his Succeſſor: and therefore very well ſaid to Nero in the times of his tyranny, Omnes licet occideris, Succeſſorem tuum occidere non poteſt, that though he cauſed all the men of eminence to be forthwith murdered; yet his Succeſſor would ſurvive him, and eſcape the blow. But to return unto Edeſſa, in following times it was made one of the four Tetrarchies of the Weſtern Chriſtians, when they firſt conquered Syria, and the Holy Land; the two firſt Governors or Tetraches, ſucceſſively ſucceeding Godfrey of Bouillon in the Kingdome of Hieruſalem. But in the year 1142. it was again recovered by Sanguin the Turk, Father of Noradin Sultan of Damaſcus, and by the loſs thereof, no fewer than three Arch-Biſhopricks withdrawn from the obedience of the See of Antioch.

2. Cologenbar, another ſtrong peece adjoining, beſieged on the taking of Edeſſa, by the ſame Sanguin, who was here ſtabbed in a drunken quarrell by one of his familiar friends; and the Fort ſaved for that time.

3. Niſibis, ſituate ſomewhat to the Eaſt of Mount Maſius, called alſo Antiochia Mygoniæ; from the River Mygdonius, which runneth thorow it; and afterwards Conſtantia, from Conſtantius the Sonne of Conſtantine. A City of great note in thoſe elder times, a Roman Colony, and the Metropolis of the Province of Meſopotamia, properly and ſpecially ſo called: which being beſieged by Sapores the King of Perſia, (Conſtantius ruling in the Eaſt) and in no ſmall danger to be loſt, was gallantly defended by James the then Biſhop of it, whom Theodoret calls not onely, Epiſcopum Civitatis, ſed Principem & Ducem, not the Biſhop only of the City, but the Prince and Captain of it, libr. 2 cap. 31. So little inconſiſtencie was there found in thoſe early daies, betwixt the Epiſcopall function and civill buſineſſes; that the Biſhops were not interdicted from the Acts of war, when the neceſſities of the State did invite them to it. The City not long after moſt unworthily delivered to the ſaid Sapores, by the Emperour Jovinian; which drew along with it, in ſhort time, the loſs of the Province.

4. Ur, ſeated on the Eaſt of Niſibis, betwixt it and Tigris; and ſo placed by Ammianus who had travelled this Countrey. Conceived to be the Birth-place of Abraham, and called Ur of the Chaldees, Gen. 11. 28. either becauſe the Chaldees were in thoſe daies poſſeſſed of the place; or becauſe the name of Chaldæa did comprehend alſo thoſe parts of this Countrey which lay towards Tigris, as was ſhewn before.

before. For that the place from which Terah the Father of Abraham did return to Haran in Mesopotamia, was rather situate in this coast where Ur is placed by Ammianus, then betwixt the Lakes of Chaldea and the Persian Gulf, where most Writers place it, may appear probable for the reasons which are here subjoyned, 1. Because it is said by Joshua, chap. 24. ver. 12. That Terah the Father of Abraham, and the Father of Nachor, dwelt on the other side of the Flood; that is to say on the further side of the River Euphrates, and that too ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, as the Septuagint, ab initio, as the Vulgar Latine; in the first beginning. Which cannot be understood of any Ur, placed on or near the Lakes of Caldea, those being on this side of that River. 2. Because all the rest of Abrahams Ancestors from Phaleg downward, were seated in the Northern parts of Assyria, and Mesopotamia: and it were strange that Terah should be planted so far from the rest of his kindred. 3. Because from Ur in Mesopotamia, neer the banks of Tigris, the way to Canaan (to which Terah did intend to go) was directly by Haran: whereas if he had dwelt (as some say he did) by the Lakes of Chaldea, his way had been directly West thorow Arabia Deserta, and not to have travelled, with his family, so far North as Haran; and then to have fallen back as much Southward, as he had gone Northward, crossing Euphrates twice with his herds and cattel. 5. Haran, the place to which Terah did remove, when he went from Ur, and from which Abraham did remove, when he went towards Canaan; so named in memory of Haran the son of Terah: but called afterwards by the name of Carræ, and by that name well known to the Roman Writers for the death of Crassus, that wealthy Roman. Whose estate (besides the tenth which he offered to Hercules, and three moneths corn distributed amongst the poor) amounting to 7100. Talents, which comes in our money, to one Million, 331250. l. But all his wealth could not preserve him from the slaughter, slain neer this City, with the routing of his Army also, by Horodes King of Parthia: of which briefly Lucan,

———miserando funere Crassus
Assyrias Latio maculavit sanguine Carras.

Which may be Englished to this purpose,

By a defeat lamented Crassus stains
With Roman blood the Assyrian Carras Plains.

Called the Assyrian Carræ by Poetical licence, because the Assyrians formerly had been Lords thereof. And no less memorable was it in the times foregoing, for a famous Temple of the Moon, worshipped here (but in no place else) under both Sexes: some honouring it as female Deity, then called Dea Luna; and others in the shape and dress of a man, and called Deus Lunus. But with this fortune and success, as saith Spartianus, qui Lunam fœmineo nomine putabat nuncupandam, is mulieribus semper inserviat; that they who worshipped it in the form of a Woman, should be always subject to their wives (I trow there were but few of that Religion) qui vero Maremdeum credaret, is uxori dominetur; but he that worshipped it as a man, should preserve the mastery. 6. Amida, neer the River Tigris, the Metropolis of Mesopotamia, when one Province onely, and before it fell into the hands of the Romans; much beautified by Constantius the son of Constantine, by whom named Constantias. But that new name dying with him, the old revived: of great strength, as a frontire Town against the Persians, and by them much aimed at. Honored of late times with the Residence of the Patriarch of the Jacobite Christians, as the chief City of this Province; for this cause also made the dwelling of the Pseudo-Patriarch of the Nestorians (or Nestranes) of the Popes erection; and the chief Seat also of the Bassa or other Officer, governing this Countrey for the Turks; by whom called Caramit, or Kara Amida, that is to say, Amida the black, because it was walled with black stone. 7. Phalga, or Phaliga, at the meeting of Chaboras with Euphrates not far from Carræ; mentioned by Stephanus, and Arrianus, and by Ptolomy mistakingly called Pharga: the seat or first plantation of Phaleg, one of Abrahams Ancestors: Serug, another of them giving name to 8. Sarug, about a days journey off from Haran, spoken of by some later Writers. 9. Singara, on the River so named, a fortified City in the time of Ammianus, by whom mentioned, lib. 20. 10. Bezabde, mentioned by the same Author, by whom said to have been a very strong Fort, seated on a pretty high hill, and bending towards the banks of Tygris, before whose times it had anciently been called Phœnicha. 11. Virta, supposed to have been the work of Alexander the Great, circled with Walls, environed with Half-moons and Bulwarks, and made unaccessible: in vain besieged by Sapores the Persian King, after the taking of Bezabde. The same perhaps with the Birtha of Ptolomy. 12. Merdin, not far from which in the Monastery of Saphran, is the Patriarchal See of the Jacobite Sectaries.

The first Inhabitants of these Countreys, though united from the first beginning under the same Princes, and form of Government, came from several Families: all the three sons of Noah concurring as it were in this Plantation. From Nimrod, Havilah, and others of the posterity of Chus, the son of Ham, came the Babylonians: with whom Chesed the son of Nachor, of the house of Sem, intermingling families; or being the Author of their langurge, or of some other signal benefit; gave to them the name of Chaldim, where came that of Chaldeans. From Assur, Arphaxad, and those of Arphaxads posterity, intermingled with the sons of Mash, the son of Aram, came the Mesopotamians, and Assyrians. And that Japhet also and his children may put in for a part, the neighbourhood of the Medes, and Albanese, descended from him, makes it somewhat probable.

But, whatsoever Parents they descended from, Nimrod the son of Chus, made so bold with them, as to bring them under his command: planting in Chaldea, the Cities of Babylon, and Calne; in Assyria, Ninive, Rhesem, and Calach; and finally Rehoboth (if that were Birtha, as some think it was)

was) in Mesopotamia. By these strong Forts he curbed the native, and assured his power; being the first that altered the Paternall from of Government, and drew unto himself the government of severall Nations, not having any dependance upon one another. The foundation thus laid by him, his Successors soon raised the building to a wondrous height; advancing the Assyrian Empire, from the Mediterranean Sea, to the River Indus: and that too in a shorter time than could be imagined, but that the world was then divided into petit States, not cemented together with the ligaments of power and policy: For though there be litle found of Belus the Son of Nimrod, but that he spent most of his time in draining the marishes, and making firm ground of those vast fennes which lay neer to Babylon, which were works of peace: yet by those and the like works of peace, he so setled his affairs at home, that he gave his Son Ninus the better opportunity to look abroad: who mightily improved his Empire, and was the greatest and most powerfull of all that line; extending his dominions from the River Indus, to the Mediterranean; and from the Caspian Sea, to the Southern Ocean. His Successors we shall find in the following Catalogue of

The Assyrian Monarchs.

A. M.

1798 1. Nimrod, called by some Saturnus Babylonius, the Son of Chus, and Nephew of Cham, was the first who altered the Paternal government, and usurped dominion over others; making Babylon his Imperiall City. 47.

1845. 2. Belus, or Jupiter Babylonicus, the Son of Nimrod, whose Image was worshipped by the old Idolaters, under the names of Bel, and Baal. 62.

1907. 3. Ninus, the Son of Belus, conquered Armenia, Syria, Media, Bactria, and the Persian Provinces; and removed the Imperiall Seat to Ninive, by him much beautified and enlarged. 52.

1959. 4. Semiramis, the wife of Ninus subdued the Arabians; but invading the Indians also, she was vanquished and slain by their King Staurobates. Of this great Lady it is said, that she was born in Ascalon, a Town of Syria, and exposed to the fury of wilde beasts. But being born not to die so ingloriously, we was brought up by shepherds, and at full age presented to the Syrian Vice-roy, who gave her in mariage to his onely Son. Going with him to the wars, she fell in acquaintance with Ninus, who liking her person and spirit, took her to his bed. This bred in him a greater affection towards her, so that he granted her at her request, the command of the Empire for five daies; making a Decree, that her will in all things should be punctually performed: which boon being gotten, she put on the Royall Robes, and (as some Writers doe report) commanded the King to be slain. Having thus gotten the Empire, she exceedingly enlarged it, leading with her an Army consisting of one hundred thousand Chariots of war, three millions of Foot, and half a million of Horse. A woman in whom there was nothing not to be honoured or applauded, but her insatiable lusts: in which if the Greek writers say true (as we have noe reason to believe it of so gallant a woman) she was very guilty.

3126 38. Sardanapalus, by Eusebius called Tonoscolos, the last King of this Race. Of which, being 38. in all, there is scarce any thing remaining but the very names: registred in this order by Berosus, or rather by Frier Annius a Monk of Viturbum in Tuscany, who hath thrust upon the world, the fancies of his own brain, under the name of that antient Historian. The chief Kings of note after Semiramis, were,

1. Ninus, or Zameis her Son; who by his Deputies and Lieutenants subdued the Arrians, Bactrians, and Caspians; but was otherwise a man of effeminate and unkingly carriage. And therefore is conceived to be the elder Bacchus, so much celebrated amongst the Grecians.

2. Belus the second, who recovered that Countrey which afterwards was called Judæa, to the Assyrian Empire, from which it had revolted in the time of his Predecessor, (on the defeat of Amraphel, one of his Lieutenants, by the sword of Abraham,) and subdued many other nations.

3. Belochus

3. Bolochus Priſcus, the tenth King, who by ſome Writers is ſaid to be the Author of Divination by the flying of Birds, called Auſpicium. For of Sooth-ſaying there were in all four kindes. The new Kings of Aſſyria and Chaldea.

1. This Auſpicium, quaſi Aviſpicium, taken from the flight of Birds, either on the right hand, or on the left; (and hence the Proverb cometh, avi ſiniſtrâ, good luck, becauſe in giving, the right hand is oppoſite to the receivers left) or from the number of the Birds, whence Romulus had promiſed to him the Empire, before his Brother, becauſe he had ſeen the double number of Vultures: or laſtly, from the nature of them, whence the ſame Romulus, ſeeing the Vultures, was (ſaith Florus) ſpei plenius urbem bellatricem fore, ita illi ſanguini, & prædæ aſſuetæ aves pollicebantur.

2. Aruſpicium, ab Aras inſpiciendo, in which the Sooth-ſayers obſerved whether the Beaſt to be ſacrificed came to the Altars willingly, or not: whether the entrails were of a natural colour, exulcerate, &c. or whether any part were wanting. All Hiſtories afford variety of Examples in this kinde; I need give no particular inſtance. A kinde of Divination ſaid to be practiſed firſt by the Tuſcans, or Hetrurians; inſtructed in the knowledge thereof by one called Tages, who appearing to certain Plough-men out of a Furrow, taught them this myſtery, and ſo vaniſhed.

3. Tripudium, ſo called quaſi Terripudium, and Terripavium, from the trembling or ſhaking of the Earth, was a conjecture of future ſucceſſes, by the rebounding of crums caſt unto Chickens. We have an inſtance of this in the life of Tiberius Gracchus, who being ſeditiouſly buſie in promoting the Law Agraria, was fore-warned by the keeper of his Chickens to deſiſt from that enterprize; becauſe when he had thrown the crums to the Coop, there came out but one of the Chickens onely, and the ſame without eating went back again; which was taken for a ſign of ill luck, as the greedy devouring of them had been of good. But Tiberius ſlighting the advertiſement, and purſuing his deſign, was the ſame day ſlain.

4. Augurium, ſo called ab avium garritu, was a prediction from the chirping or chattering of birds; as alſo from the ſounds and voyces heard they knew not whence, nor on what occaſion. In which later kinde the death of Cæſar was divined from the clattering of Armour in his houſe; and the poyſoning of Germanicus by the ſounding of a Trumpet of its own accord: In the former, an Owl ſcreeching in the Senate-houſe, was deemed ominous to Auguſtus; and a company of Crows following Seianus to his houſe, with great noiſe and clamor, was judged to be fatal to that great Favorite: and ſo it proved.

4. Manitus, the thirteenth King; who revived again the ancient Diſcipline, corrupted by the ſloathfulneſs and effeminacy of his Predeceſſors; and by the terrour of his name awed the Egyptians.

5. Aſcatades, the eighteenth King, more abſolute in Syria, and the Weſtern parts, then any of the Kings before him.

6. Sardanapalus, the laſt King of this Race, who being wondrous effeminate, and utterly unable to govern ſo great an Empire, gave opportunity to Arbaces, his Lieutenant in Media, to conſpire againſt him: By whom, aſſociated with Belochus Governor of Babylon, he was beſieged in his City of Ninive: and there reduced unto ſuch extremities, that gathering his treaſures all together, he burnt himſelf and them in one funeral Pile; eo ſolum facto virum imitatus, as is ſaid by Juſtine. The treaſure which he is ſaid to have burnt with him, amounted to one hundred Millions of Talents of Gold, and a thouſand Millions of Talents of Silver: which in our Engliſh money comes to twenty thouſand and five hundred Millions of pounds. A maſs of money, which as it muſt be long in gathering, ſo probably it had not ſeen the Sun in many years, and therefore grown ruſty, might require a fire to purge it. This Sardanapalus afforded it, it may be, to end his life with that, in which he placed his Summum Bonum: It may be in ſpight unto his enemies, and it is poſſible it might be in policy, that ſo great a treaſure not falling to the poſſeſſion of his foes, might ſo much the more diſable them from making reſiſtance againſt, or detaining the Empire from his next rightful Succeſſors. For it is of all things moſt fooliſh, both to loſe our Treaſure, and with it to inrich our Adverſaries. On which conſideration the Spaniards fired their Indian Fleet at Gades, and the Genoeſe theirs at Tripolis, that their lading might not come into the poſſeſſion of their enemies, the Engliſh and Mahomitans. After the death of this Sardanapalus, Arbaces took Media, and Perſia with the confining Provinces; Belochus ſtrengthed himſelf in Aſſyria, Chaldea, and the adjacent Regions, his Kingdom being called the new Kingdom of Aſſyria.

The new Kings of Aſſyria, and Chaldea.

3146. 1. Phul Belochus, the beginner of this new Monarchy, or race of Monarchs.

3194. 2. Phul Aſſur, deſtroyed Galilee, and ſubdued the Kingdom of Damaſcus; the ſame who is called Tiglah Philaſſar in the holy Scriptures.

3217. 3. Salmanaſſar, who deſtroyed Samaria, and ruined the Kingdom of Iſrael, and carried the ten Tribes to perpetual Captivity. This is the Nabenaſſar of the Chronologers.

3227. 4. Sennacherib, whoſe blaſphemous hoſt was vanquiſhed by Angels from heaven, and he himſelf murdered by his two ſons, Adramelech and Sharezer. 7.

3233. 5. Aſſerhaddon, who revenging his Fathers death on his brothers, was depoſed by his Deputy of Chaldea, and the Seat-Royal transferred from Ninive to Babylon. 10.

3243. 6. Merodach Baladan, Governor of Babylon, ſucceeded his Maſter in the Throne, conceived by ſome, to be the Mardocempades of Ptolomy; by others, to be alſo the ſame King, who by his Captain Holofernes did ſo plague Judea.

3283. 7. Ben Merodach, the ſon of Merodach Baladan. 21.

The new Kings of Assyria, and Chaldea.

3304. 8. Nabopullassar, who vanquished Pharaoh Necho King of Egypt. 25.

3339. 9. Nabuchodonozar the Great, by some called the Hercules of the East, who conquered Egypt in the life of his father; with whom he reigned for a time, and mightily enlarged the City of Babylon. He joyned also with Astyages King of Medes, in subverting the proud City of Ninive; and in the eighteenth year of his reign destroyed Hierusalem, and carried the people captive unto Babylon. But in the last seven years of his reign he was so distracted, that he lived not much unlike the Beasts of the field; according to the word of God spoken by Daniel, Chap. 4. during which time his son Evilmerodach, his daughter Nicocris, with Nigliſſat her husband, and Laboraſoradach their son, governed his Empires as Protectors; and therefore are by some reckoned as Kings. Finally, Nabuchadnezzar having recoved his senses, was again restored unto the Throne; and dyed, when he had reigned in all 44. years.

3383. 10. Evilmerodach, the son of Nabuchadnezzar, slain by Astyages, King of the Medes. 26.

3409. 11. Balthaſſar, son of Evilmerodach (the Nabodinus of Berosus) a Prince of a dissolute and cruel nature, was in the later end of his reign assailed by Cyaxares the son of Astyages (whom the Scriptures call Darius Medus) and by Cyrus the Persian: by whom he was slain in the seventeenth year of his reign, and the Empire of the Babylonians was transferred to the Medes and Persians. A.M. 3426.

That this was the end of Balthaſſar, is the common opinion. But Joſephus Scaliger in his learned and industrious work, De emendatione temporum, maketh him to be slain in a tumult by his own people: who elected into the Empire a Nobleman of the Medes, called in prophane stories, Nabonidus; in divine, Darius Medus; who after a 17 years reign was slain by Cyrus King of the Persians. But by the leave of so worthy a man, this cannot hold good. For the Lord by his Prophet Jeremy, had pronounced (Chap. 27.) That all nations should serve Nabuchadnezzar, and his son, and his sons son; whereas Nabonidus was a Prince of strange blood, and so the Nations were not to serve him; and in Balthaſſar, the sons son of Nabuchadnezzar, was this word accomplished. But let us examine his arguments, and withal the scoffs, which very prodigally he bestoweth on such as maintain the contrary opinion: Natio Chronologorum, the whole rout of Chronologers; boni & diligentes viri, good simple meaning men; & addunt alia nihil veriora, are his first complements. Ut igitur, quod Chronologorum eſt, omnes reſipiſcant, &c. therefore that they may repent their ever being Chronologers, he bringeth in Berosus, cited by Josephus, in his first book against Appion. But Berosus there maketh Nabonidus (to whom he saith the Kingdom of Balthaſſar was by the people delivered) to be a Babylonian, and not as Scaliger would have him say, a Nobleman of the Medes; neither can the authority of Berosus countervail that of Daniel, who in Chap. 6. telleth Balthaſſar, that his Kingdom should be divided among the Medes and Persians. His second argument is drawn from the nature of the word, ἀναιρέομαι, ᾧ Δαρεῖος ὁ Μήδος ἀναιρέομαι τὴν ἀρχήν, as it is in the same Chapter, and Darius the Mede took the Empire: by which word took is implyed (saith he) not a forcible invasion, but a willing acceptance of the Empire offered. To this we answer, that Darius indeed took the Empire quietly and willingly, being offered unto him by Cyrus, and his army consisting of Medes and Persians, who according to the word of God, had taken it from Balthaſſar, Darius being then absent. Quid ſi probavero (saith he) eum cognominatum fuiſſe Medum? he hath yet one trick more then all these; and Medus must not be the national name, but the surname of Darius, which he proveth out of a fragment of Megasthenes, cited by Eusebius, in his work De Præparatione Evangelica, where he is called Μήδης ἀπὸ Μήδης, &c. an argument of all others the most slight and trivial. For besides that Μήδης may there as well be the name of his Nation, as of his Family; and besides that, it thwarteth the places of Jeremy and Daniel, already quoted; it is diametrally opposite to another place of the same Daniel, in his ninth Chapter; where he is called Darius, of the seed of the Medes. Of this Darius more anon when we come into Media. As for Nabonidus, questionless he was the same with Balthaſſar. For besides that Josephus, and Berosus, attribute to either of them the reign of 17 years, the same Josephus (who might best know the truth in this case) telleth us that Balthaſſar was by the Babylonians called Naboandel, a name not so great a stranger to Nabonidus, as Scaligers Darius, or Herodotus his Labonitus. But in this we must pardon Joseph. Scorn and contradiction was a part of his essence. For had he not been in some things singular, in all, peremptory, he had neither been a Scaliger, nor the son of Julius.

But leaving Joseph to the singularity of his own conceits, we find nothing done by the Assyrians or Chaldeans after this subjection, which might denote them to have been once the Lords of so great an Empire. Successively inslaved by the Medes, Persians, and Macedonians; then by the Persians again, afterwards by the Saracens, next by the Turks, a third time by the Persians, once again by the Turks of the Ottoman Family, unto whom now subject: never endeavoring to assert in the way of war, or opposition, either their ancient reputation, or their native liberties; but suffering themselves to be won, lost, fought for, and again recovered by their quarrelsome Masters, as if they had no title to their own Countrey, but were born to follow the fortunes of all pretenders. The reason of which is principally to be ascribed to the form of Government used amongst the Persians, which was so Despotical and absolute, if not tyrannical, that they held all the people conquered by them in the nature of slaves; not suffering any to grow great in a state of inheritance, or to enjoy any place of power and profit under them in the conquered Provinces, but at the pleasure of the Prince; as it is now used amongst the Turks of the Ottoman Empire. By means whereof, the great men having no alliances amongst themselves, and as few dependants amongst the people, were never able to take head against the Conqueror; but in the fall of the present Prince fell together with him: it being a good rule of Machiavel, that where the antient Nobility is in good regard, linked in alliances with themselves, and well respected by the common and inferior people; people; there it is difficult for the Invader, though a Conqueror, to win a Country, and harder to keep it being conquered. But on the other side, where Nobility is quite worn out, and the Prince doth hold his Subjects in the nature of slaves, there both the conquest will be easie, and soon assured. For to what purpose should the Subjects resist the Conqueror, or stand any longer to their King, then he stands to himself, when they are sure the Conqueror can lay upon them no heavier burdens, then they were accustomed to before; and have withal a flattering hope, that their new Masters may be gentler to them, then their former were? It fares with them no otherwise then with Esops Ass, which refused to make the opportunity of an escape from the hands of the enemy, by which he was taken, because he knew it was not possible they should lay more load upon his back, then his old Master made him bear. To which condition the Chaldeans and Assyrians being brought by the Persians, and never accustomed to the taste of a better fortune: have followed the same successes as the Persians did, falling together with them from one hand to another; the particular accompt of whose estate we shall finde in Persia, taking this onely for the close, that when Solyman the Magnificent had discomfited Tamas King of Persia, and taken the great City of Bagdat; Caramit, Merdin, and the rest both in Assyria, Chaldea, and Mesopotamia, submitted to him without any resistance, and received his Garrisons. And for a confirmation of his estate, he received at the hand of the Caliph of Babylon (who by an old Prerogative had the nomination or confirmation, at the least, of the Kings of Assyria, and the Sultans of Egypt) the Royal Ornaments and Ensigns, Anno 1534. incorporating by that means those Regions into his estates, and making them Provinces of his Empire; in which he left a Beglerbeg at Bagdat to command in chief, and divers Sanziacks in their several and respective Provinces. And though the Persian Kings have since taken, and are still posted of some places of importance in them; yet I account them in regard of the said investiture, and the long possession following on it, for Provinces of the Turkish Empire: as I do Media of the Persian, though Tauris and some other pieces of it be possessed by the Turks.

MOUNT-TAURUS.

MOUNT-TAURUS is a conſtant and continual ridge of hills, which extend from the Mediterranean to the Indian Seas; running thorow the whole length of Aſia from Weſt to Eaſt, and dividing it, as the Æquator doth the Globe, into North and South. It was called Taurus from the word Tur or Taur, which in the Syriack and Chaldean ſignifieth a Mountain; the common name of all high mountains being made peculiar unto this, by reaſon of its greatneſs and continued length: yet ſo, that it had other names alſo in ſome parts thereof, according to the Regions and Nations by which it paſſed, and on which it bordered. The courſe whereof is thus ſet down by Sir Walter Raleigh: premiſing onely, that it beginneth in the Province of Lycia, a Region of Aſia Minor, neer the Mediterranean. 'Theſe 'Mountains (ſaith he) which ſunder Cilicia from the reſt of Aſia the leſs, on the North thereof are 'called Taurus; and where they part it from Comagena a Province of Syria, they are called Amanus. On 'the Eaſt-ſide of the River Euphrates (which forceth it ſelf a way thorow it) it ſometimes reſumeth the 'name of Taurus, as in Ptolomies three firſt Tables of Aſia, and ſometimes taketh the name of Niphates, 'as in the fourth: retaining that uncertain appellation, ſo long as they bound Armenia from Meſopotamia. 'After the River Tigris hath alſo cut them aſunder, they continue the name of Niphates altogether, un-'till they ſeparate Aſſyria and Media, but then they call themſelves Coatras: although between the up-'per and lower Media, they appear not always, but are ſeen diſcontinued, and broke in pieces; ſuch 'parts of it as are found in the middle of that Countrey being called Orontes; thoſe which lie more to-'wards the Eaſt being named Coronus; out of the Southern parts whereof iſſueth the River of Bagradus, 'which divideth the ancient Perſia from Caramania. Continuing further Eaſt-ward by the name of 'Coronus, they give unto the Parthians aud Hyrcanians, their proper Countreys: and afterwards change 'themſelves into the Mountains of Seriphi, out of which riſeth the River Maurgus. And now beginning 'to draw towards the end of their courſe, they firſt make themſelves the South border of Bactria, and 'are then known by the name of Paropamiſus: and after take unto themſelves the name of Caucaſus, 'where the famous Rivers Indus, Hydaſpis, and Zaradrus, have their firſt beginnings. In this point do 'they hold their heads exceeding high, to equal the Mountains of Imaus, whom they encounter within 'the 35, 36, & 37. Degrees of Latitude, and the 140 Degree of Longitude: known by no other name then 'this, till finally they terminate their courſe in the Indian Seas. So far, and to this purpoſe, that noble Gentleman. It may be added hereunto, that though the ancient Writers could trace the courſe of this Mountain, no further then the meeting of it with Imaus; yet later obſervations follow it to the wall of China: the parts beyond Caucaſus being now known by the names of Delanguer, and Naugrocot. But this is to be underſtood onely of the main body of theſe Mountains, which hold on in an even courſe from Weſt to Eaſt; not of thoſe ſpurs and branches of it, which ſhoot either to the North, or South: ſuch as are the Anti-Taurus in ſome parts of the leſſer Aſia; the Gordiæan Hills, and the Montes Moſchici, with thoſe which Pliny calleth Pariedri, others Pariardri, in Armenia Major; and that of Caboras, which ſheweth it ſelf on the North-Eaſt of Aſſyria, with divers others.

In ſuch a continual courſe of Mountains it muſt needs be that many fierce Nations did inhabit in former times, not eaſily ſubdued, nor ſo ſoon reduced unto civility, as ſuch who were poſſeſſed of places leſs defenſible, and fitter for commerce and trafick with the reſt of mankinde. And they continued in theſe late times, the laſt which were brought under by the Turks and Perſians, the mightieſt Monarchs of thoſe parts; though bordering on, or totally environed with their dominions. Two Kingdoms they afforded of long continuance: one towards the Weſt where it cloſeth with the Mountains of Anti-Taurus, and divideth Syria Comagena from Armenia Major; the other towards the Eaſt, ſeparating Media from Hyrcania. For want of other names to deſcribe them by, we will call the firſt the Kingdom of Aladeules, and the laſt the Kingdom of Babaman; according to the names of the two laſt Kings.

1. The Kingdom of ALADEULES contained that part of this Mountainous tract, which beginning in or about Anti-Taurus, extended it ſelf as far towards the Eaſt, as to the banks of the River Tigris, where they part Meſopotamia from Armenia major. Inhabited by a people naturally very fierce and warlike, more famous for nothing then their want of all things; who as men dwelling in a rough and barren Country, could little profit themſelves by husbandry, and therefore gave themſelves to grazing; breeding on their paſtures ſome ſtore of horſe and camels, which they ſold to others, but eſpecially maintaining themſelves and their families by hunting and ſtealing. Suppoſed to come originally from the Cappadocians, and Armenians of the leſſer Aſia, which by long and continual wars in the former Ages, were forced to forſake their dwellings, and for ſafety of their lives to fly to theſe unpeopled and deſolate Mountains.

tains. Where ſearching every hill and dale, and following the opportunity of Springs and Rivers, the chiefly the mildeſt Temperature of the Air, and moſt cheerfull aſpect of the Sun: they built in many places poor villages, and afterwards ſome better Towns. The principal of which is named Maras, ſo called as it is conceived from the River Marſias, which riſing out of the Mountain Cœlene, paſſeth by the ſame, and not farre off falleth into the River Euphrates.

When it was made a Kingdome firſt, it is hard to ſay, the Kings hereof being mean and inconſiderable in the eye of the world; not worth the conquering, and wanting power to conquer others and enlarge their territories: nor indeed worthy any King but one of their own, who could content himſelf with reigning over rocks and Mountains. The laſt was Aladeules, ſo much ſpoken of in the Turkiſh Hiſtories; and by them called the Mountain King. Conceived by ſome writers to have been the Author of ſuch a Paradiſe, as we ſhall find deſcribed when we come to Drangiana, a Province of Perſia; and by that means grown formidable to his neighbouring Princes. But that which made him moſt really and truly known, in the ſtories of the former times; was the ſtout oppoſition which he made againſt the Turks, in their wars with Perſia: He had before given no ſmall check to the proceedings of Bajazet, the ſecond, in his conqueſt of the Caramanian Kingdome; and no leſſe troubled Selimus the Son of Bajazet, in his Perſian wars, impeaching what he could the greatneſs of the Ottoman family. Fought with by Selimus, he made good his ground with a great deal of courage, till betrayed by Alis Beg, General of his horſe; and ſeeing his Army terrified by the ſhot of the Turks, he was fain to flie. But being at laſt taken, and put to death by the command of Selimus, his Kingdome was converted to a Turkiſh Province, Anno 1515. and ſo continueth to this day.

2. The Kingdome of BAHAMAN was ſituate more towards the Eaſt, amongſt the Mountains which divide Media from Hyrcania, as before was ſaid. The Mountains in thoſe parts ſo high, that Travellers at the end of a two daies journey, may diſcern the midle Region of the Air to be beneath them. exceeding troubleſome to aſcend, about 50 miles in height when once got to the top; but more dangerous by reaſon of the Rocks and precipices, in the going down: full of inhoſpitable ſtreights, and ſo cold and barren, that were not Sove eignity a temptation above all reſiſtance, no man would take upon him the command of ſo poor a Kingdome. And yet in this extremity of height and cold, there is great quantity of Sulphur, which makes it ſparkle in the night, like the hill Veſuvius, in Italy: by means whereof here are many Hot-Bathes, three of them walled about, two open; to which reſort unſound and decrepid people, in the very great multitudes. The chief Town of it Larry-Joon, in the ordinary road or paſs betwixt Omoal the laſt Town of Hyrcania, and Damoan the firſt of Media. But the Kings Seat was in a village called Reyna, where he had a Caſtle ſo built upon the beſt advantages of art and nature, that it ſeemed invincible: adorned, above, with gardens, flowers, and moſt pleaſant fruits; and furniſhed beneath with a Rivulet of pureſt water, which pleaſantly paſſing thorow the Caſtle, fell into the Vallos. A Caſtle of ſo large a circuit, that beſides the Kings Family or Court, it was able to admit a garriſon of 10000. men.

The laſt King hereof was the foreſaid Bahaman, derived from a long deſcent of Royal Anceſtors, comparing for antiquity with the Perſian Sophies: who though ill-neighboured on both ſides, by the Tartarian on the one, and the Kings of Perſia on the other; yet had they with great fortune, policy, and valour, maintained their Royalties againſt all pretenders. But Abas the late Perſian Sophy, having either conquered or reduced Hyrcania, picked a quarrel with Bahaman: pretending that by the opportunity of his ſcituation he might rob his Caravans, hinder his progreſs towards the Hyrcanian Sea, and turn into other Channels all the Streams or Rivers, which riſing from Mount Taurus watered and enriched his Perſian territories. And though Bahaman never had attempted any of the things objected; yet it was cauſe enough of quarrel that he might ſo do: and therefore is beſieged in his Caſtle of Ryna, with an Army of 30000 men. Finding no poſſibility to prevail by force, the General of the Perſians proceeds by treachery: invites the old King into his Camp under colour of parley, and by his means drew his two Sons out of the Caſtle to the parley alſo. Whom having got into his power, he firſt cauſed their heads to be cut off; and after making uſe of their ſeales and ſignets, obtains a ſurrender of the place; and with it the poſſeſſion of this mountainous Kingdome, Anno 1601. or thereabouts, united ever ſince to the Crown of Perſia.

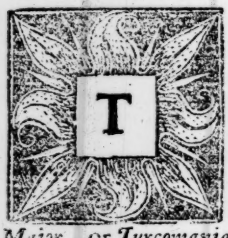
OF TURCOMANIA.



TURCOMANIA is bounded on the East, with Media, and the Caſpian Sea; on the West, with the Euxine Sea, Cappadocia, and Armenia Minor; on the North, with Tartary; and on the South, with Meſopotamia, and Aſſyria. So called from the Turcomans or Turks; who from hence made their firſt expedition for the conqueſt of Perſia, and after ſpread themſelves over all thoſe parts of Europe, Aſia, and Africk, now in their poſſeſſion. A Countrey which conſiſteth of four ſeveral Provinces, each province having to its ſelf its particular ſtory; and therefore we muſt look upon it, as it is now divided into thoſe four parts, that is to ſay, 1. Armenia Major, or Turcomania properly and ſpecially ſo called; 2. Colchis, now called Mengrelia; 3. Iberia, now named Georgia; and 4. Albania, which they now term Zuiria.

1. ARMENIA MAJOR.

ARMENIA MAJOR is bounded on the East, with Media, and ſome part of the Caſpian Sea; on the Weſt, with the River Euphrates, which parteth it from Armenia Minor, in the leſſer Aſia; on the North, with Colchis, or Mengrelia; and on the South, with Meſopitamia, and ſome part of Aſſyria.

It was called Armenia, as ſome ſay quaſi Aram-Mini or the Minni of Syria: but as others ſay, quaſi Har-mini, that is to ſay Mons Mini, or Montana Miniadis: the Mini or Minni, being a region of this tract, mentioned by Jeremie the Prophet, chap. 5. ver. 27. and by him placed betwixt Ararat, and Askenaz, which ſhew the ſcituation of it to be hereabouts. Major was added to it for diſtinction ſake, to difference it from Armenia Minor: and now it is called Turcomania, as the firſt ſeat in which the Turcomans or Turks did fix themſelves, after their eruption out of Scythia.

The Countrey in the moſt part overſpread with hills, branches of thoſe huge mountains of Taurus, and Anti-Taurus; but intermixt with fertile and delightful vallies, liberally furniſhed with Cattel, and good ſtore of fruits, though much ſubject to deep ſnows, which do much annoy it. The Riches of it not to be better eſtimated than by the frankneſs of Tigranes, once King hereof. Who being fined by Pompey at 6000 Talents, not onely very readily laid down that ſumme; but added of his own accord to every Roman Souldier 50 Drachmas of Silver, 1000 Drachmas to each Captain, and to every Colonel a Talent. For though Tigranes had added ſome part of Media, and the whole Kingdome of Syria, unto his eſtate: yet thoſe being new Acqueſts, and not fully ſetled, were not much likely for the preſent, to enrich his coffers: new conquered Provinces being for the moſt part, more chargeable than beneficial to the Victor.

The people are generally great bodied, of comely perſonage, and patient of all kind of labour; good Archers, when put to it, but careleſs of honour got by war; merry, deſirous to be at eaſe, and apt to be ſoothed. The women tall, but homely, of a manly look, moſt of them skilfull at their bow, or ſome other weapon. Their families for the moſt part great, the Father and all his poſterity to the third and fourth geneſation, living under a roof; after whoſe death the eldeſt whether Son or Brother hath the chiefeſt Rule. In diet and clothing all alike; and in moſt places they are ſaid to be very induſtrious; painful in tillage, and well ſeen in manufactures, eſpecially rich tapeſtries, Grograins, and watred Chamlets: with which they trafick into moſt Cities of the Turks and other Mahometans; privileged as they ſay, by a Charter under Mahomets own hand, above other Chriſtians, and upon that occaſion more diſperſed in the Eaſtern Countries, than any Nation in the world, the Jews excepted.

They have a language of their own which they call the Armenian, not onely uſed amongſt them in common talk, but in ſacred offices: the Scriptures being tranſlated into that language alſo, and that as the people do affirm, by the hand of Saint Chriſoſtome, at ſuch time as (on the ſolicitation of the Empreſs Eudoxia, his moſt eager enemy) he was confined to the leſſer Armenia, by the Emperor Arcadius; to whom alſo they aſcribe the invention of the Armenian Characters, or letters, ſtill in uſe amongſt them.

They received the Chriſtian faith by the preaching of Saint Bartholmew, and were antiently of the juriſdiction of the Patriarch of Conſtantinople, as a Province of the Pontick Dioceſe; which together with the Aſian Dioceſe, and that of Thrace, were by the Council of Chalcedon laid unto that Patriarchate. But falling into the opinions of Eutyches, touching one nature onely in CHRIST our Saviour; they withdrew themſelves long ſince, from the communion of the Greeks, whom they hold in greater deteſtation than all other Chriſtians; and choſe two Patriarchs of their own, of whom more anon. Other opinions which they hold beſides thoſe of Eutyches, (which yet they labour to make capable of an Orthodox ſenſe and and those wherein they differ from the Church of Rome, as 1. Denying Purgatory, and prayers for the dead; 2. Admitting none to be made Priests, except those that be maried; 3. Denying the body of Christ to be really under the species of bread and wine; and 4. Rebaptizing such as come to their Communion from the Latine Churches; are these that follow: in which they differ also from most Churches else, viz. in receiving Infants to the Lords Table, immediately after Baptism. 2. In abstaining from unclean beasts; 3. In fasting on Christ-mas day: and 4. In holding their children over the fire, as a necessary circumstance in Baptism, because John the Baptist told the people which followed him, that CHRIST would baptize them with the Holy Ghost, and with fire; in which place he meaneth not materiall fire, but the lively purgation of the Holy Ghost, according to the nature of fire. The Church of this sect is Governed by two Patriarchs; whereof the one hath under his jurisdiction this Turcomania; comprehending 150000 Families, besides very many Monasteries: and the other hath under him the two Provinces of Armenia the lesser, and Cilicia, comprehending 20000 Families, or thereabouts: The first residing antiently in Sebastia, the Metropolis of the greater Armenia; the second originally at Melitene, the Metropolis of Armenia Minor, but of late at Sis, a small City, not far from Tarsus in Cilicia. Both honoured with the title of Catholiques, and having under them to the number of 30. Bishops. Armenia Major.

Chief Rivers of this Countrey, 1. Araxes, which rising out of Mount Abos, an Armenian Mountain, first runneth Eastward as far as Media, and then bendeth it self towards the North: and after a long course is divided into two Branches; whereof the one falleth into the Caspian Sea, the other into, 2. Cyrus, another great River of this Countrey. The fountain of this last in Mount Caucasus in the furthest North of Turcomania; and falling into a Lake, there meeteth with. 3. Cambyses, another great River of these parts; and so together hasten to the Caspian also. 4. Euphrates, by the Turks called Frat, by the Hebrews, Perah, famous in Scripture for its watering the garden of Eden, hath its fountain in the hills which they call Niphates, as is said by Strabo. A River of great length and swiftness. For having forced it self a passage through the Mountains of Taurus, it runneth in the West of Mesopotamia, with a stream so violent, that they who go by water from Bir or Birra, a Town on the North-West of Mesopotamia, to the City of Bagdat, are fain to come back again by land; selling those Boats for eight crowns which they bought for 50. At Apamia, a City of Chaldæa it is joyned with Tigris, with which the greatest branch of it passeth thorow the City of Babylon, and so into the Persian Gulf: the rest of it being cut into many Channels, for fear it should overflow and drown the Countrey, are quite lost in the Lakes of Chaldæa. 5. Tigris, a swifter stream than that, whence it had the name; the word in the Median tongue signifying an Arrow. A River of so strong a course, that it passeth thorow the Lake Thonitis, without mixture of Waters, and affordeth the Armenians an easie passage to Bagdat: who on a few Rafts born up with Goat-skins blown full of wind, and boards laid upon them, make their voyage thither. It is called Heddekel in the Scripture, one of the four Rivers which watered the garden of Paradise; situate in an Iland made by the imbracement of this River and Euphrates, with their several Branches. Rising originally out of the Lake of Thelpitis, in Armenia Major, where now we are; it is presently almost swallowed by the gaping Earth; and passing under the huge bulk of Taurus, breaketh forth again; and compassing the East parts of Mesopotamia, which it divides from Assyria; meets with Euphrates, as before. Of which its first and second birth, thus the Poet Lucan.

At Tigrin subito tellus absorbet hiatu,
Occultosque tegit cursus; rursusque renatum
Fonte novo flumen pelagi non abnegat undas.

That is to say.

Tigris, soon swallowed by the thirsty earth,
Finds there a buriall where it had its birth:
But breaking out at a new spring, vouchsafes
With the Salt Seas to mixt it sweeter waves.

Mountains of most note, are, 1. Abos, glorying in the fountains of the great River Araxes. 2. Periardes, or Periarges as Ptolomy, Pariedri, as Pliny calleth it, a branch or spurre of the great mountain Taurus. 3. Udacespes, another branch of that great Mountain. 4. Some part of Anti-Taurus. 5. The Mountains called Montes Moschici, more towards the North, abutting upon Cappadocia, and the Euxine Sea: which name they took from Mesech, or Mosoch the Son of Japhet, preserving the remembrance of his planting there. 6. Niphates, one of the spurres of Taurus, out of which the famous River Euphrates is said to issue. 7. The Gordiæan Mountains, conceived by many learned men to be the mountains of Ararat, on one of the tops whereof called Baris, the Ark of Noah is most generally affirmed to rest. Affirmed by many antient writers of the Christian Church, and countenanced not onely by Josephus and some others of the Elder Historians; but by the Septuagint themselves: who in the 37 chap. of Esay v. 38. and 2 Kings 19. 37. have rendred Ararat by Armenia. And be it so, let Arara be Armenia, and consequently the mountains of Ararat be Armenian Mountains: yet doth it not follow hereupon, that the Ark rested on the Gordiæan mountains, or any others of this Countrey, as they would conclude. We may infer as Logically, for ought I can see, that the Garden of Eden must be looked for in Armenia also; because situate in the circlings of Euphrates, and Tigris, two Armenian Rivers. Those Rivers have indeed their fountains in Armenia Major, but compass not the Garden of Eden, till after a long course they encounter each other in the spacious plains of Babylonia. And so those mountains, though they have the name of the Mountains of Ararat or Armenia, because there first grown to a diſcernable and ſuper-eminent height above all the mountains of thoſe parts: became not the reſting place of the Ark, till after a further courſe towards the Eaſt, they were grown to their fulleſt height; which is in thoſe parts of it betwixt Scythia, and Perſia, which are called Mount Caucaſus: not that Mount Caucaſus, which lieth on the North of Colchis, and Iberia, out of which the River Cyrus is ſaid to riſe; but that which lieth on the Eaſt-ſide of the Caſpian Sea, where Mount Taurus and Imaus do croſs each other. But of this elſewhere.

It was divided herefore into many Provinces, the principall whereof had (I grant) its name from the Gordiæan Mountains, called in ſome writers, Cordiæi, from whence the Province had the name of Gordiene, but moſt commonly called Corduene, bordering on Aſſyria. The Kingdom once of Zarbienus, who ſiding with Luculus againſt Tigranes King of Armenia, was by Tigranes murdered with his wife and Children; but honoured by Luculus with a ſtately and magnificent funeral. 2. The 2d. Province of note is called Cotacene, neer the Montes Moſchici. 3. Toſarene bordering on the River Cyrus. 4. Colthene on the banks of Araxes. 5. Sophene, neer the turnings of the River Euphrates; miſtook by ſome induſtrious and knowing men, to be the Syria Soba of the Holy Scriptures. 6. Baſiſine, on the North-Weſt, neer the ſprings of that River. But what Cities did belong to each, I find no where ſpecified.

Thoſe of moſt conſequence in the whole, 1. Artaxata, by Florus called Caput Gentis: of moſt eſteem in thoſe times, and the Seat-royall of the Kings of Armenia from its firſt foundation. Built by Artaxes, one of the Progenitors of Tigranes, at the perſwaſion of Annibal, whileſt he abode in this Countrey: who liking the ſituation of the place, drew on it the model of a ſtrong and gallant City, according to which Plat-form it was preſently built. Taken and ſacked by the Romans, as a daughter of Carthage, by Corbulo in the time of Nero; it never could revive again to its former ſplendour: in the midle ages called Eſechia, and at this day Coy, or Coim; if not built rather out of the ruines of it. A City memorable for two great battells neer unto it; the firſt between Lucullus on the one ſid, againſt Mithridates and Tigranes on the other; wherein the Romans were victors: the ſecond between Selimus Emperor of the Turks, and Hyſmael the Perſian Sophy; wherein the Turks were conquerors, Anno 1514. A victory which he bought with the loſs of 3000 of his beſt men, and ſuch a terrour to the whole Army, that the Turks to this day call it, the only day of doom. The fields adjoining to the Town wherein this cruel battel was fought, called the Chalderan fields. 2. Sebaſtia, now Suaſſia, ſeated on Euphrates, where it meeteth with the Mountain Taurus; the reſidence of the Patriarch of the Armenians, at their firſt ſeparation from the See of Conſtantinople; the Metropolis at that time of all Armenia: ſo named in honour of Auguſtus, whom the Greeks call Sebaſtos. But of late diveſted of that dignity, the Patriarchall See, by reaſon of the fierce wars raging in this Countrey, betwixt the Perſians and the Turks, being removed to the Monaſtery of Eomeazin, neer the City of Ervan in Perſia; in the dominions of which King theſe Armenian Chriſtians live in great abundance, by the name of Jelpbelins. 3. Tigranecerta, beautified and inlarged, if not firſt founded, by Tigranes above-mentioned; by whom repleniſhed with people of ſeverall Nations, whoſe Countries he had taken from them, and enriched in a manner with the wealth of all his Kingdome: there being no Armenian, either Prince or Paiſant, who ſent not ſomewhat towards the adorning of it. But taken by Lucullus without great reſiſtance, thoſe ſeverall Nations not agreeing amongſt themſelves: and therein beſides other Treaſure, no leſs than 8000 Talents in ready mony. The City ſituate neer a River, which Tacitus calleth Niceſorius. 4. Arſamoſata, by Pliny called Arſimote, on the banks of Euphrates. 5. Cholna, ſo called in memory of Hul, or Chul the Son of Aram, one of the firſt Planters of this Countrey, 6. Baraza, by the Emperor Leo much enlarged and beautified; dignified with the new name of Leontopolis, and for a while made the Metropolis of the Province. 7. Arſarata, by Strabo called Arxata. 8. Theodoſiopolis, built on the foundation of ſome of the more antient Cities, by the Emperor Theodoſius, and of him thus named. 9. Colonia, the ſtrongeſt and moſt defenſible City hereof, when poſſeſſed by the Romans. 10. Clamaſſum, a ſtrong Town on the banks of Euphrates, taken by Selimus the firſt in his way towards Perſia, and therewith livery and ſeiſin of the reſt of this Countrey, ſince wholly conquered by his Succeſſors. 12. Chars, not far from the ſame River alſo, ſuppoſed to be the Chorſa of Ptolomy, of which not long ſince the ruins onely; but in three weeks ſo repaired and fortified by the Turks, Anno 1579. that it is thought to be impregnable. 13. Theſpia, giving name of old to the Lake Theſpitis, and to the Region called Theſpites; but now not in being. 14. Arminig, now of greateſt name, and eſteemed the Metropolis of this Countrie: ſituate in that part of the Lake of Vaſlan (the Martiana palus of the antient writers) which lieth next to this Countrey; and by that well fortified: the onely City of Armenia poſſeſſed by the Perſians, who are the Lords of all that Lake, of which more hereafter. 15. Van, both for natural ſituation, and the works of art, accompted by the Turks for their ſtrongeſt Bulwark in theſe parts againſt the Perſians; and for that cauſe well garriſoned, and as well munitioned.

This Countrey was firſt planted by Hul or Chul the Son of Aram, and by Meſech one of the Sons of Japhet, who with their families or Colonies poſſeſſed the ſame: the one leaving the remainder of his name, in the Montes Moſchici; the other in the Town called Cholna, and the Region called Colthene by Ptolomy, Cholobatene by Stephanus. Advanced to the honour of a Kingdome aſſoon as any, that of Babel excepted: Ninus the third from Nimrod finding Bazanes King hereof, whom he forced to acknowledge his ſuperiority, and to aid him in his wars againſt Zoroaſter the King of Bactria. Kings of moſt note in times ſucceeding, (for we have no conſtant Catalogue of them) were 1. Araxes, who being warred on by the Perſians, was promiſed victory by the Oracle, on the ſacrifice of his two fair daughters. Willing to ſatisfie the Gods, and yet ſpare his children, he ſacrified two of the daughters of Mieſalcus, a noble man of this Countrey: by whom in revenge hereof his own daughters were ſlain, and himſelf ſelf ſo ſolely followed, that ſwiming the River then called Helmus, he was therein drowned, and thereby gave unto that River the name of Araxes. 2. Artaxa, the founder of the great City Artaxata; ſpoken of before. 3. Tigranes, the moſt mighty King that ever reigned in Armenia, to which he added by his proweſs, Galatia, and a great part of Cilicia, in Aſia Minor, the whole Countreys of Media, Syria, and Phœnicia. But ſiding with Mithridates, whoſe daughter he had married, againſt the Romans, he was by Lucullus overthrown in two great battels, and outed of the greateſt part of his dominons. Hearing that Pompey had ſucceeded Lucullus in command of the Army, and truſting more unto his goodneſs then a wiſeman would, he put himſelf into his power: by whom condemned in a great ſum of money for the charge of the war, and ſtripped of all the reſt of his eſtates; he was ſuffered to enjoy Armenia Major, Syria being made a Province, Sophene given to Ariobarzanes King of Cappadocia, Media left unto it ſelf, and the leſſer Armenia conferred on one of his Sons, who being found guilty of ſome practice with the King of Parthia, was carried Priſoner unto Rome, and his Countrey brought into the form of a Province. 4. Artavaſdes, circumvented by Mar. Antonie, who led him Priſoner to Rome, but (catenis, ne quid honori ejus deeſſet, aureis, as the Hiſtorian tells us of him) it was in chains of Gold for his greater honor; giving Armenia to one of the ſons of Cleopatra. And though, 5. Artaxias recovered his Fathers Kingdom, yet he and his Succeſſors held it but as Vaſſals of the Roman Empire: the Senate after that confirming, and ſometimes nominating the Armenian Kings. Continuing in this eſtate till the time of Trajan, it was by him reduced to the form of a Province (made after that a part of the Pontick Dioceſs) who adding Meſopotamia alſo unto his Dominions, make Tigris the Eaſtern border of his Empire, which Auguſtus thought fit to limit with the banks of Euphrates. But long it held not in that form, being governed by its own Kings, as it was before Trajans time, in the reign of Conſtantius, Julian, and the Emperors following; whom they acknowledged and revered as their Lords in chief, till the time of Juſtinian the ſecond (he began his Empire, Anno 687.) when ſubdued by the Saracens. Recovered by that Emperor, but ſoon loſt again, it continued ſubject to the Saracens, till the breaking in of the Turks, Anno 844. of whom more anon. The greateſt part of the Turks emptying themſelves into Perſia, and other Countreys which they took from the Eaſtern Emperors; the Chriſtians of Armenia began to take heart again, and to have Kings of their own, by whom governed, till again ſubdued by Occadan, or Hoccata ſon of Cingis, the firſt Cham of the Tartars. Nor did the Tartars make ſo abſolute a conqueſt of it, as to extinguiſh either Chriſtianity, or the race of the Kings: Haithon, ſirnamed Armenius, reigning after this, and going in perſon to Mongu, the great Cham of Tartarie, 1257. And in our own Chronicles, in the reign of King Richard the ſecond, we find mention of one Leon an Armenian King, who came hither to ſue for aid againſt the Turks; by whom then diſpoſſeſſed of his eſtates. By Uſſan-Caſſanes, one of the Princes of this Countrey, (of whom more hereafter) who had the fortune to obtain the Crown of Perſia, Anno 1472. it was made a Province of that Kingdome: and ſo continued till the year 1515. when conquered by Selimus the firſt, and by him made a part of the Turkiſh Empire; more fully ſetled and aſſured in the reign of Amurath the third, who by cauſing many Forts and Garriſons to be planted in it, made the conqueſt abſolute.

Colchis.

The Armes of this Kingdom, when a Kingdom, governed by Princes of its own of the Chriſtian faith, were Gules, 3 heads of a Buck Argent, Crowned Or.

2. COLCHIS.

COLCHIS is bounded on the Eaſt, with Iberia; on the Weſt, with the Euxine Sea, and part of the Tartars Precopenſes; on the North, with Tartarie, from which parted by thoſe vaſt hills, which the Romans called Caucaſi; and on the South, with Armenia Major, from which ſeparated by the Montes Moſchici.

The reaſon of the name I find not. Nor can yield unto Bochertus, who fetcheth the orginal of the name and Nation, from Cuſluhim, one of the Sons of Mizraim, the Son of Cham: the Etymology of the name being too much wreſted, and Egypt too far off to give a being to Colchis in thoſe early daies: though poſſibly in times ſucceeding, the Ægyptians hearing by the Grecks, of the wealth of the Country, might ſend Colonies of their people thither, as to other places. It is now called Mengrelia.

The Countrey ſaid to be very fruitful, if the care of the husbandman were not wanting. Their vines they plant at the feet of great trees, which twining about the armes thereof lade them full of Grapes: with which, and other fruits riſing from the Earth, they uſed of late times to furniſh the Store-houſes of their Kings, for want of ready money to fill his Coffers; their tributes being paid in ſuch commodities. Formerly of great fame for abundance of gold, found in the ſands of their Rivers iſſuing from the Caucaſian Mountains. The thing affirmed by Appianus in his Mithridatica; χρυσοφορεῖσθαι δὲ τὰ Καυκάσου πολλὰ πηγὰς ἔχοντα ἀφαλεῖς, Many of their ſprings, ſaith he, which come out of Caucaſus, carry veins of Gold. The like ſaith Strabo alſo, and ſome other Antients. With which, and out of their rich Mines both of Gold and Silver, the Kings hereof were ſo well furniſhed with thoſe metals; that the furniture of their Chambers were all of Gold, and the beams of their Lodgings were made of Silver. But now ſo deſtitute of both, that the people for want of money to buy and ſell with, are inforced to barter their commodities, and change one for another.

The people at the preſent very rude & barbarous; ſo inhumane & voide of naturall affection, that they ſell their children to the Turks. The better ſort of them much given to belly-cheer, dancing and ſinging looſe ſonnets of love and daliance; uſing much wine in their entertainments, which the more their Gueſts drink, the better welcome; inflamed wherewith they offer them for a cooler their wives or Siſters, with Colchis. charge to yield them all content, esteeming it no small credit to them if it be accepted. Nor are the women much averse from the entertainment, whether to place themselves, or obey their husbands, let them tell that can.

The Christian faith was first here planted in the time of the Emperor Justinus, by whose perswasion Taurus Prince of the Colchi, then at the Court in Constantinople, became a Christian; and being baptized, was returned back into his Countrey, with the title of King. But Cabades the King of Persia much offended at it, proclaimed war against him: which hindred the further progress of the Gospel, till the year 860. About which time Methodius and Cyril, two reverend men, were by the Patriarch of Constantinople employed in this service; which they successfully effected: in that regard they hold to the communion of the Church of Greece, and belong to the jurisdiction of that Patriarch. To whom conform in most dogmatical points of their Religion, and in many practical. And though they have a distinct language of their own, which hath no affinity with the Greek, yet do they celebrate their Divine Offices in the Greek tongue, and follow the Rituals of that Church; which few of them understand any better, then the Vulgar Papists of France, Spain, or Germany, do the Latine Service. Whether it be that they have no learned men amongst them, either to translate their old Liturgy, or to compose a new, or that they hold all alterations in Religion to be matters of danger; or that ignorance is the best mother of devotion (as is thought by others) I am not able to determine.

The chief Rivers of this Countrey, are 1. Hippus, 2. Cyaneus, 3. Charistus, all rising out of the Caucasian Mountains, and falling into the Euxine. 4. Phasis, the principal of all, rising out of the Montes Moschici, or Armenian Mountains, and there called Boas. Navigable with smaller Vessels a great way up into the Countrey, and with great ships, 18 miles from the Sea. Memorable amongst the Antients for the landing of the Argonautes, in the mouth thereof; and those delicate Fowl called from hence Phasides, or Phasiani (Pheasants) which they brought with them into Europe.

As for this expedition of the Argonautes, being the most remarkable action in those elder ages of the world, when Piracy and depredations were accounted for Heroical vertues; it was no other then the adventure of some noble Grecians, for the gold of Cholchos. The age wherein it hapned, was about the 11 year of Gideon, the Judge of Israel. The chief Adventurers, Jason, Orpheus, the famous Poet, Castor, and Pollux the sons of Tindarus, Telamon, and Peleus, the sons of Æacus, and Fathers of Ajax and Achilles, Laertes the Father of Ulysses, Amphiaraus the South-sayer, Hercules, Theseus, Meleager, with many others of like note. These moved with the great noise of the wealth of Colchos, and the riches of King Æetes, then therein reigning, resolved upon a voyage thither, embarked in a ship called Argos (whence the name of Argonautes) whereof one Typhis was chief Pilot. Passing the Hellespont, Propontick, and Thracian Bosphorus, they came into the Euxine Sea: and after many difficulties and strange Adventures (which such Knights Errants could not chose but encounter with) they landed in the River Phasis, and came to the Kings Court, and there were kindely entertained. But finding the Kings Treasures to be too well guarded to be took by force (said by the Poets to be kept by a Dragon always waking) they practised with Medea, the daughter of Æetes, to assist them in robbing her Father. Who being in love with Jason, on promise of marriage with him, assented to it: By whose Artifices (which the Poets call Magical charms) the Guardians being circumvented, and the treasure gotten, they all, together with Medea, imbarked again, and after a long and dangerous voyage returned into Greece. This is the substance of the Story; which being the greatest and most notable voyage which the Grecians in those early days had undertaken, occasioned the Poets to advance it to the highest pitch, and to disguise it with many fictions, and ingenious fancies: But not without some ground entituled to the Golden Fleece (which they make the end of the design.) For the Rivers, as before was said, having Golden sands, which fell down from the Mountains (as in many other parts of the world they are found to have:) it was the custom of the people to lay many Fleeces of wool in the descent of those Rivers, in which the grains of Gold remained, though the water passed through; which Strabo witnesseth to be true.

But leaving these Adventures to pursue their fortunes, let us go forward to survey the Cholchian Cities; the principal whereof, 1. Dioscurias, a Town of great wealth and trade, founded by Amphitus, and Telchius, two Spartans, the Charioters of Castor and Pollux, and so named in honor of their Masters, whom the Greeks call Διόσκυροι: which two Spartans passing further East, were afterwards the founders of the Nation from them called Heniochi, or the Chariot-drivers. A Town of such resort by Merchants from most parts of the world, that here were spoken 300 different languages; insomuch that the Romans (as Pliny saith) were fain to maintain here 130 Interpreters, for dispatch of business, and negotiating with those Merchants. 2. Sybaris, the Seat-Royal of the Colchian Kings, about nine miles from which was the Temple of Mars, to which Medea is reported to have brought the Argonauts. 3. Sigameam, neer the mouth of the River Cyaneus: as is also, 4. Æa, by Ptolomy called Æapolis, an Egyptian Colony, planted there by Sesostris (in the time of Rehoboam the Son of Solomon) at what time he attempted, but without success, the conquest of Colchis. 5. Neapolis, so called from the newness or late foundation of it, when that name was given. 6. Phasis, so called from the River, upon which it is situate, retaining both the site and name to this very day: the ordinary residence of the Turkish Beglegbeg, by whom called Phassum. 7. Alvati, a well fortified place. More in the Land are placed by Ptolomy, 8. Mechlessus, 9. Sirace, 10. Zadris, 11. Surium, &c. not much observable in old Story, nor now known at all.

The first Inhabitants of this Countrey, most probably, came out of the neighbouring Armenia, and therefore the posterity of Hul or Chul, from whence perhaps the name of Colchis; to whom in tract of time, time, ſome Colonies out of Ægypt (a ſeafaring people) moved with the great fame of the riches and wealth hereof, did adjoin themſelves; the Colchians on that ground, (or from ſome part of his Army left there by Seſoſtris) being ſaid by Ammianus Marcellinus, to be the ancient off-ſpring of the Ægyptians. The moſt antient of their Kings was Ætes, ſpoken of before: who entertaining Phryxus flying out of Greece from the fury of his ſtepdame Ino, with great ſtore of treaſure; occaſioned the Argonauts, as well in way of revenge, as in hope of booty, to make that famous expedition for the Gold of Colchos, diſguiſed under the fiction of the Golden Fleece. Of moſt note after him, Selances, and Eſubops, who firſt diſcovered the rich mines of Gold and Silver; of which metals they made all their Utenſils, even the beams of their Chambers. The fame whereof drew thither Seſoſtris, the great King of Ægypt; who being vanquiſhed in the field was fain to lay aſide all thoſe hopes which he brought with him thither, and return back to Ægypt in worſe ſtate than he came; but that he left behind him an Ægyptian Colony in the City of Æa; which after occaſioned others of that Countrey to repair hither alſo. Living in peace and unmoleſted from this time forwards, they were unhappily ingaged by Tigranes of Armenia, to ſide with him againſt the Romans, and in his overthrow gave ſuch advantage to the Victor, that Orodes the King of Colchis was fain to ſubmit himſelf to Pompey, to diſmiſs his forces, leave his faſtneſſes; and finally to redeem his peace, by ſending to him a Bedſtead of pureſt Gold, and many other rich preſents. After this, the Romans had here their Agents, and received hence ſome annuall profits, but never brought it to the form of a Province. Diſtreſſed between the Perſians and Conſtantinopolitans, they had much ado to ſtand upright; though betwixt both they kept themſelves in a kind of liberty: as of late times, betwixt the Perſians, Turks, and Tartars, their too potent Neigbours. But at the laſt Anno 1579. Amurath the third, to make the ſafer paſſage for his forces in Georgia, ſent Uluzales his Admiral, with a great Fleet into the Euxine Sea: who comming up the River Phaſis took the City of Faſſum, fortified it; and laid ſo certain a foundation of a future conqueſt; that though the Mengrelians did not long after demoliſh ſome of his fortifications, yet they were afterwards repaired, and Faſſum made the ſeat of a Turkiſh Beglerbeg, as it ſtill continueth. Iberia.

3. IBERIA.

IBERIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with Albania; on the Weſt, with Colchus; on the North, with the Caucaſian Mountains; and on the South, with the Montes Moſchici; by the firſt mountains parted from Sarmatia Aſiatica, and by the laſt from Armenia Major.

It was ſo called from the River Iberus, which running thorow it, falleth at laſt into the more noted River Cyrus. But is now called Georgia, and that as ſome ſay from Saint George the Cappadocian Martyr, whom here they have in very great reverence, as their tutelary Saint and Patron: as others ſay, from George a Cappadocian Biſhop, by whoſe preaching they were brought unto Chriſtianity; and ſome again will have them called properly Gordiæans, and corruptly Georgians, from their neer neighbourhood to thoſe mountains. But the moſt probable opinion is, as I conceive, that they took this name from the Georgi, whom Pliny reckoneth amongſt other of the Caſpian nations. Though to ſay truth, the name of Georgia extendeth ſomewhat further than that of Iberia, as comprehending alſo that part of Armenia Major which lies next to Media, and the whole Countrey of Albania, if I gueſs aright.

The Country for the greateſt part, is covered with Mountains, woods, and thickets, and in that regard unconquerable for the difficulty of the mountainous paſſages; yet notwithſtanding it is very fruitfull in many places, having many fertile plains, and wealthy vallies; well watered, and of great increaſe to the husbandman, if he be not wanting to himſelf in care and induſtry.

Of the old Iberians it is written, that they were a very warlike nation, and uſed to ſet as many Pillars about the grave of a dead man, as he had ſlain Enemies in his life: as alſo that thoſe of the ſame Tribe or family had all things common; he being the Ruler, which was eldeſt: and that ſome of them did derive themſelves from the Children of David begotten on the wife of Uriah, for that cauſe never marying out of their own kindred. The preſent Georgians very warlike, ſtrong of bodie, and valorous in fight; for a long time defended themſelves and Countrey from the Turks and Perſians, with great prudence making uſe of the one againſt the other. But overpowred by the vaſt multitude of Turks breaking in upon them, they have loſt many of their beſt Forts, and much of their liberty.

The Chriſtian faith was firſt here planted in the time of Conſtantine the Great, by means of a Chriſtian captive woman (ſuch extraordinary waies doth God find out to promote his Goſpell): who being of a moſt devout life, and exemplary piety, had by her prayers to CHRIST reſtored a young child to health which was thought paſt cure; and healed the Queen hereof of a deſperate malady, when no help of Phyſick would prevail. Whereupon the King ſent Ambaſſadours to Conſtantine, deſiring Miniſters and Preachers to be ſent to Iberia, to inſtruct the people in the faith; which was done accordingly. Since that time, Chriſtianity hath flouriſhed in this Countrey without interruption; though by Mahometans, and Pagans, on all ſides encompaſſed: agreeable in doctrinal points to the Church of Greece, whoſe Rituals alſo the People do to this day follow. Not ſubject for all that to the Patriarch of Conſtantinople, (though of his Communion) but to their own Metropolitan onely; who hath under him about 18 Biſhops, and reſideth for the moſt part, in Saint Catharines Monaſtery on Mount Sinai. By means of which remote dwelling of their principall Paſtor, Mahometaniſm hath got ſome footing, and Jeſuitiſm begun to creep in amongſt them. The occaſion of which laſt was this.

About the year 1614. the Perſians making an inrode into this Countrey, took the City of Cremer, and therein Cetaba, the mother of Prince Teimurazes; whom, leading her captive into Perſia, an not able to prevail with her to turn Mahometan, they moſt cruelly murdered. Some of the Jeſuites then travelling in thoſe

Iberia. thoſe Countreys, and willing out of that ſad accident to advance the fame of their Society, together with the Catholique cauſe; cut off the head of a dead man whom they found in the way, anointed it with oyl and odours, brought it into Georgia, and ſignified unto the Prince, that they had with them the head of the bleſſed Martyr Cetaba: deſiring leave to live in ſome Monaſtery, and have the keeping of the holy Relique committed to them. This eaſily believed, and granted, the head was placed with great honour in the Church of Saint George, at Aberdall; much reſort to it from all parts by diſeaſed perſons: whom if paſt cure, the Jeſuites ſent home again, preſcribing them in the way of preparation a long time of repentance; if curable by outward means which they applyed, the cure was preſently aſcribed to the holy Relique. Grown famous by this means, they gained many Proſelytes to themſelves; and had no ſmall hope of prevailing on Prince Teimurazes to ſubmit himſelf to the Pope, as the Vicar of CHRIST. When in the heat of all their glories, a letter cometh from Maacla, a Lady attendant on the Princeſs; (but then living in Perſia, as a ſlave or bond-maid) ſignifying that her Maſter by her perſwaſion, had got into his power the body of his mother Cetaba; which he might ranſome if he pleaſed: two Travellers withall, who came out of Perſia with the Jeſuites, reporting what they ſee them do with the dead mans head. By which means the Impoſture being diſcovered, the body of the Queen was ſent for; the falſe Relique was caſt out of the Church, and the falſer Jeſuites into priſon, and next out of the Countrey.

Rivers of note I find not any, either in Ptolomy or any of our modern writers, but what are touched upon before, except onely the River of Iberus ſpoken of before, from which the Country is thus named. The whole in general ſo deſtitute of waters, that Pompey in his march this way againſt the Albanians, was fain to carry 10000 bladders filled with water, for the uſe of his Army.

Paces of moſt antiquity and importance in it, 1. Artaxiſſa, 2. Vaſada, 3. Lubium, 4. Armaſtica, all named by Ptolomy; this laſt by Pliny called Harmaſtis. 5. Cremen, the chief City now poſſeſſed by the Georgians. 6. Cachete, honoured with a fair Church, the moſt beautifull of all the Countrey, dedicated by the name of Saint George. 7. Triala, where are to be ſeen the ruins of a large City, and many Churches; by what name antiently called, I find not. 8. Altuncala, or the Golden Caſtle, a ſtrong fortreſs, and the ordinary reſidence of the Georgian Princes, ſince the time of the wars betwixt the Perſians and the Turks. 9. Archichelech, a ſtrong Caſtle taken by Solyman the Magnificent in his wars againſt Tamas King of Perſia, and ever ſince holden by the Turks. 10 Teflis, a large and capacious Town, forſaken by the Georgians at the coming of Muſtapha, Generall of Amurath the third againſt the Perſians: who liking the ſituation of it, cauſed it to be repaired and fortified, planted thereon an hundred peeces of Ordinance, and left therein a Garriſon of 6000 Souldiers. 11. Lori, diſtant from Teflis about two daies journey of a Carriers pace, ſtrengthned with a lofty Caſtle, environed with deep ditches, and a thick wall, amounting to a mile in compaſs. Seiſed on by Ferat Baſſa, the Succeſſour of Muſtapha, who repaired the walls, planted thereon 200 ſmall peeces of Ordinance, and garriſoned it with 7000 Turks for defence thereof. 12 Tomanis, a ſhort daies march from Lori, the Countrey lying betwixt both full of rich fields and paſtures, abounding with corn, fruit, and cattel. Nigh unto which the ſaid Ferat raiſed a new Fortreſs, for the better command of the Streights and paſſages, leading from thence to Lori, and ſo to Teflis (the Key of Media or Sirvan) the wall whereof being 1700 yards in compaſs, he cauſed to be planted with 200 peeces of Artillery and with incredible diligence cut down a thick wood which lay before it, and otherwiſe would have been a receptacle of theeves, or Enemies. 13. Gliſca, 14. Baſcapan, &c. poſſeſſed and fortified by the Turks, to make good their footing in this Countrey. But poſſibly moſt of theſe ſtrong holds now poſſeſſed by the Turks may be within the bounds of Armenia Major, and Albania, though within the Countrey of the Georgians; that name not being limited to Iberia, as was ſaid before.

The firſt Inhabitans hereof were ſuch who were brought hither by Tubal, the ſonne of Japhet, from whom this people at the firſt, as Joſephus hath it, had the name of Thobeli. But that name growing out of knowledge, the nations in it of moſt note were the Tibareni, Moſſynœci, Chalybes; and of leſs eſteem the Biſeries, Sapires, Macrones, &c. united at the laſt in the name of Iberi, from the River Iberus, of which Pliny ſpeaketh, the principall of all this Countrey. Too fruitfull of increaſe for ſo narrow a dwelling, ſome of them put themſelves to ſeek their fortunes; when after long wandring they fell upon the Coaſt of Spain next the Pyrenees, where they ſtaid themſelves; giving the name of Iberus to the chief River there, and of Iberia to the Countrey. Of which more before. Such of them as remained behind continued an unconquered people, under the government of their own Kings, till the time of Tigranes King of Armenia. By whom invited to his aid againſt the Romans, they came in accordingly: and in his fall diſcomfited by Lucullus in three ſeverall battells, were fain to ſtand upon their guard as well as they could: firſt holding fair with Pompey who ſucceeded Lucullus in his charge; But breaking out again on a new temptation, they were incountred by him. In which battel 9000 of their men being ſlain, and 10000 taken, they were conſtrained to ſue for peace; not otherwiſe to be obtained till Artaces the King of theſe Iberians, gave his ſonnes for Pledges. After this Feudataries to the Roman, and Grecian Emperours, till the fatall inundation of the Saracens had ſo weakned that Empire, that the Kings hereof acknowledged no more ſubjection to thoſe of Conſtantinople, till Conſtantinople it ſelf became the Impeperiall ſeat of the Ottoman Family; in whoſe quarrels with the Perſian Sophies, this Country began to ſuffer a new invaſion; ſome Towns and Forts of it being taken by Solyman, in his march or paſſage againſt Tamas. Afterwards in the time of Amurath the third, who ſet his mind moſt eagerly on the war with Perſia, a great part of it was ſubdued by Muſtapha the Turkiſh Generall: who inviting the widow Princeſs and her two Sons to come to his tent, ſent the young Princes to Conſtantinople; and by that means had opportunity to aſſure his purchaſes. And though the Perſians did their beſt to aſſiſt the Georgians, yet proved they but a kind of miſerable comforters; as much puniſhing or plaguing this poor Countrey with their aides, as the Turks by their armies. So that now it ſtands divided betwixt the Grand Signeur, and its naturall Princes: the Georgian Princes holding the greateſt part, but the Turks being in poſſeſſion of the ſtongeſt holds; kept by them under colour of ſecuring their way to Perſia, for which this Countrey is indeed but unhappily ſeated. Albania.

its

4. ALBANIA.

ALBANIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with the Caſpian Sea; on the Weſt, with Iberia; on the North, with the Caucaſian Mountains; on the South, with the Moſchici. So named from the Albani, who did once inhabit it; and of late called Sairia; but reckoned in theſe laſt ages as a part of Georgia.

The Countrey of ſo rich a ſoil, that without the leaſt labour of the husbandman, the Earth doth naturally and liberally afford her ſtore; and where it is but once ſown, will yield two or three reapings. But being ill husbands on it in former times, they occaſioned Strabo to give them this note for a remembrance, That they needed not the uſe of the Sea; who knew no better how to make uſe of the Land. The people antiently ſo ſimple, that they could not reckon above an hundred; ignorant of weights, meaſures, and the uſe of money. Old age they had in high eſteem, but held it utterly unlawfull to make ſpeech of the dead. And of theſe Pliny doth report, that they were gray-headed from their very youth, and could ſee as well by night as by day; the verity of which laſt may be ſomewhat queſtionable. But withall they are affirmed to have been a ſtout and couragious people, ſtrong bodies, patient of toil and labour, as they are at this day. And well the men may be couragious and ſtout, where the whomen are ſo truely maſculine. Of whom it is affirmed by Authors of undoubted credit, that they were exerciſed in Arms and martiall feats, as if deſcended lineally from the antient Amazons; whom Plutarch placeth in this tract; reporting ſome of them to be aiding to theſe Albanians, in their war with Pompey: which poſſibly might be no other, than ſome the more noble Albanian Dames.

Principall Rivers of this Countrey, 1. Soana, giving name to the Soani, one of the Nations of theſe parts mentioned by Pliny. 2. Gæſius, 3. Gerrus, 4. Albanus, whence perhaps the name of Albani came unto this people. 5. Cyrus, (by Plutarch called Cyrnus) ſpoken of in Armenia Major, but more properly belonging to this Countrey; becauſe herein it hath its ſpring, and the greateſt part of its courſe alſo. For riſing out of the Mountain Caucaſus, which ſhuts up this Province on the North, it paſſeth thorow the middeſt of it, till it come to the borders of Armenia; where it beginneth to bend more towards the Eaſt: and having received into its Channel all the former Rivers, beſides many others of leſs note, falleth with twelve mouths into the Caſtian, or Hyrcanian Sea. Mountaines of note here are not any, but what are common unto them with other Nations: the Montes Moſchici on the South, and Caucaſus upon the North, being rather common boundaries betwixt ſeverall Nations, than peculiar unto any one; though from the laſt the Iberians, and theſe Albanians, be in ſome writers called Caucaſiæ Gentes.

Cities and Towns I find many in it, but little of them more than their very names. 1. Chabala, by Pliny called Cabalaca, and honoured with the Character of Inſignior Albaniæ urbis, the moſt noted City of this Countrey. 2. Albana, ſo called from the River Albanus, upon which it was ſeated. 3. Teleba, 4. Namechia, 5. Thelbis, 6. Getarra, neer unto the influx of the River Cyrus. How theſe are called, or whether any thing be remaining of them, I am not able to ſay. The chief now being, and worthy to be ſo accounted, is the City of Derbent, ſituate neer the Caſpian Sea; from which to Teflis a City ſpoken of before, remain the foundations of a high and thick wall; affirmed to have been built by Alexander the Great, to defend theſe parts, againſt the irruptions of the Northen unconquered nations. The Town environed with two walls, and ſo defended by difficult and narrow paſſages of the rocks, that it is not eaſily acceſſible: but taken for all that by Muſtapha the Turkiſh General, Anno 1587 and made the ordinary reſidence of a Turkiſh Baſſa. Conceived to be the Caucaſiæ Portæ of the Antients, which Pliny honoureth with the title of ingens naturæ miraculum: by Egeſippus, for the ſtrength of it called Porta Ferrea; with reference to which, by the Turks called Demir-can, the word ſignifying in their language, a gate of iron. The other places of this tract are either of no accompt and eſtimation, or elſe are ſpecified before amongſt the Cities and good Towns of the Georgians, of whoſe Countrey this is now a part: yet we may add 2. Sabran, upon the borders of Media. 3. Sancta Maria, north of Derbent; both of them on, or neer the banks of the Caſpian Sea.

The firſt Inhabitants of this Countrey, ſeem to have been of the plantation of Gether the Son of Aram, and Nephew of Japhet, whoſe memory was long preſerved in the City of Getara before-mentioned; So called by him, or ſome of his poſterity, in remembrance of him. The People living ſomewhat out of the common road, were little troubled with Invaders from forreign parts; neither the Perſians, nor Macedonians, looking ſo far North. Nor poſſibly had the Romans taken notice of them, had they not ingaged themſelves with Tigranes firſt, and afterwards with Mithridates. Falling on Pompey with an Army of 40000, and well beaten by him, they were content to ſue for peace. But finding that the Iberians alſo had took up Arms, they ingaged again; leavying an Army of 12000 horſe and 50000 foot, in which Oroezes their King, with his brother Coſis, were in perſon preſent. And though they had made good the banks of the River Cyrus; yet being ill armed, and for the moſt part only with skins of beaſts, they made but ſmall reſiſtance againſt the Romans: notwithſtanding the gallant charge of Coſis, who aſſaulted Pompey, and had the honour to be ſlain by him in the place. After this overthrow, and their giving pledges unto Pompey for their good behaviour; we find little mention of them in the Stories of the Roman Empire, till the time of Trajan. Who having conquered, and reduced Armenia Major to the form of a Province, reſolved to ſhew his power to theſe neighbouring nations: and to that end impoſed a King on the Albani, of his own appointment, and made the Kings of Colchis, and Iberia, do their homage to him. In times ſucceeding no news of them; either becauſe remote from the ſtage of Action, or ſerving under the Albania. the command of ſome greater nation, where their name occurs not. Conquered by Occadan, or Hoccata the Cham of Tartarie, together with Iberia, and Armenia; they were a while ſubject to that Empire: and paſſing in ſucceeding times by the name of Georgians, part-took of the ſame fortunes with them. Now at the mercy of the Turk, who by reaſon of the ſtrong footing which he hath gotten amongſt them, is become a dreadful neighbour to them; if not acknowledged by them for their Lord in chief.

Thus having taken a ſurvey of all the Provinces of the Turkiſh Empire, both in Europe, and Aſia, and touched upon the means by which they are poſſeſſed of Ægypt, whereunto all the reſt of their hold in Africk, ſerves but for an acceſſory: we will now look upon the ſtory of this people, their firſt originall, the great ſucceſs of their affairs, the Princes under whoſe command they have made theſe conqueſts. Which having done, we will proceed to a Deſcription of the Perſons, Manners, and Conditions of the Turks themſelves, their power and policy; with other things conſiderable in ſo great an Empire.

And firſt for the original of the Turkiſh Nation, they were moſt probably the Deſcendants of thoſe Turcæ, whom Pliny and Pomponius Mela place about the fennes of Mæotis. Of whom thus Mela, ſpeaking of the Gelani, a Scythian people. Juxta Thyrſagetæ, Turcæque, vaſtas ſylvas occupant., aluntur que venando, &c. Next unto them (ſaith he) live the Thyrſagetæ, and the Turcæ, poſſeſſed of vaſt woods, and maintained by hunting; and then a rough and deſart Countrey with continuall rocks, as farre as to the Arympheians. And Pliny muſtering up the barbarous nations of thoſe parts, joins the Tuſſagetæ (or Thyrſagetæ) with the Turks, and placeth them next the Arympheians, as Mela doth, uſque adſolitudines ſaltuoſis vallibus aſperas, ſpreading themſelves unto the rough deſarts, and woody vallies. Not known by action (though by name) till the time of Tiberius the ſecond, who began his Empire Anno 577. when preſſing hard on the Avares, a neighbouring Nation, they compelled them to forſake their ſeats and paſs into Europe; where they made themſelves maſters of Pannonia, now called Hungary. In the time of Heraclius, we find them with other barbarous nations, at the ſiege of Conſtantinople, but under the command of the Perſians. After which they began to ſet up for themſelves, and in the year 763. made a road into thoſe Countreys which we laſt deſcribed; and loading themſelves with prey and booty, returned home again. But liking better of theſe parts than their own poor dwellings, in the year 844. they brake once more thorow the Caſpian Streights; and paſſing through Iberia, ſeized on Armenia Major, and there fixed themſelves, giving it the name of Turcomania. In which wide and ſpacious Countrey they roamed up and down, without any certain habitation, removing their heards and families from one place to another; as they had formerly been uſed to do, in the fennes of Mæotis; and as the Tartars and wild Arabs do untill this day. And ſo they lived, a poor and contemptible nation, till Mahomet the Sultan of Perſia, rebelling againſt his Lord and Maſter, the Caliph of Babylon, called in theſe Turks unto his aid; and by their help obtained a ſignall victory. The victory obtained, the Turks deſire their wages, and a fair diſmiſſion; but could ſpeed in neither: the Sultan being loth to part with ſuch a neceſſary miſchief, till his affairs were better ſetled; and therefore ſhutting up the paſſages of the River Araxes, which he before had opened for them. Provoked wherewith, under the conduct of Tangrolipix; their principal Leader, they began to ſpoil and waſt the Countrey; a multitude of needy people, and ſome of the diſcontented Souldiers, coming daily to them. Aſſaulted by the Perſians, in the firſt battel they not onely got a notable victory, but ſuch ſtore of Armour, horſes, and other neceſſaries, as made them able to encounter with the Sultan himſelf: whom having overthrown and ſlain in the ſecond fight, Tangrolipix is by both Armies proclamed King of Perſia, in the year one thouſand and thirty, or thereabouts.

There were at this time amongſt the Turks, two moſt noted Tribes; the Selzuccian, and the Oguzian. Of the Selzuccian, Tangrolipix, Cutlu Muſes, Melech, and Ducat were the heades: of which, Tangrolipix as the chief of that Clan or Family, was ſetled in the throne of Perſia: Cutlu Muſes furniſhed with an Army againſt the Chriſtians, poſſeſſed himſelf of a great part of Aſia Minor: Melech and Ducat, by the like favour of their Couſen the Perſian Sultan, were veſted into the Cities of Aleppo and Damaſcus, with their ſeverall Territories. But the line of Tangrolipix and the reſt being all worn out, as hath been ſhewn in our deſcriptions of Syria, and Anatolia; the man of moſt nobility amongſt the Turks, was Ottoman, the chief of the Oguzian family; Nephew of Solyman Prince of Machan, a ſmall territory in the Realm of Perſia. Which Solyman, flying the fury of the Tartars when they conquered Perſia, was drowned in croſſing the River Euphrates, as he paſſed with his few Subjects towards Aſia Minor, the beſt place of refuge for his Nation; leaving the chief-ſhip of his Tribe to Ethrogul his Son: who obtained of the laſt Aladine of the Selzuccian Family, the village of Saguta in Bithynia, for himſelf and his ſmall handfull of people. To him ſucceeded his Son Ottoman, in the year 1280. who to revenge ſome injuries done unto his people by the improvident Chriſtians, took from them Caſtle after Caſtle; and in the end poſſeſſed himſelf of the City of Nice, not long before the Imperiall Seat of the Grecian Emperors. Emboldned with ſuch great ſucceſſes, and hearing of the death of Aladine the ſecond, whom he acknowledged for his Lord, he took unto himſelf the Title of Sultan, Anno 13000 from which before he had abſtained. To this time, and theſe ſmall beginnings, we muſt reduce the firſt foundation of the Ottoman Empire; increaſed unto its preſent greatneſs, by the courage and good fortune of theſe Princes following.

The Kings of the Turks of the Oguzian, or Ottoman Family.

1300. 1. Ottoman, or Oſmon the Son of Ethrogul, the firſt Turkiſh Sultan of this line, added to his ſmall territory the greateſt part of Bithynia, and ſome part of Pontus. 28.

1328. 2. Orchanes, took the City Prusa, and made it his residence; and was the first that had footing in Europe, where he got Gallipolis, and other peeces. The Ottoman Emperors.

1350. 3. Amurath, wonne the Thracian Chersoneſe, the ſtrong City of Adrianople, with the Countries of Servia, and Bulgaria; where he was ſlain by a common Souldier in the fields of Coſſova. 23.

1373. 4. Bajazet, made himſelf maſter of a great part of Thrace, Macedon, and Achaia. He was taken priſoner by Tamerlane, and brained himſelf in an iron cage, in which the inſolent Conqueror uſed to carry him. 26.

1399. 5. Solyman the eldeſt Son of Bajazet ſucceeded in the peaceable Pallace of the Turkiſh Provinces in Europe; but paſſing with an Army in to Aſia, for the recovery of thoſe parts thereof uſurped by Mahomet his youngeſt brother, he was forced again into Europe, to make head againſt Muſa Bajazet his third Son (employed by Mahomet in that diverſion); who haveing there vanquiſhed and ſlain him, Anno 1406. ſucceeded for a time in the Throane at Adrinaple.

1404. 6. Mahomet the youngeſt Son of Bajazet, a vigilant and active Prince firſt wreſted from his brother Iſa (Bajazets ſecond Son then living) the City of Pruſa with the dominion there unto belonging, there upon takeing to himſelf the Title of King or Sultan, by degrees recovered all which his Father had loſt unto the Tartars: afterwards makeing uſe of Muſa, for the ſupplanting of Solyman, he followed him preſently into Europe, where he fought with him, vanquiſhed, and ſlew him about the year 1416. Thereby uniting in his own perſon the whole Turkiſh Kingdome, which he enlarged with the more abſolute conqueſt of Dacia, part of Sclavonia, and the reſt of Macedon. 17.

1416. 7. Amurath II. ſubdued from the Conſtantinopolitan Empire, all Achaia, Theſſaly, Epirus; he ſhaked the State of Hungary, and dyed before the Walls of Croy. 34.

The Ottoman Emperors.

1450. 8. Mahomet II. ſurnamed the Great, and firſt Emperor of the Turks, conquered the two Empires of Conſtantinople, and Trabeſond, twelve Kingdomes, and two hundred Cities. 31.

1481. 9. Bajazet II. ſubdued the Caramanian Kingdome, and part of Armenia; and drove the Venetians from Morea, and their part of Dalmatia. 31.

1512. 10. Selimus, having poiſoned his Father, ſubverted the Mamaluks of Egypt; bringing it, together with Palaſtine, Syria, and Arabia, under the yoke of the Turks. 7.

1519. 11. Solyman II. ſurnamed the Magnificent, ſurpriſed Rhodes, Belgrad, Buda; with a great part of Hungary, Babylon, Aſſyria, Meſopotamia. 48.

1567. 12. Selimus II. an idle and effeminate Emperour, by his Deputies took from the Venetians, the Iſle of Cyprus; and from the Moores, the Kingdome of Tunis, and Algiers. 8.

1575. 13. Amurath III. took from the diſagreeing Perſians, Armenia; Media, and the City Taurus; and the fort Guaino from the Hungarians. 20.

1595. 14. Mahomet III. took Agria in Hungarie; which Kingdome in all will likely had bin loſt, if he had purſued his victory, at the battel of Kereſture. Never but then in any battell, and then ſo frighted that he durſt never ſee the face of an Army afterwards.

1603. 15. Achmat, who the better to enjoy his pleaſures, made peace with the German Emperor, and added nothing to his Empire. 15.

1618. 16. Muſtapha, brother to Achmat, ſucceeded, which was a novelty, never before heard of in this Kingdome; it being the Grand Signeurs common policy to ſtrangle all the younger brothers: howſoever this Muſtapha was preſerved, either becauſe Achmat being once a younger brother, took pitty on him; or becauſe he had no iſſue of his own body, and ſo was not permitted to kill him.

1618. 17. Oſmen, or Ottoman II. ſucceeded his Unkle Muſtapha; and being unſucceſſful in his war againſt Poland, was by the Janizaries ſlain in an uproar, and Muſtapha again reſtored: yet long enjoied he not his throne; for the ſame hand that raiſed him, plucked him down again and ſeated young Amurath in the place.

1623. 18. Morat (or Amurath the IV.) Brother of Oſman, of the age of 13. year, ſucceeded on the ſecond depoſition of his Unkle Muſtapha; who proved a ſtout and maſculine Prince, and bent himſelf to the reviving of the antient diſcipline. To the great good of Chriſtendome, he ſpent his ſtomach on the Perſians, from whom he recovered Babylon.

19. Ibrahim, the brother of Morat, preſerved by the Sultaneſs his mother in his brothers life; and by her power depoſed again for interdicting her the Court. He ſpent a great part of his reign in the war of Crete, againſt the Venetians; but without any great ſucceſſe.

1648. 20. Mahomet IV. Son of Ibrahim, now reigning: Lord of all this vaſt Empire, containing all Dacia, and Greece, the greateſt part of Sclavonia and Hungary, the Iſles of the Ægean Sea, and a great part of the Taurican Cherſoneſe in Europe; of all the Iſles, and Provinces, which we have hitherto deſcribed, in Aſia; and in Africk of all Ægypt, the Kingdomes of Tunis and Algiers, with the Ports of Snachem, and Erocco. Nor is their ſtile inferiour to ſo vaſt an Empire, Solyman thus ſtiling himſelf in his Leter to Villerius, great Maſter of the Rhodes, at ſuch time as he intended to invade that Iland: i. e. Solyman King of Kings, Lord of Lords, moſt high Emperour of Conſtantinople and Trabezond, the moſt mighty King of Perſia, Syria, Arabia, and the Holy Land; Lord of Europe, Aſia, and Africa; Prince of Meccha, and Aleppo, Ruler of Hieruſalem, and Soveraign Lord of all the Seas and Iſles thereof.

As

As for the persons of the Turks, they are generally well-complexioned, of good stature, proportionably compacted, no idle talkers, nor doers of things superfluous; hot and venerous, servile to their Prince, and zealous in their Religion. They nourish no hair upon their heads, except it be a Tuft on the top of their Crowns; by which they think that Mahomet will snatch them up into Paradise at the day of judgement. For which reason they keep on of all sides, though never so poor, accounting it an approbrious thing to see any men uncover their heads; saying when they dislike of any thing which they see, or hear, I had as liefe thou hadst shewn me thy bare skull. In their familiar salutation they lay their hands on their bosomes, and a little incline their bodies; but when they accost a person of rank, they bow almost to the ground, and kiss the hem of his garment. Walking up and down they never use, and much wonder, at the often walking of Christians. Biddulph relateth, that being at his ambulatory exercise with his companion; a Turk demanded them whether they were out of their way, or their wits? If your way (quoth the Turk) lay toward the upper end of the Cloister, why come you downwards? If to the neither end, why go you back again? Shooting is their chief recreation, which they also follow with much lazines; sitting on carpets in the shadow, and sending some of their slaves to fetch their arrowes. They prefer, as they pass the streets, the left hand before the right, as being thereby made master of his sword with whom they walk. As they shave their heads, so they wear their beards long, as a sign of freedome; but their slaves keep theirs shaven and close cut.

The women are of small stature, for the most part ruddy, clear, and smooth as the polished Ivory; as neither afflicted with the weather, and often frequenting the baths: of a very good complexion, seldome going abroad, and then masked; lascivious within doors, pleasing in matters of incontinency, and they are accounted most beautiful, which have the greatest eyes, and are of the blackest hue. Every Turk is permitted to have four wives, and as many slaves as he is able to keep; yet are they to meddle with none but their own, the offending women being drowned, and the man dismembred. These women live in great awe and respect of their husband, never sitting with him at the table, but waiting till he hath done, and then withdrawing into some room. If their husband hath been abroad, at his comming in they all rise from their stools whereon they sate, kiss his hand, and make an obeisance, and stand as long as he is in presence. The children which they have, they carry not in their arms as we do, but astride on their shoulders; they live immured from the sight of the world: and permit not any male children, no not their own sons, to come among them, after they are twelve years old. From their husbands they cannot be divorced, but on special occasion: but their husbands may put away their wives, or give them to their slaves, when and as often as they list. Far better is it with the sisters or the daughter of the Sultan; to whom when her Father or brother bestoweth her on one of the Bassas, he giveth her a dagger, saying I give thee this man to be thy slave or bedfellow; if he be not loving, obedient, and dutiful unto thee, I give thee here this Canzharre or dagger, to cut off his head. When they are maryed, their husbands come not to bed unto them, till they are sent for, and then also they creep in at the beds feet. That ever any of their Ladies made use of their daggers, I could never read. Onely I find, that Lutzis Bassa, the chief man of the Empire next the Sultan himself, and of him very much beloved; having given his wife, which was sister to Solyman the Magnificent, a box on the ear, was upon complaint by her made, thrust from all his honours, banished into Macedon, and had doubtless been slain, if the Emperours love and his own merits had not pleaded for him. And this is all the Prerogative of the Sultans daughter; her Sons being accounted as meer and ordinary Turks onely, and never being preferred above the rank of a common Captain, for fear they should be apt to harbour some aspiring thoughts.

The better sort of the Turks use the Sclavonian Tongue, the vulgar speak the Turkish language; which being originally the Tartarian, borrowed from the Persians their words of State; from the Arabick, their words of Religion; from the Grecians, their words or terms of war; and from the Italians, their terms of navigation.

They were formerly idolatrous Pagans, and were first initiated in Mahometanism, when they got the Soveraignty of the Persian Scepter. The degrees in their Religion are, 1. The Saffi or Novices; 2ly. The Calfi, or readers; 3ly. The Hegi, or writers of books, for printing they use not; 4ly. The Napi, or young Doctors; 5ly. The Caddi, whereof there is at least one in every City, to judge of offences; 6ly. The Mudressi, who use to oversee the Caddis; 7ly. The Medlis, or principal Church Governour under the Mufti. 8ly. The Caldelescais, whereof there are onely three, one of Greece, the other for Anatolia, the third for Egypt and Syria; and these sit with the Bassas in the Divano, to determine of temporall suits. 9ly. The Mufti, whose sentence in law and religion is uncontroulable. He abaseth not himself to sit in the Divano, nor affordeth more reverence to the Emperor, than he doth to him.

His forces are either for the Sea, or the land. His Sea forces are great in regard of his spacious sea-coasts, vast woods, and number of Subjects. He never suffered but one memorable defeat, which was that at Lepanto; yet the next year he shewed his Navy whole, and entire. Gallies are his only vessels, which being unable to cope with ships of any bigness, were not onely the occasion of that overthrow, but also have heartned the Florentine, with six great ships of war onely, to swager in the Seas; so that for more safety, the tribute of Egypt is of late sent to Constantinople by land. The Captain Bassa, or Admirall, notwithstanding with a Navy of 60 sail, makes a yearly progress about the Seas, and Sea Towns, to annoy the enemy, suppress Pyrates, collect the tributes, and to redress the abuses committed in the maritime Towns, belonging to the Admirallity: which annuall circuit is begun in May, and ended in October.

Their land forces are either horse, or foot. They which served on horseback, are either the Spali, Asapi: these latter serving to weary the enemies, and dull their swords with their multitudes; of whose bodies the Janizaries use to make mounts, whereon to assault the wall of a besieged Town; and are by them them ſo contemned, that a Janizary once ſold two of them for a ſheeps head. As for the Spali, the till they are inrold into pay, are of the ſame originall and education with the Janizaries; and called by the ſame name, Azamaglans. Their pay is ten Aſpers a day. The Turk is able and doth maintain 150000 Horſes at little or no coſt, which no other Prince can do with 14. millions of Gold. For whereſoever any Parcell of Land is conquered, it is divided into divers parts, and committed to the manuring of divers men; whom they call Timariots. Theſe are to pay unto the Emperour certain rents; and at their own charges, to ſend to his wars ſo many horſe, excellently appointed for the field: and which is the chief point of their ſervice, to keep in awe the ſubjects, in all parts of his Empire. For being, as they are, diſperſed in all quarters of his Dominions; the people can no ſooner ſtir, but theſe will be aſſembled and fall upon them. Theſe Timariots are in all accounted 719000 fighting men, whereof 257000 have their abode in Europe; and 402000 in Aſia, and Africa. Were it not for theſe Timariots as the Turks ſaying is, no Graſs would grow, where the Grand Signeurs horſe hath once ſet his hoof: for if the care of manuring the ground were commited to Paiſants, and not to military men; the greateſt part of this Empire would grow waſt and deſolate. Theſe Timariots were inſtituted by Ottomon, the firſt Turkiſh King of this Family, and a curſe by him laid on them that ſhould annihilate the inſtitution. The name is derived from the Turkiſh word Timax, ſignifying a ſtipend.

But the nerves and Sinews of this warlike body, are the Janizaries; who by originall being Chriſtians, are choſen by the Turkiſh Officers, every five years, out of his Europæan dominions: and ſo diſtributed abroad to learn the language, cuſtomes, and religion of the Turks; afterward according to their ſtrength, will, or diſpoſition, placed in divers chambers. They of the firſt chamber are preferred, ſome to be Chiauſies, ſuch as go on Embaſſies, and execute judgements; others to Sanziacks, or Governours of Cities; ſome to be Baſſas, or Commanders of horſemen; and others to be Beglerbegs (id eſt, Lord of Lords) to command the reſt in generall. They of the other chambers, are the Janizaries, or Prætorian Souldiers of the Guard; to whoſe faith and truſt the care of the Emperours Perſon is committed. The tithing of theſe young ſpringals is as we have ſaid, every fifth year; and ofttner ſometimes, as occaſions ſerve. By which means he not only diſarmeth his own ſubjects, and keepeth them from attempting any ſtirre or innovation in his Empire: but ſpoileth all the Provinces he moſt feareth, of the Flower, Sinews and ſtrength of their People; choice being made of the ſtrongeſt youths only, and fitteſt for war. Theſe, before they are inrold in pay, are called Azamoglans, and behave themſelves with much ſubmiſſiveneſs towards their Seniours and governours: but when once they are honoured with the title of Janizaries, they grow by degrees into an intolerable pride, and haughtineſs; till of late they were not permitted to marry, neither now can any of their ſons be accounted any other than a naturall Turk, (whom of all the reſt they account the baſeſt) the eldeſt onely excepted: to whom this Prerogative was granted by Amurath the third, when he came to the Crown. They are in number 40000. of which 16000 are alwaies reſident in Conſtantinople. In this City they are diverſly employed, being as Conſtables, to ſee the Peace kept; as Clerks of the Market, to ſee to the weights and meaſures; as Officers, to arreſt common offenders; as Warders, to look to the gates, to guard the houſes of Embaſſadours, and to travell with ſtrangers for their more ſafety; in which charge they are very faithfull. Their pay is but five Aſpers a day, and two gowns yearly; neither are their hopes great, the command of 10, 20, and 100 men being their greateſt preferment: yet are they very obſequious to their Captain or Aga, who is in place inferiour to the meaneſt Baſſa, though in power perhaps above the chiefeſt. For the crafty Turks join not power and authority, and if they obſerve the Janizaries to love and reſpect their Aga, they quickly deprive him of life and office. The Founder of this Order was Amurath the firſt, Anno 1365. their greateſt eſtabliſher Amurath the ſecond: their name ſignifieth young Souldiers. Now concerning theſe Janizaries, we will farther conſider the ſway they bear in deſigning the Succeſſour; 2ly. Their inſolency towards the Emperour, and his Officers; 3ly. Their behaviour in the vacancy of the throne; and 4ly. Their puniſhments.

1. Concerning the firſt, I never find any particular ſway the Janizaries carryed, in the deſignation of their Emperour, till the death of Mahomet the Great: when the Baſſas having choſen Corcut the Son of Bajazet, were overruled by the Aga and his Janizaries; who more inclined to Bajazet his Father, and Son to Mahomet. Though I am not ignorant, that when this Mahomet ſucceeded in the Throne, the joyfull acclamations made by the Souldiers, was accounted the chiefeſt ſign of his ſecure and perpetuated eſtabliſhment. But the chief inſtance of their power herein, was the inthronizing of Selimus the firſt, who being but the ſeventh Son of this Bajazet, was not only preferred by them before his brethren in his Fathers life time; but by their aids alſo he ſeverally maſtered them, and in the end poiſoned his Father. To omit other examples, even of late Anno 1622. they ſlew the young Emperour Oſmen, drew his Unkle Muſtapha out of priſon, and eſtabliſhed him in the Royalty.

2. As for the next, the firſt example in which I find them peccant toward their Prince, was at the beginning of the reign of the above mentioned Bajazet; when hearing of the intended death of Achmet Baſſa whom they loved, they broke open the Court Gates, and told the Emperour, They would teach him like a drunkard a beaſt and a raſcall as he was, to uſe his great place and calling with more ſobriety and diſcretion. Not long after, conceiving further diſpleaſure againſt the ſaid Bajazet, they ſhook their weapons againſt him, and refuſed to take him into the middeſt amongſt them; and were not, without great and vile ſubmiſſion on his part, appeaſed. Againſt Selimus the firſt, they alſo mutined, when being reſolved to winter in Armenia, for the better purſuit of his victories againſt the Perſian; he was by them forced to return home unto Conſtantinople. Againſt Solyman they mutined ſo violently, that they compelled him to diſplace Ruſtan his chief Baſſa or favorite. Againſt Amurath the 3d. for placing over them a new Aga, they ſo ſtrongly oppoſed themſelves; that firſt they ſet fire on Conſtantinople, and burnt therein, beſides ſhops and ware-houſes, twenty five great Innes, ſeven Temples, and 15000 houſes: and in the end conſtrained him to give them money, and to yield alſo into their hands two of his chief Counſellors, by them ſuppoſed to be their adverſaries; whom they drew about the ſtreets. Finally, (to omit the tumult 1622 above-named) in the year 1630 they grew ſo diſcontented with Mahomet the 3d. that they not onely threatned to deſtroy the Principal Officers of the Court, and the baniſhment of the Sultaneſs his Mother, but the depoſing of himſelf alſo.

3. Now for the third, I find it to have been the cuſtome of theſe Janizaries, between the deaths of an old Emperor, and the beginning of a new, to commit divers inſolencies; as the rifling of the houſes of the Jews and Chriſtians, among whom they dwell; the murdering of the Baſſas, and principall men about the Court, whom they ſuſpected not to have favoured them; and a number of the like outragious miſchiefs. Of theſe we find frequent mention, as after the death of Amurath the 2d. and Mahomet the Great: at which laſt time the Merchants of Conſtantinople, being naturall Turks, eſcaped not their ravenous hands; neither could Mahomet-Baſſa avoid the fury of their ſwords. This ſpoil they took for ſo certain a due, that if they were diſappointed of it, they would preſently raiſe commotions both in Court, Field, and City; unleſs ſome preſent ſatisfaction were made them. To this end, Ackmat diſtributed among them, two millions and an half of Ducats; Selimus the firſt, two millions; others made an encreaſe of their dayly pay. But Selimus the 2d. diſtributing among them 100000 Sultanies onely, was by them prohibited to enter into his Seraglio, till he had inlarged his bounty: and the great Baſſaes were rapped about the pate with their callivers, for perſwading them to quietneſs. Now to prevent the dangerous and factious liberty, which in the vacancy of the Empire was uſually committed; the death of the old Emperour was with all ſecrecy concealed, till the arrivall of the new. To omit others, I will inſtance in the deaths of Mahomet the firſt, and Solyman onely. This Solyman died at the ſiege of Sigeth in Hungary, which was ſo cunningly concealed by Mahomet-Baſſa the ſpace of twenty dayes; that before the Janizaries knew of it, his Son Selimus had poſſeſſed himſelf of Conſtantinople, and came alſo to their Army then in retreat homewards. For this Mahomet privately ſtrangled the Phyſicians and Apothecaries, which knew of his death, commanded the Souldiers to go on in their ſiege; and divers times ſhewed them the Emperor ſitting in his horſe-litter, as (being troubled with the Gout) he uſed to do: and when the City was taken, marched home with his dead body, ſitting ſtill in the ſame manner. So after the death of Mahomet the firſt, the Baſſaes of the Court called their Divanos, as formerly they uſed, gave order for the levying of an Army, as if ſome war were intended; and the Kings Phyſicians went up and down with their Potions, as if they had him ſtill in cure. But the Penſioners and Janizaries miſdoubting the matter, with all egerneſs deſired to ſee him; which when the Baſſaes durſt not deny, they appointed the next day for their viſit. The next day the body was apparrelled in royall large robes, placed in a chair, at the end of a long gallery; and a litle boy cunningly ſet behind him to move the Kings hand to his head, as if he ſhould ſtroke his beard, as his manner was: which ſignes of life and ſtrength the Souldiers ſeeing, held themſelves contented, and ſo was his death concealed the ſpace of 41 dayes.

4. As for the laſt, Theſe inſolent and unſufferable pranks committed ſo commonly by theſe maſterfull ſlaves, ſo exceedingly ſtomached Bajazet the 2d. that he ſecretly purpoſed with himſelf, for curing ſo dangerous a diſeaſe, to uſe a deſperate a remedy; which was to kill and deſtroy ſuddenly all the Janizaries. It is like that this Bajazet being a Scholar, had read how Conſtantine the Great had caſſed the Prætorian Souldiers, and deſtroyed their camp; as men that were the cauſes of all the ſtirs in his Empire, and whoſe pride was come to an intollerable height: and having the ſame cauſe to deſtroy his Janizaries, hoped to have done it with as much eaſe and ſafety as the other did. But they having notice of the plot, for the time continued ſo united and linked together, that he durſt not then attempt it; and afterward ſiding with his Son Selimus, caſt him out of his Throne into his grave. Since which time the Emperors never durſt puniſh them openly, but when any of them proveth delinquent, he is ſent privately in the night time to Pera over againſt Conſtantinople; where, by the way he is drowned, and a peece of Ordinance ſhot off, to ſignifie the performing of the Sultans command.

Now for the Emperors themſelves, we will conſider them in matters of pleaſure, in matters of ceremony, and in matters of State; the laſt being conſiderable in three main points, which are the murdering of their brethren, the removing of their Sons, their revenue, and therein a touch of their government. To theſe we will adde, what apparent ſymtomes may be obſerved to prognoſticate the ſtanding, decreaſing, and increaſing of this puiſſant Monarchy.

1. For the firſt, he hath not ſo few as 500. (ſometimes a 1000) choice virgins kept in a Seraglio by themſelves, all ſlaves born of Chriſtian Parents, and indeed the rareſt beauties of his Empire. When he is diſpoſed to take his pleaſure with any of them, they are all ranked in a gallery; and ſhe is by the Aga of the women prepared for his bed, to whom he giveth his handkercher. She that beareth him the firſt Son, is honoured with the title of Sultaneſs (Queen Mother we may call her) neither can he make any of them free, unleſs he marry them. When the Sultan dieth, all his women are carried into another Seraglio, where they are ſtrictly looked too, and liberally provided for, and not ſeldome times are beſtowed by the ſucceeding Sultan, on his great Baſſaes, and ſuch as he chiefly favoureth, which is a principall honour. They are attended on by women, and Eunuches; theſe being not gelded onely, but deprived of all their genitalls, and ſupplying the uſes of nature with a ſilver quill: which inhumane cuſtome was brought in among them by Selimus the ſecond, becauſe he had ſeen a Gelding cover a mare.

2. Theſe ceremonies are either performed by them, which is for the moſt part the building of a Moſche onely to help to the ſalvation of their ſouls; or towards them by others, which are moſt apparent in the entertainment of Embaſſadors. For when ſuch come to his preſence, they are led between two of his Courtiers, Courties, and comming before the Throne (on both sides whereof the Bassaes sit with admirable silence, resembling rather Statuaes than men;) they bow themselves to the ground with all humility: laying their hands on their breast, but never uncovering their heads, which (as we before noted) is counted an undecency. When they are to depart, they go all backwards; it being accounted very irreverent to turn their back-parts towards a Prince so glorious. The reason why they are thus brought in between two, is said to be for their greater honour: but is indeed a fear they have, lest the Grand Signieur, under the pretence of a Salutation, or the delivery of an Embassie, should be stabbed. Which wariness they have used, ever since the time that Miles Cobiletz, a Servian, scrambling from among the slain at the battel of Cassona, and being admitted to the speech of Amurath the first, the Author of that overthrow; stabbed him into the belly with his dagger.

3. Amongst all the jarres and discontents that be, none have been with more unkindness begun, or more eagerness prosecuted, than those of brothers; and that not only in private families, but in the stems of Princes: the multitude of Pretendants, being the originall of most civill wars. To prevent these publick emotions, the Emperors of Habassia use to immure up all their younger children, in the hill Amaza; the Persans do put out the eyes of their younger brothers; and the Turks do murder them: strange and horrid courses, whereby to avoid the fear of a war in the State, they stirre up a war in their own bowels. The first amongst the Turks that began this barbarous cruelty, was Bajazet the first, on his brother Jacup; whom immediately after his Fathers death, he strangled with a bow-string: this being the only instrument of their Fratricide, because thereby none of the blood-royall of Ottoman is spilt on the ground. After him, Mahomet the Great, caused his young brother then at nurse, to dy the death; and was not without much ado perswaded from being the executioner himself. Amurath the third, caused his five brethren to be at once strangled before his face; and Mahomet; his Son, no fewer then nineteen in one day. By this course they imagine their own estate to be infinitely secured, as knowing that Mustapha a younger Son, stirred a rebellion against Amurath; and Zemes, against Bajazet; both the second of those names: that Solyman, Musa, and Isa, severally afflicted Mahomet the first; and Corcut, Selmus; the first of these names also. But yet they will not know, that nothing sooner putteth their younger Brothers into these acts of hostility, than an inevitable certainty of a violent and unnatural death: whereas were they but sure of life, and a liberall and Princely maintenance, it is more than probable, they would rest content, as in other Kingdomes the younger Princes do. And notwithstanding their barbarous policy, they are not quite free from fear, as knowing the counterfeits have heretofore much disturbed the quiet of their Predecessours: for thus we find Amurath the second to have been vexed by one, that took upon him the name of Mustapha, elder brother to Mahomet, then late deceased; who was much furthered and aided by the Greek Princes. This hath been one of the vulgar policies of Princes to kindle flames of sedition in their neighbours Countreys. In the infancy of the Roman Empire, we find a counterfeit Agrippa, after that a counterfeit Nero; and before them, two counterfeit Alexanders in Syria. But never was Realm so often troubled with these Mock-kings, as England; a counterfeit Richard the 2d. being made in the time of Hen. the 4th. a counterfeit Mortimer, in the time of Hen. the 6th. a counterfeit Duke of York, a counterfeit Earl of Warwick, under Henry the 7th. and a counterfeit Edw. the 6.h. under Q. Mary. To prevent these walking spirits, Mahomet the third, laid out the dead bodies of his Father and nineteen brethren, as a common spectacle for all that passed by, or would come to behold them. Of late indeed the Grand Signieur Mustapha, miraculously scaped the bow-string twice; 1. when his brother Achmat, and 2ly. when Osmen his young Nephew were made Sultans; and was the first in this Empire that ever were succeed in the collateral line. as Ibrahim the late Sultan was the second, on the death of Morat or Amurath the fourth, his elder brother.

4. The removing of the young Princes is done for three reasons: 1. to wean them from the pleasures of the Court; 2ly. to train them up in arms, and inure them to hardness; 3ly. and principally to avoid the danger of a Competitour, whereof old Princes are especially jealous. The common places destinated to this Princely exile, are Amasia, in Cappadocia; Magnesia, in Lydia; and such like Towns of Natolia. Neither do the old Sultans by such a great distance think themselves secure altogether; but carry a vigilant eye over their Sons actions, and have intelligence of almost every particular thought: the least suspition being cause sufficient to destroy them. So we find Mustapha, Son to Solyman, the hopefullest branch that ever sprang from the Ottoman tree, to have been shamefully strangled by the command of his Father; upon a rumour onely of a mariage, which he was said to have negotiated with the Persians Kings Daughter. When these Princes are once setled in their government, it is a crime meriting no less punishment than death, to depart thence and come unto Constantinople, before their Fathers death; or unless they are by their Fathers sent for. Of this we have a Tragical example in Mahomet, a Prince of great hope, Son to Bajazet the second: who desiring to see the fashion of his Fathers Court, left Magnesia to which he was by his Father confined; and attended by two or three Gentlemen, came in the habit of a seafaring man to Constantinople, and having obtained his desire he returned to his charge. This strange action being quickly divulged abroad, and by divers variously entercepted; stirred such jealousies in the suspicious head of his old Father, that he took order not long after to have him secretly poisoned.

5. As for the ordinary revenue, it consisteth either in mony received, or in money saved. The money saved, is first by the Tartars, of whom he commands continually 60000 to attend him in his wars, without any pay but the spoil of the Enemie. And secondly by the Timariots, who nourish and bring into the Field more horses, than any Prince in Christendome can keep (as we have already said) for 14 millions of Gold. The money received (according to Boterus) is only 15 millions of Sultanies, which is nothing in respect of so great an Empire: the chief reason whereof is the Tyrannicall government of the Turk, which deters men from tillage, merchandize, and other improvements of their estates; as knowing all their gettings to lie at the Grand Signieurs mercy. His extraordinary revenue is uncredible. For beſides that no Ambaſſadour commeth before him empty handed; no man is maſter of his own wealth, further than it ſtands with the Emperours liking: ſo that his great Baſſaes are but as ſpunges, to ſuck up riches till their coffers ſwell; and then to be ſqueezed into his Treaſury. Theſe men, as he advanceth without envy, ſo can he deſtroy without danger: no man here hoping for Partakers, if he ſhould reſiſt, as not being ignorant that one mans fortune is built on the deſired overthrow of another. Such riches as they gain, if they hap to die naturally, return to the Emperors coffers; who giveth only what he pleaſeth to the Children of the deceaſed. Theſe Baſſaes have in their particular Provinces, their Divanoes, or Law-Courts, where juſtice hath bin adminiſtred formerly with great integrity; but now not a little corrupted; yet the comfort is, that ſuch as miſcarry in their right, ſhall without delay know what to truſt to; and the Baſſaes upon complaint to the Emperor, are ſure to die for it. Over theſe Baſſaes (the chief of whom is the Vizier Baſſa, or Preſident of the Council) preſide two Beglerbeggs; one for Greece, the other for Natolia.

6. Concerning the preſent ſtate of the Empire, many judge it to be rather in the wane, than the increaſe; which judgement they ground upon good reaſons, whereof theſe are the chief.

1. The body is grown too monſtrous for the head: the Sultans ſince the death of Solyman never accompanying their Armies in perſon (except Morat, or Amurath the fourth) but rioting, and waſting their bodies and treaſures at home.

2. The Janizaries, who have been accounted the principall ſtrength of this Empire, are grown more factious in the Court, than valiant in the Camp: corrupted with eaſe and liberty, drowned in prohibited wines, enfeebled with the continual converſe of women, and fallen from their former auſterity of diſcipline.

3. They have of late given no increaſe unto their Dominions: and as in the paths of vertue, non progredi eſt regredi; ſo in Empires, by violence gotten, when they ceaſe to be augmented, they begin to be diminiſhed.

4. Rebellions have in theſe latter times been in this Empire ſtrangely raiſed, and mightily ſupported; which commotions the former Sultans were never acquainted with.

5. The greatneſs of the Empire is ſuch, that it laboureth with nothing more than the weightineſs of it ſelf; ſo that it muſt in a manner needs decline Pondere preſſa ſuo, overburdened with its own mightineſs. For as in a naturall body, a ſurfeit killeth more than faſting; ſo in the body Politick alſo, too much extent doth ſooner draw on a ruin, than either too little or a mediocrity.

6. The Sons of the Grand Signieur, whoſe bravery of mind is ever ſuſpected by their Fathers, are nurſed up (contrary ſometimes to their natural inclinations) in all effeminacy; which once rooted in them in their youth, doth alwayes after ſubject them to the ſoftneſs and baſeneſs of libidinous pleaſure.

7. They have loſt much of that fear and terror, which formerly their very name did carry with it: inſomuch that not the Venetians onely have by Sea often mated, and once overthrown them; the Hungarians withſtood their greateſt forces, for the ſpace of 200 years, by land; the Polonians forced them to diſhonourable retreat and compoſition: but the poor Prince of Tranſylvania did divers times diſcomfit them, with the death of many of their Baſſaes; the Florentines with ſix ſhips onely, intercepteth their trade; and the poor Emir of Sidon held it out againſt them many years together.

8. By the avarice and corruption reigning in the Court; all peace and war, all Counſels and informations, all injuries and favours, being now made ſaleable. And

9. It is viſible and apparent, that their Empire was long ſince at the higheſt: Et naturaliter quod procedere non poteſt, recedit, as Velleius hath it: when an Empire can aſcend no higher, by the ordinary courſe of nature it muſt have a fall. All theſe are more than probable Prognoſticks of a ſinking Monarchy: and yet there is a greater than any of theſe, that is to ſay, the preſent State of Affaires. The young Emperor Mahomet the fourth, now reigning, is but a weak ſtaff to ſupport ſo vaſt an Empire: conſidering not onely the infinite caſualties, to which children are naturally ſubject; but the dangers which he may juſtly fear from a Rebellious Souldiery, and a Factious Court. Who by the murder of one Emperor, and the depoſition of two, have made themſelves ſo formidable, but withall ſo odious in the ſight of the Imperiall houſe: that there is no way left to ſave them from a merited vengeance, but to tranſlate the Empire to ſome other Family; though by the rooting out of this. Which whenſoever it ſhall happen, either by the naturall death, or unnaturall deſtruction of the preſent Sultan, it will draw with it an extermination of the Ottoman race: which I look on as a matter not to be avoided, except by miracle. Suppoſing then the line of Ottoman to fail, (as it is moſt probable that it will) what will become of this vaſt Empire? Three there will be, to offer at it, viz. the Crim-Tartars the Janizaries, and the Baſſas. And firſt the Crim-Tartar may plead a compoſition, made by his Anceſters, with the Princes of the Ottoman family; which is, that he ſupplying them with 60000 men at his own charges, ſhould on the failer of the heirs males ſucceed in this Empire. Beſides which, he may hope for no ſmall ſuccors, not onely from the reſt of the Tartarian Princes, but even from the Great Cham himſelf, to recover his Eſtate herein, if withholden from him: thereby to adde unto the Preſent greatneſs and renown of the Tartars, the acceſs of ſuch a ſpacious Empire. 2ly The Baſſaes may conceive no ſmall poſſibilities, of dividing this great Empire among themſelves, partly by the Example of Alexanders Captains, who after their maſters death (there being yet ſome of the blood Royall remaining) parted amongſt themſelves not onely the new-gotten Provinces, which they had conquered from the Perſians; but even the Kingdome of Macedon, his old Inheritance: partly by an example in their own Hiſtories, by which it appeareth, that after the death of Aladine the 2d. Caramau, Sarachan, Ædin, Caraſus, and the reſt of the more powerfull Commanders, divided among them the whole Turkiſh Kingdome in the Leſſer Aſia: and partly by the opportunity which they have as Governours in their ſeverall Provinces, and having ſo many bands of Souldiers under their command; which may eaſily inveſt them as Proprietaries in thoſe Eſtates, of which they have already ſuch a fair poſſeſſion. And ſo we find the Sultans or Provincial Governours of the Caliphs of Babylon, to have done before them. 3^ly. The Janizaries may alſo build their hopes on as fair foundations, as being the Sword and Buckler of the Ottoman Empire; got, and maintained by their valour chiefly. Who to excite them to the Enterprize have the Example of the Prætorian Guards of the Roman Empire (a body farre more Politique and better compacted than this is); who out of their own company created the farre greater part of the Roman Emperors, neither the Provinces or Senate daring to oppoſe them in it. But above all Examples, that of the Mamalucks of Egypt doth make faireſt for them; who were born of Chriſtian Parents, as theſe are; appointed for the Guard of the Sultans, as theſe are; purpoſely entertained and inured to the wars, to take from the naturall ſubjects, the uſe of Armes, as theſe are; men of approved valour, and the cheif Bulwark of that Kingdome againſt the Chriſtians, as theſe are: and then why may they not be like them in this laſt Attempt, for ſetting in their Maſters Throne, as theſe Mamalucks did. Adde hereunto, that they are already in (a manner) poſſeſſed of Conſtantinople, the head town and heart of the Empire; and their hopes are not vain. For my part, I hold them to be the men moſt like, to carry it unleſs the Princes of Chriſtendome laying a ſide private malice, joyn all in arms to ſtrip this proud Peacock of his feathers: and (upon ſo bleſſed an advantage) to break in peeces with a rod of iron, this inſolent and burdenſome Monarchy. A thing rather to be deſired than expected. But this by way of ſuppoſition, and as in a dream, I awake again.

The enſign of this Empire (or armes of it) is the Croiſſant, or half moon; but how blazoned I cannot tell you: nor are the learned yet reſolved on the begtnnings of that bearing. Some derive it to them, from the Eaſtern Gentiles, who worſhiped the Moon under both ſexes; as we learn in Spartianus. Some make it common to them, with the other Mahumetans; and they derive it from a pretended miracle of Mahomet; who to ſhew his power, is ſaid to have made the Moon fall into his lappe in two peeces, and to have reſtored her whole again to the heavens. Others are of opinion, that it was taken by the Grand Signeur at the winning of Conſtantinople; ut ſignum victæ gentis penes quam orientis imperium eſſet. And of this mind is Juſtus Lipſius, induced thereto as it ſeemeth, by the figure of the Croiſſant born in ſome old Bizantine coins. A pretty plauſible conceit; and therefore till we have a better, may paſs as currant as the money.

And thus much I thought convenient to inſert in this place, concerning the originall, proceeding, and continuance; the naturall diſpoſitions, policies, and forces of the Turks: this being as the onely Province which retaineth their name; ſo both the firſt they were poſſeſſed of, and the laſt which they have fully conquered, of all their Dominions.

MEDIA and PERSIA.

THese I have joyned together also, because the affairs thereof have been so united, in making up the second of the four great Monarchies, and running the same fortunes ever since; that they are hardly to be parted in course of story, though each must have unto it self a distinct Chorographie. First then, we begin with MEDIA.

MEDIA is bounded on the East, with Parthia, and some part of Hyrcania, Provinces of the Persian Empire; on the West, with Armenia Major, and some part of Assyria; on the North, with the Caspian Sea, and those parts of Armenia Major, which now pass in the accompt of Georgia; and on the South, with Persia. So called from Madai the Son of Japhet, by whom first planted and possessed, after that general dispersion made at Babel. Known by this name amongst the antients, both Greeks and Romans; but at this time called Sheirvan by the Turks, and Persians: the word signifying in the language of this Countrey, a Milky-Plain.

The Countrey of a large extent, and of so different nature, as one would think it not the same. The North parts lying betwixt Mount Taurus and the Hyrcanian Sea, very cold and comfortless: so barren, that for the most part they make their bread of dried Almonds, and their drink of the juice of certain herbs. Fruit-trees they have but few, and those but of Apples; nor any droves of tame cattel, as in other places, their food being generally on Venison, or the flesh of wild beasts took in hunting. But on the South-side of the Taurus, the soyl is very rich, and the Countrey pleasant, plentifull both of corn and wine, and all things necessary; full of fat pastures, some of them so large in compass, that 50000 horses do graze upon it.

The people antiently great warriers, as those who ruined the great Empire of the Babylonians; and laid upon themselves and their own vertue, the foundation of the second Monarchy. But being not long after incorporated into the same Empire with the Persians, have not onely ever since followed the same fortunes with them, but participate of their nature also: and therefore we shall hear more of their Charctater, when we come to Persia. Polygamie antiently amongst them, so far from being esteemed a sin or an inconvenience, that it was a punishment for the common Villager to have less than seven wives; or the woman, if of noble birth, fewer than five husbands. In their wars they use commonly to envenom their Arrows with an oyl or liquor, made of a bituminous water called Naphta; whereof there is great plenty both here, in Persia, and Assyria. The oyl called Oleum Mediacum, from this people only, because their invention, and by them most mischievously used. The Arrow which was anointed with it, being shot from a slacker bow (for a swift and strong motion took away its vertue) did burn the flesh wherein it fastned with so great a violence, that nothing but dust could mitigate the fury of it; water increasing rather than diminishing that malignant flame.

The Christian Religion was first here planted by Saint Thomas, but never had the happiness to be so universally embraced, as in other places; alwayes opposed and suppressed, either by Paganism in the time of the old Persian Kings; or by Mahometanism, since the first conquest of this Countrey by the power of the Saracens. Some Christians yet there be amongst them either of the Armenian, or Nestorian Sects, (as in all other parts of the Persian Empire) the specialties of whose Religion have been elsewhere spoke of. Here live also very many Jews, indulged the free exercise of their Religion: many of which are Descendants of those Tribes, which were transplanted hither by Salmanassar. But the Religion generally embraced and countenanced, is that of Mahomet, according to the Sophian or Persian Sects; the Language of which Nation they do also speak, though they had a language of their own, different from that of the Parthian, Elamite, or Persian, as appeareth Acts 2. v. 9. where they are reckoned as distinct.

Mountains of chief not, 1. Orontes, 2. Coronus, 3. Chaboras, the boundary betwixt Media and Assyria, 4. Jasonium, 5. Lagoas; all them (except Chaboras onely) the disjointed branches of Mount Taurus: which is here more broken and divided, than in any part of his course besides.

Out of these flow their principall Rivers, 1. Amandus, 2. Strato, and 3. Carindas; of greatest eminence in this Country, in the time of Ptolomy, but otherwise of no great account or observation. 4. Canac, the Divider of this Province from Armenia Major, but whether any of the former under this new name, I am not able to affirm. Adde hereunto the great Lake, now called Argis (by the Persians, Vusthlan) but by Strabo named Martiana Palus, situate in the confines of Assyria, Media, and Armenia; of the fish whereof dryed by the Sun and wind, and sold into divers other Countreys, the people of these parts raise a great commodity.

In former times it was divided into many Provinces, the principall of which 1. Tropatene, 2. Charomithrene, 3. Darites, 4. Marciane, 5. Amariace, and 6. Syro-Media: these and the rest reduced to two in the later reckonings, viz. Atropatia, and 2. Media Major.

1. ATRO-

1. ATROPATIA is that part hereof, which lieth betwixt Mount Taurus and the Caſpian Sea. So called from that Atropatus, Governor of theſe parts in the time of Darius, the laſt perſian Monarch; who ſo valiantly held out againſt the Macedonians. The Tropatene, (as I take it) of the antient Writers. A barren, cold, and unhoſpitable Countrey, as before deſcribed: and for that cauſe allotted for the dwelling of many of the captive Iſralites, brought hither by Salmanaſſar when he conquered that Kingdome: their numbers being found ſo great in this Northern Region, that Benjamin the Jew, reckoned no fewer than 50000 of them in one City onely, which he calleth by the name of Madai. And that great numbers of them were tranſplanted hither, appeareth by that paſſage 2 Kings 17. 6. where it is ſaid, that they were placed in Halah and Habor by the River of Gozan, and in the Cities of the Medes. Now Halah or Chalah ſeems moſt probably to be that Region of Aſſyria, which Ptolomy calleth Chalatene, in the North of that Countrey, towards Media; Habor, or Chabor, to be that Mount Chaberus, which parteth this Countrey from Aſſyria, in which Mountainous tract there was in thoſe times a City of the ſame name alſo. Betwixt which City and the banks of the Caſpian Sea, I find in Ptolomy the City Gauzania, in the 40th. degree and 40 minutes of Northern Latitude: in which there are apparent footſteeps of the name of the River Gozan, upon whoſe banks it was moſt likely to be ſeated. Atropatia.

Places of moſt obſervation in it, 1. Hamadum, by Benjamin the Jew called Madai, repleniſhed in his time with families of the captive Iſraelites. 2. Gauzavia, another dwelling of thoſe Tribes, ſpoken of before. 3. Mandagarſis, of which nothing extant but the name. 4. Gelan, the Gelæ of the antients, whom the Greeks call Caduſii. 5. Bochu, more towards the Caſpian Sea, hence called Mare de Bochu. 6. Eres, a place of great ſtrength, but poſſeſſed by the Turks, and made the reſidence of ſome of their principal Officers: taken by Muſtapha Generall of the Turkiſh forces in the time of Amurath the 3d. and by him fortified as the Gate and entrance of this Countrey. 7. Sumachia, or Shamaki, betwixt Eres and Derbent, taken by Oſman Baſſa, at the ſame time, Anno 1578. and made the Reſidence of a Beglerbeg, Anno 1583. Conceived to be the Cyropolis of Ptolomy, by the Perſians called Cyreckbata; bearing the name of Cyrus the great Perſian Monarch, by whom built or beautified. Remarkable at the preſent for a Pillar of flint-ſtones, inter-woven with the heads of many of the Perſian Nobility, moſt barbarouſly ſlain by one of the late Sultans, and this Pillar here erected for a terrour to others.

2. MAJOR MEDIA, or MEDIA ſpecially ſo called, is that part hereof, which lieth on the South of the Mountain Taurus. Commended by the Antients, for one of the godlieſt Countries in all Aſia: the fields (ſaith Ammianus) yielding abundance of Corn and Wine, for their fatneſs and fertility very rich, and no leſs pleaſant for freſh Springs and cleer veins of water: where one may ſee plenty of green Meadows; and in them a breed of generous horſes, which they call Niſæi, mounted by as valiant and generous Riders, who with great jollity uſe to go unto the wars, and charge furiouſly upon the Enemy. The men commended by Polybius (κ) πὶς ἀρετὴς ἀνδρῶν, &c.) as well as the Countrey.

Cities of moſt note in it, 1. Ecbatana, of as great antiquity as Babylon; for we find that Semiramis the wife of Ninus in a war made againſt the Medes, who had then rebelled, taking an affection to the place, cauſed water-courſes to be made to it from the further ſide of the Mountain Orontes, digging a paſſage thorow the hills, with great charge and labour. Deſtroyed by the injury of time, it was re-edified by Deioces the ſixt King of the Medes; and afterwards much beautified and enlarged by Seleucus Nicanor, Succeſſor unto Alexander in his Aſian Conqueſts. For beauty and magnificence little inferiour to Babylon, or Ninive, before deſcribed. In compaſs 180 or 200 Furlongs, which make about 24 Italian miles. The walls thereof affirmed in the book of Judith, to be 70. Cubits high, 50. Cubits broad, and the Towers upon the Gates 100 Cubits higher; all built of hewn and poliſhed ſtone, each ſtone being ſix Cubits in length, and three in breadth. But this is to be underſtood only of the innermoſt wall, there being ſeven in all about it; each of them higher than the other, and each diſtinguiſhed by the colour of their ſeverall Pinnacles; which gave unto the eye a moſt gallant Proſpect. From which variety of colours, it is thought to have the name of Agbatha, or Agbathana. In former times, the ordinary reſidence of the Monarchs of the Medes and Perſians, in the heats of the ſummer; as Suſa (the chief City of Suſiana) in the cold of winter. The Royall Palace being about a mile in compaſs, was built with all the coſt and cunning, that a ſtately manſion did require: ſome of the beams thereof of ſilver, and the reſt of Cedar; but thoſe of Cedar ſtrengthned with Plates of Gold. Said by Joſephus to be built by the Prophet Daniel. Which muſt be underſtood no otherwiſe in the truth of Story, than that he over-ſaw the Workmen, or contrived the Model; appointed to that office by Darius Medus, to whom the building of the ſame is aſcribed by others. Neglected by the Kings of the Parthian race, it became a ruin. 2. Tauris, ſituate in or neer the place of Ecbatana, out of whoſe rubbiſh it was built. Diſtant a 150 miles from the Caſpian Sea, under the ſhadow of Orontes, now called Baronta; but opening Southwards, towards a large and ſpacious Campagn: in compaſs about ſix miles, and beautified on the South-weſt within a large and pleaſant garden, the work of Sultan Tamas, who reſided here often; the buildings for the moſt part of brick, with flat Roofs (as generally in all the Eaſt) well peopled, as containing 200000 perſons of all ſorts and Sects. Of great trading, till ſubdued by the Turks by whom it was thrice taken with in very few years, viz. by Selimus the firſt, Anno 1514. by Solyman the Magnificent, Anno 1530. and by Oſman Baſſa, generall of Amarath the 3d. Anno 1585. But this laſt finding it too chargeable to be always garriſoned, and not otherwiſe tenable but by force; pulled down the walls, and built a large and capacious Citadel: both Town and Citadel recovered by Emir-Hamze Mirza, Prince of Perſia, and father of Sultan Soffy, Anno 1614. after it had been for a hundred years a continuall prey unto the Turcks. 3. Arſacia, ſo named by Ptolomy, and by the name conjectured to be built by ſome of the Parthian race. Ruined long ſince, but more beautifully revived than ever in the preſent. 4. Casbin, raiſed from the ruins of that Town. Situate in a fair and open place on the banks of a little River, which ſerveth it for houſhold uſes, but not for trafick.

Exceedingly

Exceedingly enriched by removall of the Court from Tauris hither, in the time of Tamas; partly invited thereunto by the richneſs of the ſoyl, and the commodiouſneſs of the place; but chiefly that he might without danger attend the Turks, who began to encroach on his dominions. In compaſs about ſeven miles, beautified with a large market-place, many ſtately Moſques, and the Sultans Palace: this laſt adjoyning to the firſt, convenient enough, but neither of great ſtate nor beauty. 5. Rages, or Raga, mentioned in the book of Tobit, ſo called from Ragas the Son of Phaleg, the founder of it: ſituate neer the ſpacious Plain, ſo memorable for the great breed of horſes ſpoken of before; and therefore in that book called the Plain of Rages. Repaired afterwards by the Greeks, it was named Europus, and ſo ſtands in Ptolomy. 6. Naſſivan, ſuppoſed by ſome to be the Artaſata, more probably the Naſuana, of the Antient Writers: a place much aimed at by the Turks in their Perſian wars. 7. Ardoville, on or neer the banks of the great lake Argis, ſpoken of before: the birth-place and chief Seat of Guine, and Aider, the firſt Authors of the Sophian Sect; and the buriall place of Sultan Hyſmael the firſt Perſian Sultan of that line. 8. Sultania, about ſix dayes journey from Taurus, environed with high Mountains; the tops of which continually covered with ſnow, may be ſeen farre off: founded by Alyaptu, the 8th. King of the Sixt or Tartarian Dynaſty; and by him made the Royall Seat of the Perſian Sultans, whence it had the name. But ruinated by the Tartars, it retaineth nothing now of its former ſplendour, but the Moſques, or Temples (one of them, the faireſt in the Eaſt) which the Tartars ſpared. 9. Tyroan, in the Territory of Sultania, ſituate in a large Plain, but not farre from the Mountains; beautified with a fair Market-place, many pleaſant Gardens of private men; and one belonging to the King, environed with a wall of greater Circuit than the City. 10. Turcoman, in the midle way betwixt Tauris and Casbin. 11. Damoan, at the foot of Taurus, a Town of 200 houſes, not here conſiderable but for the ſignification of the name; which is ſaid to ſignifie a Second Plantation: and being ſituate at the foot of ſo high a Mountain, occaſioneth ſome of the Jews to think, that the Ark reſted not farre off, as perhaps it did not. 12. Marant, in the Extremity of the Countrey, but of leſſer note.

The firſt Inhabitans hereof were the poſterity of Madai, as before was ſaid; Ragan the Son of Phalag taking up thoſe parts, which lay next Aſſyria. Divided in long tract of time into ſeveral Tribes, as the Coduſii, Amariacle, Margaſi, Sagartii, Debryces, Tapyri; and ſome others. Governed by Kings immediatelly from the firſt Plantation; for we find that Pharnus King hereof, was overthrown and ſlain by Ninus the grand-ſon of Nimrod. After this made ſubject to the Aſſyrians, their Kings were onely titular, at the beſt but Homagers, perhaps no better than Provincial Governours, under that great Monarchy. Of moſt eſteem amongſt them was that Arſæus, who with an Army of 800000. men (if the number be not miſtaken) incountred the Caduſii, by whom diſcomfited and ſlain. But the Caduſii ſo broken, that they were fain to put themſelves under the power of the Perſians; and ſo continued till the time of Arbaces, the laſt of theſe Provincials, and the firſt Monarch of the Medes. He living in the time of Sardanapalus, had the chance to ſee his Lord and Maſter in a womans dreſs, ſpinning among his Concubines, and otherwiſe behaving himſelf in a brutiſh manner; which ſo moved him, that he reſolved to be no longes ſubject to ſo vile a Monſter. Communicating his thoughts unto Belochus, Governour of Babylon, and well ſeen in Aſtrology, he was incouraged to proceed; and ſped ſo well, that having made themſelves Maſters of Ninive, the Imperial City (though Sardanapalus for a time put them ſhrewdly to it) they divided betwixt them his Eſtates. To Belochus fell Aſſyria, and Babylonia, with the Provinces on the Weſt of Tigris: to Arbaces, Media and the reſt, which now make up the Kingdome of Perſia. But being a mild Prince, and deſirous by fair and gentle means to aſſure his Empire, he confirmed the Perſian Satrapaes in their former Governments; reſerving noting to himſelf but a titular Soveraignity. Of whom and his Succeſſors more, when we have taken in the reſt of the Provinces.

PERSIA.

PERSIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with India; on the Weſt, with Media, Aſſyria, and Chaldea; on the North, with Tartary; on the South, with the main Ocean. So called from Perſis the predominant Province of it, that which gave law to all the reſt: as that is ſaid to do from Perſeus, the ſon of Jupiter and Danae; affirmed by the Grecians to have conquered theſe Eaſtern Countries, and to have left his name to this. Of which thus Iſidore, Perſæ populi à Perſeo Rege ſunt vocati, qui à Græcia in Aſiam tranſiens ibi barbaras gentes gravi diuturnoque bello perdomuit, & victor nomen ſubactæ Genti impoſuit. In the Scripture it is conſtantly called Elam, till the time of Daniel the Prophet, from Elam, the ſon of Sem, who was planted there. But after that the Medes and Perſians had ſubdued Babylon, and transferred the ſupreme Monarchy to themſelves; we find this people called by the name of Paras, (whence the name of Perſian ſeems to come), the word Paras, (or Pharas) ſignifying as much as horſemen. Given therefore to this Nation, as it is ſuppoſed, from an Edict of Cyrus, who not onely taught them the art of horſemanſhip, but ſet forth a law, that it ſhould be a repoach to any man to go on foot; ſive multum ſive parum itineris eſſet conficiendum, whether the journey that he had to go were long or little. Called ſometimes alſo Achæmenis, from Achæmenes the Son of Perſes, one of the firſt known Kings hereof; and by that name, (Non tot Achæmeniis armantur Suſa Sagitis) they occurre in the ſecond of Propertius. Where by Achæmeniæ Sagittæ, he means Perſian Arrows.

It is of very great extent, ſtretched out in length from the 82. degree of Longitude, to the 120. being 38 degrees in all; and in breadth from the 23. degree of Northern Latitude, to the 43. being 20 more. According unto which poſition, with reference to the heavenly bodies, we ſhall find it ſeated under the third, fourth, fift, and ſixt, Climates: the longeſt ſummers day in the Southern parts, being thirteen hours almoſt three quarters; and fifteen hours one quarter in the parts moſt Northwards.

The

The Countrey not alike in all places, as it is impoſſible it ſhould in ſo great a compaſs. But generally it is of a pure and wholeſome air, the high hills ſhading it on the one ſide from the heat of the Clime under which it lieth; and the warmth of the Sea, wherewith encompaſſed, cheriſhing a great part thereof. And ſo it is affirmed to be by Quintus Curtius. Regio non alia in tota Aſia ſalubrior habetur; temperatum cœlum, hinc perpetuum jugum opacum & umbroſum, quod æſtus levat; illinc mare adjunctum, quod modico tepore terras fovet. Then for the Earth, it is by reaſon of the great heat of the Sun, very dry and ſandy, in many places deſtitute of water, few Rivers, and not many Lakes; by conſequence neither well peopled, nor manured, for the greatneſs of it: men loving to inhabit (and I cannot blame them) where they may have the uſe of water. Which notwithſtanding, it is furniſhed with all neceſſaries both for life and pleaſure; one part affording that which the other wanteth, as ſhall be ſhewed in the deſcription of the ſeverall Provinces.

The people antiently were trained up to the wars, but chiefly unto Archery from their very childhood. Indulged the liberty of having as many wives as they pleaſed, they never ſaw the children begotten of them, until five years old. At thas age ſent unto their Fathers, they were tought preſently to handle the Bow and Arrows. Upon this ground we finde the Bow of Elam mentioned by the Prophet Jeremy, Chap. 4. and the Quiver of Elam by the Prophet Iſaiah, Chap. 22. v. 6. as the Arms peculiar to that Nation, or moſt uſed amongſt them. They were good horſemen alſo, and well skilled at their darts and ſlings, till wealth, and eaſe, and the pride of ſo great an Empire, made them wholly feminine: depriving them of thoſe abilities both of minde and body, wherein they did excell moſt Nations in their harder times. In all their fortunes very obſequious, if not ſervile, to their Kings and Princes; in whoſe preſence it was a crime to ſpit: but to deny obedience unto his commands an offence ſo heinous, as was not to be puniſhed with leſs than the loſs of life, and want of burial. In this obſervance of their Kings, followed, if not out-ſtripped, by the modern Perſian. A race of men, affirmed to be cunctorum hominum mitiſſimi, the moſt meek or patient of the world, eſpecially compared with thoſe of the ſame Religion, the Turks and Tartars. Not haters of learning, as the Turks; but ſtudious, many of them in Phyſick and Aſtrology; moſt of the better ſort much delighted in Poetry, which they give their minds to. For the moſt part addicted to hoſpitality, magnificent in expence, Lordly in their complements, fantaſtical in their Apparel, maintainers of Nobility, and deſirous of peace. Such as apply themſelves to Trades, and Mechanick Arts, prove excellent in the making of Silks, and Cloth of Gold: thoſe which betake themſelves to war, proving very good Souldiers, as the Turks have found unto their coſt, who by their long wars againſt them have got nothing but blows. The women ſaid to be neat and cleanly, truly loving, gorgeous in Attire, and delightful in the ſequeſtrations of pleaſure.

Their Religion at the firſt was Paganiſm, wherein directed principally by their Prieſts or Magi; men of a ſtrict auſtere life, forbidding outward ornaments, and the uſe of gold; making the ground their bed, and the herbs their food; their whole time ſpent in offering to the Gods the prayers and ſacrifices of the people, as if they onely might be heard; or elſe in divinations, and foretelling of things to come, from whence the names of Magick and Magician, are derived unto us. Studious in the knowledge of God and nature, and therefore called by Suidas, not onely Philoſophy, lovers of wiſdom; but Philothei, the lovers of God. Of ſuch eſteem, that as Cicero telleth us, the Perſian Kings were not admitted to the Throne, till they were trained up in the diſcipline of the Magi: and of ſuch power and intimacy in the Royall Court, that one of thoſe Magi, on the death of Cambyſes, poſſeſſed himſelf of the Perſian Monarchy. In a word, ſuch as the Druides were to the Galls and Britans, the Gymnoſophiſts or Brachmans to the antient Indians, and the Chaldæans in the Empire of Babylon; the ſame, if not of greater ſway in affairs of moment, were the Perſian Magi. And Perſians they muſt be if Magi; none but the Natives of that Countrey being to be admitted of that Society: though by a Metaphor, applied to the Profeſſors of the ſame Arts, though of other Countries; as thoſe which came from the Eaſt to worſhip Chriſt, are by Saint Matthew called Magi (Mat. 2. 1.) though they came from Arabia.

The people then were Gentiles as to their Religion; and beſides other Gods which the Gentiles worſhipped, they were great Idolaters of the Fire: which they offered ſacrifice unto in time of peace, and carried it with them as their Tutelar Dietie, in the time of war. At what time (eſpecially if the King were there in perſon) it was born in the very front of their Army, attended on by their Prieſts, and followed by a train of boyes all clothed in Scarlet, to the number of 365. according to the number of the daies of the year. In this equipage, with a great deal of pomp beſides, did Darius ſet forwards to fight with Alexander, at the battell of Iſſus in Cilicia. A ſuperſtition derived from them to the Medes, and Aſſyrians, their next-neighbouring Nations, and not extinguiſhed to this day in ſome parts of this Countrey; in which many of theſe Fire-worſhippers are ſtill remaining. But from a God, it grew in time to be a Gentleman-Uſher, and to attend on Kings and perſons of greateſt eminence: uſed to be born before the Emperors of Rome, as a point of State. Inſomuch that Commodus though fallen out with his Siſter Lucilla, permitted her notwithſtanding to enjoy her Seat in the publique Theatre, ἐν πυρὶ περιπατοῦσαν αὐτῇ, an fire to be born before her, as in former times; as we are told by Herodian.

The Chriſtian faith was firſt planted in the Provinces of the Perſian Kingdome, by Saint Thomas the Apoſtle, and held in all points anſwerable to thoſe of the Catholick Church; till Sapores to deſpight the Emperour Heraclius, a right Orthodox Prince, commanded that all the Chriſtians in his Dominions ſhould conform themſelves to the opinions and tendries of the Neſtorian Sect, by that means univerſally ſpread over all theſe Provinces. With whom here live now intermingled ſome Armenian Chriſtians, who with their Patriarch removed hither, when their own Countrey was made the ſeat of a long and miſerable war betwixt the Perſian, and the Turk; but found not here ſo ſafe a dwelling as they did expect: 1200 of them being ſlain by Abas the late Perſian Sultan, on a ſuſpicion that they went about to recon-

Suſiana. reconcile themſelves to the Pope of Rome (whom he held to be more inclinable to the Turk than to him) in the year, 1609. Which notwithſtanding (ſo miſerable a condition do theſe Chriſtians live in) he ſuffered two Convents of Auguſtine and Carmelite Friers, to be ſettled at the ſame time, even in Spaw-hawn it ſelf; and many Jeſuits to live peaceably up and down the Countrey, which ſerve for little elſe than to give intelligence. Here are alſo many Jews diſperſed over all the Provinces of this Empire; allowed their Synagogues, and Publique Places of Aſſembly. But the Religion publikely authorized and countenanced, is that of Mahomet, impoſed on this Countrey by the Saracens, when by them ſubdued: differing in ſome points from the Turks, eſpecially about the true Succeſſor of that falſe Seducer (of which more anon;) the cauſe of the long wars betwixt thoſe Nations.

As for the Perſian Language, it is very ancient, ſuppoſed to be as old as the Confuſion at Babel: ſome words whereof, by Daniel and Ezra which lived in the Perſian Court, have been made uſe of in ſome parts of the holy Scripture. A tongue which ſtill hath left ſome remainders of it, in the language of the modern Perſian (as thoſe of judgement in this tongue have delivered to us:) notwithſtanding ſo long tract of time, and the conqueſt of this Countrey by the Greeks, Arabians, Turks and Tartars. Not ſpoken onely in this Countrey, nor limitted within the Provinces of the Perſian Empire; but uſed alſo in the Court and Camp of the Great Mongul, and ſome parts of Zagathay; and where not vulgar unto all, ſtudied and underſtood by perſons of more eminent ſort, as the Latine by the Gentrey of theſe Weſtern parts. Inſomuch as he that hath this Language, may travel over all the Eaſt without an Interpreter.

Rivers here are but few, as before was ſaid, and thoſe few not navigable; by conſequence of little note or eſtimation. The principal of thoſe that be, are 1. Eulæus, the chief River of Suſiana, emptying it ſelf into Sinus Perſicus: a River of ſo pure a ſtream, that the great Perſian Kings would drink of no other water. 2. Ochus in Bactria, a River of the greater note amongſt the Antients, becauſe it was navigable; opening with a fair Channel into the Caſpian Sea, to which it haſtneth from Mount Taurus: and ſo doth alſo, 3. Oxus in Margiana, a fatal bound to theſe great neighbors. A River which the Perſians have ſeldome paſſed to inlarge their Dominions, but they received ſome notable overthrow at the hand of the Scythians; and when the Tartars made over it under the conduct of Saba the Cham of Zagathay, for the invaſion of Perſia; they were ſhamefully beat back again by Hyſmael Sophie. Nor is it leſs memorable in old ſtories, for the famous paſſage of Alexander over it, in purſuit of the murderers of Darius. For having followed Beſſus to the banks of this River, and not knowing how to paſs over his men, there being neither ſhips upon it, nor timber neer at hand to build them, he cauſed a great number of bags and bladders to be ſtuffed with ſtraw, and ſo in three days tranſported his Army. So that I may truly ſay with his own Hiſtorian, Unum id Conſilium quod neceſſitas ſubjecerat, iniit; neceſſity is the beſt Author of fine inventions. 4. Zioberis in Hyrcania, which riſing out of the ſame mountainous tract (as the two laſt-mentioned) after a long courſe above ground in the open light, hideth himſelf again for the ſpace of 38 miles, and then breaketh out at a new fountain, and falleth into 5 Rhadaga; another chief River of thoſe parts. And this Alexander the Great found to be true, by caſting two Oxen into the River Zioberis, which by the current of the ſtream were carryed under the ground, and brought to light where the River had its riſe again. 6. Hidero, by what name known unto the Antients I am not able to ſay, but of great note amongſt modern Travellers, for the fall thereof into the Sea: ſo ſteep and ſtrong, that the people are ſaid to ſacrifiſe or banket under the fall thereof, the ſtream ſo violently ſhooting over their heads, that it never wetteth them.

Mountains of moſt note, are thoſe which paſs by the name of Taurus, which having left Media on the Weſt, paſſeth thorow the Northern Provinces of the Perſian Empire; dividing Parthia from Hyrcania, and Paropamiſus from Bactria, and Aria from Margiana. Known by the names of Goronus, the Seriphian hills, Paropamiſus, Gaucaſus; whereof more as occaſion ſerveth in their proper places.

It is divided into the particular Provinces of 1. Suſiana, 2. Perſis, 3. Carmania, 4. Ormuz, 5. Gedroſia, 6. Drangiana, 7. Aria, 8. Parthia, 9. Arachoſia, 10. Paropamiſus, 11. Hyrcania, and 12. Margiana. Which we will ſeverally ſurvey in the Chorography and ſtory, till we have joined them altogether in the Perſian Monarchy; and then purſue the hiſtory as conjunct and faſhioned into the body of one Empire.

1. SUSIANA.

SUSIANA is bounded on the Eaſt, with Perſis; on the Weſt, with Babylonia, or Chaldæa; on the North, with Aſſyria; on the South, with a branch of the River Tigris, and ſome part of the Gulf of Perſia.

It was ſo called quaſi Cuſiana, or the Land of the Chuſites, from Chus the eldeſt Son of Ham, and the Grand-ſon of Noah; by whoſe Son Havilah, it was firſt peopled; and therefore called in Scripture the land of Havilah: this being that land of Havilah, which the River Piſon is ſaid to incompaſs, in the Book of Geneſis. The difference betwixt them is, that that land of Havilah lay on both ſides of the River Euphrates (which the Countrey of Suſiana doth not) and was the Eaſtern bound of the Iſmalites, Amalekites, and other Nations intermingled in thoſe parts of Arabia. For whereas Saul is ſaid in the firſt of Sam. chap. 15. ver. 7. to have ſmitten the Amalekites from Sur to Havilah, that is ſay from the Red Sea to the gulf of Perſia: it muſt be underſtood of Havilah in the firſt extent; but neither of Havilah in the Eaſt Indies (ſo called from a Son of Jocktan) or of that part of Havilah which lay on the Eaſt ſide of Euphrates, and is that Suſiana, in which now we are: it being no where found that Saul was ſo great a Traveller as to ſee the Indies; or of ſuch puiſſance as to force a paſſage thorow the Countreys of the Chaldæans and Babylonians. But the name of Havilah being loſt, that of Cuſiana or Suſiana did ſtill remain; preſerved to this day in that of Chuſeſtan, by which now called. Suſiana.

The Countrey memorable in the Scriptures for Gold, Bdellium, and the Onyx-ſtone; which doth abundantly ſet forth the richneſs and commodities of it: Bdellium being a Tree (for of the other two nothing need be ſaid) about the bigneſs of an Olive, yielding a certain Gum very ſweet to ſmell to, but bitter of taſte; which in time hardneth to a Pearl, as Eugubinus and Beroaldus have delivered to us.

Divided antiently into many particular Regions, or at leaſt known by ſeverall names in its ſeverall quarters. For where it bordered upon Tigris, it was called Melitene; Cabandone, where it touched upon Perſis; where it confined on the Elymeans, it had the name of Ciſſia, and neer the wall or Ditch called Vallum Paſini, it was called Characene. Watered beſides Eulæus, and Tigris before ſpoken of, with the Rivers Orontes, and Maſæus; with that branch of the River Tigris which Ptolomy called Baſilæus; Curtius, Paſi-Tigris; and the Scriptures, Piſon.

Chief Cities hereof, 1. Aracca, ſpoken of by Ptolomy, the ſame which the Scriptures call Erech, and one of the four which Nimrod built in the firſt beginning of his Empire, Gen. 11. Remembred by Tibullus for the Fountains of Naphtah (of which the Medians made their oyl ſpoken of before) a bituminous liquor, eaſily taking fire, but not eaſily quenched. Of which thus the Poet:

Audet Areecæis aut unda perhoſpita Campis.

Whereby unda perhoſpita, he meaneth that bituminous liquor called Naphtha, iſſuing from the fields of Erech, as the learned Salmaſius hath obſerved in his notes on Solinus. 2. Suſa, the Shuſan of the Book of Heſter, and Nehemiah; honoured with the reſidence of the Perſian Monarchs in winter, as Ecbatana in Summer. Situate on the River Eulæus, by the Prophet Daniel called Ulai. Built, as ſome ſay, by Memnon the Son of Tithonus, ſlain by the Theſſalans in the Trojan wars: the walls whereof as Caſſiodorus hath reported, comented with Gold. But howſoever, it was doubtleſs a magnificent City, and of infinite wealth: Alexander finding in it 50000 Talants of gold uncoined, beſides Silver wedges, and Jewels of ineſtimable value. Memorable for the great feaſt here made by Ahaſuerus, of 183 dayes continuance, for his Lords and Princes: imitated by the Perſian Sultans to this very day; who with a Royall Feaſt of the like continuance, do annually entertain their Nobles. Now nothing but a ruin, and perhaps not that. 3. Elymais, the chief City of the Elimæi, by Ptolomy (unleſs his Copies be corrupted) miſtakingly called Eldimæi. Situate on the banks of Eulæus alſo, neer the border of Perſis (the Nation of the Elamites or Elymæi taking part of both Provinces.) Of great note antiently for a ſumptuous Temple of Diana, ſacrilegiouſly ranſacked by Antiochus, of which ſee 1 Mac. 6. 2. and of ſuch wealth, by reaſon of the concourſe of Pilgrims thither, that Severus Sulpitius calleth it Oppidum opulantiſſimum, a moſt opulent City. 4. Sela, on the banks of Eulæus alſo; reckoned by Ammianus amongſt the moſt eminent of this Province: ſo named from Selah, the Son of Arphaxad, who firſt planted there. To whom the building of the City of Suſa is aſcribed by Euſtathius in his Hexameron, Σαλαὲφ' ὃν Σουσάνοι, are that Authors words; perhaps more truly than to Memnon: and unto whom the Originall of the Coſſæi; whom Ptolomy placeth in this tract, is referred by Euſebius. 5. Tarſiana, another of the Cities mentioned by Ammianus (who takes notice onely of the chiefeſt,) the ſame no doubt which Ptolomy calls Tariana, and joyns next to Sela. 6. Agra, upon the banks of Tigris, not far from Erech. But there is little left of theſe, but what is to be found in the antient Writers; now hardly viſible in their Ruins. The Towns of moſt note now remaining, being 1. Jaaroone, inhabited for the moſt part by Jewes, of which here are no fewer than a thouſand Families; ſuppoſed to be the deſcendants of thoſe whom Salmanaſſar tranſplanted out of the Kingdom of Iſrael. 8. Saum. 9. Caſa, of which little memorable.

The firſt Inhabitants hereof were the Chuſites of the houſe of Havilah, the Son of Chus; the Coſſæi and the Suſiani, deſcended from Sala the Son of Arphaxad; and the Elymæi, the poſterity of Elam the Son of Sem. Betwixt the two laſt Nations long and frequent wars, till the Kings of Babylon or Aſſyria compoſed the differences, by making both ſubject to their Empire. After this, nothing memorable in the ſtory of it, till the tranſplanting of the ten Tribes into the Regions of Aſſyria, and the Cities of Media. At which time, as many of the Iſraelites were removed hither; ſo many of this Nation were ſent out (with others) to poſſeſs themſelves of the void places of thoſe Tribes. Called Cutheans by the Jews, becauſe the moſt conſiderable number of them came from this Province, called in the Scriptures Cuſh, by Joſephus Cutha; and by him reckoned for a Region of Perſia, as indeed it was, the time wherein he lived conſidered; different onely in the Dialect or form of ſpeech; that Countrey which the Hebrews called Chus, being named Cuth by the Chaldæans; by the Perſians, Chuzeſtan: that name continuing to this day.

2. PERSIS.

PERSIS hath on the Eaſt, Carmania; on the Weſt, Suſiana; on the North, Media; and on the South, ſome part of the Perſian Bay or Sinus Perſicus, which took name from hence. The reaſon of the name we have had before; this being the predominant Province which in fine gave both name and Law to the reſt of this Empire. It had antiently been called Cephene, but now moſt commonly by the name of Fars, or Farſiſtan; more neer to Pharas, the old name of it, both in the Arabick and Hebrew.

Such

Persis. Such parts hereof as lie towards the North are cold and hilly, not apt to bear either fruit or corn, in any plenty. Some Emeralds they find there, but not very cleer. Those parts which lie towards the Persian Gulf, of as bad a nature, though of different quality; sandy, and hot, and beareth little fruit but Dates, and few trees but Palm. But betwixt both there lyeth a rich and pleasant Countrey, abounding with Corn, Fruit, and Cattell; great store of Roses, of Rose-water consequently: wherewith and with those skins which we call commonly by the name of Cordovans from another occasion, they use to furnish all the adjoyning Provinces. And to make up the Character of a happy Countrey, to which nothing wanteth, it is well stored with Lakes and Rivers; the chief whereof are 1. Bagradas, which divideth this Province from Carmania. 2. Rhogomanes, by some called Araxes, now Bindimir, on whose banks stood the renowned Persepolis. 3. Orontes, dividing Persis from Susiana, where it falls into the Bay. 4. Brisoana, ending its course in the same Sea also.

Mountains of note I find not any, but those which part this Region from Susiana. Not known by any speciall name (for ought I can find;) but of sufficient note for the difficult passages out of one Countrey into the other, called Pylæ Persidis; defended by Ariobarzanes, a Noble Persian, against Alexander the Great, who was here very handsomely beaten, and forced to save himself by a close retreat. And though Alexander was shewed a By-path afterwards, whereby he fell on Ariobarzanes ere he was aware: yet he was taught by this hard lesson, that if those who kept the straits of Cilicia, and the banks of Tigris and Euphrates, had made like resistance; he had not bought the Persian Monarchy in so cheap a Market.

It was divided antiently into Paraticine, bordering on Media. 2. Mardiene, joyning on the Gulf or Bay of Persia. 3. Misdia, lying betwixt both. Each of which, with the severall Nations intermingled here as in other places, had their severall Cities. The chief whereof 1. Ausinza, seated on the Bay betwixt the mouths of Bagradas, and Brisoana. 2. Jonacapolis, on the same Bay also, neer the influx of Rhogomanes, or Araxes. 3. Axima, more within the land, now called Lansilla. 4. Marrasium: 5. Obroatis, or Orebatis, as some Copies have it. 6 Pasarracha, in the Greek text of Ptolomy called Pasacgada, and Pasagrada by Qu. Curtius. Memorable for the Sepulchre of Cyrus the first Persian Monarch. Which violated by a Souldier of Alexanders, in hope of finding some rich booty, he met with nothing but this modest inscription, Cyrus ego sum qui Persicum regnum constitui: quicunque ades mortalium, ne mihi tantillum telluris invideas, qua corpus meum obtegitur. The Sacrilegious Souldier though a Macedonian, put to death by Alexander. 7. Persepolis, the chief City of this Province, and of all the East, called therefore Regia Orientis, by Qu. Curtius; situate neer the banks of the River Araxes, and built for the most part of Cypress wood, the walls of the houses being made of Marble, digged out of an adjoyning Mountain. Affirmed by Diodorus Siculus, who at large describes it, to be the richest and goodliest City in all the world. And well we may believe him for the richness of it, Alexander finding here 120000 Talants, in ready money for his own share, after the Souldiers had made what spoil they listed, of coin, Plate, Bullion, Images of Gold and Silver, and Jewels of unspeakable value. But the chief beauty of it was the Royall Palace, built on an Hill, environed with a treble Wall, the first of 16 Cubits height, the second of thirty, and third of sixty; all of them of black polished Marble, with stately Battlements, and in the Circuit of the whole Palace an hundred Turrets; which gave to the beholders far and neer a most goodly Prospect. Nor was the inside of less beauty, than the out-side of Majesty: the Roof thereof shining with Ivory, Silver, Gold, and Amber; and the Kings throne being wholly composed of Gold and the richest Pearls. But rich and stately though it were, and one of the greatest Ornaments of the Eastern world; it was by Alexander in a drunken fit consumed with fire, as the instigation of Lais that infamous strumpet; as in revenge for so many Cities of the Greeks, which the Persians formerly had burnt in the Grecian wars. And though Alexander in his sober sense did repent him of it, and gave order that it should be re-edified; yet did it never rise to its former height: the Conquerour dying shortly after, and that purpose with him. So ruined in the age of Qu. Curtius, (who lived in the time of Claudius Cæsar,) that he professeth vestigium ejus non inveniri nisi Araxes annis ostenderet, that no footsteps of it had been found, if not shewn and pointed out by the River Araxes, on whose banks it stood. But by the fall thereof rose 8. Shyras, now the chief City of this Province, situate in a fair large plain hemmed about with mountains, under one of which it is pleasantly seated; in compass about nine miles, well built and beautified with fair Gardens and magnificent Mosques: two of which larger than the rest, are made more eminent by the addition of two Spires or Steeples covered with a painting of Gold and Azure; the fabricks for the most part of Mosaick work, as light also by night as day, by reason of a thousand Lamps burning nightly in them. A City (as is said by a modern Traveller) which for good wine, pretty women, pleasant fruits, and a gallant People, may hold comparison with the best in Persia. 9. Moyown, on the North-east of Shyras, delightfully situate amongst woods and fruitfull pastures, and blessed not onely with good wine, but wholesome waters; of which last, few parts of Persia have much cause to brag. 10. Bannaraw, on the South-west of Shyras towards Carmania, chiefly remarkable for the ruins of an ancient Castle, situate on the top of a lofty Mountain. 11. Goyaam, a Town of a thousand houses. 12. Berry, of no great bigness, but of most esteem, by reason of a fair Mosque, a School for the Arabick tongue, and the Sepulchre of one of their false Prophets; of which the Persians, besides Mahomet, & Mortis-Ali, do acknowledge many.

The first Inhabitants here were of the posterity of Elam the Son of Sem, and such who under his conduct were setled here; called from hence Elamites in the usuall stile of holy Scriptures, by the Greeks and Latines, Elymæi: who spreading themselves into Susiana, and by degrees also into other Provinces, became so considerable, that the name of Elamite and Elam were of great renown: having a language to themselves distinct from that of the Medes and Parthians, as is apparent Act. 2. and comprehending under that appellation, the adjoyning Regions, as appears plainly in the eighth of the Prophet Daniel, where where Susa is said to be in the Province of Elam. How the name was changed into that of Persia, hath been shewn before. Such as continued in this Province, divided into the Tribes of the Mesabatæ, Rapsii, Hippophagi, Suzæi, Megores, and Stabæi, were at first under the command of their own Princes onely: amongst which Cherdorlaomer is of greatest fame, who having the conduct of some Adventurers of this Nation, associated himself with Amramphel the Leader of some Assyrian Troops: and by the name of the Kings of Elam and Assyria invaded Palestine, subdued the City of Sodom, took Lot prisoner, and in the end were overthrown by the forces of Abraham. Of no note after this expedition, till the time of Perses the Father of Achæmenes, who being Provincial Governor of these Countreys under Sardanapalus, joyned with Arbaces and Belochus in the war against him: and by the victory, got for himself the dominion over those estates, which he had formerly ruled for the Assyrians; with reference to the Kings of Media as the Supreme Lords. Whose Successors, till the time of Cyrus, take in order thus. Carmania.

The Kings of Persis.

1. Perses, from whom perhaps the name of Persis may be more properly derived, than either from Perseus the son of Danae; or the son of that Perseus by Andromeda.
2. Achæmenes, from whom the Persians had the name of Achæmenii, and the succeeding Kings were called Achæmenides.
3. Cambyses, in some places of Herodotus called also Darius.
4. Cyrus, from whose second son named Teispeus, descended that Darius, the son of Hystaspis, one of the seven Persian Princes, who got the Kingdom on the expiration of the present Line, and the extirpation of the Magi; of which more hereafter.
5. Cambyses II. the son of Cyrus.
6. Cyrus II. sirnamed the Great, son of Cambyses, and of Mandane the daughter of Astyages King of Media: who joyning with Cyaxares, or Darius Medus, overthrew the Babylonian Empire; and translated thereby the Supreme power to the Medes and Persians. Of which more hereafter.

CARMANIA.

CARMANIA is bounded on the East, with Gedrosia, and some part of Aria; on the West, with part of Persis, and the Gulf of Persia, from hence called also by the name of Sinus Carmanicus, on the North, with Parthia; and on the South, with the main Indian Ocean. So called from the Carmani, a chief People of it: but the reason of that name I find not. It is now generally called Chyrman; those parts of it which lie next to Parthia, which Ptolomy calleth Carmania Deserta, being now named Mingia, and by some Dulcinde.

The Country for the most part barren, and but ill inhabited. That part which Ptolomy calleth Carmania Deserta, being truly such; a wilderness or very Desart, having in it neither Town nor Village, but some scattered houses, and those but ill provided of food and necessaries; full of unprofitable Sands, destitute of Water; and of a very hot and unhealthy ayr. And though the other part hereof which lieth towards the Ocean, hath a Sea-coast of above 200. Leagues in length, and many Rivers emptying themselves into it, yet are they not the richer by it: the shores being full of Rocks, and the Rivers small; so that they neither have good Port, nor safe coming to it. The best Commodities hereof (besides their Manufactures) are Dates, Myrrhe, Arsenic, some few Mines of Silver, more of Brass and Iron, and good store of Alabaster. In which regard, the Inhabitants hereof were anciently called Ichthyophagi, because they lived wholly upon Fish, the Country yielding little else for the life of man. Carmani sine veste ac fruge, sine pecore ac sedibus, piscium cute se velant, carne vescuntur, præter capita toto corpore hirsuti. The Carmans (saith Pomponius Mela) have neither fruits, nor rayment, nor house, nor cattel; but cloath themselves with the skins, and feed themselves with the flesh of fishes; hairy not only in their heads, but over all their bodies also. Where by the way, Ammianus Marcellinus must be out in his informations, who telleth us of these very Carmans, that their Country though far less than that of Arabia Felix, and far more obscure; was as well repleniſhed with Rivers, and for fertility of soyl not inferior to it. But we must understand the one of the best parts of Carmania; the other of Deserta only.

Amongst the Rivers which he reckoneth of greater name than the rest, he mentioneth 1. Saganis, 2. Sagareus, and 3. Hydriacus. Of which Saganis only is named by Ptolomy, the other Rivers or the same under divers names, being 1. Dara, 2. Andanius, 3. Cathrappis, 4. Achindana, 5. Salarus (the Sagareus as I take it of Ammianus) 6. Caudriaces, 7. Zoramba, and 8. Samidace, most of them falling into the Gulf of Persia, few Navagable, or of any use in the way of Trading.

Mountains of most note 1. that called Semiramis, from some exploit of that great Lady. 2. Strongelus, so named from the roundness of it; and 3. a continued ridge of hills, dividing this Countrey from Gedrosia.

Places of most observation in it, 1. Cantharis, 2. Agris, 3. Tisa, honoured by Ptolomy with the names of Cities. 4. Cyrza, and 5. Gecharta, two Port-Towns. 6. Alexandria, bearing the name of that great Conqueror, who here or hereabouts kept his Bacchanalia, whereof more anon. 7. Portospana, by Ammianus called Ortospana, and by him reckoned amongst the faireſt and richeſt of all the Country. 8. Armuza, (or Armuzium as Pliny calleth it,) on the shore of the Gulf, giving name to a Promontory neer-adjoyning, and to the Noble Isle of Ormus, of which more anon. 9. Gunbroone, Carmania. not long ſince a poor village; but ſince the fall of Ormus (from which not above nine miles diſtant) grown a populous Town, conſiſting at the leaſt of a thouſand houſes. 10. Jaſques, at the opening of the Perſian Gulf into which it looketh, whence the Promontory of it called Carpella, is of late named Capodi Jaſques. 11. Carmania, the Metropolis or mother City of the Province, in former times of good eſteem; and now of paſſing good repute both for cloth of gold, and the making of the beſt Scymitars. A weapon of ſuch value amongſt the Mahometans, and ſo eſteemed of by the Turks, that at the overthrow of their Navy at the battle of Corfu, Anno 1574. moſt of them who were taken Priſoners, threw their Scymitars into the Sea, for fear the Chriſtians ſhould be maſters of ſuch excellent weapons. It is now called Chyrman, by the name of the Province, as in former times; with very little difference from the ancient name. 12. Lar, more within the land towards Perſis, ſeated in a barren and inhoſpitable Countrey, full of huge heaps of ſands, both looſe and dangerous, moved and removed as the wind ſitteth into plains and Mountains: without graſs, water, herbs, or any other neceſſary for the uſe of Travellers; the City being ſerved with rain-water only, entertained with great joy when it falleth, and kept in ciſterns. The City notwithſtanding large, and of good capacity, containing not long ſince to the number of 5000 houſes; of which the greateſt part, in the year 1590. were thrown down by an earthquake: now moſt remarkable for a fair Market-place of about 180 paces ſquare; a goodly Moſque, adorned with Maſaick work, and a ſtrong Caſtle ſeated on the top of an hill, furniſhed with great plenty of Ordinance brought hither from Ormus. This once a Kingdome of it ſelf, or the head City of a Kingdome, acknowledging no ſubjection to the Perſian Sophies: till conquered to that Crown by Emangoli Chawn Duke of Shyras, who ſent hence as much treaſure as was ſaid to load 700 Camels; and put to death the poor King with his whole poſterity, Anno 1604. or thereabouts. 13. Tecoa, or Dea-chow, a Town of the juriſdiction of Lar, not far from that which is a huge wall cut out of the ſolid rock by incredible labour, which ſerved formerly both for the boundary and defence of that ſandy Kingdome againſt the Perſians.

The antient Inhabitans hereof, were the poſterity of Sabta, the Son of Chus, who wanting room on the coaſt of Arabia Felix, where they were firſt planted; paſſed over into Sophta (from them ſo named) an Iſland of the Perſian Gulf; and afterwards into the main land of Carmania, where they built and gave name to the City of Sabis, which we find in Ptolomy. Divided in ſome tract of time into the ſeverall Nations of the Sazotæ, Aræ, Charadræ, Chelonophagi, Cabadinæ, and Paſagardæ.

Neither the People nor the Countrey memorable in the way of ſtory; but by Accident onely: it being here that Alexander being returned out of India, kept his Bacchanalia, in imitation of Bacchus, who firſt conquered that Nation. Night and day he was continually feaſting with his friends, on a ſcaffold drawn with eight horſes; his Companions following in their Chariots: ſome adorned with Purple and Silk, others with Flowers and Green Boughs; themſelves wearing Garlands on their heads, and carrying their Carowſing Cups in their hands. In this Army there was nether Helmet, Sword, Arrow, or Buckler ſeen: all their Armour, was Cups, Barrells, and Flaggons; their Skirmiſhing Eating, Drinking, Laughing, and Singing. Attended they were by Minſtrells, playing on their Fluits; by Women, dancing; Boyes, ſhouting; all playing the drunken Fools moſt naturally. Thus march they through the Countrey of Carmania, in as great diſſoluteneſs, as if BACCHUS himſelf had indeed been there, and led the Mummery; and for ſeaven whole daies this ſottiſhneſs continued. So that Curtius well obſerveth, Si quid vitiis ſaltem adverſus comeſſantes animi fuiſſet, mille hercule viri, modo & ſobrii, ſeptem dierum crapula graves in ſuo triumpho capere potuerunt: a thouſand Perſians, ſober and well provided, had their hearts been anſwerable to ſo good an opportunity, might have deſtroyed this drunken Army, and redeemed at once the honour of their Countrey, and their own liberty.

4. ORMUS.

ORMUS, not ſo much memorable for the greatneſs, as the wealth, and the conveniency of the ſituation of it, is an Iland ſituate in the entrance of the Perſian Gulf: commanding not long ſince, over ſome part of the Contient of Carmania, and ſome few Towns of Arabia Felix, and moſt of the Ilands of the Bay. And therefore before we come to ſpeak of the Iſle it ſelf, we muſt take a brief ſurvey of the Sea or Bay called Sinus Perſicus, according to our method in other places.

SINUS PERSICUS, the Gulf or Bay of Perſia, ſo famous, ſo full of Ilands, and ſo much frequented (I uſe the words of Ammianus Marcellinus) beginneth at Harmozonta, (the name which Ptolomy calls, Armuza) a Cape or Promontory of Carmania: from which unto a Cape or foreland of Arabia Felix, which the Inhabitants call Maces, the paſſage is ſo ſtrait and narrow, that one may very eaſily ſee to the oppoſite ſhore. The Strait once paſſed, the Bay beginneth to open and inlarge it ſelf, as farre as the City of Teredon (now called Balſora) where Euphrates after many downfalls is loſt in the Sea. The whole Gulf meaſured by the ſhores, of Orbicular from, in compaſs 20000 Furlongs, (or 2500 Italian miles) in all the coaſts and ſides whereof the Villages and Towns ſtand exceeding thick, affording frequent paſſage to and fro for ſhipping. So farre, and to this purpoſe he. To which deſcription of his, ſo exact and punctual, our late Navigations have not added much; but the change of names: the whole Bay being now called Mare Elkariffe, and the entrances thereunto the Streits of Balſora; theſe laſt ſo called becauſe they opened the way to the Town of Balſora, the moſt noted Empory of thoſe parts in the times foregoing.

Chief Iſles hereof, beſides thoſe on the Arabian ſhore, of which we have already ſpoken, are, 1. Taxiana, Taxiana, on the coaſt of Suſiana. 2. Tabiana. 3. Sopththa, and 4. Alexandri, or the Iſle of Alexander, on the ſhores of Perſis. Of which that which is called Sopththa, ſeems to take name from Sabta the Son of Chus, planted upon the oppoſite ſhore of Arabia Felix; and therein giving name to the City of Saphta, which we find in Ptolomy: And finally joyning to Carmania, there are the Ilands called 5. Sagdana, the chief Town whereof was antiently named Miltus; and 6. Vorochtha, ſituate at the very mouth of the Straits, now called ORMUS, by the name of the Town and Promontory of Armuza, in Carmania, neer adjoyning to it, and unto which it did in former times belong. Gedroſia.

This Iland ſituate as is ſaid at the mouth of the Gulf or Bay of Perſia, is in compaſs about 20 miles; ſtony, and full of rocks, in a manner barren of all neceſſaries except ſalt, wherewith their very Rocks are covered, and of ſalt-ſtones many houſes built. So deſtitute of all things fitting for the life of man, that the Inhabitants had all their victuals, even the very water which they drank, from ſome of the adjoyning Countries. The air is ſo hot in time of Summer, that the people reſt themſelves in caves, covered over with wood, where they ſtand or ſit in water up to the chinne; and have loop holes in the tops of their houſes to let in the wind. Which notwithſtanding, in regard of the ſituation, it was of late one of the richeſt Empories in all the world. the wealth of Perſia and Eaſt-India being brought hither, and conveyed hence up by water to the River Euphrates, and ſo by boats or on camels backs, to Aleppo, Alexandretta, Tripolis; from whence diſperſed into all the Countries on the Mediterranean, and to ſome beyond.

The people hereof in their perſons, habit, and Religion, participate ſomewhat of the Arabians, but moſt of the Perſians. Mahometans for the moſt part, of the Sophian Sect: the reſt, but few in number, of the Chriſtian faith; to which converted by the preachings of Father Gaſper, a Portugal Jeſuite, ſince the ſetling of that Nation there.

The chief and onely City was of the ſame name with the Iland, founded ſome ſeven hundred years a goe by one Mahomet Dranku, deſcended from the Kings of Saba, in Arabia Felix: who with many families of the Sabæans, paſſed over the Straits into Carmania, and the Iſles adjoyning, and liking the ſituation of this Iland, built this City in it; which he called Ormus, or Armuzium, according to the name of the Twon and Promontory, upon which it lieth. The City ſeated at one end of the Iſle, about 2 miles in compaſs; well built, and adorned with a fair market place, ſome Churches, and a well fortified Caſtle furniſhed with all neceſſaries to maintain a Siege. By reaſon of its wealth and reſort of Merchants, grown to ſuch eſteem, that it gave occaſion to this Diſtick,

Si terrarum Orbis quaqua patet annulus eſſet,
Illius Ormuſium gemma decuſque foret.

That is to ſay,

Were all the World a Ring, this Iſle alone
Might of that Ring be thought to be the Stone.

It was firſt under its own King, whoſe dominion extended alſo into ſome part of the Continent on either ſide, and over all the reſt of the Ilands within the Gulf. His Revenue of no great yearly value till the coming of the Portugals hither, by whom it was diſcovered under the conduct of Albukerque, Anno 1506. Who having fortified ſome part of it for their own defence, and made it the Staple of their trade for the Indian Merchandiſe, ſo enriched the ſame; that the Revenues of thoſe Kings (though Vaſſals and Tributaries to the Portugals) amounted to 140000 Seriffs yearly. In this flouriſhing ſtate it ſtood till the year 1622. when Abas the Sultan of Perſia having received ſome affront at the hands of the Portugueze; or deſirous to remove the trade of Ormuz, to ſome Port of his own; gave order to Emangoly Chawn, the Duke of Shiras, to lay ſiege unto it, with an Army of 15000 men. Who ſeeing no hopes of maſtering it by his land-forces only, furniſhed himſelf with the ſhips and Cannon of ſome Engliſh Merchants, to whom he promiſed many things which he never performed. For being once maſter of the City he deſtroyed it utterly, removing the Ordinance to Lar, the wealth thereof to his own treaſurie of Shiras, the materials of the houſes to Gombroon ſpoken of before: the Portugueze, and Chriſtian natives paſſing over unto Muskabat, in Arabia Felix. Since which time though the Engliſh Captains that adventured in it, were diſappointed of the ſpoyl which they did expect; yet ſo much honour hath been given by the King of Perſia, to the Engliſh Nation; that their Agent who reſideth at Gambroon, takes cuſtome of all ſtrangers which do trafick thither.

5. GEDROSIA.

GEDROSIA is bounded on the Weſt, with Carmania; on the Eaſt, with Cambaia or Guzarat, a Province of India; on the South, with the main Indian Ocean; on the North, with Drangiana, and Aarachoſia. The reaſon of the name I find not. Now by Mercator, called Geſt; by Caſtaldus, Circan.

The Countrey deſolate and barren; like the worſt part of Carmania, much deſtitute of freſh water, and covered over with looſe ſands, dangerous to the native and ſtranger both. Some rain they have, but not ſufficient to allay the heat and drouth which they ſuffer under; and yet by reaſon of that heat it affordeth in ſome places Nard and Myrrhe, with ſome other ſpices. Some Brooks here are, or rather Torrents, which falling from the hills do ſomewhat qualifie the indiſpoſition of the ſoyl, and make it habitable. The chief of which was called Arbius antiently; the chief Mountain, Bætius.

Towns of moſt name in it, 1. Rhagiana, honoured by Ptolomy with the name of a City; and 2. a Port or Harbor called Mulierum portus, or the Haven of women. 3. Arbis, upon the banks of the Drangiana. River Arbius, presented to us also by the name of a City. 4. Musarna, the chief of the Musarnæ, a chief tribe of this Countrey. 5. Parsis, or rather Easis, as the Greek text hath it, the Metropolis of the whole Province in the time of Ptolomy. 6. Gest, the chief City at the present; but for nothing memorable.

The old Inhabitants hereof were the Masarnæ bordering on Arachosia, the Parsiræ towards Carmania, ths Rhamnæ on the banks of Indus, and the Orbitæ, or Arbituri; on the shores of the Ocean. The Countrey of no note in preceding times, till made famous by the follies of Alexander. Who finding by the hard bout which he had with Porus, that there was little hopes of the Conquest of India, would needs make a fruitless voyage to see the Ocean. And having satisfied himself with the sight of that furious Element (as if his very seeing it had sufficiently subdued it to him), landed his Army on this coast. Where in his march, for want of victuals, water, and other necessaries, he lost more men in the vast and uncomfortable Desarts of this Country, than in all the military services he had put them too: the Army which he carried with him into India, amounting to 15000 Horse, and 120000 Foot; whereof hardly the fourth part came back to Babylon. So dearly did he pay for his indiscretion.

DRANGIANA hath on the South, Gedrosia; on the North, and West, bounded with Aria; on the East, with Arachosia. So called from Drangius, now Ilment, the chief River of it; the modern name thereof being Sigestan, from Sige, the now principall City.

The Countrey very hilly, and so closed with Mountains, that the River above named is scarce able to force its passage thorow them. Of no great beauty to invite, or reward a Conqueror, yet with the rest, brought under the great Persian Monarchs; the fortunes of which Crown they have alwaies followed. So meanly planted, that Ptolomy findeth in it but ten Towns of name: the chief whereof, 1. Ariaspe, mistook perhaps for Agriaspe; and if so, then the mother City of the Agriaspæ, whom Curtius placeth in this Tract. 2. Propthasia, by some of the Antients called Phradag, the Metropolis of this poor Province: much boasted of by the old Inhabitants hereof who had seen no better, (as Countrey-villagers use to brag of the next market-Town) and said by Ammianus to be rich, and of high renown, the quality of rhe place considered. Still of some note amongst the Natives, by whom called Sistan. 3. Arivada. 4. Pharazana, of which nothing memorable. 5. Sige, now of most credit in this Countrey, from hence called Sigestan. 6. Timocani. 7. Mulebet, the chief seat of the Kingdome of Aladine, or Aleadine, who had here a Fools-paradise of his own, of which more anon.

The old Inhabitants hereof were the Batrii, and the Darandæ, from which last, the greatest of the two, the Countrey might perhaps be called originally Darandiana; abbreviated to Drandiana, and at last corrupted easily into Drangiana. But I offer this onely as conjecturall. They were called also by some Writers by the name of Arabians, and that as Ammianus thinks, because they descended from that people; but I think rather from a branch of the River Arabius, which parteth this Countrey from Gedrosia. For I conceive the Arabians were too wise, to forsake their own Countrey, and go so far, to get so little by the bargain. Together with the rest of the Persian Provinces, subdued by Alexander; who being in this Countrey, hapned on the discovery of the treason intended against him by Philotas the Son of Parmenio, the most renowned of all his Captains. After this little memorable till these later daies, when it grew famous by means of Aladine a seditious Persian, Lord of the valley of Mulebet, spoken of before; who there made a terestrial Paradise, which he promised to all his Partizans: but the company growing too great for the safety of the Kingdome, they were quickly dispersed; and Aladine, with his Fools-paradise, both, taken away together, Anno 1262. Some attribute this fiction of Paradise to Aladeules, the Mountain King of Taurus, vanquished by Selim the first. The whole story is this, out of Paulus Venetus. Aladine inhabited a valley in this Countrey, the entrance into which he fortified with a strong Castle called Tigado. Hither he brought all the lusty youths and beautifull maidens of the adjoyning Provinces. The women were confined to their chambers, the men to prison; where having endured much sorrow, they were severally cast into dead sleeps, and conveyed to the women: by whom they were entertain'd with all the pleasures, youth and lust could desire, or a sensuall mind affect. Having injoyed this happiness a whole day, they were in a like sleep conveyed to their irons. Then would Aladine inform them how they had been in Paradise, and that he could seat them there eternally, if they durst hazard themselves in his quarrels. This when they had sworn to do, they were destinated to the massacre of such Princes as were like to prove his bad neighbours; and they accordingly did execution. But neither he, nor Aladeules, were the first who trained up their followers in the Arts of murder. One there was before either of them, whom the Writers of those times call the Old man of the Mountains, inhabiting the mountainous parts of Tyre, and Sidon; and from thence sending his Disciples on the like Temptations, to make away the Western Princes whom he stood in fear of, during the course of the Holy wars. For out of his School came those Wretches, who murdered the Count of Tripolis, being in the Church at his Devotions; and desperately slew Conrade Marques of Montferrat, walking openly in the market-place at Tyre; and with like carelessenes of their own lives, dangerously wounded Prince Edward (after King of England) sitting in his Tent. These the Italians call Assassines, (whence the word to Assassinate) intimating thereby a desperate Cut-throat, but the reason of that name is not yet agreed on: mistakingly by some Latine Writers of the darker times, called Arsacidæ, and their commander Rex Arsacidarum; as if descended from Arsaces, the founder of the Arsacidan race of the Kings of Persia.

7. ARACHOSIA.

Arachosia and Paropamisus.

ARACHOSIA hath on the West, Drangiana; on the East, the great River Indus; on the South, Gedrosia; and Parepomisus, on the North. So called from Arachosia the chief City of it; but now best known by the name of Cabul, the name of the chief City at this present.

Of the Countrey I find little spoken, but that it is watered with a branch of the River Indus, or rather with some nameless River which falleth into it. By the overflowings whereof is made a Lake, which Ammianus calleth Arachotoscrene, by Ptolomy called Arachotos; after the name of Arachotos the chief Town of it, neer to which it is.

Towns here were once thirteen, whose names and situation we find in Ptolomy; but little or nothing of them in other Writers. The principall, 1. Arochotos, on the Lake so named, said to be built by Semiramis in her march towards India, and by her to have been named Cephene. 2. Alexandria, or (for distinctions sake) Alexandria Arachosiæ, the work of Alexander the Great, in his like march against the Indians: built at the foot of one of the branches of Mount Taurus shooting towards the South, and peopled with a Colony of 7000 old Macedonian Souldiers, forespent with age, and with the travel of the wars, whom he left there to inhabit it: his Army being here recruited with the forces which had served under Parmenio, consisting of 12000 Grecians, and Macedonians. It is now called Cabul, accounted the chief City of it, and in that capacity gives the name of Cabul unto all the Province. 3. Arbaca, seeming by the name, to be the work of one Arbaces, but whether of Arbaces the great King of the Medes, I am not able to say. 4. Choaspa, neer some River of that name, as I conjecture; there being besides Choaspes the chief River of Media, another of that name also in India; and probably another hereabouts to give name to this Town. 5. Phoclis, 6. Sigara, 7. Dammana, of which I find nothing but the names. 8. Sin, now a Town of name amongst them, but not much observable.

The old Inhabitants hereof were the Pargyetæ, called also Arimaspæ, and Euergetæ, a powerfull Nation of themselves, brought under the command of Alexander by means of Amenides, sometimes the Secretary of Darius, whom he made their Governour. And besides them the Syeri, Rophitæ, and the Eoritæ; which three made up the main body of the Arachosians, committed by Alexander to the Government and Command of Menon. Following after this the fortunes of the Persian Empire, they changed their Masters as that did, till the comming in of the Tartars. Since that time governed for the most part, by a King of ther own, especially since the dividing of the Kingdome of Persia amongst Tamerlanes children: some of which held it as a distinct estate, by the names of the Kings of Cabul; till growing great by the Conquest of some parts of India, they took unto themselves the name of the Great Mongul; Now Lords not onely of this Countrey, but of the greatest part of India on this side of Ganges; of whom we shall speak more when we are in India, that being the chief Seat of their Power and Empire.

8. PARAPOMISUS.

PAROPAMISUS is bounded on the South, with Arachosia; on the North, with Bactria, from which parted by the main body of Mount Taurus, which is here called Paropamisus, by the name of the Countrey: on the East, with some part of India; on the West, with Aria. So called quasi Paropanesus, from the resemblance which it hath to an Island, begirt on all sides almost with Rivers: in which respect by Ptolomy called Paropanisus, and not Paropamisus; by which last name the Latines for the most part call it; some of them Paropamissus, with a double ss. But that name being lost long since, it is now by some called Dache, by others Candahor, but most commonly Sablestan.

The Countrey mountainous and hilly, here and there intermixt with Valleys: the Mountains of great height, & exceeding barren; the Valleys indifferent fruitfull, but soover-shadowed with those hills, that the cleerest day in some places seems but like a twilight. The people as obscure as their Countrey, scarce known to any of their neighbours in the time of Alexander; the barbarous Nations neerest to them esteeming them unworthy of their acquaintance. Agreste hominum genus, & inter Barbaros maxime inconditum, as it is in Curtius Rivers of most note herein, 1. Oxus, (of which before) which rising out of Monnt Caucasus, passeth Northwards, and afterwards divideth Bactria from Sogdiana. 2. Dargamanis, 3. Coacus, both owing their original to some of the branches of Mount Taurus. Which chain of hils, beginning here about to draw towards their end, are towards the west called Paroetes, where they give being to the river Dargamanis, before named; more Eastward they have the name of Paropamisus; and Caucasus they are properly called where they are thwarted by Imaus, in the very point, as it were, where Scythia, India, and the Persian territories do encounter each other. The hills in that place mounted to so great an height, that from the tops thereof the Stars appear much greater than in other places; the rising & setting of which are from hence easily discerned: made memorable by the fable of Prometheus, who is said to have been bound here by command of Jupiter; on which, victum Promethea fuisse antiquitas tradit, saith the Historian. Prometheus is indeed by the Poets feigned to have stoln fire from heaven, and to have made a man of clay: for which presumptuous fact, Jupiter bound him on the hill Caucasus; where a vulture continually fed on his Liver. But according either to the truth of Story, or their guess at least, who make some Story the ground of every Fable; Promethus being a very wise man, instructed the dead and clayie carcasses of others with wisdome; and that being very desirous to learn the nature of the Stars, (hich is the fire hee ſtole from heaven) he made the higheſt part of Mount Caucaſus his ſtudy: where the inward care he had to accompliſh his deſire, might juſtly have been compared to a Vulture gnawing on his entrails; and of this opinion is Saint Auguſtine. But far more memorable is it made for being the reſting place of the Ark of Noah, whereof we have already ſpoken in our Generall Preface.

Places of moſt conſideration in it, 1. Naulibis, and 2. Ortoſpana, both named by Ptolomy, and rekoned by Ammianus for the moſt famous of this Countrey. But in what their fame conſiſted I cannot find. 3. Parſiana, 4. Gazaca, 5. Daroacana, 6. Bagarda; all named by Ptolomy; but not elſe obſervable. 7. Candahor, now the Metropolis of the Countrey, a Town of great Trade, by reaſon of the ſituation of it on the borders of India; in that reſpect giving to the whole Countrey the name of Candahor. By which name reckoned for a Kingdome, and uſed amongſt the many Titles in the Stile Imperiall. Nothing conſiderable of it in the courſe of Story, but that being once brought under by the Perſian Monarchs, it followed the fortune of the reſt till theſe latter times; when the Perſians being overlaid by the Tartars, it became ſubject to ſome Kings of the race of Tamarlane, reigning in this Province, till brought under by the Kings of Cabul, of the ſame extraction. Finding thoſe Kings intent on the conqueſt of India, they freed themſelves from all ſubjection to that Crown, and had Kings of their own, till the year 1600. or therabouts; when the laſt King, unable to defend himſelf againſt Abduxa, King of the Uſbeques (a Tartarian people, but ſubject in ſome ſort to the Crown of Perſia) ſurrendred his Kingdome to Echebar the Great Mongul (deſcended from the old Kings of Cabul) whoſe dominions border cloſe upon it. Recovered to the Perſian Crown by Mirza the Son of Abas, and Father of Soffie the now Sultan; a Prince of much gallantry, but of more misfortunes: the Perſian Sophies, ſince that conqueſt, uſing the Title of Kings of Candahor, in the Regal ſtile.

9. ARIA.

ARIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with Paropamiſus; on the Weſt, with Parthia; on the North, with Margiana; and on the South, with Drangiana, from which laſt parted by the mountain Bagoas. A name in old times given to the Province of Media, eſpecially by the Grecians; till changed (as they ſay) into Media, on the comming thither of Medea. For ſo Pauſanias, amongſt others, Παραγενομένη δὲ εἰς τὴν λεγομένην τότε Ἀρείαν, τοῖς ἀνθρώποις ἔθηκε τὸ ὄνομα καλεῖσθαι Μήδους ἀπ' αὐτῆς, i. e. comming into the Countrey then called Aria, ſhe cauſed it after her own name to be called Media. But the name of Aria was not loſt, though it were removed; remaining proper to this Countrey till theſe latter ages; now changed with little alteration, into that of Eri.

The Conntrey much ſubject unto heats, environed with deſarts, Heaths, and Forreſts; yet neer the mountans which defend them from the heat of the Sun, they have ſome fruitfull Champagnes; bearing very good fruits, and amongſt others, a ſtrong wine, and of long continuance; keeping both taſt and colour above 80 years. They have alſo here a Drug ſomewhat like to Myrrhe, and a kind of Saphyr, but not right.

Rivers of note I meet with none but that which Ptolomy calleth Arias, by the name of the Province, making a Lake of the ſame name. The Fountain of which River he maketh to be in Paropamiſus, and the fall thereof in the ſaid Lake: the waters of it firſt increaſed by a nameleſs Stream, falling from the Mountains called Seriphi; being that part of Taurus, which divideth this Countrey from Margiana.

Anciently it was populous and well-inhabited, containing above 30 Towns of name and note. Thoſe of moſt conſequence, 1. Aria, on the banks of the River Arias, the ſeat of the Arii, whom Pliny ſpeaketh of in this Tract: but whether they received this name from the Province, or beſtowed their own name upon it, I determine not: 2. Bataxa, 3. Sotera, 4. Orbitana, 5. Sarmagana, 6. Artacandæ, by Strabo called Artacana, 7. Niſibis, mentioned both by Ptolomy and Ammianus, 8. Alexandria, bearing the name of the Great Conqueror, by whom planted and made a Colony of his Macedonians, for the better awing of the Countrey, which by ſome former rebellions had been troubleſome to him. But theſe, and moſt of thoſe remembred by Ptolomy, being grown out of knowledge, there remain now of ſpeciall note, 9. Heri, or Eri, ſeated not far from the place of the antient Aria, but much ſuperiour to it in ſtrength and greatneſs. Said by Maginus to be in compaſs thirteen miles, and ſo plentifully ſtored with Roſes, that the inhabitants of the Countrey call it the City of Roſes. Naturally of a ſtrong ſituation, compaſſed about with a very good Wall, and watered with deep Channels, conveyed unto it by Tamerlane, that moſt puiſſant Tartar, by whom either founded or repaired. 10. Saſuar, a place of good importance, and the ſecond in eſteem next to Heri it ſelf.

The old Inhabitants were the Maſdarami, Niſæi, Aſtareni, the Caſſirotæ, Obares, Drachmæ, Borgi, Paranti, &c. united altogether in the name of Arians, by that name ſubject to the Perſians, and ſubdued by Alexander. Againſt whom when they had rebelled, and were worſted by him, they were compelled to betake themſelves to the ſtrength of a Cave, ſeated upon the top of an inacceſſible Rock, and with ſmall force eaſily defended. But to Alexander nothing was impoſſible. For piling up a great maſs of Timber, equall unto the mouth of the Cave, when the wind ſerved opportunely, he put fire unto it; and by that means ſo filled the Cave with fire and ſmoak, that ſome of them were ſtifled, ſome half-burnt, and the reſt forced to yield to the Victors mercy. Nor was this the onely action of note during that Rebellion, though it was the greateſt. The common Souldier alſo had his honour in it. Sarlibarzanes, a Perſian, whom Alexander had truſted with the command of this Province, had drawn them unto this Revolt; and became their head. Who to expreſs his courage in the ſight of the Arians, challenged the proudeſt He of the Macedonians, to a ſingle combat. The challenge cheerfully accepted by one Eriguis, one of the moſt aged in the Army:

Army: and saying aloud, ostendam quales milites Alexander habet, he valiantly charged upon the Rebell; and at the second venew slew him. The Arians after this triall of their disabilities, remained in quiet, taking the same fortunes as the rest of the Persians did, in their change of Masters. Of late, by Mahomet Codubanda, it was aliened for a time from the Crown of Persia, and given to Sultan Abas, his second Son; who took unto himself in his Fathers life-time the title of the King of Heri. But comming to the Crown by the murder of his elder Brother, and the death of his Father, he united Heri once again to the Regal Diademe; but kept as a distinct title in the Royall stile. Parthia.

10. PARTHIA.

PARTHIA is bounded on the East, with Aria; on the West, with Media; on the North, with Hyrcania; and on the South, with that part of Carmania, which by Ptolomy and others of the Antients, was called Deserta. The reason of the name we shall see anon. But that name being laid aside, it is now called Arach.

The Countrey walled as it were round with Mountains, and in most parts overgrown with woods: by which defended from those heats to which otherwise it would be subject, it produceth many things of necessary use for the life of the people; but nothing for riot and excess. In other places where the shade of the wood is wanting, the whole Countrey is in a manner but a sandy Desart, dongerous to Travellers, and impassable even with the help of Guides; the sands continually driven from one place to another, taking away all tracts of a beaten way. For which cause there be certain Castles at each three miles end, built at the Kings charge, as well for the direction as the reception of Passengers; and Cawseys of many miles in length, in some other places, for their better travelling to the sands on each side of them so loose and light, that if a man should fall aside, he were lost remediless.

The people antiently were very couragious and stout, as commonly they are in all barren Countries, and were withall of a Scythian extract and originall. Exceeding spare of diet, and good reason for it, the Countrey not affording any superfluities; but otherwise much given to pleasures, allowing themselves plurality of wives and Concubines. Good horsemen, and to that so used, that they consulted of all business both private and publique, when they were on horse-back. Such lovers of the wars, that they accompted no man happy after his decease, but who died in battel; esteeming of all others but as fools or Cowards. Their Souldiers for the most part Slaves, whom they trained up unto their weapons; and to manage horses: insomuch as of 50000, horse which the Parthian King had in the field against Marcus Antonius, there were not above 800 Free-men. But their greatest fame consisted in the handling of their Bow and Arrows, esteemed the best Archers in the world, and not undeservedly; having the Art of shooting backwards, and making their Retreat or flight more terrible, than their charge or onset. Whence that of Seneca.

Terga conversi metuenda Parthi.
The Parthians flight
Doth most affright.

Which, with the manner of their fight, more copiously described by Lucan thus.

Pugna levis, bellumque fugax, turmæque fugaces,
Et melior cessisse loco quam pellere moles.
Illita terra dolis, nec Martem cominus unquam.
Ausa pati virtus, sed longè tendere nervos.

Which I find thus Englished to my hand.

Light skirmish, fleeing war, and scattered bands,
And better Souldiers when they run away,
Than to cut off an enemy that stands.
Their crafty Gall-thraps on the ground they lay,
Nor dares their courage come to down-right blows,
But fight best furthest off, most trusting to their bows.

From hence it was that M. Crassus, in his expedition against them, being told by an Astrologer, that his enterprise would prove unprosperous, by reason of some ill aspect which he had found in Scorpio; Tush (said he) I fear not Scorpio, but Sagittarius. And to these warlike exercises of horse and Archery, the temper of the Air and Soyl, gave no smal advantages; the dry Air seasoning their Bow-strings, and their large fields affording them sufficient room to train their horses. Cœlum enim quod siccum est, nervos intentos facit; Regio tota plana est, & ob eam rem equis accomodata, as it is in Dion. But this is to be understood not of Parthia onely, but the whole Countrey of Persia; subject at that time to the power of the Parthian Kings. Next to these Parthians, the English have been looked on formerly, as the ablest Bow-men; having gotten by their bow and arrows as many notable victories over the French, as the Parthians ever did obtain upon the Romans. But at this time Archery both here, and elsewhere, is quite laid aside, the Gun silencing all offensive weapons; how justly I determine not. The point hath been long since debated betwixt Sir John Smith, and Sir Roger Williams; many great wits appearing upon either side; and the sum of their severall Arguments drawn up together by Sir Clement Edmunds, in his judicious observations upon Cæsars Commentaries, to which the Reader may repair for his satisfaction. All I shall Parthia. shall say is only this, that victories as great as any in those elder daies, have been obtained with far less bloodshed, since the Gun came up, than in any of the times before it.

The Religion of this People hath suffered under the same changes with the rest of Persia, but they have a language of their own, mixt of Mede and Scythian. For which besides the testimony of humane Authors, we have the Authority of Scriptures; where the Parthians, Elamites, and Medes, are named as Nations of a severall language, or a different Dialect at the least, Acts, 2.

Rivers of note I find not any, nor any Mountains proper and peculiar to them: Coronus, part of the great Mountain Taurus, lying in common betwixt them and Hyrcania; as Masdoramus doth betwixt them and Aria, and the hills called Parchoatras, betwixt them and the Desarts of Carmania. So that for want of such known Landmarks, the finding out of their antient Cities would be very difficult, if any learned Antiquary should undertake it.

The Countrey antiently more populous, the towns and villages thicker set, than they be at the present many Cities, and 2000 villages having been overthrown with Earth-quakes. In Ptolomy we find the names of 25. of the Cities, distributed into the 4 Provinces or Tetrarchies of Camisene towards Hyrcania; Parthiene, bordering on Media; Paracanticene, confining on Aria; Tabiene, neighbouring Carmania. The principall of which, and of those that are now in being, 1. Genonia. 2. Charax. 3. Artacana. 4. Apamia, which by the name seems to have been of the foundation of Seleucus. 5. Dardamana. 6. Syndaga. 7. Pasacarta. 8. Hecatompyle, the Royall City, so called from the number of an hundred Gates in the walls thereof, by which we may conjecture at the antient greatness: the Parthians, which had seen no greater, calling it by the glorious name of Half the world. 9. Hispaan, commonly called Spahan, or Spawhawn, raised out of the ruins of Hecatompyle; and as that was, the Regal City for these parts. In compass about nine miles, of figure round, and seated in the middest of a large and capacious Plain, beautified with many pleasant Gardens, goodly Baths, and handsome Mosques. But the greatest glory of it lieth in the market-place or Midan, quadrangular in form, but the sides unequal; cloistred about, and well stored with merchandise of all sorts, but drugs especially: the Court or Quadrangle, serving for horse-races, and other warlike exercises which are done on horse-back. On the west-side a magnificent Mosque, built of white Marble five yards high, and the rest above that of brick; curiously interwoven with Arabick Poesies. In the middest a fair Conduit, wherewith they purifie themselves, when they go to their prayers. On another side the Royall Palace, wrought in the Front with Antique works; the Floors on the inside covered with rich Persian Carpets, and the Roofs chargeably embossed with Gold and Azure. 10. Jelphea, on the other side of the River on which Spawhawn is seated, as the Burgh of Southwark is to London; wholly inhabited (at this time) by Armenian Christians, from hence called Jelpheliues; who live here in great freedome, both for person, and conscience, but that their Poll-money is taxed at an higher rate. 11. Croom, a right pleasant and healthy City, well built, of large streets, and seated on the banks of a small but delightfull River, issuing out of the Coronian Mountains, neer to which it standeth. Consisting at the present of 2000 Families, but antiently, as may be gathered from some ruins, of far greater compass. Much honoured by the Persians for the Sepulchre of Fatima, the daughter of Mahomet from whom the Sophian Sect and Princes do derive their Pedegree. 12. Casham, a rich and pleasant City, about 60 miles from Spawhawn, well-built, and peopled by a number of Artizans; who for the making of Silks, Sattens, and cloth of Gold, are in great esteem. Beautified amongst other things with a stately and magnificent Caravans-Raw, built by Sultan Abas, for the reception of Strangers, whether Merchants or other Travellers, but fit to entertain any Prince of Asia. The City of no great age, the work either of Ussan-Cassanes, the Armenian, who got the Crown of Persia, in the year 1470. or at the highest of Cassim, the Son of Axan, and Grand-son of Tangrolipix, the first Turk here reigning; from one of which it had this name. 13. Tawgebawt, where the Persian Kings have a house of pleasure, of no great receipt; but for the cost and ornaments of it, and the delectableness of the Gardens adjoyning to it; not yielding to any in this large Empire: and for Grots, Ecchoes, Labyrinths, and the other excellencies of Art, perhaps not fellowed in the world; especially considering that it standeth in the midle of a sandy Desart.

The Parthians were originally a Scythian Nation, banished their own Countrey, and glad to plant themselves in this barren Region; calling themselves by the name of Parthians, which in their language signifieth as much as Exiles. A People so obscure and poor, either not knowing or not caring for the use of money, that none of Alexanders great Captains would vouchsafe to be their Governour; but let it lie as an Appendix of Media, to the Kings whereof it had originally been subject; till one Philip, a man of small regard, took the place upon him. Falling at last, with the rest of Alexanders Asian purchases, into the hands of Seleucus, it was governed by the Lieutenants of the Syrian Kings, till the time of Seleucus Gallinicus, the fourth of that house. During whose reign, Arsaces a noble Parthian, provoked by some indignities, slew the Governour, and took the estate upon himself; perswading all the rest of the Provinces to do the like: and thrived so well in his design, that he not onely gained the Kingdome of Parthia, but united to it all the Provinces lying on the East of Euphrates. Of whom and his Successors more, in the story of Persia. After this nothing singular which concerns this Province, but that as this Arsaces did recover the Persian liberty from the power of the Greeks; so Gempsas, one of the Sultans of this Province also, redeemed (though but for a little time) this Parthia and the parts adjoyning, from the yoak of the Tartas; as shall be shewn in prosecution of te Persian History.

II. HYRCANIA.

HYRCANIA is bounded on the South, with Parthia; on the North, with the Hyrcanian, or Caſpian Sea; on the Eaſt, with Margiana; and on the Weſt, with Atropatia, or Atropattene (as Ammianus calleth it) the North part of Media. Divided from Parthia by the interpoſition of Coronus, part of the main body of mount Taurus. The way thorow which, ſaid by the Perſians to be cut out at one blow, by the Scymitar of Mortis Haly, their ſecond Mahomet, is not above fourty yards in breadth; in the broadeſt parts of it; the hills on both ſides towring to the very clouds: With ſmall ſtrength eaſily defended againſt mighty Armies, and poſſibly may be the ſame which the Antients called Portæ Caſpiæ, before deſcribed.

It took the name of Hyrcania, from Hyrcana a large and ſpacious forreſt betwixt it and Scythia; ſometimes called Caſpia alſo, from the Caſpii, a chief People of it: of whom it is reported, that when their Parents came to the age of 70 years, they uſed to ſhut them up, and ſtarve them; as being then no longer uſefull to the Common-wealth. But both thoſe names growing out of uſe, it is by Mercator called Diargument; by ſome late Travellers Mezendram; by ſome others, Corcam.

Thoſe parts hereof which lie towards the South, are ſaid to yield abundance of wheat, wines, figges, and fruit: thoſe towards the Caſpian Sea, as plentifull of Graſs and paſture. But betwixt both, nothing in a manner but continuall forreſts, and thoſe ſo intricate and thick, that it is a matter of no ſmall difficulty to find paſſage thorow them. Full, as moſt other Forreſts are in thoſe Eaſtern parts, of Panthers, Leopards, Lions; Tigers: theſe laſt of ſuch an horrible fierceneſs, that it grew into a common Proverb uſed of cruel men, that they had ſucked an Hyrcanian Tiger; Hyrcanæque admorunt ubera Tigres, as it is in Virgil.

Principall Rivers of this Countrey, 1. Zioberis, ſpoken of before. 2. Maxera, or Mazeras, mentioned by Pliny, Ptolomy, and Ammianus; and 3. Secanda; all falling into the Caſpian or Hyrcanian Sea. A Sea which had the names of Caſpian, and Hyrcanian, from the Caſpii and Hyrcani, bordering next unto it; now from the Town of Bochu, in Atropatia, called Mare di Bochu. Faſhioned in an Ovall form, the length thereof from North to South 700 miles, and 600 miles from Eaſt to Weſt. Stormy, and troubleſome, by reaſon of thoſe many great Rivers which fall into it, from all the Provinces adjoyning: which notwithſtanding it hath no viſible commerce with the Ocean; nor doth it at any time overflow its banks; finding ſome paſſage under ground, to diſcharge it ſelf of thoſe vaſt ſtreams of water which are powred into it. Well traded by the Moſcovite Merchants, who having the command of the River Volge (which with 70 mouths doth open into this Sea) ſail over it, and land at Farabant, or ſome other of the Port-Towns, where they trade for ſilks. Some Iſlands here are in it, but not many, or of any great fame, but onely that they ſerved the Nations which lay neer it for a place of retreat, in time of the Tartarian tempeſt under Tamerlane; as the Iſles of Venice did to the Italians, at the comming of Attila.

Places of moſt conſideration, 1. Hyrcania, once the Metropolis of the Province, and ſo called by Ptolomy; ſtill extant, but of leſs eſteem, and ſtill called Hyrcan. 2. Tambrace, in old times of the greateſt ſtrength, and moſt defenſible; but taken by Antiochus Magnus in the war againſt Arſaces the Parthian, for the recovery of thoſe Countries then revolted from him. 3. Adrapſa, 4. Maſaca, 5. Anaroſa; of which we find the names, amongſt others, in the antient Writers. 6. Aſharaffe, two miles from the Sea, in a ſpacious Plain, containing about 2000 houſes, and now of moſt reputation of all this Province, by the long Reſidence therein of Abas, the late Perſian Sultan; who built there a magnificent Palace, and another two miles off at a place called Abaſſebant. The furniture whereof, beſides coſtly Carpets, in Plate and Jewels, at ſuch time as Sir Dodmore Cotton was there Ambaſſadour, is ſaid to have been valued by a knowing Merchant, at 20 millions of Pounds. But I fear the Merchant had more skill in ſilks than Jewels: ſuch a vaſt ſumme to be expended on the furniture of one Palace onely, being beyond the poſſibility of the Revenue of the Perſian Sophies; hardly amounting towards all charges to five millions of Crowns. 7. Farabant, on a navigable Arm of the Caſpian Sea; for beauty, wealth, and greatneſs, of moſt note in this Countrey. Well traded from all parts of this Inland Sea, eſpecially by the Ruſſian Merchant, as before is ſaid: whoſe ſhips come hither in March, and return in July; it being from hence to Aſtrachan but ten daies ſail. Beautified with goodly Gardens, a Royal manſion of the Kings, and a ſpacious Market-place. 8. Chiacoporo, neer the Sea alſo, but on the banks of a River; the water whereof is ſaid for eleven moneths to be freſh and ſweet, and for the twelf moneth very ſalt. 9. Barfruſhdee, twelve miles from the Sea, well furniſhed with wood and water. 10, Omoall, a Town of about 3000 houſes, ſeated on the North ſide of the Taurus, in a pleaſant and fruitfull ſoyl; reſorted to by the people of ſo many Nations, that ſeven languages are there commonly ſpoken. Once larger, as appeareth by ſome ruins, than it is at the preſent; by ſome conceived to be the Nubarca of the Antients, honoured in thoſe times with an Oracle. 11. Strava, a Town of great trafick, for raw ſilks eſpecially. 12. Meſandre, whence the whole Province (or rather the parts adjoyning to it) hath the name of Mezendrum.

The old Inhabitans hereof, beſides the Caſpii, were the Maxeræ, Aſtabeni, Chrindi, and the Arſitenſes; united in the name of Hyrcæns, in the time of the Perſians; and by that name well known at the comming of Alexander. Againſt whom they ſo defended themſelves, by tying the boughs and twigs of their Trees together, that it was impoſſible for him to come at them; till with incredible pains and labour he had cauſed their woods to be cut down: at ſight whereof the People, who ſuppoſed the King had too much other buſineſs, and of more importance, than to put himſelf unto that trouble, did ſubmit unto him. Falling to the ſhare of Seleucus, they were the firſt people that were gained by Arſaces, and joined with him in recovering their former liberty; though they got nothing by the bargain but the change of their Maſter.

Margiana and Bactria.

Master. In all times since, they have been looked upon as Members of the Persian Empire, till the conquest of it by the Tartars; in the distractions of whose great Empire after Tamerlanes death, it fell to some Princes of his house, who governed here under the vassallage and protection of the Tartars of Zagathay. Recovered not long since to their old obedience, by Sultan Abas: who for the better setling the affairs hereof, removed the Seat Royall from Spawhawn, to which before he had transferred it from the City of Casbin; to Asharaffe, then a small town, now the chief of this Countrey.

12. MARGIANA.

MARGIANA is bounded on the West, with Hyrcania; on the East, with Bactria; on the North, with part of Tartary, from which severed by the River Oxus; on the South, with Aria, divided from it by the Mountains. So called from the River Margus, which runnes thorow the Countrey: but is now named Tremigen.

The Countrey environed with Mountains, and in most places of it full of sandy Desarts. But where it is watered with the Rivers, Arias, and Margus, it is very fruitfull, streching it self into a large and spacious plain, containing in the circuit neer 200 miles. The Plain once compassed with a wall by Antiochus Soter, King of Syria: more memorable for the huge stocks of Vines which are said to be in it, as big in bulk as two men can fathom, and sometimes bearing branches of grapes two Cubits long. The more to be admired, in regard there is no other place neer unto it, where the vine will grow. And if the Ark rested on the top of Mount Caucasus, as it is most probable it did; why may not this be some of the remainder of that first Vineyard which was planted by Noah, when he descended from these Mountains, as is affirmed by the constant tradition of the people which inhabit here?

The people mixt of Scythian and Persian breed, partaking of the fierceness of the one, and the behaviour of the other. Conform unto the Persians, in Religion, language, and apparell; distinguished from them in the colour of their Turbants onely, which are commonly Green: and therefore by the Persians called Jesetbas, or Green-caps; the Turbants of the Persian being alwayes Red.

Chief Rivers of this Countrey are, 1. Margus, the peculiar River of it, which rising out of the foot of the Mountains, and passing thorow the middest of the Province, receiveth into its channell the River, 2. Arias, hastning out of Aria; and so together lose themselves in 3. Oxus, dividing the Margians from the Tartars. Out of the joint streams of which several Rivers, is made a large Lake now called Sabacamber, but antiently Palus Oxiana, from the principall River.

Places of most observation in it. 1. Alexandria, or Alexandria Margianæ for distinction sake; one of the six towns built by Alexander for defence of this Countrey: called afterwards Seleucia from Seleucus; next Antiochia from Antiochus Soter King of Syria, by whom fortified with a very strong wall. It is now called Indion, and esteemed for the chief of the Countrey. 2. Jasonium, seated on the confluence of Margus with a nameless Rivers issuing from the Seriphian Mountains. 3. Nigæa, as the printed books of Ptolomy call it; but mistook for Nissa, or Nysæa. 4. Argadina. 5. Rhea; of which nothing memorable. 6. Maran, neer to which Ismael the first of the Sophian race, discomfited the forces of Saba the Cham of Zagathay.

The old Inhabitants hereof were the Massagetes, and the Parni, taking up the midlands; the Derbiccæ, bordering upon Oxus; and the Tapyri, dwelling towards the East. United by the name of Margians, they were subdued by the Kings of Persia, from whom won by Alexander to his Empire: who to assure himself hereof built six Cities in it, two towards the South, and four towards the East; all situate on the tops of hills, and built at such convenient neerness that they might afford succour to each other, as occasion served. After this nothing singular in the story of them; involved in the same fortunes with the rest of Persia, till Persia was conquered by the Tartars. Since which time, though the rest of the Persian Provinces were freed from the Tartarian yoak by Gempsas, the Soldan of Parthia, and King of Persia for a time; yet part of this Province, and of Bactriana, are still subject to them.

BACTRIA or BACTRIANA, is bounded on the West, with Margiana; on the East and North, with the River Oxus, dividing it from Sogdiana; on the South, with Paropamisus, from which parted by the hills so named, and the Mountain Caucasus. It took this name from Bactra, the chief City of it; and is now called Chorassin, but by some named Batter.

The Countrey towards the River Oxus, is for the most part well manured, and affordeth plenty of Wheat, and all sorts of fruits excepting Olives; rich metals, and some precious stones, as Emeralds, Chrisolites, and Jacinthes. Plenty of pastures there be also, well stored with Cattell, and those of bigger bulk than in other places. But the greatest part hereof to the South and West, is nothing but a sandy Desart; and by reason that the sands are driven up and down by contrary winds, no tract or beaten way is to be discerned: insomuch as Travellers rest all day, and take their journey in the night, that they may guide themselves by the course of the Stars, as upon the Sea; not without great danger of being lost or buried, whilst alive, in that sandy Ocean.

The people heretofore a puissant and warlike nation, not without great difficulty conquered by the Assyrians, nor with less by the Persians; alwaies in armes, cruel, and resembling the Scythians, whose neer neighbours they were. and (which may very well pass for their greatest vertue) multum a Persarum luxu abhorrentes, abhorring naturally from the Persian luxuries. But withall unnaturall to their Parents, whom when old they cast unto their dogs, kept for that purpose, and called Canes Sepulchrales, or buriall dogs. The women gorgeous in apparell, and proud of gesture, but prodigall of their bodies to their meanest meaneſt ſlaves. The men to this day do retain their antient ſtoutneſs; but hard beſet betwixt the Perſians and the Tartars, who ſeverally pretend a dominion over them. Bactria.

No Province of the Perſian Empire hath ſo many Rivers. The principall of which are 1. Artamis, and 2. Zariaſpes, mingling ſtreams together; as do alſo 3. Ochus, and 4. Orgomanes: all four contributing their waters to the River Oxus. Of Oxus, being rather a boundary betwixt the Perſian and the Tartar, than rightly proper unto either; we have ſpoke already.

Towns of moſt obſervation in it, 1. Bactria, the Metropolis or chief City of it, ſituate at the foot of the Mountains Sogdii; giving the name of Bactria unto all the Province. It is now called Bochor, and ſtill keeps the dignity of the Metropolitan: the ſeat of the Chief-Prieſt or Biſhop of the Mahometans of Zagathay (to which this City, and great part of the Countrey alſo, doth now belong) having here his reſidence; in power and reputation equall to the King himſelf. Well fortified, and ſtored with all military proviſions: the birth-place (as Maginus ſaith) in theſe latter Ages of Avicenna, that learned Philoſopher and Phyſician; and in the firſt Ages, of Zoroaſter the more learned Aſtrologer. 2. Ebuſmi, once the Regal ſeat, and therefore honoured by Ptolomy with the name of Regia. 3. Zariſpe, or Chariſpe, the chief City of the Chariſpæ, a great Tribe of this Countrey. 4. Charracharta, mentioned by Ptolomy and Ammianus: theſe two, upon the River Oxus. 5. Eucratidia, built or repaired by the Macedonians; as the name, being meerly Greek, doth ſeem to intimate. 6. Alicodra, as antient as the reſt, but of no great note in the courſe of buſineſs. 7. Iſtigias, of a later date, but of greater beauty than any of thoſe before ſpoken of: ſuperiour to Bochor in elegancy, ſtate and greatneſs, though not in dignity; and held by ſome to be the pleaſanteſt of the Eaſt.

This Countrey was as ſoon peopled as any ſince the generall Deluge. It had not elſe been poſſible that Zoroaſter King hereof in the time of Ninus, and by him aſſaulted, ſhould bring into the field an Army of 400000 men of this, and perhaps ſome other of the neighbouring Provinces, as moſt credible writers ſay he did. Encountring Ninus with this Army he prevailed at firſt, and ſlew of the Aſſyrians neer an hundred thouſand. But Ninus having better opportunities of recruiting his forces, invaded him a ſecond time with an Army of 1700000 foot, and 200000 horſe (the greateſt on record in all ages ſince that time, except that of Semiramis): with which he overcame Zoroaſter, ſlew him in the field, and united Bactria to his Empire. Unto this Zoroaſter is aſcribed the invention of Aſtronomy, but on no good ground; that Art or Science being ſtudied before the flood, (if Seths Pillars mentioned by Joſephus be of any credit): and therefore probably no otherwiſe to be aſcribed to Zoroaſter, than as to the Reviver of it; or becauſe he firſt committed that unto writing, which he had received by tradition; or becauſe he brought thoſe confuſed notions which he had received from others, into rule and method. He being ſlain, and Bactria his chief City taken by the wit of Semeramis, then the wife of Menon (but on the merit of that ſervice made the wife of Ninus) the Bactrians became ſubject unto the Aſſyrian Kings, after to the Monarchs of the Medes and Perſians. In the expiring of which great Monarchy, Beſſus a falſe and cruell Traitor, did command this Province: and having villainouſly ſlain Darius, his Lord and Maſter, aſſumed unto himſelf the tittle of King of Perſia, under the name of Artaxerxes. But being betrayed by Spitamenes one of his Confederates, by him delivered unto Alexander, and by Alexander put to a cruell death: the Bactrians became ſubject to the Macedonians, and in that right unto Seleucus and the Kings of Syria. But long it held not in that State; one Theodatus, who formerly had the Government of it for the Syrian Kings; taking unto himſelf the tittle of King, and the poſſeſſion of the Countrey, about the ſame time that Arſaces and the Parthians made the like revolt. Wreſted from his poſterity by one Euthydemus, the recovery of it was attempted by Antiochus Magnus: and the whole cauſe put to the trial of a battel. In which, though Antiochus had the better, and ſhewed more perſonal valor in it than any time after: yet he was glad to come to a compoſition, and left to Euthydimus, both the Crown and the Countrey. Made not long after an acceſſion to the Parthian Kingdome, it continued part thereof whileſt that Kingdome ſtood. and in the time of Ptolomy (as long time before) had for the chief tribes or nations of it, the Salatarę, and Zariaſpæ towards the North; the Comani, or Coamoni (as Pliny calleth them) dwelling in South, the middle parts being taken up by the Thocari, ſaid to be gens magna; the Scordæ, Savadii, Maricæ, Tambyzi, Amariſpe, and others of as little note. In the often changes and alterations of the Perſian State, one of the laſt Nations which ſubmitted to the new Pretenders: and at this time ſo neutrall betwixt the Perſians, and the Cham of Tartary, that it is wholly under the power of either. More averſe from the Perſian government, ſince the alteration of Religion made there by Hyſmael, and the reſt of the Sect of Mortis Hali: theſe Bactrians being of the old race of Mahometans, which adhered to Haumar, Oſmen, and Abubecher, as the true Succeſſours of their falſe Prophet; and therefore ill-affected to the Sophian faction, whom they call commonly Caphers, or Hereticks, for the innovations by them made in the Law of Mahomet.

Thus having taken a ſurvey of thoſe ſeveral Provinces, which conſtitute the Perſian Empire, and ſhewn by what means they were firſt united into one eſtate: we muſt next look upon the names and actions of thoſe mighty Monarchs, who have ſucceſſively, and from time to time enjoyed the Soveraignty. By what good chance Arbaces from a Deputy or Lieutenant of Media, obtained the Diademe for himſelf, we have ſhewn before: and we have ſhewn how liberally he enfeoffed the Vice-Roys of the ſeverall Provinces (which in the diviſion made betwixt him and Belochus, fell unto his ſhare) in the propriety and command of thoſe Countreys, which before they held. Nothing reſerved unto himſelf, and his poſterity, but the tittle onely; and perhaps ſome acknowledgments made to them, as the Lords in chief. Nor left he leſs liberty to his own Medians, than to the reſt of the Provinces; which turning to licenciouſneſs was ſo hurtful to them, that they were glad at laſt of that wholeſome ſeverity, which Dioces, a more Lordly King, began to exerciſe: who taking to himſelf a guard, building the Royall City of Ecbatana, tana, and fortifying ſome other places of importance, firſt brought the people under the command of law; in that regard not unfitly called by Herodotus. the firſt King of the Medes.

Kings of the Medes

Kings of the Medes.

A. M.

3146. 1. Arbaces, at firſt Governour of the Medes, under Sardanapalus the Aſſyrian; but joining with Belochus, overcame his Maſter, and was the firſt founder of the Median Monarchy.

3174. 2. Mandanes, the Son of Arbaces. 50.

3224. 3. Siſarmus. 30.

3254. 4. Medidus, by ſome called Artyras. 25.

3279. 5. Cardiceus, whom ſome call Arbianes. 13.

3292. 6. Deioces, the founder of Ecbatana, and the Legiſlator of the Medes, whom he firſt brought under the command of Law, and a Regal Government; the former Kings having left the reigns ſo looſe on the necks of the people, that they ſeemed to reign by curteſie only; and had no more authority amongſt their Subjects, than any of the mean Lords had upon their Vaſſals.

3303. 7. Phraortes, a man of great proweſs and fortune: He made all Aſia ſtand in fear, and compelled the Perſians to be his tributaries; but was after overtopped by the Scythians. 22.

3331. 8. Cyaxares, united to his Empire the Saracens, and the Parthians. The King was ſo overlaid by the Scythians, who in the reign of Phraortes, had broke into Media; that he was little better than their rent-gatherer. But having endured them for above two years, he plotted their finall extirpation, and committed his deſign to the Nobles, who willingly gave ear to it. One night, they invited the chief of the Scythians to a banquet; where having well liquored them, and put them all to the ſword, the baſer ſort willingly returned homeward. 40.

3371. 9. Aſtyages, the Son of Cyaxares, who having maried his Daughter Mandane, to Cambyſes the Tributary King of Perſia; dreamed that ſhe had made as much water as drowned all Aſia: hereupon he commanded Harpagus, one of his Noble men, to ſee the Child killed; but he loathing ſo cruel a fact, committed the charge of executing the Kings Commandment, to Mithridates the Kings heard-man. He preſerved the life of the young infant, to whom he gave the name of Cyrus, whoſe fortune at laſt lifted him up to the Kingdome of Perſia: when abhorring his Grand-Father for that intended cruelty, he both bereft him of his Kingdome, and confined him to Hyrcania; when he had reigned thirty five years. A. M. 3406.

3406. 10. Cyaxares II. in the Scripture called Darius Medus, Son to Aſtyages, at the age of 52 years ſucceeded his father. For Cyrus pretending no quarrel to his Unkle who had never wronged him, left him the Kingdome of Media; and took unto himſelf the Soveraignity of Perſia which before was tributary to the Medes; not making any other alteration in the State of Media.

At this diviſion of the Median Empire, as Torniellus in his Annalls, (and that not improbably) is of opinion, it was alſo agreed on, that Cyrus ſhould take the daughter and only child of Cyaxares to wife; that they ſhould both join together, in ſubduing of their neighbours; that whatſoever they won, ſhould belong to Cyaxares, (who was even then an old Prince) during his life; and that Cyrus ſhould be his heir. In the twentieth year of their ſeverall reigns, they took Babylon, ſlew Baltazar, and deſtroyed the Empire of the Chaldæans. This action, the Scriptures atribute wholly to Cyaxares, who is by them called Darius Medus; whereof Saint Hierome alledgeth three reaſons: 1. Ordo ætatis, 2 Regni, 3. Propinquitatis. 1. Darius was the elder; 2. the Empire of the Medes was more famous than that of the Perſians; and 3. the Unkle ought to be preferred before the Nephew. We may adde to theſe three, the compoſition above-mentioned, made between theſe Princes, at the beginning of their reigns on the death of Aſtyages. The Greek Writers atribute the victory onely to Cyrus, and that on three reaſons alſo. The Perſians deſirous to magnifie Cyrus their own Countrey-man, gave him all the glory of the action; and from the Perſians the Greeks had it. Secondly Cyrus was only imployed in the ſige, (Darius then being abſent) and by his valour and conduct was the Empire of the Chaldæans ruined. And thirdly, Darius lived not fully two years after this great victory; ſo that before remote Nations had taken notice of the conqueſt, Cyrus was actually in the Throne. Joſephus onely in the 11 Chapter of his Book, cutteth the thread even between theſe two Princes; and telleth us that Darius, with Cyrus his Ally, deſtroyed the eſtate of the Babylonians. That this Darius Medus of Daniel, is the Cyaxares of the Greeks, is more than manifeſt. For Joſephus in the place above-cited telleth us, ὃς ἦν Ἀστυάγους υἱὸς ᾧ ἕτερον παρὰ τοῖς Ἕλλησιν ὄνομα ἐκαλεῖτο ὄνομα: That he was Aſtyages Son, and is otherwiſe called by the Greeks: now ask the Greeks what was the name of the Son of Aſtyages, and Xenophon will tell you, that it was Cyaxares. As for the name of Nabonidus, which Joſeph Scaliger in ſpight of reaſon, and the whole world of Chronologers, would truſt upon this Darius Medus; we have already reſelled it: though we are not ignorant that Helvicus and Calviſius, two moſt worthy Writers, have followed him, as in all his Canon, ſo alſo in this particular Error. But to proceed unto the courſe of the Perſian Hiſtory; after the death of this Cyaxares, Cyrus ſucceeded in his Throne, and the Empire of the Medes was incorporated in that of the Perſians, (as it hath ever ſince continued) if not ſubject to it.

The

The first Dynasty, or Race of the Persian Monarchs, of the house of Achæmenes.

3406. 1. Cyrus, who having vanquished Astyages, united to the Empire of Persia the whole Kingdome of Media; the Countreys of Armenia, Phrygia, Lydia, some part of Arabia, and all the Provinces possessed by the Babylonian and Assyrian Monarchs. After which victories, he was slain by Tomyris a Queen of the Scythians, as some Writers say: others affirming that he escaped alive (but wounded) out of the battel, died in his own Kingdome, and was buryed at Pasagarda, a Town of Persis. This Cyrus is magnified by Xenophon, as Ænas is by Virgil, and Ulysses by Homer. 29.

3434. 2. Cambyses, the Son of Cyrus, subdued Psammiticus King of Ægypt, which Countrey he united to his Empire. Having a mind to marry his own Sister, he was told by his Lawyers that they knew no law which admitted such mariages; but that there was a law, that the Persian Kings might do what they listed. This King was a very bloudy Tyrant.

The Inter-regnum of the Magi.

Cambyses at his expedition into Ægypt, constituted Patizithes, one of the Magi, Vice-Roy in his absence. He hearing of the Kings death, conferred the Kingdome on his own Son Smerdis, making the people believe, that he was the brother of Cambyses: A matter of no difficulty, considering, how retirement from the publique view, was a chief point of the Persian majesty. But the Nobles either knowing the true Smerdis to be slain, or suspecting the overmuch retiredness of the new King; began to search out the matter. Otanes had a daughter, which was one of the Kings Concubines. Her he commanded when the King took next his pleasure with her; to feel whether he had any ears: for Cambyses (in I know not what humour) had cut off the ears of this Magus. This commandment she obeying, found out the falshood. The seven Princes informed of this imposture, join together, and slew this Pseudo-Smerdis, in the eighth moneth of his reign. This done, to avoid contention, they agreed among themselves, that the seven Princes meeting on the Palace green, should acknowledge him for King, whose horse before the rising of the Sun, first neighed. The evening before the day appointed, the horse-keeper of Darius the Son of Hystaspis, brought his Masters horse into the green, together with a mare, which the horse then covered. In the morning the Princes met; and Darius his horse knowing the place, and longing for his mare, neighed lustily: on which the Princes presently acknowledge Darius for their King.

The restoring of the Kingdome.

3413. 3. Darius Hystaspis, one of the seven Persian Princes, descended from Cyrus the fourth King of the Persians, thus elected King, took Babylon (which had revolted) by the ingenious fetches of Zopirus; and over-ran all Asia, and some part of Greece, where he was overthrown at the battell of Marathon. 36.

3479. 4. Xerxes, to revenge the overthrow at Marathron, attempted to subdue the Greeks: by whom he was overthrown in the navall battle of Salamis; and that famous and honourable exploit of the Græcians, at Thermopylæ. 21.

3508. 5. Artaxerxes Longimanus, was he who sent Esdras to re-build the Temple of the Lord; and received Themistocles, being banished from Athens. This also was he, as some would have it, whom the Scriptures call Ahasuerus, the Husband of Hester; though others choose rather to place that story in the time of Xerxes. 44.

3541. 6. Darius II. surnamed Nothus, in whose time the Ægyptians revolted, and chose a King of their own. 19.

3563. 7. Artaxerxes II. from the greatness of his memory surnamed Mnemon; under whom hapned that famous retreat of Xenophon, with an handfull of his Græcians, thorow most of the Provinces of this Empire; by which they shewed the way to the Macedonians, how easie a Conquest they might make, of that mighty Empire. 36.

3599. 8. Ochus, a great Tyrant, but a valiant Prince, recovered Ægypt, subdued Syria, Cyprus, and some part of India; and was at last slain by Bagoas, one of the Eunuchs of his Chamber.

3625. 9. Arses, the Son of Ochus, most villanously murdered by the same Eunuch, for fear he should revenge the death of his Father.

3629. 10. Darius III. Governour of Armenia, and Cousin German of Ochus, before his comming to the Crown named Codomannus; by the means of the said Bagoas made sole Monarch of Persia. But being vanquished by Alexander the Great, in the three battels of Granicus, Cilicia, and Arbela, the Empire of the Persians was transferred to the Græcians, A.M. 3635.

The certain Revenues of this great Monarchy, seem to have been 14560 Talents; for so much the last Darius received yearly. But what the casuall and extraordinary Intrado was, is not easie to say; though manifest it is, and demonstable by many strong and evident reasons, that they farre exceeded the certain. For first, the Persian Monarchs were Kings of 127 Provinces; Secondly, Darius offered to Alexander for the ransome of his mother and two daughters, 30000 Talents of Gold. Thirdly, Alexander found in the Treaſury of Damaſcus, 2600 Talents; in that of Suſa, 50000 Talents of Gold uncoyned; in that of Paſagardis, 60000 Talents; in that of Ecbatana, 26000 Talents; in that of Preſepolis, 120000 Talents; in all 204600 Talents; beſides the infinite riches of the Treaſury of Babylon, yielded into his hands by Bagophanes, and other places of note, not particularly ſpecified: An huge and moſt unſpeakable ſumme. Fourthly, in that the gold and riches which Alexander, now a Conqueror, ſent from Perſia to Macedon and Greece, (beſides that which every Captain and common Souldier had provided and laid up for his own maintenance) loaded ten thouſand Mules, and five thouſand Camels.

After this overthrow of the Perſian Monarchy, the Perſian Nation lay obſcure 535 years, viz. from the 3635 year of the world, to the 228 year of CHRIST: of which time they were 83 years under the Syrian Succeſſors of Alexander; and 452 years under the Arſacidan Kings of Parthia. Μετὰ τὰς Δαρείου, &c. as Herodian. "For after Darius had loſt his Kingdome to Alexander the Macedonian, and after "the Victor himſelf was dead alſo; the more potent Captains divided Aſia among them. But diſcords "often ariſing, and the Macedonians puiſſance, by theſe often broiles, not ſmally broken; Arſaces one "of the Parthian Nobility, perſwaded the barbarous people of the Eaſt, and among them the Perſians, to "caſt off the Greek yoak, and ſtand for their liberty: he himſelf taking upon him the title of King, and "inveſting himſelf with a Diadem, A. M. 3718. The Perſians by this revolt, got little or nothing, having indeed not changed the Tyranny, but the Tyrant onely: theſe Parthian Princes lording it with as high an inſolencie, as ever the old Perſian Monarchs, or the Kings of Syria, did before. From this Arſaces, all the reſt of his Succeſſors, and thoſe too of the family of Artabanus, or the ſecond race of Parthian Kings, took that name upon them: as the Roman Emperors that of Cæſar, or the old Ægyptian Kings the name of Pharaoh. Their uſual ſtile was Rex Regum, or King of Kings: and by that ſtile with arrogance and inſolence enough, Vologeſes thus inſcribed his letters to Veſpaſian, the Roman Emperor, viz. Arſaces, Rex Regum, Flavio Veſpaſiano: giving himſelf the title of King of Kings, but the other nothing but his bare names onely. To which, Veſpaſian without taking notice of the Parthians pride, returned his anſwer to him with this ſuperſcription, Fl. Veſpaſianus Regi Regum Arſacidi: whether with more ſcorn, or modeſty, it is hard to ſay. They alſo called themſelves the Brethren of the Sun and Moon, which were the chiefeſt Gods they worſhipped. Great Princes queſtionleſs they were, and kept the Romans harder to it, than all the Kings and States in the world beſides: whoſe names and acts occurre in theſe following Catalogues of

2. The Arſacidan or Parthian race of the Kings of Perſia.

A. M.

3718. 1. Arſaces, the founder of the Parthian family.

3741. 2. Mithridates, or Arſaces the 2d. aſſaulted by Antiochus Magnus with an Army of 120000 men, but without ſucceſs.

3761. 3. Pampatius.

3773. 4. Phraartes, the Son of Pampatius.

3783. 5. Mithridates II. brother of Phraartes, ſubdued the Medes, and extended his Empire to Euphrates.

6. Phraartes II. ſlain in a warre againſt the Scythians.

3857. 7. Artabanus, Uncle to Phraartes the 2d.

8. Pacorus, the Son of Artabanus.

9. Mithridates III. brother of Pacorus.

3903. 10. Horodes, brother of Mithridates, whom he overcame, and cauſed to be ſlain in his own ſight. He alſo vanquiſhed M. Craſſus, and ſlew 20000 Romans: and becauſe Craſſus was reported to be wondrous covetous, he cauſed molten gold to be poured down his throat. A miſerable death, but in reſpect of the divine Providence, a moſt juſt revenge upon him for his ſacriledge; in robbing the Temple of Hieruſalem, as he marched towards the Parthians. The overthrow, and the diſgrace which thereby hapned to the Romans, was not long afterwards recompenſed by Ventidius, one of the Lieutenants of Mark Antony the Triumvir; who ſlew great numbers of them in a pitched field, and amongſt others, Pacorus the Kings Son: the day of the battell being the ſame, in which Craſſus had before been vanquiſhed. After this victory, for which Ventidius had the honour of a Triumph (and the firſt Triumph that ever the Romans had beheld for a Parthian victory) he was in a fair way to have ruined this Kingdom, to have ſhrewdly ſhaken it at the leaſt; had not Antony in an envious humour called him from that ſervice. Finally, Horodes was ſlain by his Son Phraartes.

11. Phraartes III. a valiant Prince, but wicked and cruell, as the murther of his own father and many of his brethren doth cleerly evidence. Againſt him marched Marcus Antonius with a populous Army, which wanted little of an abſolute overthrow; of 16 legions, ſcarce ſix returning home in ſafety. This King ſubmitted himſelf and Kingdome unto Auguſtus, reſtoring the Roman enſigns, and freeing the Captives taken at the defeat of Craſſus. The onely mark of the Parthians ſubjection, was their receiving Kings at the appointment of the Senate and Emperours of Rome; which alſo was of no long continuance.

12. Phraartes IV. Son of Phraartes the 3d. whom he ſlew and ſucceeded.

13. Orodes II. Son of Phraartes the fourth, ſlain in a conſpiracy.

14. Vonon,

14. Vonon, substituted in the place of Orodes, but outed by
15. Tiridates, who was also dispossessed of his life and Kingdome by Artabanus, the people flocking to him as a man of Courage, and being offended with the two last Kings, because they either had received the Kingdome, or at least the Confirmation in it, from the Roman Emperours. Which Artabanus, though descended either from a female, or some of the Collatorall line of the former family, yet being not the direct heire thereof, he is looked on as a stranger to the blood of the Arsacidæ, the family of Arsaces giving place to that of this Artabanus, of which family we have the names of twelve Kings successively reigning: the most considerable of them being Chosroes, the 8th. King of this line, from whom the Emperor Trajan gained Armenia, and Mesopotamia, adding them to the Roman Empire. Members whereof they did continue till regained to the Persian Crown, by Sapores the 9th King of the next Persian Dynasty. But for those twelve Kings of this house they are these.

12 Artabanus III. the last King of this new race of the Parthians, whose overthrow by the valour of Artaxerxes the first Persian King of the 4th. Dynasty, occasioned the translation of the Diadem to the naturall Persians; after it had continued in two Parthian families, for the space of 470 years. Which Translation, as it was wrought by the unresistable power of God, who onely hath the disposing of Crowns and Scepters; so in the way of second causes it may be principally referred to the barbarous massacre of this people, by Antonius Caracalla the Roman Emperor. Who having negociated a mariage with the daughter of this Artabanus, and going (as he gave it out) to solemnize the nuptials; was met by the old King accompanied with the flower of his Nobility, and the choicest of his Souldiers, and other Subjects, in Triumphall Ornaments. Which honourable train was no sooner come neer his Army, but he commanded his Souldiers, (on a watch-word given) to put them all to the sword, the King himself hardly escaping with his life. Caracalla being dead, and Macrinus succeeding in the Throne, the Parthians set upon him to revenge that slaughter. But understanding after a long fight of three daies continuance, that Macrinus had slain Caracalla, they made peace with him: but were so weakned and unable to hold their own, that it made the Persians once more think of recovering to their own Nation, the Regall power. For Artaxerxes, a noble and generous Persian (his name perhaps suggesting some high thoughts unto him) did so well husband the opportunity, that he slew Artabanus the last King of the Parthians, and once more brought the royal seat into Persia. Yet was not this so easilly effected, the Parthians notwithstanding their former losses, maintaining a cruell fight for three dayes together. so difficult was it to vanquish that Nation, when their forces were broken; impossible when they were entire. Artaxerxes, proud of this success, sent a peremptory embassie to Alexander Severus, the then Roman Emperor, to have all the Provinces of Asia, which had formerly belonged to the Persian Monarchy, re-delivered to him: a matter not so easily granted as demanded. For Severus to suppress so insolent an enemy, marched towards Persia with an Army Romanly appointed; which, to find his enemy more work, he divided into three parts: whereof the first was to march into Media, the second into Persia; the third himself led in the mid-way between both, to succour both as occasion required. But his device succeeded not happily; for his two Armies being by the Persians broken, he with much danger and hast retired back with the third. This was a good beginning for the Persian Kingdome, the establishment followed not long after: Valerianus the Emperor being vanquished, and taken prisoner by Sapores, the second King of this race. So that now the name of the Persian grew so terrible to the Romans, that Constantine the Great, transplanted many of the Colonies and Garrisons of the North-west part of the Empire, into the East; to keep the Persian from growing to farre upon the Roman Provinces: and removed also the seat of the Empire nigher unto them, from Rome to Constantinople. And thus having shown the beginning and establishment, the foundation and building of the new Kingdome of the Persians: take along with you the Catalogue of their Kings, untill they once more lost the soveraignty of their own Nation, and became slaves again, to more barbarous Masters.

27 Barnarius.
630 28 Hormiſda II. the 28. and laſt King of the race of Artaxerxes, or the fourth Dynaſty: of whom beſides the two firſt Kings, whoſe Acts are ſpoken of before, the moſt remarkable were, 1. Vararanes the ſecond, in whoſe time Carus the Emperour paſſing over Euphrates, and laying ſieige to Cteſiphon, was there ſlain by a thunderbolt. 2. Narſes, the ſon of Vararanes, who firſt diſcomfited Galerius, one of the Cæſars, in the Empire of Diocletian, and totally ruined his Army: for which Galerius being forced to lacquey it by the Emperors Chariot in his purple Robes, was ſo highly ſhamed; that to recover his credit he ſet upon Narſes once again, routed him, and took Priſoners his wives and children. 3. Sapores the ſecond, the Son of Miſdates, who began his reign before his birth. For his Father dying without iſſue, left his wife with Child: which Child the Magi having ſignified by their art to be a male, the Perſian Princes cauſed the Crown and Royall Ornaments to be ſet upon his Mothers belly, acknowledging him thereby for their future King. A great and puiſſant Prince he proved; holding continuall war with Conſtantine, and his Succeſſours, till the death of Valens; and gaining from them the beſt part of Meſopotamia: but withall a great Perſecuter of the Chriſtians, of whom no fewer than 20000 are ſaid to have ſuffered in time. 4. Isdigertes, a Prince ſo eſteemed of by Arcadius the Eaſtern Emperor, that he made him Protector of his Empire, during the minority of his Son Theodoſius: which truſt he Royally performed, and was a great friend unto the Chriſtians in his own dominions. 5. Cabades, firſt outed of his Kingdome by Zamaſpes, and reſtored again, was the firſt Perſian King who permitted the free exerciſe of the Chriſtian Religion. He ſlew Zeliobes a King of the Hunnes comming to his aid againſt the Romans, becauſe he had before promiſed to aſſiſt the Emperour; and rooted the Manichean Sect out of his eſtate. 6. Coſroes the Son of Cabades, ſurnamed the Great, a Conſtant enemie of the Romans; from whom he conquered a great part of Syria, and took and ſacked the City of Antioch. But finding the war brought home to his own doors, by Mauritius, who was afterwards Emperour, and his own Countries in a flame; he took ſuch thought of it, that he died of a feaver. 7. Coſroes the ſecond, as great an enemie to the Emperor Heraclius, from whom he took all that was left of Meſopotamia, Syria, and the Holy Land, with the City of Hieruſalem it ſelf; moſt of it recovered by Heraclius: in deſpight of whom he cauſed all the Chriſtians in his Kingdome to turn Neſtorians. 8. Hormiſda the ſecond, the laſt of this Dynaſty, who being firſt weakned by Civill and Domeſtick diſſenſions, was vanquiſhed by Haumar and his Saracens, Anno 634. burying ſo the glory of this renowned Nation, in the grave of oblivion, or at leaſt ſubjection.

The Saracenicall Caliphs, having added this Kingdome to their huge Empire, appointed here their Deputies, whom they honoured with the name of Sultans: not one Supreme for the whole Kingdome, but ſeverall Governours or Sultans, for each ſeveral Province: called by new names, and moulded into many Toparchies, as Chorazan, Mauzenabar, Usbeck, and I wot not what; the Sultans acting of themſelves, and warring upon one another, as their humours led them, without relation to the Caliph, or Lord in chief. During which buſtles it ſo hapned, that Mahomet, the Sultan of Perſia (ſo called becauſe he was the chief in command and power) picking a quarrell with his neighbour the Sultan of Babylon, (Piſaſiris he is called in ſome Chriſtian writers, by whom taken or miſtaken for the Caliph himſelf) made war upon him. But finding him countenanced and ſupported by the power of the Caliph, invited the Turks, then poſſeſſed of ſome part of Armenia Major, to come in to his aid: by whoſe means he overthrew the Caliphs forces, and might have got the Soveraignty of Perſia unto himſelf; if he had uſed his victory and his friends, with any tolerable diſcretion. But denying to pay theſe Turks their wages, and ſend them home, he occaſioned them to make head againſt him, under the conduct of Tangrolipix their principall leader; to whom being once in armes, ſeverall diſcontented perſons of the naturall Perſians, did unite themſelves. Encouraged with which additions, and being furniſhed with Horſe and Armour, and other neceſſaries, by the ſpoil of the Countrey; they give battell to the Sultan himſelf: whom having vanquiſhed and ſlain, Tangrolipix by the joint conſent of both Armies is made King of Perſia; the Founder of

The fift Dynaſty, or the Turkiſh Race of the Kings of Perſia.

1030. 1. Tangrolipix, of whom ſufficiently before.
2. Axan, the Son of Tangrolipix, by whom Cutlu Muſes, his neer Kinſman, was ſent with great forces againſt the Chriſtians; whom he diſpoſſeſſed of a great part of Aſia Minor.
3. Balak, Sultan of Perſia, in the beginning of the wars in the Holy Land, undertaken by the Weſtern Chriſtians; againſt whom he is reported to have ſent his forces. Of whoſe Succeſſors I find nothing till the time of 1198. 4. Caſſanes, the laſt King or Sultan of the Turks, vanquiſhed in the year 1202 by the Cham of Tartary. Which makes me very apt to think, that after the death of Axan, or his next Succeſſor, the Turks loſt the Soveraignty of Perſia, though they kept the poſſeſſion of ſome parts of it; the Soveraignty thereof being recovered by the Caliphs of Babylon: and that it was ſo held by both, till the Tartars diſpoſſeſſed the one, and deſtroyed the whole progeny of the other, as before was noted. And this I find to be the opinion of Benjamin Tudelenſis, a learned Jew, which had travelled moſt part of the Eaſt; to whoſe judgement herein I ſubſcribe, as moſt ſound and rationall.

The

The Sixt Dynasty, or the Tartarian race of the Kings of Persia.

1260. 1. Haalon, or Ulah-Kubkan, by Occata the great Cham, made King of Persia; exterminated the whole race of the Caliph of Bagdet.
1266. 2. Habkakaihon, the Son of Haalon.
1282. 3. Nicador Oglan, by Haiton called Tangador, who made himself a Mahometan, and was named Hamed; the brother of Habkakaihon.
1284. 4. Argon-Khon, the eldst Son of Habkakaihon.
1292. 5. Geniotukhon, brother of Argon-Khon.
1295. 6. Badukhan, the Unkle of the last, of which three there is little memorable.
1296. 7. Gazun, the Son of Argon-Khon, who made Casbin his Imperial seat.
1305. 8. Alyaptu, who transferred the Court to Tauris, and is said to have been the founder of Sultania, a chief City of Media; the brother of Gazun.
1317. 9. Abusaid, Son of Alyaptu the last of the race of Haalon, that reigned in Persia. After whose death, Anno 1337. (being the 736. of the Mahometan Hegira) the more potent Princes of the Tartars seized on the severall parts and Provinces of it; every one calling himself King of that part or Province, which he was possessed of. And amongst them Gempsas the Sultan or Soldan of Parthia, (though a Persian born) put in for a share, and made himself master of his own Province, and some parts adjoining: made on that ground by some of our Christian writers (who very imperfectly have transmitted to us the affairs of this Countrey) the sole King of Persia. In this confusion it continued till the comming of Tamerlane, who like a furious Whirlwind driving all before him, composed the differences, by getting all unto himself. But as Philosophy doth teach us, that no violent motion is of long continuance, so the course of business and the successe of actions may instruct us also, that a Kingdome forced to bow under the command of a prosperous Army, is not so well assured to the Victor; but that the fury of the war once past; it may return again to its former liberty, or open a more easie passage to some new Invader. And so it fared with the conquests and successes of Tamerlane, whose issue quickly lost this Kingdome, and almost all the rest of his other purchases: leaving but little memory of their names and actions. For partly by his own imprudence, in cantoning his Estates amongst his Children; and partly by the weakness of his Successours in the Realm of Persia: this Kingdome did relapse immediately to the same confusions in which he found it; having almost as many Soveraign Kings, as Provinces. Most of them Homagers perhaps to the Kings of the house of Tamerlane, and those who afterwards succeeded in the Title of Kings of Persia, of the Turcoman or Armenian Dynasty: not yet reduced unto this Crown, notwithstanding the great and prosperous successes of the Sophian Family. But for the Kings of the race of Tamerlane, who only in their times had the honour to be called Kings of Persia (and well enough content with that): such as they were, we find them in this order following.

1405. 10. Mirza Charok, the fourth Son of Tamerlane, succeeded by his appointment in the Realm of Persia.
1447. 11. Oleghbeg, Son of Mirza Charok, vanquished and slain by his owne Son.
1450. 12. Abdalatife; slain not long after by his own Souldiers.
1451. 13. Abdula, the Son of Oleghbegh, and brother of Abdalatife, vanquished by 1453. 14. Abusaid II. descended from Moroncha, the third Son of Tamerlane, succeeded on the death of Abdula.
1461. 15. Zeuzes, whom some call Jooncha, others Malaonchres, discomfited and slain in battel by Ussan-Cassanes, Anno 1472. which was about 70. years from the death of Tamerlane.

The seventh Dynasty of the Turcoman, or the Armenian race of the Kings of Persia.

1472. 1. Ussan-Cassanes, by some calld Asymbeius, by others more truely Ozem-Azembec, was the Son of Tracheton, one of those poor Armenian or Turcoman Princes, dispossessed by Bajazet the first, and restored by Tamerlane, Encroaching on his neighbours, he was warned to desist by Zeuzes last Persian King; with whom encountring in a pitched field he overcame him, and got that Kingdome by the victory.
1478. 2. Jacub, the second Son of Ussan-Cassanes, having put by his elder Brother, attained the Throne; and repulsed the Mamalucks out of Mesopotamia and Assyria, which they had invaded: He was after poisoned by his wife.
1490. 3. Julaver, a Kinsman of Jacubs, succeeded him in the estate, which he held only three years, and then left it to 1493. 4. Baisinger, a Prince of the same blood; who living in adultery with the wife of Jacub, had conspired his death. 2.
1495. 5. Rustan, assaulted by Aider, or Secaider, of the Sophian faction, who then began to be of power.
1498. 6. Alamat, or Hagaret, the last King of this Turcoman or Armenian race; first vanquished Secaider at the battel of Derbent, and cut off his head: but was after overthrown and and ſlain by Hyſmael the ſon of Aider; upon the quarrel and occaſion which here followeth.

Mahomet the Impoſtor and firſt Emperour of the Saracens, by his laſt Will and Teſtament, bequeathed the ſucceſſion unto that Eſtate, to Hali his neer Kinſman, and Husband of Fatime, his Eldeſt Daughter. But Abubezar, Haumar, and Oſmen, three powerfull men, and the Chief Commanders of the Army in the time of Mahomet, ſucceſſively followed one another in the Supreme Dignity. After their death, Hali enjoyed that honour for a little while, ſupplanted firſt, and afterwards vanquiſhed and ſlain by Muhavias, a great man of war, who ſucceeded in it; and to ſecure himſelf therein, ſlew Haſem or Oſſan, the ſon of Hali, and eleven of the ſons of that Oſſan; the tweli called Muſa Ceredine, eſcaping with life. From him deſcended lineally one Guiene, the Lord of Ardoville in Media; who conſidering that there had been no Caliph in long time before, began to plot the eſtabliſhing of that high honour in his own family, as the right Heirs to it. A man of ſo great reputation among the people, that Tamerlane having made a Conqueſt of Perſia, thought it no diſhonour to his greatneſs, to beſtow a friendly viſit on him. Dying, he left his hopes and projects to his ſon, called Aider, who afterwards for the purity of Religion pretended by him, had the adjunct of Tzophy; the word ſo ſignifying in that language: who alſo proved of ſuch eſteem and power with all ſorts of men, that Uſſan-Caſſanes, the firſt King of the Armenian, or Turcoman race, thought fit to make him Husband unto one of his Daughters. But on the contrary, Jacub the ſon of Uſſan, and ſome of his Succeſſors, ſeeing him grow unto ſuch power and eſtimation with the common people; and fearing what he could do, and not what he would do, endeavoured to depreſs him by all means that might be. Which he not able to remedy, as the Caſe then ſtood, practiſed to add unto his party under the popular pretence, of reforming things that were amiſs in their Religion; and grew ſo powerfull in the end, that he gave battel unto Ruſtan and Alamat, the two laſt Kings of the former race. But Alamat having got the victory, cauſed him to be ſlain; and delivered Hyſmael and Solyman his two ſons, into the hands of Amazar, a chief Commander of his own, by him to be kept in perpetual priſon. But Amazar a man of a more ingenuous diſpoſition, afforded them not only liberty, but alſo good education: inſomuch that Hyſmael Sophi, a towardly young Gentleman, undertook revenge for the death of his Father, which work he fulfilled, having overcome and ſlain King Alamat, and his ſon Elvan. After this Victory, he being Crowned King, or Shaugh of Perſia, altered the form of Religion: making Hali, and himſelf the true Succeſſors of Mahomet; but condemning Abubezer, Haumar, and Oſmen, with the Turks, as Rebels and Schiſmaticks.

Hence proceeded the divers Wars, which to the Perſians loſs, have hapned between them and the Turks: the Perſians burning whatſoever book or Monument they finde concerning thoſe three; and the Turks holding it more meritous to kill one Perſian, than ſeventy Chriſtians. Surius in his Commentaries, writing purpoſely of the Acts of Hyſmael, ſaith, that the Jews on ſome fond conceit, were perſwaded that he was the Meſſiah, they had ſo long looked for: But it proved quite contrary, there never being Prince that more vexed and grieved them.

The eigth Dynaſty, or Sophian race of the Kings of Perſia.

1505. 1. Hyſmael Sophi, the founder of this Family, overthrown by Selimus the firſt, in the Calderan fields. 20.

1525. 2. Tamas, the Son of Hyſmael, vanquiſhed by Soiyman the Magnificent, who took from him the Countreys of Chaldæa, Aſſyria, and Meſopotamia, with ſome part of Media. 53.

1578. 3. Aider, the ſecond ſon of Tamas, obtained the Kingdom, impriſoning his elder brother; but his cruelty being much feared, he was made away by the practice of Periancona, his own Siſter, having reigned only 15 dys.

4. Hyſmael II. eldeſt ſon of Tamas, reſtored unto his Fathers Throne; but murdered with the privity of his Siſter alſo, who found him of too rough a nature for her to govern; having reigned neer two years.

1579. 5. Mahomet Codabanda, advanced unto the throne by his Siſters faction, (as being of a milder and more tractable nature) at his firſt entrance cauſed her to be beheaded for the former murders. During his time, not fully ſetled in the State, Amurath the 3d. by his Lieutenants won from him almoſt all Armenia, Media, and great part of Georgia. 7.

1585. 6. Abas, the ſecond ſon of Mahomet, having treacherouſly practiſed the death of Mirze, his elder brother, ſucceeded his Father, recovered almoſt all which the Turks had gained. and added the Kingdoms of Ormus, Heri, Candahor, and Hyrcania, to the Crown of Perſia.

7. Soffie, the Nephew of Abas by his ſon Mirza, (whoſe eyes he cauſed to be put out on a falſe ſuſpition) at the age of fifteen years ſucceeded: committed by his Grand-father during his minority to the protection of Emangoly, Chawn, or Duke of Shyras. A Prince, who ſince he came to age, hath had a good hand againſt the Turks, attempting the recovery of Bagdat and other places, which had been taken from them in the time of Abas.

The Government of theſe Perſian Kings, though it be deſpotical and ſevere, hath a great deal leſs of the Tyrant in it, than any other of the Mahometan Kings or Princes: theſe cheriſhing their Brethren, maintaining maintaining Nobility amongſt them, and encouraging induſtry; which makes them to be better ſerved than the Turks or Tartars, to both whom they are farre inferiour both in power and treaſure. Their Officers of State, and men of principall imployment, for the moſt part Eunuchs (as generally in all the Empires of the Eaſt): ſuch Perſons being thought moſt truſty, becauſe abſtracted from the obligations of wife and children, they ſtudy more the Princes ſervice than their own advantages. Their forces conſiſt moſt of Horſe, to which they are inclined more generally, than to ſerve on foot; and yet the greateſt body of horſe which they have brought at any time into the field, came not to above 30000; but thoſe well furniſhed and appointed, maintained on Lordſhips and Eſtates after the manner of the Turkiſh Timariots. The Foot-Souldiers of his own Countries, but poor and raw, and very ſeldome ſtand their ground, that defect being for the moſt part ſupplied by Mercinaries. The inconvenience of which being found by Sultan Abas, he ſerved himſelf of children bought of Chriſtian Parents, neer the Euxine Sea (from whence the Egyptian Sultans had their Mamalucks) whom they call by the name of Cozel-Baſſas, or Red-caps, ſo named from the colour of their Turbans: trained up by them in their Religion, and warlike Diſcipline, as the Turks, their Janizaries; yet farre inferiour to the Turks, againſt whom if they have prevailed ſince the time of Abas, they may aſcribe the greateſt part of their good fortune to thoſe diviſions and Rebellions, which in theſe late times have been frequent in the Turkiſh Empire. And as for their Sea-forces, they are inconſiderable. For though they have a large Sea-coaſt both on the Perſian Bay, the Caſpian Sea, and the Southern Ocean; yet are they very poor in ſhipping: ſuffering the Moſcovite to ingroſs the trade of the Caſpian Sea; the Portugals, to manage that of the Southern Ocean; as formerly that alſo of the Perſian Bay, till the taking of Ormuz.

The Reveneus of this Kingdome in the time of Hyſmael the firſt Sopby, were exceeding great: inſomuch that Tamas his Succeſſor, to ingratiate himſelf with all ſorts of people, releaſed them of all kinds of Cuſtomes impoſed on Merchandiſe, either imported or exported. And this they ſay amounted to the ſumme af 900000 Tomans yearly: which, reckoning every Toman at 20 Crowns, made up a million and 800000 Crowns of annuall income. Which notwithſtanding, his Revenue was computed at four or five millions of Crowns yearly; raiſed out of Domain lands, the tenth of fruits, the profit of mines, and the fine payed by every ſubject when he ſets up ſhop. But Tamas finding this not to be ſufficient to maintain his Royalty, doubled the value of his money, and thereby for the preſent his Revenues alſo. Since that they have been much empaired by the Conqueſts made upon them by the Turks; who had got from them ſo much land as maintained 40000 Timariots, and yielded to the grand Signeur one millon of yearly income: whether improved again or not to their former height, I am not able to determine.

TARTARIA.

TARTARIA is bounded on the East, with China, the Orientall Ocean, and the streights of Anian (if such streights there be), by which parted from America; on the West, with Russia, and Podolia, a Province of the Realm of Poland; on the North, with the main Scythick or Frozen Ocean: and on the South, with part of China, from which separated by a mighty wall; the River Oxus, parting it from Bactria, and Margiana, two Persian Provinces; the Caspian Sea, which separates it from Media, and Hyrcania; the Caucasian Mountains interposing betwixt it and Turcomania; and the Euxine, which divideth it from Anatolia, and Thrace. So called from the Tartars, a puisant and mighty people now possessed hereof; the reason of whose name we shall shew hereafter.

It containeth all those great and spacious Provinces, which the antients called Seres, Scythia extra Imaum, Scythia intra Imaum, Sacæ, Sogdiana, the greatest part of Sarmatia Asiatica, and part of Sarmatia Europæa: extending it self the whole length of Asia from the River Tanais, to the Eastern Ocean; taking in Taurica Chersonesus, and some other parts of Europe also. So that if we measure it by miles, it is said to contain 5400 from East to West, and 3600 from North to South: a greater quantity of ground than the Turkish Empire, but of less fertility and accompt.

In measuring by the way of degrees, it reacheth from the 50. degree of Longitude, to the 195. which is 145. degrees from West to East: and from the 40th. degree of Northern Latitude, unto the 80th. which is with ten degrees of the Pole it self. By which accompt it lieth from the beginning of the fixt Clime, where the longest day in summer is 15 hours; till they cease measuring by Climates; the longest day in the most Northren parts hereof, being full six moneths; and in the winter half of the year, the night as long.

The Countrey lying under such different Meridians, and such distant Climes, must needs be such, as no generall Character can be given of it; and therefore we shall deferre that, with the names of the Rivers, and chief Mountains, to the description of the several and particular Provinces. But for the people, being much of the same nature in every part, we may take the measure of them here. Affirmed to be of square Stature, broad faces, hollow eyes, thin beards, thick lips, flat noses, ugly Countenances; swart of complexion, not so much by the heat of the Sun, (which keeps farre enough off) as their naturall sluttishness. Barbarous every where in behaviour, especially in those parts which they call Asiatica, and Antiqua: but withall very strong of body, swift of footmanship, vigilant in time of service, and patient of all extremities both of cold and hunger. The women suitable to the men, scorning or wanting ornaments to set themselves out; or when they do, they seldom go beyond copper, feathers, or such precious gew-gawes.

In behaviour they are rude and barbarous, as before was said; eating their Enemies when they take them, as in way of revenge; first letting out their blood which they receive into Cups, and use it as wine unto their feast. Though swift of foot, yet generally they love to ride, though it be but on Oxen; about whose necks, as about their horses, when they travell, they use little bells, with which musick they are much delighted. Their speech, even in their common talk, is a kind of whinning; and their singing little better than the howling of wolves. They eat commonly with unwashed hands, the durt and grease about their fingers serving as a sawce for their meat, which they devour greedily, and with little chewing; and for their ordinary drink use mares milk. Homely of habit, made of the coursest stuff, and reaching no lower than the knee: and if they go to the charge of furrs, contrary to the custome of other people, they wear the hairy side outwards, and the skin next their own bodies; onely to shew the richnes of their Apparell. And yet so proud in this beggery, that they account the Christians but as dogs, contemn all the rest of the world, and think their Cham the onely considerable Prince; by whose name they swear, as by their Gods.

In matter of Religion it is hard to say, whether Mahometanism, or Paganism, be of most extent. some parts hereof being wholly Pagan, some wholly Mahometan, and some mixt of both. But of the two the Pagan is the better Gentleman, as being of the elder house, and of more Antiquity: the Sect of Mahomet not being entertained amongst them, till the year 1246.

And yet these have not so prevailed, as to extinguish the remainders of Christianity, of which there are amongst them many severall Churches. The Christian faith first planted amongst the Scythians, by the preaching of Saint Andrew, and Saint Philip, two of the Apostles. Overgrown in these later Ages by the Sect of Nestorians, either by the diligence of their Preachers, or for want of others to instruct them in more Orthodox Tenets. Before the prevailing of the Tartars, besides the Circassian Christians of whom more anon, there are in the most remote parts of Tartary, whole Kingdomes of that Religion; as namely that of Tenduch, then the chief of all: besides some numbers of them in Tanguth, Cauchinteles, Cassar, Samarchan, Karthim, Suchair, Ergimul, and Caraiam; where in the time of Paulus Venetus, who surveyed these parts about the year 127 they lived intermingled with the Pagans. Not so diminished since the conquest of those Countries by the Tartars, but that they are of a considerable number, especially in Cathay it self: where they are said to have a Metropolitan in the City of Cambalu (the principall City of that Empire) and he so honoured by the Great Cham, that for a time they receive their Crowns from no hands but his. Tartaria Precopensis.

As for the Tartars, they are by the Chronologer Genebrard, said to be the off-spring of the Ten Tribes, whom Salmanasser led away captive; and that especially for three reasons. The first is, that the word Tatari, by which name (saith he) they ought rather to be called, than by that of Tartari, signifieth in the Syriack and Hebrew tongues, a Remnant. But unto this it is answered, that the name of this people is derived from the River Tartar, as some; or from the Region called Tartar, where they first dwelt, as most think: and again, that though the Hebrew and תרתר signifie a remnant, yet can it not properly be applyed to the Tartars; who so infinitely exceed the Jews, that they cannot be thought to be a remainder of them. Secondly, he alledgeth for proof thereof, that this people use circumcision, the character of the Jewish Nation. And hereunto it is replyed, that circumcision was common to many people, besides the Jews, as to the Ægyptians, Æthiopians, &c. and that rather as a national custome, than a religious ordinance; and again, that the Tartars cannot be proved to have received circumcision, before they received Mahometanism. Thirdly, there is brought to confirm this opinion, a place of Esdras, cap. 13. lib. 2. where it is said, that the Ten Tribes (that they might the better keep Gods Statutes) passed over the River Euphrates; and after a journey of one year and a half, came into a Countrey called Arsareth. To resell which, those of the contrary opinion find no better course, than by shewing the impossibilities of it: For the Tartars (when their name was first known) were meer Idolaters, had no remembrance of the Law, observed not the Sabbath, nor any other point of Jewish religion: and so the Ten Tribes retired not hither to keep Gods Statutes. Secondly, Euphrates lyeth quite West from Assyria, and those places, to which Salmanassar transplanted the Israelites: and so it could not be passed over in a journey towards the North. And Thirdly, it is very improbable, that the Ten Tribes, should either be so simple, as to leave Assyria, where they were peaceably setled; or so valiant, as to force a passage thorough those Countries of Scythia; which neither Persians, Greeks, or Romans were able to withstand in the best of their fortunes,

To let pass therefore all imaginations of a forein Pedegree, the truth is, that they were no other than a Ruder and more Northern brood of Scythians; who pressed by want, or otherwise oppressed by the King of Tenduch, unto whom they were subject; armed themselves against him, obtained a memorable victory, and setled Cingis their chief Captain, in the Royall Throne. Anno 1162. After which, growing of more power, and inlarging their dominions further; they united in the name of Tartars all the Scythian Nations: as Mahomet did those of the three Arabia's, in the name of Saracens; or as in former times, the many severall Tribes of the German Nations, were united in the names of Franks, or Alemans. Not known in Europe by this name, till their many great and signall victories had made them formidable; which was about the year 1212. within very little of which time they had made themselves Masters of a larger Empire, than that of Macedon, or Rome, in their greatest glories. But being of a hasty growth, it decaied as suddenly; the greatest part of their European purchases, being conquered from them by the Dukes of Moscovy, and the Kings of Poland; as their acquests in Asia, and Africk, by the Turks, and Persians. Yet still they are possessed of so large a territory, that were they not distracted into severall States; or did those severall states depend upon one Supreme: that one Supreme might very easily give law unto all his Neighbours; and make the Turks, and Persians, tributaries, as in former times. But laying aside these speculations, of what they might do if united under one command: let us now look upon them as they are divided into these five parts, that is to say, 1. Tartaria Precopensis, 2. Asiatica, 3 Antiqua, 4. Zagathay, and 5. Cathay.

1. TARTARIA PRECOPENSIS.

TARTARIA PRECOPENSIS is bounded on the East, with the River Tanais, now Don; on the West, with the River Borysthenes, now called Nerper, by which last parted from Podolia, a Province of Poland; on the North, with part of Russia; and on the South, with some part of the Euxine Sea: by this accompt lying totally within Europe.

It had the name of Precopensis, from Precopia a chief Town thereof. By some called Tartaria Minor, to distinguish it from the greater body of that people: the Inhabitants hereof most commonly passing by the name of Crim-Tartars, from the Town of Crim; in which their Cham or Emperor doth reside most usually. The Countrey by them now possessed, part antiently of Sarmatia Europæa, was inhabited by a warlike nation called the Tauri: from whom those parts hereof which lie betwixt the Empire of Russia, and the two Rivers Tanais, and Borysthenes, were called Tauro-Scythia; that which shooteth out into the Sea, encompassed with the Euxine on the one side, and Palus Mæotis on the other, being called Taurica Chersonesus. In the description whereof at this place and time, as formerly I made bold with some part of Asia, to lay together the estate of the Russian Empire: so now to satisfie for that trespass, I shall make bold with part of Europe, to lay together the discourse and affairs of Tartary,

The whole Countrey plentiful of fruits, and the soyl indifferently disposed to tillage and grazing, though more accustomed unto the last: the people more delighting in their heards of cattel, than in the fullness of their Garners. Camels, Horse, Oxen, Sheep, and Goats they have plenty of; great store of delicate Precopenſis. licate fowl, and abundance of fiſh, bred in the large Fens of Mœotis: and in their Foreſts plenty of all ſorts of Veniſon. Which Character as it belongeth generally to all the Country, ſo moſt eſpecially to the Cherſoneſe or Demy-Iland. United to the main land with ſo narrow an Iſthmus, that the Tartars once went about to dig it thorow: from whence ſome ſay they had the name of Precopenſes, Precoph in the Sclavonian tongue, ſignifying a deep trench, or a digging thorow. In length not above 24 German, or 96 Italian miles; in breadth but 60 of the one, or 15 of the other. Bleſt with a very temperate Air, and a gentle winter: which beginning with the laſt of December, ends the firſt of March. Never extream, and when the froſts are at the ſharpeſt, but of ſhort continuance. Divided in the midſt with a chain of hills, extended from the Eaſt to Weſt; the boundary of the Dominions of the Turk and Tartar.

The people of the ſame complexion and compoſition, as the reſt of the Tartars; and not much different in manners. Their diet, Roots, Cheeſe, Garlick, and of the poorer ſort, for the moſt part horſe-fleſh (none but the better ſort preſuming upon Beef or Veniſon, though of both abundance) which they eat without bread or any thing elſe: and therefore when they go to the wars, every Souldier takes two horſes with him, the one to ſerve upon, and the other to kill. And yet for all this havock which they make of horſefleſh, there are few years in which they ſell not 40 or 50 thouſand in the fairs of Moſco. Towns they build none, ſcarce willing to maintain thoſe which were built to their hands. Nor have they (except men of trades and manufactures) any ſtanding houſes; removing up and down with their Droves of Cattel, moving their houſes with them, (which they build on wheels) from one place to another. Of money they make no eſteem, preferring braſs and ſteel before other mettals; becauſe more uſefull to them for Swords and Knives. Good Souldiers for the moſt part, eſpecially at the Bow and Arrows; to which ſo accuſtomed from their child-hood, that they can ſhoot as readily backward as forward. Trained alſo of late times, to the Harquebuſe, well skilled in handling the Turkiſh Scymetars, and their horſemens ſtaves. Not to be vanquiſhed but by death, as men that are reſolved rather to die than be taken Priſoners: and if victorious, more intent upon taking Captives (eſpecially young Boys and Girls, whom they ſell to the Turks) than upon any other Booty or ſpoils of war.

The Religion moſt embraced and countenanced is that of Mahomet, mingled with ſome of their old Principles of Chriſtianity: for they confeſs that CHRIST ſhall be the Judge both of the quick and dead, in the day of Judgement; and puniſh thoſe that ſpeak irreverently of him. In that regard more favourable to the Chriſtians, than other Mahometans; which makes great ſtore of Grecian, and Armenian Chriſtians to dwell amongſt them. The language which they ſpeak is their own Tartarian, but intermixt with much of the Arabick, and Turkiſh Tongues; and when they write, they uſe either Chaldæan, or Arabian Characters.

Rivers of moſt note in it, are 1. Boryſthenes, and 2. Tanais, which though they have their ſpring-heads in the Empire of Ruſſia (as was there declared) have their falls in this: the firſt in the Euxine Sea, in the 57th. the other into Palus Mœotis in the 67th. degree of Longitude; by which we may conjecture ſomewhat of the length of the Countrey. 3. Hipanes, 4. Carcinitis, falling into the Euxine, 5. Agaris, and 6 Byces, which loſe themſelves in the Fens of Mœotis; As do alſo 7. Paſtaſcus, 8. Gerus, 9. Lycus, from the main land, and 10. Iſtrianus from the Taurican Cherſoneſe. By the confluence of which waters, and many others falling from the Aſian ſide, the Lake or Fens of Mœotis are of great extent, in compaſs at leaſt a thouſand miles; well ſtored with fiſh, and ſtill retaining ſomewhat of the ſweetneſs of thoſe many Rivers, which are emptyed into it. So called from the Mœotæ, who formerly inhabited on the banks hereof; and giving name to an excellent kind of fiſh which were called Mœotides by the Antients. At this day generally called Mar delle Zabahe, by the Italians commonly Mar della Tana, the ſea of Tanais; and ſometimes alſo Mer Bianco, or the White Sea, to difference it from the Euxine, which they call the Black, for the reaſons formerly delivered. Paſſing directly towards the South, it is ſtreightned by a narrow Channel, not above four miles in breadth, though about 24. in length, called antiently by the name of Boſphorus Cimmerius: Boſphorus, becauſe Oxen did uſe to ſwim over it; Cimmerius from the Cimmerii who poſſeſſed the adjoyning Countrey, on the Aſian ſide: but known at this day by the name of Stretto di Caffa; from the City Capha neer unto it; and by the Inhabitants, Voſpero, more neer the Original. Out of this Streight that confluence of waters which do meet in the Mœotick Fens, do make their way into the Euxine. According to that of Lucan.

Quaque Fretum currens Mœotidas egerit undas.
Where the Mœotick Pools at laſt
Thorow a narrow Streight makes haſt.

Chief Cities of it at the preſent, 1. Capha, or Caffa, in the Cherſoneſe, not far from the Streight called hence Stretto di Caffa; a flouriſhing Empery, and furniſhed with a large and capacious Haven. Heretofore poſſeſſed by the Genoeſe, who by the benefit of this Port, and the Plantation which they had in Perah on the North ſide of Conſtantinople; engroſſed into their own hands the whole Trade of the Euxine. Taken by Mahomet the Great, Anno 1475. it became ſubject to the Turks, and drew into that thraldom all the Southern parts of the Cherſoneſe, which depended on it: deprived thereby of the greateſt part of its former luſtre, the Chriſtian Churches being deſtroyed, the Towers and publique buildings razed; the houſes of the Genoa Merchants which were fair and beautifull, deſtroyed and ruined: yet ſtill the principal of this biand, or Demy-Iland; and anciently better known by the name of Theodoſia, and by that name remembred in Ammianus. 2. Precoph, in Latine called Precopia; a Town and Caſtle ſituate in or neer the place, where ſtood the Eupateria of the Antients: called alſo Pompeiopolis, Heraclea, and Achillis, Curſus. 3. Corſunum, the Cherſoneſus of Ptolomy, anciently a Greek Colony; and then accompted for the chief of the whole Peninſula: rich, populous, and well-traded, by reaſon of the Haven which was ſafe and large; and of great beauty and magnificence, as the ruins teſtifie. By the Turks at this day called Sari Germanum, or the yellow Tower, the ſoyl about it being of a Saffron colour. 4. Cremam, or Crim, the antient Seat of the Chams, or Princes of theſe Tartars; and at that time the faireſt and greateſt of this Biland. Situate in the middeſt thereof, and fortified with a ſtrong Caſtle; for the height of the walls, and depth of the ditch eſteemed impregnable: ſuppoſed to be the Taphræ of Pliny, or the Taphros of Ptolomy. Mentioned by Florus, as then lately taken by ſome Roman Emperor, and ſo moſt likely to be Trajan; the firſt that ever extended the Roman Empire beyond Danubius, and the Euxine. Situate in the very Iſthmus; and ſo commanding both the Euxine, and the Lakes of Mœotis; as Corinth betwixt the Ægean, and Ionian. Seas. 5. Panticapæum, ſituate on the very Boſphorus, and now called Voſpero by the natives: the antienteſt City of this Peninſula, and ſaid by Ammianus to be the mother of all the Greek Colonies, which were planted in it. 6. Tanas, the Tanais of Ptolomy and other antients, becauſe ſituate on the mouth of that River; or rather betwixt the two mouths of it, diſtant from one another a degree of Longitude. A town of great trade, and well frequented by the Merchants of all thoſe Countries, which border on the Euxine, Sea: but ſubject to the Turks who hath there a Garriſon, and by them called Azac. 7. Ingermenum, ſituate on a large and lofty Mountain, and fortified with a Tower or Caſtle of ſtone; under which there is a Church, with great charge and Art cut out of the Rock: formerly of great wealth and fame, now decaied and ruinous. 8. Jamboli, by ſome called Balachium. 9. Mancopia, by the Turks called Mangutum, 10. Circum; all boaſting of their ſeverall Caſtles. 11. Oczakow, or Oczacovia, ſituate neer the influx of the great River Boryſthenes, into the Bay of Carcimitis; and ſo moſt like to be built in the place of that, which Ptolomy calleth Olbiah, Pliny, Olbiopolis. Honoured of late times (ſince the taking of Taurica by the Turks) with the reſidence of the great Cham: from whence theſe Tartars are by ſome called Olſanenſes. 12. Metropolis as Ptolomy, or rather Miletopolis as Pliny calleth it; a Colony in old times of the Mileſians, not farre from Olbia. Beſides all which, and many others mentioned by the antient Writers, of which there is nothing now remaining; the Court of the great Cham in Summer time makes a moveable City; built upon Wheel-houſes, and tranſported from one place to another, as occaſion ſerveth: which houſes at every ſtation are orderly diſpoſed of into Streets, and lanes, and by the Tartars are called Agara, or a Town of Carts. Precopenſis.

The antient Inhabitants hereof were of Scythian race; for by that name, ſome elder writers call not onely the true and proper Scythians, lying on both ſides of Imaus; but even the Sauromatæ or Sarmatians alſo: and thoſe not onely of Sarmatia Aſiatica, bordering next unto them; but even ſuch Europæan nations, as lived on the Northern banks of Iſter, and the Euxine Sea. And ſo they are affirmed to be by Ptolomy himſelf; though otherwiſe more exact than any, in diſtingniſhing Sarmatia Europæa, from Aſiatica; and Aſiatica from the Scythians. For ſpeaking of the Nations of Sarmatia Europæa, inhabiting on the Palus Mœotis, he ranks them thus. Καὶ πᾶς ὅλως ὁ παρὰ τὴν Μαιώτιδα, &c. i. e. And all along the coaſts of Mœotis, dwell the Iazyges (diſtinct from thoſe called Metanaſtæ) and the Rhoxolani; and more within the land, the Hamaxobii and Alani, Scythians. More towards the banks of the Euxine, and in the Cherſoneſe it ſelf, dwell the antient Tauri, ſubdivided into the ſeverall Nations of the Sinchi, Napæi, and Arinchi, by the ſaid Ptolomy included in the general name of Tauro Scythi. To none but theſe, of all the Europæan Sarmatians doth he give this name. And therefore I conceive them to have been thoſe Scythians, againſt whom Darius King of Perſia made his fruitleſs war. Picking a quarrell with this people, becauſe their King had denied to give him one of his daughters to wife; or to revenge, as others more improbably ſay, the inrode which the Scythians formerly had made into Aſia; he drew together an army of 700. thouſand. Paſſing over the Thracian Boſphorus, he came at laſt to the banks of the Iſter, where it parteth Moldavia, and Bulgaria; and there for the paſſage of his men cauſed a bridge to be built, to the keepers whereof he left a Cord of 60. knots: commanding them every day to untie one knot; and if he came not back before all were united, to return to their houſes. This done he marched towards his enemies, who ſtill fled before him; leading him into the moſt deſert and unhabitable parts of their Countrey: and when they had brought him into a ſtreight, ſent Ambaſſadours to him with a bird, a mouſe, a frog, and an handfull of Arrows; willing the Perſians, if they could, to expound that Ridle. Darius willing to hope the beſt of his deſign, conjectured that the Scythians did ſubmit unto him; by delivering into his hands their Air, Earth, Water, and Arms, Hieroglyphically ſignified in their preſent. But Gobrias, one of the ſeven Princes made this expoſition, that if the Perſians could not flie like a bird thorow the air, or like a mouſe creep under the earth, or like a frog ſwim over the water; they could by no means ſcape the Perſian Arrows. And to ſay truth, this Commentary beſt agreed with the Text. For theſe Scythians following cloſe upon him, or rather driving him before them, and vexing him with continuall skirmiſhes; forced him to make ſuch haſt to get over the River, that he loſt 80000 of his men in the fight and flight. This was the onely memorable Action of theſe Europæan Scythians, in thoſe elder ages: more memorable in the times ſucceeding, for their horrid cruelty, than any argument of their valour. For it is ſaid of theſe Tauri, or Tauro-Scythæ, that for the pleaſing of their Gods, eſpecially of Diana, whom they called Orſiloche; they uſed to ſacrifice all ſuch ſtrangers, as they could lay hands on, and with their heads moſt barbarouſly adorned the walls of her Temples. An inhumanity with which the Chriſtian Advocates of the Primitive times, did much uſe to upbraid the Gentiles; taunting them with the ſacrifices of Diana Taurica (ſo named from hence) as inconſiſtent with the nature of a God or goodneſs; moſt rightly giving them this brand or cenſure, that they were not ſacra, but Sacrilegia. Et præſtat profanus eſſe quam ſic religioſus. Better it was to be of no Religion, than of one ſo cruel.

But to go forwards with the ſtory, in the actions of the Greeks and Romans we hear nothing of them, unleſs it were that the Emperour Trajan (as Florus ſeems to intimate) took the City of Taphre. Which if he

it he did, he added by that action somewhat to his own honour, but nothing to the Roman Empire: this people being never reckoned amongst their Provinces. Nor hear we any thing by name, of their infesting the Roman territories (as the other barbarous Nations did): except they passed in the account of the Gothes, Alani, Hunnes, Avares, or other of the Scythians or Sarmatian people; by which the majesty of that Empire was trod under foot. But what the Persians, Greeks, and Romans were not able to do, was with ease effected by the Tartars: who in the time of Jocchata, or Heccata, the next to Cingis, under the conduct of Batku, or Roydo, one of their most renowned Commanders, subdued all these parts; together with Russia, on the North, Bulgaria, and Hungarie on the East. Subject at first to the command of the Great Cham of Cathaia, as the rest of the Tartarians were, they came at last to have a Prince of their own; one Lochtan Cham, descended from the aforesaid Batku, and (as it was pretended) of the blood of Cingis. They grew at last of so great power, by conquering the Asiatick Tartars which lay neerest to them, that Mahomet the Great thought fit to keep them down before grown too strong for him: and therefore under colour of taking in the City of Capha, then possessed by the Genoese, made himself master of the greatest part of the Taurican Chersonese; and the Port of Tanais; thereby commanding both Mœotis, and the Euxine Sea. In the time of Selimus the first, who had maryed a daughter of this Crim-Tartar (for so they call him) and was aided by him with an Army of 15000 men against his Father; the Turks and these Tartarians grew into a League. The chief conditions of it were, that the Tartar should aid the Turk upon all occasions, with 60000 horse, if it were required; that they shall not make war with any of their neighbours, (except the Moscovite) without leave of the Turk; that they shall pay yearly to the Grand Signieur in the way of tribute, 300 Christians; that the new Cham, upon the death or deposition of his Predecessor, shall receive from the Great Turk a Royall Banner, in token of his Confirmation in that estate; that in reward of these services, the Crim-Tartar shall have yearly from the Grand Signieur 5500 Ducates, in the way of pension; and succeed finally in the Turkish Empire, if ever the male issue of the house of Ottoman should chance to fail. According unto this agreement, the Tartars have been aiding to the Turks from time to time, against the Persians, Polanders, Hungarians, Moldavians, and indeed whom not; and that with great and puissant Armies; the Great Cham sometimes arming 150000 of his own Subjects (leaving but one man in an house to attend their cattel); and sometimes adding 50000 Circassians, and others of the Asian Tartars. And for the Moscovite, whom he is left at liberty to assault by this Capitulation; he hath had so hard an hand upon him, that in the year 1571 they pierced as far as to the City of Mosco, and set fire on the Suburbs: which flaming into the City built most of wood, and then reckoned to be 30 miles in compass; within the space of four hours burnt the greatest part of it, and therein no fewer than 800000 of all sorts of people: A quarrel not to be composed; the Tartar not only laying claim to the Kingdomes of Casan, and Astrachan, which the Russe possesseth; but even to Moscovie it self, as hath there been shewn. Nothing so punctuall is the Turk on his part, to perform the contract; who not content to have the Tartar for his friend, or at the worst his Homager, hath of late times attempted to make him his slave or Vassall. For Amurath the third, quarrelling Mahomet the Crim-Tartar for a design to intercept Osman Bassa, in his way from Persia to Constantinople; authorised the said Osman to war upon him: by whom the poor Crim and his two Sons, betrayed by some of his own Counsellers (corrupted with Turkish Gold) were strangled with a Bowstring; Islan a brother of the Crims, first sworn a Vassal to the Turk, put into the place; and over him a Turkish Beglerbeg or Bassa, to command in chief. What hopes he hath of succeeding in the Turkish Empire, if the house of Ottoman should fail, hath been already taken into consideration, in our discourse upon that subject.

What the Revenue of this Prince is, it is hard to say; his subjects having little money, and living most upon the bartery of their Cattel. But besides what he hath in Lands or Customs, and the 5500 Ducats yearly which he receiveth from the Turk; he hath the tenth of all the spoils which are got in the wars, and a Checkine for every Captive, for some, two or three (whosoever taketh them) according unto their estates.

As for his power, what he can do in horse we have seen already; and as for foot, and Ammunition, and other necessaries, he is supplied with them by the Turk, (who doth sometimes espouse his quarrels); by whose assistance they have brought the Moscovites to some extremities. And upon confidence of the favour and protection of the Grand Signieur, the Cham then being, upon the death of Stephen Bathori (whom Amurath the 3d. commended to the Crown of Poland) sent Ambassadours to negotiate his election to that Kingdome: and to induce them thereunto promised them in his letters amongst other things, that their Pope should be his Pope, their Luthur his Luther; and that rather than put them unto any charge to find his Table, he could live with Horse-flesh. His Embassie entertained with Laughter, as it well deserved.

2. TARTARIA DESERTA.

TARTARIA DESERTA is bounded on the West, with Precopensis, and the Empire of Russia; on the East, with Antiqua, and Zagathay; from which last parted by the River Spane, which falleth into the Caspian Sea about the middle of it, and with the great Lake of Kitay, from East to West: on the North, with the Scythick or frozen Ocean; and on the South, with part of the Euxine Sea, the Caucasian Mountains, and some part of the Caspian.

It took this name from the many Desarts which are in it; and is called also Asiatica, to diffetance it from Precopensis, which is wholly in Europe: or because it taketh up the whole Continent of Sarmatia Asiatica, according to the bounds thereof laid down by Ptolomy, except some part hereof incorporated to the Russian Empire.

The

The Countrey of it self sufficiently fruitful, if well manured; and were it in the hands of a laborious and industrious people, would yield large increase: as appears by the ill husbandry of the Tartars, who sow nothing on it but Mill and Punicum (grains unknown to us) and yet without giving it any tillage, receive very plentiful returns of both. But the Tartar being a Nation that hateth Agriculture, and laugheth at Christians for living on the tops of Reeds, (so they call our bread); neglect all that which is not of a rank pasture for their Herds and Cattel: moving from one place to another, as the grass faileth them; which maketh it so full of Desarts, and so empty of Towns, as to deserve the name of Tartaria Deserta. Deserta.

The people or Inhabitants of it are of severall sorts; derived from three severall Originalls, and disposed of in three severall parts. 1. The Samoyeds, dwelling towards the Northern Ocean, who are wholly Idolaters. 2. the Circassians, bordering on the Euxine, for the most part Christians; and 3. the Tartars, planted betwixt both, being all Mahometans. These again subdivided into severall Tribes, which they call their Hordes: of which the most considerable are, 1. the Nagaian Tartars, 2. the Zavolhenses, 3. the Thumenenses, 4. the Kirgessi; besides the Hordes or Kingdomes of Casan, and Astrachan, added unto the Empire of Russia, were described already; and others of inferiour note, not here considerable.

But before we come to speak of these people in their severall places, we must first look upon the whole Countrey, as presented to us under the name of Sarmatia Asiatica: bounded by Ptolomy as before, save that it did extend more Westwards; and was unknown to him in the Northern parts of it; now possessed by the Moscovite. So populous in the time of that Author, that he giveth us the names of fourty severall Nations which did then inhabit it; and of about as many Towns of good estimation. Of which there are but few or none remaining; and for the names of some of the principall of them, we shall have them presently.

Rivers of most note in it, 1. Marabius, 2. Rhombitus the Greater, and 3. the Less; 4. Anticus, 5. Theophanius, 6. Psathis, 7. Thesyris, 8. Corax, and 9. Vardanes; all of them falling into the Euxine, and Mœotick Fennes. 10. Udonis, 11. Alnuta, and 12. Rha, paying their tributes to the Caspian or Hyrcanian Sea. Of these the principall is Rha, by the modern Latines called Volga, by the Tartars Edi; rising in Russia, not far from the City of Mosco, (where we have described it.) Most memorable, besides the seventy mouths or Channels, wherewith it openeth into the Caspian, for a medicinable and wholesome root growing on both sides thereof; which the Physicians call Rha, by the name of the River; and for distinctions sake Rha Pontick, to difference it from Rhubarb, or Rha Barbarum, as of a different nature from it; this last being purgative, and the other more apt to bind. 13. Ob, a River unknown to Ptolomy, rising out of the lake of Kitay, a Lake in bigness like the Sea, and full of many little Ilands (most of them inhabited.) Which River at its first parting from this Lake, is said to be of 8 miles breadth; and growing still bigger and bigger, emptieth it self at last in the Northern Ocean; the present boundary betwixt the Russian, and the people in the North of this Countrey.

Principall Mountains of this part, 1. Corax, giving name unto the River issuing out of it. 2. Montes Hippici, extended towards the Caspian Sea. 3. Montes Ceraunii, lying in the furthest parts hereof (then known unto my Author) to the North and East. 4. Caucasus, or Caucasii Montes, extended from the Euxine to the Caspian Seas; and parting Sarmatia Asiatica, from Colchis, Iberia, and Albania. A chain of hills of which Aristotle saith, acumine & latitudine omnium maximi, &c. that for height and breadth they are the greatest of the East; the tops whereof are lightned by the Sunbeams in midnight till almost day-break, when it is dark-night in the valleys beneath. Not passable for horse or foot (except they creep along by the Euxine shore) but at one place onely, called Sarmatiæ Pylæ, or the Gates of Sarmatia; by others named Caucasiæ Portæ, from the hills adjoining. Situate in the 81 degree of Latitude; and not far from the Caspian Sea: but that so intricate and narrow, that very small force may keep it against strong Armies. So carefull did Almighty God in his heavenly Providence, shut up this fierce and barbarous people, from the rest of Mankind, by such unfordable Waters, and impassable Mountains: not to be freed out of their prison, till he thought good to use them, as the executioners of his wrath and vengeance, for the punishment of sinful and impenitent Nations. This said, we will consider those particular Nations, which before we named, and are now possessed of it in their several places.

1. Opposite to the Precopenses lie the CIRCASSIANS, extended from the Cimmerian Bosphorus and the Fennes of Mœotis, towards the Eastern shores of the Euxine Sea, for the space of 500 miles; and reaching 200 miles towards the North. The name imposed on them by the Tartars: whereas before, they were called by Pliny, Zigæ, by some writers Zychi, conceived to be the Zinchi of Ptolomy.

The Countrey very fitly seated for trade and merchandise, as having a fair and large Sea-coast, with many Rivers opening into it (nine of those spoken of before passing thorow these tracts): and not a few capacious Baies, and commodious Havens. Of which the principall were Sinus Cerceticus, or the Bay of Cercetis, Synda, and Bata, two known Havens, and specified by my Author with the adjunct of Portus. But these conveniences not much looked after by the present Inhabitants, who are more inclined to the wars, than to trades, or merchandise. A stout and military people, trained to their weapons from their child-hood; and sold as soon as trained to it by unnaturall Parents. For from these parts did the Mamalucks of Egypt fetch their first Originall; from hence supply themselves with a perpetuall Seminary of slaves and Souldiers raised by degrees unto the highest dignities of that slavish Empire. And from these parts the Persian Sophies are supplied with thier Cozzel-Bassas disciplined and instructed by them like the Turkish Janizaries.

Deserta.

The Christian faith was here planted in the year 860 or thereabouts, by the Ministry of Cyrill (or Chiarill) and Methodius; employed in that service by the Patriarch of Constantinople. In which respect their Churches are of the Greek Communion, conform thereto in rites and doctrine, and of the jurisdiction of that Patriarch: but differing from them very much in matters practicall. For it is ordinary with these half Christians, not to baptize their children till eight years old; to hear divine service standing without their Churches, into which they very seldome enter (especially the Gentlemen) till the 40th. or (as some say) the 60th. year of their age: dividing the whole course of their life betwixt God and the Devil, in dedicating their youth unto theft and Robbery, their old Age (when they can no longer commit those villanies) to the difficult business of repentance.

Places of most observation amongst the Antients, 1. Cimmerium, a Town and Promontory, so called from the Cimmerii, once the chief people of these parts; of whom more anon; situate on the very shore of the Bosphorus, from hence denominated. 2. Phanagoria, in old times a well-traded Empory; situate on a little Hand raised out of the Sea, by the care and industry of the Greeks, who had here a Factory. 3. Apathurgus, by Pliny called Apaturum, memorable for a Temple of Venus surnamed Apaturia (which name she gave unto this place): because (saith Strabo) when the Giants assaulted her, she craved help of Hercules, who slew them all one after another. 4. Geruſa, by Ptolomy honoured with the title of Civitas; the Gargaza of Diodorus, now called Saint Georges. 5. Oenuntia, neer the mouth of the River Thesyris. 6. Araza, more within the land, which with 7. Ampsacis, hath the name of a City also. The name of their chief Havens we have seen before. But few of these, or any other mentioned by the antient Authors, being now visible in their ruins: the chief of those which are now extant, are 1. Locoppa, 2. Conioce; but of no great note.

The people antiently though divided into the severall Tribes of the Therſagetæ, Zigæ, Turcæ, the Hunnes, Avares, and Mæotæ, all noted Nations; besides the Coaxtræ, Zinchi, Tyrambæ, Pselii, and others as obscure as they; were better known by the name of Cimmerians, in which those several tribes concentred. Descended in the right of that common originall, from Gomer the Son of Japhet, first planted in the mountainous places of Albania: his posterity known by the name of Gomerii, afterwards Cimmerii, left there a memorial of themselves in the mountains called Cimmerini. But that Country proving both too barren, and too narrow for them, some of them passed into Phrygia Major, where they built the City Cimmeris, not unknown to Pliny, in whose time it was extant: and others in some tract of time, keeping the Euxine on their left hand, fixed themselves in these parts; here giving name to the Town and Promontory Cimmerion, to the Cimmerian Bosphorus, and generally to all the people descended of them. From these particularly, as the stout and valiant Nation of the Cimbri, do derive their Pedegree; so from these and the children of Mesech, Magog, and Tubal; the Sarmatians both of Europe and Asia, the Moscovites, and perhaps the Scythians, are to fetch their Originall: all of them great and puisant Nations, and all involved promiscuously in the name of Scythians. Renowed for no other action more than the memorable expedition, which they made into Media in the Greater, and Lydia in the Lesser Asia: the Cimmerians by themselves alone, or by them as principall; the rest of these Sarmatians in a body together, as a Scythian People. Distressed with want, or to disburden their small Countrey of superfluous multitudes, these Cimmerii in the time of Nabulassar, or Salmanassar, King of Assyria, communicating their design with the rest of the Scythians, to enlarge their quarters; holding along the course of the Euxine Sea, and passing thorow the Contrey of Colchis, first seized on some parts of Pontus and Paphlagonia. Where having fortified the Promontory on which Sinope was after built; and leaving there their carriages, and the weakest of their train, with sufficient guards; they marched into Lydia; reputed (as it was indeed) for a wealthy Region. There they possessed themselves of Sardis, the royall City, and after of the rest of the Countrey, or the most part of it; Ardis, the Son of Giges, who then reigned in Lydia, not being able to withstand them. Both besides being wearied with long war, and grown more pliant by degrees unto one another (as in like case betwixt the Saxons, and the Danes) it proved no difficult matter for Halyattes, the grand-child of Ardis, to compound the business: assigning to the Cimmerians all those parts of his dominions, which lay beyond the River Halys; and setling his Lydians in the rest. By this transaction there were so good correspondences betwixt the Nations, that when Cyaxares, King of the Medes invaded the Countrey of these Cimmerians, under colour of the invasion which the Scythians had made in Media; Halyattes did espouse the quarrel, and appeared in their aid. In following times, growing into confidence of one another, and mixt in Marriages and blood, they became one people; or at least passed not under the accompt of strangers, or the name of Aliens. Such end had this most notable expedition of these Cimmerians; not much remembred after this, for the like undertakings. Yet here they held their own, though in other names, governed by many petit Princes, but all associated with Mithridates against the Romans: that King being so great amongst them, that his son Machares having married into some of their families, was made King of Bosphorus. But Machares having made his peace with Lucullus, the Romans never looked this way. Nor hear we much of them in succeeding times, till the invasion of the Tartars, by whom subdued, they acknowledged at first the Great Cham for their Soveraign Lord: whose power declining, they have successively been subject to the Crim-Tartar, the Turk, and Moscovite; but most commonly to the Crim-Tartar, as their neareſt neighbour, and most able to hurt them. And him they furnish on command, with 50000 horse for the Grand Signeurs service: yet so that they supply the Persian with his Cozzel-Bassas, and sometimes serve under him for pay, as they do under any which will entertain them. Governed like the Suissers, by their severall Commonalties: yet so, that every Commonalty hath some principal man (which the Suissers have not) whom they call Morseys, (that is Dukes) to direct and order them.

2. Betwixt these and the River Volga dwell the ZAVOLHENSES, one of the greatest

Hords

Hords or Tribes, of all the Tartars; and therefore called Horda Magna. Of these the Crims, or Percopenses were a Castling onely; proceeding out of this great Swarm or Nest of Hornetts, though afterwards they became their masters. Of the Countrey or the People we say nothing here, having sufficiently spoken of both already. Their chief Town hath the name of Bolgar, situate on the River Volga, and from thence so named: Volgar, and Bolgar differing but little in Orthographie, and not much in sound. Deserta.

This Countrey, as I take it by the situation, should be that which Ptolomy calleth Mithridatis Regio: whether so called in honour of him by the Princes of the neighbouring Cimmerians, with whom he had contracted alliance; or that he had made any conquests there, or from some other Prince of the same name; I determine not. And in this tract were those two Pillars, advanced unto the honour of Alexander, in Ptolomy called Columnæ Alexandri, in whose time they stood without defacement: there being also Altars erected to him, or in memory of him, neer the Banks of Tanais; occurring in the same Author by the name of Aræ Alexandri. Which probably occasioned the error of Qu. Curtius, who brings Alexander, in pursuit of the Scythian warre, as farre as Tanais: whereas it is apparent by the course of his actions, that he never got beyond the River Taxartes; distant from Tanais no less than 2000 miles.

This Tribe first governed by its own King, whom they called Ulu-Cham, or the Great Cham, was in the year 1506. subdued by the Grim-Tartar, and made subject to him. Afterwards conquered by Basilius the Great Duke of Moscovy, who thereupon assumed the title of King of Bolgar: which his Successors still preserve, with the Town it self; well garrisoned to keep open the whole course of the River Volga, by which they mannage the great trade of the Caspian Sea. But for the main body of this people, they returned again to their obedience to the Crim, as being a limb of the same body with him; and are subject unto his commands: though by reason of their neighbourhood to the Moscovite, and commerce with that Nation; they frame themselves both to their language, habit, and behaviour.

3. East of the Zavolhenses, on the other side of the Volga, dwell the NOIHACENSES, or NAGAIANS, spreading as far as the borders of Zagathay, and declining Southward towards the Caspian Sea, and the Montes Hippici. Accompted the best men of war of all the Tartars, but more fierce and cruell than the rest: void of all Arts, not having, or contemning money, or the use of Corn. Horse-flesh and Mares Milk, their best diet; the flesh either rosted by the Sun, or heated by continuall hanging at their sadle-bow. And with such cheer (nor worse nor better) did Azim Can, one of the Princes of this Tribe, entertain Jenkinson and other English men in their travells to the Caspian, from the River Volga. Their chief Town, if possibly it deserve that name, is called Scharayirzik, the Residence of one of their Princes; and the next, Sellisture, where the said Jenkinson found the Cham, as in the prime place of his abode. The Government is by severall Morseys, the Heads or Chiefs, no doubt, of their severall Clans: agreeing well enough together against the Moscovite; whom they infest with frequent inrodes, and put him to the charge of continuall Garrisons, at Casan, Astrachan, and Wiatra. Their wars for the most part only prædatorie, rather to get some present booty, than out of any hope to enlarge their dominion: and therefore commonly pacifyed, and sent home with presents. The Great Duke is so good a Statesman, as to think the expence of money cheaper than that of blood; especially when he hath to deal with such an Enemy, who hath neither any Town of consequence, or fixt place of dwelling, and consequently nothing to be got but blowes. Their Morseys, formerly more in number, were of late times reduced unto three; of which he of Scharayirzik was the Chief; to whose direction, and appointment (especially in matters which concerned the publick) the other two do commonly submit themselves.

4. Betwixt these Nagaians, and the Circassians, lie those Tribes which they call the KIRGESSI, spreading as far as to the mouths or influx of the River Volga: but intermixt with the Heselites, and Baschurides, two other of the Tartarian Tribes, but of less power. Their life, for the most part in continuall motion, removing with their wives and families from one place to another; and governing themselves in their removes, by the sight of the Pole-star. Partly Mahometan, partly Gentiles; but the Gentiles make the greater number: not burying their dead bodies, as in other places, but hanging them upon a tree, though they stink again: certain enough that they will be devoured or sweetned; before they return back to the same Station. Much reverence yet they give their Priests, by whom sanctified and besprinkled in their publick meeting, with a certain mixture, compounded of blood, milk, earth, and Cow-dung, a most sweet confection, but good enough for them that desire no better. And yet with these the Moscovite is fain to hold fair compliance, and to send them every year some presents; for fear they should joyn with the Nagaians, or otherwise disturb him in his Caspian Trade down the River Volga.

5. The THUMENSES or THUMEN TARTARS lie more North than any of these Tartarians; having on the South, the Zavolhenses, and the territory of Viatka in the Empire of Russia. A warlike people, and living neer a dangerous neighbour: for which cause they do not straggle so abroad in petit companies, as the others do, but keep together in great bodies: For the most part much delighted in Negromancy, and conjurations. In which the devill so befools them, that he suffereth them to raise tempests; and sometimes, by Diabolicall illusions, to defeat their enemies. The only Hord of all Deserta, which still continue in obedience to their naturall Lord, the great Cham of Cathay. And unto these we may adjoin the Molgomozans, all Gentiles, and the most barbarous of all: living in Caves, and feeding upon worms, and mice; and Serpents, and such other Vermine; as would be poison unto any but such Molgomozans, who are more poisonous than those creatures.

These Hords, together with the Kingdomes of Casan, and Astrachan, and such of the Russian Provinces, as lie on the East of Tanais and the River Düina, make up that Countrey which antiently passed under the name of Sarmatia Asiatica: inhabited originally, by the Descendants of Gomer, Mesech, Tubal, Zagathay. bal, Magog, the Sons of Japhet; ſpreading themſelves more Northwards as they grew in numbers, but of Albania, Iberia, Colches, and the Pontick, or Cimmerian Nations. Divided into the Tribes or Families of the Olandæ, Gerri, Samocolchi, Socani, Seci, Scimnitæ, Agaritæ, Merdi, Conapſeni, Chænides, Baſilici, Hyperborei, Hippophagi, and others of as little note: theſe laſt ſo called from their eating of horſes, which dyet they have left unto their Succeſſours. So like in manners and conditions, to the neighbouring Scythians, that they paſſed commonly by that name: and by that name are memorable for the great expedition by them made into Aſia the Greater; at ſuch time as the Cimmerians fell into Aſia Minor. For paſſing without oppoſition thorow the Sarmatian Streights, where they might have been eaſily kept out; and leaving behind them the more barren Countrey of Albania, they fell into Media: where they were incountred (but victorious,) by Phraartes, then King of the Medes. Who finding that he was not able to remove them by force, aſſayed it by cunning; and firſt perſwaded them to look towards the South, as into richer Countryes, and more like to yield them full content. Hereupon, full of prey and preſents, they marched towards Ægypt, but were met in Syria by Pſamniticus the Ægyptian King; who had heard of their comming; and thought it beſt to entertain them on the way, and not to bid them welcome at home to his greater coſt. Out-vying the Median (as of the two, the richer Prince) he loaded them with gifts and treaſure, and ſo ſent them back again into Media; from whence they came: where for many years they afflicted that people, and the neighbouring Provinces, doubling their tributes, and uſing all kind of inſolencies: till in the end; Cyaxares, the Son and Succeſſour of Phraartes, acquainting ſome of his moſt faithfull ſubjects with his deſign, cauſed the better part of them to be plentifully feaſted, made them drunk, and ſlew them; recovering thereby the poſſeſſion of his whole eſtate. Afterwards, imitated by the Engliſh in their Hock-tide ſlaughter. Such of them as eſcaped this blow, and were not willing to be ſubject to the Kings of Media (as many of them were); were ſuffered to return home by the ſame way they came; where at their coming, they found foul work made by their wives and their ſlaves, the ſtory whereof we had when we were in Ruſſia. After this we hear nothing of them in the ſtories of the Greeks, and Romans, unleſs thoſe Amazons, who attended their Queen Thaleſtris, when ſhe beſtowa viſit on Alexander, were rather of theſe Sarmatian Amazons, than of thoſe of Pontus and Thermodon, as I think they were: the neerneſs of their dwelling to Hyrcania, in which place they found him, inducing me to his opinion. But poſſible enough it is, (though it be not certain) that ſome of theſe Sarmatian tribes, though by other names, hearing of the ſucceſſes of the Hunnes, Avares, and other barbarous nations, which made havock of the Roman Empire; might join themſelves unto them, and make up their numbers: thoſe nations being elſe too ſmall to compound ſuch Armies, as by them were brought into the field againſt the Romans, with out ſuch like helps. What their eſtate hath been ſince ſubdued by the Tartars, hath been ſhewn already.

3. ZAGATHAY.

ZAGATHAY is bounded on the Eaſt, with the Mountain Imaus, by which it is parted from Cathay; on the North, with the main Scythick or Frozen Ocean; on the Weſt, with Tartaria Deſerta, from which ſeparated by the River Soane, and the Lake of Kitay; and on the South, with the Caſpian Sea, and the River Oxus, by which divided from the Empire of Perſia. So called from Zagathay, a brother of one of the Great Chams, on whom it was conferred for his better maintenance; the Scythia intra montem Imaum, of the antient writers.

The Countrey ſpreading out ſo far, on all ſides; as before appeareth, comprehendeth all thoſe Provinces and tracts of ground, which antiently were called 1. the Countrey of the Sacæ, 2. Sogdiana, with 3. Zagathay, ſpecially ſo called, 4. and Turcheſtan, included antiently in the name of Scythia intra montem Imaum; and 5. the Terra incognita, which Ptolomy makes to be the Northern boundarie of that part of Scythia. By taking a ſurvey of all which particulars, we ſhall find the temper of the whole.

1. SACÆ, or the Countrey of the Sacans, is bounded on the Eaſt, with the mountain Imaus, on the Weſt, with Sogdiana; on the North, with Zagathay, properly and ſpecially ſo called; on the South, with the River Oxus, by which parted from Bactria. So called from the Sacæ, the Inhabitants of it; but the reaſon of their name I find not.

The Countrey antiently either barren, or ill manured; full of vaſt Foreſts, wide Deſarts, and the like unhabitable places. Few or no Cities in it, and not many villages (civitates autem non habent, as my Author hath it) the people living for the moſt part in Caves, or otherwiſe wandring up and down with their droves of cattel. Called for that reaſon Nomades by ſome antient writers. The name not proper to theſe onely, but common to all thoſe who followed the like roving life; as the Sarmatians, wild Arabians, Saracens, and the Inhabitants of Libya and Numidia in Africk. Onely one fortified place they had, which from the materials of it had the name of Turris Lapidea, (Λιθινος πυργος, in the Greek) or the Caſtle of Stones; Part hereof being peopled for the moſt part by Camels, or travellable onely with thoſe Creatures, had the name of Camelorum Regio.

Divided it was antiently into many Tribes, the Caratæ, and Comari, neer the River Jaxartes; the Maſſagetæ, and Gomedæ, neer the hills called Aſcatanas; the Bylcæ and Grynæi, more within the Countrey. All joyned in one by the name of Sacæ; and by that name made a very fortunate Progreſs into Armenia (to which they had an eaſie paſſage by the Northern banks of the Caſpian Sea) and therein gave name unto the Province called Sacaſena. But proceeding into Cappadocia, and there ſlain by the Perſians in the middeſt of their Feaſtings, they left there alſo ſome reſemblance of their name, in an annuall feſtivall called Sacea; celebrated by the Perſians, in memoriall of their good ſucceſs in the warre againſt them. Such as ſtayd here, being overcome by Cyrus the firſt Perſian Monarch, did ſo good ſervice to that Prince, Prince, that Amorges the King of these Sacæ, is said to have rescued him from the hands of the Scythians, by whom otherwise he had been slain, or taken Prisoner. In the declining of that Kingdome, they were subdued by Alexander at the end of his Scythian, and Sogdian warres; who hereabouts, by Cohortanes a noble Persian, was presented with a Bevy of beautifull Ladies; one of the which was that Barsine whom he made his wife, and had by her that Hercules, whom Polysperchon and his faction proclamed King of Macedon. Not memorable in the following times for any thing which they did or suffered; as they have been made by the opinion or mistake of others. Who building Castles in the Air, will needs derive the Saxons (our famous Ancestors) from this Originall: as if they were called Saxons, quasi Sac-sonnes, or the Sonnes of Sacæ. A fancy in my poor conceit, of no ground at all. For either the number of these Sacæ, when they left these parts, must be great, or little. If little, how can we conceive it possible, they should force their way thorough those valiant Nations of both Sarmatias; who to the last maintained their liberties and estate against the Romans. If great enough to force their passage (for stout and provident Nations use not to give passage to great Armies, but they pay dear for it) how can we think it possible they should be shut up in a corner of Germany, betwixt the River Albis and the Cimbrick Chersoneef. The Saxons then, whatsoever they were, were no Sons of the Sacæ; and what in likelihood they were hath been elsewhere shewn. Sagdiana.

2. SOGDIANA hath on the East, the Sacæ; on the North and West, Zagathay specially so called; on the South, the River Oxus, parting it from Margiana. So called from a chain of Mountains named Montes Sogdii, being the chief of all this Countrey, though of themselves a spurre or branch of the Mountain Caucasus.

The Countrey indifferently fruitfull, and very rich in pasturage, because very well watered. For besides Oxus, and Jaxartes, which are common unto them and others; they have many Rivers of their own. The principal of which, 1. Dymus, and 2. Araxates, both navigable, and capable of very good ships; both also running down the hills with a headlong course, and passing thorough the champain Countrey, empty themselves at last in the lake called Oxiana; as is affirmed by Ammianus, but as Ptolomy saith, into Jaxartes.

Places of most consideration is, 1. Drepsa, the Metropolis or mother-City of this people. By Pliny called Panda, by Solinus Darapsa: situate on the River Oxus. 2. Oxiana, on the same River, and from thence denominated. 3. Maruca, on the same River also. 4. Alexandria, called for distinctions sake, Alexandria Oxianæ, which name declareth both the founder and the situation. 5. Alexandria, for the same cause of distinction, named Alexandria ultima: either because the last City which he built in these parts, or because it lay furthest off on the borders of the Scythians; against whose invasions or irruptions it was said to be built. 6. Tribarra, one of the chief hereof in the time of Ammianus Marcellinus. 7. Cyroschata, more memorable, and not less antient, than any of those named before, by Qu. Curtius called Cyropolis, built by Cyrus, to fortifie his borders against the Scythians. It held out against the great Macedonian, a long time: and he himself comming nigher to the walls, than discretion would permit an ordinary Generall, had such a blow on the neck with a stone, that he fell to the ground, his eyes swimming in his head, and his whole Army giving him for slain. But reviving he took the Town by a mine, and levell'd it with the ground, in revenge of so great a danger.

The antient Inhabitants hereof were the Oxydracæ, and Candari, dwelling at the foot of the Sogdian mountains; the Oxiani, and Cheraſmii, neer the banks of Oxus; the Jasii, and Tachori, neer the River Jaxartes; the Drepsianii in the East parts bordering on the Sacæ; whose chief City was Drepsa: descended from their severall roots, but all called Sogdians. Conquered by Alexander, not without danger to his own person, as before was said, at the sollicitation of Spitamenes a noble Persian, it rebelled again. Who being suppressed, and the Countrey in some measure quieted, Arimazes, a native of the Province, renewed the war. Who followed with 30000 men, encamped upon the top of an hill, in a place of such notable advantage, that Alexander, neither by force nor fair words, could get him out of it. He therefore dealt with 300 of his youngest and most active men, on the promise of great reward, to climb the hill; and without any noise, to shew themselves at the back of the Enemy. Which having performed with the loss of 30 of their company, Alexander sent one Cophes to Arimazes, to let him know that the whole Army of Macedon was at his back: who terrified with what he saw, more with what he feared, gave up the place, and was scourged and crucified for his labour. So necessary in the Art of war-fare is a peece of wit. After this time, it ran the same alterations and change of fortunes, as the Persians did; till they were conquered by the Tartars, unto whom still subject.

3. ZAGATHAY specially so called, is bounded on the East, with Cathay; on the West, with Turchestan, and part of the Caspian Sea; on the North, with the Countrey of the Samoyeds, the Terra Incognita of the Antients; on the South, with the Sacæ, and Sogdiana. Antiently part of Scythia intra montem Imaum; and took this new name from Zagathay, the first Prince hereof, since the time of the Tartars.

The Countrey reasonably fruitfull, but not so rich in the naturall temper of the soyl, as the industriousness of the people, more civill farre than any other of the Tartars; studious of good letters, lovers of Arts, as well ingenious as Mechanick; well skilled in manufactures, and very seldome without the confluence of forein Merchants. Populous, and well-stored with Towns and villages; Both for their own more handsome dwelling, and the entertainment of others.

Chief Rivers of it, 1. Jaxartes, now called Chesel, the principal of all this Countrey: great of it self, but made much greater by the waters of 2. Daix, another River of good note, rising out of the mountain called Norosus, and falling with many others into Jaxartes; mixt with whose streams they are dischannelled in the Caspian Sea. 3. Jartus, and 4. Polytimetas, falling into Oxus. Others there are Zagathay. whose names I find not in my Authors, descending from the mountains of this Northern Region, which are great and many. As viz. 1. Norosus, spoken of before. 2. Aspisii, on the North of that. 3. Toporus, more unto the North. 4. The mountains called Sychi, more Northward still. 5. Those called Anarei, besides 6. Imaus, of most name, but common unto Gathay as well as to Zagathay.

Cities of most observation in it, 1. Aspabota, the only Town ascribed by Ptolomy to this Countrey, and by him honoured with the title of Civitas. 2. Zabaspia, of less antiquity, but of greater estimation at the present time. Situate on the mouth of the River Oxus (now called Abias) on the brink of the Caspian; and much frequented by the Merchants of forrein Countreys, chiefly from India, and Cathay. 3. Marachanda, antient, and of fame, but placed by Ptolomy (why I know not) amongst the Cities of Bactria: differing herein from the common and received opinion of other Authors, by whom this City is affirmed to be on the North side of Oxus, and consequently not within that Province. Made good by Spitamenes, (who having delivered the Traitor Bessus into the hands of Alexander, revolted from him) against the Macedonian Army; by which besieged under the command of Menedemus. But Menedemus being slain, with some of his Souldiers, Spitamenes escaped hence to Bactria, where he was slain by his own wife, and his head presented to the Conqueror. Here was it also that Alexander, being then Master of the Town, in a drunken fit slew his dear friend Clytus; who at the battel of Granicus had saved his life, by receiving a blow which was aimed at him. It was afterwards called Samarchand, the seat-Royall of Tamerlane, by whom enriched with all the spoils and treasures he got in the wars; there being brought hither from Damascus only (and by that one instance we may guess at the rest) 8000 Camels laden with the choicest moveables. Still the chief Residence of the Chams of Zagathay, but far short of that magnificence which once it held. 4. Bichend, of no Antiquity, nor of such great name as the Regall Samarchand; but at this time of greater wealth: situate somewhat in the mid-land, but populous, and a well-traded Town. 5. Azara, memorable for being made the Rendezvous of that mighty Army, which Tamerlane raised against the Turks, consisting in the totall of 1200000 fighting men when it was at the biggest. 6. Maranis, from which place the said Tamerlane, having received his aids from China, began his march.

These Tartars, called Zagathayans, by the name of their Countrey, are of a different government from that of the Great Cham of Cathay, though subject to him at the first: and have so been ever since the time of Zaicham or Bathu, the third great Cham; who gave it unto Zagathay, a younger Son, whence it had the name. To Zagathay succeeded Og, by some called Zain-Cham, (the Father of Tamerlane) a peaceable and quiet Prince, who rather studied to preserve than enlarge his Empire. But Tamerlane being of a fiercer and more warlike nature, made the first proof of his valour and good fortune against the Moscovite (for spoyling a City which had put it self under his protection) whom he overthrew with the slaughter of 25000 foot; and 15000 of his horse. Moved with this notable exploit, and the hopes of greatet, Gino Cham, the great Emperor of the Tartars gave him to wife his onely daughter, and therewithall declared him his heir apparent. Incouraged and inabled with this advancement, he first brake down the wall of China, encountred with the King thereof, overcame him in battel, and imposed on him the summe of 300000 Crowns of yearly tribute. Having left things quiet at his back, and taking with him a great part of the forces of China, he advanced forwards against Bajazet, the fourth King of the Turks; of the greatness of whose growing Empire he began to be jealous. Passing along the left-hand shores of the Caspian Sea, and so through Albania, and the rest of the Provinces which lay in his way (which he took and conquered as he went) he came at last into Asia Minor: where neer the City of Sebastia, he encountred with Bajazet, vanquished him, slew 200000 of his men, and carried him away captive in an iron Cage. Restoring those Princes dispossessed by Bajazet unto their estates, and taking to himself all the Turkish Provinces in Anatolia; he bestowed a private visit on Constantinople: which seen, he marched towards Syria, subdued both that Province and the Kingdome of Egypt, then possessed by the Mamalucks; visited Hierusalem, and did honour to the Holy Sepulchre; returned by Babylon, and won it, and with it the whole Countries of Babylonia, and Assyria. And taking Persia in his way, impatronized himself of that Kingdome also; and such parts of India, as either lay neer Persia, or his own dominions: now made the Soveraign Lord of all the Regions and Kingdomes in both Asias, excepting India; for which the rich Kingdome of Egypt, may be put in balance. Come home at last to Samarchand, he there died in peace. A Prince of strong body, but lovely lineaments, his eyes bearing in them such raies of majesty, that ordinary men could scarce endure to look upon them. His hair long, contrary to the custome of the Mahometans, (for the most part shaved on their heads) for which he pretended a descent from Sampson. Perfect in the Arabian learning, and a lover of all learned men, a hater of Idols, and Polytheism, and a great friend to the Christians. More fortunate in the conquering of so many Kingdomes, than in laying any sure foundation to maintain his conquest. For by holding his seat Royal in Samarchand, Cambalu, and other the chief Cities of Cathay; he gave the remote Provinces the opportunity of returning to their former Governours: and by parcelling his estates amongst his Children, and kindred, this mighty flood which had so quickly overflown both Asias, returned in very little time within its own proper and originall banks. Even Zagathay it self, divided from the Empire of Cathay, had its King apart (hardly acknowledging the great Cham for the Lord in chief) the most considerable of whom was that Saba, who in the new beginnings and unsetledness of the Sophian Empire, invaded Persia: But instead of recovering that Kingdome into the power of the Tartars, he lost some Provinces of his own: Hyrcania, Margiana, and some part of Bactria, being since subdued by Abas the late Sultan. Nothing since memorable, that I meet with, in the affairs of this part of the Empire of Tartary.

4. TURCHESTAN is bounden on the East, with Zagathay specially so called; on the West, with the River Soane, parting it from Deserta; on the North, with those desarts which Ptolomy blindeth under under the name of Terra incognita; and on the South, with the Caſpian Sea. So called from the Turks, ſome of which people when they left their firſt Seats near the Fens of Mœotis, ſetled in this Country, and here ſtill continue. Turcheſtan

The Countrey as deſert and ill planted, as the reſt of Tartary, not ſo much out of any defect in the ſoyl it ſelf, as in the humor of the people: who though originally Turks, do yet compoſe themſelves unto the lives of the Scythian or Tartarian Nomades, neglecting tillage, and abiding in no place longer than that place affords them paſturage for their Cattel: huge herds of which they keep as their greateſt treaſure, but more to cloath their backs with the skins, than to fill their bellies with the fleſh.

Amongſt the Rivers of moſt note we may reckon, 1. Rhymnus, mentioned by Ptolomy, which by the poſition of it in the 91. degree of longitude, ſeems to be of this Tract. It riſeth out of the mountains called Montes Rymnici, giving name to the River, or taking name from it. 2. Ardock, not known by that name amongſt the Antients, and whether known at all or not, I am not able to ſay. Shaping its courſe towards the North, and weary of ſo cold a clime, and ſuch barbarous people; after a long and ſwift courſe of a thouſand miles, it hideth it ſelf under the ground for five hundred more: but breaking out again, and finding little or no hope of a better fortune, loſeth it ſelf for ever in the great Lake of Kitay.

To look for Towns amongſt a people which delight not in ſetled houſes, were a labour loſt: yet ſome I finde aſcribed unto them. The principal, but of no great note, 1. Calba, and 2. Ocerra. Then there is 3. Cruſtina, ſituate on or neer the Lake of Kitay, never without the company of Ruſſian and Tartarian Merchants: the Ruſſians ſailing to it by the River Ob; and the Zagathayan Tartars travelling to it by land. By theſe two nations more peopled, to maintain their traffick, than by the Turcomans themſelves, in whoſe land it ſtandeth.

Theſe Turcomans are of the poſterity of ſome of thoſe Turcæ, who wanting room, or otherwiſe oppreſſed with want; forſook their ancient dwelling neer the Fens of Mœotis, and the coaſts of the Euxine Sea, to ſeek new ſeats, Anno 844. That their whole body ſetled here, and from hence made their conqueſt of Perſia, as ſome very induſtrious men are of opinion, I by no means grant. For when the Sultan of Perſia, having by the means of Tangrolipix and thoſe Mercinary Turks whom he invited to his aid, obtained the victory; and thought it fit for his affairs to detain them longer in his ſervice: it is ſaid he ſhut up the paſſages of the River Araxes, to hinder them from returning to their habitations. The ſhutting up of which River, and fortifying againſt them all the paſſages and bridges of it, had not ſerved his turn, if the Turks had come from this place: for then he muſt have manned againſt them the River Oxus, and ſuch as lay betwixt them and him in the common rode. Nor is it probable, that the Turcomans dwelling in this Province, on the Eaſt-ſide of the River Volga, would undertake the foarding of that dangerous and violent Water; and force themſelves a way thorow Albania and Armenia, with no greater numbers, than 3000. men, which was the whole ſtrength that they carried with them. So that it is not to be doubted, but that they came firſt into Perſia out of Turcomania, and not out of Turcheſtan: and probable enough, that when they firſt left their own abode, and came unto the Northweſt ſhores of the Caſpian Sea, they might there divide themſelves. Some of which leaving that Sea on the left hand, and paſſing thorow the Sarmatian or Albanian Streights, made their way into Armenia, and thoſe parts of Iberia, which from them are now called Turcomania. The reſidue keeping that Sea on the right hand, and croſſing the Volga, where they found the paſſage moſt eaſie for them, ſetled themſelves in theſe parts of Scythia which they found leſs peopled, now from them named Turcheſtan. Some of which hearing of the good ſucceſs of their Country-men in the Conqueſt of Perſia, might afterwards joyn with them to aſſure that purchaſe. Governed ſince their firſt coming hither, by the Chiefs of their ſeveral Clans, whom they honour with the title of Chams; but all of them tributaries, and vaſſals to the Cham of Zagathay.

5. That part of the Kingdom of Zagathay, which anciently paſſed under the name of TERRA INCOGNITA, and was accompted the Northern limit of Scythia intra Imaum; hath on the South, Turcheſtan, and part of Zagathay, ſtrictly and ſpecially ſo called: extending Northwards to the Scythick or Frozen Ocean; and bounded on the Weſt, with the River Ob.

The Inhabitants of this Northern Tract are now called by the name of Samoyeds; neither the people nor the Country known to the ancient Romans: and indeed neither of them worth the knowing. The men black haired, naturally beardleſs, and not to be diſcerned from women, but that the women wear a long lock down to their ears. Clad from the head to the feet in Deer-skins, or Seil-skins, with the hairy ſide outwards; (nothing more wiſe in that than the other Tartars.) Their kind of life more rude than theirs, if more rude may be, ranging from place to place, without any propriety of houſe or dwelling; the Leader of each company their Prieſt, whom they call their Popa, who at every one of their Removes is to offer ſacrifice. Idolaters they are all, and moſt of them Witches, eſpecially ſuch as live moſt towards the Eaſt, and furtheſt off from the Moſcovite, who many times deſtroy their Idols, and rob them of the skins of Bevers, black Foxes, and Sables, wherewith thoſe Idols are ſet forth to the publick view; but beſtow on them greater heats in a good Fire; into which they commonly uſe to caſt them.

Theſe Zagathayan Provinces, with thoſe of Margiana, and Bactria, before deſcribed, made that part of Scythia, which antiently was called Scythia intra montem Imaum: though in the time of Ptolomy, when Margiana, Bactria, Sacæ, and Sogdiana, were reckoned of as Provinces of the Kingdom of Perſia; this Scythia was reſtrained within narrower bounds, and comprehended onely Turcheſtan and the Speciall Zagathay. Inhabited, beſides the ſeverall Nations dwelling in the four Perſian Provinces, by many fierce and ſavage Tribes, as the Alani, Alanoeſi, Saubeni, and Maſſei, towards Terra incognita; the Tectoſages, and Aſiotæ, neer the Mountain Imaus; the Jaxartæ on the banks of the River ſo called; and the Mologeni, not far off; the Zaratæ, and Saſones, neer the Mountains Alani; the Galactophagi, or milk-

Scythia. milk-eaters, more towards the East; the Taporæi, and the Sychi, by the hills so named; and many others not material to be here remembred. All now united under the general name of Tartars, by whom first subdued.

And now we are at last come to Scythia, truely so named; Sarmatia Europæa and Asiatica being called so onely by way of participation and resemblance; because the inhabitants thereof had so much in them of the manners and conditions of these naturall Scythians. Here therefore we intend to speak some-thing of them, their name, Antiquity, disposition, customes, and the most memorable actions relating to them, as far as we can go by the light of story.

First, for the name, the Græcian Fablers have derived it from one Scythes, the Son of Hercules, begotten by him on a Monster, half woman, half Viper. The Gramarians ἀπὸ τῆ σκύζης signifying to be fierce and angry; whence it is said of the Jewish Puritans, who fasted to be seen of men σκυθρωποὶ ἀφανίζουσι that they looked with a sower, severe, and a disfigured Countenance. Goropius Becanus doth derive it rather from the Dutch word Schutten, signifying to shoot: agreeable enough to the custome and exercise of the Scythians; who are observed by Herodotus, Pliny, Lucian, and other of the antient Writers, to be very good Archers. But that the word Schutten signifieth the same in the antient Scythick; or that the High-Dutch was originally the tongue of the Scythians, will not so easily appear.

Letting that pass therefore as a matter not to be defined, let us look on the Antiquity of these Scythian Nations: and we shall find it to be great, if not greatest of all. Scytharum gens semper antiquissima, That the Scythians were of all others, the most antient people, was received for an Oracle, in the elder ages of the world: and so resolved by way of verdict, when the great controversie touching the Antiquity of those Nations, was to be determited, betwixt the Ægyptian and the Scythian, who contended for it. And this hath passed with such a generall approbation, that it is, not now to be disputed. In which regard I am so far of the judgement of Becanus in that particular, as to conceive that the Countreys lying on the North of Mount Caucasus (on which the Ark is thought most probably to have rested) were peopled by the Sons of Noah before they travelled towards the West, or set themselves on building the Tower of Babel. We had else no doubt heard somewhat amongst or Antiquaries, of the setling of some of those Adventurers in these Northern Regions; when giving off that enterprise, and falling upon new plantations, they either went themselves, or sent forth their Colonies, into all places of the world. But of any such plantations, nec gry quidem, not one word say they. Nor can it probably be supposed, that Zoroaster the King of Bactria could have raised 400000 fighting men out of that one Province (though some of the adjoining Provinces were took into the reckoning) in those early daies, in which he did encounter Ninus the great Assyrian; had the Bactrians, and the rest of these Scythian nations, been but a Castling as it were of some second swarm, and not coævall with the first. But besides these presumptions we have other proofs: viz. an old and constant tradition on this side the Mountains, that the great Vineyard of Margiana was of Noahs planting; and 2. the affirmation of Porcius Cato, (though one of the writers of Frier Annius) in Scythia Saga renatum mortale genus, that mankind was repaired in these parts of Scythia, so called from Sabatius Saga, an Armenian King, whose Dominions did extend thus far. So that I look upon it as a matter of strong presumption, if not demonstrably concludent, that these People were of the first plantation which was made after the flood; before the rest of the world was peopled by the Confusion of Languages: Scytharum gens semper antiquissima, could not else hold good.

As for their dispositions, and naturall inclinations, they are said by Trogus, or his Epitomator Justine, to be Gens & laboribus & bellis aspera, "A Nation patient of labours, and fierce in war; of bodily "strength immense and vast; yet so much masters of their affections, that they made no further use of their "greatest victories, than the augmentation of their fame. Theft they esteemed the greatest crime, and "that they punished so severely, that their Flocks and Herds might and did safely wander from one place "to another, without fear of stealing. In them they placed their greatest wealth, feeding themselves "with the milk thereof, and making their rayment of the skinns. Silver and gold they contemned as "much as it was coveted by others; there being no desire of riches, where there was no use. Meum, and "Tuum, those common Barretours, and authors of debate amongst other men, were not known amongst "them: and therefore did not care for tillage, or made any inclosures, not troubled themselves with the "care of building. But puttting their wives and children upon wains, or wagons, covered with hides "against the weather, they removed from one place to another, no longer staying upon one, than they "found grass and herbage to sustain their Cattel. So just in all their actions, that they needed not the "restraint of lawes; and had attained to such an eminent degree of humane perfection, as not to covet. "In a word, that moderation which the Greeks endeavoured to attain unto by the help of learning and "Philosophy, was to these so naturall: that the ignorance of vice did as much contribute to their wel-"fare, as the knowledge of vertue. Such are the antient Scythians affirmed to be. And being such, it was a wonder that the great Monarchs of the world who had wealth at will, should make war upon them; amongst whom there was nothing to invite an Army, or reward a Conquerour. Yet either on desire of glory, or to adde unto the former multitudes over whom he reigned, they were first invaded by Cyrus the great Persian Monarch: who quarrelling with Tomyris Queen of the Massagetes, a warlike Nation, inhabiting on both sides of the River Oxus, discomfited her Army, and slew her Son Spargapises, who commanded it. In revenge whereof, the Queen having in a second battail obtained the victory, and took Cyrus prisoner, is said to have cut off his head, and cast it into a boul of blood, with this scornfull taunts Satia te sanguine quem sitiisti, now drink thy fill of blood which thou hast so thirsted. But others tell us otherwise of the success of this fight. By whom it is reported that the horse of Cyrus being disordered on the sight of some Elephants, which came from India to her aid, and himself dangerously wounded; the the Scythians had won the victory, but for the coming in of Amorges King of the Sacons, (who of a conquered Enemy was become his Confederate:) by whom he was reſcued, and by the 20000 freſh men which he brought with him, obtained the honour of the day; though long he lived not to enjoy it, dying not long after of the wounds he had received. With Alexander they are ſaid to begin the war, as loth to be behind hand with him; arming themſelves upon the building of Alexandria ultima, ſo neer their borders, which they conceived rather intended for a curb to hold them down, than for a bridle to keep them in. But being repulſed, and wiſe enough to ſuffer what they could not hinder, they ſued for peace, and had it granted; Alexander being called away by the revolt of the Bactrians, a matter of more conſequence than theſe Scythian brables. With Alexanders Succeſſors they had nothing to do, nor with the Perſian Kings of the Parthian Race: the Parthians being their Allies, and of Scythian breed. And for the Romans, it is well obſerved by the Hiſtorian, Romanorum arma audivere magis quam ſenſere, that they had heard much of their valour, but never felt it: Remaining undiſturbed in their honeſt poverty, till the Tartars, an obſcure and beggerly people brake out of their Priſon, and carryed the whole World before them. Cathay.

As for their Kings, I finde ſome of their names laid down, but without any note of time in which their reigns might be ſuppoſed to begin or end. Nor can I think that the Kings occurring in that Catalogue, did either reign in the ſame place, or over the ſame Nations, or that they ſucceeded one another. Howſoever we will take their names as they come before us, in this liſt of

The Kings of Scythia.

1. Scythes.
2. Napis.
3. Phitra.
4. Sagillus.
5. Targitana.
6. Plinus.
7. Scholypethus.
8. Panaxagora.
9. Tanais.
10. Indathyrſus.
11. Saulius.
12. Spargapiſis.
13. Tomyris.
14. Aripethes.
15. Seiles.
16. Octimaſdes.
17. Lanthinus, the laſt of all thoſe Scythian Kings who are conceived to have the government of theſe warlike Nations. But for my part I dare not ſay that ever any one King did command the whole people generally; each Tribe or Nation having their particular Kings, as in other places not reduced into form and order. And therefore for thoſe Kings, if ſuch Kings there were (as for ſome of them I durſt venture to ſwear the contrary) they muſt be ſuch as in their ſeveral Countries were of greateſt fame, moſt taken notice of in the world, or imployed in the conduct of their joynt and united forces; and ſo conceived to be the Kings of the whole Scythian Nation: as Caſſibeline, King of the Trinobantes, and perhaps not that, is by ſome writers ſaid to be the King of the Britains; becauſe he had the conduct of their forces againſt Julius Cæſar.

CATHAY.

CATHAY is bounded on the Weſt, with Zagathay, from which parted by the Mountain Imaus; on the Eaſt, with the Oriental Sea, and ſome part of China; on the North, with Tartaria Antiqua; and on the South, with part of India. So called from the Propper or ſpecial Cathay, the principal Province of the whole, the other parts into which it is commonly divided being 2. Altay, 3. the Countries of the Eaſtern Tartars.

1. CATHAY. more properly and ſpecially ſo called, is bounded on the Eaſt with China; on the weſt with the mountain Imaus by which parted from Zagathay; on the North with Altay; and on the South with India extra Gangem: So called from the Chatæ an old Scythian people, who having conquered the Seres, and the reſt of the neighbouring Nations, gave their own name unto the whole, according to the Cuſtom of victorious people.

This Country is exceeding long, if it be meaſured by the Scale, and Rules laid down by Ptolomy; who placeth Auzacia, the moſt Weſtern Town of Scythia extra montem Imaum, in the longitude of 144. degrees, and Sera the Metropolis and moſt Eaſtern City of Serica in the longitude of 177. degrees and 15. minutes; as on the other ſide he placeth Seta the moſt Southern Town of Scythia extra montem Imaum in the latitude of 35. degrees, and 20. minutes, and Danma the moſt Northern town of Serica in the latitude of 51. degrees, and 40. minutes. By which accompt, ſuppoſing theſe four Towns to be placed in the very extremities and out parts of this Country, it muſt extend from North to South 960. miles and ſomewhat upwards, and about 1500. miles from Eaſt to Weſt in the length thereof; which as it ſheweth the dimenſions and extent of it to be very great, ſo it may probably infer that the Country is not in all places of the like fertility; the Weſt parts of it being very mountainous and barren, and conſequently not very fruitfull, as being overgrown in moſt places with the ſaps and branches of Imaus. But in thoſe parts thereof which lie towards the Eaſt, it is ſaid to be abounding in Wheat, Rice, Wool, Hemp, Silk, and Muſk; Great ſtore of that medicinal Root called Rhubarb, or Rha-barbarum, to difference it from the Rha-Pontick, growing on the banks of Volga. They have alſo very great herds of Camels, of whoſe hair they make thoſe ſtuffs which are hence called Camelets, or Chamlets; and ſuch an infinite breed of horſes, as beſides thoſe which they preſerve for their own uſe, they furniſh the whole Realm of China with ſuch multitudes of them that at one time there were ſent no fewer then 80000. for a preſent to the King

King of that Realm by the Princes of theſe Weſtern Tartars, as the Chinais call them; of which he that writ the Book called Bellum Tartaricum affirmeth himſelf to have been an eye-witneſs, and to his credit I refer it; That the great Cham feedeth yearly 10000 white Mares, which he keeps for their milk. Some of their Rivers are reported alſo to yield golden ſands. But whether it be ſo or not, certain it is, that it is ſo well provided of all things both for neceſſary uſe, and the pleaſures of life, that it is thought to be inferior to few Countries of Europe. The Air indeed not ſo temperate, as in many places; in Summer-times extreamly hot, and in winter miſerably cold: the thunders and lightnings being here ſo terrible, that in Summer many men die for fear, when they hear it. The winds no leſs violent than the thunder, do ſometimes tear up trees by the roots, and beat men from their horſes; but ſeldom bring with them any ſtorm of rain: the greateſt ſhowers which they have, hardly wetting the ground.

The people are generally very warlike, ſtrong of body, quick of action, fearleſs of the greateſt dangers, patient both of want and labour: of mean ſtature, little eyes, ſharp-ſight, and thin beards. Induſtrious they are in ſeveral manufactures, of a good wit for diſpatch of buſineſs: more honourable than the reſt of the Tartars, as loving to dreſs themſelves gorgiouſly, to fare ſumptuouſly (if there be occaſion) to live in handſom houſes, and to frequent the moſt populous and beſt-traded Cities. All which civilities or effeminacies, call them which you wills together with the greateſt part of their Arts and Manufactures they firſt learned of the Chineſe, during the time, that the Chinais lived as Subjects under the great Cham, and the nations had continual entercourſe with one another. They accompt not any for a wife till ſhe bear them children, nor till then do meddle with their dowrier; but repudiate them at a certain time, if they finde them barren. They reverence their Cham, or Emperour, even to adoration; not ſuffering any Stranger to come in his preſence, except he be firſt purged: if any otherwiſe preſume, it is preſent death.

The Religion publiquely allowed and countenanced, is that of Mahomet, but ſo that they retain the Pentateuch of Moſes, and obſerve many things therein commanded. It was much laboured by Pope Innocent, and King Lewis of France, that they ſhould receive the Chriſtian faith; and they found ſome inclinations in the people, and chief Princes to it. But finding by the Mahometan Agents, who then laboured to bring them to their ſuperſtition, that Mahomet allowed of many wives, and other things more agreeable to their fleſhly luſts; they conformed to that: Yet ſo, that there are many Idolaters in Cathay it ſelf (I mean Cathay ſtrictly ſo called) and ſome Chriſtians alſo; the ſtate of whoſe affairs we have ſhewn before.

Chief Rivers of the whole, 1. Palyſanga, which falling into the Eaſtern Ocean is navigable up to the City of Cambalu, to which it is a means of conveying great ſtore of merchandiſe. 2. Caromoram, ſo broad and deep that no bridge can be made over it. 3. Quian, one of the greateſt in the world; in length about an hundred days journey; for breadth, in moſt places ſix miles, in many eight, and in ſome ten. 4. Quiantu, about half a mile over, and well ſtored with fiſh: of all which we ſhall ſpeak more fully when we come to China. Here are alſo very many Lakes, both large, and uſefull, as 1. the Lake of Caniclu, in which are ſaid to be ſo many pearls as would make them of no value, if every man might have leave to fiſh for them: which is therefore interdicted (without ſpecial licence) upon pain of death. 2. the Lake of Caraim, about an hundred miles in circuit, and ſo full of fiſh as might ſuffice for all the the Countrey, did they love to eat of it. Their mountains we ſhall climb over in their ſeverall places.

Principal Cities of the whole at this preſent time, under the notion of Cathay, are 1 Canbula, ſuppoſed to be the Iſſedan Serica of the Ancients, and like enough to be that City of the Cathayans, which made that notable reſiſtance unto Cingis the firſt King of the Tartars, in his firſt attempts upon this Country, of which more anon. Made afterwards in regard of the pleaſentneſs of the ſituation, and extream fertility of the ſoyl. the chief Seat of his Empire; and being exceedingly enlarged and beautified had the name of Cambalu, that is to ſay the Seat or City of the Cham, in the ſame ſenſe as the chief City of China had the name of the King, ſignifying in that language the Court or City of the King. Built of Free-ſtone, and ſituate in the midſt of the Country as the heart and center to the reſt. It is ſeated on the River Palyſanga, honoured with the Great Chams reſidence, and enriched with a mighty confluence of Merchants of all ſorts. Beſides other Merchandizes there are every year 10000. Carts loded with ſilk ſent thither from China. Affirmed to be in compaſs 28. miles beſides the Suburbs, in which beſides other Inhabitants of all ſorts are 50000. Aſtrologers or rather Fortune-tellers. 2. Xaindu the Royal Palace of the Emperour, of a fourſquare figure, every ſide extending eight miles in length: within this Quadrant is another, whoſe ſides are ſix miles long, and within that another of four miles ſquare, which is the palace it ſelf; between thoſe ſeveral Walls are Walks, Gardens, Orchards, Fiſhponds, places for all manner of exerciſe, and Parks, Forreſts, and Chaſes for all manner of Game. 3. Caraio where the women are ſaid to guild their teeth: 4. Gonza a fair City and a great, adorned with many Idol Monaſteries. 5. Careanfu, near which there growth an herb called Chiny-Cathay, of admirable effect againſt many Diſeaſes, and ſo eſteemed of by the Natives that they value one ounce of this at a ſack of Rubard. 6. Segni the reſidence of a Neſtorian Biſhop.

Having thus took as good a view of the preſent face of this Country, as the times afford us, we will next look upon it in thoſe integral parts, of which it ſpecially conſiſteth, comprehending (as before was intimated) thoſe two long and ample Provinces, which the Ancients called, 1. Serica, and 2. Segthia extra montem Imaum, according to thoſe bounds and Characters which are given us of them.

1. SERICA. hath on the Eaſt ſome part of China; on the South, India extra Gangem, and ſome part of the Country then inhabited by the Ancient Sinæ: on the North, Altay: on the Weſt, the mountains tains of Imaus. In which I follow not the bounds laid down by Ptolomy, who for want of that knowledge in theſe remote Countries which theſe latter ages have afforded; is fain to ſhut it up on the North and Eaſt, with a Terra incognita. At the preſent it is called CATHAY, and that moſt probably from the Chatæ, a Scythian People, who ſubduing the old Inhabitants, became Maſters of it. Serica.

But for the name of Serica, it was derived originally from Sera the chief City of it; whence the people had the name of Seres very induſtrious in their times, and amongſt other things in the making of ſilks (made of a fine wool growing on the leaves of Trees) from hence named Serica. Of great eſteem amongſt the Romans, as is ſaid by Pliny, Tam multiplici opere, tam longinquo orbe potitur, ut in publico matrona tranſluceat; being far fetched, and dear-bought, they were good for Ladies. Nor were they induſtrious only, but chaſte and temperate. The names of Thieves and Whores were not known amongſt them. They eat not any unclean fleſh, nor uſed the company of their wives, either after conception, or during their menſtrual purgations. So moderate of diet, that they lived commonly to the age of 200 years; the quietneſs and mildneſs of their diſpoſition helping much thereto. Of yellow hair, watchet or Sea-green eyes, and good compoſure. Men of few words, but very juſt in all which they ſaid or did. Governed by a common Councel of five thouſand men, every one of which was to finde an Elephant for the uſe of the State.

If you will take the character both of the Country, and People, from Ammianus Marcellinus, he will give it thus. "Firſt of the Country, that it is plentifull and large, circled about with a chain of mountains, the two famous Rivers Oechardes and Banthiſis with a ſtill and ſlow ſtream running thorow the middle of the incloſed plain, ſpaciouſly ſtretched out to the ſides of the precipices: in one place large and open, in another lying flat and low with an eaſie deſcent; in which regard they have abundance of Corn, ſtore of Cattel, and plenty of Orchards. The temperature of the Air pleaſant and wholſom, the conſtitution of the weather clear and pure, the blowing of gentle winds moſt commodious, and the woods with a pretty glimmering of light, both within and under them: from whence the people with much ſprinkling of water, ſoftning that which the trees bring forth like a kinde of Fleece, kemb a moſt fine and tender matter, which they ſpin into ſilk, ſerving in former times for the Nobility and gentry, now become common to thoſe alſo of inferiour rank. Then for the People, he ſaith that they are a frugall Nation, lovers of quiet, not troubleſom unto their neighbours, without the uſe of Arms, and the knowledge of battels, declining the company of Strangers; and ſo far from covetouſneſs, or curioſities, that when any Merchants come unto them to buy their ſilks, without much beating of the price, they let them have ſuch things as are bred amongſt them, without looking after the commodities of other Countries. So he. And if he did not over-act the Panegyriſt (as I ſee no reaſon why he ſhould) never were people happier in the place of their dwelling, nor Country happier in its people.

Chief Mountains of it (and mountains they had very many) were 1. the Montes Caſii, and 2. Auzacii towards the Eaſt. 3. the Annibæ, environing a great part of the Country. 4. the Aſmiræi, 5. and thoſe called Serici, neer the City Sera. 6. Tagurus. 7. Ennodorus, and 8. Ottorocorus: But all of them probably the ſpurs and branches of the great Mountain Imaus; But by what names now called it is hard to ſay; and no leſs hard to ſay how to accomodate the names of the Rivers ſpoken of before, to thoſe which we finde mentioned in the Ancient Writers; the principal of which (all flowing out of theſe great Mountains) are, 1. Oechardes, by Pliny called Cambris, riſing out of the montes Auzaccii; 2. Pſitara, iſſuing out of the Aſmiri; 3. Bautiſus, whoſe fountain is in the montes Caſii; and 4. Lanos.

Towns of chief note amongſt them, 1. Sera, which gave the name of Serica, and Seres, to the Province and people. 2. Ottorocora, neer the hills ſo called; whence it had the name. 3. Iſſedon, for diſtinctions ſake called Iſſedon Serica, to difference it from another of that name in Scythia, called Iſſedon Scythica; the chief City of the Iſiedones, gens magna, one of the greateſt Nations in all the Countrey, as is ſaid by Ptolomy; and like enough to be that City of the Cathayans, which made that notable reſiſtance unto Cingis (which before I ſpake of) in his firſt attempts upon this Country. 4. Oroſana, 5. Droſache, 6. Daxata, of which little memorable. Some other Cities there were in it (about nine more being named by Ptolomy) of which we finde nothing but the names, and therefore I ſhall paſs them over without further mention.

But here it is to be obſerved, 1. that Ptolomy gives unto this Country, and to ſome of the Towns or Cities of it ſuch a Northernly latitude (ranging the furtheſt parts thereof in the ſame parallel with the Iſle of Thyle) as cannot poſſibly agree with that fertility of ſoyl, and delightfull temper of the ayr, which is given to Serica. 2. That he tels us of a Promontory called Tabyri ſituate in extrema terræ, in the extremeities of the Country between North and Eaſt, which I cannot but extreamly wonder at, conſidering that he ſhuts up this Country on the Eaſt and North with a Terra incognita, and extends not any part thereof towards the Sea, rendring it thereby uncapable of any ſuch Promontory. 3. That ſome of our late Writers both in their Tables and their Maps, have placed the Regal City of Cambula, ſo far towards the North, as very ill agreeth with that pleaſantneſs and ſweetneſs of ſituation, which induced the great Chams to make choice thereof for the Seat Royal of their Empire. But as we may eaſily pardon theſe miſtakes of Ptolomy in places ſo far diſtant from him, and then but little known to the Greeks and Romans; ſo we may as eaſily pardon theſe of the latter times, who grounding on the authority of ſo eminent an Author, have in ſome things been miſguided by him: it hapning very many times (which I find ſome where mentioned on the like occaſion, Magnis erroribus, magnorum virorum authoritate, tranſmiſſis, that great errors are often entertained upon the credit of their Authors.

The old Inhabitants hereof, in thoſe parts which lay next the Scythians, are ſaid to have been Anthropophagi, or man-eaters, moſt probably a Scythian Nation, that cuſtom being ſo abhorrent from the mildneſs

Altay. ness of the Serican temper. Or else, we must correct the Copies of Ptolomy, by the History of Ammianus Marcellinus, who instead of Anthropophagi, placeth the Alitrophagi in the self same tract. The other Nations not distained with the like reproaches, are the Sizyges, and Anabi, not far off the Auzacian mountains; the Pialæ neer the River Oechardes; the Geranæi, and Rhabbanæi, their neareſt neighbours; the Throani dwelling towards the East, the Batæ and Ottocororæ more towards the South. These with the residue, governed by a Common-Council of 5000. men, every one of which was to find an Elephant for the service of the Commonwealth, as was said before. And more than this we hear not of them in the way of Story; the Natives never going abroad to vent their wares, and having little speech with Strangers, when they come amongst them. Being vanquished by the Chatæ, a Scythian Nation, from whom it is likely that it took the name of CATHAY; (for in this we go but by conjecture) they continuing under Kings of their own, till subdued by the Tartars, against whom they made such stout resistance, being besieged by Cingis in their principal City, that when they wanted stones to cast out of their engines, they supplied that want with molten silver; and held it out so long, that Cingis finding victuals to grow short in his Camp, commanded that every tenth man should be eaten. But at the last being undermined, the Town was taken, the Citizens massacred, and their King or Emperor (as some call him) slain: after whose death, and not before, Cingis assumed the title of Cham, or Emperor. The residue of their Story we shall have hereafter.

SCYTHIA EXTRA IMAUM was bounded on the East with Serica, on the West with Imaus, on the South with India extra Gangem; and on the North with the Countreys comprehended in the name of Altay, which Ptolomy hath given us in the notion of the Terra Incognita. Called Scythia, because planted by a brood of the Scythians. Extra Imaum was put to it, to difference it from that part of Scythia which lay on the West side of that mountain, neareſt unto the Greeks and Romans. But now the Mountain, and the Countrey, have the name of Altay.

To look upon it as it standeth by the name of Scythia extra Imaum, we find not any thing delivered of the Rivers or Mountains of it, but what is common unto them with the neighbouring nations: the mountains called Auzacii, Casii, and Ennodorus, being common unto this with Serica; as Imaus joyntly to both the Scythia's, which it divided antiently the one from the other: though now this last be reckoned to belong to Cathay alone, because the Tartars on both sides of it, profess themselvs subjects to that Cham. This the most famous mountain in the East of Asia, beginning at the shores of the Scythick or Frozen Ocean; and extending thence directly Southwards unto Cape Comari, a Promontory of the Southern or Indian Seas. By which account it divideth the Greater Asia into East and West, as Taurus doth into North and South, which Mountain it crosseth in right Angles, about the Longitude of 140. as before was said. That part hereof which lyeth on the South of Taurus, was by the Ancients called Bitigo; and by the modern is named Gates: of which we shall speak more when we come to India. That on the North of Taurus, called Imaus properly, was anciently most memorable for dividing the vast Countreys of the Scythians, into Scythia intra Imaum, and Scythia extra Imaum; a division much observed by the old Geographers: now chiefly memorable for being the Sepulchre of some of the Chams of Tartary; most generally known by the name of Altay, but by some called Belgion.

Chief Towns hereof were 1. Auzacia, at the foot of the hills so named. 2. Chaurana, the chief City of the Chauranæi. 3. Sæta. 4 Issedon Scythica, so called to difference it from the other of that name in Serica. These with the rest, and all the Country, as far as it was known in the days of Ptolomy, inhabited by the Abii, Hyphophagi, or horse eaters, a diet still used by the Tartars or Modern Scythians. 2. The Issedones who are said by Pomponius Mela to make carousing cups of their Fathers heads, first trimmed and guilded, 3. the Chauranæi, and 4. the Chatæ, who being (as it seemeth) the most potent Nation, caused all the rest to be called by the name of Cathay, communicating that name also to the conquered Seres. Besides the possessions of which Tribes, there was also the Regions, of Albassa Cusia, and Auzuatis; these last so called from the mountains upon which they stand. More then this we have not to say of this Country by the name of Scythia, there being nothing memorable of it in the course of story, or worth the observation in the way of Corography.

ALTAY is bounded on the South with Cathay, specially so called, and part of China; on the North with Tartaria Antiqua, on the West with the great Mounts in Imaus, and on the East with the Nations or Countries of the Eastern Tartars. So called from its neighbourhood to that mighty mountain, which the Tartars in their Language call by the name of Altay.

The Country utterly unknown to the Ancient Writers, and not much canvassed or travelled by our Modern pens. In which respect I shall now trouble my self no further, than by giving a brief touch on the several parts of it. Of which the most that can be said, will be but little for the information of the judicious Readers; who are not to be bettered by the names of places, if there be not something in them of further use. Now for these Provinces the principal of them are, 1. Cascar, 2. Chesmur, 3. Lop, 4. Camul, 5. Tainfu, 6. Caindu, 7. Carazan, 8. Cardandan, 9. Erginul, 10. Taguth.

1. CASCAR, bordering on the North West of China, a Mahometan Countrey, but admitting of some Christians also; the largest Kingdom in all Altay, except Tanguth only, and furnished with many Town or Cities both of Trade and Note, the principal whereof are, 1. Hiachan, the Royal City of this Country, and a Mart famous for concourse of Merchants, and variety of Merchandises. 2. Cialis, the chief Town of a Province or Kingdom so named, but subject to the King of Cascar, who in the year, 1603. was called Mahomet Chan, a Prince of some credit in those parts, but neither equal in Port or Power to the Kings of Targuth. The people generally rude and barbarous, in so much that in some parts hereof both sexes do indulge themselves this mutual priviledge, that if the husband or the wife be absent above twenty days, the other party is at liberty to marry again.

2. CHESMUR.

2. CHESMUR, the inhabitants whereof are generally both Idolaters, and Inchanters, causing the dumb Idols to speak, the winds to rise, and the sun to be darkned. For studying which black Arts (if they come to them by study) they have many Monasteries; in which their Hermits or Monasticks live a strict kind of life, and are very abstemious. Altay.

3. LOP, memorable for a great Desart of thirty daies journey; so true a Desart, that whosoever doth not mean to be starved, must carry all his victuals with him. Dangerous to travellers, if not before-hand made acquainted with their danger: the evill spirits using to call men by their names, and make them go astray from their company; where they perish with famine, or are devoured with wild beasts. The chief Town hereof called Lop, giving name to both.

4. CAMUL, an Idolatrous Countrey, the people whereof accompt it a great honour to them, to have their wives and sisters at the pleasure of such as they entertain. From which brutish custome when restrained by Mango Cham, they petitioned him at three years end to be restored again to their former liberty; protesting they could never thrive since they left that custome. Which desire of theirs was at last granted, and is still in use.

5. TAINFU, more civil than the rest, the people being very industrious and good Artificers; making the most part of the Arms which are used by the Cham; and some also which they sell to Merchants.

6. CAINDU, with a Town in it of the same name, of great resort by Merchants (such as we commonly call petit Chapmen) for the Womens veils here made, with very great Art, of the barks of Trees. And it is well that they have veils to hide their shamelessnenss, the women of this Tract being prostituted unto every Traveller.

7. CARAZAN, inhabited by a barbarous and savage people, who in the day-time live in dens for fear of Serpents, with which (and some of them ten paces long, and ten spans in thickness) they are much infested; and in the night go forth to prey upon Wolves and Lyons. They have an use, that when any stranger cometh into their houses, of an handsome shape, to kill him in the night: not out of desire of spoil, or to eat his body; but that the soul of such a comely bodie, might remain amongst them.

8. CARDANDAN, neer Carazan, and as savage as that. The people whereof draw black lines on their bodies, which they count for the greatest Ornament. In case of sickness they send not to the Phhysian, but the next Inchanters: who taking Counsail of the Devil, apply some remedy; or if they think the man past cure, they tell him that his offences are grown too great to admit of help; and so put him off.

9. ERGINUL, possessed by an Idolatrous people, but mixed with som Mahometans, and Nestorian Christians. In which Countrey they have certain Bulls as big as Elephants, with mains of fine white haire like silk, some of which they tame; and betwixt them and their Kine engender a race of strong and laborious Beasts, not inferiour in that kind to Oxen. Here is also found a beast of an exquisite shape, but not bigger than a Goat, which at every full Moon hath a swelling under the belly; which being cut off by the Hunters, and dryed in the Sun, proveth to be the best Musk in the World.

10. TANGUT, the greatest and most potent of all the rest, bordering on the North of Cathay specially so called, and (like to that) inhabited by an industrious and laborious people, amongst whom the Art of printing is said to have been extant a thousand years. Blessed heretofore with a great increase of Christianity; but now the Gentiles or Idolaters make the greatest part, with some Mahometans amongst them. And for the serving of those Idols, they have not onely many large and beautifull Temples, built in the manner of Christian Churches, and capable of 4 or 5000 persons; but also many fair Monasteries for the use of their Votaries, and Recluses. They are possessed of many Towns, most of them well fortified, and planted with good store of Artillery. The chief of which, 1. Sachian, bordering on the Desart of Lop, inhabited by some of all three Religions; in which it is affirmed that they first used the Art of printing. 2. Campion, the Metropolis, or Mother City of this Countrey: where the Christians in the time of Paulus Venetus, had three fair Churches: now over-numbred by the Gentiles; who have here many Monasteries for the use of their Idols, and many Religious persons dedicated to their service only. Who though they live more honestly than the rest of their Order, and hold it an impiety to tempt a woman to the act of lust; yet if the woman make the offer, they hold it no small sin to refuse her curtesie. 3. Sauta a Town in the middle way betwixt Campion and Succuir, as being 5 daies journy from the one, and 6 daies journy from the other; by which we may Conjecture at the long extent of this Kings Dominions. 4. Succuir, situate amongst Mountains clothed with Rhubarb, from whence conveyed by Merchants over all the world; but so neglected by the natives, that did not the forein Merchant bring it into request, they would scorn to gather it. This once a Kingdome of it self, made subject afterwards, with Tanguth, to the Cham of Cathay, or the Great Cham of Tartary; But the fury of this Tartarian tempest being overblown, the Kings of Tanguth did not only recover their antient Royalty; but by degrees possessed themselves of the most part of the rest of Altay, and perhaps part of Cathay also, being looked on at the present as the greatest and most puissant Prince betwixt the Mountaines of Imaus, and the Easterne Tartars, to the discription of whose Countries we do next proceed.

The Countries of the Easterne Tartars, are bounded on the West with Altay; on the East with the Orientall Ocean; on the North with Tartaria Antiqua, and on the South with China; so called from their Easterne situation, in regard of those of Cathay and Altay, which by the Chineſe are called commonly the Western Tartars.

Altay. The Country not very fruitfull, becauſe ill cultivated, ſo that the chief commodities which they ſend abroad, are, the Root called Ginſem ſo much eſteemed amongſt the Chineſes, and all ſorts of pretious skins, as thoſe of Caſtar, Martrois and Zibellens; and alſo Horſe-hair, of which the Chineſes make their Nets, and the men (though madly) uſe it in tying up their Hair, as the handſomeſt dreſs they can appear in. With theſe Commodities, they Trafique into Leaotong a Province of the North-Eaſt of China (from which they are parted only by an Arm of the Sea) where commonly they make good Markets, their Marchandize being thence diſperſed into all parts of that Kingdome. The people are generally of broad Faces, their colour white, but their noſe is not ſo flat, nor their eyes ſo little, as the Chineſes are, ſparing of ſpeech, and ſomewhat penſive, but neither ſo unſociable as their Neighbours of China, or ſo barbarous and rude as the Tartars of Europe. They ſhave both the Head and Beard, reſerving only the Muſtachoes, which they extend to a great length, and in the hinder part of their Head they leave a Tuffe, which being curiouſly Woven and Plated, they let hang down careleſly below their ſhoulders; they have a round and low Cap, which is always garniſhed round with ſome pretious skin three fingers broad, of Caſtor or Zebellin, and ſerveth to defend their Temples, Eares, and Fore-heads from Colds and other Tempeſts. That which appears above the skin being covered over either with curious Red Silk, or elſe with Black and Purple Horſe-Hair, which they dye and dreſs moſt curiouſly; ſo as their appurtenances being handſomely joyned together makes the Cap both commodious and handſome. Their Garments are long Robes falling down to the very Foot, but their Sleeves are not ſo long and large as the Chineſes uſe, but rather ſuch as are uſed in Poland and Hungarie, only with this difference that they faſhion the extremity of the ſleeve, ever like a Horſes Hoof. At their Girdle there hangs on either ſide two Handcherchiefs to wipe their Face and Hands, beſides there hangs a knife for all neceſſary uſes; with two purſes, in which they carry Tobacco or ſuch like commodities. On their left ſide they hang their Seymiters, but ſo as the point goeth before, and the handle behind, and therefore when they fight they draw it out with the right hand behind them without holding the Scabbord with the other: They ſeldome were Shooes, and uſe no Spurrs to their Boots, which they make either of Silk or of Horſe-skin very neatly dreſſed; but they often uſe fair Pattens, which they make three fingers high. In riding they uſe Stirrups, but their Saddles are both lower and broader than ours. In matters of war they are very nimble, never carrying any baggage with them, nor taking care for proviſion, but filling themſelves with what they find; yet commonly they eat fleſh, though half waſhed or half boyled and if they find none they fall upon their Horſes and Camells. The Earth covered with their Horſe Cloath is their Bed, for they care not for Houſes, and Chambers; but if they be forced to dwell in Houſes, their Horſes muſt lodge with them, and they muſt have many holes beaten in the Walls to let in the Air; but yet their Tents are moſt beautifull, which they fix and remove with ſuch Art and dexterity, as they never retard the ſpeedy march of an Army.

They inhabit, amongſt many other Provinces, thoſe of Sumahania, Tanius gupi Niulham, and Niuche; of which I am able to ſay nothing in the way of Corographie, or of the four firſt in way of Hiſtory, only I find that thoſe of Niulham were aiding to the King of Niuche, in the Conqueſt of China; and of the Gupy it is written, that they are ſo called, by reaſon they make their Coates of defence or Breaſt-places of Fiſhes-skin which grow (as is affirmed) in a manner impregnible.

Yet either terrified by the noyſe of their great ſucceſs, or willing to partake of ſome part of their fortunes, they not only aided them in their Warres on that ſide of Imaus, but were content to take their very name upon them never invaded nor ſubdued till the time of Hombu King of China, who having driven the weſtern Tartars, then landing it over that Kingdome from one Port of it to another, compelled them finally to betake themſelves unto thoſe Ports and Provinces of the Eaſtern Tartars, which now make up the Kingdome or Province of Niuche, where the War followed after them alſo, till by little and little they became more quiet; compelled to beg their peace of the Conquerring Enemy; divided into ſeven Hordes or Tribes, and Governed for a long time by their ſeverall Cheefes, they became at laſt united into one Kingdome called the Kingdom of Niuche; Anno 1550. or thereabouts. Oppreſſed by the Prefects of Leaolong in the way of their Trade, and ſuffering amongſt many other indignities the death of their King, whom thoſe Prefects had entrapped and murdered, they make complaint of theſe outrages to the King of China; and finding no remedy at his hands, put themſelves into Arms, invade the Province of Leaolong take the City Leaogang, and having beſieged the King himſelf in the Royall or imperiall City of Peking they returned home (finding no hope of taking it at that time) with the ſpoil and plunder of all thoſe parts through which they marched. The War thus firſt begun was managed for many years with great loſs on both ſides, the Tartars having got nothing by it, but the Eaſtern parts of the Province of Leaolong, and the honour of having ſhewed themſelves twice more at the Walls of Peking; till in the year, 1644. Being invited into China by Uſanguius to ſupport the then falling fortune of the Royall Family, they husbanded the opportunity ſo well, as to make themſelves the abſolute Maſters of that mighty Kingdome. The whole ſtory and ſucceſſes of that notable action, we ſhall ſum up in brief when we come to China. In the mean time take here the Catalogue of,

The

The Kings of Niuche.

1550. 1,2. N.N. advanced unto this Kingdom after the reducing of the ſeverall Hordes into one main body, and Father of the King ſucceeding, who was ſlain at laſt by the treachery of the Prefects of Leolong, as before was ſaid.

1616. 3. Thienmingus, who to revenge his fathers death, invaded China, took the City of Leogang, braved the great Emperor at the walls of the Regal City, and having enriched himſelf with the ſpoils of the Country returned home again.

1627. 4. Thienzungus, the ſon of Thienminges, followed the War with the ſame fortune as his father did, both of them growing greater in Renown and Riches then in Power and Patrimony.

1636. 5. Zungteus the Son of Theinzungas ſecretly brought up amongſt the Chineſe, by means whereof he grew not only acquainted with the conditions of that people, but their weakneſſes alſo, and conſequently was the better prepared to lay the foundation of that greatneſs to which the Tartars have attained by the Conqueſt of it. Called into China by Uſangueius, as before is ſaid, he poſſeſſed himſelf of the City of Peking, and though he died aſſoon as he was Maſter of that City only, yet left he ſuch inſtructions to his Brothers, and the reſt of his Councel, that very eaſily and ſpeedily they poſſeſſed themſelves of all the Kingdom.

1644. 6. Xunchius the Son of the former of the age of nine years only at the death of his father, the management of his affairs both for war and peace being committed to his Uncles, but chiefly unto Amavangus the eldeſt of them, by whom ſo prudently conducted, that within the ſpace of four years he was quietly ſetled in that throne, all oppoſition and pretenders to the Royal Succeſſion being beaten down, of which more hereafter.

5. TARTARIA ANTIQVA.

TARTARIA ANTIQVA hath on the South, Altay, and the Countreys of the Eaſtern Tartars on the Weſt, and North, the main Scythick Ocean; on the Eaſt the Streights of Anian, (if ſuch Streights there be) by which parted from America. So called, becauſe the firſt habitation of the Tartars; who from this Den or Jail, made their firſt etuptions, and have ſince over-grown ſo much of Aſia.

The Countrey cold, and comfortleſs, as lying under the Polar Circle, and in part beyond it; not fit for any but ſuch as can live no where elſe: yet heretofore a receptacle of many Chriſtians (though thoſe of the Neſtorian Sect) who here enjoyed that liberty of their Religion, which the Perſians and Saracens denyed them in more pleaſing Countries. It containeth many Regions, ſome not conſiderable. Thoſe of moſt note, are 1. Thebet, 2. Tabor, 3. Tenduc, 4. Bargu, 5. Anian, and 6. Tartar.

1. THEBET, a fenny Region, and full of woods; rich in Coral which they finde on the Sea-ſhore, and uſe it inſtead of money. So named from the chief City of it, the ordinary Seat of the Abaſſi, or Pope of this Idolatrous people; much reverenced, and having in his power the diſpoſing of all Offices, which concern the ſervice of their Idols; They have alſo ſome good ſtore of Muſk; and abundance of wild beaſts which are bred in their Forreſts. But no beaſts wilder than the people, who in times paſt (if not at the preſent alſo) uſed to bury their Parents in their own bowels, and to make drinking cups of their ſkuls; for fear leſt in the midſt of their jollity they ſhould forget their Progenitors. Yet not more barbarous than immodeſt; it being contrary to their cuſtom to take a wife that is a Virgin. And therefore the Mothers uſe to proſtitute their daughters to the Merchant-Strangers, who having had their pleaſure of them gratify them with a Jewel or ſome other preſent, which they wear on their Wedding day: ſhe being the moſt acceptable Bride to her husband, who bringeth the greateſt Dowry with her of thoſe baſe rewards. It contained once petit Kingdoms, (Homagers to the Kings of Tendue) with many Cities; but now laid deſolate by the Tartar.

2. TABOR, once a diſtinct Kingdom alſo. One of the Kings whereof in the year 1540. came to the Courts of Charls the fift, and Francis the firſt; where he found Princely entertainment. But upon proof that he was a Factor for the Jews, and ſecretly ſolicited many unto that Religion, by the command of Charles, he was burnt at Mantua.

3. TENDVC, a populous Kingdom of it ſelf, but greater in name and power; the Kings hereof commanding all theſe North-Eaſt parts, as far as the borders of Cathay. Chriſtian in Religion, till the Conqueſt of it by the Tartars, though accordiug to the Neſtorian tendries: but now Mahometan for the moſt part, with ſome remainders, and but few, of Chriſtianity. Divided into many large and ſpacious Provinces, as Chinchintales, Cerguth, Egrigaia, Cercham, others of leſs note; ſo called according to the names of their principal Towns, or having ſome Towns in them of the name of the Provinces.

Antiqua. Thoſe of moſt note in Tenauc it ſelf, 1. Coras, the ordinary ſepulture of the Kings of Tenduc, before it was ſubdued by the Tartars, and ſince that alſo. 2. Caracoras, where Cingis was firſt honoured with the Title of King. The Kings hereof bearing the port of Kings, and the office of Prieſts, were antiently called by the name of Presbyter Johannes, or Preſter John: a title now erroniouſly conferred by ſome on the Emperour of the Abaſſines, or Æthiopians in Africk. Concerning which it is a wonder, that Joſeph Scaliger, a man of ſuch infinite reading, ſhould be ſo deceived: and by the authority of his judgement deceive ſo many. For finding that there was a Presbyter Johannes in the North of Aſia, and hearing vulgarly that title given unto him in Africk; he fell upon a fancie that this Abaſſine Emperour was formerly of ſo great power, as to extend his empire over India, and the North of Aſia; and in this laſt, for the aſſurance of his conqueſts, to hold his reſidence. A monſtrous, and undefenſible fancy. For beſides that all hiſtories, even thoſe of the Abaſſines themſelves, are ſilent in it: how improbable is it, that a King reigning in the heart of Africk, ſhould ſubdue the moſt remote parts of Aſia; and there keep his Court: ſo many great States and moſt puiſſant Nations, being interpoſed, or that ſo memorable an exploit ſhould be buried in ſilence, and found in no record but in Scaligers head. Beſides it is well known, and generally granted, that the Persbyter John of Aſia, was by Sect a Neſtorian; but he that is ſo called in Africk, of the Sect of the Jacobites: and further, that the Chriſtians of Æthiophia are circumciſed, which never was reported of thoſe of Aſia.

Letting this paſs therefore as an unwarrantable, and ill-grounded fancy, we are to know that formerly this Province of Tenduc, was under the old Kings of Cathay, till the time of Cin-Cham, the King thereof. After whoſe death a certain Neſtorian ſhepheard (that is to ſay, the maſter of great flocks of ſheep) being Governour of the Taymans, a People of Tenduc, took to himſelf the title of king of Tenduc; whom they called by the name of Preſt John, or Prince John (the ſame word in their language, as in the Hebrew, ſignifieth both Prieſt and Prince.) Dying he bequeathed his eſtate and flocks to his brother Unt-Cham, (commonly called in one word Uncham) a greater ſheep-maſter than he; whoſe flocks ranged over all the paſtures of the Moles, or Monguls and Tartars, though dwelling fourteen daies journey off, whom he had in ſubjection: the title of Prieſt John, or Presbyter Johannes, going along with the dignity and Royall eſtate. And though afterwards this Uncham was ſubdued by the Tartars, yet his poſterity for long time were ſuffered to enjoy the title of Kings, and Presbyters; (but Vaſſals, and Homagers, to the Great Cham): the Great Chams, in regard of their nobility, and royall parentage, beſtowing their daughters on them in marriage; as is ſaid by William de Rubraquis, who travelled in theſe Countries, Anno 1253. the King hereof being then named George (the fourth from Uncham) but commonly called Presbyter Johannes, as his Fathers were.

4. BARGU, on the extreme North-weſt, bordering on both thoſe ſides the cold Scythick Ocean, ſituate under the North-ſtarre; of the ſame nature, both for the ſoyl and people, as that of the Tartars. And

5. ANIAN, on the North-Eaſt, oppoſite unto it, giving name unto the Streights of Anian, lying betwixt Tartary and America; which Streights (if any ſuch ſtreights there be) the Tartars, and ſome other of theſe Northern nations, are thought to have paſſed over, and to plant that Countrey.

6. TARTAR, ſo called of the great River Tartar, the principall of this Northern Tract, and giving name unto the Tartars: this being their Originall Countrey, where they lived like beaſts, having neither faith, nor letters, nor habitation, nor the uſe of Arms, nor any reputation amongſt their neighbours. In matter of Religion, the worſt ſort of Gentiles, worſhipping the Sun, Moon, Fire, and the very Earth: to which they offered in the morning faſting, the firſt of their meats and drinks.

Their Idols made of Felt, and placed on both ſides of the doors of their tents or booths, as the preſervers of their Cattel, and the Authors of milk. Divided into five Clans, or Tribes, denominating ſo many Towns and territories, in which they dwelt, that is to ſay, 1. Mongul. 2. Teka-Mongul, or the Great Mongul) 3. Sommongul, or the water-Mongul, 4. Mercat. 5. Metrit: each of them Governed by its Chief; as commonly it is amongſt barbarous Nations; though all thoſe Chiefs ſubordinate to ſome higher power. Oppreſſed by Unchani, or Unt-cham, the King of Tenduc, who invaded their paſtures, and compelled them to pay unto him the tenth of their Cattel; with joint conſent they removed ſomewhat further off, and denied their Tribute. This opportunity was taken by Cingis, one of the Tribe of the Teka-Monguls, and ſo well husbanded, that they admitted him for their King. For publiſhing abroad amongſt the Credulous people, that an armed man appeared to him in his ſleep, with a white horſe, and ſaid, O Cangius, or Cingis, it is the will of immortall God, that thou be Governour of the Tartars, and free them from bondage, and paying tribute; he found, a generall belief: eſpecially amongſt thoſe of his own Clan, who joyning themſelves to him, followed him, as their Ring-leader, in all his actions. Thus backed and ſtrengthned he made war againſt the Sommonguls, ſlew their Commander, and ſubdued them: and by their help, ſucceſſively aſſaulted the Mercats, and Metrits, whom he alſo vanquiſhed. And having thus ſubdued all the Clans of the Tartars, and added the eſtates of Thebet, and Tanguth, unto his Dominions, he was by the conſent of the ſeven Princes, or Chiefs of their Clans, (Thebet, and Tanguth being added to the former number) placed on a ſeat on a peece of Felt, (the beſt throne they had or could afford) and ſaluted King; with as great reverence and ſolemnity as their ſtate could yield. And firſt to make triall of his power, and their obedience, he commanded the ſeven Chiefs or Princes to ſurrender their places, and each of them to cut off the head of his eldeſt Son: which was done accordingly. Had John of Leiden been a Scholar, as he was but a Botcher; I ſhould think he had ſtudied the Acts of Cingis, and proceeded by them. Aſſured by this of their fidelity and obedience, he ſet upon the Naymans, a people of the Kingdom of Tenduc, whom he overcame. And now conceiving himſelf fit for ſome great alliance, he ſent to Uncham, and demanded one of his daughters for his wife, Which Uncham with ſome threats, but more ſcorn, denying; he marched againſt him, ſlew him in the field, field, and poſſeſſed his daughter, and with her alſo his eſtate. Proud with this good ſucceſs, and encouraged by ſo great an increaſe of power, he invaded the Kingdom of Cathay; pretending for that alſo the authority of an heavenly viſion, in the name of the immortal God: in which attempt, diſcomfited at firſt with a very great overthrow, but at laſt victorious; conquering the ſeveral nations of it by one and one, till in the end he brought the war to the chief City of that Kingdom, which at laſt he took, and therewithall the title of Cham or Emperor. Continuing in this dignity for the ſpace of ſix years, and every year adding ſomewhat to his dominions, he was at laſt wounded in the knee at the Caſtle of Thaygin; of which wound he died, and was honourably buried in Mount Altay. Antiqua.

This is the beſt accompt I am able to give of the beginning of this great Empire, the original of this ſpreading Nation, and the deſcription of the Country of their firſt habitation. They that have chriſtned ſome of the moſt Northern parts of it, by the names of the Tribes of Dan, and Napthalim, and accordingly placed them in their Maps, might with more credit have ſupplied thoſe vacant places, which they knew not otherwiſe how to fill, with the pictures of wilde beaſts, or monſtrous fiſhes; which might well enough have pleaſed the eye, without betraying the judgement of the looker on. Of his Succeſſors I am able to make no certain Catalogue; their names being doubtfully delivered, and the ſucceſſion much confounded amongſt our writers: the names of the Provincial Sultans being many times impoſed upon us, inſtead of thoſe of the Chams themſelves. But we will wade through thoſe difficulties as well as we can, and exhibit as perfect a Catalogue of them, as the light of ſtory will direct me: firſt adding (what ſhould have been before remembred) that it is recorded, that Cingis before he joyned battel with Uncham, conſulted with his Diviners and Aſtrologers of the ſucceſs. They taking a green reed, cleft it aſunder; writ on the one the name of Cingis, and Uncham on the other: and placed them not far aſunder. Then fell they to reading their Charms, and conjurations; and the reeds fell a fighting in the ſight of the whole Army, Cingis Reed overcoming the other: whereby they foretold the joyfull news of victory to the Tartars, which accordingly hapned. And this was the firſt ſtep, by which this baſe and beggerly Nation began to mount unto the chair of Empire and Soveraignty; whereas before they lived like beaſts, having neither Letters, nor faith, nor dwelling, nor reputation, nor valour, nor indeed any thing befitting a man, as before was ſaid.

The great Chams of Tartars.

A. C.

1162. 1. Cingis, Cinchius, Zingis, or Changius, was made King or Cham of the Tartars; he ſubdued Tenduch, and Cathaia, changing the name of Scythians, and Scythia, to Tartarians, and Tartaria. 6.

1168. 2. Jocuthan Cham, or Hoccata, ſucceeded. In his time the name of Tartar was firſt known in Europe, Anno 1212. in which year they drove the Poleſockie from the banks of the Euxine Sea. By his Captain Bathu, or Roido, he ſubdued Moſcovia; planted his Tartars in Taurica Cherſoneſus; waſted Hungary, Boſnia, Servia, Bulgaria; and by his other Captains, took Perſia from the Turks.

3. Zaincham, Bathu, or Barcham, ruined the Turks Kingdom of Damaſcus, and Aſia the leſs.

4. Gino Cham, whoſe daughter conveyed the Empire unto her husband Tamerlane, or Tamberlane.

1370. 5. Tamir-Cutlu, Tamir-Cham, or Tamerlane, a great tyrant, but withall an excellent Souldier. It is thought, that he ſubdued more Provinces in his life-time, than the Romans had done in 800. years. Of whoſe acts we have ſpoke at large. Dying, he divided his great Empire amongſt his Children, as Perſia to Miza Charok his fourth ſon, Zagathay to another, (perhaps unto Sautochus his eldeſt ſon) and ſo to others.

1405. 6. Lutrochin, the ſecond ſon of Tamerlane, ſucceeded in Cathay, though the eldeſt was at firſt proclaimed, which his Father had before prognoſticated: who when his ſons came to him before his death, laid his hand on the head of Sautochus who was the eldeſt, but lifting up the chin of Lutrochin, who was the ſecond. He lived not long, ſucceeded to by

7. Allan, who added little to his eſtate.

8. Mango Cham, to whom Haiton an Armenian Prince (and the chief Compiler of the Tartarian Hiſtory) went for ayd againſt the Caliph of Bagdat. By whoſe perſwaſion the ſaid Mango Cham is ſaid to have been chriſtned, with all his houſhold, and many Nobles of both Sexes.

9. Cublay Cham, the ſon of Mango.

10. Tamor Cham, the Nephew of Cablay by his ſon Cingis.

11. Demyr Cham, the great Cham of Cathay in the year 1540. or thereabouts. What the names of the Chams are, who have ſince reigned, we cannot learn; nor what memorable acts have been done among them. The great diſtance of Countries, and difficulty of the journey have hindred further diſcoveries. For the great Cham, and his next neighbour the King of China, will neither ſuffer any of their ſubjects to travel abroad, nor permit any foreiners to view their dominions, or enter into them: unleſs either Embaſſadors or Merchants, and thoſe but ſparingly, and under very great reſtraints, to avoid all giving of intelligence touching their affairs; ſaving that in theſe latter times the Jeſuits have found ſome footing in China, by whom notwithſtanding, we have received little or no intelligence in matters which concern this Country.

The Government is tyrannical, the great Cham being Lord of all; and in his tongue (beſides which they have almoſt no Laws) conſiſteth the power of life or death. He is called by the ſimple vulgar, The ſhadow of ſpirits, and ſon of the Immortal God: and by himſelf is reputed to be the Monarch of the whole Antiqua. whole world. For this cauſe every day aſſoon as he hath dined, he cauſeth his Trumpets to be ſounded; by that ſign giving leave to the other Kings and Princes of the earth, to go to dinner. A fine dream of univerſal Monarchy. At the death of the Cham, the ſeven chief Princes aſſemble to crown his ſon; whom they place on a black coarſe cloth: telling him, if he reign well, heaven ſhall be his reward; if ill, he ſhall not have ſo much as a corner of that black cloth to reſt his body on: then they put the crown on his head, and kiſſing his feet, ſwear unto him fealty and homage. And at the Funeral of theſe great Monarchs, they uſe to kill ſome of his guard Souldiers, whereof he hath 12000. in continual pay; ſaying unto them, Ite & domino noſtro ſervite in alia vita. Paulus Venetus reporteth, that at the obſequies of Mango Cham, no fewer than 10000. were ſlain on this occaſion.

Theſe Chams are for the moſt part ſevere juſticers, and puniſh almoſt every ſmall fact with ſudden death; but theft eſpecially: Inſomuch that a man in Gambalu taking a pail of milk from a womans head, and beginning to drink thereof, upon the womans out-cry was apprehended, and cut aſunder with a ſword; ſo that the blood and the milk came out together. Nor are Adultery or Lying puniſhed with leſs than death, and ſo ordained to be by the Laws of Zingis, their firſt Emperor: a wiſer man, than poſſible could be expected from ſo rude a Country, and of ſo little breeding in the knowledge of Books or Buſineſs; the Tartars being utterly without the uſe of Letters, till the conqueſt of the Huyri, a Cathaian nation, but of Chriſtian faith.

What forces the Great Chams, in the height of their power, were able to draw into the field, may be conjectured at by the Army of Tamerlane, conſiſting of 1200000. horſe and foot, as was ſaid before. And looking on them as confined within Cathay, we ſhall finde them not inferiour to the greateſt Princes. For Cublay Cham, long after the diviſion of this great eſtate, which was made by Tamerlane, had in the field againſt Naian his Uncle, and one Caidu, who had then rebelled, an Army of 100000. foot, and 360000. horſe: there being 500000. horſe on the other ſide. Which made almoſt a million of men in both Armies. And this is probable enough, if report be true touching the Chams of Zagathay and thoſe of Turcheſtan, (before reduced under the obedience of the other) of which the firſt is ſaid to have been able to raiſe 300000. horſe, and the laſt an hundred thouſand more. For ſtanding forces, he maintains 12000. horſe, diſtributed amongſt four Captains, for the guard of his perſon; beſides which he hath great forces in every Province, and within four miles of every City, ready to come upon a call, if occaſion be: ſo that he need not fear any outward invaſion, and much leſs any homebred Rebellions. But on the other ſide, admitting this for truth which before is ſaid, we finde him of no power at Sea, without which great Princes are expoſed moſt commonly to the invaſions and affronts of ſuch as are ſtrong in Shipping: For either the Eaſtern Tartars interpoſed betwixt him and the main Ocean, whereby he is landlocked (as it were) from all Trade at Sea; or if he hath any Port in the North-eaſt parts of this long Country, where it joyneth on Tartaria Antiqua, it is ſo far off, and ſo much out of the way, that it adds nothing to his power, and not much to his purſe.

Of the Revenues of the Cham, I can make no eſtimate, but may conclude them to be what he liſt himſelf: he being the abſolute Lord of all, the Subject without any thing he can call his own. But that which ordinarily doth accrew unto him, is the tenth of wool, ſilk, hemp, corn, and Cattel. Then doth he draw into his own hands all the gold and ſilver, which is brought into the Countrey; which he cauſeth to be melted, and preſerved in his treaſury: impoſing on his people inſtead of money, in ſome places Cockle-ſhels, in others, a black coyn made of the bark of trees, with his ſtamp upon it. And beſides this he hath to himſelf the whole trade of Pearl-fiſhing, which no body upon pain of death dare fiſh for, but by leave from him. So that his Treaſury is conceived to be very rich, though his Annual in-come be uncertain, or not certainly known.

Hitherto I have proſecuted the affairs of this mighty Monarch upon the common credit of approved Authors; yet muſt confeſs I am not very well ſatisfied in the truth and reality of the thing it ſelf: it being rather my opinion, that there is no ſuch man at this preſent time as a great Cham of Tartary, with Soveraign Power and Juriſdiction over all the other Members of that vaſt body; but that this Empire being broken in pieces by the Sons of Tamerlane, the conquered Countries did a little and little return again to their former Governments, or elſe were ſeized on by the Viſi Chams or Governors of the ſeveral Provinces. For firſt I conſider it as impoſſible, that there ſhould be ſuch a mighty Monarch, of ſuch abſolute authority, ſuch an infinite power, and ſuch unlimited Revenue; and yet that for the ſpace of an hundred years and more we ſhould hear neither tale nor tidings of them, no not ſo much as of their names, eſpecially in an active age, and when this great building of the world, hath ſuch Caſements in it. For it muſt needs ſeem ſtrange to a rational man, that neither Jenkinſon who paſſed into Perſia by the Caſpian Sea, nor Sir Robert Shirley who ſpent much time in the Perſian Court, nor Sir Thomas Roe, or Sir Dodmore Cotton (the firſt Embaſſador to the great Mongul, the other to the Perſian Sophie) ſhould tell us any of this Prince, if ſuch Prince there be; or that the Travellers of our Nation who have rambled over all parts of India the next neighbouring Country, ſhould bring us home no tidings of him, or the Jeſuits with all their diligence ſhould not finde him out. Secondly, I conſider it is a thing improbable, that if there were any ſuch mighty Prince, keeping his Royal Court in the City of Cambalu, ſo near unto the Kingdom of China, he ſhould permit the beggerly Nations of the Eaſtern Tartars to conquer that rich and mighty Empire in ſo ſhort a time, he in the mean ſeaſon ſitting ſtill as a dull ſpectator, neither conſidering his own danger, nor putting in for a ſhare of ſo great a booty. Thirdly, I obſerve that in the treating of a Marriage between Xunchius the great King of the Eaſtern Tartars, now raigning in China, with a daughter of the King of Tanguth; the King of Tanguth is called Prince of the Occidental or Weſtern Tartars, by which name the Chineſes call all the Tartars inhabiting the vaſt Countries of Altay and Cathay, ſpecially ſo called, as being Weſtward of themſelves, and the Eaſtern Tartars, which title the King of Tanguth had not merited or durſt have aſſumed unto himſelf, if there had been any ſuch great Cham then raigning in Cathay, and reſiding in Cambalu as our Authors ſpeak of. And Fourthly, I obſerve it as a matter probable, that as at the breaking of this Empire into pieces in the death of Tamerlane, the Precopenſes or Europæan Tartars ſubmitted to a Prince of their own Nation, under the Power and Government of whoſe Succeſſors, they do ſtill continue; and much of the Aſſatick Tartary being ſubdued by the Meſcerites, the neighbouring Tartars did return to their ancient Government by Hordes or Tribes; that ſo the Kings of Tanguth might not only recover their own Inheritance, but by degrees poſſeſs themſelves of the greateſt part of all Altay, if not of ſome part of the Proper Cathay alſo. And therefore that ſome of the laſt great Chams mentioned in the former Catalogue, are no other then the Kings of Tanguth or the Chams of Zagathay, in whom (if any where) remaineth the Succeſſion of the Houſe of Cingis. Antiqua.

From theſe Premiſes I conclude, that all which hath before been ſpoken touching the great power, authority, and revenue of the great Chams of Tartary, muſt either be referred unto the times of their greateſt glory, when their Empire was entire, or not much diſmembred; or elſe relate, with ſome qualifications, to the Chams of Zagathay, or the Kings of Tanguth. But theſe my obſervations and conſiderations, with the concluſion iſſuing from them, I willingly ſubmit unto better Judgements.

CHINA.

CHINA is bounded on the North with Altay, and the Easterne Tartars, from which separated by a continued chain of hills, part of those of Ararat; and where that chain is broken off, or interrupted, with a great wall extended 400 Leagues in length; built as they say, by Tzaintzon, the 117th King hereof: on the South, partly with Cauchin-China, a Province of India, partly with the Ocean; on the East with the Orientall Ocean, and on the West with part of India, and Cathay; from which no other wise separated then by such naturall bounds, and Ramparts as commonly divide great Countries from one another.

The Northern parts hereof were utterly unknown unto the Antients, both Greeks and Romans; But for the Southern parts hereof, they make up that Countrey which Ptolomy called Sinæ, or Sinarem Regio, by which name the whole Countrey is called at the present by our modern Latinists; and from whence that of China seems to be derived. By Paulus Venetus called Mangi, by the neighbouring Countries Sanglai, by the natives Taine, and Taybinco: which last, signifies no other than a Realm; or by way of excellence, the Realm. By the Arabians it is called Tzinin; and the inhabitants call themselves by the name of Tangis.

It is said to contain in circuit 69516 Diez of China measure, which reduced to our European measure, will make a compass in the whole of 3000 Leagues: the length thereof extended from the borders of India, to the most Northern Provinces of this Continent; 1800 Leagues. But they that say so, speak at randome. For besides that 1800 Leagues in length, must needs carry a greater compass than 3000 Leagues; they make it by this reckoning to be bigger than Europe, which I think no sober man will grant. And answerable to this vast compass, it is said also to contain no fewer than 15. Provinces, every one of which is made to be of a greater Continent than the greatest Realm we know in Europe: Yet not a Continent of wast ground, or full of unhabitable Desarts, as in other places; but full of goodly Towns and Cities. The names of which Provinces, and the number of their Towns and Cities, I have thought fit once for all, to lay down in this Diagramme following.

The Provinces, Cities, and Towns. in China.

By which it doth appear, that in these fifteen Provinces there are 591 Cities; 1593 walled Towns; and besides them 1154 Castles, 4200 Towns unwalled; and such an infinite number of Villages, that the whole Countrey seems to be but one City onely. But here we are to understand that these great Provinces are divided into many lesser, and some of them presented to us (in late stories) under other names, according to the Languages and appellations, of these severall Nations, which either have recourse unto them, or do trafique with them; which the Reader may take notice of with lesse doubt or wonder, in regard that the maine Countrey of China it self is called by so many severall names, as before was showen.

It reacheth from the 130th, to the 160th Degree of Longitude: and from the Tropick of Cancer, to the 53d degree of Latitude. So that it lyeth under all the Climes from the third to the ninth, inclusively: the longest Summers day in the Southern parts, being thirteen hours and fourty minutes; increased in the most Northern parts, to 16 hours, and 3 quarters. Enjoying by this site an air somewhat of the hottest, especially in those parts which ly neer the Tropick; but withall very sound and healthy, and fit for the production of the choisest fruits.

The Countrey very rich and fertile, insomuch that in many places they have two, and in some three harvests in a year: well cultivated, and sowed with all manner of grain, and planted with the best kind of fruits; which do not onely come to a speedy maturity, but to more excellencie and perfection than any of these Western parts. The like is also said of their Pearls, and Bezoar; fairer and of greater vertue than those of America, or any other part of the world besides. Particularly it aboundeth with Wheat, Barley, ley, Rice, Wooll, Cotton, Olives, Vines, Flax, Silk, all kind of metals, Fruits, Cattle, Sugar, Honey, Rhubarb, Camphire, Ginger, all kinds of Spices, medicinall woods called China-wood, by the name of the Countrey, Musk and Salt: the customs for which last in one City onely, which is that of Canton, amounteth to the yearly value of 180000 Crownes. It yieldeth also an Herb, out of which they press a delicate juice, which doth not onely serve them instead of wine, but preserveth their health, and freeth them from many of those inconveniences, which the immoderate use of wine doth breed to others. Such store of Poultry of all sorts, but of Ducks especially, that in the Town of Canton onely before mentioned, it is thought there are 12000 eaten every day, one day with another.

The people are for the most part of swart complexion, but more or less, according to their neerness to the heats of the Sun; short-nosed, black-eyed, and of very thin beards. They wear their garments very long, with long loose sleeves, and their hair much longer then the neighbouring Tartars; who ware their hair exceeding short, and their cloathes much closer; to which two fashions so addicted that more of them took up Armes for their hair and habit (when required to conforme in those particulars to the will of the Conquerour) then had done either for their King, or their common liberty. So much delighted with their own fashion and composure, that as the Negroes use to paint the devil White, as a colour contrary to their own: so when these Chinois use to draw the picture of deformed persons, they set him forth in a short coat, broad eyes, long nose, and a bushy beard. They are much given unto their Bellies, and eat thrice a day, but then not immoderately: drink their drink hot, and eat their meat with two sticks of Ivory, Ebonie, or the like, not touching their meat with their hands at all, and therefore no great foulers of linnen. The use of silver forks with us, by some of our Spruce gallants taken up of late, came from hence into Italy, and from thence to England. Their mariages they celebrate most commonly in the New-Moon, and many times put them off till March, when the year beginneth with them as it doth with us: in which solemnity they spare for no cost or charge, musick, and Stage-plays, and good cheer many daies together. Yet doth not this take them off a jot from their natural industry, and their proficiencie in Manufactures and Mechanick Arts. For the Son is bound to follow his fathers occupation: which law preventing the roaving about of idle people, and exciting in each breast an emulation of every Art; maketh the Inhabitants excellent Artificers. In giving almes they are bountiful to the maimed, and the lame; but reject the blind, as being sufficiently able to get sustenance for themselves by corporall labour; as grinding of Corn, &c. They have long enjoyed the benefit of Printing, before it was known in Europe: but print not as we do, from the left hand to the right; nor as the Jews, from the right hand, to the left; but from the top of the leaf, downward to the bottom. Gunnes also have been used among them time out of mind: whence they are so well conceited of themselves, that they use to say, They themselves have two eyes, the Europæans one, and the rest of the people of the world, not one. A pretty flourish of self-praising. Now that Gunnes were in use in these Eastern Countries, and consequently also amongst them, even when Bacchus made his expedition into India (which was some three or four years before, or after the departure of Israel out of Ægypt,) Sir Walter Rawleigh seemeth to affirm: because Philostratus in the life of Apollonius Tyanæus, telleth us how Bacchus was beaten from a City of Oxydracæ, by thunder and lightning; which he interpreteth to be the Cannon. But certainly himself in another place of his most excellent book, acknowledgeth this Philostratus to have written fabulously; and therefore no fit foundation for a conceit so contrary to probability, and the opinion of all times. Besides, whereas Dion telleth us, that by the benefit of thunder and lightning from Heaven, Severus discomfited Pescininus Niger; and by the same means, was himself repulsed from the wall of Petra in Arabia: we may (if this interpretation hold good) as easily maintain, that Severas had great Ordnance in his Camp; and the Arabians, in their Town. As for Printing, whether John Gertrudenberg learned it of the Chinois; or whether good inventions, like good wits, do sometimes jump, I dare not determine: sure I am that he first taught it in Europe; and as some say, in the year 1440. At Harlem a Town of Holland, it is first said to be practised; and at Mentz, perfected. Now whereas it is by some doubted, whether the Art of Printing be available to the proficiency and advancement of Learning, or not; I must not herein be both a Judge, and a party: but must leave the decision of the point to men unintereſſed. Onely this I dare boldly say, that this most excellent Invention hath been much abused, and prostituted to the lust of every foolish and idle paper-blurrer: the treasury of learning being never so full, and yet never more empty; over-charged so with the froth and scumme of foolish and unnecessary discourses. In which (though all Nations have their share therein, and we of late as much as any) the Dutch have been accompted the most blame-worthy: who not content to scatter their poor conceptions amongst themselves, and print them in their own tongue onely (as our English Paper Blurers do); publish them in the Latine to the eye of others, and send them twice a year to the publick Marts, though neither worth the Readers eye, nor the Printers hand. Scriptorum plus est hodie quam muscarum olim cum caletur maxime; the complaint once of an old Comedian, was never truer than at the present.

But not to dive too deep into this dispute, the people, as before was said, are good Artificers, ingenious and excellent in all things which they take in hand: the porcellan dishes, curious carvings, and the fine painted works which we have in Tables, Leathers, Stuffes, being brought from thence. Effeminated with much ease and pleasure, they are not much given unto the wars which make them the more easy prey to the neighbouring Tartars, whose very name hath bread more terrors in them, then their Armes, or Conquests. Insomuch that when Usunynates, requested aide of Zungters King of the Eastern Tartars, against Lycanyzas, and his rabble of Rogues, which sacked the Citie of Peking, and placed himself in the Throne Imperiall. The Tartarian haveing but few men in readiness, advised him to array a good part of his own Soldiers with the Armes and Coulers of the Tartars, that on the terror of that sight he might obtaine the cheaper, and more certaine victory; which prudent Councell was perſued, and it proved accordingly; but what they want in courage they ſupply with wit, being ſaid to be a politick and judicious people; but withall very jealous of their women, and great tyrants over them, not ſuffering them to go abroad, or ſit down at the Table if any ſtranger be invited, unleſs he be ſome very neer kinſman. A tyranny or reſtraint, which the poor women give no cauſe for, being ſaid to be very honeſt, and much reſerved; not ſo much as ſhewing themſelves at a window for fear of offence: and if they uſe painting, as moſt of them do, it is rather to preſerve themſelves in the good affections of their husbands, than for any other lewd reſpects. For the moſt part of a fair hair, whereof very curious: binding it about their heads with Ribbands of ſilk, garniſhed with pearles and pretious ſtones. Neat in their dreſs, and very coſtly in their apparel, with reference to their eſtates, and the degree of their husbands: the richer ſort wearing Sattin ſtriped with Gold, and interlaced with very rich Jewels; the poorer in Serge, and razed velvets. They have moſt of them little feet, which they take great pride in, and for this cauſe bind them up hard from their very infancy: which they endure patiently though it be very painfull, becauſe a ſmall foot is accounted for ſo great a grace. And yet it is concived that this proceedeth not ſo much from their own curioſity; as from the jealouſy of the men, who have brought it in: to the end that they ſhould not be able to go but with a great deal of pain; and that going with ſo ill a grace, and ſo little eaſe, they ſhould have no deſire to ſtirre much abroad. A cuſtome ſo antient and received, that it hath got the force of law; and if any mother ſhould do otherwiſe in breeding their daughters, they would undergo ſome cenſure or mark of infamy. If a deſire to ſee their Parents get them the freedome of a viſit, they are carryed to them in cloſe chairs, and attended by ſo many waiters, that it is not poſſible that any man either ſo ſee them, or hold any diſcourſe with them.

Of both Sexes it is thought that this Countrey containeth no fewer than 70 Millions. Which though it ſeem to be a number beyond all belief; yet it is knowingly averred, and may be thought probable enough, if we conſider the ſpaciouſneſs of the Countrey; 2. The ſecret goodneſs of the ſtars, and temperature of the air; 3. The abundance of all things neceſſary to life; 4. That it is not lawful for the King to make any war, but meerly defenſive, and ſo they enjoy perpetuall peace; 5. That it is not lawfull for any Chenois to go out of the Countrey; and 6. That here the Sea is as well peopled as whole Provinces elſewhere. For the ſhips do reſemble a City, in which they buy, ſell, are born, and die. And on the River which watreth the walls of Nanquin, up to Paquin, which is no leſs than 300 leagues, the ſhips are ſaid to be ſo thick ranked, that it ſeemeth to be a continuall ſtreet.

The people hereof in matters of Religion, are generall all Gentiles, and conceive thus of the creation; viz. That there was one Taine, who created Panzon, and Panzona, whoſe poſterity remained 90000 years: but they for their wickedneſs being deſtroyed, Taine created Lutitzam, who had two horns; from the right came men, from the left came women. When any of them dieth, they cloath him in his beſt apparell, all perfumed, ſet him in his beſt chair, and there all his neereſt kindred kneeling before him, take their leave with tears. When he is coffined, they place him in a room richly furniſhed, and ſet by him a table full of viands and good cheer, with candles continually burning on it. Not much unlike to which ceremonies, we find, how whilſt the funerall was preparing for Francis the French King, his Statua apparelled in royall robes, with the Crown, Scepter, &c. was laid on his bed; whither dinner and ſupper was daily ſerved in, with the like ſtate and ſolemnity as when he was living. But to return again to my dead Chinois; when he had lain, as is above ſaid, fifteen dayes, he is carried forth to his funerall, the place whereof is in the fields: for to be buried within the walls, were a thing of all others the moſt wretched. Hither, when they are in the manner of a proceſſion, come; they burn his body, and with it men, cattell, and other proviſion, for his attendance and ſuſtenance in the other world: as they uſe in the funerals of Tartary. As great Idolaters as any, ſacrificing to the very devil, and that upon the ſame reaſon, as the moſt ignorant ſort of the Gentiles do; becauſe forſooth he is a wicked and miſchievous creature, and would otherwiſe hurt them.

Yet in the midle of this darkneſs there appeareth ſome light, whereby we may perceive that Chriſtianity had ſome footing here, in the times forgoing; For they believe, that God is an immortall ſpirit; that by him the firſt man was made of nothing; that the ſoul dieth not with the body, but is capable of reward and puniſhment in another life, according to the works it hath done in this. Which leſt they ſhould be thought to be onely ſome remainders of the light of nature, (the learned men amongſt the antient Greeks and Romans, having ſo much divinity as this, without the Goſpel): we may here add, that the Idol moſt generally worſhipped by them, is painted with three heads looking one on another; ſignifying, as themſelves affirm, that they have all but one will: which makes ſome think they had been antiently inſtructed in the doctrine of the holy Trinity. They have alſo the picture of a very fair woman holding a Child in her Arms, who as they ſay, was daughter of ſome great King; and that ſhe was delivered of that Infant when ſhe was a Virgin. And as ſome add, they have portraitures, of the faſhion, and with the marks or Characters of the twelve Apoſtles (as uſually painted in ſome part of the Chriſtian Church): of whom they are able to ſay nothing, but that they were great Philoſophers who lived vertuouſly here, and were therefore made Angels in Heaven. And finally they hold that there is a great number of Saints, or men eſtated in an eminent degree of happineſs, who in their times exceeded others in knowledge, induſtry, or valour, or lived an auſtere life without wronging any man; or otherwiſe deſerved nobly of the commonwealth, as the Authors of ſome ſignall benefit unto their Countrey. Theſe I conceive to be ſome evident remainders of Chriſtianity, or the Remembrances rather of that Chriſtianity, which formerly was known amongſt them: Firſt planted here (as may be probably collected) by Saint Thomas, or ſome of his Diſciples; an antient Breviary or Liturgy of the Indian Churches, giving good hint to it: Where it is ſaid, Per D. Thomam regnum cœlorum volavit & aſcendit ad Sinas: i. e. that by Saint Thomas the Kingdom of Heaven was preached unto thoſe of China. Some Characters here were alſo of it, in the time of the Tar- tars,

tars, though now obliterated, and not visible but in these defacements. And in this state it stood till the time of our Fathers, in which the Jesuites (commendably industrious in the propagation of the Christian faith) not without great danger to themselves, have endeavoured, and in part effected, their conversion. For though they have gained but few Proselytes, (in regard of those infinite numbers of people which are said to live here) yet some Converts they have made amongst them; and thereby sown those seeds of that saving truth (though mingled with some Tares of their own) which may in time increase and spread over all the Countrey. For at the present they have not onely got footing in the Ports and Sea Townes; But also in many mid-land Cities, and in some also very farr distant from the Sea, in all of which, they have both Churches for their followers; and Cells or Monasteries for them selves; and finally have gained so farr upon the Court, as not onely to have their doings well approved of by authority Royall; but have also gained unto the faith, the Mother, wife, and eldest Son of Jungly the last declared Emperor of the Chinese, which eldest Son they have baptized (and be it an happy Omen, for the good of Christendome) by the name of Constantine.

Hills of great note here are not many, here being but one Mountain touched upon by Ptolomy, in his description of the Countrie called Sinarum Regio, which we conceive to be the Southern part of this China: agreeable unto the observation of modern writers, by whom it is affirmed to be so plain and levell, and so unswelled with hills; at all, that they have Carts and Coaches driven with sayles, as ordinarily as drawn with horses, in these parts. Not the less destitute of Rivers for this want of mountains; Ptolomy naming in it, 1. Aspihara. 2. Senus. 3. Ambastus, and 4. Cotiaris; all which had here their fount and fall: and yet he knew the out-skirts of the Countrey onely. But because the Countrey of the Sini of which Ptolomy speakes make; but a South part of this great Countrey, and that the Rivers which before we mentioned in Serica; passed into it also, its possible enough, that we may finde them all, amongst the cheef Rivers of this Countrey, whensoever we shall come to have a more perfect Corographie hereof then former times have given unto us. In the meane season we may know, that the names by which the principall Rivers are now called, are Yalo, which rising in the Northest parts of the Countrey, and passing by the Southern skirts of Leaotong, falleth into the Ocean over against the Island of Corea, makeing a little Islet at the Influx of it fortified with a strong Castle called Xainghai, to secure that entrance. 2. Croceus, which arising in the West Borders hereof, first bendeth its course to the Northeast, watering the Citie of Kaiancheu, and after passeth directly Eastward till it falls at last into the Yalo. 3. Palyfangas which issueing out of some of the branches of Mount Imaus, first passeth by the great Citie of Cambalu, and falls at last into the mighty Lake of Quinsay, and finally again contracted to its propper chanell, doth either lose it self in the Eastern Ocean or in the great River of Kiang of which more anon. 4. Cacamaton, another of these great Rivers, which falleth into the Lake of Quinsay, and possibly may be the same which the Chatayan Tartars call by the name of Caramanam. 5. Kiang (or Quiam as the Tartars calls it) which haveing its originall from Mount Imaus, and passing thorow the whole breadth of Cathay, cutteth thorow the middle of this Countrey which it divideth (like an Equator) into North and South, watering therin the stately Cities, of Nanguin, and Casung where it is no lesse then 4 miles broad increasing more and more in breadth by the falling in of many other principall Rivers till it came at last to be 10 miles over, and casting up such Mountains of water, that the Chinese call it not undeseruedly. The Son of the Sea, 6. Cienthany, the same (I think) which the Tartars call Quiantu, which rising out of some other spors or branches of the Mount Imaus, fall th at last into this Countrey, and passing by the goodly Citie of Quanychen on the North, and the fair Town of Xaoking on the South, endeth its course at last in the Eastern Ocean. 7. Quei, a River of the Southern parts; but not much observable. Here are also many great Lakes, not inferiour to some Seas in bigness; so plentifull in fish, as if they contended with the soyl, which should be most profitable: and yet so little swelled with winds (though the winds many times blow strongly) that both upon these Lakes, and on the Rivers and Sea coasts, they pass up and down in small barks, with no other sail than a bough set up an-end in the middest of them; by the help wereof they make good speed in their navigations. Nor do these Lakes or Rivers use to overflow their banks, or endamage the Countrey: but when they do, it brings some fatall ruine with it; as in the year 1557 when the Lake of Sancey breaking out overwhelmed seven Cities, many Towns, and Villages, and Countrey people, almost infinite numbers.

Towns of most note amongst the Sinæ, though nothing but the names be remaining of them, 1. Brama; and 2. Rhabana, honoured with the title of Civitates. 3. Aspithra. 4. Achatara, more within the land; but all four under some degree of Northern Latitude. 5. Thine, the Metropolis of the Countrey, by some called Sinæ. 6. Sarata. 7. Catoranagara; these on the South-side of the line. But in this Ptolomy was mistaken; it being found by the more certain observations of our later writers, that no part of China comes within 20 degrees of the Æquinoctiall; and so not capable of having any Towns or Cities of a Southern Latitude. Here was also a large bay called Sanarum Sinus; a Promontory named Notium, in the fourth degree of Northern Latitude; and another named Satyrorum, lying under the Æquinox. More than this of the Cities of the antient Sinæ, I have nothing to say, which I dare offer to the Reader.

But to behold them as they are presented to our view in the modern China, it hath been said, that for number there are no fewer than 591 Cities; and those so uniformly built, so conformably to one another, that they differ not in form, and fashion, but in quantity onely. Much like the Cities of Utopia mention by Sir Thomas More, Idem situs omnibus, eadem; quatenus per locum licet, rerum facies; so neer resembling one another, that he who knoweth but one of them, may conjecture at all. And this is the manner of their building. Most of their Cities have the benefit of some navigable River, neer which they stand: the waters whereof serve them both for navigation, and domestick uses. Two great Streets crossing one another in the very middest, so broad, that ten horsemen may ride a breast in the narrowest of them; them; ſo ſtrait, that a man ſtanding in the middle, may ſee either end: each end being ſhut up with a Gate of great ſtrenghth and beauty; and thoſe Gates fortified and ſtrengthned with thick plates of iron. Generally greater and more ſtately than thoſe of Europe, but defective in that point of elegancy which the Magnificent Churches, and more ſumptuous buildings for the diſpatch of publique buſineſſes, in theſe parts abound with. Their private houſes for the moſt part are alſo low, and deſtitute of Porches, Windows, Galleries, the principall ornaments and graces of Architecture. Nor are their Cities built onely for reſort, or teade, but for ſtrength and ſafety, environed with deep and broad diches, the walls of brick or ſtone, ſtrong above belief, planted with Ordnance and Artillery in convenient places: and every night the Gates not only locked but ſealed; not to be opened till unſealed by the principall Magiſtrate. So like they are to one another that we may ſay with Ovid on the like occaſion.

——Facies non omnibus una,
Nec diverſa tamen, qualem decet eſſe ſororum.

Which I finde thus Engliſhed by G. Sandis,

Amongſt them all no two appeare the ſame,
Nor differed more then Siſters well became.

But not to reſt our ſelves on this generall Character, let us take a more particular veiw of ſome of the principall. And in that liſt we find. 1. Quinſay, called Suntien by the natives, ſituate ſome what towards the South, on the Weſtern borders of this Kingdome, where it confineth on Cathay of this Town many thing are reported beyond all beleif, as namely that it contained once in circuit an hundred miles, and had in the middeſt of it a Lake of 30 miles compaſs; in which Lake were two goodly Ilands, and in them two magnificent Palaces, adorned with all neceſſariet, either for majeſty, or convenience; in which are celebrated the publique feaſts, and the mariages of the better ſort; The Lake nouriſhed with divers Rivers, the chief being Polyſango, and Cacamacan; on which Rivers 12000 bridges are ſaid to have lifted up their ſtately heads: and under whoſe immenſe Arches, great ſhips, with ſails ſpread abroad, and top & top-gallant, might & did uſually paſs. It is alſo ſaid to have had ten market-places, each of them four miles aſunder, and every one in form quadrangular, the ſides thereof half a mile in length. Here were ſaid alſo to be twelve Companies of tradeſmen or Artizans, each company having 12000 ſhops; and in all a million and 600000 Families. But whatſoever it was in the former times, certain it is that at this time (if it hath at this time any beeing at all partly on the removall of the Court from hence to Cambalu by the Tartars; and ſince to Nanquin and Paquin by the Princes of the houſe of Hombu, and partly the fury of the wars, and partly by the violence of Earth-quakes; it hath loſt no ſmall part of her ancient beauty, and renown. 2. Unguen, famous for the abundance of ſugar there made. 3. Nanquin, ſeated 9 leagues from the Sea, on the great River of Kuny, whereon ride for the moſt part no fewer than 10000 of the Kings ſhips, beſides ſuch as belong to private men. The Town in compaſs 30 miles, being girt with three fair brick walls, having large and ſtately Gates: The ſtreets in length two leagues, wide, and paved; the number of houſes is about 200000. ſo that it may equall four of the faireſt Cities of Europe. 4. Paquin or Pagnia, in the middle of the Provence ſo named (being one of the four Northern Provinces, which take up the whole breadth of this mighty Kingdome) where the King continually reſideth; and that, either becauſe the air hereof is more healthfull and pleaſant, than any of the other; or becauſe it lieth neer unto the Tartars, with whom the Chinois are in perpetuall warre: ſo that from hence the dangers which may by their invaſions happen unto the Countrey, may with more convenience be either prevented, or remedied. The City ſaid to be inferiour to Nanquin for bulk and beauty, but to exceed it in multitude of Inhabitants, Souldiers, and Magiſtrates, occaſioned by the Kings abode. Environed on the South, with two walls, of ſo great breadth that twelve horſemen may run abreſt upon them; on the North, with one wall onely, but that ſo ſtrong and vigilantly guarded, that they fear as little annoyance on that ſide as they do on the other. But the greateſt Ornament hereof is the Royall Palace, compaſſed about with a triple wall, the outwardmoſt of which would well inviron a large City, within which ſpace, beſides the many lodgings for Eunuchs and other Courtiers, are Groves, hills, fountains, Rivers, and the like places of pleaſure, larger in circuit, but not comparable for the Arts of Architecture to the Royall Palaces of Europe: Firſt built by ſome of the Tartar Kings of this Countrey in imitation of the Royall Palace of Xaindu, mentioned in Chatay honored ſometimes with the reſidence of the Chams themſelves, which as it gave unto the Citie the name of Pequin, that is to ſay the Court or Citie of the King, in the language of China, ſo gave it occaſion unto ſome Writers to make this and Cambalu the ſame, both names being of the ſame ſignification, though in divers languages. 5. Canton, ſuppoſed to be the Caligara of Ptolomy; by the Chinois called Quamchen, the leaſt of the Metropolitan Cities of this Countrey, but beautified with many triumphant Arches, a navigable River, large ſtreets, and many goodly bridges. Fortified with deep trenches, 83. Bulwarks, and ſeated in ſo rich a ſoyl both for Fowl and Cattell, that here are ſaid to be eaten dayly 6000 hogs, and 12000 Ducks, beſides proportionable quantity of other victuals. If this be one of the leaſt of their Metropolitans, what may we fancy of the greateſt? A Town in which the Portugals drive a wealthy trade, being permitted in the day-time to come within the City it ſelf; but at night excluded, and forced to find lodging in the Suburbs. By reaſon of which reſtraint they have ſetled their Mart at Macao the Port Town to this, where they have their Factor and many families; the Town being all moſt wholy peopled by them. 6. Leaogang the chief Citie of Leaolong (another of the four Northern Provinces) and the firſt Town taken by the Eaſtern

Tartars

Tartars in their attempts upon this Kingdom, by this door making themselves an entrance into all the rest. 7. Ningaiven made the Metropolis of Leaolong after the taking of Leaogang by the Eastern Tartars. 8. Sigan or Singan, the chief City of Xensi another of the four Northern Provinces, and honoured sometimes with the Kings residence. 9. Xaoking on the south side of the said River, one of the fairest Cities of China, so inviroued with sweet Waters, as a man may contemplate its beauty as rendring it in a Boat; consisting of large and fair streets paved on both sides with white square stones, and in the middle of them all runs a Navigable Channel whose sides are garnished with the like ornament; and of the same stone there is also built many fair Bridges, and triumphant Arches; the houses being all of the same stone also, which render it the neatest (though not the biggest) City in this mighty Kingdom. 10. Sucheau seated in Marishes like Venice, but more commodiously, because those Marishes are of fresh water; the streets and houses founded upon Piles of Pine-tree; with many bridges, and conveniences for passage both by land and water. Well traded, as the fittest Center for dispersion of Merchandise from all the other Ports of the Kingdom: by the multitude and frequency of ships, almost denying faith to the eyes, which would think all the ships of China to be here assembled. So infinitely rich, that the small Region whereof it is the head containing but eight Cities more, payeth 12. millions to the King of yearly income, 11. Hamseu, or Hanychen on the Northside of the River Cinithang, out of which furnished with a Channel of great length and breadth, by which it trades into the Northern parts of this Kingdom; the Metropolis of the Province of Chequian, about two days journey from the Sea (of which distance from the Sea is Suckeau also) in compass less than Namquin, but better builded: no place in it taken up with Gardens, Orchards, or other pleasures; but all employed for shops, houses, and other edifices. So beautified with Triumphant Arches, erected to the honour of deserving Magistrates, that in one street there are 300. of great mass or workmanship. The Temples magnificent and many; the bank-sides of the Channels watering every street, beset with trees of shade, and most excellent fruits: and in the middle of the City a round high mountain, which gives the eye a gallant prospect into every street. And not far off a pleasant Lake, of great breadth and length, the banks whereof are beautified with groves and gardens, and the Lake it self even cloathed with vessels of all sorts, on which the Citizens use to feast, and entertain their idle time with plays and spectacles. Two Cities so replenished with all kinde of pleasures, that the Chinois use it for a Proverb, Thien Xam, thien thum, ti Xamsu hum, that is to say, look what the Hall or Presence Chamber is in heaven, that Hamseu and Suckeau are on earth. 12. Fochea, beautified amongst many other stately Structures, with a Magnificent Tower erected on 40. marble pillars, of great elegancy, cost, and bigness, every pillar being 40. spans in height, and 12. in breadth: not to be paralleld, as some say, by any the like work in Europe. 13. Lochiau, in which are 70000. families. 14. Colans, famous for the best Procellane. 15. Scianhay, by some called Thiencin, a station to which an incredible number of Ships resort, both by Sea and River from all parts of this Kingdom; seated within 24. hours sail of the Isle of Japan, and therefore defended with a strong Garrison, and a Navy. Situate in a pleasant and wholsom soyl, the whole Countrey so set forth with trees, as it it were one continued Orchard. So populous, that it conteineth 40000. housholds, most of which get their livelihood by weaving Cottons: it being supposed that here are 200000. persons which attend that Manufacture. 16. Chinchiamsu, whence by a River made by hand, there is a passage to Sucheau; the water of which never freezeth, and for that cause so clogged with ships in time of winter, that the passage is stopped with the multitudes of them. 17. Zuangchen a most rich and beautifull City environed with large waters, and the only Southern Port within the Land, to which Ships or Boats may have access. 18. Caiton or Caisung, seated upon the River Kiang, a City once of three Leagues in compass, whose harbour was seldom without 500. ships, and sometimes honoured with the Seat or Residence of the Kings themselves; most miserably destroyed Anno 1642. by Zunchinius the late King of this Country, who breaking down the dams and sluices to let in the River, for the dislodging of some Thieves and Out Laws, who had then besieged it, gave it so great and forcible a passage towards the Town, that it bare down the greatest part of the houses of it, and therein drowned above 300000. of the Natural Citizens; before which time the Metropolis or chief City of the Province of Honon. 19. Kaiangchen on the South-side of the River Croceus, the richest and the fairest City in these parts of the Country, commodiously seated to command that River. 20. Chatking the head City of the Province of Guangtuang, for the strength and conveniency of its situation thought fittest for the seat of Jungly, the last declared Emperour of the Chines against the Tartars. 21. Queilin the chief City of the Province of Quaingsi. 22. Taitung the Metropolis or chief City of Xansi or Cansay, another of the four Northern Provinces, but not else observable for any thing I finde of it, either in point of Trade or Story. 23. Nancheng a chief City of the Province of Kiansi, of which little memorable; and less of 24. Cergiron, but that it is like unto the rest in form and structure.

Besides the Provinces before mentioned, there are three others not directly under the dominion of the Kings of China, though depending on it, that is to say, 1. the Province of Suchuen, 2. the Island of Coreas, 3. the Island of Cheuxan.

1. The Province of Suchuen, lieth on the Southwest of this Kingdom of the same nature both for soyl and Air with the rest of China, but possessed by a more warlike people; the women here being trained up to feats of Arms, and so well practised on their weapons, that when the Queen hereof went to the aid of the Emperour Vanley against the Tartars, Anno 1618. she took with her a small Army of 3000. women, performing Actions not unworthy the bravest men: the chief City hereof is called Cingtu, of great capacity, and so exceeding populous withall, that Licungzus (that most barbarous Tyrant) caused no fewer theen 600000. of them (men women and children all indifferently, to be slaughtered in one day before his face, the whole Country governed for a long time by its own Kings of the same Tai- mingian race with the Kings of China, from whom having received their Inveſtiture, they were afterwards of abſolute authority over their own ſubjects, who acknowledge no other King but him. And in this ſtate it did continue, till the year 1644. when Licungzus whom before I named, entering into this Country with his rabble of Rogues made a Conqueſt of it, murdered the young King, Son to the Amazonian Queen, which before we ſpake of: diſpeopled the great City of Cingtu, butchered at one time twenty thouſand Prieſts, at another time eigteen thouſand Students; and finally committed ſuch unſpeakable outrages, that the Tartars in meer pity to that wretched people, ſent an Army againſt him, by which he was vanquiſhed, and ſlain; this Province thereupon ſubmitting to the Tartars as their great deliverers.

2. Corea, is an Iſland of the Eaſtern Ocean, not far from the North Eaſt of China, over againſt the fall of the River Galo. The quality of the ſoyl, the demenſions of it, and what Cities it containeth in it, I have no where found. The people far more warlike then thoſe of China, by reaſon of the ill neighbourhood of the Japanites, with whom they have always either open wars, or uncertain peace. Invaded by thoſe Iſlanders and in danger to be conquered by them, they made an offer of their Countrey to the King of China; who having repulſed the Invaders, reſtored their Country freely to them, without layiug any other Impoſition on them, then of love and gratitude, which obligations thoſe of Corea have diſcharged moſt fully. For when Vanley the late Emperour of China was firſt invaded by the Tartars, they ſent unto his aid twelve thouſand men well Armed, and exerciſed in the Wars; increaſing their ſupplies in the time of Theinkius, who next but one ſucceeded Vanley; drawing the whole ſtorm upon themſelves by thoſe friendly ayds, they were accordingly aſſiſted by the King of China, whoſe forces came ſo ſeaſonably in the heat of a Battel between the Coreans and the Tartars, that the Tartars after a long and terrible fight, were driven out of the Iſland, but with ſuch incredible loſs on all ſides, that few or none eſcaped of the Army of China, ſeventy thouſand of the Coreans ſlain, and the Tartars leaving fifty thouſand of their men behinde them; after this they were unmoleſted, till the fatal and final Conqueſt of the Kingdom of China, when ſeeing the Tartars Lords of all, and no poſſibility of reſiſtance, they ſubmitted to them, about the year 1648. upon condition of retaining their Hair and Habit, which no extremity of perſonal danger, or fear of publique deſolation, could compel them to alter.

3. Cheuxan, is an Iland of the ſame Seas, on the South of Corea oppoſite to the City of Nympus in the Main Land of China; an Iland which being heretofore a dwelling place of poor Clowns and Fiſhermen only, is now become a potent Kingdom. For Lu. Regulus, choſen by a party of his own to ſucceed to the broken Crown of China, and finding no hopes of withſtanding the great power of the Tartars, retired himſelf into this Iland with his friends and followers, followed not long after by great multitudes of the Natural Chineſe, who choſe rather to forſake their Country, then to conform in hair and habit to the will of the Tartars; Inſomuch that there are now found in this Iland threeſcore and ten Cities, with a ſtrong and formidable Army, which hitherto hath contemned all the Tartarian Power and Forces, and watch for ſome happy occaſion to advance again their Kingdom in China.

The ancient Inhabitants of the Sinæ, in the time of Ptolomy, were towards the North, the Semantini, bordering a mountain of that name, and the only one remembred in all this Countrey: more Southward, the Acadræ, and Aſpithræ; Towards the Sea the Anabaſtæ, and Ichthyophagi (theſe laſt ſo called from living wholly upon fiſh.) United into one body by the name of Sinæ, and known by that name to the Romaas, in the time of Ptolomy, who boundeth them on the North with Serica, on the Weſt with India extra Gangem, and on the Eaſt and South with a Terra Incognita: which though it make up the leaſt part of the Modern China, Serica touching only on a Corner of the Northweſt of it, and the main Ocean waſhing it on the Eaſt and South: yet the Arabians in their Tzinin, and our late Latine Writers in their Sina and Sinenſium Regnum, do from hence give the denomination to this mighty Kingdom. How far they ſtretched beyond the bounds laid down by Ptolomy, and whether they ſubdued the Eaſtern and more Northern Nation, or were Conquered by them, it is hard to ſay; nor is it eaſie to reſolve, from what original theſe and the reſt of the Inhabitants do derive themſelves, whether from the Indians, or the Scythes: or that it was primitively planted by ſome of the poſterity of Noah, before the enterpriſe of Babel: which laſt may probably be concluded from the extream populouſneſs of the Country, the many magnificent Cities; their Induſtry and Ingenuity in all Arts and Sciences, not to be taught them by their neighbours, more ignorant in thoſe things than themſelves. And hereunto the Chronicles of China ſeem to give ſome ground, which tell us of three hundred and fourty Kings, which for the ſpace of four thouſand years have therein reigned. For as their Chronicles inform us, (if they may be credited) the Countrey being without Rule or ſetled Government, was firſt reduced into order by one Vitey, the Son of Ezolcm; by whom the people were inſtructed in Phyſick, Aſtrology, Divination, and the Art of Tillage: to which, this Vitey, having found out the way of cutting or ſawing Timber, added the uſe of Ships and Houſes, and many other the effects of Mechanical hands. Having by the valour of Lincheon one of his Commanders, ſubdued a great part of the Countrey, he drew them into Towns and Villages; diſtributed them into Offices, and ſeveral Trades, diſpoſing thoſe of the ſame Trade into Streets by themſelves; and commanding that no man without leave from himſelf, or his Officers, ſhould follow any other Trade than that of his Father. He preſcribed them alſo the faſhion of their Garments, taught them the Art of making and dying Silks: and having reigned an hundred years, left the Kingdom well eſtabliſhed unto his poſterity. Of this race there are ſaid to have been 217 Kings, who held the State 2257 years.

The

The laſt of them was that Tzaintzon, who being ill-neighboured by the Scythians (not yet called Tartars) is ſaid to have built that vaſt wall ſpoken of before: extended 400. Leagues in length, and at the end of every League a ſtrong Rampart or Bulwark, continually garriſoned, and well furniſhed with all warlike neceſſaries. He being ſlain by ſome of his Subjects, burdned and waſted with this work, the race of Vitey ended; and that of Anchoſan ſucceeded, a Prince of much prudence, but greater courage. In his line it continued under 25. Kings, but ſhrewdly ſhaken towards the cloſe by a Civil War, betwixt Trunthey the 23. of his houſe, and his Nephew Laupy. Hardly well ſetled under Quiontey the laſt of this houſe, when Tzobu, a great Tyrant of the other faction, ſet upon him, and ſlew him. And ſo the majeſty of the blood-royal being trod under foot, the Crown was alſo toſſed from one hand to another, and made a prey unto the ſtrongeſt: there being of the race of this Tzobu, eight Kings, reigning 62. years; Of the race of Dian, five Kings, who reigned thirty one; Of the race of Tzoy, three only, who reigned thirty ſeven; Of the race of Tenco, one and twenty, who held the Crown 291. years; and eight there were who reigned 120. years, of the houſe of Tautzom. Of other upſtart families to the number of five, were fourteen Kings alſo, who governed only for the ſpace of 66. years: And then one Zaitzon, deriving himſelf from Vitey, the firſt King of this Countrey, obtained the Kingdom; which he, and ſeventeen of his poſterity, for the ſpace of 320. years, governed with much peace and honour. Forfar, the laſt King of that Royal Family, foretold by prophecy that he ſhould be deprived of his Kingdom by one who had an hundred eyes, neglected the Advertiſement, as unworthy credit: but it fell out agreeable to that prediction, when vanquiſhed by Chiſan-baan (which word ſignifieth an hundred eyes) Lieutenant unto Uſan, a Tartarian Prince, but Feudatary and Vaſſal to the Great Cham. China thus made a Province of the Tartarians, was governed for the ſpace of 93 years, under nine Tartar Kings, Tributaries to the Great Cham, and dependants on him: the Chams themſelves many times paſſing into China, and abiding there according as their pleaſures or affairs did invite them to it, which occaſioned ſuch a continual entercourſe betwixt thoſe of Chinay and Cathay, that they have much participated ever ſince that time, of the manners and cuſtoms of each other. But here it is to be obſerved that the Tartars ſpent almoſt as much time in the Conqueſt of China, as they did in the poſſeſſion of it; the war being firſt begun, Anno 1206. finiſhed 1268. the Tartars being totally outed when they had reigned here 90. years only, that is to ſay, Anno 1358. or thereabouts. For then it hapned that a mean perſon called Hugh, conſidering with himſelf the diſcontentedneſs of the Chineſe under ſo long Bondage, the luxury of the Tartars, effeminated with the pleaſures of that Country, and the unwarlike temper of Ciina Cham, then raigning over all in the City of Cambalu, raiſed to himſelf ſo ſtrong a party, that in ſhort time he drave the Tartars out of all; forcing them to betake themſelves to thoſe parts of the Eaſtern Tartars, which now make up the Kingdom of Nieuche.

1. Finally turning towards the Weſt, he not only recovered back to China, ſuch parts thereof (as had been layed unto Cathay, and incorporated with it by she Tartars; but growing thereby a formidable neighbour to the Cham himſelf. Advances for this great ſervice to the Crown of China, Anno 1269. he took unto himſelf the name of Hunguus (our late Writers commonly call him Hombu) which ſignifieth as much as the famous Worker, and gave unto his children, and their poſterity, the name of the Taimingica Family; which they ſtill continue for the recovery of this Country; great Tamerlane muſtereth up his forces, and though Hombu brought into the field 350000. horſe and foot, yet nothing could reſiſt the powerfull genious of that mighty Conqueror, who obtained here a ſignal victory with the death of 60000. Chineſe, But wiſely moderating his proſperity, and mainly upon his war againſt the Turks, he thought it his beſt and ſafeſt way to let the people of China have a King of their own; impoſing on him a fine of 300000. Crowns in ready money, a certain Annual Tribute (long time after paid) with certain other conditions, which as they were pleaſing to the Victor, ſo they were not deſtructive to the vanquiſhed. By means hereof come to paſs that ſuch a long communication in affairs of ſtate, having paſſed between China Cathay (thoſe of China in old times lording it over part of the Cathayans, as the Caythayans in our times did over the Chineſe there grew a great reſemblance between both Nations, in manners, conditions, arts and manufactures, as before is ſaid, which circumſtances layed together may afford ſome reaſon why ſome Writers eaſily miſguided by ſuch probabilities; Cathay and China have been reckoned to be one and the ſame. Nor did the Empire of the Chinois extend in thoſe times, onely over part of Scythia, but alſo over part of India, and moſt of the Oriental Ilands. But the Princes of the houſe of Hombu finding their own Kingdom large enough to content their deſires; abandoned all the Acceſſories and Out-parts of their Dominions: prompted thereunto, not only by their own moderation, but by ſome misfortunes which befell them. For as we finde that the Romans having by the fury of two violent tempeſts, loſt no fewer than 206. of their ſhips and gallies, reſolved to abandon (and for a long time did forbear) the Seas, which had uſed them ſo unkindly: So the Chinois having received a great overthrow, and loſs of 800. ſhips, nigh unto Zeilan, they freed all the Ilands from obedience unto them, and contented themſelves with the bounds which nature had beſtowed on them. And of their moderation herein, we have a very rare example. For when the people of Corea, a ſmall Iland abutting on the confines of China, were invaded by the Japonites; they ſubmitted themſelves unto the King of China: who having repulſed the enemy, and thereby cleared his own Countrey from danger, preſently redelivers over unto the Coreans, their Town and liberry. A rare fact of a contented people. Which whether it favoured of greater moderation or magnanimity, I am not able to determine. In this family hath the Realm continued under 15. Kings, for the ſpace of 266. years and upward, reckoning from Hombu unto Boneg: who being the twelfth of this line, ſucceeded his elder brother, unfortunately ſlain with a fall from an horſe. Reported for a Prince of good diſpoſition, great judgement, and a ſevere Juſticiary. This Boneg (otherwiſe called Vanly) begun his Raign, Anno 1573. governing this Kingdome in great prosperity and glory for the space of 40. years and upwards; when causing the Christian Subjects and the Jesuites their Converters to be hardly dealt with, and denying Justice to the Eastern Tartars for the many wrongs done them by his presence in the Province of Lealoung, he drew that people into Armes, as if marked out for Executioners of Divine displeasure. Stript by them in the year 1618. of a part of Leaolong, and braved by their Forces within sight of Peking, he contracted some melancholick distempers, of which he died about two years after, leaving the Crown to his Son Tiachangus, who having held it but four months left it, and all the troubles of it to his Son Theinkius, a valiant Prince and fortunate against the Tartars, but of short continuance. For dying in the year 1627. he was succeeded in that Kingdome by his Broeher Zonchinius a Prince of contrary dispostion, cruelly bent, a great Oppressor of his Subjects, and for these causes ill beloved; yet they continued in obedience (though for fear rather of the Tartars, then for love of him) untill the year 1640. or thereabouts. At what time the people in many places oppressed with Taxes, and in the Northern parts with Famine arise in 8. Companies or Armies, which growing wanton by success, and warring upon one another, they are at last reduced under two chief Leaders, that is to say, Lycungzus and Changhienchangus.

These two being come to an agreement took their several wayes, the last of them falling into Suchmen, whose vilanies and deserved destruction we have there related. Lycungzus the more fortunate vilain, in the year 1641. besieged Caifung the chief City of the Province of Honan, a place of great strength, but far greater riches, on the ruine whereof by the Kings improvidence, and his subduing the whole Province or Kenfi, he took to himself the title of King, and would be called Lycunzus the Prosperous; and not long after easing the people of the Taxes which the avaritious King had imposed upon them, puting the Tax masters to death, and gaining upon all sorts of men by his curteous usage, he took unto himself the name of Emperor. Zunchinius succeeds his Brother, hindred by Factions in the Court, from sending seasonable forces against the Rebels, who passing over the great River Croceus without any resistance prevailed in all places where they came, even to the taking of the great City of Peking, and the Pallace Royal; at the hearing whereof, the Emperor seeing no way to escape their hands, hanged himself in his own Orchard, Anno 1644. his example therein followed by the Empress and his principally servants. The bodie of the Emporor cut in pieces, his two younger Sons beheaded, the principal Magistrates murdered, and that great City sacked by command of the Victor. Forced to remove back again to Kenfi by Usangueius Commander of the Army in Leaolong, who called in the Tartars to revenge these Out-rages, the Rebels taking with them all the wealth and treasure which the Emperours of the Taimingian family had amassed together in the space of 260. years and upwards. Zungleus the King of the Tartars having thus got the City of Peking died presently after, leaving his Son at nine years old to succed him in that glorious fortune. By him commended to the care and protection of Uncles, who very faithfully discharged the trust reposed in them; Infinite numbers of Tartars thronging into China upon this occasion, and these not only of the Eastern but the Western Nations.

By these the Infant King was proclaimed Emperour of China, by the name of Xanchius, stiling the new Imperial family by the name of Taiting, the eldest of the Uncles whom the Tartars called Amavangus, having the chief conduct of Affairs.

Usangueius by the Tartars not long after is declared King of Kenfi, out of which he shortly drove the Rebels, and possessed himself of it; Lycungzus being either killed in the fight, or else otherwise lost. Hungquengus Nephew to Varley, and Cozen Germane Zunchinius elected Emperor by the Chineses of the Southern parts, is opposed herein by one that pretended himself to be the eldest Son of Zunchinius; which division gave the Tartars a notable victory over all their forces, and the great City of Narquin in reward thereof.

The new Emperor being shortly after betrayed into the hands of the Tartars is by them hanged on the Wals of Peking; which death the Tartars count most noble. The pretended Son of Zunchinius discovered and served in the same sort also. And though Loangus first, and afterwards Iungly, and Lu Regulus, were chosen and declared Emperors by their several parties, Anno 1648. yet nothing could prevail against the fortune of the Tartars, Loangus being forced to put himself into their power, Iungly to flie into the Mountains, and Lu Regulus to secure himself in the Isle of Cheuxan.

What hath succeeded since that year future times will shew.

The Government of this Kingdom is meerly tyrannicall; there being no other Lord but the King, no title of dignity or nobility ever known amongst them; nor tol or duty paid unto any but to him: the younger Princes of the blood being maintained by stipends, and annual pensions, large enough to support their trains, but withou any Lands or Tenants, for fear of drawing on them any great dependances. The King alone is the general Landlord, and him the subjects do not onely reverence as a Prince, and adore like a God. For in the chief City of every Province, they have the Kings portraiture made of gold, which is alwayes covered with a veil: and at every New-moon, the Magistrate and other inferiour Officers use to kneel before it, as if it were the King himself. By these and other artifices of like contrivement the Common people are kept in such awe and fear, that they are rather slaves than subjects: calling their King the lamp of the world, and Son of the evershining Sun, without whose light they were able to see nothing.

In

In every Province, except Paquin and Tolenchia onely, he hath his Deputies or Vice-Royes, maintained by liberall ſtipends from the publique treaſury: but thoſe he governeth by himſelf. Some laws they have and thoſe affirmed to have been written 2000 years ſince, as is like enough they were. So ſtrongly do they ſavour of the ignorance and Atheiſm of the darkeſt times: the manner of life by them allowed, moſt obſcence and ſhameleſs; their idolatries, moſt groſs and palpable; their exoriſms ridiculous, and the proſtitution of their Virgins moſt abhominable; and the variety of ſenſuall prophanations, to an illuminated mind moſt baſe and contemptible. In a word, nothing commendable in their courſe of life (notwithſtanding the brags which they make of themſelves) but their Arts and induſtry.

The forces which this King is able to draw into the Field muſt needs be infinite, conſidering that incredible number of ſubjects under his command. For whereas France is thought to contain 15 millions of people; Italy, with the Iſles, as many; Germany, with the Switzers and Belgick Provinces, about that proportion; Spain not above ſeven Millions, and the Kingdome of Engeland about four: this Countrey onely is computed at 70 millions; which is more by 15 millions than all together. Proportionably his Levies muſt be ſo much greater, than can be ordinarily raiſed out of thoſe Countries. But becauſe it may be thought that his ſubjects, though more in number, may be leſs trained to the warres than thoſe of Europe; the contrary is affirmed by ſuch as have taken an eſtimate of the forces, which every Province is bound to entertain in continuall readineſs. And by that eſtimate it appeareth, that in the year 1557 (though a time of peace) there were diſperſed in the fifteen Provinces of this Realm, to the number of five millions, 846500 Foot, and 948350 Horſe. Which not with ſtanding it may be ſaid and not unfitly, that he is able to bring into the field, amongſt ſuch multitudes of men; but few good Soldiers, the people being generally unwarlike, and of no great courage, as was before obſerved of them, in their generall Character. Nor is he leſs powerfull for Sea-ſervice, having continually great Fleets for the guard of his coſts, in continuall attendance; and many more ready to ſet out when there is occaſion: inſomuch that the Chinois uſe to ſay in the way of a Proverb, that their King is able to make a bridge of ſhips from China to Malsea, which are 500 leagues aſunder. Some of theſe ſhips (whereof the King hath above a thouſand of his own, beſides thoſe of his ſubjects) of great magnificence and beauty: the Officers and Souldiers in all which are exceeding well paid, and rewarded anſwerably to their merits. And as this King is able to raiſe greater forces than any, from his own eſtates; ſo doth he alſo de facto do it, when the urgency of his affairs do require it of him: his ordinary ſtint being 300000 foot, and 200000 horſe; without which compleat number (not onely in the muſter-rols, but in bodies of men) he vouchſafes not to go into the field.

Anſwerable unto theſe great Levies of men, muſt be his Revenue: which they who have travelled in this ſearch, (if they tell us true, and do not build upon an hope of not being confuted, as for my part I fear they do) affirm to be 120 millions of Crowns: anſwered unto him out of the profit of the mines of Gold, Silver, and other metalls; the tenth of all commodities which the Earth brings forth; the tolls impoſed on that uſpeakable quantity of merchandiſe, which paſſeth on ſo many navigable Rivers from one Town to another; the cuſtomes taken of all thoſe rich wares, which are brought into Europe; and the Gabell laid on Salt, in all parts of his Kingdome. Out of which ſumme, the payment of his Fleet diſcharged, the entertainment of the Souldiers ſatisfied, and his Court defraied; there remaineth 40 millions of Crowns de claro to be diſpoſed of, either in his treaſury, or private pleaſures, or the works of magnificence, and oſtentation.

And thus far alſo according to the generall current of received opinions have I followed the deſcription and affaires of China, as a diſtinct Countrey from Cathay; not ignorant that there are many probable reaſons which might incline us to believe them, to be one and the ſame, for firſt it is alleaged in favour of this opinion that it is neither new nor ſtrang, for one and the ſame Countrey, to be called by divers names, according to the languages and fancies of ſeverall Nations; that Countrey which we call Germanny being by the Natives called Duchland, not long ſince known moſt commonly by the name of Almaine, that part of Britane which we call, Wales being by the Franch called Galles, and Cambria by the Latine Writers; thoſe mountanous people which the Romans know by the name of Rhæti, being by ſome of our Northern Latiniſts called Canſederati Cani, Campi Camini, by Ammianus Morcellinas, Grauntpuntnor, by the neighbouring Dutch, and finally Griſons, by the French, which fower laſt names do carry all the ſame ſence, and ſignification though in different words; that China it ſelf, is by the Natives called Tabinco, Tzinin by the Arabians, Mangi by Paulus Venetus, and by the neighbouring Nations Sanglag; that as it can not be inforced from the like diverſitie of appallations that Almanie, Germanie, and Duch Land make there ſeverall Countries (& ſic de Cæteris) ſo neither can it be concluded on the ſame grounds that China and Cathay make two ſeverall Empires. In the next place it is alleaged that ſince by later voyages and navigations, this mighty Kingdome hath been diſcovered, and made known unto us of Europe by the name of China; the name and Empire of Cathay, hath grown out of knowledge. For proofe whereof they bring in the Itinerarie of Benedictus Goes, a Ieſuite, who in the year 1605. craſſing from the Northeaſt parts of Perſia to the Realme of China, and naming all the ſeverall Countries, and Towns of any note which lay in his way, makes no mention of any ſuch Countrey as Cathay, nor any ſuch Prince as the great Cham thereof: telling us alſo that Martin Martinias, who had lived long in China in his Books entituled Bellum Tartaricum, comprehendeth all the Countries betwixt China and Mount Imaus, under the generall name and Nation of the Weſtern Tartars, not taking notice of any ſuch Countrey as Cathay; nor of any greater Prince amongſt them, then the King of Tanguth; and that Ramuſio in his notes on Paulus Venetus, reperteth ſome conference which he had, with Chaggimemet a Perſian Merchant, who told him that he had ſeen, Campion and Succuir Cities of Cathay, in the raigne of Deimercan, which muſt be underſtood of Cathay in the generall Nation, as it comprehendeth all the Tartarian Countries beyond Imaus, it being well known that Campion and Succuir are two Cities of Tanguth, and not of the propper Cathay, or Cathag especially so called. In the third rank of prooses they instance in the similitudes, or resemblances betwixt both Countries, and both people, which are so great and visible in temperature of Air, fertilitie of soyl, and plesantnesse of situation, in customes, in ingenuitie, arts and Manufactures, as may be thought to carry an Identitie, or sameneſſe with them; which sameneſſe or Identitie they do also finde, in Pequin the chief Citie of China, and Cambalu, the supposed chief Citie of Cathay, being two words of the same sence, and signification though of divers sounds; for Pequin signfieth the Court or Citie of the King in the Chinian langugue, and Cambalu signifieth the Court or Citie of the Cham, in the languge of Tartary. The like they also have observed of the Royall Palaces, adjoyning to the said two Cities, so like in the vast greatneſſe and extent of the outer walls, the Parks and Forrests intermingled, the magnifisent form and structure of the inner Palaces with all the rest of the particulars before recited, that a man might very well conclude them to be one and the same, adding withall that such an immense, and unparalleld a work, as the great Chams Palace called Xamdu, most needs require more hands & a longer time, then the great Chams (considering their continuall wars, and little interualls of leasure, could bestow upon it. But their 4 head prooses, which seemes indeed to be the strongest, they derive first from the Testimonie of Benedict Goes above mentioned, who without taking notice of any such Countrey as Cathay, in so long a journy, telleth us that at Ciales a Citie of the Kingdome of Cascar, and not far from China, he was first informed that Cathay and China were the same; 2ly. from the Testimonie of and old Mahametan Pilgrime, who returning from Meca by Lahor (the Royall seat and Citie of the great Mongull) affirmed there that he had lived long in Cambalu the chief Citie of Cathay, which Kingdome had in it one thousand and fifty Cities, the King thereof being a very mighty Prince, and having a strength of 400 Elephants brought thither from Malaca and Pegu, and that much Merchandize was brought into that Countrey by Sea: which if it be not meant of China to which the story may agree in all particulars) must needs be one of the loudest lyes that ever came from the mouth of a Mahometan, or a Pilgrime either; our Geographers finding very few Cities or Towns of note in Cathay specially so called, no accesse thither by Sea for any Merchandize, nor any way to bring those Elephants from Pegu and Malaca, which the Pilgrime dreamt of 3ly. a clearer Testimonie of some other Mahometans repairing to Paquin every fift year, either as Merchants or Embassadors, or as both together; by whom the Jesuites there living were informed, that in the Dominions of the Persian, and the great Mongull, from whence they came, the Kingdome of China was called by no other name, then by that of Cathay, they knowing no other Countrey of that name, but China only. And 4ly. from the asseverance of Pantogia; another Jesuite who in his letttrs dated from Paquin much blameth our ordinary maps for placing Cathay next to China, whereas (saith he) China or Sinai is Cathay, and this Paquin where we now are is the Citie of Cambalu, which two last evidences coming from the pen of one who had lived many years in China; and not conducing any way to the advancement of the Catholique cause, most needs be thought to carry some great credit, and authority with them.

These reasons if they be of force and moment to the point in hand, we must then act Penelopes part, and ravelling all the web which before was woven, Atque iterum in lanas omne redibit opus, in the Poets language; which that we may the better do, and with as little defacements to the whole peece as possibly we can. I shall thus proceed first then it is be conceived that Cathay specially so called was an aggregate bodie, containing many severall Kingdomes, and distinct Estates, though Homagers to the Kings of Cathay, or dependants on them: as antiently in the Realme of France, besides the King of France themselves, there was a King of Borgundie, a King of Metz a King of Saissons, a King of Orleans; and after that a Duke of Normandie, a Duke of Bretayne, a Duke of Aquitaine, and Earle of Champagne, and Earle of Tholouse, all absolute and an uncontrolable in their owne Estates. And then the Kingdome of Tanguth which we placed in the Southern parts of Altay, must be made one of the Kingdomes of Cathay; and Deimercan whom we ranked in the Catologue of the Chams of Tartary, must be brought a peg lower, and looked on as a King of Tanguth only, and no more then so. 2ly. It must be taken for granted, that the Tartars having conquered the Realme of Cathay, and after wards by the helpe of that people, subdued China also, caused all the Northern parts of China to be called Cathay, as being in the same latitude and parrallels with it, and much of the same nature and complexion, both for Soyl and Aire; giveing unto the Southeren parts (which was the true and propper Countrey of the Sinæ) the name of Mangi, transfered afterwards by the Tartars to the Countrey generally: and having thus extended the name and Territorie of Cathay, the first foundation of their greatnes, they fixed their Regall seat in the Citie of Naguin, which by a new Tartarian name (but of the same Seal and signification) was from thence called Cambalu. Thus in the first place the French Kings of the Carroline familie, communicated the name of France (East France it was most commonly called) to the greatest part of Germanie, then conquered by them; the Gastillians of Spaine extended the uame of Casteile on every side, as they gat ground upon the Mores, till it became the largest Province of any one name in all that continent; and Roger Earle of Cicilie, having conquered the Eastern parts of Italie (which now make up the Kingdome of Naples) commanded it to be called the forther Cicilie, and himself to be Crowned King of both, by the name of King of both the Cicilies. And in the second place, the Dukes of Zweibrucken in high Germanie, are by the Franch called Dukes De Deux-ponts, by the late Latine Writers Duces Bipontani, all in the same sence and signification; the Town of Shertzogen Bosch is by the Franch called Bois le Duc, by Latine Writers Siloa-ducis; and here at home the Military Towns or Statians of Lectodurum, Colonia, Præsidium, Papidem, and Portus Magnus, were turned by the conquering Saxons (the former significations being still retained) into Bedford, Colchester, Warwick, Stoneham, and Portzmuch, commonly now now called Portſmouth; Caſtrum Allatum into Edinborg by the Picts unconquered Britaines. 3ly. We may take it for a truth unqueſtioned, that Hombu having expulſed the Tartars out of Mangi, or the Southern parts, and fixed his Royall ſeat at Nanquin, on the South ſide of the River Kiang (though paying both fine and tribute to victorious Tamerlane) did afterwards on Tamerlanes engagements beyond the Mountaines and the cantonizing of that great Empire amongſt his children, expelled them out of the North parts alſo; his ſucceſſors there upon removing the Court to Pequin (from hence forth known again by its true, proper, and Chinian name) the better to attend the motion of that daingerous Enemie. Jeruſalem, commanded to be called the Elia by the Emperour Adrian, and London named Auguſta Trinobantum by ſome other of the Roman Emperours; returned to ther old names again, aſſoon as that authoritie failed which impoſed the new. And 4ly. as from this time forwards the Northern parts of China might ſtill retain the name of Cathay, and being moſt traded by the Perſian and Indian Merchants, might be beſt known by that name in their ſeverall Countries: ſo by dividing this great Empire into ſo many parts, removing the Emperiall Seat to Samerland, on the other ſide of the mountaines, entring many new eſtates one of the antient Prefectures, and Governments of Cathay it ſelf, and parcelling the remainder of it between the Kings of Tanguth, Caſcar, and ſuch other Princes of the Tartars, as were not wanting to themſelves in thoſe opertunities, the true Cathay might looſe that name by little and little, which formerly it had communicated to thoſe parts of China. Thus the Burgundians, Lombards, Vandals, Hungars, left thoſe names at home, in their antient and native habitations, which ſtill remain unto thoſe Countries that were conquered by them. Theſe reaſons and conſiderations I willingly ſubmit to the Readers Judgment, being my ſelf ſo great a Sceptick in this point that I dare determine nothing poſitively on either ſide. It is enough that I have layed the cauſe open without partialitie, or byaſſing on either hand, before the Jurors; let them give up their verdict in it as they like the evidence.

OF INDIA.

INDIA is bounded on the East, with the Oriental Ocean, and some part of China; or as some others say with a great Country called Mang (not much known unto us of Europe) interjected betwixt it and China; on the West, with the Persian Empire; on the North, with some branches of Mount Taurus, which divide it from Tartary; and on the South, with the Indian Ocean. So called from the River Indus, the neareſt of eſteem and note in all the Country, towards theſe parts of the world.

It is conceived to be the largeſt Country of any one name in the world, except China and Tartaria; affirmed by Pomponius Mela, to be of ſuch a great extent on the Sea-coaſts of it, that it was as much as a ſhip could ſail in 40. days. Extended from 106, to 159. degrees of Longitude; and from the Æquator to the 44th. degree of Northern Latitude. By which accompt it lieth from the beginning of the firſt, to the end of the ſixt Clime: the longeſt Summers-day in the Southern parts being 12. hours only, and in the parts moſt North, 15. hours and an half.

Concerning the monſtrous Fables, which the ages foregoing have delivered to us of this Countrey, give me leave to ſay, that as the Poets uſed of old to fill up the times of which they were ignorant, with ſtrange fixions, and prodigious metamorphoſes; or as our modern Geographers, in the Maps of the world, fill up thoſe unknown parts thereof, of which they can give us no certain deſcription, with ſtrange pictures and uncouth ſhapes of beaſts and trees; ſo alſo the Writers in former ages have filled the more remote Countries, of which they knew little, with ſuch impoſſible and incredible relations. Hence there have been attributed to this India, the fables of men with dogs heads; of men with one leg only, yet of great ſwiftneſs; of ſuch as live by ſent; of men that had but one eye, and that in their foreheads; and of others, whoſe ears did reach unto the ground. It is reported alſo that this people by eating a dragons heart and liver, attain to the underſtanding of the languages of beaſts; that they can make themſelves, when they liſt, inviſible; that they have two tubs whereof the one opened yields wind, the other rain, and the like. But theſe relations, and the reſt of this ſtrain, I doubt not but the underſtanding Reader knoweth how to judge of, and what to believe. For my part I am of the ſame mind with Curtius, Plura equidem tranſcribo quam credo; nec enim affirmare auſus ſum quæ dubito, nec ſubducere ſuſtineo quæ accepi: I may perhaps relate ſome things which I do not credit, but ſhall not let them paſs without ſome cenſure; that ſo I neither may impoſe any thing on the Readers belief, nor defraud him of any thing conducible to his contentation.

The Countrey, (to report no more of it than it doth deſerve,) enjoyeth an exact temperature of the air; two Summers, (or one as long as two,) and a double encreaſe; bleſt with all things which are ither neceſſary to the life of man, or of convenience and delight; particularly with Mines of Gold and Silver, and with precious ſtones; with ſpices of all ſorts, and Civetts; with the beſt medicinable drugs, metals of all kinds, except Copper and Lead; abundance of all ſorts of Cattel, except horſes. Somewhat defective alſo in Wheat and Vines, that ſo this Countrey might be beholding unto others, as well as others to this. Famed alſo for abundance of Camels, Apes, Dragons, Serpents, Rhinocerots, Elephants. Theſe laſt more favouring of reaſon and human ingenuity, or elſe more tractable and docile, than any brute Creature whatſoever. Of this we have a fair inſtance in the ſtory of the Acts of Alexander. The Elephant which King Porus ſate on, finding his Maſter ſtrong and luſty, ruſhed boldly into the thickeſt of the Enemies Army: but when he once perceived him to be faint and weary, he withdrew himſelf out of the battel, kneeled dwon, and into his own trunk received all the Arrows which were directed at his maſter. The greatneſs of the Creature makes it yet more admirable, that either he ſhould have ſoul enough of his own, to actuate ſo vaſt a body; or being of ſuch ſtrength and bigneſs ſhould ſubmit himſelf to the inſtructions of another: ſome of theſe Indian Elephants, as Ælianus hath affirmed, being nine Cubits high, and as many long; and in breadth or thickneſs about five Cubits. Nor doth the Sea afford leſs plenty or variety, than we find on ſhore: yielding abundance of the richeſt and faireſt Pearls, huge ſholes of fiſh, and amongſt them the Whale or great Leviathan; exceeding the proportion of that land-monſter the Elephant. For though the ordinary dimenſion of the Whale be but 36 Cubits in length, and eigh in thickneſs: yet Nearchus in Arianus is ſaid to have meaſured one, in theſe Indian Seas, which was of the length of 50 Cubites, and of breadth proportionable: not to ſay any thing of that incredible report of Plinie, who ſpeaketh of ſome Indian Whales, which were nine hundred and threeſcore Foot, or four Acres long.

The people are of five ſorts, and as many Religions, that is to ſay the Naturall Indians, derived from the Original Inhabitants of it. 2.ly. Moors, or Arabians, who more than two hundred years ago, poſ-ſeſſed themſelves of ſome Sea-Towns, driving the Natives up higher into the Countrey 3ly. Jews, ſcattered and diſperſed (as in other places) into all parts of it; 4ly. Tartars; in thoſe parts and Provinces which are under the Great Mongul; and 5ly. Portugueze, who have many Colonies and Factories in the Ports and Iſlands, but brag as if they had made a conqueſt of all the Countrey. Which notwithſtanding, conſidering that the Naturall Indians are by far the greateſt number, we muſt relate to them only in the Character, which is made of this people. Affirmed to be tall of ſtature, ſtrong of body, and of complexion inclining to that of the Negreos: of manners Civill, and ingenuous, free from fraud in their dealings, and exact keepers of their words. The Common ſort but meanly clad, for the moſt part naked, content with no more covering than to hide their ſhame. But thoſe of greater eſtates and fortunes (as they have amongſt them many antient and Noble families) obſerve a majeſty in both Sexes, both in their Attendants and Apparel; ſweetning the laſt with oils, and perfumes, and adorning themſelves with Jewels, Peatls, and other Ornaments befitting, They eat no fleſh, but live on Barley, Rice, Milk, Honey, and other things without life.

The Women not of much fairer complexion than the men, yet of lovely countenances, wear their hair long and looſe, but covered with a thin vail of Calicut Lawn. Their ears hung with many rings, ſo great and heavy, that they are torn, and ſtretched to much diſproportion; their noſes alſo ringed, and behung with Jewels according to their eſtate and quality. Servilely obſequious to their husbands, whoſe affections they divide amongſt them without jarre or jealouſy: the men allowed here, as in all the Eaſt, the uſe of many wives, whom they buy of their parents for a yoke of Oxen; and many mary as often as they liſt. In which they have too great a privilege above the women, who after the deceaſe of their common husband, do either burn in the ſame flame with him, or elſe are forced to doom themſelves to perpetuall Widow-Hood. But of this we may ſpeak more hereafter, when we come to the particulars.

The Chriſtian faith was firſt planted in theſe Countries, by Saint Thomas, from whom the remainders of Chriſtianity take denomination; and unto whom the Records and Miniments of that Church do aſcribe their converſion. For in one of their Breviaries written in the Chaldean tongue, and tranſlated into Latine by Father John Maria Campanin a Jeſuite, we find it thus, Per D. Thomam evanuit error Idololatriæ ab Indis, &c. i. e. By Saint Thomas, the errors of Idolatry vaniſhed out of the Indies; by Saint Thomas, they received the Sacrament of Baptiſm, and the Adoption of Sonnes; by Saint Thomas, they believed and confeſſed the Father, the Son, and Holy-Ghoſt; by Saint Thomas, they kept the faith received of one God; And finally by Saint Thomas, the ſplendour of ſaving doctrine did appear to all India. His body as they ſay, intombed in the City of Maliapar, upon the Coaſt of Choromandell; the truth of which tradition I diſpute not here. But this plantation of the Goſpel by the hand of Saint Thomas was not univerſal over all the Countrey; but in ſome parts and Provinces only: or elſe was forced to give ground a while to prevailing Heatheniſm. For in the reign of Conſtantine, we read how the Indians living on the further-ſide of the River Ganges (for ſo I underſtand the Indi interiores of my Author) were converted to the Faith by the miniſtery of one Frumentius, of the City of Tyre; who having ſpent the greateſt part of his time amongſt them, was employed in that ſervice, and conſecrated the firſt Biſhop (for thoſe Churches) by the great Athanaſius of Alexandria. But being the foundation of this building was laid by Soint Thomas, the remainder of Chriſtians here being, aſcribe the whole work to him; called therefore Chriſtians of Saint Thomas. Governed originally by their own Biſhops, ſubordinate to an Archbiſhop of their own alſo, reſiding at Augamale fifteen miles from Cochin; one of the chief Cities of this Countrey: who for long time acknowledged obedience to the Patriarch of Muſal, by the name of the Patriarch of Babylon, as by theſe Chriſtians of India he is ſtill termed. The number of the Chriſtians computed at 15 or 16 thouſand familes; or at 70000 perſons in the accompt of other: inhabiting for the moſt part in that large tract of ground, which beginning at the outlets of Indus and Ganges, ſtretcheth unto the Cape or Promontory called Cape Comari. The points wherein they differed from the Church of Rome, 1. Their adminiſtring the Sacrament of the Euchariſt in bread ſeaſoned with ſalt; 2. Adminiſtring in both kinds, but uſing inſtead of wine (which is ſcatce or not all to be had in this Countrie) the juice of raiſins ſoftned in water over night, and ſo preſſed forth; 3. Not baptizing children untill 40 dayes old, except it be in danger of death; 4. Permitting no Images in their Churches, but that of the Croſs; 5. Allowing one mariage to their Prieſts, but debaring the ſecond; 6. In painting God with three heads on one body, to denote the Trinity; 7. Denying the uſe of extreme Unction; and 8. Not acknowledging the Popes Supremacie: but beſides theſe remainders of thoſe antient Chriſtians, there are ſome others now of late of a new plantation, by the paines and travell of the Jeſuites, though not with ſuch ſucceſſe here, as they found in China: many of the Inhabitans partly by the diligence of the Arabians, and partly by the Power of the great Mongull, having embraced Mahometaniſme; and being conſequently leſſes inclinable to admit the Goſpell, then when they ware in the condition of their naturall Gentiliſme. Yet have they made ſuch good progreſſe in it, that Echebar the Mongul, not only founded a fair Church for the uſe of the Chriſtians in the Citie of Agra (the Regall Citie of that Empire) but committed to the care of the Jeſuitess the education of two Princes of the Regall Familie. And poſſibly they might have made a great increaſe of Chriſtians before this time, had they not been oppoſed therein, by Sultan Coroen, a bitter Enemie to their proceeding, in the raigne of his Father, and no great favorour of them ſince. Inſomuch that hearing a Jeſuites, called Franſiſco Carſi report unto his Father how miraculouſly a wooden Croſſe of his had eſcaped the fire; he was very urgent with his Father to have a great fire preſently made, and the ſame Croſſe to be thrown into it, upon theſe conditions, that if the Croſſe conſumed not his Father and himſelf would became Chriſtians; but if it did, the Jeſuite ſhould be burned in the ſame fire with it. A firery tryalls which the poor Jeſuite had much a doe to put off, and preſerve his credit. Howſoever by their practiſing amongſt the old Chriſtians they have gained one point of very great conſequence and importance to the Church of Rome. For in the year 1599. by the ſolicitation of the Jeſuits and the other Indian Chriſtians, renounced their obedience to the Patriarch of Muſal, and ſubmitted their Churches to the Juriſdiction of the Pope of Rome, in a National Synod held at Liamper, not far from Maliapar, by the Arch-biſhop of Goa (the Primate of the Portugals in thoſe parts) not only rejecting all opinions contrary to the Romiſh Tenets, but delivering all their Books and Liturgies to be altered and reformed by the ſaid Arch-biſhop, according to the Rites and Doctrines of the Church of Rome, which was done accordingly.

But theſe comparatively to the reſt, come not to an handfull; the main body of the People wallowing in their Gentiliſm; and ſtill retaining many of thoſe ancient Cuſtoms, which they uſed of old: as viz. 1. Not knowing their Wives after they have born them two children: 2. Nor keeping them, if after five years cohabitation, they can raiſe no iſſue by them, but then exchanging them for others: 3. Rewarding none for any military exploit, if they bring not with them in their hands the head of an enemy: 4. Killing their Friends, before they were withered or decayed by Age, or ſickneſs. To theſe they have ſince added others of a latter invention, perhaps more barbarous; of which we may have opportunity to ſpeak anon. Their Prieſts or learned men, in the time of old were called Brachmanes from one Brachman, the preſcriber of their Rites and Laws, by whom inſtructed in the Rudiments of their Philoſophy; ſome of which, from their going naked, had the name of Gymnoſophiſts; who were to them as the Chaldæi, to the Aſſyrians; the Magi, to the Perſians; and the Druides, to the ancient Britans. Had in great Reverence by the People, and living for the moſt part an auſtere and ſolitary life, in Caves and Deſarts; feeding on herbs, poorly apparelled, and for a time abſtaining from all carnal pleaſures; but that time paſt, they may indulge themſelves more liberty, and admit the company of women. Others of them live together with the common people, as being their ordinary Prieſts. Of theſe, the great Alexander, when he was in this Countrey ſurprized ten; one of them called by the name of Calanus, with whom he had a great deal of communication: propounding to him many ſtrange queſtions, and receiving back to many of them, (as himſelf confeſſed) ſome not unſatisfying though ſtrange anſwers. To theſe Gymnoſophiſts, or Brachmans, the Bramines do now ſucceed, both in place and authority; but differ from them moſt extreamly in point of learning, and the civilities of their lives: theſe Bramaines being the moſt impure, libidinous, and ſenſual beaſts in all the Countrey; priviledged with the firſt nights lodging of every Bride, which when ſated with their filthy luſt, they ſell, or traffick with, to ſtrangers, ſerving as Stallions to old men, and as Pandars to young; ſo fleſhed in wickedneſs, and ignorant of all good Letters, that they have nothing of a man but the voice and ſhape. Makometaniſm is alſo entertained in a great part of the Countrey, firſt brought in by the Tartars, and neighbouring Perſians, unto whom conterminous; but much increaſed by the victories of the Great Mongul: who being originally a Tartar, and of that Religion, hath cauſed it to be propagated in moſt parts of his large dominions.

Mountains of moſt note in it, beſides Caucaſus, and ſome other of the branches of Taurus, or Ararat, common to this, and the Tartarian and Perſian Empires, 1. Sardonix, full of Mines of thoſe precious ſtones which are called after the name of the Mountain. 2. Vindius. 3. Bittigo. 4. Adiſathras. 5. Thoſe called Apocopi, and 6. Thoſe named Orodii. And on the further ſide of Ganges. 7. Bepyrrus. 8. Mæandrus. 9. Thoſe called Damuſi, and 10. Semanthinus; part of this laſt extending alſo unto China. All of them very fruitfull in the production of Mines, and Rivers, as will appear by looking over the particulars when we come unto them.

But the Mountain of chief note of all is that which Ptolomy calleth Bittigo, and is now named Gates; the Southern part of the great Mountain Imaus ſpoken of before: extended from Mount Caucaſus, where it croſſeth the Taurus in right Angles, to Cape Comari, a known Promontory of Induſtan, or the hither India (which is divideth into Eaſt and Weſt) for the ſpace of 400. leagues and upwards. Conceived by Poſtellus a Learned Writer, to be that Mount Sephar, mention whereof is made in the 10th. of Geneſis, where it is ſaid to be the utmoſt Eaſtern limit of the Sons of Joktan, Gen. 10. v. 30. With probability enough, for ought I can ſee; the ſons of Joktan being ſetled in theſe parts of India, and the Provinces of the Perſian Empire which lie neareſt to them. And ſo far Stephanus doth concur with Poſtell, as to affirm of this Mount Sephar, that it is Mons Indiæ, an Indian Mountain: both of them grounding on Saint Hierom, who expreſly ſaith, Sophera mons Orientis in India, juxta quem habitaverunt filii Jectam, i.e. that Sephar, or Sopher, is the name of a Mountain of the Eaſt in India; neer to which dwelt the Sons of Jocktam. More probably, without doubt, than that we ſhould transfer it into America, as I ſee ſome do; and make it there to be the great Mountain of the Andes, which runneth the whole length of Peru, from one end to the other and thence as ſome will have it to the Streights of Magellan. Which ſhould we grant, we muſt not look for Joktan, or the ſons of Joktan, either in Arabia Felix, where Bochartus placeth them; nor in the Eaſtern parts of Aſia, where moſt probably they may be found; but we muſt croſs the vaſt Oriental Ocean, and look for them in a place where they never were; beſides, that granting this for true, we muſt allow America to have been known in the time of Moſes, which no Author that I ever met with did ſo much as dream of.

Rivers of moſt note are, 1. Indus, which ariſeth out of that part of Taurus, which the Ancients calle Paropamiſus, the Moderns, Naugrocot; and having received into it 19. other Rivers, after a courſe of 900. miles, falleth into the Ocean at ſeven Mouths, that is to ſay, 1. Sagappa, being the moſt Weſtern, 2. Sinthum, 3. Aureum, 4. Cariphi, 5. Sappara, 6. Sabalaſſa, 7. Lonibare, the moſt Eaſtward. But five of theſe being choaked with Sands, or drawn into the neighbouring Channels, there now remains but only two. A River famous in Records and ancient Stories, for giving name unto the Country, and that ſo celebrated voyage of Alexander, who ſailed down it towards the Indian Ocean: the voyage holding holding above five moneths, of which there is ſaid to have paſſed no day wherein he ſailed not 15. miles, or 600. Furlongs. 2. Ganges, which riſeth as ſome ſay from the Mountain Imaus, (or rather from that part of Taurus, where Imaus falleth right upon it,) and falling headlong down the Rocks, is firſt collected into a Lake, or Pool (ſuppoſed by others for the fountain and original of it) whence with a gentler pace it paſſeth towards the Ocean; taking in by the way, as is ſaid by Pliny, 30. navigable Rivers. In the narroweſt place of eight miles breadth, in the broadeſt 20. ſeldom ſo ſhallow but that the depth thereof is 100. foot, or 20. Geometrical paces. Parted into five great Channels it falleth at laſt into the Sea; the firſt of which moſt towards the Weſt, is called Cambyſum, 2. Magnum, 3. Camberychum, 4. Pſeudoſtomum, and 5. that which lyeth furtheſt towards the Eaſt, called Autiboli. This River erroneouſly ſuppoſed to be that Piſon which watred Paradiſe: and to encreaſe the reputation of the error, we finde it countenanced by Ioſephus, and other no leſs eminent names; and alſo backed by ſome traditions of the people which inhabit neer it. By whom it is affirmed that one of the Bengalan Kings ſent men up the River, who came at laſt to a pleaſant place, bleſt with a fragrant Earth, ſweet air, and quiet waters; beyond which they could go no further. The truth and reality whereof doth ſo poſſeſs them, that at the mouth of this River called Gangaſagie, ſuch as are weary of this world uſe to caſt themſelves into the current, and are preſently devoured by a fiſh called Sea-dogs, by whom they hope to finde a quick paſſage to Paradiſe. The occaſion of which error among the Ancients, proceeded from thoſe words of the Scripture, in which it is affirmed of Piſon, that it compaſſed the land of Havilah: which granting that it did, inferreth not that either this River muſt be Piſon, or that India is intended by that Havilah. For beſides Havilah the ſon of Iocktan, planted in ſome part of India; there was another Havilah the ſon of Chus, ſetled in the land of Havilah or Chuſiana, not far from Babylon: this laſt indeed watered by the River Piſon, and the firſt by Ganges; too far aſunder, and divided by too many Nations, to be taken or miſtaken one for another. But not leſs famous, becauſe none of thoſe which neighboured the garden of Eden; perhaps of greater fame than any of thoſe which did. For to this River do the ſuperſtitious Indians make their ſolemn Pilgrimages; vainly conceiving that they ſhall be ſure of their eternity, if at the time of their death they may drink of this water. To the overflowings of this River do the People aſcribe the fertility of the Countreys adjoyning, as the Ægyptians do to Nilus. And finally, by this River was the whole Country anciently, and at this preſent is, divided into two main parts, (each ſubdivided into many particular Provinces) viz. 1. India intra Gangem, 2. India extra Gangem. Of each of which we will firſt take a brief ſurvey, with reference to the ſtate and ſtory of it in preceding times; and then conſider them with reference to the preſent age.

Intra Gangem.

INDIA INTRA GANGEM.

INDIA INTRA GANGEM, is bounded on the Eaſt, with the River Ganges, till the fall thereof into the Sea, and after that with that large and ſpacious Bay, called anciently Sinus Gangeticus, now the Gulf of Bengala: on the Weſt, with Paropamiſus, Arachoſia, Gedroſia, Provinces of the Perſian Empire; and part of the Arabian Seas: on the North, where it is broadeſt, with Mount Taurus, branched into Paropamiſus, Caucaſus, and other parts: and on the South, where it endeth in a ſharp point or Promontory, by Ptolomy called Commaria extrema, but now Cape Commari, with the Indian Ocean. So named from being ſituate on this ſide of Ganges; by the moderns, Indoſtan.

The Country of the ſame nature formerly, as it is at the preſent, not altered but by changing of the channels of Indus; which being ſhifted by an Earthquake, turned a great part of the once neighbouring Region to a ſandy Deſart: Indus (as many other of the Indian Rivers) fatning and enriching all the land which it overfloweth. The people of thoſe elder times much like the Scythians, eſpecially in their courſe of life; living without Cities, Temples, Houſes, in their moveable Tents: their food the bark of a tree called Tala, which ſerved for bread; and the fleſh of Bucks, Does, and other Veniſon, with the skins whereof they made their Garments. All of them Free-men, but no Slaves to be found amongſt them. Leſs warlike than the Scythians, but as great contemners of death as they: the very women contending eagerly amongſt themſelves, which ſhould accompany their Husband (one husband having many wives) to his Funeral Pile. Of which thus Saint Hierome, Hæ igitur contendunt de amore viri, & ambitio ſumma certantium eſt ac teſtimonium caſtitatis dignam morte cenſeri. A Cuſtom ſtill retained amongſt them; of which ſomewhat hath been ſaid already, and more is to be ſaid in another place.

Principal Rivers of this part, 1. Hydaſpes, by Ptolomy (and by him only) called Bidaſpes, one of the furtheſt boands of Alexanders conqueſts. 2. Suaſtus, 3. Coa, 4. Aceſines, very memorable in the Geſts of Alexander. 5. Sandabilis, 6. Zaradrus: all coming from the Northern Mountains, and all falling (Hydaſpes with three other Rivers firſt received into it) into the greater bed of Indus. 7. Diamna, 8. Serabus, and 9. Soa, falling from the like Northern Mountains, into the main Channel of Ganges. 10. Naragonas, iſſuing from Mount Vindius. 11. Baris, from Bittigo. 12. Chaberis, from Adiſathris. 13. Tindis, from the hill called Vxentius: and 14. Tina, from the Orodian Mountains; with many others of leſs note. By what names called at the preſent, I determine not; nor finde I any which have dared to adventure on it. But doubtleſs to be found in 1. Catamul, 2. Gebcha, 3. Ray, 4. Chenao, 5. Rebeth, all tributaries unto Indus, which is now called Schind. 6. Taphi, 7. Harunda, 8. Chambel. 9. Jamena, which empty their waters into Ganges; the which, with ſuch others of the principal Rivers as are now known by name us, ſhall occaſionally be touched on in that which followeth. Beſides which Rivers, here is a famous Lake mentioned in the Geſts of Alexander, ander, (but the name occurreth not) not much above a mile in circuit, but exceeding pleasant, shaded on every side with woods; memorable for the great refreshment which it gave to Alexanders Army, when even pined with thirst.

The Country so exceeding populous in time of Ptolomy, that it afforded him the names of more noted Cities, than any one Country in the world. Of which 1. Corniara, 2. Nigama, 3. Sageda. 4. Rarassa, 5. Masopelle, and 6. Pityndra, are honoured with the name of Metropoles; as being the head Cities of their several and respective Nations. 7. Ozene, 8. Sora, 9. Palibothra, 10. Gange, 11. Batana, 12. Hippocura, 13. Garara, 14. Modura, 15. Orthura, and 16. Malanga, mentioned as the Royal seats of several Princes, by the name of Regiæ. 17. Bardaxema, 18. Tyndis, 19. Argari, 20. Curula, 21. Chaberis, on the River so called. 22. Palura, on the shores of the Golf of Bengala, and 23. Palura, on the banks of Cambysum. 24. Tilegramocum; marked out above the rest with the name of Civitates, (Cities) and therefore probably of more note than others not so distinguished. And finally 25. Monogassum, 26. Simylla, neer a Promontory of the same name, 27. Nitra, 28. Maziris, 29. Elancorum. 30. Colchi, 31. Salur, 32. Sobura, 33. Poduca, 34. Melange, 35. Maliarpha, 36. Contacissyla, 37. Nosygne. 38. Barygaza. Specified as the most noted and celebrious Empories; besides 39. Canthymus, 40. Stathmus, (and 41. a Road opposite to Chrysas) two commodious Stations or Roads for shipping. The names and situation of these places is the most we finde of them, which makes me pass them over with a bare recital, only to shew how populous and well planted this Countrey was in the time of my Author.

Of lesse name, but of more note in the course of story, 1. Nysa, built by Bacchus at the time of his Indian Conquest, and called thus by the name of his Nurse, to preserve her memory; his mother dying in Child-birth of him. Repleniished by him with his sick and wounded Souldiers, whose posterity continued here till the time of Alexander, who spared the City and the people for his love to Bacchus, who was therein worshipped in a Temple of his own foundation, planted about with Bays, Vines, and Ivy, whose shady branches covered the roof of it. In the midst thereof an Image, with all the Instruments belonging to a plentifull Vintage, all of gold or silver. 2. Taxilla, or Taxiala as Ptolomy calleth it, seated betwixt Indus and Hydaspes, in the Region called Varsa; and built most probably by Taxiles a puissant King of India, in the time of Alexander. Adorned in elder times with a Temple dedicated to the Sun, and therein with an Ivory Image of Ajax, a Golden Statua of Alexander, and the portraiture of King Porus made in Copper. The floor of Mosaical work pouldred with Pearls, the walls of red marble interlayed with gold, which made it shine afar off, like a flash of lightning. 3. Nagarna, called also Dionysiolepolis; in memory of Bacchus who was also called Dionysius, and Liber Pater. 4. Adorne, by Diodorus called Aornos, and Averuus by Strabo; so strongly seated on a Rock, that Hercules was not able to force it: which made Alexander, imitating, and therein out-going the acts of Hercules, assault it with the greater force, and at last he carried it. 5. Bucephala, built by Alexander on the banks of Hydaspes, and named thus in memory of Bucephalus his beloved horse, which had served him in all the course of his Fortunes, and died hereabouts, being then thirty years old. 6. Pireta, another of his foundations, so called by the name of his dog, whom he dearly loved. 7. Alexandria, on the banks of Indus, another of his foundations also. 8. Mazage, on the West of Indus, one of the first Towns of India taken by the Macedonians, though garrisoned within, and environed without by an host of 300000 men: but yielded after some resistance, with the use of her own body, by Cleophe the Queen thereof, who received it back with other favours, from the hands of the Conqueror. 9. Nora, a strong City on the same side of Indus, taken by Polyspercbon, one of his Commanders. 10. Samus, on the banks of the same River, taken by Alexander in the course of his Navigation down that sea of Waters; the Inhabitants whereof fought against him with poisoned Arrows, with one of which Ptolomy, afterward King of Ægypt, was dangerously wounded, and cured with an herb which Alexander dreamt he had seen in the mouth of a Serpent. 11. Oxydrace, the chief City of the Oxydracans, at the siege whereof Alexander is said to be the first that scaled the walls, and the last that could do so: the ladder breaking assoon as he was at the top. Standing thus alone as a mark to all their darts, he was by the Souldiers desired to leap down amongst them; but he in a daring bravado leaped into the Town among his enemies, where it was not only his good hap to light upon his feet, but to have an old tree at his back to defend him behinde. In this posture he is said to have maintained the fight a long time, against all the Souldiers of the Town; killing two of them with his own hands, and by that example teaching the rest to be more mannerly; till being wearied, and dangerously wounded, he was forced to leave his feet, and commit the weight of his body to his knees. In this case Leonatus, Peucestes, and some other of his Captains, came to assist him; who defended their dying Master, till the whole Army entred the Town, and put all the people to the sword, in revenge of their King, whose life they had little hope to enjoy, though he with much danger did afterward recover. For my part I give little or no credence to this story, ranging it in the same Catalogue of truth with the Adventures of Donzel del Phœbo, Rosicleer, Belianis, Amadis, and the rest of the rabble of Knights errant. Neither is this the first time that Curtius hath disgraced the soundness of Alexanders judgement, and the truth of his actions, with the like idle and impossible Fables: though indeed in that particular, he saith that it was multo magis ad temeritatis quam ad gloriæ famam. And 12. Nicæa, built by Alexander on the banks of Acesines, in memory of his many great and signal victories. Not far from which, finding how unwilling his Souldiers were to pass further East, he purposed to leave behinde him some Monument of his great exploits, and to make his fame immortal amongst the Indians. And to that end he caused the form of his Camp to be inlarged, and the Cabbins to be made bigger than sufficed for his men to lodge in; the Mangers to be set higher than his horses could reach; Armour and Bits for horses of too great a size (made not for use, but ostentation of his might,) might) to be ſcattered up and down the Camp, for the ſavage people to wonder at in the times to come. By means whereof he got nothing amongſt knowing men, but a ſuſpicion that his actions were intended leſs memorable than they are reported to have been; ſince he ſo vainly laboured to have them thought greater than indeed they were. Gangem.

The old Inhabitants hereof, were the Indo-Scythæ, inhabiting on the North-Weſt of Indus, the Mazagæ, Sadani, Piratæ, Limyrices, Aii, the Soringi, Arvari, Oxydracæ, Malli, and Lambatæ, the Gandarides, or Gangarides, neear the mouth of Ganges, the Caſpiræi, under the ſhades of Mount Vindius. The Muſicani, Chatziæi, Polindæ, Phyllitæ, Bittigi, Chadramotitæ, Pezuari Adiſathri, Mandalæ, Dryllphitæ, Sabaræ, Pandioni, with many others to the number 122. ſeverall Nations, if Megaſthenes be not out in his reckoning: too many and too impertinent to be muſtered here.

Originally deſcended from the Sons of Noah, before they left theſe Eaſtern parts to go towards the unfortunate v lley of Shinaar. We could not elſe have found this Country ſo full of people in the daies of Semiramis, the wife of Ninus: who leading an Army compounded of ſeverall nations, to the number of four millions and upwards (if Cteſias, and Diodorus Siculus who reports it from him, be of any credit, but certainly the greateſt Army that ever was raiſed) was encountered by Staurobates, a King of India, with greater forces made up of naturall Indians only; by whom ſhe was vanquiſhed and ſlain. A matter beyond all belief, though neither Army could make up a fourth part of that number, if the Indians had been no other than ſome one of thoſe Colonies, which were ſent from BABEL; or rather a ſecond or third Swarm of thoſe former Colonies, which went thence under the command of the firſt Adventurers. For that any of the firſt Adventurers, who were preſent at the building of the Tower of BABEL, travelled ſo far Eaſt, is not affirmed by any who have laboured in the ſearch of their plantations. So that I take it for a matter undeniable, that the plantation of India preceeded the attempt of BABEL; though by whom made, there is nothing to be ſaid, for certain. Yet if I might have liberty to expreſſe my own conceptions, I am inclinable to believe that all the Eaſtern parts of Perſia, with China, and both the Indiaes, were peopled by ſuch of the Sons of Sem, as went not with the reſt to the Valley of Shinaar. For otherwiſe I can ſee no reaſon, that the poſterity of Japhet ſhould plant the greateſt part of the leſſer Aſia, and the whole Continent of Europe, with the Iſles thereof; and that the ſons of Cham ſhould ſpread themſelves over Babylonia, Paleſtine the three Arabiaes, and the whole Continent of Africk: the poſterity of Sem being ſhut up in a corner the greater Aſia, hardly ſo big as ſome one of the Province taken up by the other Adventurers. And therefore that I may allow to the ſons of Sem an equall Latitude, I think it not improbable to fix them in theſe Eaſtern Countries; ſpreading themſelves this way as they grew in numbers, before the reſt of the Adventurers went to ſeek new fortunes at the Tower of BABEL. And being that (the Country was large and wealthy, and might have room enough to ſpare for ſome ſecond commers eſpecially deſcending from the ſame root with them): I doubt not but to place here all the ſons of Jocktan, Havilah, Chatſarmaveth, Saba, Abimail, who have left here ſome tract or monument of themſelves, as htth been ſhewn at large in our GENERALL PREFACE; and as concerning Ophyr, ſhall be ſhewed hereafter. To proceed therefore to our Story, the next who made any invaſion on this Country, after that of Semiramis, was Bacchus or Liber Pater, the ſon of Jupiter and Semele, accompanied with Hercules Ægyptius; not much more fortunate than ſhe: the forces of Bacchus being defeated, and Hercules forced to throw away his Golden Shield. But what they could not do by Arms, they effected by Arts. Bacchus inſtructing them in the uſe of Wine, Oyl, Sacrifices, and the Art of Architecture, and drawing them into Towns and Cities; for that cauſe honoured as a GOD. To Hercules they aſcribe the Nation of the Pandioni, proceeding from a daughter of his called PANDÆA: the memory of both preſerved in Statutes and Pillars erected by them.

After this, unattempted till the time of Alexander, who having made a full conqueſt of the Perſian Empire, invaded India with an Army of an 120000 fighting men. Beginning with CLEOPHE, Queen of the Mazagæ, a people of Indo-Scythia, he brought her to conformity, poſſeſſed himſelf both of her perſon and eſtate; on whom he begat a ſon called Alexander, who is ſaid to have ſucceeded in her Dominions. Being paſſed over the River Indus, Taxiles (by ſome called Omphis) a prudent Prince, whoſe Kingdom is affirmed to bigger than Egypt, ſubmitted of his own accord: offering his ſervice and aſſiſtance to promote his conqueſt, and preſenting him with a Crown of Gold, and 80 Talents of ready money. This King made welcome, but his money not ſo much as looked on: the Macedonian being ſo far from fingering of this Indian gold, that gave him a thouſand Tallents of his own treaſure. Encouraged by this Royall dealing, Abiajares, another puiſſant Prince of the oppoſite faction unto Taxiles, ſubmitted alſo, and was as graciouſly received: Porus, whoſe Kingdom lay on the other ſide of Hydaſpes, would not be ſo conquered, and therefore muſtereth up his forces, and valiantly made good the banks of the River. But vanqueſhed at the laſt, not without much difficulty, he was made a Priſoner to the Victor; who honouring the man for his brave reſiſtance, gave him his liberty and Kingdom with a great inlargment. The Conqueror had a great deſire to go further Eaſt, but the Souldiers would not be perſwaded: ſufficiently taught by Porus, what they were to look for, if the Indians ſhould unite their forces. Unable to prevail, he erected in the place twelve Altars, as high as Towers, where he obſerved many ſolemn Games and Sacrifices: and having ſacrificed to Hydaſpes, Indus, and Aceſines, he ſailed down Indus towards the Southern Ocean; which ſeen at diſtance, he turned towards Gedroſia, and thence to Babylon, where he died.

After his death Eumenes raiſed ſome part of his forces hence. But the Macedonians being plunged in Gangem. a Civill war, one Androcottus, ſtirred up the Indians, to recover their freedomes; making himſelf at firſt their Captain, but at laſt their King. Poſſeſſed of all that had been conquered by the Greekes, he was encountred by Seleucus, who had then got the command of Aſia: againſt whom he brought an Army of 600000. fighting men. Frighted wherewith, Seleucus made peace with him, and contracted a ſollemne League betwixt them; continued with the interchange of friendly Offices amongſt their poſterity; & more confirmed by an interview betwixt Antiochus the Great, and Saphagaſenus, one of the Succeſſors of Andracottus; by whom Antiochus was preſented with 150 Elephants, and the promiſe of ſo me treaſure to be ſent after him. By the poſterity of Andracottus was the Kingdome held, till the proſperity and full hight of the ROMAN Empire. The power whereof though they rather knew by report, then triall, yet was it not a miſſe to entertaine a potent, though remote State, in tearms of amity. Therefore they ſent Embaſſadors unto Auguſtus, who peſented him with a number of Tigers, (which beaſts) (ſaith Dion) till then, the Romane people had never ſeen) and which was the moſt pleaſing, a little Boy born without armes; who with his feet could bend a bow, ſhoot and play on wind inſtruments, as exactly as others with their hands. Trajan the Emperor had a great deſire to ſee this Country, but was diverted from that purpoſe by matters of more neceſſary importance to the State of his Empire. Moved with the fame of Antonius, the Romane Emperor, they ſent a ſolemne Ambaſſi to him; making him Umpire in ſome Controverſies which they had with the Bactrians: from which Ambaſſadors it is probable that Ptolomy the Geographer who then lived, might receive his informations of the eſtate of this Country. The like they did to Julian the Apoſtate alſo, then ſetting forwards on his expedition againſt the Perſian; deſiring his friendſhip and alliance. How it was with them in the time of Conſtantine and Juſtinian, hath been ſhewn already. After theſe times by little and little, hiſtories have been in a manner ſilent concerning the affairs hereof; but for ſome conqueſts made on the parts next Perſia, by the Caliphs of Bagdet. For notwithſtanding that there was continual traffick from the Red Sea hither; and between the Perſians, Turkiſh, and Indian Merchants for ſpices, and the other commodities of this Region: yet were not theſe Merchants acquainted with the ſtate of the Country, becauſe they entered not into it; but were met by the Indian Merchants at Sarmachand, being as it were the common Emporie. Neither did the Egyptians at all enter into India, but were met by the Indians at Ormus, or ſome other Iſland: even as now the Chinois, make ſome of the Philippinæ, the ſtaple of their trade with the Spaniards; whom they licence not to come into the Continent among them. But our modern Travellers navigators have withdrawn this mask of obſcurity, and ſhew us her lively protraiture in as lively colors. One of the firſt which brake the ice, and gave us any certainty of their affairs, was Sir John Mandeville; accompted at his comming back, for the greateſt Fabler in the world: ſo incredible ſeemed his reports of the magnificence of thoſe Kings, and the wealth of their Countrys, and the many rarities which he found amongſt them. But better thought of by our neighbours, he obtained a monument in a Convent at Leige (where he ended the long courſe of his life and travels, 1372) the Friers of which keep ſome things of his, Comme pour honorable memoire de ſon excellence, for an honourable memoriall of his Excellencies. Many of his Relations ſince confirmed by the Portugals, who under the conduct of Vaſquez de Gama firſt diſcovered this Country, by the new way of the Cape of good hope, Anno 1499. or there abouts. For ſo it hapned, that the Portugals having diſcovered all the Coaſts of Aſrich, as far as to Cape Verd, by the encouragement, and at the charge of Henry Duke of Viſe, one of the younger ſons of King John the firſt; began to think upon ſome way to the wealth of India, and getting into their own hands the rich trade of that Country. To which end it was firſt thought, that Pedroid Cannanibla, and Alphonſo de Pagua, ſhould make a journy into the Eaſt parts, to learn the certainty of the ſpice trade, and make report of ſuch other commodities, as theſe Countries yeelded. Being come at laſt by long journies to the City of Calicute, and having ſatisfied themſelves in the inquiry which they came about, they prepare for their return to Portugal. Pagua dying in the journey, and Cannanilla though detained by the Hebbaſſine Emperor, (commonly but corruptly called Preſter John) ſends home a full relation of his ſucceſſes; inflamed with which, King John the ſecond ſends out Bartholomew Diaz, Anno 1587. to find out a way into the Indies by the back of Africa: who having ſayled as far as the Cape of good hope, without giving end to the Adventure, returned back to Portugal: Undertaken with better fortune 10. yeares after; at the command of King Emanuel, by Vaſquez de Gama above mentioned; who doubling the Cape, and ſayling Northward, all a long the ſhores of Affrick, as far as the kingdome of Melinde, received from the King thereof both Pibals, and inſtructions to bring him to Calicute, where he found all true which Cannanilla had before reported. Full of good news as the end of 26. months, from his firſt ſetting out he returnes to Lisbone, received for the preſent with joy and triumph, and about two years after (that is to ſay 1502) furniſhed with 13. Ships, and 3. Caravells, he ſets forward again, followed by Stephen de Gama the ſame year with 5. Ships more, by which great ſtrength he made himſelf Maſter of ſome Ports, and by that meanes layed the foundation of that great command, which the Portugals have attained unto in theſe Eaſtern Countries. Seconded in this great enterpriſe by Ferdinando de Almeda, and Alphonſo de Albuquerque, and other noble Adventurers of the Realm of Portugal, as after them by ſuch of the Europæan Nations, as had the benefit and trade at the Weſtern Ocean.

If it be asked, why the Caſtilians, or Spaniards, being ſtrong in ſhipping bent not themſelves to the diſcovery of theſe wealthy Countries; it may be anſwered. 1. That they were buſied at the ſame time in the diſcovery and Conqueſt of the new world, which they looked on as a nearer, and no leſs profitable booty then this of India. 2. ly, The commodities of this Country, being brought home by the Portugals, were ſold to them at far cheaper rates; then they could have fetched them in their own bottomes. 3 ly. And chiefly, becauſe by the definitive ſentence of Pope Alexander, the 6. both the Caſtilians, and the Portugals, were ſo limitted in their Navigations, that the Caſtilians might not intermedle in the Eaſtern, nor the Portugals in the diſcovery or Conqueſt of the Weſtern parts, beyond the bounds which he had ſet to thoſe ſeverall Nations before mentioned, and by ſome later obſervations we have been informed, that in this part of India were no fewer than 47 Kingdoms, whereof ſome few have ſtill their own natural Kings; the reſt all ſubject to the power of the Great Mogul. Contracted into a leſſer number by joining many leſſer territories into one Diviſion, we ſhall look on it as diſtributed into 15. Provinces. Some have reduced them unto five, but give us neither the bounds nor extent of any of them. And others in the deſcription of their travels, ramble up and down with ſuch uncertainties, (moſt of them being men of trades and ignorance) that though they tell us where they lodged, and what entertainments they did meet with; yet we ſhall hardly know by them (for I think they did not know themſelves) in what Province they were: or to what part the ſeveral Towns thorow which they paſſed, did of right belong. So that our paſſage thorow theſe Countries having ſuch blind guides to follow) will be full of difficulty, and not ſo ſatisfactory to the Reader as he might expect. Howſoever, I deſire him to bear me company, whileſt I take the beſt ſurvey I can of theſe 15 Provinces, to which the whole may be moſt handſomely reduced: that is to ſay, 1. Dulſinda, 2. Pengab, 3. Mandao, 4. Delly, 5. Agra, 6. Sanga, 7. Cambaia, 8. Decan, 9. Canara, 10. Malabar, 11. Narſinga, 12. Oriſtan, 13. Botanter, 14. Patenaw, and 15. Bengala. Dulſinda.

1. DULSINDA.

DULSINDA is bounded on the Eaſt, with the River Indus; on the VVeſt, with Paropamiſus, and Arachoſia, two Perſian Provinces, but for the moſt part, under the command of the Great Mogul; on the North, with Caucaſus, by which parted from Tartary; on the South, with the Kingdom of Cambaia. So that it taketh up all the Northern parts of this Eſtate, which lie upon the Weſt of the River Indus: from which River called by the Natives Sinda, moſt probable it is that it took this name: and therefore I have written it with an ſ, Dulſinda, and not Dulcinda with a c, as I ſee ſome do, but on no good reaſon, for any thing that I am able to underſtand.

The Country by reaſon of the Northern ſituation of it, more temperat, but leſs fruitful than the reſt of India. The ſeat, in antient times, of the Mazagæ, and Indo-Scythæ, when ſubdued by Alexander. Made up at preſent, of many leſſer Kingdomes, and ſmaller Provinces; denominated, for the moſt part, from the principal Towns and Cities of them, as in other places.

Amongſt which thoſe of moſt eſteem, are 1. Caximir, Caſcimir, or Chuſmur, (for by all theſe names it is called) the chief of a Kingdom once, unto which it gave name, till ſubdued by Echebar the Mogul; who in a pleaſant Iland, (in the midſt of a great and deep Lake, about three leagues off the City) beſet round with Trees, built a Royal Palace: which he honoured ſometimes with his Court, removed hither from Lahor, partly the better to aſſure this new conquered Kingdome; but principally becauſe his Palace at Lahor, and therein an infinite deal of Treaſure, had but newly been conſumed by fire. The City it ſelf ſituate in the moſt healthy Country of all India, encompaſſed with high Mountains, covered for the moſt part of the year with ſnow: the reſt a delicate, goodly plain, diverſified with Paſtures, Woods, Corn-fields, Meadows, Parks, Gardens, and Rivers; even to admiration. The air hereof, and of the Country round about, by reaſon of the Northern ſituation of it, and the ſnowie Mountains, very cool and temperate. The ſoil abundantly productive of Wheat, Rice, and Vines; which laſt they plant at the foot of the Mulberry-tree, which ſeemeth by this means to bear double fruits. Both Town and Kingdome ſubdued by Echebar, the Mogul, about the year 1597. their own diſſentions more conducing to that ſubjugation, than any viſible force which he brought before it. 2. Roree, a Fort of the Moguls towards Paropamiſus; but bordering upon the Country of Multan, to which People it properly belongeth: garriſoned not ſo much for fear of the Perſian, (for Paropamiſus, now called Cabal, is his antient Patrimony,) but to preſerve the People from the ſpoil of Thieves, who alwaies hang about the Mountains. 3. In the moſt Northern parts hereof, ſtood the Nagara of Ptolomy; miſtook by ſome for the modern Agra, of which more anon. 4. Seſtan, the chief City as I take it, of the Kingdom of Rebat; ſituate on the Eaſt of Caximir, betwixt it and the Indus: in the ſame Latitude with that, but not of ſo temperate an air; the ſnowy Mountains much conducing to the Temperature of the Realm of Caximir. 5. Multan, a great an antient City, and the chief of a Kingdom; on the South of Caximir, or Cheſmur; and about three French leagues from the banks of the River Indus. The ordinary thorow-fare of the Caravans, in the way from Lahor to Spahan, (the chief Seat of the Sophy or King of Perſia) forced to abide there divers dayes, ſometimes ten or twelve, to enrich the Town; which of it ſelf is of no great trading, nor otherwiſe able to ſubſiſt but by this device; famed moſt eſpecially for many excellent Bows and Arrows made in it. The Bows made of horn; excellently glued and put together: the Arrows of ſmall Canes or Reeds, both of them ſet off by rich Paint and Varniſh. They which are made here being more neat and good than in any part of Eaſt India beſides. There is another Town and Kingdom of of near this name on the other ſide of the River Indus, of which we ſhall ſpeak more in its proper place. 6. Duckee, a Fort or Garriſon, ſituate in the Streights of the Mountains to ſecure the Caravans, and protect other Paſſengers from the danger of Robbers, hovering in theſe hill-countries, the out-parts of this Empire.

2. PENGAB.

OPpoſite to Dulſinda, on the Eaſtern ſide of the River Indus, but more inclining towards the South, lieth the Country, or Diviſion rather, which my Author calleth by the name of PENGAB: bounded on the Weſt, with Indus, which divideth it from Dulſinda; on the South, with the Kingdome of Mandoa; on the North, and Eaſt, with thoſe many Kingdoms, which we have comprehended under the name of Botanter.

Mandao. The reaſon of the name I find not, nor any thing memorable of the Country; but that it was divided in the time of Ptolomy, into the Provinces of the Lambatæ, Caſpiria, Cylindrine, and Sauſtene: ſubdued by Alexander in his expedition into India: the famous Rivers of Aceſines, and Hydaſpis (but by what names now called I find not) having here their courſe. So that it ſeemeth to have been a part of the Kingdom of Porus, or that the Kingdom of Porus was a part of this.

Places of moſt importance in it. 1. Lahor, on the Eaſtern banks of Indus, affirmed to be the faireſt and moſt antient City in both the Indies; of moſt eſteem for wealth and greatneſs. In compaſs about ſixteen miles, and honoured for a while with the ordinary Reſidence of the Great Mogul; till on the burning of his Palace: ſpoken of before, he removed his Court to Caximir, from thence to Fatipore, and at laſt to Agra. Since that time made the Seat of the eldeſt ſonne, or heir apparent, ſent hither for avoiding all occaſion of factions, which their living in the Court might breed. A City of exceeding trade, as being the chief Staple for the Spices in theſe parts, and other commodities of India, from hence tranſported into Perſia by the way of Candahor, the principal Town of Arachoſia; and ſo to Spahan the chief City of the Sophian Empire; where they are ſold, by reaſon of ſo long and chargeable a journey, at exceſſive rates. It is ſaid that 12000 camels at the leaſt, paſs every year thorow it with their lading; beſides what is ferried down the River, and brought up by the Portugals, who therewith traded unto Ormus till that Town was taken. By this we may conjecture at the wealth hereof, but more by that great Maſs of treaſure which a late Governour hereof did leave behind him. At whoſe death Echebar the Mogul (for the Mogul is the heir Generals unto all mens wealth) found in his Coffers three millions of Gold ready coined, great quantity of Gold and Silver uncoined, and ſome ſtore of Jewels: beſides Horſes, Elephants, Houſhold-furniture, and other goods almoſt invaluable. 2. Sultan-puare, of more antiquity than beauty; yet of good eſteem. 3. Athec, in the common Road from Lahor to China; reported in the deſcription of the travels of Benedictus a Goes, a Portugal Jeſuite, to be a moneths journey from Labor, and yet in the ſame Province with it. Which if it be true, either the Province muſt be large, or his journies ſhort: or if not true, we muſt remember that we had it from the pen of a Jeſuite. And yet as great as this Province or Diviſion is affirmed to be, we do not find the names of any more Towns, of conſideration which may be ſaid with confidence to belong unto it; unleſs perhaps we may reduce under this Diviſion the Kingdoms of Haiacan and Buchor, of which laſt the chief City is called Bucorſuccor, enriched by the neighbourhood of the Indus, but not elſe obſervable.

3. MANDAO.

THe Ringdome of MANDAO is bounded on the North, with Pengab; on the South, with the Realm of Agra; on the Eaſt, with Delly; and on the Weſt, with the River Indus. So called from Mandao, the chief City of it.

The Country more mountainous & ruged than the reſt of theſe Provinc. by reaſon of the many branches of Mount Bittigo (the Southern part of the Imaus) which do over-run it: in other things partaking of the riches of India. The men, as moſt of thoſe who live in ſuch mountainous tracts, of a warlike temper, comparatively with the reſt of the Indians: the women here antiently as a valiant as the men in other places; riding aſtride, and practiſed in the Arts of Horſemanſhip; for that cauſe called Amazons; ſome of which are ſaid to be ſtill remaining. Inſomuch as it is written in the ſtories hereof, that the King of this Country not long ſince going to the warres, was accompanied by the Queen his Wife, marching in the Front of two thouſand women, all well mounted and prepared for ſervice.

Chief Cities hereof, 1. Mandao, ſeated on the banks of the River Mandavo, (the Manda of Ptolomy and the Antients) whence it had the name. A City of great note, ſaid to be 30 miles in compaſs; yet ſo well fortified, and furniſhed with all neceſſaries for defence and reſiſtance, that it held out twelve years againſt Mirumudius, or Merhamed, the Great Mogul, who then beſieged it. Surrendred at the laſt, and with it the Kingdom. Memorable for the great battel fought before it, betwixt the ſaid Merhamed, then coming to the relief thereof; and Badurius King of Cambaia who had then diſtreſſed it: in which Badurius loſt his tents and Treaſures, and was fain to flie diſguiſed unto Diu, to grave aid of the Portugals. 2. Moltan, which being miſtaken for another Town, of or neer the ſame name, on the Weſtern ſide of the Indus, is by ſome writer ſaid to have been once the chief City of a Kingdom, or a Kingdom rather of it ſelf, but of no great note: the women whereof though not ſo good ſouldiers as their Anceſtors of the female ſex, yet to come as neer them as they can, uſe boots and ſpurs when they take a journey, and ſo fitted ſit aſtride the ſaddle. 3. Scernus, on the River ſo called, of more Antiquity than greatneſs; as is alſo. 4. Polymbothie, the Palibothra of Ptolomy and others of the antient writers; then the chief Town of the Palibothei (by Plini and Strabo, called Praſii) a people of as great authority and power as any in India.

This once a Kingdom of it ſelf of great power & wealth, til Badurius King of Cambaia having conquered the Realm of Citor, and therewith a great part of Sanga, made an attempt upon this alſo. Galgee then King of Mandao finding himſelf too weak for ſo ſtrong an Enemie, craved aid of Merhamed (or Miramudius as the Latines) the Mongul Tartar; then reigning in Chabul or Arachoſia, and poſſeſſed of ſome parts of India alſo ſince the times of Tamerlane. Who compounding an Army of his own ſubjects, ſome mercinary Perſians, and a great body of Zagathatan Tartars, from whom originally deſcended, came in accordingly: diſcomfited the vaſt Army of Badurius, conſiſting of 150000 horſe, and 500000 foot, in two ſet battels, the firſt at Doceti, the next at Mandao; and follow his blow poſſeſſed himſelf of the whole Kingdome of Cambaia. But not content with that ſucceſs, quarrelled the Mandoan King in whoſe aid he came; beſieged him in his principal City, which at laſt he won, and therewithal the Kingdome alſo: the wretched King ſhewing hereby a fair both evidence and example to ſucceeding ages, that the eaſieſt way for a Prince to ruine his own eſtate, and endanger his neighbours, is to admit a Forrein power into his own Dominions; which he cannot as eaſily thruſt out, as he hath brought them in. 4. Delly.

Kingdom

4. DELLY.

DELLY is bounded on the Weſt, with Mandao; on the Eaſt, with the Kingdom of Botanter; on the North, with the Eaſtern parts of Pengab; on the South, with the Eaſtern parts alſo of the Kingdom of Agra. So named from DELLY the chief City of it, by ſome called Delin.

The Conntry, beſides what is common to it with the reſt of India, is ſaid to be more abundantly ſtored than any other dart of it, with Horſes, Elephants, and Dromedaries. Of the people nothing ſingular, except it be that many of them taking more delight in theevery than honeſt trades, live for the moſt part upon ſpoil: but thoſe eſpecially whom they call by the name of Belemi, being ſuch of the nobillity or better ſort, who ſince the conqueſt of their Country by the Great Moguls, have lived like Out-Laws on the Mountains. Of the ſame temper with the Resbutes in Cambaia, and the Agwans in Sanga and Dulſinda; who rather than ſubmit themſelves to a Forrein yoak, (as they count that of the Mongul) chooſe to forſake their proper dwellings, and all honeſt waies and meanes of living.

Places of moſt importance in it, 1. Delly, A City not only honoured heretofore with the reſidence of the great Moguls, who from hence paſs in common appellation, by the names of the Kings of Delly, and that amongſt their moſt knowing Subjects; but beautified with many ſepulchres of their antient Kings, whoſe funerals and Coronations were herein celebrated. And though deſerted of late times, by the Great Moguls, moving their Courts from place to place, as they inlarged their Empire, and increaſed their conqueſts: yet ſtill a great many of the Nobles, and not a few Captains & Commanders, do frequent the ſame; and have their houſes and pleaſure of retirement in it. 2. Tremel, upon the Weſtern ſide of the River Mandova; but not much obſervable. 3. Doceti, memorable for the great battle fought, neer unto it, in which Merhamed the Mongul overthrew the forces of Badurius, and thereby opened a fair way to the Realm of Cambaia.

This Country governed a long time by its naturall Princes, was at laſt conquered by ſome Moores, or Saracens, comming from Perſia and Arabia, but I find not which; who grew to ſo great power and wealth, that Sanoſaradine, a Mahometan, one of their Deſcendants, dreamt of no leſſe than the conqueſt of all India, if not of the whole Continent of Aſia alſo. Having about the year 1300 (memorable for the beginning of the Ottoman Empire) ſubdued by little and little all the neighbouring Princes, which made head againſt him; he pierced at laſt into Canora, now called Decan: and conquering a great part of it returned back to Delly. The purſuit of his victories he left unto one Abdeſſa his Lievtenant there, who added the reſt of that Country to his Maſters Territories; but kept the poſſeſſion to himſelf: confirmed therein by Sanoſaradine, with the title of Regent. But Sanoſaradine dying in a war againſt the Perſians, left for his Succeſſor a ſon ſo unlike his Father, that the conquered Provinces revolted from him unto other Maſters, more able to govern and protect them. Confined unto its former bounds, it remained notwithſtanding of ſufficient power to preſerve it ſelf, from many of their equal neighbors, till the riſing of the Great Monguls: whoſe puiſſance being unable to withſtand, it ſubmitted at the laſt to Adabar, the ſon of Merhamed, the ſecond Emperor of this line: who to aſſure himſelf of the peoples loyalty, and confirm his conqueſts, ſettled his Court a while at Delly, the chief City of it; from whence removed on the next proſperous emergency, as before was noted.

5. AGRA.

THe Realm of AGRA is bounded on the North, with Delly, and Mandao; on the South with Sanga, and Cambaia; on the Weſt, with Indus, which parteth it from the Province of Sinda, a part of the King dom of Cambaia; on the Eaſt, with Oriſtan, or Orixa. So called from Agra the chief City of it, and the Seat-Royall, of late times, of the Great Monguls.

The Country ſaid to be the beſt and moſt pleaſant of India, plentifull in all things, and ſuch a delicate, even piece of ground, as the like is hardly to be ſeen. Well watered, as with other Rivers, ſo moſt eſpecially with thoſe of Tamlico, and Jemena; which laſt runneth thorow the middeſt of it, North and South, or rather from the North-weſt to the South-eaſt, from whence bending more directly Eaſtwards, it falleth at laſt into the Ganges, or that which is ſuppoſed to be Ganges, for the bed of that great River is not certainly known. The people for the moſt part Gentiles, Mahometaniſm coming in with the Great Mogul; and generally inclining ſomewhat to the Pythagorean. For ſuch as live upon the banks of the River Jemena neither eat fleſh, nor kill any thing. The waters of which River they eſteem ſo ſacred, that thereof they uſually make their Temple, and ſay their prayers therein, but naked (in which poſture they both dreſs their meat and eat it) lodging upon the ground, being impoſed by them as a penance, and ſo conceived.

Places of moſt eſteem herein, 1. Fatepore, or Fettibarri, on the Weſt-ſide of the River, a very fair and goodly City; once beautified with a Royall Pallace here built by Echebar (after the removall of his Court from Caſcimer) with many ſpacious gardens belonging to it; but much decaied, ſince the fixing of the Court at Agra, to which moſt of the ſtones are carried, and no ſmall quantity of Corn ſowed within the Walls. 2. Agra, on the North bank of the River Jemena, inferiour to Labor for wealth and greatneſs, but far more populous: the conſtant reſidence of the Court here in theſe latter times, drawing to it great resort of all sortes of people. By some supposed to be the Negara of Ptolomy, but such a supposition as is built on no better ground, than some resemblance of the names. For Ptolomies Nigara is by him placed on the Western-side of Indus, in the Latitude of 33. whereas this Agra standeth on the East of the River Jemena, five degrees more Southwards, in the Latitude of 28. But what it looseth in Antiquity, it hath got in honour: the Town and Territory being a peculiar Kingdome, till Echebar the Mogull subdued it, Anno 1598. in his passage from Lahor to Decan. But it lost nothing by the hand. For Echebar delighted in the situation of it (and that withall it stood in the middest of his Kingdomes) made it the Seat Royall of his Empire; fixt there, for the most part ever since: by meanes whereof exceedingly increased in wealth, beauty and greatnesse: the very Castle in which the Mogul usually resideth, being two miles in compasse, invironed with most high & unscalable walls, and fortified with great store of Ordnance. The whole space betwixt it and Fatipore, being 18. miles, beautified with many Mahometan Temples, and with one also built by Echabar, for the use of such Christians, as had been gained nnto the faith, by the care and dilligence of the Jesuits for the supply hereof with victualls, and other necessary provisions, and the security of such as resort unto it, affirmed to be a continuall Market: and all the Intervall from hence to the Town of Lahor (from which distant 400. miles towards the South) adorned with continual Rowes of Trees on both sides of the waies, most of them bearing a kind of Mulberry; and at every ten miles end, houses erected by the King or some of the Nobles) for beautifying the way to the Regall City, for preserving their own memory, and the safe lodging of Passengers, in danger otherwise, by night of theeves and Cut-throats. 3. Hendee, a Town more towards the South, beautified with a faire Castle of the Kings, cut out of the main Rock, and wrought with carved work round about; fortified with 50. peces of Ordnance, and thought impregnable: for that cause made a Prison for great persons. Here are also two Hospitals for such Captains (and Captaines only) as are maimed in the wars. 4. Biani, twelve course or 18. miles from Pattipore; the most noted place for Indico in all the Indies; for the making whereof they have here twelve milles, Which Indico, (by the way) groweth on a small shrub like our Goose-berry-bushes, bearing seed like a Cabbage-seed: which being cut down, are laid in heapes for half a year, and when rotten, brought into a vault, to be trodden with Oxen from the Stalks; and being ground small and fine at the Mills, is last of all boiled in furnaces, refined, and sorted, and so sold to the Merchants.

To this division also we may reduce the Kingdome of Gwaliar, so called of Groaliar the chiefe City, where the Mogull hath a very rich treasury of Gold and Silver; kept in a very strong Castle, wherein his Prisoners are secured likewise; And for those reasons, continually guarded by a strong Company of stout and well apoynted Souldiers.

6. SANGA.

SANGA is bounded on the North, with the East parts of the Realm of Agra; on the South, and West, with Cambaia; from which parted on the West, by the Mountaine Gate; and on the East with Oristan. The reason of the Name I find not: this Country being too far South to be so called from Sangalassa, a Town of chiefe note neare the fountaines of INDUS where placed by Arianus, lib. 5.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Azmere, or Agimer, 180 miles from Agra. At the end of every course (each course a mile and a half) a fair pillar erected, and at every tenth course a fair Seraglio (such as we call Inns) for the entertainment of Travellors. All built by Echebar, who wanting Children, is said to have gone in Pilgrimage, on foot from Ayra to Azimere; saying his prayers at the end of every course, and lodging all night at the tenth. 2. Citor, the chief City of Sanga, and once a Kingdom of it self, or the chief of that Kingdom. Situate in the midle way betwixt Surat, a known Port of Cambaia, and Agra spoken of before: and most magnificently built on the top of a rocky hill, to which the passage is so narrow, and so well fortified, (there being in it three Gates, at the top, the midle, and the bottom) that thereby, and by other advantages of Art and Nature, it was thought impregnable. Affirmed to be 12. miles in compasse, beautified with many goodly buildings both publick and private; but once more glorious than it is; here being to be seen the ruins of 100 Temples, and above 100000 houses, either demolished by the wars, or suffered to decay by the great Moguls, who would not willingly have any thing in the Indies of more Antiquity, than themselves; and therefore are rather inclined to build new Cities, than uphold the old. The greatnesse and Antiquity of it have made some men think, that it was the Royall seat of Porus. Others affirm the same of Delly, but neither rightly: the Kingdom of Porus lying more towards the River Indus, and not so far South. Governed not long since by a Queen called Crementina, not more faire then valiant, who revolting from Baburius King of Cambaia, to wom she formerly had paid tribute was dispossessed of the Town of Citor, where she had fortified her self with 30000. foot, and 2000. horse: the People in a desperate resoluion, laying all their treasures on a heap, which they burnt together with themselves; in which flame it is said that there perished 70000 persons. But the Cambaian did not long enjoy his victory. For not long after both the City & a great part of the Country, was conquered by the Great Mogull; the mountainous parts hereof being held against him by Ramee, the Son or successor of Qu. Crementina: till seeing himself destitute of all better helps, he put himself into the hands of one of the Sons of the late Sultan, by whom reconciled unto his Father. Some other Towns there are in this Province, and in the rest before mentioned, and those of good esteem perhaps amongst the natives; but of no observation or importance in the course of business. Under this name we may also comprehend the Kingdom of Nagracol, so called of the chief City of it; and that most memorable for a rich and sumptuous Chappel, seeled and paved with plate of pure silver, most curiously imbassed over head in several figures, which they keep exceeding bright, often rubbing, and continual burnishing. Malway, another of these Kingdoms, far as near neighbourhood to Citer, may be placed here also, affirmed to be a fruitful Province, and the chief City of it to be called Rantipere.

7. CAMBAIA.

CAMBAIA hath on the East, Delly and part of Mandao; on the West, Gedrosia a Province of the Persian Empire, on the North, Dulsinda, and the rest of Mandao; on the South, the main Ocean, and some parr of Decan. It lieth on both sides of the Indus; and is so called from Cambaia, the chief Province of it. The whole divided into. 1. Sinda. 2. Guzarate, and 3. Cambaia especially so called.

1. SINDA (by some called the Kingdom of Tatta, from Tatta the chief City of it) hath on the East the River Indus, by which separted from Mandao; on the North, that part of India which is called Dulsinda; on the West, parts of Gedrosia, and Guzarate; and on the South, the rest of Guzarate only: coasting along the Western banks of the River Indus, whence it had the name; that River being now called Sind, as was said before. And for this reason, as I take it, the Western part of India lying North of this, took the name of Dulsinda, and not Dulcinda (with a C) as most commonly written.

The Country for the generality very rich and fertile; but in some places nothing but a sandy Desart; inhabited for the most part by wild Asses, Foxes, Deer, and some wilder beasts: but none so wild as the Cælies, a robbing nation, so numerous withal, that they sometimes rob whole Caravans as they pass that way; notwithstanding the many Forts and Castles built of purpose to secure those passages.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Tutta, (or Gutu Negar Tutta) on the banks of Indus, a Town of great trade, but most frequented by the Portugals; who here receive such Indian commodities, as come down the water from Lahor; returning Pepper in exchange, which they bring up the River from their other Factories. 2. Lawribander, at the mouth or cut-let of the Indus, three dayes journey from Tutta, the Port-town unto which it is, notwithstanding that distance. Supposed to be situate in or neer them place of that Alexandria which Alexander built in memory of his navigation down this River to the Indian Ocean. An Haven much frequented, because free from worms; which about Surat, and other Havens on these Seas, so infest the ships, that without much cost and care bestowed upon them, they make the unable to return. 3. Galwalla, memorable for the Tenure; as given by Echebar the Mongul to a company of Women and their posterity for ever, to bring up their draughts to dancing, and more wanton exercises. 4. Radempoore, a great Town wth a strong Castle, seated at the edge of the Desarts: thorow which those that are to pass, use here to provide themselves of water and other necessaries for their journey. 5. Nuraquemire, a pretty Town on the further side of the Desarts, esteemed a Paradise by such as have passed thorow those uncomfortable and dangerous sands, for the space of ten or twelve daies journey. 6. Sarrama, a large Town, twenty miles from Tutta; the Center in which all lines meet, and from whence the distances of all Towns in Sinda, are accustomably measured.

The Countrey antiently subject to the King, of Cambaia, and in the right of that Crown to the Great Mongul: but the people for the most part so untamed and masterful, that except in some of the greater Towns, they pay no Tributes; and in some places even within half a dayes journey of Tutta, will acknowledge no King, but rob and spare whom they please. If at any time the Mongul sends a force against them, (as he doth sometimes) they fire their houses, made like a Bee-Hive of straw and mortar, which are soon rebuilded; and retire themselves unto the Mountains. Yet one good quality they have amongst many ill ones. When they have robbed a Traveller, took money of him in the way of toll or custome for his passage by them, they will conduct him honestly to the end of the Desarts, lest any should rob him but themselves.

2. GUZARATE hath on the North, Sinda; on the South, the main Ocean; the River Indus on the East; on the West, Gedrosia, which the Indians call Nawatacos, but the Persians, Circam.

The Soil of the same temper and fertilitie with that of Cambaia, specially so called; and there we shall speak further of it. The common people whom they call Guzorates, of the same disposition generally with the rest of the Indians: but the greatest part of the Country is possessed by the Resbutes or Rasbooches, the antient Inhabitants of this tract. Who when their Country was subdued by the Moores or Saracens, retired unto the Mountains and fastnesses of it; standing upon their gaurd, and were never yet subdued by the Great Monguls. Who though possessed of the Sea-shores, and most Towns of consequence, are fain to leave the inland parts and open Countries to these power of the Out-laws: who either prey upon the people, or force them to compound for their peace and quiet at uncertain prices. Their Arms most commonly a Sword, Buckler, and Launce; well-horsed, and resolute in any thing which they undertake: which made one of the Moguls say of them, that no men in the world knew to die, but they.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Din, in a Peninsula looking towards Persia, but on the Eastside thereof, neer the mouth of Indus. Possessed by the Portugal, and by them fortified with a strong and impregnable Citadel; built with the leave and liking of King Badurius, thereby to buy their aid against Merhamed the Mongul, who had newly vanquished him. A matter of such consequence to the Crown of Portugal, that John Botelius confined to India for some Crimes by him committed, undertook (in hope by the merit of that service to obtain his pardon) to carry the first news of it in a smal vessel, not above 18 foot long, and but 6 foot broad (the best which for the present could be provided): which with great cou-

Cambaia. courage be performed, and thorow that large, wide and tempeſtuous Ocean came in ſafety with his news to Lisbon; to the great joy of the King, but greater admiration of all ſorts of people. Scarce ſettled in their new poſſeſſion, when beſieged by Solyman Baſſa, Admirall to Solyman the Magnificent, with a Fleet of 80 Ships and Gallies, Anno 1537. offended with the Portugalls for aiding the King of Perſia, more for diverting the Spice-trade from Alexandria. In which he had ſo ill ſucceſſe, that having aſſaulted it in vain with his Land-forces, he was fain to raiſe his ſiege in ſuch haſt and tumult, that he left his great Ordnance behind him. 2. Sauran, a Town and Caſtle of the Resbutes, ſpoken of before; and by them held againſt the power of the Great Mongul. 3. Boldra, a very fair and beautifull City, but of no great compaſs. 4. Ardovat, not far from the banks of the Indus, on the North of this Region towards Sinda. 5. Madabat: by ſome called Amadabat, affirmed to be both for wealth and greatneſſe the chief of Guzarate, near as big as London; well walled, and ſituate on a plain near the Rivers ſide: ſeldome without Merchants of all Religions: Jews, Gentiles, Chriſtians, Moores, ſome of all, and neither. 6. Saringa, 7. Periano, 8. Serkeſſe; this laſt remakable for the Sepulchres of the old Kings of Cambaia; fair, and well kept, and viſited from all parts of the Kingdome.

Nothing conſiderable in this part of the Countrey: as to point of ſtory, but what is common to them with the reſt of Cambaia; but that the Resbutes, or Raſpooches ſtil remain uncorquered. Poſſeſſed not onely of the hills and Mountains, but of ſome ſtrong holds; and governed by the Heads of their Caſts or Tribes, all which acknowledge the Mongul for their Superiour in regard of his power, but none of them obey him as their Lord or Soveraign: conceiving it to be ſome abaſement of their own authority, if they admit of him as an Umpire to compoſe their differences, which they ſometimes do.

3. CAMBAIA ſpecially ſo called, hath on the North, Mandao, on the South, the main Ocean, and ſome part of Decan; on the Eaſt, Surat, from which parted by a ridge of Mountains; on the Weſt, the Main Ocean, with ſome part of Guzarate. It ſtandeth on the Eaſt-ſides of the out-lets of Indus, running along the Sea-ſhore for 500 miles, and took this name from Cambaia the chief City of it.

The Countrey ſaid to be the moſt fruitfull of all India, abounding in Rice, Wheat, Sugar, Spices of all ſorts, and choiceſt fruits: of Silk and Cotton ſo great plenty, that they fraught yearly forty or fifty ſhips with thoſe commodities. In the mountains they find Diamonds, Chalcedonies, and a kind of Onix-ſtone, which are called Cornelines, and corruptly Cornelians. Amongſt the rarities hereof, they reckon the Abades, a great Beaſt, twice as big as a Bull, having on their ſnowts a little horn, and the hide ſo hard, as no man can pierce it with a thruſt; which is the Rhinoceros of the Antients.

The people effeminate and unwarlike, and therefore not much uſed by the Moguls in a war of conſequence; to ſupply which defect he furniſheth himſelf with Souldiers out of Perſia, of which his ſtanding bands conſiſt; moſt of their Sultans and Commanders of that Nation alſo. More given to Merchandiſe than war, and therein thought to be as cunning (if not deceitfull withall) as any people in the world: treacherous in their truſt, proud in their carriage, bloody upon advantage, and much given to Venerie; ignorant of letters, but well practiſed in Mechanicall Arts. In matters of Religion for the moſt part Gentils, not knowing or contemning the Law of Mahomet; but very punctuall in their own heatheniſh ſuperſtitions. The Bannians in this Countrey: being naturall Indians, nuſled in Paganiſm, and ſo wedded to their old Idolatries, that no perſwaſions can prevail with them, make the greateſt number: and ſeem to be all Pythagoreans in ſome opinions, for they eat not any thing that hath blood or life, but feed on Rice, Roots, Plantons and ſuch naturall fruits; paying a large Revenue yearly to the Great Mogul, that no Oxen may be killed amongſt them. And becauſe new opinions ſhould not grow amongſt them, they marry in their own Tribes onely, and never out of their own Trades; ſecure thereby as they conceive from all innovations.

Cities of moſt obſervation in it, 1. in Cambaia, three miles from the Indus, and as many in compaſs, one of the neateſt and beſt built in all the Eaſt. So populous withall, that it is thought to contain 130000 Families, and is therefore called the Caire of the Indies. Of moſt eſteem in all this Kingdome (though far leſſe than Modabat) to which it doth impart its name. 2. Barocho, Southwards of Cambaia on the top of an hill, with a fair River underneath it: well-walled, and noted for the beſt Calicuts (a kind of linnen Cloth ſo called from the City of Calicut, where it was firſt made) not to be matched in all the Indies. 3. Swalley, ſtill more unto the South, and about a mile from the Sea ſhore; but giving name unto a large and capacious Bay, where the ſhips ride which trade at Surat. 4. Surat, about ten miles from the Bay of Swalley, from whence the River navigable but by Boats and ſhallops fortified with a Caſtle of ſtone well ſtored with Ordnance. The houſes for the moſt part of Sun-dried bricks, very large and laſting: built with flat roofs, but battlemented on all ſides for fear of falling; and beautified with goodly Gardens of Pomgranats, Melons, Figs, and Limons, interlaced with Riverets and Springs. Made of late years a Factory for the Engliſh Merchants, who have here their Preſident, and a magnificent houſe for the reception, and ſtaple of their Commodities. 5. Neriand, a great Town, and as remarkable for the making of Indico, of the matter and making whereof we have ſpoke already, when we were at Biani, Town or City of the Kingdome, or Diviſion of Agra, as memorable for that commodity as this Neriand, a or any other of all India. 6. Daman, upon the Sea-ſide over againſt Diu, and poſſeſſed as that is by the Portugalls. A beautifull and pleaſant Town fortified with a ſtrong Caſtle at the North-end of it, of white chalky ſtone, well planted with Ordnance: oppoſite whereunto on the South-ſide of the Town, a goodly Church, edged a top with white. Which with the houſes for the moſt part of the ſame colour alſo: afford a pleaſant proſpect to the Sailors by. 7. Campanel, ſituate on the top of an high mountain, and environed with a ſeven-fold wall, once the ſeat Royall of the Kings of Cambaia. 8 Dacaiotote, a place of ſuch ſtrength, that the great Moguls could never get it by force. Rendred at the laſt upon compoſition, conditioned they ſhould ſtill be governed by a King of their own. 9. Netherby, a great great market of brazen ware, beasts, and Armour. 10. Bandore. 11. Tanai, &c. Decan.

This Kingdom taken in Guzarate and Sinda, as parts hereof, is extremely populous; said to contain 60000 Towns and Villages, very well inhabited: but the people not accustomed to, or unfit for wars. Antiently governed by Kings of their own, it was first subdued by the Arabians or Moors, Anno 1423. under the conduct of one Mahomet or Machamut; who having forced the Resbutes or naturals of the Country to betake themselves unto the Mountain, was made King hereof. To him succeeded his sonne Mamudius, one of no great action. But what he wanted was supplied by his sonne Badurius, who having conquered the Kingdom of Citor, invaded that of Mandao also. His Army for that warre consisted of 500000 foot, 150000 horse, 1000 great pieces of Ordnance, 500 wagons loaded with powder & shot, & as many wain-loads of gold and silver to pay his Army. But being discomfited in two great battels by Merhamed the Mongul Tartar, whom Galgee the Mandoan King had called in to his aid; he shaved his beard, and fled in a disguize to Diu then possessed by the Portugals, whom he licenced in that distress to build the Citadel: slain afterwards by a mean Mariner, at his return from the Portugal Vice-Roy, whom he had visited on ship-board. And though Mamudius his Successor endeavoured to free his Kingdome from both pretenders; yet weakened with the loss of so great an Army, he was not able to effect it. First driven from Diu, which he had besieged both by Sea and Land, to his great dishonour; and after vanquished in battel by Adabar the sonne of Merhamed, not far from Serkesse, the antient burial-place of the Kings of Cambaia, but then the Sepulchre of the Kingdome; which by that victory fell to the Great Monguls, who have since enjoyed it.

DECAN.

DECAN is bounded on the East, with Narsinga; on the West, with the Indian Ocean; on the North, with Cambaia; on the South with Malavar, and Canara. The reason of the Name we shall have anon.

It lieth along the Sea coast, for the space of 250 miles, betwixt Aliga, and Bate, two noted Rivers; extending East, as far as the Mountain Gates, and afterwards thrusting into the North betwixt Cambaia and those mountains; till it meet with Cambaia. The soil much of the same nature with the rest of India, but not so flourishing as Cambaia. The people for the most part Mahometans, which Religion was first planted there by the Conquests of Sa Nosaradine, 350 years ago; yet not without some entermixture of their antient Gentilism.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Bider, the Seat Royall of Mamudza, once sole King of this Country, Who to beautifie and adorn this City, commanded every one of his Prefects, or subordinate Governors, being eighteen in number, to build here a Palace, and to reside therein certain moneths in the year; each one to leave a son there in perpetual hostage. Situate in the most Northern parts of the Country more neer the borders of Delly: from the King whereof Mamudza had then newly revolted; and therefore would make sure of this place, as most in danger. 2. Visapore, bordering on Cambaia, the Princely Seat of Idalcan, one of the Kings of Decan, after it was dismembred into several Kingdoms. 3. Danager, confining on Canara, a beautiful and flourishing City, once the chief Seat of Nisalamoccus, or Nizalmoxa, another of the Kings hereof, after that division. 4. Decan, so called by the name of the Province, of which the chief City next to Bider, the Imperial Seat. Six miles from which there is an hill encompassed with an high wall, and kept by a strong Garrison, because of the great store of Diamonds which are digged out of it. The town so wealthy, that the people generally are attired in silks, or the purest tiffany. 5. Sintacora, on the mouth of the River Aliga, where it falleth into the Sea. 6. Goa, a Sea-Town also, situate in a little but most pleasant Iland called Ticuarinum, fifteen miles in compass; opposite to the mouth or out-let of the River Mandavo. A noted Empory, and one of the chief keys which unlock the Indies; for number of Inhabitants, magnificent buildings, and pleasantness of situation, one of most note in all this Country. Possessed by the Portugals, who have here their Arsenall, and harbour for their Indian Fleet; by which they do command these Seas. So strongly fortified withal, that though beleagured by Idalcan (of whom before) with 35000 horse, 6000 Elephants, and 250 piece of Ordnance, Anno 1573. yet he could not force it. Made in regard of the convenient situation and strength thereof, the ordinary Residence of the Portugal Vice-roy, who hath here his Counsell, Chancellor, and other Officers, for the government of such parts of India as belong to that Crown: as also of the Arch-Bishop or Primate of the Indian Churches planted by that Nation, who is hence called the Arch-Bishop of Goa. 7. Chaul, a Sea-Town, in the hands of the Portugals also, and by them well fortified: Insomuch as Nisamalocoo, assaulting it at the same time with a very great Army, was fain to leave it as he found it. 8. Balaguate, in the uplands or Hill-Country, whence it had the name: Bala in the Persian language signifying a top, or summit of a mountain; and Guate an Hill. 9. Brampore, once the chief seat of another Kingdom, called the Kingdom of Chandis, now the chief City of those parts of Decan which are subject to the Great Mongul. Situate on a great River in the middest of a spacious Plain, beautiful, and of very great trading; in bigness equall unto Paris, yet yielded to Echebar the Mogul, without any resistance, Anno 1600. Miram then King thereof forsaking it, and betaking himself to 10. Syra, a strong hold both by Art and Nature. Situate on the top of an hill, which is in compass five leagues, and environed with a triple wall: furnished with victuals, and all other necessary provisions, sufficient to maintain 60000 men many years; 3000 great pieces of Ordnance planted on the walls. Besiedged herein by Echebar with an Army of 200000 fighting men, he held out against him; till overcome by promises of fair correspondence, drawn out of his hold (some of his Counsellers being bribed to perswade him to it) he was detained by the Mogul: and the Commanders won by rewards and hopes yielded up the Fort, and therein all the Princes of the Roall family, accustomably kept therein when the Throne was full; which vacant, the next Heir

Canara. was taken hence, to ſucceed unto it. Of the ſame nature, as it ſeemeth, with the hill Amara in Ethiopia, or the Abaſſive Empire.

The Country formerly inhabited by a people called Venazarari, by Religion Gentiles, and held by them till the year 1300, when overcome by Sanoſaradine, a Mahometan, and King of Delly: who driving the Inhabitants into the Hill-Countries, poſſeſſed himſelf of a great part of it, compelling them to ſubmit unto his Religion. The reſidue hereof ſubdued by Abdeſſa, whom Sa Noſaradine left here to purſue the war, was by him governed with great juſtice for 20. years; when dying, he left his government to his ſon Mamudza, confirmed by the Succeſſor of Sa Noſaradine in his Fathers Regency, on the payment of an annual Tribute. Mamudza ſoon finding that the young King was of no great Spirit, not only refuſed to pay the tribute impoſed upon him, but took unto himſelf the title of K. of Decan: giving this name unto the country (before called Canara) in regard that he had filled it with a Mungril body of Chriſtians, Mahometans, and Gentiles, acknowledging no common Parent, nor agreeing in Language, Cuſtoms, or Religion; the word Decan ſignifying in that Tongue, as much as an illegitimate brood, or a body of Baſtards. Out of theſe he made choice of twelve (others ſay eighteen) whom he appointed Governors of ſo many Provinces: not daring to truſt any of the old Nobility, or of the Natives of the country; and hoping that theſe Slaves thus prompted by him, would be more ſubject to command. But here his ſilly hopes deceived him. For theſe Slaves either governed by their maſters example, who had done the like unto the Son and Heir of Sa Noſaradine; or preſuming on their own ſtrength, and ſome forein aids, left to their maſter nothing but an empty title; each one becoming abſolute in his ſeveral Province. Nor did his Succeſſors for any long time enjoy that title; Daquem the laſt of them being taken at Bider his chief City: and thereupon the name of King uſurped by every one of thoſe petit Tyrants. Reduced at laſt into fewer hands, ſuch of them as were left became conſiderable Princes; as appeareth by the great Army raiſed by Idalcan for the ſiege of Goa. But in the end, diſtreſſed on the one ſide by the Portugals, who embarred their trade, and invaded on the other ſide by the Great Mogul with moſt puiſſant Armies; Melic entituled King of Decan, and Miram King of Brampore, were in fine ſubdued by Echebar, about the year 1600. Againſt whom and his Succeſſors, though the Venazararii ſtill hold out, as the Resbutes or Rasbooches do in the Realm of Cambaia; and that the King of Amdanager, and perhaps ſome other petit Princes, are not yet brought under: yet we may look on the Mongul as the Lord of this Country; the reſidue of theſe Roytelets, and petit Princes, (if any of them be remaining) being Homagers or Vaſſals to him. Againſt whoſe further Progreſs to the Cape of Comari, which Echebar ſo greedily aimed at, the puiſſant Kings of Narſinga, and thoſe of Malabar, have oppoſed their power: whoſe Kingdoms and Eſtates we muſt next ſurvey, before we take a view of thoſe other Provinces, which are now under the command of that mighty Monarch.

9. CANARA.

CANARA is bounded on the North, with Decan (whereof anciently it was a part) on the South, with Malabar; on the Eaſt, with Narſinga, from which ſeparated by the Mountain Gates; on the Weſt, with the Ocean. The reaſon of the name I finde not, nor much worth the ſearching.

The Countrey hath a fair Sea-coaſt, with many capacious Harbors to it, which cannot but add much to the wealth thereof; as liberally furniſhed in the in-land parts, with Rice, Figs, and Sugars; but deſtitute of Wheat, Pulſe, and Barley. Not much the poorer for that want, the people either not knowing or not regarding the uſe of bread; but living on ſuch fruits as the earth produceth of it ſelf, without the charge or care of the husband-man. In other things, but little differing, if at all, from the reſt of the Indians: their Religion for the moſt part Paganiſh, but intermixt with Mahometans.

Principal Towns and Cities of it, 1. Melinde, a commodious Haven. 2. Onor, a Port-Town of good note, ſometimes held by the Portugals. 3. Baticalia, ſituate in the richeſt part of all this Country; never poſſeſſed by the Portugals, but under contribution to them. 4. Mangalor, a Town of great wealth and Trade; fortified with a ſtrong Caſtle, once deſtroyed by the Portugueze, but recovered and repaired by the King of Narſinga, who is Lord of this Country. 5. Mayendre, more within the land. And ſo is alſo. 6. Liſpor, famous for her Quarries of Adamant. 7. Solſette, in a Peninſula of 20. miles compaſs, containing 36. Villages, and 80000 Inhabitants; the Town about 9. miles from Goa, and ſubject with the whole Peninſula, to the Portugals.

This Country is now ſubject to the Kings of Narſinga; but formerly under the command of its own Princes: the name of Canara, comprehending in thoſe times all that Countrey alſo, which is now called Decan. Conquered by Sa Noſaradine and Abdeſſa, and by Mamudza cantoned into many Præfectures, this part reverting to its old name, fell to the Narſingan, who taking his advantages, in the minority of one of their Princes, became Maſter of it. And when the Idalcan, (for I take that not ſo much for the name of a man, as a Title of dignity) quarrelled his poſſeſſion of it, as appertaining properly to the Kingdoms of Decan; Chriſmarao then King of Narſinga, brought a powerfull Advocate to defend his right; that is to ſay, an Army of 606030. Foot, 29650. Horſe, and 537. Elephants; every Elephant having a Tower on his back with four men in it; With which ſtrong Argument the Idalcan being confuted in the Schools of war, with much difficulty ſaved himſelf, though he loſt his cauſe: the Narſingan ever ſince continuing quiet in the poſſeſſion of this Country; except only ſome of the Sea Towns in the power of the Portugals. Who in the year 1567 deſtroyed in thoſe few places by them poſſeſſed, no fewer than 200 of their Idol-Temples, with many of their Pagodes, or Idols in them; converting the Rents and Lands which belonged unto them, with the Revenues raiſed from the ſeveral Ports which they hold herein, to the maintenance of a College of Jeſuites in Salſette, and other Religious houſes founded by them, in their other Cities.

10. MALABAR.

Malabar.

10. MALABAR.

MALABAR is bounded on the North, with Canara, from which parted by the River Gangeraco; on the East, with the great Mountain Gates, by which divided from the Realm of Narsinga; on the West and South, with the main Ocean. On the Coast whereof it doth extend for the space of 300. miles that is to say, from the River Gangeraco, to the Cape Comori: which I conceive to be the Commaria Extrema of Ptolomy, though others take it for the Promontory by him called Cory. But the breadth hereof is nothing answerable to the length, not above 50. miles where broadest, and ending towards the Cape in a point or Conus.

The Country more populous, for the bigness, than any in India, enjoying a very temperate Air, and a fruitful Soyl; well watered, and indented with many Creeks: unfit for Corn, but plentifull in Rice, and all manner of Spices, as Ginger, Cinnamon, Cassia, Pepper, and most excellent fruits. Amongst their Trees, there is one whose name my Author speaks not, which bears Dates like unto the Palm; out of which they have not only wood for Fewel, but they draw from it Wine, Sugar, Oyl, fine Cloth and cordage; another tree, which beareth Cotton, and Cypress, or Cobweb-lawn, of the leaves whereof they make a fine stuff like to Sattin or Taffata. They have also great store of Apes, and Monkeys, Parats, Paraquitos, and other Creatures not known in these parts but from thence: not to say any thing of their Lions, Elephants, Bears, Bugles, common to them with others of their Indian neighbours. The flowers there always in their Verdure, and the Trees perpetually green, by reason that the Air is so sweet and temperate.

The people are of coal-black colour (differing therein from the rest of the Indians, swarth and complexioned like the Olive) well limbed, and wearing their hair long and curled: about their heads an hankerchief wrought with gold and silver; and about their middle a cloth, which hangeth down to conceal their nakedness. Of manners treacherous and bloody, more properly to be termed desperate than stout and valiant; and for more surety in their wars, they use poisoned Arrows, as they do also in their thieving both by Sea and Land, to which more addicted. In Religion for the most part Gentiles, and more besotted generally on their Idolatries, than the rest of these Nations. The Pagode, or Idol which they worship, seated upon a brazen throne, and crowned with a rich Diadem. From his head issue out four horns, from his mouth four Tusks; his eyes fiery like a Glow-worm, his nose flat and ugly, his visage terrible, his hands like claws, his legs and thighs like those of a Lion. In a word, we cannot paint the Devil in a more ugly figure, than they do their God. Unto this Pagode, or his Priest, they offer the virginity of all their daughters: the Pagode having in the place of his privy parts a Bodkin of gold or silver, upon which the Bride (married most commonly at ten or twelve years of age) is forcibly set; the sharpness of it being such, that it forceth out the blood in great abundance: and if she prove with child that year, it is said to be of his begetting, and more esteemed. Others with more humanity, instead of torturing their daughters on this wretched Idol (parallel almost to the offering of their sons to Moloch amongst the Syrians) present them to the Bramini, or Idol-Priest, to be deflowred the first night of the wedding: and without one of these two hand less, no man is suffered to enjoy the use of his wife, not their Kings themselves. More priviledged yet than many women neighbouring on them, in that they are not compelled to burn themselves with their husbands bodies: but may have many husbands either successively or at once, as they list themselves: and if at once, she sends her children to that husband (as we know who did) who she thinks to have the best right to them.

The Country very well watered, as we said before, and parted by large Rivers into many Provinces; as if intended naturally to be cantonned into many Kingdoms. Divided at present, and long since, into those of 1. Cononor. 2. Calecut. 3. Granganor. 4. Cochin. 5. Cai-Colam. 6. Coulan, and 7. Travancor.

1. CONONOR, joineth to Canara, extending Southward on the shore about 20 miles, where it bordereth on the Kingdom of Calicut. The chief Cities of which, 1. Cononor, giving name to the whole Kingdom, well built, & beautified with a very fair Haven, no more safe than spacious, capacious of the greatest vessels, and for that cause much frequented by forein Merchants; but especially by the Portugals, who for the assuring of their trade have here a Citadel, erected and well garrisoned with the Kings consent. 2. Cota, not far from Cangeracco, the border betwixt this and Canara, 3. Peripatan, on the confines of Calicute. 4. Marabia. 5. Tramopatan. 6. Main, intermediate Towns, but not much observable.

2. CALICUTE, South from Cononor, extending on the Sea-shore 25 Leagues, and situate in the most pleasant and fruitfull part of all Malabar. Chief Towns whereof, 1. Pandarane, on the skirts of Cononor. 2. Tanor, a retiring place of the Kings. 3. Partangale. 4. Chatua, on the borders of Cranganor. 5. Chale, a strong piece, once in the hands of the Portugueze, but in the year 1601 recovered by the King of Calicute, who had besieged it with an Army of 90000 men. 6. Capacote, the Haven of Calicute. 7. Calicute, the chief City of the Kingdom, to which it gives name, in length upon the Sea three miles, and a mile in breadth; containing about 6000 houses, but standing some of them far asunder; mean and low built, few of them exceeding the height of a man on horse-back; the soil being so hollow and full of water, that it is not capable of the foundation of an heavier building; for that cause unwalled. Insomuch that Merchants houses are here valued but at 20. Crowns, those of the common sort at no more than ten. Which notwithstanding, of great trading, and much frequented by Arabians, Persians, Syrians, Indians, yea the very Tartars; these last from the furthest parts of Cachay (taking Cathay in that generall sense, as it comprehendeth all the Countries of the Tartars, between Malabar. the moores of Imaus, and the Eastern Ocean) being 6000 miles distant from it, insomuch, that it is said by some of the Spanish writers, that when Vasaius and Imaus, the first discoverer of the way to the East Countries by the Cape of good hope first arrived in this Haven, he found in it no fewer than 1500 Merchants Ships of all sorts, but without anchors on the compasse, few of them fit for a Sea-fight, nor able to sail (in regard they had not the use of the compasse) but by fair winds onely. The common Staple in those times of all Indian Merchandise, till distracted into severall Ports by the power of the Portugals: who being more industrious, and better Architects, have forced a foundation on the Shore for a very strong Castle; by which they do command the Haven, and receive custome of all Merchandise going in and out. The inconvenience whereof being found by the King of Calicute, he besieged it with 100000 men: and though the Portugals held it out a whole winter together, yet in the end they were fain to quit it; but first demolished it to the ground, that it might not be made usefull to those of Calicute. A City of exceeding wealth, and of no lesse wantonnesse; the men here using to change wives with one another, to confirm their Amities: and the women spending their whole time in adorning themselves with Rings and Jewels, about their ears, necks, legs, arms, and upon their brests; though going naked for the most part, one would think that a little dressing might suffice them. If covered, it is onely with a smock of Calicute, a kind of linnen cloth here made, and from hence so called: and that not used but by those of the better sort.

3. CRANGANOR, lieth on the South of Calicute, a small Kingdom, and affording little worth the speaking of: but that a great part of the Inhabitants of it are of those old Christians, whom they call Christians of Saint Thomas. Cranganor, the chief City, which gives name to the whole, affirmed to be so full of them, that they amount unto the number of 70000; vexed and exposed to publick scorn both by the Idolaters and Mahometanes, amongst whom they live. The City rich, commodiously built for trade, at the mouth of a River, which watering with his crooked streams the most part of the Country, makes it fat and flourishing.

4. COCHIN, more South than Cranganor, extended on the shore for the space of 40 leagues: and therein many Christians of the first plantation, besides some converts made of later times by the Jesuites. Towns of most note herein. 1. Augamale, the Arch-Bishops See of those ancient Christians, fifteen miles from Cochin. 2. Cochin, a Bishops See, but of later erection; and the chief City of this Kingdom, which takes name from hence. Situate on the mouth or out-let of the River Maugat, by which almost encompassed like a Demy-Iland. Of great trade in regard of its Haven, very safe and spacious; as also by the friendship of the Portugal Nation. By whose power and favor they have not onely freed themselves from the King of Calicute, to whom before they did acknowledge some subjection; but drawn from thence a great part of the traffick also: this King permitting them to erect a Castle on the Haven, to secure their trade, which the other on good reasons of State forced them to destroy. The King hereof in some respect superiour unto him of Calicute, when a Vassal to him: this King being the Pope or chief Bishop, as it were, of all the Bramines: for which cause reverenced by all the Kings of Malabar, (as the Pope by many Princes of these Western parts) who look upon him as the head of their superstition, and pay him many annuall duties.

5. CAI-COLAM, is on the South of Cochin, with which agreeing both in the temper of the Air, and fertility of the Earth: which notwithstanding, the King hereof is not so rich as his other neighbours. Here live also many of the old Christians, taking name from Saint Thomas: but those so destitute of Priests and Ministers to instruct them in the Principles of Christianity: that once in three years there came some formerly from the Patriarch of Muzall in Assyria, to baptize their children. Better I hope provided for in those later dayes, since their emboso ming and reconcilement to the Church of Rome. Their Chief Town of the same name with the Country, hath a very fair Haven, in the fashion of a Semi-Circle; well traded till destroyed by the Portugals, but since that re-edified. Of less note there are many both Towns and Villages, but such as do deserve here no parricular mention.

6. COULAN, upon the South of Cai-Colam, extended 20 Leagues more Southwards upon the Shores; is said to be destitute of corn, but plentifull of pepper, and most sorts of Spices. So stored with Horses, and fit Riders to serve upon them, that the King hereof keeps 20000 Horse in continual readiness either for invasion or Defence. This Kingdome, as the rest before, takes name from the chief City of it, which is called Coulan, 24 miles from Cochin, and once a Member of that Kingdom; of great resort by forein Merchants, by reason of the fair and commodious Haven. In former times the ordinary seat of the Cobritin, or chief Priest of the Bramines, till removed to Cochin: and held to be the Metropolis, or Mother City of all Malabar; the rest being thought to be but Colonies of this. Both in the City and the Country there are many Christians, as well of the originall foundation of Christianity, as of the late improvements which are made by the Jesuites.

7. TRAVANCOR, called also TRANCANOR, reachrth from the Kingdome of Coulan, to the Cape of Comarim, and turning towards the East, bendeth again unto the North, as far as Cael in in the Kingdom of Bisnagar or Narsinga. By which accompt it hath the benefit of the Sea on all sides except towards the North: reaching in breadth from the West Seas unto the East about 90 miles. The Country as the rest before, inhabited by many with the name of Christians, if they may be called so which want Sacraments: the condition of these Thomæan Christians in former times being so unhappy, that in 50 years before the coming of the Jesuites, (if the Jesuites may be believed from whom we have it) they had seen no Priest, not other Minister of the Gospel. Chief Towns hereof, (for of those many others of less note I shall make no mention) are 1. Travancor the chief City, which gives name to the Province, but neither well-built, nor of very much trading. 2. Quilacare, the head City of a peculiar Signeury, Signeury, but held of the Kings of Trancanor, as their next and immediate Lords, though all those Kings also Feudataries of the Crown of Narsinga. And were that the worst Tenure by which they hold, it might be tolerable; but there is a matter of worse consequence which attendeth these besotted Princes. The Kingdom here is but a pomp of 12 years continuance, and then endeth in a sad Catastrophe. For at the end of those twelve years, the King repairs to Quilacare, prayeth before the Idol above mentioned, then mounteth on a Scaffold covered with Silk or Tapestry, and in the sight of all his People, gathered together to behold this strange solemnity, cutteth off his nose, ears, lips and other parts, which he casts towards the Idol, and in conclusion cuts his own Throat for his finall Sacrifice: his designed Successor being present at this bloody Sacrifice, who at the twelve years end is to do the like. Never was Scepter bought at so dear a rate: For though all Crowns be lined with thorns, yet here the pomps of Soveraignty be less lasting than in other places; the entrance full of fears, and the end, of horrors. Narsinga.

These Kingdoms heretofore but one, till the year 900 or thereabouts, were branched and cantoned into these seven, by Sarama Pereimal, the sole Monarch. He by the sollicitation of some Arabians, trading to his Ports, became Mahometan; and therein so devout, that he resolved upon a Pilgrimage to Mecca, there to end his dayes. At his departure he divided his estates into these seven parts, distributing them amongst the neareſt of his kindred: assigning unto him of Coulan, the preheminence in sacred matters, and the Imperial dignity unto him of Calecute, with the title of Samorin, that is to say, Chief Emperor, or as some write, a God on earth. He onely priviledged with the right and power of coinage; the rest to be subordinate, if not subject to him. From Pereimals setting forwards to the City of Mecca, the Malabars accompt their reckonings and begin their years; as the Christians from the birth of their Lord and Saviour. And for a time his Hests were punctually observed. But the Kingdom of Calicute being weakned by the power of the Portugals, the other Kings began to free themselves from that subjection, and in the end to cast off all relation to him, and to his Prerogatives. Yet still he is esteemed of more power and Majesty, than any of the rest of the Kings of Malabar: and looked on with more reverence than any of them. The certainty of his Revenues I have no where met with, but conjecture them to be very great; first in regard of that infinite trading which is managed from most parts of the World in his Port of Calicute; the customes and impost upon which must needs be of exceeding value; and secondly in reference to the wealth of private Merchants, many of which are said to equal some Kings in Africk, and Dukes in Europe not a few.

Quid Domini facient? audent cum talia Fures
And if the man such riches have,
Then what must he that keeps the Knave?

What Forces he is able to raise may be fully seen by that which hath been said before; wherein we find him with an Army of 90000 men besieging and taking in the fort of Chalen, with another of 100000 beleaguring the Castle which the Portugals had built near his City of Calecute. And when the said Portugals stirred up the King of Cochin to make head against him, he fell upon them suddenly, both by Sea and Land, with 60000 Land-Souldiers, and 200 good vessels of war for the Service at Sea. Sufficient force to reduce the rest of these petit Kings to their old acknowledgements, but that some of them to avoid the danger, have put themselves under the Vassallage, or protection at the least, of the Great Mongul: others by suffering the Portugals to build forts in their Kingdoms, have engaged them in defence of their estate against this pretender. His forces consist most of Foot, Horse being unserviceable in these Countries, by reason of those many Rivers which interlace it. and these Foot are compounded most of Gentry which they there call Nairos, trained to their weapons when they are but seven years of Age; every one to that weapon which he most delighteth in; which makes them very expert and nimble at them: much priviledged for that cause by the Lawes of the Countrey; and so esteemed of by the King, that out of them his Sisters choose what men they please to their Husbands; some of them by that means being made the Fathers of the King succeeding.

Nothing else memorable touching the affairs of Calicute, but the way of succession to the Kingdom: the Crown descending upon none of the Kings Children, but on the son of his Eldest Sister, or neareſt kinswoman. For being that one of the Bramines hath alwayes the maiden head of his Queens, and that some of these Stallions are continually allowed to keep them company; it is presumed, or very probably supposed, that the Queens Children are the Bramines and not the Kings.

8. NARSINGA.

NARSINGA is bounded on the South, with Travancor; on the West, with the Mountain Gates; on the North, with Orissan or Orixa; on the East, with the Gulf of Bengala. So called from Narsinga the chief City of it, and the Royal residence of the King.

The Country is said to be in length 600 miles, or as some say of as much extent as can be travelled in six months: plentiful in the same commodities which the rest of India doth afford, except Pepper and some other spices which are proper to Malabar. Not so well furnished with Rivers as some other places: which want is liberally supplied by water falling from the Mountains and received into trenches, meers, and Lakes, which do wonderfully cool, moisten and enrich the Land, causing the Corn and Cattel to prosper above all imagination. Most destitute in this kind is the Province of Choromandel; in which if any year passeth without rain, they fall in to such extremities, that they are fain to sell their children.

The people in Religion Gentiles, so worshipping one God, as the Lord of all, which is taught them by the light of nature, that they join the Devil or their Pagodes in Commission with him, whereto induced Narſinga. ced by the perſwaſion of their beaſtly Bramines, who thereout ſuck no ſmall advantage. Some Chriſtians there are intermixt, of the old plantation, eſpecially in Maliapur, and the Region of Choromandel: but not ſo well inſtructed in the Principles of their own belief, as to be able to convince or convert the Gentiles, nor to diſſwade them from the uſe of ſome Heatheniſh cuſtoms, though barbarous, inhumane, and againſt all reaſon; not uſed in any place, but amongſt the Indians. Amongſt which I reckon for moſt ſavage, the forcing of poor women to burn themſelves with their husbands bodies, the womens kindred not the husbands thruſting them on theſe hard conditions, who reckon it a diſgrace to their familie, if ſhe ſhould refuſe. And becauſe they will be ſure not to have that infamy ſtick upon them, they have ordered that the woman who ſhall ſo refuſe, muſt ſhave her head, and break her Jewels, and not be ſuffered to eat, drink or ſleep, or company with any body till her death. A life more miſerable than the Flames which they ſeek to ſhun. This makes them leap into the fire with joy and greedineſs, and to contend which ſhall be formoſt: ſhe being thought to have been moſt loving during his life, which is now moſt willing to accompany him in his death, and offer her ſelf to his Manes, at the funeral pile: whereunto thus alludeth the Poet.

Et certamen habent lethi, quæ viva ſequatur.
Conjugium; pudor eſt non licuiſſe mori.
Ardent victrices, & præbent pectora flammæ.
Imponuntque ſuis ora peruſta viris.

A ſhame 'tis not to dy: they therefore ſtrive,
Who may be fam'd to follow him alive.
The Victor burns, yields to the flame her breſt;
And her burnt face doth on her husband reſt.

Chief Cities of this Countrey, 1. Cael, on the borders of Travancer, belonging anciently to the Kings of Coulan, now to thoſe of Narſinga; the people whereabouts called Paravi, are a kind of Chriſtians, who live for the moſt part by fiſhing for Pearl, which they ſell to the Portugals, and Bengalan Merchants. 2. Golconda, the chief City of the Province called Muſulipatan, the Lord whereof is a Moor, of the Sophian Sect; but a Vaſſal to the Kings of Narſinga. 3. Chamdagrin, one of the Seat-Royals of the King. 4. Prepeti, three miles from Chamdagrin, memorable for a yearly feaſt here celebrated in honour of Pereimal (once ſole King of Malavar) reckoned for a Saint at leaſt in theſe parts of India: the offerings at which accuſtomably amount unto 200000 Crowns. 5. Chadambaram, the Mother City of thoſe Pagan Solemnities, which are done to Pereimal, who hath here a Temple endowed with 30000 Ducats of annual rent, all conſumed by the Bramines belonging to it, who pretend to have been born out of Pereimals head. 6. Madura hououred with the Reſidence of the Chochanada or the Chief Prelate of the Bramines of this Kingdome; ſo numerous, that in this Town, and the territories of it onely, are thought to be no fewer than an hundred thouſand. The ſeat alſo of one of three Naichi, or tributary Kings of the Crown of Narſinga: the other two reſiding at 7. Gingi, and 8 Tanajor, the chief Towns of their Principalities, but not elſe obſervable. 9. Maliapur, called alſo St. Thomas, from an opinion that the body of the Apoſtle was here interred: martyred here by the Idolatrous Indians, whoſe poſterity in other things like unto other men, are ſaid to have one leg and foot as big as an Elephant: a puniſhment inflicted on the whole Generation for ſin of their Anceſtors: How true this is, I cannot ſay, but ſure I am that Dorotheus ſaith, that he reſteth at Calamina, where he was ſlain with a dart. However the Portugals to make ſome uſe of the old Tradition removed ſome bones from this place, which were ſaid to be his, and enſhrined them in Goa, their own City; much viſited by profitable Pilgrimes, to their great enriching. The City once ſo large and populous, that it contained 330 Temples, for the uſe of divers Nations which reſorted thither. In theſe latter days deſolate and forlorn, inhabited onely by ſome old Chriſtians, till the Portugueze began again to people it with new Colonies: 10. Choromandel giving name to a large Sea-Coaſt, lying on the Weſt-ſide of the Gulf of Bengala. 11. Caſta, a Town of Choromandel, in which the woman is not burned with her Husband, as in other places of this Countrey, but buried quick in the ſame grave with him. 12. Negapatau, in the ſame Region, inhabited for the moſt part by Saint Thomas Chriſtians. 13. Tarnaſſari, once the head City of a Kingdom ſo called, the King whereof was able to bring into the field, 100000 horſe and foot, and 100 armed Elephants, but now ſubject to the King of Narſinga. The people black, but ſo out of love with their own colour, that they willingly proſtitute their wives or daughters, to any people of a whiter and more clear complexion. 14. Biſnagar, once the chief City of this Kingdom, whence the King is ſometimes called the King of Biſnagar. In thoſe times 24 miles in compaſſe, with nine Gates in it, (amongſt others) continually guarded with Soldiers; and a magnificent Palace, not elſe where equalled. In the year 1565. ſacked by four of the Mahometan Kings of Decan, who with their joint forces had invaded this Kingdome, it became deſolate and forſaken; and the Court removed to 15. Penegardo, eight dayes journey within the Land (Biſnagar being ſeated on the borders of Decan, but long it had not ſtaid there when removed to 16 Narſinga, where it hath ever ſince been fixed, which is now the chief City of this Kingdome, unto which it gives name; though the King many times calls himſelf by the name of that City where he reſideth for the preſent.

Of the Antiquity of this Kingdom I have little to ſay, theſe Eaſtern parts not being known at all till theſe later times, nor well known in theſe. About the year 1550. their King then reigning was impriſoned by three of his Captains or Commanders; who ſhewed him onely once a year to his Subjects, parting the power and government amongſt themſelves. He being dead, and his ſon kept in the like reſtraint, Romaragio the firſt Captain aſcended the Throne, Timaragio mannaged the Eſtate, and Bengahe commanded the Army. But theſe Uſurpers being overthrown by the Kings of Decan, in the year 1565. Timaragio the Survivor took the charge of all; whole ſonne, to make himſelf ſure of the Kingdom, murdered his impriſoned Soveraign (the life and liberty of Kings being much of a date) whence followed many broils and troubles touching the ſucceſſion, till ſettled in the perſon of Chriſmarao, the undoubted Heir; who did not onely reſtore peace and quiet to Narſinga it ſelf, but recovered Canara out of the hands of the Idalcan, who had before endangered his eſtate therein. Of the great Army which he led againſt this Idalcan, we have ſpoke already: adding here onely, that before he went upon this enterpriſe (called the journey of Rachiol) he ſacrificed in nine dayes 2036 Beaſts to the Countrey Idols, the fleſh whereof he cauſed to be diſtributed amongſt the poor. Routed at firſt, and being perſwaded by ſome about him to go out of the field, he is ſaid, to have made this Noble Anſwer, that he had rather the Idalcan ſhould boaſt that he had ſlain him, than vanquiſhed him. And thereupon leaping into the thickeſt of his enemies, and well followed by the valianteſt of his Friends, he obtained the victory. But this vaſt Army of 600000 foot, 30000 Horſe, 537 Elephants, with neceſſaries anſwerable to ſuch infinite multitudes, ſpeaks onely what he can do on extreme neceſſity: or when he hath ſome long time of preparation, as he had in that Action. The power of Kings is better meaſured by their ſtanding forces, than by premeditated Levites. And herein this Prince comes not much ſhort of his greateſt neighbours: his ſtanding bands conſiſting of 40000 Nairos, or Gentlemen of his own Kingdom, which ſerve on foot; 20000 Horſe, who are either Perſians or Arabians, and 200 Elephants; well paid, and kept in continuall readineſs: his foot defraied out of his Revenues, his Horſe maintained like the Turks Timariots, out of certain Lands diſtributed amongſt his Captains (ſome of which are ſaid to have a million of Crowns per Annum) to furniſh him with theſe ſtable bands of Horſes and Elephants. Oriſtan.

Survivor

As for his Revenue it is reckoned at 12 millions yearly, out of which he is thought to lay up three; defraying with the reſt the expence of his houſhold, and the entertainment of his Foot. This ſum amaſſed together out of the Lands, mines, and forreſts of the Countrey: which are wholly his; and the waters of ſome Rivers (ſold by him to his Subjects) which he monopolizeth; the common people having nothing but their Arms and Labour. Of which the mines, forreſts, and one third of the lands, he retaineth to himſelf; the other two being divided amongſt his Captains. So that it is no marvel if ſo rich a Countrey yield him ſuch an income, conſidering it is all his own. I do rather wonder (of the two) it ſhould yield no more.

9. ORISTAN.

ORISTAN or ORIXA, is bounded on the South, with Narſinga; on the Weſt, with Delly and Sanga; on the North, with the Kingdoms of Botanter; on the Eaſt with the Gulf of Bengala, and part of Patanaw or Patane: ſo called from Oriſſa, the chief City of it.

The Countrey hath plenty of Rice, cloth of Cotton, and a fine ſtuff like ſilk, made of graſſe, and there called Yerva; with which together with Long Pepper, Ginger, Mirabolins, and other commodities here growing, they uſe to load 25 or 30 Ships from the Haven of Oriſſa onely. The people ſo well governed, or ſo hating theft; that in the time of their own Kings, before they came under the Moguls, a man might have travelled with Gold in his hand without any danger. In other points, of the ſame temper and religion, with the reſt of the Indians ſubject to that Prince.

It is generally well watered, and interlaced with many Rivers, which do much moiſten and refreſh it; but none ſo beneficiall to the Kings hereof, as the River Guangen (of old called Chaberis) the waters whereof eſteemed ſacred by the Kings of Galicute and Narſinga, and much uſed by them in their ſacrifices and ſuperſtitious purgations; are wholly ingroſſed by this King, who ſelleth them to thoſe Princes at exceſſive rates. Beſides which Rivers it is watered with a fair Sea-coaſt, of 350 miles in length; that is to ſay, from Cape Guadarino in the South, which divides it from the Realm of Narſinga; to Cape Leogoræ in the Eaſt, which parts it from Bengala. But for all that not very much traded, becauſe not ſo well provided of commodious Havens, as many other Indian Provinces of a far leſs Territory.

Towns of moſt note herein, 1. Oriſſa, on the Sea-ſide, or not far from it, the beſt traded Port of all this Kingdome; to which the name thereof is to be aſcribed, as the Head-City of the Counrey. 2. Cateoha, ſix dayes journey within the land, the ordinary reſidence of their Kings, before it was ſubdued by the Great Monguls. 3. Angeli, a well-frequented Port, at the bottom of the Gulf of Bengala; from whence many Ships are yearly laden with Indian Wares. 4. Bacolli or Bacola, more within the land, and once the head City of a Kingdome, but a very poor one. 5. Simergan, where they held it an impiety to eat fleſh, or kill any beaſt. 6. Senerpate, of which little memorable. Nor do I find any thing which deſerves much memory in the affairs of this Kingdom; but that the Kings hereof were Gentiles, ſubdued not many years ſince by the K. of Patanaw: and both, grown weaker by that war, by Echebar, the Great Mongul.

10 BOTANTER.

BOTANTER (under which name I comprehend all thoſe Petit Kingdoms which are crowded together in the North and North-Eaſt of this part of India) hath on the South, Oriſtan and Patanaw; on the Weſt, the River Guenga or Chaberis, by which parted from the Realms of Penout on the North, the Zagathaian Tartars, divided from it by ſome branches of Mount Taurus; on the Eaſt, the famous River Ganges. So called from Bottia, the principall City of Botanter, which is the chief of theſe ſmall Kingdoms.

The Countrey great, of three moneths journey in extent, full of high Mountains, one of which may be

Patanaw. ſeen five dayes journey off; in which are ſaid to dwell a people with ears of a ſpan long or more, whom otherwiſe thoſe of the Valleys count as Apes. In thoſe parts which are next Bengab, they are white, and Gentiles; in others, more enclined to the Olive colour. Their garments they wear cloſe to their bodies, ſo ſtreight that one cannot ſee a pleit or wrinckle; & thoſe they never put off by night nor day, whilſt they are able to hang on: nor do they waſh at any time, for fear of defiling ſo pure a Creature as the water. Content with one wife (deſerved to be held a miracle in theſe Eaſtern parts) and yet cohabit not with her after two or three Children. When any of them die, the Sooth-ſayer is to tell them what to do with his body; according to whoſe direction (firſt conſulting his Books) they burn, bury, or eat it. Few Towns of note there are amongſt them. The principall, 1. Bottia, the Metropolis of it. 2. Clamur. of which little memorable. 2. Kukares, the ſecond Kingdom of this rank, large, but exceeding mountainous, as Being over-run by the branches of Mount Caucaſes, which divides it from Tartary. So named of Kakares the chief Town thereof, by ſome called Negariot, their Staples for the ſale of their cloth, (moſt of the people being Weavers) bought of them by the Chinoys, and Tartarian Merchants, who reſort frequently to thoſe markets. This is a diſtinct Kingdom of it ſelf, the Kings whereof are called Dermain, but Vaſſals to the great Mongul. And ſo is he of 3. COUCHE, another Kingdom of this Tract, frontiring upon Cauchin-China, beyond Ganges; ſo callled from Couche, the chief Town of it. The Country rich, by reaſon that it may be drowned, and dried up again, when the people will: full of good paſtures by that means, and thoſe well ſtored with Sheep, Goats, Swine, Deer, and other Cattel; though the people neither kill nor eat them, but on the contrary build Hoſpitals for them, in which when lame and old they are kept while they die. Yet many times they eat their money, and I cannot blame them; their ſmall money being Almonds:

4. GOVREN or Citor the moſt Northern Realm in this General diviſion, ſo called of Goror, Goren the chief Town of it. The Country in ſome parts mountainous, out of which ſpringeth the River Sicilly, one of the Tributaries unto Ganges; the reſt a kind of Deſart or unpeopled Country, joyneth cloſe to Couche. In which are few Villages, graſs (or reeds rather) longer than a man, and therein many Buffes, Tigers, and other wild Beaſts; none wilder than the Theeves, who frequent the wildernesſes.

In this Tract alſo are the Kingdoms of 5. RAME; and 6. RECON, joining upon Zagathay, or enclining towards it; poſſeſſed by the Mongul Tartars from the time of Tamerlane, it not before: but Feuditaries to the Kings of Chabul or Arachoſia, who commanded in the North Eaſt of Perſia, and theſe North parts of India; and from thoſe places drew his Army or the greateſt part of it, when called unto the aid of Galgee, the King of Mandao. Here is alſo the Kingdom of 7 TRIPPVRA, naturally fenced with hils and mountains; and by that means hitherto defended againſt the Mongul Tartars, their bad neighbours; with whom they have contiual warres. But of theſe Northern Kingdoms lying towards Tartary, there is but little to be ſaid, and that little of no certain knowledge; thoſe parts being hitherto ſo untravelled, that they may paſs in the Accompt of a Terra Incognita.

11. PATANAW.

PATANE or PATANAW, is bounded on the North, with the Realms of Botanter; on the Eaſt, with Ganges; on the Weſt, with Oriſtan; and on the South, with the Kingdome and Gulf of Bengala. So called from Patane the chief City of it. There is another Kingdom of this name in the further India: but whether it were ſo called becauſe a Colony of this; or from ſome reſemblances in the nature of the ſeverall Countries, or from the ſignification of the word in the Indian language; I am not able to determine. Certain I am, that though they have the ſame name, yet they are under ſeveral Governments, and ſituate in far diſtant places: no otherwiſe agreeing than in ſome reſemblaces, as Holland in the Low-Countries doth with Holland in Lincolnſhire.

The Country yieldeth veins of Gold, which they dig out of the pits, and waſh away the earth from it in great Bolls. The people tall, and of ſlender making, many of them old: great Praters, and as great diſſemblers. The women ſo bedecked with ſilver and copper, eſpecially about the feet, that they are not able to endure a ſhooe. Both Sexes uſe much waſhing in the open Rivers, and that too intermixt togethor in their natural nakedneſs; eſpecially ſuch as live neer the banks of the River Jemena (eſteemed more holy than the reſt) which from Agra paſſing thorow this Country falleth into Ganges.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Patane, a large town and a long one, built with very broad ſtreets; but the houſes very mean and poor, made at the beſt of earth and hurdles, and thatched over head. The Matropolis of this Kingdom, becauſe the antienteſt, and that which gives the name unto it. 2. Bannaras, a great Town on Ganges, to which the Gentiles from remote Countries uſe to come in Pilgrimage, to bath themſelves in the holy waters of that River. The Country betwixt this and Patanaw, very fair and flouriſhing, & beautified upon the Rode with handſom Villages. 3. Sriipur, the chief Seat of one of the old Princes of this Country; not yet ſubdued by the Great Monguls. 4. Ciandecan, on the bottom of the Gulf of Bengala; the Seat of another of their Kings. One of which memorable for a trick put upon the Ieſuites when blamed by them for the worſhip of ſo many Pugodes, as contrary both to the law of God and nature. For cauſing them to rehearſe the Decalogue, he told them that he did offend no more againſt thoſe commandements in worſhiping ſo many Pagodes, than they themſelves in worſhiping ſo many Saints. 5. Satagam, a fair City (for a City of Moores) once part of Patanaw, ſince aſcribed to Bengala.

The people of this Country properly called Pataneans, but corruptly Parthians, were once of great command and power in theſe parts of India. Lords for a time, of a great part of the Kingdom of Bengala, la, into which driven by Baburxa, the Mongul Tartar, the Father of Emanpaxda, and Grand-father of Echebar. Their laſt King being ſlain in that war, twelve of their chief Princes joined in an Ariſtocraty, and warring upon Emanpaxda had the better of him. After this, their ſucceſſors attempted Oriſtan, and added that alſo to their Eſtate; but they could not long make good their fortunes; ſubdued by Echebar the Mongul, and made ſubject to him. Three of them, viz. the Prince of Siripur the King of Ciandecan, and he whom they call Mauſadalim, retain, as yet (for ought I can learn unto the contrary) as well their antient Paganiſm, as their natural liberty. The other nine, together with Mahometaniſm, have vaſſaled themſelves to the great Mongul, now the Lord Paramount of the Country. Bengala.

12. BENGALA.

BENGALA is bounded on the North; with Patanaw; on the Eaſt, with the Kingdoms of Pegu; on the South and Weſt, with the Gulf of Bengala. So called from Bengala the chief City of it. It containeth in length on the Gulf and River 360 miles, and as much in breadth into the Land. A Country ſtored with all things neceſſary to the life of man, great plenty of Wheat, Rice, Sugar, Ginger, and Long-Pepper. Such aboundance of Silk, & Cotton, and of Fleſh and Fiſh, that it is impoſſible that any Country ſhould exceed it in thoſe commodities: And which crowns all, bleſt with ſo temperate and ſweet an air that it draws thither people of all ſorts to inhabit it. Here is alſo, amongſt other rarities, a Tree called Moſes, which beareth ſo delicate a fruit, that the Jews and Mahometans who live here, affirm it to be the fruit which made Adam to ſin.

The natural Inhabitants for the moſt part, are of white complexion, like the Europæans, ſubtil of wit, and of a curious diſpoſition; well skilled in dealing in the world, much given to traffick, and intelligent in the way of Merchandize, if not ſomewhat deceitful. Not ignorant of other Arts, but with ſome ſmattering in Philoſophy, Phyſick, and Aſtrology. Stately and delicate both in their Diet and Apparell: not naked as in others of theſe Indian Provinces, but clothed in a ſhirt or ſmock reaching to their feet, with ſome upper Garment over that. The women of an ill name for their unchaſtity, though Adultry be puniſhed with cutting off of their noſes. Neat, if not curious and too coſtly in this one cuſtom, that they never ſeeth meat twice in the ſame Pot, but for every boyling buy a new one. In Religion, for the moſt part Mahometans, eſpecially on the Sea-ſhores, which lay moſt open and commodious to the Arabians; by whom Mahometaniſm was here planted many ages ſince.

Of Rivers we need take no care having ſpoken of Ganges. That with its many channels may abundantly ſerve to water ſo ſmall a Province. But hereof more anon in a place more proper. Proceed we now unto the Cities. The principall whereof, 1. Bengala, which gave name to the whole Kingdom, ſituate on a branch of the River Ganges, and reckoned for one of the moſt beautifull Towns of all the Indies. Exceedingly enriched by trade, but more by Pilgrimages; by reaſon of the holineſs and divine operation, aſcribed by the Indians to the waters of it; there being few years in which not viſited by three or four hundred thouſand Filgrims. 2. Gouro, the ſeat-Royall of the antient Kings. 3. Catigan, on the bottom of the Gulf of Bengala, a well-traded Port. 4. Taxda, once a Town of great traffick, and ſituate in thoſe times on the banks of Ganges; now by the changing of the Channel (occaſioned by the frequent over-flowing of it) above a league off from the River. 5. Porrow Graude, and 6. Perror Pequeno, two Towns of the Portugals; but without Forces for defence, or rules for Governments. Places like the Aſylum, which was built by Romulus: whereunto ſuch as dare not ſtay in their own Countries, or any well-regulated Cities, uſe to make their reſort; priviledged here to live in all kind of licentiouſneſs.

Here is alſo in the North parts of this Province, or adjoining to it, the City and Kingdom of ARACHAN. Lying along the banks of Ganges, but ſo remote from the Sea, that it is 50 miles diſtant from the neereſt branch of it. Wealthy and populous withall; governed heretofore by a King of its own, ſo wallowing in wealth and ſenſuall pleaſures, that he had in this City and the parts adjoyning twelve Royall Palaces or Seraglios, all ſtowed with women for his luſt. Now ſubject with Bengala and Patanaw, betwixt which it lyeth, to the Empire of the Great Monguls.

There are alſo ſome ſmall Ilands in the Gulf of Bengala, which I account unto that Kingdom. 1. Bazacata, now called Baſſe. 2. Baraſſæ, of which name there are five in Ptolomy, three of them by Mercator ſaid to be Mindanao, Cailon, and Subut. 3. Two, called the Ilands of Good fortune, by him placed under the Æquator, and ſaid to be inhabited by Anthropophagy, or man-eaters; as alſo were three more which he calls 4. Sabadibæ, now named Cainam. 5. Inſulæ Satyrorum, or the Iſles of Satyres, three in number, the people whereof were reported to have tails like Satyres. And 6. thoſe called Maniolæ, in number ten, (now Iſlas de Pracel) reported by Ptolomy to be ſo ſtored with Adamant ſtones, that they violently drew to them any ſhips or veſſels, which had iron in them; for which cauſe they which uſed theſe Seas faſtned the planks of their ſhips with wooden pins. But our later Navigators find no ſuch matter, unleſs perhaps it may be in the exploits of Sir Huon of Bourdeaux, where indeed we meet with ſuch an Iland, in the courſe of his Errantrie.

But to return again to the Kingdom of Bengala, we finde it of a different conſtitution from the reſt of the Kingdoms of theſe parts. Not governed by a family of Succeſſive Princes, deſcended from the Stem of a Royal Anceſtrie, as the others are. Chance, or neceſſity, had brought thither many Ambaſſines, or Æthiopians, who made a conqueſt of the Conntry; and choſe a King out of themſelves. To keep what they had gotten, and perpetuate the Regall honour to the Ambaſſine Nation, they procured thence yearly certain thouſands of Slaves; whom they trained up unto the wars, advanced unto the higheſt commands in civil and military ſervice; and out of them elected one for their Lord and Soveraign: as the Mamalucks in the Kingdom of Egypt, whom herein they followed. By ſome Arabians trading with them, Mandao. they came in time to admit Mahometaniſm amongſt them; on the Sea-coaſts eſpecially. Diſpoſſeſſed firſt of ſome part of their Kingdom, lying about Satagan, by the Pateneans; when driven to ſeek new dwellings by Baburxa, the Mongul Tartar: and of their whole Kingdom, by the valor and good fortune of Echebar, who added it unto the reſt of his eſtate.

Thus have we drawn together all the Indian Provinces on this ſide of Ganges (the Kingdoms of Malabar and Narſinga being but a Parentheſis in the conſtruction of this ſentence) into the hands of the Mongul. So called for his diſcent from the Mongul Tartars, one of the five great Tribes or Nations into which that people were divided. Derived originally from the famous and mighty Tamerlane, who having added almoſt all the greater and leſſer Aſia, unto his eſtates: left Perſia, with the parts of India which lay neereſt to it on the North, to Myrza Charrok, his fourth ſonne. But his iſſue failing in Abdula, the 4th. of that line, thoſe eſtates fell to Abuſaid, deſcended from Maromcha, the third ſonne of Tamerlane: Whoſe ſonne and Succeſſor called Zeuzes, by ſome Malaoncres, being diſſeized of the greateſt part of the Kingdom of Perſia, by Uſſan-Caſſanes: the rights of all, with the poſſeſſion of Arachoſia (now called Cabul) and Paropamiſus (now Candahor or Sableſtan) together with ſo much of India as was held by thoſe Princes, remained in Hamed, one of the younger ſons of Abuſaid: whoſe poſterity laying hold on ſuch opportunities as were offered to them, have made themſelves Maſters in few years of this mighty Empire. Whoſe Succeſſors and their atchievements we ſhall here preſent.

The Great Mongul.

1473. 1. Hamed, the ſon of Abuſaid, of the race of Tamerlane, after the Conqueſt of Perſia by Uſſan-Caſſanes, ſucceeded in Chabul, Candahor, and the parts of the Realms of India ſubject to the Tartars.

1500. 2. Babor, or Baburxa, in danger to be diſpoſſeſſed of moſt of his Eſtates by the neighbouring Vbeques, living upon the borders of Perſia, Tartary, and India, whom at laſt he quieted; enlarging his dominions by the Conqueſt of ſome part of Patanaw, and other Kingdoms in the North.

1532. 3. Hamoyen, the ſonne of Babor, or Baburxa, commonly called Emanpaxda, vanquiſhed by the Parthians, or Pataneans, and their confederates, craved aid of Tamas, the 2d. Perſian Monarch of this line, on promiſe to conform to the Sophian Sect: and by that aid confirmed and ſettled his affairs, but held himſelf to the former Principles of his Irreligion.

4. Merhamed, or Miramudius, ſonne of Emanpaxda, called in by Galgee the King of Mandao, againſt Badurius the Cambaian, vanquiſhed the Cambaian King in two pitched fields, and conquered the Kingdomes of Mandao, and Balaſſia, with ſome other Provinces.

5. Adabar, the ſonne of Merhamed, added the Realms of Delly and Cambaia, unto his Dominions.

1550. 6. Mahomet Selabdin, commonly called Echebar, brother of Adabar, the moſt fortunate and victorious Prince of all this family; ſubdued the Kingdoms of Caximir, Agra, Decan, Oriſſa, Bengula, Patanaw, and divers other of leſs note.

1605. 7. Selim, ſurnamed Jangheere, the ſon of Echebar, who added nothing that I hear of, to his father conqueſts.

1627. 8. Bockie, the grandchild of Selim by his eldeſt ſonne, (wickedly murdered by the practice of Curroon at Agra) proclaimed King on the death of his Grand-father; but ſhortly after made away by Aſaph Chawn, ſo to make room for.

1627. 9. Curroon, the third ſon of Selim or Jangheer, and ſon-in-law unto Aſſaph Chawn; having by his own Miniſters, and the hands of his Father-in-law, murdered the proclaimed King his Nephew, and all the other Princes of the Royal blood, ſucceeded into the Eſtates, and was crowned at Agra. A wicked and bloody Prince, ſtill living for ought I hear to the contrary.

To look a little on theſe Princes, their eſtate and power; in matters of Religion they have generally been Mahometans, that Religion being long ſince embraced by the Tartars, from whom they originally deſcended. But not ſo ſcrupulous or preciſe in that profeſſion, as to endeavour the ſuppreſſing of any other opinions: both Echebar, and his ſon Jangheere, being ſo inclined unto Chriſtianity, that they permitted the Jeſuites to build Colleges and Churches in Agra it ſelf, the Imperial City, and many other chief Cities in his dominions. Of Echebar it is reported, that being doubtful what Religion to adhere unto, he cauſed 30 Infants to be ſo brought up, that neither their Nurſes nar any body elſe ſhould ſpeak unto them; reſolving to addict himſelf to the Religion of that Country, whoſe language ſhould be ſpoken by them, as moſt agreeable to nature: and he did accordingly. For as thoſe Children ſpoke no language, ſo was he poſitive, and reſolved in no Religion. Able to ſee the vanities of Mahomet, and the horrible impieties of the Gentiles, but not willing to conform unto the ſtrictneſs of Chriſtianity. And though Selim who ſucceeded, to content his Mahometan Subjects, declared himſelf for that Religion; yet his affairs being once ſettled, and his Throne confirmed, he became as Neutral as his Father. Sultan Curroon now Reigning, of the ſame Nentrality, and tis well he is ſo; there being no Religion ſo impure and bloody, which he would not diſhonour by his kown ungraciouſneſs.

The

The Language ſpoken by theſe Princes, and their natural Subjects the Magores, or Mongul-Tartars, is ſaid by ſome to be the Turkiſh. But I think rather that it is ſome Language near it, than the very ſame: And that the Language which they ſpeak is the antient Scythian or Tartarian, from which the Turks (a Scythian people) differ but in Dialect, a ſprinkling of the Perſian intermixt amongſt them. A mixture not to be denied, in regard of their long dwelling in that Country, the entercourſe which their Subjects of thoſe parts have with theſe of India; and that the greateſt part of their Souldiers, Officers and Commanders, are ſupplied from thence. India &c.

Their Government is abſolute, if not Tyrannical, the Great Mongul being Lord of all, and heir to every mans eſtate which is worth the having: the perſons and purſes of his Subjects at his ſole diſpoſing; ſo that he may amaſs what treaſures, and raiſe what forces for the Wars his need requireth; for the Avarice or Ambition of his Miniſters ſhall ſuggeſt unto him. Firſt, for his Treaſures, it is conceived that his Revenue doth amount yearly to fifty Millions of Crowns, and there are reaſons to perſwade that it may be more. The Country very rich, and notably well traded from all parts of the world, the Impoſt upon which is of infinite value; beſides the vaſt ſums of money brought into his Dominions from all Countrys whatſoever, which hold traffick here; their comodities not being to be parted with but for ready coin. The whole land being alſo his, he eſtates it out for no term certain, retaining a third part of the profits to himſelf, and leaving two thirds to the Occupants, to be held by them during pleaſure. Who if they thrive upon their bargains, they thrive not for themſelves, but him: it being in his power, if he want patience to expect the Incumbants death, to enter on the whole eſtate of the Tenant by the way of Eſcheat: but if he tarry till the death of the Occupant, it falls to him of courſe, the wife and children of the deceaſed being fairly dealt with, if he content himſelf with the perſonal eſtate, and leave the Land to them to begin anew. For inſtance, of thoſe huge ſums which in ſo rich a Country may be had this way, it is ſaid that when the Vice Roy of Labor dyed, he left to Echebar three millions of Gold, beſides Silver, Jewels, Horſes, Elephants, Furniture and Goods, almoſt invaluable: And of one Raga Gagnar, another of his great Officers, that at his death the Great Mogal ſeized of his into his hands 3300 pound weight of Gold, beſides Plate and Jewels. Beſides theſe means of heaping treaſure, till the Mines of the Country are wholly his, and the Preſents given by all ſorts of Suters, hardly to be numbered; none being admitted to his preſence which comes empty handed. Finally, if Badurius, which was King of Cambaia only, could bring into the field at once 500 Tun of gold and ſilver to pay his Army; and after the loſs of all that treaſure, advanced upon the ſudden the ſum of 600000 Crowns, which he ſent to Solyman the Magnificent to come to ſuccor him; both which it is well known he did: What infinite Treaſures muſt we think this Prince to be maſter of, who hath more than four times the eſtate of the King of Cambaia, and far more trading now than in former times.

By the like Parallel we may conjecture ſomewhat at his Forces alſo, Badurius the Cambaian brought into the field againſt Merhamed, and the King of Mandao, as was partly touched upon before, 150000 Horſe, 500000 Foot, 2000 Elephants armed, 2000 pieces of braſs Ordinance, of which were four Baſiliſks, each of them drawn with 100 yoke of Oxen; and 500 Carts loaded with powder and ſhot. What then may we conceive of this Prince, who is Lord of ſo much a greater eſtate then he, but that his Levies may be raiſed proportionably to ſo great Dominions? But becauſe poſſibly Badurius did extend himſelf to the utmoſt of his power, and having loſt two Battels, was never able to recruit again, which no wiſe Prince would do but in great extremities: It is conceived that the Mongul, without running any ſuch hazards on the loſs of a Battel, can in an inſtant raiſe 50000 Elephants, 300000 Horſe, and Foot proportionable; and yet have ſtock enough for an After-game, if that he ſhould chance to loſe the firſt. But it is ſeldom that he hath advanced to ſo high a Muſter. For in his action upon the Kingdoms of Decan, he had but an Hundred thouſand men, and a thouſand Elephants for fight; though poſſibly of all ſorts of people there might be more than double that number. For in his ordinary removes in time of Progreſs, it is ſaid that his followers of all ſorts amount unto two hundred thouſand; & that his Tents do uſually take up as much ground as the City of London. Yet notwithſtanding this great power, the fortunes of this Empire have not only been at a ſtand, ſince the death of Echebar; but the Rasbooches in Cambaia, the Venazarari in Decan, and other puiſſant Rebels in other parts of his Dominions, hold out ſtill againſt him; ſome of them being ſaid to command as much land as a pretty good Kingdom, and to have alwayes in readineſs 200000 Horſe & 50000 foot, to make good their Mountains. Nature or Divine Providence hath given to Empires, as to men, a determinate growth, beyond which there is no exceeding.

2. INDIA EXTRA GANGEM.

INDIA EXTRA GANGEM is that part of the great Continent of India, which lieth on the further ſide of the River Ganges, from the ſpring or fountain of it, where ſoever it be, to the fall thereof into the ſea by the fift and laſt mouth thereof, which is called Antiboli: The other four being reckoned into the other part of India, on this ſide of that River. From hence extended Eaſtward as far as China and the Oriental Ocean, on other parts bounded as before.

The Country in thoſe elder times ſo renowned for wealth, that one Tract of it had the name of The Silver Region, and an other of The Golden Cherſoneſe: this laſt ſuppoſed to be the Ophir of Solomon, of which more hereafter. The People of the ſame nature and diſpoſition, in the elder times, as thoſe which did inhabit on the hither ſide of the Ganges: not ſo well known to the Greeks or Romans as the others were, by reaſon of the remoteneſs of their ſituation; nor ſo well diſcovered at the preſent. So that the beſt accompt we ſhall be able to give of it, will not be ſo exact and punctual as of that before; with reference Bramia. reference either to the ſtate hereof in the times of the Antients, or the affaires of it in theſe dayes.

Mountains of moſt note in it, 1. Bepyrrus, 2. Mæandrus, 3. Semanthinus; and 4 thoſe called Damaſi, touched upon before, in our generall diſcourſe of India. Out of which, and from other ſprings, flow theſe following Rivers, 1. Catabeda, 2. Bocoſanna, 3. Sadus, 4. Temala, 5. Beſynga, 6. Chryſaoras, 7. Polandas, 8. Attabas, theſe three laſt in the part hereof called the Golden Cherſoneſe, 9. Daonas, and 10. Dorias, riſing out of the Mountains called Damaſi. Others there are whoſe names I meet with in my Author, but of no great note: by what names any of them now diſtinguiſhed, it is hard to ſay. Nor find I any who have dared to adventure on it.

Of the chief Towns, 1. Balanga, 2. Cirtatha, 3. Taſale, 4. Tagma, and 5. Malthura, have the name of being the Metropoles of their ſeverall Nations. 6. Triglyphon, only honoured with the name of Regia: more memorable perhaps for the white Crows, and bearded Hens, which are ſaid to have been thereabouts, than for being the Seat-Royall of ſome petit Prince. After theſe 1. Sada on the banks of the River Sadus, 2. Samba, 3. Sabara, 4. Coli, 5. Zabæ, and 6. Sinda, have the name of Cities. 7. Baracura, 8. Berabonna, 9. Bebynga, 10. Tacola, 11. Sabana and 12. Thibonobaſtus: are marked out for the moſt noted Empories, or Towns of trade; the memory of Sabana being ſtill preſerved in the Frith of Sabaon, betwixt this Cherſoneſe and Sumatra. Others there are not noted by thoſe ſpeciall Adjuncts, of which, 1. Cocconagara, and 2. Balonca, in the Golden Cherſoneſe; 3. Rhandamarcotta, in the Midlands, 4. Pentapolis, near the mouth of Ganges called Antibolum; 5. Aganagara, near the Bay called Sinus Magnus; and 6. Corygaza, one of the principall Town of the Marandæ, may be ſome of the chief.

The old Inhabitants hereof, beſides the Marandæ laſt ſpoken of, were the Gangarides, and Gangæni, inhabiting on the banks of Ganges; the Tacoræi, bordering on the Mountain Bepyrrus; as the Tilædæ on Meandrus; and the Animachæ, and Cabocæ, near the hills called Damaſi. The Baſadæ, ſaid to be crooked, ſhort, and thick; but of a cheerfull aſpect, and clear complexion: of which compoſition alſo the inhabitants of the Golden Cherſoneſe were obſerved to be: the Barræ, and Cudutæ, on the Bay called Sinus magnus; the Leſtori, a theeviſh and Piratical people, who lived in Caves, and were affirmed to be of ſo hard a skin, that it was not penetrable by an Arrow. Theſe, with the reſt, too many to be here receited, the iſſue in moſt likelyhood of Chavilah & Saba the ſons of Jocktan; of whom we find ſo many footſteps in Sabara Civitate, Sabaraco, Sinm, Sabana Emporio, Sobanus Fluvio; and in the Countryes now called Ava, and the Kingdome of Cavelan. Of any of their actions we find little in ancient ſtories, or of the power of any of their former Kings: but that it was given out in the time of Alexander, that beyond the Ganges lived a Prince called Agramenes (the moſt powerfull King of all thoſe Countryes) able to bring into the field 200000 Foot, 20000 Horſe, 3000 Elephants, and 2000 armed Chariots. With which report though Alexander was the more inflamed to trie Maſteries with him; yet his Souldiers were ſo terrified with it (remembring the hard bout which they had with Porus) that no perſwaſions could prevaile with them to go further Eaſtward. Nor hear we much of them after this, unleſſe the converſion of the Indians in the time of Conſtantine, may be applyed to thoſe on that ſide of the River, as perhaps it may.

As for the later obſervations and diſcoveries of it, we find it (as moſt barberous Countryes elſe till reduced to Order) diſmembred and ſubdivided into many eſtates; almoſt as many Realms as Cities, and diſtinct governments amongſt them, as Tribes and Nations. Moſt of them Gentiles in Religion, with whom the name of Chriſt and Chriſtianity not ſo much as heard of, till the comming of the Jeſuits thither; who have not only obtained leave, but ſome invitations, for the promoting of the Goſpel. And for Mahometaniſm, though it had got ſome footing on the Sea-coaſts of the Golf of Bengala, as lying moſt convenient for the trade of the Arabian Merchants: yet on the North, and midland parts, and thoſe towards China, and the Oriental Seas, it was as litle heard of as Chriſtianity. But for the Kingdoms of this part, I mean the chief of them, to which as many of the reſt as are worth the looking after are to be reduced, they are thoſe of, 1. Brama, or Barma, 2. Cauchin-China, 3. Camboia, 4. Jangoma, 5. Siam, and 6. Pegu.

BRAMA.

THe Kingdomes of BRAMA or BARMA have on the Weſt, the River Ganges; on the North, part of Cathay in Tartary; on the Eaſt Cauchin-China; and on the South, the Kingdom of Pegu. So called from the Brachmanes, Bramanes, or Brames, poſſeſſed for many ages paſt of theſe North-Weſt Countryes. By the tranſpoſing of a Letter, they are now called the Kingdoms of Barma.

The Country of theſe Brames or Bramanes, extendeth Northwards from the neareſt of the Peguan Kingdoms, for the ſpace of 150 Leagues, but far more from Weſt to Eaſt: watered with many great and remarkable Rivers, iſſuing from the Lake Chiamay, which though 600 miles from the Sea, and emptying it ſelf continually into ſo many Channels, contains four hundred miles in compaſs, and is nevertheleſs ful of waters for the one or the other.

By the overflowing of which Rivers, and the commodiouſneſs of the Lake, the Country is wonderfully enriched, as Ægypt by the overflowings of Nilus. Which notwithſtanding, there are in it many huge forreſts, in the Weſt eſpecially; and therein many Lyons, Tigers, Ounces, Serpents, and other Creatures of a miſchievous and hurtfull Nature.

The whole Country containeth the Kingdome of 1. Calam; 2. Prom, 3. Melinta, 4. Miranda, 5. Bacan, 6. Tangu, 7. Ava, and 8. Brama:

Of

Of 1. MELINTAY and 2. MIRANDA, I find little written, but that they were conquered with the reſt, by the Vice-Roy of Tangu, in the firſt riſing of his fortunes; becoming the foundation of his following greatneſs. Of 3. BACAM, it is ſaid that it is prentifully enriched with Mines, both of Gold and Silver. In 4. CAVILAN, commonly and contradedly called CALAM, we find apparent foot-ſteps of the name of Cavilah the ſon of Jocktan. Of the reſt more is to be ſaid, not much. Chauchin.

5. PROM, though it be a little Kingdom, is exceeding populous, and ſtored with a warlike people. Given by the ſecond King of Pegu of the Tangum Race, to a younger ſonne; who being by his Father commanded to the ſiege of Marmolan which had then revolted, not only did decline the ſervice, but rebelled againſt him; and by the ſtrength of this ſmall Kingdom held it out three years. But ſeeing his Fathers fortunes in a manner deſperate, he repented of hit diſobedience; and went unto his aid, with an Army of 50000 men of his Natural Subjects. Treacherouſly poiſoned on the way by his chiefeſt Counſeller, for fear the Crime of his Revolt would be charged on him.

6. TANGU, is the name of one of theſe Bramain Kingdoms, ſo called from the chief Town thereof: formerly ſubject with the reſt of the Kings of Pegu, and governed by their ſeveral Vice-Royes. One of which taking his advantage of the wars betweenthe Kings of Pegu and Siam, began to ſet up for himſelf; and husbanded his affairs ſo well, that he became ſole Lord of theſe Bramain Kingdoms; as afterwards of all the reſt in this part of India. Not long enjoyed by his Succeſſor, when diſpoſſeſſed and ſlain by one whom he married to his Siſter, and made Governour of this very Province. In which he bore himſelf ſo ſtiffely, that being ſent for by his King to aid him againſt ſome of hi Rebels, and to bring all the Inhabitants of the Country with him: he anſwered that he would ſend one half; to ſend all, unreaſonable. Incenſed with which denial, the King armed againſt him; but he put the Leaders to the ſword, and ſeized their followers. After this being now in Arms, and diſpairing of reconcilement, he took upon himſelf the title of King of Tangu; and to ſecure himſelf therein, joined with the King of Arrachan againſt his Soveraign; whom he moſt barborouſly ſlew (after he had put himſelf into his hands) with his wife and children. Neither enjoyed he long the fruits of his villany, ſubdued not long after, with the reſt of theſe Indian Princes, by the King of Barma; of which more hereafter.

7. AVA, another of theſe Kingdoms, and one of the plantations of Cavilah alſo; is liberally furniſhed with all things neceſſary for the life of man. It affordeth alſo ſtore of Rubies; which they dig out of the Mountains; a certain creature which breeds Musk, together with great plenty of horſe & Elephants. Their chief City is called Ava, which name it giveth to the River upon which it is built, iſſuing out of the Lake of Chamay, and communicates the ſame to the whole Province. Subject for many ages paſt to the King of Pegu, till conquered by the Vice-Roy of Tangu, as before is ſaid; and by him given, with the Title of King, unto one of his brothers. Who rebelling againſt the ſonne and ſucceſſor of his Benefactor, and by him ſlain in ſingle Combat; this Kingdom was conferred on a ſonne of the Conqueror. A Prince of more vertue than his Brother, and one which grew at laſt unto ſo great power, that in the buſtle or cumbuſtions of the Kingdom of Pegu, he ſurpriſed or forced the Fort of Siriangh, formerly given unto the Portugals by the King of Arrachan; ſlew all the Souldiers, and ſpited Philip de Britto, who commanded it. After which, gathering together the diſperſed Peguans, and repairing part of the City for them, he was likely to have made himſelf a good bargain by it; if the ſudden coming of the King of Barma, had not ſpoiled his markets.

8. BRAMA or BARMA, the moſt Southern of theſe Bramain kinhdoms, the King whereof was Feudatarie to the Kings of Pegu, or of their appointment. Of no accompt when the Portugals came firſt acquainted with India, nor in many years after; now of moſt renown. For ſitting ſtill when all the reſt of their neighbours were embroiled in wars, they gathered ſo much power and ſtrength, that in the end, one of the later Kings hereof obſerving how the forces of his neighbouring Princes were conſumed, and their treaſures waſted; levying an Army of 300000 fighting men, 40000 Elephants, with all things ſuitable And with this power ſubdued the kingdoms of Macin, and Arrachan; conquered the Cities of Pegu and Odia, (the two chief Cities of theſe parts) invaded the Kingdom of Siam, and poſſeſſed himſelf of it; making in little time all the leſſer Princes to become his Tributaries, as they ſtill continue.

CHAVCHIN-CHINA.

CHAVCHIN-CHINA is bounded on the Weſt, with the Kingdoms of Brama; on the Eaſt, with part of the Great Realm of China; on the North extending towards Tartary; on the South, bordering on Camboia.

The Country aboundeth with Gold, Silver, Aloes, and great ſtore of ſilks, of which the Inhabitants make Taffata, and other ſtuffes. It affordeth alſo plenty of Porcellane Earth, which being made into Cups, Diſhes, and other Utenſils of houſhold, is ſold by the name of China-ware: well counterfeited of late amongſt us, by putting a white cruſt on our Potters earth, as neat for uſe and ſhew as the naturall China.

The people very ſtout and warlike, eſpecially for Foot-ſervice, though they have many horſes here, and thoſe fit for war. Well-practiſed on their Peeces alſo, on which they ſpend great ſtore of powder, but not ſo much in war, as in ſports and triumphs: yet making much more than they ſpend, the earth in ſome parts yielding very fit materials for that commadity. Trained up to Manufactures, eſpecially to the making Camboia. ing of Powder, Silks, and Procellane, which they ſell to the Chineſe. Idolatars, for the moſt part, as are thoſe of China, whoſe Characters and language they alſo uſe: but ſo that there appear ſome inclinations unto Chriſtianity, in many of them, who have erected many Croſſes, and do admit the pictures of the Bleſſed Virgin, and the finall judgement. Men not unlikely to have made a further Progreſs in the Goſpel, if they had met with better Teachers than theſe Laymens books.

The chief City hereof is called Chauchin-China by the name of the Province, ſituate on a River coming out of China; and paſſing hence into the bottom of a large and capacious Bay. The whole Country divided into three Provinces, and as many Kings, over which one Paramount: but he & they the Tributaries of the King of China. Belonging hereunto is a little Iland called Ainao, ten miles from the land, where the Inhabitants have a great trade of fiſhing for Pearls. The only Province of the Indies, which is wholly ſubject to the power of a forein Prince; the Portugals holding in this Continent many Towns and Cities, but no whole Provinces.

3. CAMBOIA.

CAMBOIA is bounded on the North, with Cauchin-China; on the Eaſt and South, and he Ocean; on the Weſt, with parts of the Kingdome of Siam, and the Realms of Jangoma. So called from Camboia the chief City of it. Divided commonly into the Kingdom of Champa, and Camboia ſpecially ſo called.

1. CHAMPA, the Northern part hereof bordereth Chauchin-China, and is liberally provided of all neceſſaries: beſides which, there is plenty of Gold, and of the wood called Lignum Aloes, prized at the weight thereof in ſilver, much uſed in Bathes, and at the funerals of great perſons. This a diſtinct Kingdom of it ſelf, but ſubject with the reſt to the King of Barma. The chief City of it, called by the name of Champa, which it communicates to the Country, is ſituate neer the Sea-ſide, and of very good traffick.

2. CAMBOIA ſpicially ſo called, lieth South of Champa, a very great and populous Country, well ſtored with Elephants and Rhinocerots, which laſt the Indians call Abades. It yieldeth alſo great plenty of a ſweet-wood, which they call Calumba, as precious & as much eſteemed of as the wood of Aloes, (if not the ſame, or ſome Species of it as I think it is) together with abundance of Rice, Fleſh, and Fiſh; Well-watred with the River Mecon, which iſſuing out of China, and having received many leſſer ſtreams falleth firſt into a great Lake of 200 miles compaſs, and thence into the Indian Ocean; making betwixt the Lake and that an hundred Ilands. By the overflowings of this River the whole Country is enriched (as Egypt by the like overflowing of Nilus): the inhabitants at thoſe times betaking themſelves to their upper Rooms, and paſſing altogether by boats from one place to another.

The people are conceived to be ſtrong and warlike, though more enclined to merchandiſe and navigation than to deeds of Arms. Idolatars of the worſt kind, eſteeming Men and Beaſts of a like condition in regard of any future judgement: of late beginning to ſet up, and adore the Croſs, which is (it ſeems) the firſt Principle of Religion, in which the Friers are wont to inſtruct their Converts. Not weaned as yet, by theſe new Teachers, from burning the women with their Husbands, common to them with many other Indian people, nor from burning their Nobles with the King, uſed only here; but voluntarily to expreſs their loves, not upon conſtraint.

The chief Towns of it, 1. Camboia, one of the three prime Cities of this part of India; the other two being Odia and Pegu, of which more anon. Situate on the River Mecon before deſtroyed: where it hath its fall into the Sea; well traded, as the Staple for all this Country, the commodities whereof are brought hither, and here ſold to the Merchant. 2. Cudurmuch, twelve league from Camboia, on the ſame River alſo. 3. Coul, on the Sea-ſide in the very South-weſt Angle of all the Country. The Kings whereof, once abſolute, and at their own diſpoſing, till invaded by a vaſt Army of the neighbouring Laos: in which their King being ſlain, and his forces weakened, his ſonne and Succeſſor was conſtrained to become a Vaſſal to the crown of Siam. But fearing the loſs of his eſtate, when that Kingdom was made ſubject to the Kings of Pegu, in the year 1598. he applied himſelf unto the Portugals, offered them a Peninſula (part of his dominions) extending three leagues into the Sea; and ſent to the Jeſuites for ſome of their Society to live and preach amongſt his people. Not able for all theſe honeſt Policies to preſerve himſelf from being made a Feudatary of the King of Barma.

4. JANGOMA.

JANGOMA or the Country of the LAOS, is bounded on the Eaſt, with Camboia and Champa, from which parted by the River Menon; on the Weſt, with the River of Pegu, by which divided from that Kingdom; on the South, with the Realm of Siam; on the North, with Brama.

It took its name from Jangoma the chief Province of it; the other two (for here be three of them in all) being thoſe of Lavea, and Curroy. All of them joyned together called the Country of Laos, by the name of the people, a mighty Nation and a ſtout, by Religion Gentiles, naked from the middle upwards, and truſſing up their hair like a cap. Their Country very rich and level, but very ill neighboured by the Gueoni (Paulus Venetus giveth them the name Gangigu) who poſſeſs the mountains: whence falling in great companies to hunt for men whom they kill and eat, they commit cruel butcheries amongſt them. Inſomuch as this people, not able to defend themſelves againſt their fury, or rather wanting good leaders to conduct and order them (for it is ſaid that they can make a million of men) were fain to put themſelves under the protection of the King of Siam, whom they obeyed no further than the humour took them. Siam.

Guoni

Towns they have none of any note, exeept thoſe three which give name to the ſeveral Provinces; and thoſe of no note neither but for doing that. The people for the moſt part live on the banks of their Rivers, where they have Cottages of Timber; or elſe upon the Rivers in boats and ſhallops, as the Tartarians of the Deſarts in their Carts or wheel-houſes. One of their Rivers (commonly called River of Laos) ſaid to extend 400 leagues within in the land, as far as Tartary, and China; and from July to September to invert its courſe, and flow back ſtrongly toward its fountain. Not governed by any certain rule or order, till they ſubmitted to the Patronage of the king of Siam; and then no other than they liſted; though for their ſakes, that king engaged himſelf in a war againſt the Cannibals, their moſt deadly enemies, accompanied with 25000 foot, 20000 Horſe, and 1000 Elephants. Secured by his protection from the teeth of thoſe Cannibals (of whom otherwiſe they had been devoured) in the year 1578 they deſcended the River in great multitudes, to the number of 200000, and fell into the Realm of Camboia. But they made an unproſperous adventure of it. For though the king of Camboia loſt his life in the battel, yet he gave them ſuch a fatal blow, that they were almoſt all ſlain, drowned, or captived in the fight. Weakened wherewith they became an eaſie prey to the Vice-Roy of Tangu, when he firſt made himſelf ſole Maſter of this part of India. Who giving to his brother the kingdom of Ava, and leaving to his eldeſt ſonne the kingdom of Pegu, with the Soveraignty over all the reſt, conferred this Country, with the title of king of Jangoma, on a younger Sonne. But he, begotten on a daughter of the king of Pegu, and born after his Father had attained this whole Indian Empire, was eaſily perſwaded by the Talapoies, (ſo they call their Prieſts) that his Title was better than that of his Elder Brother, who was born before it. Prevented in his claim by the kings of Arrachan and Tangu, by whom that king was ſlain, and his kingdome waſted. How he ſped afterwards I find not. But probable it is, that he ſubmitted with the reſt to the king of Barma.

5. SIAM.

SIAM, is bounded on the North, with Jangoma, and part of Pegu; on all other parts, with the wide Ocean, ſave that it toucheth on the Eaſt, with a part of Camboia. and on the Weſt, with a point of Pegu. So called from Siam the chief of all thoſe kingdomes which paſs under this name, as that from Siam the chief City of it.

The Country of greater length than breadth, ſtretcheth it ſelf South-wards into the Sea many hundred miles, in form of a Peninſula or Demy-Iland, called antiently Aurea Cherſoneſus, or the Golden Cherſoneſe: one of the five famous Cherſoneſes or Peninſulaes of the elder writers; the other four being Peloponneſus in Greece, the Thracian Cherſoneſe neer Propontis, the Taurican Cherſoneſe in the Euxine, and the Cimbrian Cherſoneſe in the North of Germany, now part of Denmark. It had the name of Aurea, or the Golden, ſuper-added to it, from its plenty of gold, for which much celebrated by the antients, both Greeks, and Romans (and therefore not improbably thought by ſome to be Solomans Ophir) ſtill famous with the reſt of the Countries of the kingdom of Siam, for abundance of Gold, Silver, Tinn, and other metals; great quantity of Pepper ſent yearly thence, with ſtore of Elephants, and horſes: the whole Country very fat, and fertile, well ſtored with Rice, Corn, Graſs, and all other neceſſaries.

The people generally much addicted to pleaſures, if not to Luxury; delighted much with Muſick and rich apparel; and ſuch as ſtand much upon their honour. For their inſtruction in good letters they have publick Schools, where their own Laws, and the myſteries of their own religion, are taught them in their natural Language; all other Sciences in ſtrange tongues underſtood by none but by the learned. To tillage they can frame themſelves, and are painful in it; but by no means will follow any Mechanicall Arts, which they put over to their Slaves. In Religion for the moſt part Gentiles, worſhiping the four Elements amongſt other Gods; to each of which as they are ſeverally affected, ſo are their bodies to be diſpoſed of: either burnt, buried, hanged, or drowned, after their deceaſe; as in their lives they were moſt devoted to the fire, Earth, Air, or Water. Some Chriſtians here alſo in and about the parts poſſeſſed by the Portugals; but more Mahometans: who poſſeſſing two hundred Leagues of the Sea-coaſts of this Countrey, have planted that religion in moſt part of the Country now by them poſſeſſed.

It containeth in it many kingdoms, ſome of little note; thoſe of moſt obſervation, 1. Malaca, 2. Putane, 3. Jor, 4. Muantay, and 5. Siam, properly and eſpecially ſo called. Of which Malaca is now in the hands of the Portugals, Jor and Patane are poſſeſſed by the Arabians or Saracens, the other two have followed the fortunes of the kings of Siam.

1. The Kingdom of MALACA taketh up the South part of the golden Cherſoneſe, extended towards the North from the Cape or Promontory which Ptolomy calleth Malanconin, in the extreme South-point hereof neer unto Sabana, then a noted Emporie, for the ſpace of 270 miles, So called from Malaca the chief City of it, of old times called Muſicana, or built very neer it, from whence this Tract is called by Strabo, Muſicani terra. The City ſeated on the banks of the River Gaza, which is here ſaid to be 15 miles in breadth; by the frequent overflowings where of, and the neerneſs of it to the Line (being but two degrees in the North) the Air hereof, and all the territory belonging to it, is very un-unwholsome; and for that cause the Country but meanly populous. In compass it is said to be 20 miles, of great wealth, because of almost infinite trading; for Spices, Unguents, Gold, Silver, Pearls, and precious Stones, the most noted Emporie of the East. Insomuch that is said by Ludovico Barthema, who was there before the Portugals knew it, that it was traded by more ships than any one City in the world, more by far since the coming of the Portugals to it, than it was before. The people (as in all this tract) of an Ash-colour, with long hair hanging over their faces; bloody and murderous, especially when they meet one another in the Night. Few other Towns of any note in a place so unhealthy, except 2. Sincapura, situate East of Malaca, neer the Promontory of old called Magnum; supposed by some to be the Zabæ of Ptolomy; and that more probably than that it should be his Palura, as Maginus would have it; Palura being a City of the Hither India, and different at the least 20 degrees of Longitude from any part of this Chersonese. But whatsoever it was called in the former times, it was in these latter ages the mother of Malaca; the greatest part of the Trade and people being removed from thence to this newer foundation: before which time it was the best frequented Emporie in these parts of the East. 3. Palo Zambilan, 120 miles on the West of Malaca, from whence to Sincapura, coasting about the Southern Cape (now called Cape Liampo) we have a Sea-shore of 270 miles, as before was said. No other habitation of any reckoning, but a few sheds upon the shore for the use of Fisher-men, and some scattered Villages in the land: the People dwelling most on Trees for fear of Tigers.

This Tract in former times possessed by the Kings of Siam, about the year 1258 became a kingdom of it self; founded by Paramisera, and some other of the Javan Nobility, who flying the tyranny of their own king, came into this Country, where they were lovingly received by Sangesinga, then reigning under the Siamite, in Sincapura. Him they perfidiously slew, and invested Paramisera in his Dominion. Outed of which by the King of Siam, he was forced to seek a new dwelling, and after two or three Removes, fell upon the place where Malaca now standeth, which City, pleased with the commodiousness of the situation, he is said to have built. The trade of Sincapura in short time removed hither also, which so increased the wealth and power of the Kings hereof, that joyning with the Moores who began to plant themselves on the shores adjoyning, and receiving withall the Law of Mahomet, they began to cast off all subjection to the Kings of Siam, to whom the sonne and Successor of Paramisera had submitted his new-raised kingdom, and became their Homager. Incensed wherewith, the Siamite about the year 1500 sent out a Navy of 200 Sail to distress it by Sea, and an Army of 30000 men and 400 Elephants to besiege it by land. But before he was able to effect any thing, hindred by Tempests, and the insolencies of some of his Souldiers, the Portugals, in the year 1511. under the conduct of Albuquerque had possessed themselves of it, who built there a Fortress and a Church. And though Alodinus the son of the expelled King (whose name was Mahomet) endeavoured the regaining of his Estate, and that the Saracens, Hollanders, and the Kings of Jor and Achen (two neighbouring Princes) envying the great fortunes of the Portugals, have severally and successively laboured to deprive them of it: yet they still keep it in defiance of all opposition which hath been hitherto made against them.

2. North unto that of Malaca lieth the kingdome of TOR, JOR, or JOHOR; so called of Jor, or Johor, the chief City of it. Inhabited for the most part by Moores, or Saracens, Mahometanism by their means prevailing on the Natives of the Country also. A Kingdom of no great extent, but of so much power, that joining his Land-forces with the Navy of the King of Achen, he besieged Malaca, and built a Royal Fort before it: in which, when taken by Paul de Lima, by the defeat of this King, were found 900 pieces of brasse Ordnance. After this, picking a quarrell with the King of Pahan, he burnt his Houses, Barns, Provisions, and the Suburbs of the City it self: but in the course of his affairs, was interrupted by the King of Achen (one of the Kings in the Isle of Sumatra) his old confederate, who after 29 daies siege took the City of Jor. What afterwards became of this King or Kingdom, I am not able to resolve. In former times it did acknowledge him of Siam for the Lord in Chief.

3. More North-ward yet lieth the Kingdom of PATHANE, denominated from Patane the chief City of it: but different from Patane, in the other India, as Cleveland in York-shire from Cleveland in Germany; or Holland in the Low-Countries from Holland in Lincolnshire, as hath been fully shewn before. The City made of Wood and Reed, but artificially wrought and composed together: the Mesquit onely (most of the people being Mahometans) is built of Brick: The Chinois make a great part of the Inhabisants of it, insomuch that in this small City there are spoke three languages, viz. the Chinese, used by that people, the Malayan (or language of Malaca) which is that of the Natives; and the Siam, to the King whereof this small Crown is Feuditary. Built of such light stuff and combustible matter, it must needs be in great danger of fire; and was most miserably burnt in the year 1613. by some Javan Slaves in revenge of the death of some of their Fellows: at which time the whole City was consumed with fire, the Mesquit, the Queens Court, and some few Houses, excepted only. The Country governed o late years by Queens, who have been very kind to the English and Hollanders, granting them leave to erect their Factories in Patane. Not memorable for any great exploit by them performed, but that a late Queen a little before that dismall fire, offended with the King of Pan or Pahan, who had married her Sister, and reigned in a little Island not far off, she sent against him a Fleet of 70 Sail, and 4000 men: by which compelled to correspond with her desires, he brought his Queen and her Children with him to make up the breach.

4. The Kingdom of SIAM, strictly and specially so called, is situate on the main-land (the rest before described being in the Chersonese) betwixt Camboia on the East, Pegu on the West, the kingdome of Muntay on the North, and the maine Ocean on the South. The chief Cities of it, 1. Socotai, memorable for a Temple made wholly of mettall 80 spans in height, raised by one of the Kings; it being the cuſtome of this Country, that every King at his firſt coming to the Crown, is to build a Temple; which he adorned with high Steeples, and many Idols. 2. Quedoa, renowned for the beſt Pepper, and for that cauſe very much frequented by forein Merchants. 3. Tavay, upon the Sea-coaſt where it joineth to Pegu. Whence meaſuring along the ſhores till we come to Champa before mentioned; being all within the Dominions of the King of Siam(not reckoning the Cherſoneſe into this Accompt) we have a Sea-coaſt of the length of 600 leagues. 4. Lugor, upon the ſea-ſide alſo, neer that little Iſthmus, which joineth the Cherſoneſe to the land; from whence to Malaca is 600 miles ſail all along the coaſt. 5 Calantar, the head City of a little Kingdom but ſubject to the Crown of Siam. 6. Siam, the chief City of this part of the Kingdom, which it giveth this name to. A goodly City, and very commodiouſly ſeated on the River Menam, for trade and merchandiſe. So populous and frequented by forein Nations, that beſides the Natives, here are ſaid to be thirty thouſand houſholds of Arabians. The Houſes of it high built, by reaſon of the Annual deluge, during which time they live in the Upper rooms; and unto every houſe a boat for the uſe of the family. Thoſe of the poorer ſort dwell in little ſheds, made of reed & timber; which they remove from place to place for the beſt convenience of their markets. And yet ſo ſtrong that being beſiged by the Tanguan Conqueror, then king of Pegu, Anno 1567. with an Army of fourteen hundred thouſand fighting men, for the ſpace of 20 months together; it reſolutely held good againſt him: not gained at laſt by force but treaſon, one of the Gates being ſet open to him in the dead time of the night, and by that means the City taken. The people hereof are thought to be inclining to Chriſtianity; but hitherto ſo ill inſtructed in the principles of it, that they maintain, amongſt many other ſtrange opinions, that after the end of 2000 years (from what time I know not) the world ſhall be conſumed with fire; and that under the aſhes of it ſhall remain to egs, out of which ſhall come one man and one woman, who ſhall people the world anew.

5. MUANTAY the laſt of theſe Kingdoms, lieth betwixt Jangoma and Siam; memorable for nothing more than the City of Odia, or Udie, the principal of all the kingdomes of Siam, and the uſual reſidence of thoſe Kings. Situate on the banks of the River Carpumo, and containing in it 400000 Inhabitants, of which 50000 are trained to the warres, and in continual readineſs for preſent ſervice. For though this king be Lord of nine ſeveral kingdoms, yet he uſeth none of them in his wars but the naturall Siamites, and thoſe of this City and the reſt of his Subjects of Muantay. It is ſaid that for the uſe of this City only (being ſeated like Venice upon many little Iſlands not bridged together) there are no fewer than 200000 skiffes, and ſhallops; ſerving to waft the people from one place to another. By means hereof of great ſtrength, and almoſt impregnable. But being beleagured by the Tanguan or Bramain Conquerour with ten hundred thouſand fighting men (an Army big enough to have buried a greater City than this; if every man had but caſt a ſhovell full of earth upon it) it was wonne at laſt.

The Government of theſe kings of Siam, was abſolute heretofore, if not tyrannical, he being ſole Lord of all the land in his kingdoms; which he either gave to his Nobles or Farmed out to Husbandmen, during life or pleaſure, but never paſſed over unto any, the right of Inheritance. And theſe he grants unto his Subjects, beſides rents in money, upon condition to maintain a determinate number of Horſe, Foot, and Elephants: thereby inabled without further charge unto the Subject, to leavy 20000 Horſe, & 250000 Foot for preſent ſervice; beſides far greater numbers out of the reſidue of his people, if occaſion be. And for his ordinary Guard he was ſaid to keep 6000 Souldiers, and 200 Elephants, of which beaſts he is reported to have 30000, of which every tenth Elephant is trained up to the war. By reaſon of ſo great a power he became Maſter of the Realms of Camboia, and Champa; held thoſe of Malaca, Jor, Pahan, and Patane, as his Vaſſals and Tributaries; with that of Jangoma and the Lacs, under his protection. But when the fatal times was come, and thas his City of Siam was betrayed to the king of Pegu; he poiſoned himſelf upon the news: his ſon becoming Tributary to the Peguan Victor. This ſonne of his, too much a Prince to be a Subject, revolted from a ſonne of the Peguan, a vicious and tyrannical King, (degenerating from the gallantries of ſo worthy a Father by whom he was beſieged in Siam with 900000 fighting men. Unable to reſiſt his Army if he had preſently declared ſuch a reſolution, he entertained the king with Treaties, & promiſes of delivering the City to him, till the third moneth after, (which was March); when ordinarily the River was to overflow all the Country, for 120 miles about; by which ſudden and violent inundation, and the ſword together (the Siamites waiting diligently for the opportunity) there periſhed all of this great Army except 70 thouſand. After this blow, the conquering Siamite Anno 1600 beſieged and endangered the City of Pegu, of which more anon: and dying in the year 1605. left his eſtate unto his Brother. Whoſe ſonne ſucceeding, ſettled a Factory in Siam of the Engliſh Merchants Anno 1612. and was in a fair way of obtaining the ſoveraignty of Pegu, then deſtroyed and waſted; if the violent and unreſiſtable coming of the king of Barma had not croſſed him in it: to whom now ſubject with the reſt of the Indian Princes, on that ſide of the River.

6. PEGU.

PEGU is bounded on the Eaſt, with Jangoma, and a part of Siam; on the North, with the kingdoms of Brama; on the Weſt and South, with the kingdom and Gulf of Bengala. So called from Pegu the chief City, as that is by the name of the River upon which it ſtandeth. Divided commonly into the kingdoms and eſtates of 1. Verma, 2. Macin, 3. Orrachan, 4. Martavan, and 5. Pegu ſpecially ſo called.

Pegu.

1. VERMA is the name of a ſmall kingdome bordering upon Bengala; and ſo denominated from Verma, the chief Town thereof. A kingdome which hath no Port or Haven at all; and therefore wholly freed of Moores and Mahometans, which can be ſaid of no other of theſe Indian kingdoms.

The People black, naked about the Waſte, and covered beneath it only with a veil of Cotton: in matter of Religion Gentiles, and in warre right valiant. This laſt apparent by the long and frequent warres which they had with the Peguans; to whom made tributary in concluſion, but not fully conquered.

2. MACHIN, ſo called from Macin the chief City thereof, is another of theſe Peguan kingdoms. Of ſmall eſteem but for the great quantity of the ſweet wood by the Latins called Lignum Vitæ, by the natives Calamba, ſo much in uſe for Funeralls and Bathes, (as was ſaid before) held alſo by the Indians for a ſovereign and unparallell'd Medicine againſt many dangerous diſeaſes; great quantities whereof are brought hence yearly by the Merchant. One of the firſt Kingdomes which was conquered by the king of Barma, (upon whom it bordereth) in the beginning of his Fortunes.

3. ORACHAN or Arrachan, lieth on the Weſt of Macin, and the South of Verma; environed round with mountains, and impaſſable woods. Chief Towns thereof, 1. Dianga, taken and deſtroyed by the Portugals, in the quarrels betwixt them and the King of Arrachan, Anno 1608. 2. Sundiva, ſituate in an Iſland unto which it gives name, ſix leagues off from the continent of Bengala, to which it formerly belonged. Subdued by the Portugals, Anno 1602. and from them taken by this King about two years after, and made a member of his Kingdom. The Iſland 30 leagues in compaſs very ſtrong, fruitfull, and the Town well fortified. 3. Arrachan the head City, which gives name to all, diſtant from the Sea 45 miles, but ſeated on a large and capacious River. The King and Kingdom of no note, till the ruins of Pegu, to the Crown whereof it once pertained. In the Deſolation of which State the king hereof combining with him of Tangu, beſieged the ſecond Peguan King in the Caſtle of Mecao; and had betwixt them the whole pillage of that wealty City, together with the poſſeſſion of the beſt Towns of it. After this victory, he returned to Arrachan in triumph, leading with him the white Elephant of the King of Pegu, ſumptuouſly adorned; the brother and two ſons of the Peguan following in the Pageant. A ſolemn and magnificent entry. The better to aſſure himſelf of his new dominions, this King beſtowed upon the Portugals the fort of Siriangh, on the River of Pegu. For which favour, ill-requited by the Portugals, who had taked his ſon, and put him to a grievous ranſom; they brake out into open warres. In the purſuit whereof, after many loſſes, the King recovered from them the Iſle of Sundiva; and manning out a fleet of 1200 ſail (of which 75 were of ſo great burden, as to carry every one, twelve pieces of Ordnance) and in that Fleet 30000 Soulders, 8000 hand-guns, and 3500 greater pieces, beſieged the fortreſs: aſſiſted in that action alſo by the King of Tangu. And though he failed in his deſign, yet like enough he had prevented the King of Ava, who took it in the year 1613 as before is ſaid, had he not been outed in the mean time of his own Kingdom, by the King of Barma: of whoſe great riſe, the conquering of the Realms of Macin and Arrachan, were the firſt foundation.

4. MARTAVAN, the richeſt of theſe Kingdomes lieth South to Arrachan, a little turning towards the Weſt. The ſoyl ſo fertil, that it yieldeth three Harveſts in a year; and ſent annually 15 ſhips to Cochin, aud as many to Malaca, laden with Rice. Rich alſo in Mines of Iron, Lead, Steel, Braſs, Silver, Gold, and Rubies, and very liberally provided of Springs and Rivers. The Forreſts well-ſtored with Harts, Bores, and Buffoles; ſtore of Pines and Palms: the woods with Sugar-Canes, many excellent fruits; the ordinary herbs and ſhrubs either Medicinal or odoriferous. The principal City of it called alſo Martavan, ſituate on an Haven open at all times of the year, and not choked with ſands, as uſually other Havens are in the Indian winter: of great trading, much ſplendor and a temperate air. Faithfull unto the laſt to the Crown of Pegu, to the Kings whereof their own were ſubject; and in that conſtancy they twice repulſed the King of Siam, who then had conquered the moſt part of the Kingdom of Pegu. Angry whereat, the Siamite cauſed two of his cowardly Captains to be caſt into a chaldron of ſcalding oyl; and at the third Aſſault became maſter of it. Bannalaius the old King hereof (99 years old) with his heir apparent, and 200000 of his Subjects being compelled to hide themſelves in the woods and Deſarts.

5. PEGU, the moſt predominant Kingdom, lieth like a Creſcent or half-moon on the Gulf of Bengala; extending on that coaſt from Negrais unto Tavan, the next Town of Siam, for the ſpace of three hundred miles, and upwards; but little leſſe in breadth, if not quite as much. So calld from the River Pegu, which runs thorow the middeſt of it, and gives this name alſo unto Pegu the moſt noted City.

The Soyl hereof exceeding fruitfull, by reaſon of the annuall overflowings of the River, which do yearly fatten it, fit to bear wheat, and of Rice yielding an incredible quantity. It affordeth alſo many Rubies, great numbers of Civet-Cats, plenty of Lacca, (a Gum there made by Ants, as here Bees make wax) ſtore of Elephants, and abundance of Parats which ſpeak plainer, and are much fairer than in any place elſe.

The people of a mean ſtature, ſomewhat corpulent, and naturally beardleſs. If any ſtragling hair thruſt forth, they alwayes carry Pinſers with them, to pull them out. Nimble and ſtrong, but yet not very fit for warre; ſpending too much of their ſtrength in the love of women, to which moſt paſſionably addicted. They black their teeth, becauſe they ſay that dogs teeth be white; and wear no cloths but on their heads, and about their nakedneſs. Said by the Jews to be deſcended from ſome of the Tribes of Iſrael, confined hither by Solomon: but by the Peguans themſelves, to be begotten of a dog and a China woman, which were

were ſaved here upon a Shipwrack. By Religion for the moſt part Gentiles, imagining innumerable worlds one after another, and a determinate number of Gods for every world: more Orthodox, in aſſigning after this life acccording to the merits of the party deceaſed, one place of Torments, and another of Delights and pleaſures, if the had not added a third alſo for ſatisfaction.

Chief Cities of this Kingdome, 1. Coſmi, ſeated in a Territory full of Woods, as thoſe Woods of Tigers, Wild Bores, Apes, and Parats; the houſe made of Canes, which ſerve herefor timber, (ſome of them being as big as Hogs-heads) covered over with thach. 2. Jocabel, a great City on the River Pegu. 3. Dian, on the ſame River alſo, where they make Barks or Veſſels as big as Galeaſſes; which ſerve both for trade and habitation. 4. Coilan, a City four-ſquare, and each ſquare four miles. 5. Lanagon, a pleaſant Town, and full of Palm-trees. 6. Dala, in which were the Kings Stables for his ordinary Elephants: his four White Elephants (for ſo many he had) being alwayes kept about the Court, not ſeen abroad, but in great ſolemnities, when trapped in furnitures of Gold, and no leſſe honoured by the people, than the King himſelf; called therefore King of the White Elephant, by the neighbouring Princes. 7. Silvanpede, where many victualing Barks are made to ſerve for dwelling on the Sea. 8. Meccao, where they uſe to unload ſuch goods, as are to paſs by Land to Pegu. Neighboured by the ſtrongeſt Caſtle in all this Kingdome, and therefore choſen by the King for his place of Retreat; when diſtreſſed by the Kings of Arrachan, and Tangu. To the laſt of which making choice to yield up his perſon, with his Wife and Children, becauſe he had married him to his Siſter; he was by him perfidiouſly and baſely murdered. 9. Siriangh, a ſtrong piece on the mouth of the River, given by the King of Arrachan to the Portugals, and by them committed to the keeping of Philip de Britto, in the year noe thouſand ſix hundred, or thereabouts. Who having made it good againſt him, and the King of Tangu his Aſſociate, for the ſpace of thirteen years together; was at laſt forced to yield himſelf priſoner to the King of Ava, by whom cruelly tortured on a ſpit. 10. Pegu, the glory of theſe parts, great, ſtrong, and beautifull: Divided into two Towns, the Old and the New; the Old inhabitanted by Merchants, the new by the King and his Nobility. The houſes made of Wood, but covered with Tiles; a Coco-Tree before every houſe, yielding a comfortable ſhade, and a pleaſant ſhew. The ſtreets as ſtraight as any line, and ſo broad that ten or twelve men may ride abreſt in the narroweſt of them. In figure ſquare, each ſquare having five Gates, beſides many Turrets; all of them beautifully gilded. The whole well walled with walls of ſtone, environed on all ſides with great Ditches; and in the middeſt the Royal Palace, walled and ditched about, moſt ſumptuouſly gilded: but ſpecially the Temple or Idol chapel, the walls were hid with Gold, the Roof tiled with Silver.

In this magnificent Palace lived the Peguan Kings, in as much pomp and pleaſure as the world could yield: his Empire not extending only over theſe Kingdoms now deſcribed, but over all the Provinces or kingdoms of the Bramanes alſo; which he governed by his ſeveral Vice-Roys, or rather TRIBUTARIE Kings. A happineſs too great to continue long. For in the year 1567. the Vice-Roy or Tributary King of Tangu, by the aid of his faction, and reputation of his vertues, entered into rebellion and ſlaying the Nobles of the Land, uſurped that Kingdom. After this he ſubdued the cities and kingdoms of Calam, Melintay, Prom, Miranda, and Ava, inhabited all of them by the Brames or Bramanes, and therefore taking to himſelf the title of the King of Brama, becauſe his fame and fortunes took their riſe from his victories over them. Following the courſe of his ſucceſſes, he firſt aſſailed the Cities of Odia, and Siam, but repulſed with loſſe. To make amends for which misfortune, he beleagured Pegu, and ſubdued it; and by the reputation which he got in that action, returning to the ſiege of Siam, had it yielded to him. Dying he gave the Kingdom of Ava unto one of his brothers; that of Prom, to one of his Grandſons; the Kingdome of Jangoma to a younger ſon, but born after the time of his obtaining the Crown of Pegu; and finally that of Pegu, with the Soveraignty over all the reſt, to his eldeſt ſon, a Prince of vicious and tyrannicall nature; and not more cruell to his ſubjects, than they diſobedient to him. Whereupon preparations are made on both ſides, the people to defend their liberty, the King to preſerve his Royalty. During theſe civil diſcords, the titulary King of Siam, whoſe late overthrow was not yet fully digeſted, came violently into the Countrey of Pegu; burning Corn, Graſſe, and Fruits, killing man, woman, and child, and having ſatisfied his Fury, returned to his home. This ſpoil of the fruits of the Earth, was but a prologue to an unſupportable famine, which conſumed all the inhabitants of this flouriſhing kingdom, except ſuch whom the Granaries of the City of Pegu preſerved, Anno 1598. For here the Fathers devoured their children, the ſtronger preyed upon the weaker; not only devouring their more fleſhy parts, but their entrals alſo: nay they broke up the ſkuls of ſuch as they had ſlain, and ſucked out their brains. This calamity incited another Tributary Prince of Tangu, to make his beſt advantage out of his neighbours affliction; though made his brother-in-Law, and advanced to great honours by his Father. For juſtly fearing the diſpleaſure of his angry Prince, to whoſe aid he had refuſed to come, when ſent for by him; he joined himſelf with the King of Arrachan, beſieged his Lord and Soveraign in the Fort of Meccao. Brought to extremities, the unfortunate Prince, thought beſt to put himſelf into the hands of his brother Tangu; who aſſaulted and entred Pegu, where he found as much treaſure as 600 Elephants, and as many horſes could conveniently carry away, this havock being made, he villanouſly murdered the King, Queen and their Children, and departed; leaving the gleaning of his ſpoil to the King of Arrachan: who, Anno 1600, was expelled by the King of Siam, who enjoyed it not long. For the King of Barma having with an Army of an hundred thouſand fighting men, and four-

Pegu. ty thouſand Elephants, ſubdued the Kingdoms of Macin, and Arrachan, followed the currents of his Victories; conquered Siam, drove the King thereof from PEGU, where he hath built a moſt Magnificent Palace: and is now the ſole Monarch of the twelve kingdoms of this India.

A more particular relation of this King, and his new-ſettled Eſtate, we cannot yet underſtand: what his Revenues are, what his Government, what his Forces. Merchants, whoſe inquiſitiveneſs into the Stat-Matters of other Princes, is dangerous to their trading, cannot give us any full ſatisfaction: Scholars and Statiſts are not permitted to obſerve; and ſuch of the Natives as could give us the moſt light, are not ſuffered to travell. Only we may conjecture by the great wealth of thoſe ſeveral Princes, and the vaſt Armies by them raiſed in their ſeveral Territories; that his Annual Revenues, Caſualties, and united Forces muſt be almoſt infinite.

THE ORIENTALL ILAND.

THE ORIENTAL ILANDS, ſo called from their ſituation in the Oriental or Eaſtern Seas, may be divided into the Iſlands of 1. Japan, 2. the Philippinæ, and Iſles adjoyning, 3. the Iſlands of Bantam, 4. the Moluccoes, 5. thoſe called Sindæ, or the Celebes, 6. Java, 7. Borneo, 8. Sumatra, 9. Ceilan, and 10. certain others of leſſe note

1. JAPAN

JAPAN is an aggregate body of many Iſlands, ſeperated by ſmall Gulfs, Streights, and turnings of the Sea; but taking name from Japan, the chief of all. Some reckon them to be 66. in all; others aſcribe that number to ſo many Kingdoms, into which theſe Iſlands (be they in number more or leſſe) uſe to be divided. But whatſoever the number be (the certainty whereof I can no where find) there are three only of accompt, to which the ſeverall petit Kingdoms are now reduced: that is to ſay, I. Japan ſpecially ſo called, which containeth 53 Kingdoms; of which 26 are under the King of Meaco, 12 under the King of Amagunce, the other 15 under other Princes of inferior note. II. Ximo, which containeth in it nine Realms, the principall whereof are thoſe of Bungo and Figen. III. Xicoum, which comprehendeth four only of theſe petit Seigneuries.

JAPAN, the chief of all theſe Iſlands, to which the reſidue may be accompted of but as Appurtenances, is ſituate over againſt the ſtreights of Anian, towards which it looketh to the North: diſtant from New Spain on the Eaſt 150 leagues, or 450 Engliſh miles; and 60 leagues from Cantan, a Province of China, oppoſite to it on the Weſt. On the South it hath the vaſt Ocean, and thoſe infinite ſholes of Iſlands which are called the Philippinæ, and the Iſles neighbouring upon them. Extending in length from Weſt to Eaſt 200 leagues, but the breadth not proportionable thereunto: in ſome places not above ten leagues over, and in the broadeſt parts but thirty.

The Country Mountainous and barren, but of a very healthy air, if not too much ſubject unto cold: yet in ſome places they have Wheat ripe in the moneth of May; but their Rice, which is their principall ſuſtenance, they gather not before September. The ſurface of the Earth, clothed with woods and forreſts, in which ſome Cedars of ſo tall and large a body that one of them onely is ſufficient to make a Pillar for a Church: the bowels of it ſtored with divers metals, and amongſt others with ſuch inexhauſtable mines of gold, that Paulus Venetus reporteth ſome of the Palaces of their Kings to be covered, in this time, with ſheets of gold, as ours in Europe are with lead. But I find no ſuch matter in our latter travellors. Their fields and Medows full of Cattle, but hitherto not made acquainted with the making of Butter; their fens much viſited by wild Ducks, as their houſe yards with Pigons, Turtles, Quails, and Pullen.

The People for the moſt part of good underſtanding, apt to learn, and of able memories; cunning and ſubtile in their dealings. Of body vigorous and ſtrong, accuſtomed to bear Arms untill 60 years old. Their complexion of an Olive-Colour, their beards thin, and the one half of the hair of their heads ſhaved off. Patient they are of Pain, ambitious of glory, uncapable of ſuffering wrong, but can withall diſſemble their reſentments of it till oppertunity of revenge. They reproach no man for his poverty, ſo it come not by his own unthriftineſs, for which cauſe they deteſt all kinds of gaming, as the wayes of ill-husbandry and generally abhor Slandering, Theft, and Swearing. Their mourning commonly is in white, as their feaſts in black; their teeth they colour black alſo to make them beautiful; they mount on the right ſide of the horſe, and ſit, (as we are uſed to riſe) when they entertain. In Phyſick they eat ſalt things, ſharp and raw; and in their ſalutations, they put off their ſhooes. The very Antipodes of our world in cuſtoms, though not in ſite: and the true type or Figure of the old Engliſh Puritan, oppoſite to the Papiſts in things fit and decent, though made ridiculous many times by that oppoſition. In other things they do much reſemble thoſe of China, if not the more ceremonious of the two: waſhing their Infant-children in the neareſt River, as ſoon as born; and putting off their ſhooes when they go to meat.

The People have but one language, but that ſo intermingled with the words of other Nations, that it ſeems rather to be many languages than one. They have long uſed the Art of Printing, which probably enough they might have from China: the Characters whereof are a kind of Brachygraphy, and ſignifie not only letters, but ſome whole words alſo. In matter of Religion, Gentiles, adoring anticntly the Sun, Moon, and the Stars of Heaven; and giving divine honour to wild beaſts, and the Stags of the Forreſts: but Japan. ſpecially worſhiping ſome of their deceaſed Prieſts and Princes, by the names of Fotoques, and Cames; to the firſt of which they uſe to pray for goods of the other world, & to the laſt for Temporall bleſſings. Their Prieſts they call By the name of Bonzes, ſetled in goodly Convents, and endowed with very large Revenues: who though divided into eleven different (if not contrary) Sects, do well enough agree in denying the providence of God, and the immortality of the ſoul. Of late times by the care and dilligence of the Jeſuits, Chriſtianity hath begun to take footing here; whether with ſuch a large increaſe as their letters, called Epiſtolæ Japanicæ, have been pleaſed to tell us, I am ſomewhat doubtfull. They tell us there of ſome Kings of theſe Iſlands, whom they have converted and baptized; that within 50 miles of Meaco, they had 50 Churches, 200 at the leaſt in all; and that in the year 1587 the number of their Converts was two hundred thouſand. Of this, if the one half be but true, we have great cauſe to praiſe God for it, and to give them the commendatiou of their pains and induſtry: not letting paſs the memory of the firſt Adventurer, who was Father Xavier, one of the firſt foundation of this Society, (employed in this buſineſs by Ignatius, the firſt founder of it) who landed here about the year 1556.

Rivers of note I find not any, though the Iſland be generally well-watered: more memorable for two mountains in it, than for all the Rivers. One of which called Figenoiama, is ſaid to tranſcend the clouds in hight; the other (but without a name) uſeth to caſt forth dreadfull flames, like Sicilian Ætna: on the top whereof the Devill environed with a white and ſhining cloud, doth ſometimes ſhew himſelf unto ſuch of his Votaries, as live about this hill an abſtemious life, like the ancient Hermits.

Chief Cities of the whole Iſlands, 1. Meaco, ſeated in Japan, and the chief of that Iſland, formerly 21 miles in compaſs, but now by reaſon of their warrs, ſcarce a third part of it. The ordinary reſidence of the Triumviri, or three principall Magiſtrates, which ſway the affaires of all theſe Iſlands: of whom the firſt entituled Zazo, hath the chief care in ſacred matters; the 2d named Voo, doth preſide in Civill; and the third called Cabacama, manageth the concernments of Peace and Warre. At this time it is uſed for the common Empory of the trade of China: that people not permitting Merchants to come amongſt them, but bringing to this place their merchandiſe, as the common Staple; where they are ſure to meet Chapmen to buie it of them. 2. Oſſacay, a great and renowned City, conceived to be the richeſt in all the Eaſt; of ſo great trade, that every ordinary Merchant is ſaid to be worth 30000 Crowns. 3. Fenoiama, or Figenoiama, at the foot of the hill ſo called, and about nine miles from Meaco. An Univerſity of Bonzes, for whoſe convenience and ſtudy, one of the Kings of Japan is ſaid to have founded in this Town, and about that Mountain, 3800 Convents, and to indow it with the third part of the Revenues of the Kingdome of Vorn. Theſe Colleges or Convents now reduced to 800 only: but ſtill the Univerſity of ſuch fame and credit, that they give not the command or government of it unto any but the Kings ſon, or his neareſt Kinſman. 4. Banoum, another of their Univerſities, where they give degrees; affirmed to be as big as Paris. 5. Bongo, the chief of all that Province; in which the Jeſuits have a Colledge; the Japonites learn the Portugal language, and the Europæans that of Japan. 6. Coia, the ſepulture of their Princes, or of ſome part of them: it being anciently ordained, that if their whole bodies be not here interred, they muſt at leaſt ſend one of their teeth. 7. Fiongo, about 18 leagues from Meaco, the ſubject of many great misfortunes. Deſtroyed in part by Nabunanga one of the Kings of Meaco, the ſubject of many great misfortunes. Deſtroyed in part by Nabunanga one of the Kings of this Iſland, who lived Anno 1550. that which he left, terribly ſcattered by an Earth quake, Anno 1596. moſt of the ruins of it ſince conſumed by fire. 8. Amangaſaqui, five leagues from the Sea. 9. Surungo, as big as London with the Suburbs. 10. Edoo, a much fairer then that, and the chif ſeat of one of their Kings. 11. Firando, a ſeat-Royall alſo of ſome other King, where, in the year 1613. there was a Factory eſtabliſhed for the Engliſh Merchants. 12. Ochinoſamanus, one of their moſt noted Havens. 13. Toſa, or Touſa, giving name to one of the Iſlands.

Theſe Iſlands utterly unknown to the Antients, were firſt diſcovered by Antonio Mota, a Portugal, in the year 1542. I know Mercator taketh it for the Aurea Cherſoneſus ſpoken of by Ptolomy; and I cannot chuſe but wonder at it. The ſituation of it ſo far diſtant from that of the Cherſoneſe, that either Mercator muſt be groſſely out in his conjecture; or Ptolomy as much miſtaken in his informations; which no man hitherto can juſtly accuſe him of. But paſſing by the improbability of Mercators fancy, we are to know, that in former times theſe Iſlands were ſubject to one Prince, whom they obeyed and reverenced with great affection: which government continued, as themſelves report, 1600 years in great State and Majeſty. But in the end, the Dairi, (ſo they call their King) addicting himſelf wholly unto pleaſures, and laying the burden of Government upon other mens ſhoulders; his Deputies or inferiour Officers uſurped Regal power, plumed themſelves with the Eagles feathers, uſed in their ſtile the name of Jucatas, or Kings and in a word, left nothing but the name of Dairi, to their Lord and Soveraign. His iſſue to this day do enjoy that title, but little elſe: the Princes bordering on Meaco, once his Royall ſeat, hardly allowing him ſufficient meanes to find himſelf Victuall and Apparell; but otherwiſe befooling him with as glorious titles, as if he were poſſeſſed ſtill of his ancient power. Only they let him execute the place of an Harald, in giving Arms, & ſelling dignities and honours; which brings him in the greateſt profit he hath to truſt to. Of all theſe Kings, he which can make himſelf Lord of Coquinai (which are the five Realms about Meaco) is called Prince of Tenza, and eſteemed Soveraign of the reſt. Which hight of dignity, Nabunanga before mentioned, in his time attained to; after him Faxiba, and ſince him Taicoſuma: that ſovereignty being now in a likely way to become hereditary. For Faxiba having brought under his command of moſt theſe ſmall Kingdoms; tranſported the vanquiſhed Kings, and the chief of their Nobles, out of one Country into a nother: to the end that being removed out of their own Realms, and amongſt ſtrange ſubjects, they ſhould remain without means to revolt againſt him. A merciſull and prudent courſe. Having reduced into his power at leaſt 50 of theſe petit Kingdoms, he divided the greateſt part of the conquered conquered territories, amongst his own faithfull friends and followers: binding them to supply him with certain numbers of men upon all occasions. By which, and other politick courses, he so setled himself in those estates, that Taicosuma his son succeeded without opposition; who had he lived would have abolished the vain title of the Dairi, or took it to himself as he had the power; solicited thereto by the King of China. But dying in or about the year 1607. Fereicisama his son succeeded; and may be still alive for ought I can learn. Philippinæ.

What the Revenues of this King are, it is hard to say. I guess them to be very great, in regard he maketh two millions of Crowns yearly, of the very Rice which he reserveth to himself from his own demeasn. The store of Gold, and pretious stones which these Ilands yield, being wholly his, must needs add much unto his Coffers. And for his power, it is said that Faxiba was able to raise so good an Army out of the estates demised by him to his faithfull followers; that he resolved once on the Conquest of China: and to that end had caused Timber to be felled for 2000. vessels for the transporting of his Army. And had he lived a little longer, tis probable enough he might have shaken that great Kingdom, the Iaponois being so much the better Souldiers, that a small party of them would defeat a good Army of Chinese. The fear whereof made the King of China after his decease, correspond so fairly with his Successour.

2. The PHILIPPINÆ, and Isles adjoyning.

SOuth of Japan, lieth a great fry of Islands which are now called PHILIPPINÆ, in honour of Philip the second, King of Spain; in whose time discovered by Legaspi a Spanish Captain, Anno 1564. Strangely mistaken by Mercator for the Barussæ of Ptolomy, those being placed by him in the bottom of the Gulf of Bengala, five degrees South of the Æquator; these situate on the East of China, in 13. or 14. degrees of Northern Latitude: those being only five in number, these reckoned at above ten thousand.

The Air in all of them generally very mild and temperate, especially in the mid-land parts; that on the shores, somewhat inclining unto heat. The soil abundantly fruitful of all Commodities both for necessity, and delights; that is to say, Rice, Pulse, Wax, Honey, Sugar Canes, many pleasant Fruits, the fairest Figs of all the world, plenty of Fish, variety of Birds and Beasts, as well wild as tame, great store of Cotton-Wool, some Mines of Gold, and of other Mettals great abundance.

Of all these Islands there are only fourty in possession of the King of Spain, belonging properly to Asia, but by him placed under the Government of New Spain in America; because Discovered by Legaspi at the instigation or procurement of Don Lewis de Velasco, who was then Vice-Roy of that Province. In these fourty Ilands there are thought to be at the least a million of people, subject to that Crown; many of which have been converted by the Friers and Jesuites unto Christianity. Of these the principal in account are, I. LUSSON, affirmed to contain in compass 1000 miles; beautified by the Spaniards with a fair City, seated on a commodious Haven, which they call Manilla; in which resides th. Depnty or Lieutenant Governor for all these Islands; and the Bishop of the Philippines for ordering all affairs of those Churches. II. MINDANAO, 380. Leagues in compass; in which are many good Towns, as 1. Cailon, 2. Pavados, 3. Subut, 4. Dapiro, and some others III. TANDAIR, more fruitfull then any of the rest, and of good extent, 160. Leagues in circuit; more specially called Philippina, because first discovered and so named. IV. PALLOHAN, as much mistaken by Mercator for the Bazacata of Ptolomy.

These, with the rest, subject in former times to the king of China, till they did voluntarily abandon them, and confine their Empire within the Continent. On this relinquishment the people fell into Civil Wars, every man getting what he could for himself, and the stronger preying on the weaker: which factions and divisions gave great help to the Spaniard, in the conquest of those few which are under their power. Ilands of more importance to the Spaniards, than is commonly thought, and therefore furnished by them at their first Plantations, with Bulls, Kine, Horses, and Mares, which before they wanted, and do now reasonably abound with. For besides the abundance of victnals, and some plenty of Gold which they find therein, the situation is very fit to subdue the rest of the neighbouring Ilands; to settle the commerce betwixt China, and Mexico; to bring on a continual Trade betwixt the Ilands of this Sea, and those of America; and finally to prevent the Moors or Arabians from planting their Mahometanism any further Eastwards.

Not far from these, on the South of Japan bending towards the west, is another great heap of Rocks and Ilands. Some of them rich in Gold, and furnished with very choise fruits, and other necessaries; and peopled with a stout and warlike breed of men, well skilled in Archerie. The chief whereof have the names of 1. Lequin Major, 2. Lequin Minor, 3. Hermosa, 4. Reix Magos, &c. of which little memorable. but that Hermosa, as the Spaniards, or Formosa as the Latines call it, hath lately got the name of New Holland, because not long since taken, planted, and strongly fortified by some Adventurers of that Country. And not far off are those called 5. Ciumbabon, in which is said to be a Plant-animal, or sensible tree; 6. Mattan, unfortunately remarkable for the death of Magellanus, slain there in a battel with the Natives, in favor of the king of 7. Sebat, an adjoyning Island; by the King whereof he had been kindly entertained, and whom by his perswasions he had gained to the Christian Faith, and baptized him by the name of Charles, in honor of Charles Emperor and king of Spain, under whom he served in this present voyage. But long this miscreant king (Hamabar he was called before his Baptism) continued not in this good opinion; treacherously killing John de Serran chief Pilot of Magellanus's small Navy, with about 70. of his men, and probably relapsing to his former Gentilism.

3. The Bandan.

3. The Isles of BANDAN

THE Isles of BANDAN are in number seven, that is to say 1. Mira, 2. Rosalargium, 3. Aii, 4. Rom, 5. Nerra, 6. Ganuape, the least of all, continually burning, and for that cause deserted of its inhabitants, and 7. Bandan, bigger than any of the rest, and therefore giving name to all. Situate South of the Philippines, in the seventh degree of Southern Latitude. More fruitfull of Nutmegs, than any other of all these parts, for which cause never without the concourse of forein Merchants from Java, Malaca, and China; and of late times from these Northen Countries of Europe also. Where by the way, the Nutmeg-tree is like a Peach, or Peach-tree, the innermost part whereof is the Nutmeg it self, covered over with a thin film or coat, which we call by the Arabian name of Maciz, or Mace; and over that the fruit it self, as it is in Peaches, Malacotons, and such fruits as those.

The People barbarous and rude, slothfull, of weak bodies, and dull of wit; living confusedly together without rule or order. Some of them still continue in their ancient Paganism; but the greatest part are thought to be Mahometans; in which Religion very zealous, and so devout, that they will not go unto their work or worldly businesses, till they have visited the Mesquits, and done their devotions. A shame or Pattern shall I say in this, unto many Christians. All of them bloody and revengefull; but yet so farre from wronging the body of a Dead Enemy, that they use to Burie with sweet Odours.

Some Towns they have, of which the principall, 1. Nera, and 2. Lontoor, joyned in a league against the rest; the quarrell rising from the cutting down of certain trees, proceeding to the butchery of one another, and ending in the loss of their common liberty. Subject in shew to the King of Botone, one of the Moluccoes, but too much at their own disposing. They had not else entered into quarrels with one another. Which opportunity being taken by the watchfull Hollanders, they did not only settle four Factories there; but for the security of their trade, and to aw the Natives, they have built three Forts. They had also turned one of their Mesquits to a Fortress. Whereat the people were so incensed that they promised liberty to their Slaves, to get them out of it: who falling desperately on, fired it over their heads, and killed every man of them. The English Merchants have some trading also in these Islands, more acceptable than the other, because not so insolent, and grounding their possession on a better title; the people of Lantore, voluntarily submitting themselves to the protection of King James, the first Monarch of the British Islands, and to his use giving possession of their Country to Captain Robert Hages, November 24. 1620. The like done at the same time by the Inhabitants of Wayre, and Rosingeng, two other Islands, which if they be not the same with those of Mira, and Rosolorgium spoken of before, are probably some lesser Islands, neighbouring to Polewne and Poolaway, of which more hereafter.

There is not far off another Island, not in this accompt, called Timor, situate in the tenth degree of Southern Latitude; the chief of many little Islands which lie round about it; but not else observable; except it be for that abundance of Sanders both white and yellow, which growing there, is greedily exchanged by the Inhabitants, for Iron, Hatchets, Swords, Knives, and the like commodities.

4. The MOLUCCOES

THE MOLUCCOES are in number many, the King of Terenate which is one of them, being said to have dominion over 70 Islands; but the determinate number of them I do no where find. Situate on both sides of the Æquator, and consequently of an hot and intemperate air: the soyl so drie and spongious, that it sucketh up the greatest shewre of Rain that doth fall amongst them, before it can passe into the Sea. Not very well furnished with necessaries for the life of man; but that defect supplied with the abundance of spices which are growing here, Cinnamon, Ginger, Nutmegs, Mastick, Alloes, Pepper, and the like commodities; for which, the Merchants bring them all things that the Country wants. But tis the Clove, which is the great Riches of these Islands, and peculiar in a manner to them. A Spice, which groweth on Trees, like Bay-trees, yeilding blossome, first white, then green (at which time they yeeld the pleasantest smell in the world) and last of all Red and hard, which are the Cloves. Of nature so extreme hot, that if a Paile of water should only stand in the Room in which they are cleansed and sorted, the Cloves in two daies would dry it up. Of which nature the unspun silks of China are affirmed to be.

The People for the most part Idolaters, intermixt with some Mahometans dwelling on the shores; and of late times with Christians in their severall Factories. Of severall Originals, and different languages, but all in generall fraudulent, perfidious, treacherous, inhumane, and of noted wickednesse. Few of them clothed, nor much caring to hide their shame. Not civillized by the cohabitation of more modest and civill Nations. Pitty such ill conditions should be lodged in such handsome bodies: the people being said to be better proportioned than the other Indians; and for strength and valour not followed by any of them.

Of all the Islands which passe under this name, there are not above five or six of any reckoning: that is to say, 1. Terenate, 2. Tidor, 3. Macir. 4. Rachian, 5. Machian, and 6. Botone: none of them above six leagues in compass, many not so much; the whole cluster of them thronged together in a girdle of no more than 25 leagues in the circumference, yet of such consequence and importance, that the two famous voyages of Americus Vesentius, and Ferdinand Magelanus the first, employed by Emanuel King of Portugal, gall, the other by Charles Emperour and King of Spain, were undertaken onely to find out the next way unto them. Selebes.

Of the reſt, Kachian and Tidore have their proper Kings; So hath Botone alſo, if that be one of them; the King whereof had anciently ſome title and authority over thoſe of Bandan, Macir, and Machian, are ſubject to the King of Ternate, who is a Mahometan in Religion, and ſaid to be the Lord of 70 Iſlands. This the moſt puiſſant Member of this ſcattered body; and for that cauſe moſt aimed at by all Competitors; the Spaniards having here one Fortreſſe, and the Hollanders three: both Nations hated by the Natives, whom they conſume and waſt in the wars betwixt them, but of the two the Spaniard looked on by the people as the more a Gentleman; the other ſtomached and deſpiſed for their ſordid dealings. Nothing elſe memorable in the ſtory of Chorographie of them, but that they were diſcovered by the conduct of Magellanus, in the reign of Charles the fifth, who employed him in it, Anno 1519 And that there is in Ternate a prodigious mountain, in height above the clouds of the Air, and in nature agreeing with the Element of fire, which it ſeems to mount to; huge flames whereof, with dreadfull thunders, and a dark ſmoak, it ſends forth continually. Reckoned by ſome amongſt theſe Iſlands, but howſoever neigbouring near them are thoſe of Polerone, and Poolaway; the firſt more plentifull of Cloves, the ſecond more proper for the Nutmeg, but both acknowledging the Soveraignty of the Kings of England; for Polerone by the generall and voluntary Act of all the chief men of the Countrey, was ſurrendred into the power of King James, the poſſeſſion of it being given for his Majeſties uſe to Captain Courtop, December 23. Anno 1616. neither Nation at that time having intereſt in it, for Pretenſions to it, which notwithanding it was not long after ſeiſed on by the inſolent and ungrateful Hollanders, who being to reſtore it upon Compoſition, cut down all the Clove-trees, ſo to deprive the Engliſh of the benefit of them, Poolaway made the like ſurrender at the ſame time alſo, declared by ſetting up the Engliſh colours on the top of their Caſtle, giving to Courtop, a green turf (whereby as by Livery and Seiſin) to take poſſeſſion of the Countrey, promiſing the annuall tribute of a branch of Nutmegs, and that they ſhould ſell neither Mace nor Nutmegs to any, but to theſe of the Engliſh Nation. The like done alſo at or near the ſame time, by Wayre and Roſingen, two other Iſlands of theſe Seas, which if they be not theſe two of Randon pointed at before, muſt needs be brought within the number of this ſcattered Company.

5. The SINDÆ or SELEBES.

NEar the Moluccoes, and almoſt intermingled with them, are a ſet of Iſlands which Ptolomy calleth SINDÆ, and the Moderns, SELEBES; many in tale, but not above four of any weight, that is to ſay, 1. SELEBES. 2. Gilolo. 3. Amboina. 4. Macaſſer; of which the two firſt are ſituate under the Æquator, and the laſt ſomewhat on the South of it: all of them in the time of Ptolomy inhabited by Anthropophagi, and a long time after; inſomuch as the Kings of the Moluccoes, did uſe to ſend their condemned perſons into theſe Iſlands, there to be devoured. Which ſaid in generall, we will take a more particular view of them, as they lie before us.

1. SELEBES, which gives name to the reſt, and hath under it many leſſer Iſlands, is large and rich. The ſoil thereof exceeding fertile, the people tall and comly, and of colour, not ſo much black as ruddy. Much given to Piracy, and all Idolaters till of late. Governed by many Kings or petit Princes, the cauſe of much contention, and many quarrels: three of which are ſaid to have been converted to Chriſtianity, and for that cauſe much hated by their heatheniſh Subjects, who thereupon rebelled againſt them. It is ſituate Weſt of the Moluccos, and hath therein a Town called Sion, honoured with the abode of one of their Chriſtian Kings: but poſſibly not ſo called untill their converſion; the proper name thereof being Cian. 2. Nibon, in the South, and 3. Terolli in the North parts of it.

2. GILOLO, called alſo Batachina, is one of thoſe Iſlands, which our late Navigators include under the name of Del Moro. Of large extent, conceived to be half as big as Italy. By that accompt (the truth whereof I do very much doubt) greater than Zeilan is in compaſs, though of leſs reputation: that being governed by its own Princes, this ſubject for the moſt part to the King of Ternate. Situate Eaſt of the Moluccos, exceeding plentifull of Rice, well ſtored with wild Hens, and on the ſhores, provided of a kind of Shell-fiſh, which in taſt much reſembleth mutton. A tree they have which they call by the name of Sagu, of the pith whereof they make their bread; and of the ſapor juice of it they compoſe a pleaſing drink, which ſerveth them inſtead of wine. The air intemperately hot; the people well proportioned, but rude and ſavage; ſome of them Gentiles, ſome Mahometans, of which laſt Religion is their King; The chief Town of it is Batchame or Batachina, (whence the new name unto the Iſland) in which the Hollanders have a Fort to defend their Factory.

3. AMBOINA, South of the Æquator, and the third of the Sinde, hath many Iſlands of leſſe note, which depend upon it, and do communicate in the name. In compaſs about five hundred miles ſaid by Maginus to be extremely rough and barren; which muſt be underſtood with reference to ſome kinds of grain For otherwiſe it is very fertile, abundantly productive of Rice, Citrons, Limons, Orenges, Coquo-nuts, Sugar Canes, and other fruits; and very plentifull of Cloves. Which at laſt, as it makes ſome to reckon it amongſt the Moluccos, ſo may it be the reaſon why the Iſland is defective in ſuch fruits as require much moiſture: the Clove being of ſo hot a temper, as before was noted, that it draweth to it all the moiſture of the Earth, which is near unto it.

The people much given to Piracy, wherewith they do infeſt all the neighbouring Iſlands Defamed for Cannibals, or man-eaters: it being here a conſtant cuſtome, that when their parents were grown old, or ſick of any incurable diſeaſe, they give them to one another to be eaten by them. They have one Town of more note than other, which they call Amboyna, by the name of the Iſland. Firſt taken by the Portugals, gals, and by them secured with a strong, fortress: during whose power here, the Jesuites who had in it their severall Residences, converted many to Christianity. But in the year 1605. the Island and the Fort both were conquered by Stephen of Hagan, for the States of the united Provinces: who having cleared the Countrey of the Portugal Forces, possessed themselves of it. Received by the natives at their first coming, with Joy and Triumphs: but they got little by the change, as they found soon after; their new Masters being more burdensome, and intolerable, than the old had been. For claiming in the right of Conquest, they think they may oppresse the Natives by the Law of Arms; and ingrosse all trade unto themselves as the true Proprietaries. Infamous even amongst the rude and savage Indians for their barbarous inhumanity executed upon some of the English (the greatest Patrons under God which they have in the world) whom in the year 1618. they most cruelly tortured, and most wickedly murdered; under colour of some plot to betray their Fortress: but in plain truth for no other reason but because they were more beloved by the inhabitants, and began to gain upon their trade.

Borneo & Java.

4. West of Amboina, and South-West of Celebes, lieth the fourth of these Islands called MACASSAR, said to contain from East to West 600 miles; plentifull of Rice, Flesh, Fish, Salt, and Cotton-Wool; not destitute of Gold and Pearls and well stored with Sanders (Sandalum it is called in Latin) a medicinall wood, growing like a Nut-tree: of severall colours, white, red, yellow, but the red, the best: the fruit in making like a Cherry, but of no esteem. In some parts overgrown with woods, in which certain fierie Flies make nightly such shining light, as if every twig or bough were a burning Candle. In the middle covered with high mountains, out of which flow many navigable Rivers.

The people for the most part Gentiles, intermixt on the Sea-coasts with some Mahometans. Chief Towns hereof, 1. Senderem, the Kings Seat, situate near a large Lake, very commodiously for traffick. 2. Macassar, an English Factorie, so called according to the name of the Island.

Near to these Islands, and somewhat North to Batachina, are some other Isles, plentifull of all things necessary for the life of man, but inhabited by a thievish and Piratical people: the principall of which, 1. Terrao, 2. Sanguin, 3. Solor, 4. Moratay, in which last they eat Battata Roots instead of bread, besides some others of less note, Most of the people Gentiles, except those of Sanguin, the King whereof being gained to the Christian Faith, by some of the Jesuites, hath brought many of his subjects to the same Religion,

6. BORNEO.

WEst of these Celebes lieth BORNEO, of more note and greatness, than any hitherto described, in these Indian Seas. In compasse after their accompt who speak most sparingly, 2200 miles; but as some say, no lesse than three moneths sail about. Situate under the Æquator, which parteth the dominions of the King of Borneo, and the King of Laus: opposite on the North to Camboia; on the South, to Java; on the East, to Celebes; on the West, unto the Isle of Sumatra.

The Countrey said to be provided naturally of all things necessary; yet said withall to be unfurnished of Asses, Oxen, Herds of Cattel, except onely Horses, and these but of small stature neither: the greatest riches of it being Camphire, Agarick, and some mines of Adamants erroneously conceived by Mercator to be the Insula bonæ Fortunæ spoken of by Ptolomy; that being seated opposite to the out-lets of Ganges, in the Latitude of a hundred fourty five Degrees, and fifteen minutes; this Eastward some Degrees of the Golden Chersonese, and consequently twenty Degrees distant at the least from that Island in Ptolomy.

The people generally more white than the rest of the Indians, of good wits, and approved integrity, though all Mahometans, or Gentiles. Divided betwixt two Kings, and two Religions; the King of Borneo and his Subjects being all Mahometans; those of Laus still remaining in their antient Gentilism. These think the Sun and Moon to be man and wife, and the Stars their children; ascribing to each of them divine honours, to the Sun especially; whom they salute at his first rising with great Reverence, saying certain verses. Their publick businesses are treated of commonly in the night, at which time the Counsellours of State meet, and ascend some tree, viewing the heavens till the Moon rise, and then go to the Senate-house. The same Apparell generally of both Religions; but thin, by reason of the great heat of the Aire: a shirt of Silk, or of Calicut, or some such slight stuff, worn more for modesty than for warmth.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Borneo, situate in the North-West, part of the Island near a goodly bay, but in the middle of the Fens like the City of Venice, and seated as that is, on Piles; the building sumptuous, of hewed stones, covered with the leaves of the Coco-tree. The Town so large as to contain 25000 3. Taiopura, 4. Tamaoratas. 5. Malano; all of them noted for fair Cities, or commodeous Havens. 6. Sagadana, a Factory of English. 7. Lavi, on a large Bay in the South-East part of the Island, the ordinary Seat of the King of Laus. 8. Paro, on another capacious Bay, not far from Lavi, and directly opposite to Borneo: that being seated on the North-West, and this on the South-East of the Island. Betwixt these two Kings is the whole divided; but so that he of Borneo hath the greatest part of it, and therefore keeps the greater State: not to be spoken with, but by the mouth of some of his own Interpreters; and in his Palace served by no other Attendants, than Maids or Women.

7. JAVA.

OPposite to Borneo towards the South lie the Isles of JAVA, two in number; both situate South of the Æquator, both of great Circumference, and commonly distinguished into Major and Minor, or the greater and the lesser Java.

1. JAVA.

1. JAVA MAJOR, the more Northward of the two, and by much the bigger, is said to be in compass 3000 miles, and that by them who elsewhere reckon Borneo for the biggest of these Seas. But the truth is, that the South-parts of this Island not being perfectly discovered, make the ameasurement thereof to be very uncertain. Conceived most probably to be the Jabadin of Ptolomy, the most Northern part whereof is placed by him in the eighth degree of Southern Latitude: said by him to afford much gold and silver, to be exceeding fruitfull of all other necessaries; and finally that the name did signifie ιεσδιν νησον, or the Island of Barly. All which agreeth punctually with the present Island, the word Jabad signifying a kind of grain much like our Barly; and Diu in the Persian and Indian tongues signifying an Island. And so in Jabadiu, we have found the Island of Java, the mutation of B. into V. being very ordinary. Java.

Then for the riches and fertility of it, it is said to yeeld great plenty of Fruits, and Corn, but of Rice especially; flesh of all sorts, salted and sent from hence into other Countries; great store of Fowl, both wild and tame; plenty of Gold, some precious Stones, and the best kind of Brasse; Silks in abundance, and great quantities of Pepper, Ginger, Cinnamon, and some other spices. In a word so befriended by the bounty of Nature, that Scaliger calleth it Epitomy Mundi, or the whole World contracted in a lesser Volume. But withall it is much exposed unto storms and tempests, from which seldome free.

The people of a middle Stature, corpulent, and of broad Faces, most of them naked or covered onely with a slight silken stuff, and that no lower than the knee; accompted the most Civill people of all the Indians, as fetching their descent from China: but withall treacherous, very proud, much given to lying, and very careless of their words; to which so used, that they count it not amongst their Faults. And therefore when a King of theirs had broke promise with the Hollanders, and was challenged for it, he answered that tongue was not made of bone. Cruell they are also said to be, and implacable, if once offended: accustomed of old to eat the bodies of their friends: accounting no buriall so honourable; nor obsequy, so applausive. This also a custom amongst many of the rest of the Indians, so hath been ever since the beginning of the Persian Monarchy. Herodotus reporteth how Darius Hystaspes understanding of this custom, and withall knowing how the Græcians use to burn their dead; sent to the Greekes, that it was his pleasure they should eat the bodies of their dead: But they used all means of perswasion and entreaty, not to be forced to so bruitish and barbarous a custome. Then commanded he the Indians to conform themselves to the fashion of the Græcians; but they all more abhorred to burn the dead, than the Greekes did to eat them. So impossible it is for a custom either to be suddenly left off, or to seem undecent and inconvenient, if once thorowly settled.

In matter of Religion they are all Mahometans, or Gentiles, acording to the fancy of their severall Kings, whereof in this Island there are very many; one for every great Tribe, or more powerfull Family. Zealous in their Religion which so ever it be, as appears by the sad story of the Daughter of the King of Ballambua; murdered by her Huband the King of Passarva, the second night after her wedding, with all her Attendants, because they would not be Mahometans, which was his Religion. Yet in some common Principles they agree well enough, punishing Adultery with death; in wich case the woman chooseth her neareſt Kinsman for her Executioner: but otherwise spending the Day and Night in much Sloth and Dalliance. Of the two, Gentilism is the more diffused, because most antient; the Sect of Mahomet not being introduced till the year 1560. though of a very swift growth, and of a great increase for so short a time.

Their chief Towns, 1. Panarucan, neer a burning hill, which in the year 1586. break forth exceedingly, oppressed infinite numbers of men, and cast great stones into the City for three daies together. 2. Jortam, a Town of 1000 Housholds, the Inhabitants whereof are Gentiles, and have their Temples in the Woods: the Chief-Priest of whose superstition hath his dwelling here, of great authority and power over all the Island. 3. Ballambua, 4. Passarva, 5. Taban, 6. Matara, 7. Daunia, 8. Taggal, 9. Surrabaia, 10. Catabaon; the Seats of so many of their Kings; some of them also furnished of convenient Havens, 11. BANTAM, the seat also of a King, but of most trade in all the Island, seldom without the company of English, Portugals, and Hollanders,; the principall Factory of the English in all the Indies, though they have many besides this. The Town unwholsomely seated in a mooriſh ground, and much subject to fire. 12. Sunda, situate in a place abounding in Pepper. 13. Agracan, a convenient Port. Here was also in the time of Ptolomy a Town called 14. Argrepolis, or the Silver City, long agoe destroyed. And now there is, 15. Sura, a new Town in the territories of the King of Bantam, built by some of the Subjects of the King of Passarva, who being oppressed by their own King, came into this part of the Country, where they got leave to build this City. The people whereof live quietly according to their own Laws, follow their Husbandry abroad, but never marry; and yet do not want a constant Succession; adopting some of the other Javans into their Society, as they find their number to diminish.

Of the story of this Island I can say but little. Divided into many petit and inconsiderable Kingdoms; & those divided too by Mountains; crossing the Island in the middle from West to East, which cut off all commerce and correspondence betwixt one another. Some of these Kings Mahometans, some Gentiles, as before was said; all subject or Homagers at least to one of the Kings of the Gentiles, who hath his dwelling in the middest of the Island. Next him, the King of Tuban was conceived to be the richest, and the King of Ballambua of the greatest territory; whose Family, after long war and blood-shed, begun in the murder of his Daughter, is said to be wholly rooted out by the King of Passarva. These Kings much reverenced by their subjects, and so well obeyed, that whatsoever they command, is done, be it never so dangerous.

2. JAVA MINOR,

Java. 2. JAVA MINOR, situate on the South of the other, is said to be 2000 miles in compass, and to be very near the firm land Terra Australis incognita, of the Southern Continent. Not very well known to any of our late Adventurers; but generally affirmed (not so much on certain knowledge as unsure conjecture) to be of the same nature and condition with the greater Java. The inhabitants hereof in the time of Paulus Venetus, who had travelled in it, reported to be Cannibals, Idolaters, devourers of their Parents and dearest friends, and to worship all day whatsoever they saw first in the morning. Divided then into eight Kingdoms, distinguished by the names of their principal towns. Six whereof he had seen, which are these that follow. 1. Felech, where the Townsmen were Moores, and the Paisant Gentiles. 2. Basma, which did acknowledge the Great-Cham of Tartaria for Lord in chief; but without paying of any tribute. 3. Samara, where none of the North-stars could be seen. 4. Sambri, in which some men were said to have tails like dogs. 5. Fanfur, in which they have a Tree, the wood whereof put in water, will sink like iron; of which they use to make Launces that will pierce an Armour. And 6. Dragorian, of which there is nothing memorable or prodigious, but that the people of it use to eat their neerest kinsmen; and that no Prodigie at all, because used by others.

To these two we may joyn MADURA, on the North of the greater Java, fertile of Riee, but otherwise of so watterish and moist a Soyl, that the men and Cattle use to go knee-deep when they sow it. The chief Town whereof is called Arosbay. And on the East of the same Java the Island Baly, exceeding populous for the bigness, supposed to contain 600000 Inhabitants; and very well provided of Buls, Bussals, Goats, Horses, Swine, many kind of fruits, and some store of metals.

8. SUMATRA.

SUMATRA lieth on the North of the Greater Java, betwixt it and the Streight of Sincapura, the most Southern Town of the Goldon Chersonese. The Streight in that place so streight & narrow not above a Musket shot in breath; that some concive this Island to have been formerly joyned unto it by some little Isthmus; since worn away by the violence and working of the Sea: and that this Island and not the Land of Malaca, was that Golden Chersonese, which we find in Ptolomy. More probably by far, than that we should run after to the Isle of Japan, situate on the East of China, so far from any part of India, where it is placed by the Author of the Atlas Minor.

The length hereof, extended from the North west to the South East, is said by some to be 900. by others but 700. miles, the breadth 200. and the whole compass one and twenty hundred. Strangely affirmed by some writers to be the biggest of all the East; who yet assign a greater circuit unto Java, and as great to Borneo. Situate under the Æquator, which divideth it into two parts, very near an equality: that on the North-side reaching nnto five degrees, that on the South-side but to seven degrees from the line it self. By which account there is little difference betwixt the length of a day and night; both much at one in all times of the year whatever.

The air hereof by consequence must be very hot, but withall unwholsome: not so much in regard of the extream heats, as by reason of the gross vapours drawn from the many Fens and Rivers, which are found to be in it; and the thick woods which intercept the free course of a purging wind. The soil not capable of such grain as in other places, except Rice or Millet (for I know not otherwise how to render the Latine, Milium) but yielding Ginger, Pepper, Camphire, Agarick, and Cassia, in great abundance. It affordeth also great plenty of Wax and Honey, store of Silks and Cottons, rich mines not only of Tin, Iron, Sulphur, and other Minerals; but of Gold such quantity, that some conceive this Island to be Solomons Ophir. And if Pedrunka Sirie one of the Kings of this Island, in a letter written to King James did not brag too impudently; it may be probable enough. For by that letter it appeareth that all the furnitures of his house, and trappings of his Elephants, and horse, withall his Armour, were of pure Gold, and that he had in his dominions a whole Mountain of Gold; King of which Golden Mountain he entituleth himself in his Regal Stile.

The Inhabitants are many of them good Artificers, cunning Merchants, or expert Mariners. All of them Gentiles till about two hundred and thirty years since, at what time by the diligence of some Ariabian Merchants trading to this Island, Mahometanism began to spread upon the Coasts. But in the inland parts of the Country they are Gentiles still, and still retain amongst them their old barberous customes. The most loving men unto their enemies that were ever known; for otherwise they would never eat them. Having eaten they use their skuls instead of money, which they exchange or barter for such necessaries, as their wants require: and he is thought to be the wealthiest man amongst them, who hath most of this coyn. Those of the other Religion though in most points and customes they agree with the rest of the Mahometans, have this one singular to themselves: which is, that once every year on a certain day they go solemnly unto their Mesquits to see if Mahomet be come; leading a spare horse for him to ride upon: which (missing him) is mounted at their comming back, by the best man in the company. Of any great Progresse that Christianity hath made here, I have no good evidence.

That here are many and great Rivers, hath been said before, but their names I find not. Here are also many Mountains, and those great and high; that of most note called Balalvanus, said to burn continually. Out of which, or not far off do arise two Fountains, of which the one is said to run pure Oyl, and the other the best Balsamum: which I bind no man to believe but such as have seen it.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Achen, the Seat-Royall of that Kingdome, beautified with the Regal Palace, lace, to which they pass thorow seven Gates one after another, with green Courts between the three outermost; those three continually guarded with women expert at their weapons, and using both swords and Guns; the only ordinary guard that he hath for his person. The materials of this Palace, mean, but the furniture, costly; the walls thereof being hanged commonly with Velvet and Damask, and sometimes with cloth of Gold. 2. Pedir. 3. Pacem, 4. Cambar, 5. Menantabo, 6. Aura, and 7. Andragide, the seats of so many of their Kings. 8. Passaman, a Town of great Trade, but situate in a Mooriſh and unhealthy place; found so experimentally by too many of the Englisſh, who have there their Factory. 9. Priamon, and 10. Tecoo, of a more healthy air, but not so commodious in their Havens as is that of Passaman: these three Towns standing in that part of the Countrey where the Pepper groweth. Seilan.

All that we know touching the story of this Countrey, is, that the Portugals, when they first came hither, found in it nine and twenty kings; reduced since to a smaller number. For Abraham, sometimes a Slave, afterwards King of Achen, having turned Mahometan, by the help of the Turks and Arabians subdued the Realms of Pedir and Pacem. Aladine who succeeded him, being once a Fisherman and grown famous for his exploits at Sea; was by this King preferred to the marriage of one of his Kinswomen, made his Lord Admiral, and by him trusted with the protection of his son and heir: of whom instead of a Protector he became the murtherer, and usurped the State unto himself. When King, he added to his Crown the Kingdoms of Aru, or Aura, and Manucabo; and almost all the rest in the North part of the Iland. In this kings time, the Englisſh were first setled in their Factory there. Grown old (an hundred years at least) he was imprisoned by his eldest Son, impatient of a longer stay, alledging that his age had made him unfit for Government, Anno 1604. The name of the New King Sultan Pedrucka Sirie, who in his Letter to King James spoken of before, stiles himself the Sole King of Sumatra: either with greater brags than truth, or else because the Kingdoms of Tecoo, Priaman, and Baronse, being conquered by him, all the rest were become his Tributaries. Associated with the forces of the King of Ior, or Iohor, who had married his Sister, he besieged Malaca, and distressed it: But being beaten from it by the Portugals, he turned the tide of his displeasure upon his Confederate, and subdued that Kingdom; who with the King of Siak (some other petit Prince neer Ior) and two of their brethren, were in the year 1613. brought Prisoners to Achem.

The Government of this King is absolute, and meerly arbitrary, executing what he hath a minde to, witho it form of Law. So cautelous, that without his Placard no stranger can have Ingress into his dominions, or free Egress out of them. Nor is admittance to his presence granted unto any whom he first sends not for by an Officer with a Gilded-Staff. He is conceived to be strong both by Sea, and Land, his Country populous, his Elephants many and well trained, able to put to Sea 120, or if need be 200. Gallies and Frigots fit for any service, most of which carry Demi-Cannon, Culverin, Sakar, Minion, and other the like Ordnance of Brass. So great a Master of his Subjects, that in 21. dayes he had a goodly Channel drawn about his Palace, from a River which was eight miles off. Of his Revenues I am able to make no conjecture, but think him to be full of Gold, by that great quantity of Golden Furnitures which he hath about him.

And now I am fallen on this Kings Gold, I cannot but take notice of some Ilands on the West of Sumatra, called Aureæ Insulæ, or the Golden Ilands; the chief of which named Andramania, is possessed by Cannibals, or Man-eaters. Opposite unto which on the East side of this Iland, are those called Linga, Banca, and Bintam; which last is said to be very woody, well watered, and to afford a commodious Station for shipping. The houses built of stone, but thatched, except that of the King (for even these sorry Ilands love to have a King of their own, whose house more eminently seated, is more handsomly covered.

9. ZEILAN.

WEst of Sumatra, somewhat inclining to the North, is the Iland of ZEILAN, ten Degrees distant from the Æquator, and neer adjoyning to the Promontory in the hither India which Ptolomy calleth by the name of Cory. The length hereof computed at 250 miles, the breadth at 150 miles only; the whole circumference at 700 or 800 miles. Conjectured by the situation, and other probable inducements, to be the Taprobane of the antient Writers. Ortelius and most other intelligent men of these latter times are of that opinion. Only Mercator, who hath carried the Golden Chersonese to the Isle of Japan; and fixed Taprobane in that of Sumatra, (in which last I must confess he hath many Partners) will have this Iland to be that which Ptolomy cals Nanigeris, though that be four Degrees more West than the Promontory of Cory, to which this Isle in former times seems to have been joined.

Taking it therefore for an evident and undoubted truth, that this Zeilan or Ceilan is the Taprobane of the Antients, we will a little look on the State of that Iland, with reference to the times when those Authors lived. By Ptolomy affirmed to be plentiful in Rice, Honey, Ginger, Gold, Silver, Precious Stones, and all kind of metals; By Pliny, that the Gold is purer, and the Gems fairer than any in India; that there were also Groves of Palm-trees, and great store of Elephants, is declared by Ælian and some other. Watered with many fair and pleasant Rivers, viz. 1. Soana, 2. Azanus, 3. Baracus, 4. Gandes, 5. Phasis: the hills in many places having a full prospect over the adjoyning Vallie; the chief of which were Malea, and those called Calibi, the vales perpetually enriched with the choicest fruits. Exceeding populous for the bigness, and stored with many Towns of note. Of which Magrammum only hath the name of a Metropolis. 1. Margana, 2. Jogana, 3. Sindocanda, 4. Hodoca, 5. Nabartha, 6. Dogana, 7. Dionysiopolis, 8. Bocana, 9. Abaratha, 10. Procurum, 11. Nagadiba, and 12.

Seilan. Anubingara, have the name of Cities. 13. Moduttum, and 14. Talacorum, noted for the Towns of traffick; 15. Priapis, 16. Mardus, 17. Rhizala, 18. Spatana, and 19. that of the Sun, for commodious Havens; 20. Anurogrammum being honoured with the Title of Regia, or the Royal City. As for the name, it is said by Ptolomy to have been first called Taprobane, then Simondi Insula, and finally in his time Salice, and the People Salæ; from whence the name of Selan or Seilan seems to be derived.

To take a view of it at the present, I finde it said to be of an Oval form, divided from the main land by a narrow Channel, the Heavens refreshing it with their dews, the Air with a fragrant freshness, and the waters with their many Rivers and Fountains; the Earth diversifyed into lofty hils, and lowly valleys; her inward Chambers filled with Metals, and Jewels, her outward Coat of the pleasanteſt colour, stored with whole woods of Cinnamon; besides Fruits, Limons, Oringes, &c. bettering those of Spain: Of Fouls and Beasts great plenty both wilde and tame; and the best breed of Elephants in all the world. Destitute only of the Vine, the want of which supplied with a pleasant drink made of the juice of fruits, more natural to them than the other, and so preservative of life that the people are reported to be longer lived than in any other parts. In a word so abounding in all contentments, that the Indians hold it to be Paradise, and take upon them to point out some of Adams footings, left for a memorial in some parts of it. And to confirm them in their Error, they have an Hill there which the Spaniards call by the name of Pico de Adam, affirmed to be seven Leagues in height, from whence Adam ascended into Heaven: for that cause visited by the Moors or Arabians, with continual Pilgrimages.

The people for the most part tall and strait of body, naked from the girdle upwards, unwarlike, and much given unto ease and pleasures; So queasie stomached that the pooreſt of them will not eat that meat which another hath touched; inclined to bravery, and therefore make wide holes in their ears, which they stretch out with Iewels to their very shoulders. Cunning Artificers in all metals, one of them making a Crucifix of such exquisite workmanship, that it seemed to give life to the dead; and was sent by the Archbishop of Goa to the King of Spain, as the rareſt Iewel which had ever graced his Royal Cabinet. They are also very active, and well skilled in Iugling, both men and women, travelling thorow India with their tricks and Hobby-horses, by which they get themselves both delight and money. In matter of Religion, they are generally Idolaters, especially the Natives, whom they call Cingalas, which live in the Inlands; the Sea-coasts (as in other Ilands) being filled with Mahometans. No Christians that I hear of but in Columbo, a Town of the Portugals.

Cities of most repute amongst them. 1. Candie, the Seat of one of their Kings, supposed to be the Sindocande of Ptolomy, memorable for the statues of their supposed Adam, most artificially wrought, of five or six Fathoms high, Symetrically proportionable to the print of his foot, which they conceive to have amongst them. 2. Ventane, of great renown for an Idol-Temple, in compass 130. paces, of great height, and all white except the top, which hath the Spires thereof so gilded, that when the Sun shines, men are not able to look upon them. 3. Ianasipatan, 4. Triqui Lemale (supposed to be the Tarichi of Ptolomy, 5. Batecoloni, 6. Vilassem, 7. Tanamaca, 8. Laula, 9. Galle, the Seats of so many of their Kings. 10 Nagarita, conceived to be the Negiri; as 11. Agena, the Iogana of Ptolomy. 12. Colmuchi, the Seat Royal of the chief King of this Iland, situate on a capacious Bay in the Southwest of it, and of most trade in all this Country: many great ships laden with Cinnamon, Gems, Elephants, and other Indian commodities, going yearly hence. Fortified by the Portugals (by whom called Columbo) with a very strong Castle, built with the Kings leave at first, to secure their trading; but since used by them as a curb to hold him in with, and to compell him to pay tribute.

This Country first discovered to be an Iland by Onesicritus, Admiral of Alexanders Fleet, was in the time of Ptolomy inhabited by several Nations. The principal of which were the Galthi, and Muduttæ dwelling in the North, the Rhogandani, and Nanigiri in the South; the Sindocandæ in the West, and the Tarachi in the East; the middle parts being taken up by the Anurogrammi, Nagabdi, Soani, Semmi. But little or nothing is said of them in the way of story, but that they were good Mimicks, did imitate the tunes of Birds, and could speak to two at once, as if double-tongued; that they were very studious of Astrology, and worshipped the Sun and the Host of Heaven; that some of their Ambassadors coming to Rome, in the time of Claudius Cæsar, Solem à Læva oriri mirati sunt, &c. admired to see the Sun rise on the wrong side of them; and finally that the King was chosen by the people with respect had to his age and clemency; who being inthroned, appointed thirty Judges to administer Justice to the Subject, without the Major part of whom, sentence of death was to pass on no man. In following times this Monarchy (for such it was in the time of those Authors) was broken into many pieces: the Portugals finding nine Kings in it, at their first coming hither, all Homagers or Tributaries to the King of Colmuchi. After that this their chief King was wickedly murdered by his Barber, who drove the other Kings out of the Country, and for a while usurped the Monarchy to himself. Since which time, having once again recovered their Kingdoms, six of them (as I have somewhere read, but remember not where) put themselves under the protection of the Great Mogul, and became his Feudataries.

Neer hereunto on the Coasts of Malabar, are the Ilands which they call Maldivæ, many in number, but so called from the principal of them, as that from Maldiva, a noted and wel-traded Empery, where the King resideth: Not very plentifull of necessaries for the use of man, did not the Palm alone supply them in all other wants. Inhabited by an industrious and sober people, who make themselves long garments of Silk or Flax brought from other places, wherewith more modestly adorned than the rest of the Indians: and by their Fishing draw up shels of such mingled colours, that they serve amongst the Siametes instead of mony.

10. ILANDS of leſs note.

BEſides theſe Ilands repreſented to us by their ſeveral names, and ſome who have nothing but their names to take notice of; there be many thouſands of leſs note which we finde in groſs: theſe Indian Seas being ſo prodigiouſly full of Ilands, that it is almoſt impoſſible to believe there ſhould be ſuch multitudes; but utterly impoſſible to credit what is told us of them. Some of the moſt remarkable of them we have touched upon, as Acceſſories or Appurtenances to ſome greater Ilands. The reſt we ſhall preſent only in the general muſter, together with a taſt of ſome of thoſe ſtrange reports, with which ſome men have fouled their Papers, and abuſed their Readers. Of the Philippines, there are ſaid to be 11000. though but 40. of them in poſſeſſion of the King of Spain. More South, but over againſt China, is another frie of them, affirmed by Mariners to be no fewer than 7448. and (as if nature had delighted to diſport her ſelf by ſowing Ilands in theſe Seas) another Shoal of them about India, no fewer in number than 127000. all which laid together would make a Continent as large as three or four parts of Europe; and are ſtill groaning under the burthen of Heatheniſm. Theſe Ilands ſtand ſo nigh unto one another, that they ſeem not only to ſuch as are afar to be all but one firm Land; but whoſoever alſo paſſeth between them, may with his hands touch the boughs of the trees on the one ſide, and on the other. Of theſe and the other Indian Ilands, Travellers relate many incredible fables; viz. that here be hogs that have two teeth growing out of their ſnowts, and as many behind their ears, of a ſpan and a half long; a tree whoſe Weſtern part is rank poiſon; and the Eaſtern part an excellent preſervative againſt it. They tell us alſo of a Fruit, that whoſoever eateth, ſhall for the ſpace of 12. hours be out of his wits; and of a ſtone, on which whoſoever ſitteth, ſhall ſuddenly have a rupture in his body. We are told alſo that hereabouts are taken Tortoiſes of that bigneſs, that ten men might ſit and dine within one of the ſhells; And that there is a Tree, which all the day time hath not a flower on it, but within half an hour after Sun-ſet, is full of them. All huge and monſtrous lies, and not fit for credit. Galvano reporteth alſo, that in ſome of theſe Ilands there is a fruit, of which if a woman that is with child eat, her childe will preſently move; that there is a River plentifully ſtored with fiſh, whoſe water is yet ſo hot, that it doth immediatly ſcald off the skin of any beaſt that is caſt into it; that ſome of the men have tails; and moſt of their ſwine horns; that they have oyſters which they call Braſs, the ſhells whereof are of ſo large compaſs, that they Chriſten Children in them; that in the Sea there are ſtones which grow and increaſe like fiſh, of which the beſt Lime is made; that there is a bird called Monicodiata, which having no feet is in a continual motion: and that there is a hole in the back of the Cock, in which the Hen doth lay her eggs, and hatch her young ones. I bid no man to believe theſe Relations: for my part I ſay with Horace,

Quocunq; oſtendis mihi ſic, incredulus odi.
What ever thus thou tell'ſt me, I
Will always hate it as a lye.

And ſo much for theſe Eaſtern-Ilands.

An Advertiſement to the Reader touching the Errata of this part.

IN the firſt place the Reader is to be advertiſed that Fol. I have adventured to prove the Alamatha of Ptolomy to be the Chamath, or Hamath-Sobab, of the Holy Scriptures: The place ill pointed, but the judicious Reader will eaſily find out the ſcope and meaning. Yet if this ſhall not be approved of, I ſhould then think it to be that Elam or Helam, where David diſcomfited the Army of the Meſopotamians; mention whereof is made 2 Sam. 10. v. 16, 17. In the next place he is to know, that Fol. within the compaſs of five lines, the victory which Aſa King of Judah obtained againſt the numerous Army of Ethopians, is twice repeated: in the firſt place aſcribed to Jethir, in the next to Mareſha. But being that Scripture doth more clearly aſcribe it unto Mareſha, (though the other alſo hath good Authors) let that of Jethir be ſupplied in this manner following. 5. Jethir, or Jatthir, in the North Border of this Tribe, towards Eleutheropolis: a City antiently of the Levites, in S. Hieroms time called by the name of Jethira, and then repleniſhed altogether with Chriſtians; now nothing but the name remaining, 6. Mareſa, &c. And finally whereas Ajalon p. is placed in the Tribe of Ephraim, and page in the Tribes of Dan, the reaſon is, becauſe being ſituate in the Borders of both Tribes, it is by ſome writers aſcribed to Dan, and by others to Ephraim. The like may be alſo ſaid of Michpas, mentioned alſo in two Tribes according as it is diſpoſed on by ſeverall Authors.

COSMOGRAPHY,

The fourth Book.

PART. I.

CONTAINING THE CHOROGRAPHY and HISTORY OF AFRICK,

And all the principal Kingdoms, Provinces, Seas, and Isles thereof.

OF AFRICK.

AFRICK is bounded on the East by the Red-Sea, and Bay of Arabia, by which parted from Asia; on the West, by the main Atlantick Ocean, interposing betwixt it and America; on the North, by the Mediterranean Sea, which divides it from Europe and Anatolia: and on the South, with the Æthiopick Ocean, separating it from Terra Australis incognita, or the Southern Continent, Parted from all the rest of the World, except Asia only, to which joyned by a narrow Isthmus, not above 60. miles in length, and memorable for the great design which Cleopatra the last Queen of Egypt had upon it, which in brief was this. When Mark Anthony was encountred by Augustus in the Naval battel of Actium, Cleopatra fearing the success, fled through the midst of all his Fleet, with the 60. Gallies which were appointed for her guard. Being come to the North part of this Isthmus, she gathered together all her portable treasures, and intended to hoist her shipping out of the Mediterranean, and hale them over the Land to the Red-Sea: whence she had purposed to take sail, and together with her Sweet-heart Anthony, and some other choicest friends, to seek out some other place of dwelling far enough from the Romans. But from this, Anthony, who fled after her, and vainly hoped for a change of fortunes, did at last dissuade her.

The Form hereof is like a Pyramis reversed; the Basis of which, from Tanger on the Streit of Gibraltar, to the point where it joyneth unto Asia, is reckoned at the breadth of 1920. Italian miles, the Conus of it very narrow. But from the Conus or Pyris to the most Northern part of the Basis, it extendeth it self the space of 4155. miles, being much less then Asia, and far bigger then Europe.

By the Grecians it is called most commonly Libya, (of which more hereafter) part of it taken for the whole: by the Æthiopians, Alkebu lam; by the Indians, Besecath. But the most noted name thereof is Africa, which Iosephus out of Cleodenus and Polyhistor, deriveth from Epher or Apher, one of the Nephews of Abraham, by Midian the son of Keturah. The Arabians, by whom it is called Ifriche, derive it from the Verb Faruch, signifying to divide; because more visibly divided both from from their own Country, & the reſt of the World, then any other part thereof which was known unto them. Some of the Greek Fablers fetch it from one Afer, a Companion of Hercules, whom he attended unto Spain; Some fetch it out of Aphar, an Hebrew word, ſignifying Duſt, agreeable to its ſandy and duſty ſoyl: Feſtus an old Grammarian, from A Privativum, and the Greek word φρίκη, which imports a Country void of cold, as ſuitable to the fiery temper of the Aire. By Bochartus, who brings all from the old Phœnician, it is ſaid to be derived from Peruc, Spica, an Ear of corn; which mollified into Feric, came at laſt to Africa, that is to ſay, a Country plentifull in Corn. Which Etymologie of his may receive ſome countenance, from that great plenty of Corn, which was bred in this Country: eſpecially in thoſe parts hereof which the Romans called the Proper Africk, whereof we ſhall ſpeak more when we come to Barbary: the whole Continent taking from that Province the name of Africk. But in my mind, (if that from the Hebrew Epher or Aqhar, be not worth accepting) I ſhould prefer the Etymon of Feſtus before any other: unleſſe we might be ſure that Carthage antiently was called Africa, as Sudias telleth us it was; for then without all peradventure we would ſeek no further. For other more particular names by which it hath been called in ſome elder writers, i.e. Olympia, Oceanica, Eſchatica, Coryphe, Ammonis, Heſperia, Ortygia, and perhaps ſome others; it is enough to our deſign to take notice of them.

It is ſituate for the moſt part under the Torrid Zone, the Æquator croſſing it almoſt in the very midſt: and for that cauſe ſuppoſed by many of the Ancients not to be inhabited at all, or but very thinly, in the middle and more Southern parts of it; or if at all, with ſuch ſtrange people, as hardly did deſerve to be counted men. Pomponius among others was of this opinion, gueſſing the inward parts thereof to be taken up by ſuch ſtrange Brutes, as the Cynophanes, who had heads like dogs; 2. The Sciapodæ, who with the ſhadow of their Foot, could and did uſe to hide themſelves from the heats of the Sun; 3. The Gamoſaphantes, a naked people, ignorant of the uſe of weapons, and therefore fearfully avoiding the ſight of men; 4. The Blemmyæ, who being without heads, had their eyes and mouths in their breaſts; 5. The Æypani, who had no other humane quality to declare them to be men, but the ſhape and making of their bodies. Theſe people (as they thought) poſſeſſed ſome ſmall portion of the mid-land parts of this great Country; the reſt they know not, or conceived to be unhabitable, in regard of the great heats thereof. But late diſcoveries and navigations have found the contrary; the Country proving in moſt parts to be well inhabited; and the coolneſs of the nights, by miſts, dews, and gentle gales of wind, to mitigate the heat of the day.

Quodq; die Solis vehementi excanduit æſtu,
Humida nox reficit, paribuſq; refrigerat horis.
That is to ſay.
What the Sun burns by day, the Night renews.
And doth as much refreſh with moyſtning dews.

For notwithſtanding that it be in ſome places full of ſandy deſarts, a diſeaſe incident to ſome parts of Arabia, Perſia, and other Countries of a more Northernly ſituation: yet it is ſaid by ſome, who ſpeak it upon knowledge, that the greateſt part of thoſe Regions which lie under the Line or near it, (both in America and here) have ſo many goodly Fountains, Rivers, and little Brooks, ſuch abundance of Cedars and other ſtately Trees of ſhade, ſo many ſorts of delicate Fruits ever bearing and at all times beautified with bloſſoms; as may make them hold compariſon with any others, ſuppoſed to be of a more temperate ſituation.

But as was ſaid before, the Ancients knew not much of this Country, and therefore ſpoke upon conjecture, or more doubtful hear-ſay. For though Hanno a noble Carthaginian, imployed by that State, diſcovered much of the Weſtern Shores of this great Peninſula, yet he ventured not much into the Land: nor did his Journal (either ſuppreſſed by the Romans, or not much took notice of) give any great light to other Nations to purſue thoſe Voyages; being writ in the Carthagian tongue, but ſince tranſlated into Greek, and publiſhed at Baſil by Sigiſmund Gelenius, Anno 1533. As little credit did it find in former times, that ſome Phœnicians in the dayes of Pharao Neco, paſſing down the Read Sea, ſhould ſail about the Coaſts of Africk to the Streits of Gibraltar; and ſo return again to Egypt by the Mediterranean; as we find in Herodotus, that they did. But what thoſe Ages diſbelieved or eſteemed impoſſible, is now grown ordinary; the Circumnavigations about this Country being very frequent, ſince firſt performed by Vaſques de Gama, an Adventurous Portugal, in the year Anno 1497. being 80 years after or thereabouts, from the time that the Portugals firſt attempted the diſcovery and circumnavigation of the coaſts of Africk, which at the laſt, to the no ſmall glory of their Nation, was accompliſhed by them. For ſo it happened that having extended their Dominions as far as they could upon the Continent of Spain; and having withall a large Sea-coaſt, and fit for ſhiping, they turned their Forcer on the Moors, which dwelled in Africk, from whom they took many of their beſt towns which lay along upon the ſhores of the main Atlantick. Encouraged by this good ſucceſs Henry Duke of Viſeo, one of the younger Sons of King John the firſt, reſolved to ſpend his purſe and credit upon new diſcoveries. And to that purpoſe, having had ſome conference with men of knowledge and experience in Coſmographie, he draweth together the beſt men of Action, both in Spain and Italy. By their means and his own good fortune he firſt diſcovers the Iſle of Madera, Anno 1420. The Iſle of Holy-Port, Anno 1428. The Iſlands of Cape Verd, Anno 1440. the maritine parts of the Land of Guinea, Anno 1452. which fair foundations being layed, and the way opened to thoſe great diſcoveries, which after followed that glorious Prince deceaſed in a good old Age, Anno 1463. leaving this Character behinde him, that he was the firſt that made the Portugals in love with the Sea; diſcontinued after his decease above 20 years, it was resumed again by King John, the second of that name, who by the conduct of Diego Con, Anno 1486. discovered the Realms of Angola, and Congo, with the Isle of St. George, and thereupon resolves in the next year following to try his fortunes for compassing the whole Coasts of Africk, thereby to finde a way to the wealth of India, in which he employed Captain Bartholomew Diaz, who passing beyond Cape Verd, discovered first the Princes Island, and sailing from thence Southward to the furthest Promontory (since called the Cape of Good Hope) returned home again; either discouraged by cross winds, or unruly Seas, or the untractableness of his Mariners, or by altogether. The man to whom the honour of this enterprize was reserved, was that Vasques de Gama above mentioned, employed in this service by King Emanuel, Anno 1597. who having in his way, discovered the Ilands of St. James, and St. Hellens, and after doubled that terrible Cape, which Bartholomew De Diaz durst not pass, gave it the name of Cabo di Buena esperonza, or the Cape of good Hope, because of the good hope it gave him of finding the desired way to the trade of India, and having so doubled this Cape, and got Africk on the left hand of him, he kept his course on towards the North, till he discovered the Countries of Quiloa, Mosambique, Mombaza, and Melinde, with the King of which last he contracted an especiall friendship, and by his favours and directions, found the Port of Caliculo in East India, from whence with infinite joy and honour, he returned to Lisbone, Anno 1500. The design followed the next year by Alvarez Capralde, furnished with 12 ships and 1500 Souldiers, but he being lost upon the Coasts of Brasil, and diverting wholly in a manner, on the discovery of that large Country it was pursued the next year with greater strength, by Vasques and his Brother Stephan afterwards by Ferdinand de Almedu, and Alphonso de Albuguerque, and divers others of that Nation, and finally by the English, Hollanders, Merchants of almost every Country which have any trade upon the Ocean. By means whereof the latter Ages are better instructed in the particulars of it, than the former were; who knew not much beyond the limits of the Roman Empire and some parts adjoyning upon Egypt: more then the strange Beasts, and more strange Reports which they had from hence; occasioning hereby the By-word, Africa semper aliquid apportat novi.

Touching the State of Christianity in this great Continent, it is very weak; most of those Regions which Christian Religion had once gained from Idolatry, Mahometanism having since regained from Christianity: Insomuch that not only the North part of Afric near the Mediterranean, from Spain to Egypt, where the Gospel once so exceedingly flourished; that three hundred Catholick Bishops were at one time banished thence by Gensericus King of the Vandals; is at this present utterly void of Christians, (except some few Towns belonging to the King of Spain): but even in all this vast Country, thrice as big as Europe, there is not any one Region entirely Christian, but the Kingdom of Habassia only, and perhaps not that; none where the Christians are intermingled with Mahometans, but only Egypt; nor where mingled with Idolaters, but in Congo and Angola, and some few Towns upon those Coasts in the hands of the Portugals. So little benefit have those Nations gotten by our late Discoveries; it being Gain, not Godlinesse, which the Merchant aims at.

The Nations inhabiting this Country, or dispersed in it, may be reduced to Africans properly so called, Egyptians, Habassines, Arabians, Jews, and some Europæan Christians: the Europæan Christians only in their Forts and Garrisons; the Jews in all the good Towns, where Trade is stirring; the Arabians chiefly on the Sea-coasts bordering on the Red-Sea; but wandering in great herds or companies all about the Country with their wives and children: the Habassines and Egyptians, in their severall Kingdoms: The Africans again subdivided into Moors, and Caferes: of which the Moors are wholly under the Law of Mahomet; the Caferes dwelling in the inland and more Southern parts, not discovered anciently, in their wonted Gentilism. Accordingly, the Languages herein spoken are different also; The Portugal or Spanish being used by the Europæans; 2. The Chaldee or Syriack by the Jewes; 3. The Arabick, by those of that Nation, and in all Barbary except Morocco only; 4. The Habassine, and 5. The Egyptian, in those Kingdoms: 6. That called Aquel-amarig, or the Noble language, supposed to be the natural and original language of the Roman Africans, intermixt with some Arabian words, and spoken generally in Morocco, and so amongst some of the inhabitants of Barbary, nearest to Mount Atlas: 7. That named Sungai, used in Tombutum, Guinea, and others of the people of the Land of Negroes; and 8. That called Gubeo, spoke by those of Æthiopia inferior, and such of the Land of Negroes as lie next unto it.

In reference to the State of the Roman Empire, it contained only the Dioceses of Egypt, Africk, and part of the Diocese of Spain. The Diocese of Egypt subdivided into the Provinces of, 1. Lybia superior, 2. Libya inferior, 3. Thebais, 4. Augustanica, 5. Arcadia, and 6. Ægyptus especially so called; distinguished by other names in the Nicene Council: That of Africk, into Tripolitana, 2. Byzacena, 3. Zeugitana, 4. Numidia, 5. Mauritania Cæsariensis, 6. and Mauritania Sitifensis; the other part of Mauritania, called Tingitana, being laid to the Diocese of Spain. The rest of this Peninsula, as they never conquered, so it never was much taken into consideration. But being more perfectly discovered now then in former times, (though not so perfectly as that I can be able to promise an exact accompt of it) it is divided commonly into these seven parts; 1. Egypt, 2. Barbary or the Roman Africk, 3. Numidia, 4. Libya, neither of which the same with those of the antient Romans; 5. Terra Nigritarum, 6. Æthiopia Superior, and 7. Æthiopia inferior. Such of the Islands as do properly belong unto any of these, shall make up the eighth. In the Descriptions whereof we will follow the Method of Plautanus, and begin with Egypt; as being peopled and possessed before all the residue.

OF EGYPT.

EGYPT is bounded on the East with Idumæa, and the Bay of Arabia; on the West with Barbary, Numidia, and part of Libya; on the North, with the Mediterranean Sea; on the South with Æthiopia Superior, or the Abassine Empire.

This Country in the holy Scriptures is called Misraim, from Misraim the son of Chus, and grandson of Cham, by whom first planted after the flood; the footsteps of which name do remain amongst the Arabians, who still call it Misre. Named in the same regard in the Book of Psalms, the Land of Ham: a name retained in some of the sacred offices of the old Egyptians, where (as Plutarch witnesseth) it was called Chemia; for Chamia no doubt, as that from Cham or Ham, the first stock of their nation. In Prophane Authors it hath had the several names of 1. Aeria, from the serenity of the Air, which is never clouded; 2. Potamia, from the propinquity of the Sea, washing two sides of it; 3. Ogygia, from Ogyges a supposed King thereof; 4. Melampodus, from the black colour of the soil; 5. Osiria, from their God Osiris, here in high esteem: 6. and finally, it was called Ægyptus, which in the end prevailed over all the rest, either from Ægyptus the Brother of Danaus once King hereof, (in the stories of this Nation better known by the name of Rameses); or from Ægyptus the old name of the River Nilus, by whose annual overflowings made both rich and famous; and of the soil and rubbish which that River brought with it from the higher Countries, it was by some supposed to have been raised into firm land, and gained out of the Sea. Called therefore in some Writers by the name of Nili donum, or the gift of Nilus. Yet some there be who would have it called Ægyptus for Aiguphus, and that derived from Ai, and Coptus, which signifieth the Land or Country of Coptus; that being supposed to have been antiently the chief City of it. And some again will have the name derived from Chicth, by which the Ægyptians call themselves to this very day.

It containeth in length from the Mediterranean to the City of Asna, or Syene, bordering on Æthiopia, 562 Italian miles: in breadth (exclusively of Cyrene and Libya) from Rosetta unto Damiata, or from the most Westerly Branch of Nilus to the farthest East, 160 of the same miles; to which the adding of those two Provinces, make a great accession: Situate under the second and fift Climates, so that the longest day in summer is but 13 hours and an half.

By reason of this Southernly situation of it, the Air is here very hot and offensive; so that to avoid the insupportable heats thereof, and to have the benefit of some fresh wind, the Inhabitants are accustomed to build high Towers in all their Towns, on which they use to solace and refresh themselves. The soyl made fruitful by the overflowings of Nilus, (whereof more anon) is so exceeding plentifull of all sorts of Grain, that it was called Horreum populi Romani, the Granari or Store-house of the People of Rome: which City it did annually furnish with four months provision; insomuch that it was said by Plinie, that the greatness of the Roman Empire could not long continue without the corn and wealth of Egypt, the plenty or famine of that City depending wholly on this Country. It aboundsalso with rich Pastures, in which they feed great store of Camels, Horses, Asses, Oxen, Sheep, and Goats, greater of growth then usually in most places else; and by reason of the moorishness of the Country, they have great store of Fowls. Of Poultry they have also good numbers about their houses, hatched in a different manner from all other Countries, not by the sitting of the Hen, but the heat of Furnaces, or Ovens; in which their eggs are orderly laid in dung, and by a gentle heat brought to animation. It is also liberally furnished with great plenty of Mettals, some precious Stones, good Wines, and the choicest Fruits, as Limons, Orenges, Pomgranets, Citrons, Figs, Cherries, and such as these, excellent both for tast and colour. Of Palm-trees also great abundance; of which though we have spoke before, yet we shall here more fully declare the nature and strange properties of them. They grow in couples, Male and Female, both thrust forth Cods full of seed, but the Female is only fruitfull, and that not except growing by the Male, and having his seeds mixt with hers. The pith of these Trees is an excellent Sallad, better than an Hartichoke, which in tast it very much resembleth. Of the branches they make Bedsteads, Latices, &c. of the leaves, Baskets, Mats, Fans, &c. of the outward husk of the Cod, Cordage; of the inner, Brushes. The fruit it bears, best known by the name of Dates, are in tast like Figs: and finally, it is said to yield whatsoever is necessary to the life of Man. It is the nature of this Tree, though never so ponderous a weight were put upon it, not to yield to the burden; but still to resist the heavinesse of it, and to endeavour to lift and raise it self the more upwards. For this cause planted in Church-yards in the Eastern Countries, as an Embleme of the Resurrection: instead whereof we use the Ewe-tree in these cold Regions. For the same reason, given to Conquerours as a token of Victory; it being the Embleme of Hieroglyphick of a Souldiers life. Hence figuratively used for precedency, as, Huic equidem consilio palmam do, in Terence; sometimes for the Victory it self; as Non auferent tamen hanc palmam, in Plinie; & plurimarum palmarum homo, for a man that had won many prizes in the Feuce-School, as in Tully, pro Roscio: more naturally for the sign of Victory, as in that of Horace,

The

The People, though the Countrie lie in the ſame Clime with Barbarie, are not black, but tawnie, or Olive-coloured, affirmed by Pomponius Mela to weep and mourn over the bodies of their dead; daubed over with dung; to have held it a great impiety to burn or bury them, but having imbalmed them to lay them in ſome inward room of their Houſes: the men to keep themſelves at home, for the houſhould buſineſſes, the women to follow merchandiſe and affaires abroad; the men to carry burdens upon their heads, and the women theirs upon their ſhoulders: Antipodes in theſe laſt to moſt other Nations. But certainly they were a witty and ingenious People, the firſt Inventers of Geometry, Arithmetick, Phyſick, as alſo of Aſtronomy, Necromancy, and Sorcery. They firſt taught the uſe of Letters to the neighbouring Phœnicians, by them imparted to the Greeks. Accuſtomed at the firſt to expreſs their conceits in the ſhape of Birds, Beaſts, Trees, &c. which they termed Hieroglyphicks; of which two or three Examples out of Orus will not be impertinent. For Eternity they pained the Sun and Moon, as things which they believed to have had no beginning, nor were likely to have any end: for a Year, they painted a ſnake, with his tail in his mouth, to ſhew how one year ſucceeding another, kept the World ſtill in an endleſs circle. For a moneth, they painted a Palm-tree, becauſe at every new Moon, it ſendeth forth a new branch. For God, they painted a Falcon; as well for that he ſoared ſo high, as that he governeth the leſſer birds. For integrity of life, they painted fire and water, both becauſe theſe Elements are in themſelves moſt pure, and becauſe all other things are purified by them. For any thing that was abominable to the Gods, they painted a Fiſh, becauſe in their Sacrifices the Prieſts never uſed them; and the like. From this manner of expreſſing ones ſelf, the invention of Letters is thought to have had its original (though learnt by them no queſtion of the children of Iſrael, when they lived amongſt them:) the Hiſtory whereof, take briefly and word for word, out of Tacitus. Primi per formas animalium Ægyptii, &c. The Egyptians firſt of all expreſſed the conceptions of the minde, by the ſhapes of beaſts; and the moſt ancient monuments of mans memory, are ſeen graven in ſtones; and they ſay, that they are the firſt inventers of Letters. Then the Phœnicians, becauſe they were ſtrong at Sea, brought them into Greece; and ſo they had the glory of that, which they received from others: For there goeth a report, that Cadmus ſailing thither in a Phœnician ſhip, was the Inventer of that Art among the Greeks, when they were yet unexpert and rude. Some report that Cecrops the Athenian, or Livius the Theban, and Palamedes the Grecian, did finde out ſixteen Characters at the time of the Trojan War; and that afterward Simonides added the reſt. But in Italy the Etrurians learned them of Demaratus the Corinthian; and the Aborigines, of Evander the Arcadian. So far Tacitus. That the Phœnicians were the firſt inventers of Letters, I dare not affirm; and as backward am I to refer the glory hereof to the Egyptians; for certainly the Hebrews were herein skilled before either: yet that the Phœnicians were herein School-maſters to the Greeks, I think I may with ſafety maintain, having Lucan in conſent with Tacitus.

Phœnices primi (fama ſi creditur) auſi

Phœnicians firſt (if fame may credit have)
Dar'd in rude Characters our words ingrave.

Of this minde alſo is Iſidore of Sevill in the firſt book of Originations, who alſo addeth, that for that cauſe the Fronts of Books, and the Titles of Chapters were written in red letters, as it is by ſome ſtill in uſe. Hinc eſt quod & Phœniceo colore librorum capita deſcribantur, quia ab ipſis literæ initium habuere; cap. 3. As for theſe leſs vulgar Letters, which the Latines call Cyphræ, and whereof every exerciſed Stateſman have peculiar to himſelf; they were firſt invented by Julius Cæſar, when he firſt began to think of the Roman Monarchy: and were uſed by him in his Letters to his more private and tryed friends, that if by misfortune they ſhould be intercepted, the contents of them ſhould not be underſtood; ὅπως ἄγνωστα τοῖς πολλοῖς τὰ γραφόμενα, ne obvia literarum lectio cuivis eſſet. Auguſtus one of the greateſt Politicians of the World, had another kinde of obſcure writing; for in his Letters of more ſecrecy and importance, he always uſed τὸ πρότερον ἀεὶ στοιχεῖον, to put the letter immediatly following in the order of the Alphabet, for that which in ordinary writing he ſhould have uſed. As for Brachigraphie, or the Art of writing by ſhort Characters, ſo uſefull for the taking of a Speech or Sermon as it is ſpoken: I finde in Dion, that Mœcenas that great favourite of Auguſtus Cæſar, and favourer of Learning, did firſt invent them, ad celeritatem ſcribendi, for the ſpeedier diſpatch of writing; ᾧ πρῶτῳ σημεῖα γραμμάτων τινὰ (they are the every words of my Author) πρὸς τάχος ἐξεῦρε. Iſidor in the ſecond Chapter of his book above mentioned, aſcribeth it to Aquila, the Libertus or freed man of his Mœcenas; and to Tertius Perſannius, and Philargius, who added to this invention. Yet had all they their chief light in it from Tullius Tito, a freed man of Cicero's; who had undertaken and compaſſed it in the Prepoſitions, but went no further. At the laſt it was perfected by Seneca, who brought this Art into order and method; the whole volume of his contractions conſiſting of 5000 words. Deinde Seneca contracto omnium, digeſtoque & aucto numero, opus effecit in quinque millia. But now I make haſt to take a ſurvey of theſe Egyptians as they ſtand at the preſent, much differing from the ingenuity and abilities of their Predeceſſors

For ſuch as have obſerved the nature of the Modern Egyptians, affirm them to have much degenerated from the worth of their Anceſtors; prone to innovations, devoted to luxury, cowardly, cruel, addicted naturally to caviſl, and to detract from whatſoever is good and eminent. In their dealing with other men more obſervant than faithfull, of a wit much inclining to craftineſs, and very eager on their profit:

Of perſon, of a mean ſtature, tawnie of complexion, and ſpare of body, but active and quick of foot. Such as inhabit in the Cities, apply themſelves to merchandiſe; grow rich by Trading, reaſonably well habited, and not much differing from the Turks in their dreſs and Faſhion. Thoſe in the Country, who betake themſelves to Husbandry, affirmed to be a ſavage and naſty People, cruſted over with dirt, and ſtinking of ſmoak; fit company for none but thoſe of their own condition. Nothing now left amongſt them of the Arts of their Anceſtors, but an affectation which they have unto Divinations; to Fortune-telling great pretenders: by which, and by ſome cheating-tricks in which very well practiſed, great numbers of them wander from one place to another, and ſo get their livelyhood; occaſioning the vagabonds and ſtraglers of other Nations, who pretend unto the ſame falſe Arts, to aſſume their names. The whole body of the Inhabitants now an Hochpot or medley of many Nations, Moors, Arabians, Turks, the natural Egyptian making up the leaſt part of the reckoning.

The women of the ſame complexion with the men, but well formed and featured, did they not too much affect a ſeeming corpulency; which if they cannot get in fleſh, they will have in cloaths. Very fruitfull in child-bearing, and quick of diſpatch when they are in labour: ſome of them having three or four children at a Birth; thoſe that are born in the eighth moneth living to good Age, and not in danger of death, as in other Countries. Such of them as dwell in Cities, cover their faces with black Cypres beſpotted with red; their armes, and ancles garniſhed with bracelets and hoops of gold, ſilver, or ſome other Metal. Thoſe in the Country, for a vail, uſe ſome dirty clout, having holes onely for their eyes, which little is too much to ſee and abſtain from loathing. Both in the City and the Country, contrary to the cuſtom in all places elſe, the women uſe to make water ſtanding, and the men couring on their knees.

The old Egyptians were ſo eminent in Arts and Learning, that from them Pythagoras, and Democritus learnt their Philoſophy; Lycurgus, Solon, and Plato, their Forms of Government. Orpheus, and Homer, their Poetical fictions of the Gods. Particularly, here flouriſhed Ariſtarchus that famous and learned Grammarian; 2. Herodian, a diligent Student and ſearcher into curious Arts; 3. Ammonius, the Maſter of Plotinus; 4. Didymus, ſurnamed Chalcenteros, for his indefatigable induſtry in ſeveral Sciences; 5. Manethon, an old Hiſtorian, of whom we have nothing but ſome fragments; 6. Appianus, an Hiſtorian of a later date, whoſe works are extant, 7. Didymus the Grammarian, 8. Cl. Ptolomæus, the Geographer; 9 Achilles Statius the Poet; 10. And before all, the profound Philoſopher Mercurius, ſirnamed Triſmegiſtus. And after their converſion to the faith of Chriſt, 1. Pantænus the firſt Reader of Divinitie in the Schools of Alexandria; 2. Origen and 3. Clemens Alexandrinus, both skilled in the univerſality of Learning; 4. Dionyſius; 5. Athanaſius, and 6. Cyril; all three Biſhops of Alexandria, and the glories of their ſeverall times. Now nothing but ignorance and Barbariſm to be found amongſt them.

The Chriſtian faith was firſt here planted by S. Mark, whom all Antiquity make h the firſt Biſhop of Alexandria. His ſucceſſors, till the time of Heraclus and Dionyſius, choſen continually out of the Presbyterie or Cathedral-Clergie; afterwards out of the Clergie at large. Their Juriſdiction ſetled by a Canon of the Council of Nice, over all the Churches in the whole Dioceſs of Egypt, (taking the word Dioceſs in the Civil notion) containing Libya, Pentapolis and Egypt ſpecially ſo called: to which, though Epiphanius addes Thebais, Maræotica, and Ammoniaca, yet he addes nothing in effect; Thebais, and Maræotica being parts of Egypt, as Ammoniaca was of Libya. Afterwards the Æthiopian or Abaſſine Churches became ſubject to this Patriarch alſo, and do acknowledge to this day ſome relation to him. By the coming in of the Saracens, and the ſubjugation of this Countrey, Chriſtianity fell here into great decay; languiſhing ſo ſenſibly ſince thoſe times, eſpecially ſince the conqueſt of it by the Turks: that whereas Brochardus in his time reckoned three hundred thouſand Chriſtians; in the laſt eſtimate which was made of them, they were found to be but fifty thouſand. This ſmall remainder of them, commonly called Cophti, either from the Greek word κόπτω, ſcindo, becauſe they retained the uſe of Circumciſion with their Chriſtianity; or from Coptus a chief Town in Egypt, in which many of them did reſide; or finally by abbreviation from Ægopthi, corrupted from Ægyptii, their own National name. They are all Jacobites in Sect, from whom they differ notwithſtanding in ſome particulars, in ſome from all other Chriſtians Churches, in many from the Church of Rome. The points moſt proper to them, 1. Uſing Circumciſion with their Baptiſm, but rather as a National than Religions cuſtome; though in that ſenſe alſo laid aſide, as is ſaid by ſome, by the perſwaſion of ſome Legates from the Pope of Rome, in a Synod held in Caire, An. 1583. 2*ly*. Conferring all ſacred Orders under the Prieſthood, on Infants immediately after Baptiſm; their Parents, till they come to ſixteen years of age, performing what they promiſed in their behalf, viz. Chaſtitie, faſting on Wedneſday and Friday, and the four Lents of the year. 3*ly*. Reputing Baptiſm not to be of any efficacie, except miniſtred by the Prieſt, in the open Church, in what extremity ſoever: 4*ly*. And yet not baptizing any Children till the fortieth day, though they die in the interim. 5*ly*. Giving to Infants the Sacrament of the Euchariſt, aſſoon as Chriſtened; 6. Contracting marriages even in the ſecond Degree or Conſanguinitie, without diſpenſation; 7. Obſerving not the Lords day, nor any of the Feſtivals, except onely in Cities; 8*ly*. And in their Liturgies, reading the Goſpel written by Nicodemus. The points wherein they differ from the Church of Rome, 1. Adminiſtring the Sacrament of the Lords Supper under both kinds; 2*ly*. Adminiſtring in leavened bread; 3*ly*. Admitting neither Extreme unction, nor the uſe of the Euchariſt, to thoſe that are ſick; 4*ly*. Nor Purgatory, nor Prayer for the dead, 5*ly*. Not uſing Elevation in the act of Adminiſtring; And 6. Reckoning the Roman Church for Heretical, and eſteeming no better of the Latines than they do of the Jewes. In theſe opinions they continue hitherto againſt all Opponents and perſwaſions? For though Baronius in the end of the ſixth Tome of his Annals, hath regiſtred an Ambaſſage from Marcus, the then Patriarch of Alexandria, to Pope Clement the 8; wherein he is ſaid to have have ſubmitted himſelf and the Churches of Egypt to the Pope of Rome: yet upon further ſearch made, it was found but a Cheat, deviſed to hold up the reputation of a ſinking cauſe. The Patriarch of Alexandria ſtill adhereth to his own Authority; though many of late, by the practiſe and ſolicitation of ſome buſie Friars, have been drawn to be of the Religion of the Church of Rome, and to uſe her Liturgies.

What their Religion was before Chriſtianity, is obvious to the eye of a vulgar Reader; even the worſt of Gentiliſm; theſe People not onely worſhipping the Sun, Moon, and the Stars of Heaven, creatures of greateſt uſe and glory; nor onely ſacrificing to Jupiter, Hercules, Apollo, and the reſt of the Gods, (many of whom were Authors in their ſeveral times of ſome publike benefit to mankind) as did other Gentiles; but attributing Divine honours to Crocodiles, Snakes, Serpents, Garlick, Leeks and Onions. For which, as worthily condemned by the Chriſtian Fathers; ſo moſt deſervedly expoſed unto publick ſcorn, by the pens of the Poets.

Porrum & cæpe nefas violare, & 'ladere morſu.
Felices populi, quibus hæc naſcuntur in Hortis
Numina. —— Quis neſcit qualia demens
Ægyptus portenta colat, &c.

Which may be rendred to this purpoſe.

To bite an Onion or a Leek, is more Than deadly ſinne. The Numen they adore
Growes in their Gardens. And who doth not know What monſtrous Shapes for Gods in Egypt go?

But the God moſt eſteemed by them, and by all ſorts of the Egyptians the moſt adored, was Apis, a coal-black Oxe, with a white ſtar in his forehead, the Effigies of an Eagle on his back, and two hairs onely in his tail. But it ſeemeth his Godſhip was not ſo much reſpected by Strangers. For Cambyſes when he conquered Egypt, ran him with his ſword thorow the thigh, and cauſed all his Prieſts to be ſcourged: And Auguſtus being here, would not vouchſafe to ſee him, ſaying, Θεὸς ἀλλ' ἔχι σὺς προσκυνῶν εἰθίζω, that the Gods and not the Oxen of Egypt were the object of his devotions. A ſpeech moſt truly worthy ſo brave an Emperour.

Among the Ratities of his Country, ſome were the works of nature, and ſome of induſtry and magnificence. Of this laſt kinde I reckon the Labyrinth, the Pyramides, and the Pharos; all of them admirable in their ſeveral kindes, the envy of the Ages paſt, and the aſtoniſhment of the preſent. Of the Labyrinth we ſhall ſpeak anon, in the courſe of our buſineſs. Look we now on the Pyramides, many in number, three moſt celebrated, and one the principal of all; ſituate on the South of the City of Memphis, and on the Weſtern banks of Nilus. This laſt, the chief of the Worlds ſeven wonders, ſquare at the bottom, is ſuppoſed to take up eight acres of ground. Every ſquare 300. ſingle paces in length, aſcended by 255. ſteps, each ſtep above three Foot high, and a breadth proportionable; growing by degrees narrower and narrower till we come to the top, and at the top conſiſting but of three ſtones onely, yet large enough for 60. men to ſtand upon. No ſtone ſo little in the whole as to be drawn by any of our Carriages, yet brought thither from the Arabian Mountains. How brought, and by what Engine mounted, is an equal wonder. Built for the Sepulchre of Cheops, an Egyptian King (as were the reſt for others of thoſe mighty Princes) who imployed in it day by day twenty yeers together, no fewer than 366000. men continually working on it. The charges which they put him to, in no other food than Garlick, Radiſhes, and Onions, being computed at a thouſand and eight hundred Talents. The next to this in bulk and beauty, is ſaid to be the work of a daughter of Cheops, enabled (as Herodotus writeth) both to finiſh her Fathers undertaking, and raiſe her own unto the height, by the proſtitution of her body, requiring but one ſtone towards the Work from each one of her Cuſtomers; but the tale unlikely. Nor is it of a greater Truth, though affirmed by Joſephus, and ſuppoſed by many good Divines, that the drudgery put upon the Iſraelites did concern theſe Pyramides: the Materials of theſe works being ſtone; their imployment, brick? But paſt all doubt, advanced by thoſe conſiderate Princes upon good advice, and not for oſtentation onely of their power and glories. For by this means they did not onely eternize their memory to ſucceeding Ages, but for the preſent kept the Subject from ſloth and idleneſs; who being a People prone unto Innovations, were otherwiſe like enough to have fed that ſin in the change of Government, if not thus prudently diverted.

Next theſe Pyramides, I place the Iſle and Tower of Pharos, the Iſland oppoſite unto Alexandria, once a mile diſtant from the Land, but joyned to the Continent by Cleopatra, on this occaſion. The Rhodians, then Lords of the Sea, uſed to exact ſome tribute or acknowledgement out of every Iſland within thoſe Seas; and conſequently out of this. Their Ambaſſadors ſent unto Cleopatra to demand this tribute, ſhe detained with her ſeven days, under colour of celebrating ſome ſolemn Feſtivals; and in the mean time, by making huge dams and banks in the Sea, with incredible both charge and ſpeed, united the Iſland to the ſhore, Which finiſhed, ſhe ſent the Rhodians away empty handed, with this witty jeere, telling them that they were to take Toll of the Iſlands, and not of the Continent. A work of great rarity and magnificence, both for the bigneſs of it, taking up ſeven Furlongs of ground, and for that cauſe called Heptaſtadium; and that incredible ſpeed, wherewith it was finiſhed. As for the Watch-Tower, called in Greek and Latine Pharos, by the name of the Iſland; it was built by Ptolomy Philadelphus, for the benefit of Sailors, (the Seas upon that coaſt being very unſafe and full of Flats) to guide them over the Bar of Alexandria. Deſervedly eſteemed another of the Worlds ſeven Wonders: the other five being 1. the Mauſoleum, 2. the Temple of Epheſus, 3. the Walls of Babylon, 4. the Coloſſus of Rhodes, and 5. the Statue of Jupiter Olympicus. This Watch-tower, or Pharos, was of wonderfull height, aſcended by degrees, and having many Lanthorns at the top, wherein lights burned nightly, as a direction to ſuch as ſailed by Sea. The Materials were white marble; the cheif Architect, Soſtratus of Gnidos, who ingraved on the work this inſcription, Soſtratus of Gnidos, the ſon of Dexiphanes, to the Gods protecters, for the ſafeguard of Sailers. This inſcription he covered with plaiſter, and thereon ingraved the name and title of the King, the Founder: to the end that the Kings name being ſoon waſted and waſhed away, his own, which was written in marble, might be eternized to poſterity, as the Founder of it. Nigh unto this Pharos, Cæſar purſuing Pompey into Egypt, and having diſcontented the King thereof, by demanding pay for his Souldiers, had his Navy which here lay at anchor, aſſaulted by Achilles, one of young Ptolomies ſervants, Cæſar himſelf being then in Alexandria. Hearing of the skirmiſh he haſted to the Pharos, meaning to ſuccour his Navy in perſon: but the Egyptians making towards him on all ſides, he was compelled to leap into the Sea, and ſwim for his life. And though (to avoid their Darts) he ſometimes ducked; yet held he ſtill his left hand above the water, and in it divers Books, which he carried ſafe unto his ſhips; and animating his men, got the victory. It is ſaid that Egypt hath onely two doors, the one by land, which is the ſtrong Town of Peleuſium, or Damiata; the other by water, which is this Pharus: Tota Ægyptus maritimo acceſſu, Pharo; pedeſtre vero, Peluſio, velut clauſtris munita exiſtimatur, ſaith Oppius.

Amongſt the rarities of Nature, we may reckon theſe ſtrange Beaſts and Fiſhes, proper almoſt unto this Countrey, i. e. the Crocodile, the Ichneumon, the Hippopotamus (or Sea-horſe) the Ibis, the Aſpe, and many ſeverall ſorts of Serpents. To ſpeak of which particularly were a work more proper to a Natural Hiſtory, then a Geographical. And yet the Crocodile, more proper unto Egypt then all the reſt, cannot be parted with in ſilence; A creature of a ſtrange nature, hatched of an egg no bigger then that of a Turkie; and yet increaſing to the length of thirty foot; his tail as long as all the reſt of his body, with which he is accuſtomed to inchaine his prey, and draw it into the River; His feet armed with claws, and his back with impenetrable ſcales; his mouth ſo wide (of which he moveth onely the upper jaw) that he is able to ſwallow a whole Heifer; equally uſed to both Elements, but better ſighted in the water, then on the land; Cowardly, though a Creature of prey, and ſuch as uſually flies from thoſe which dare ſet upon him; and eaſily vanquiſhed by the Dolphin, who ſwimming under the water woundeth him in the belly, where aſſaultable onely. Whether ſo eaſily deſtroyed by the Ichneumon (a kinde of Water-Rat) skipping into his mouth, and gnawing his way out again, as old Writers ſay, hath of late been queſtioned. That which I look on as a rarity of the greateſt moment (if not rather to be accounted ſupernatural) is that, about five miles from the City of Caire, there is a place, in which on every Good-Friday yeerly, there appear the heads, legs and arms of men riſing out of the ground, to a very great number: which if a man draw near unto them, or touch any of them, will ſhrink again into the earth. Suppoſed by ſome to be an Impoſture of ſome Water-men onely, who ſtick them over-night in the ſands, and keeping them ſecret to themſelves, obtain thereby the Ferrying over of many thouſands of People, to behold the ſight. But Stephen Dupleis, a ſober and diſcerning man, in the opinion of Goulartius, who reports it from him, conceived otherwiſe of it: affirming ſoberly that he was a eye-witneſs of the wonder, that he had touched divers of theſe riſing Members; and that (as he was once ſo doing to the head of a childe) a man of Caire cried out unto him, Kali, Kali, ante materaſde, that is to ſay, Hold, hold, you know not what you do. A ſtrange Fore-runner (if it be of undoubted credit) of the Reſurrection of the whole Body, preſented yearly in the riſing of theſe ſeveral parts.

Of leſs diſpute, but not leſs rarity in nature, are theſe that follow. 1. That in all this Country it never raineth; or if a clould do ſometimes happen to diſſolve upon them, it bringeth on their bodies innumerable ſores, and ſtrange diſeaſes. 2. The annual overflowing of the River Nilus, and the many memorable things which are ſaid to follow on the ſame. Of which it is thus ſaid by Lucan;

Terra ſuis contenta bonis, non indiga mercis,
Aut Jovis; in ſolo tanta eſt fiducia Nilo:

The earth content with its own wealth, doth crave
No Forreign Mart, nor Jove himſelf; they have Their hopes alone in Nilus fruitfull wave.

This Nilus hath his head, not in the Mountains of the Moon, as the Ancients thought, but in the Lake Zembre, in Æthiopia Interior: and running in one continual Channel (excepting where it brancheth into little Iſlands, as it ſometimes doth) till it waſheth the mid-land of Egypt, is before its influx into the Sea, divided into ſeven great ſtreams, opening into the Sea with ſo many mouths. Namely, 1. Heracleoticum, 2. Bolviticum, 3. Schaniticum, 4. Patinicum, 5. Mendeſium, 6. Caniticum, 7. Peluſaicum. The firſt and laſt of theſe currents (which are the onely two now left) being far diſtant from other, and growing into one, at the firſt point of the Rivers diviſion, make that part of Egypt which is called Delta, becauſe to ſuch as come to this Country out of Greece, Italy, or Anatolia, it reſembleth the Greek letter Δ. The other part is called Thebais, from Thebe, the chief City of it.

This Nilus from the 15. day of June, ſwelleth above his banks, for the ſpace of 40. days; and in as many more, gathereth his waters again to their proper bounds. If it flow not to the height of fifteen Cubits, then the earth is deficient in her abundance of increaſe, for want of moiſture: and if the waters ſurmount the ſuperficies of the Earth, more than ſeventeen Cubits, then, like a drunken man, it cannot produce its natural operation, as having his ſtomack (as it were) over-laid, and ſurcharged with too much liquor: but if the mean be granted, there is no Countrey which can brag of the like Fertility; the Corn being all houſed before the 20th. of May. During this Inundation, they keep their beaſts and cattel on the tops of ſuch little hils, which either the Providence of Nature, or the induſtry of man, hath prepared for them; where they abide till the decreaſe of the Waters: and on theſe hills alſo ſtand the moſt of their Towns and Villages, appearing in the time of the Flood, like ſo many Iſlands; and holding a commerce and continual traffick by the entercourſe of Boats and Shallops, by which they do tranſport their Marketable commodities from one place to another. And if it chance at any time, that the River doth not thus over-flow the Countrey, it is not onely the Fore-runner to a following dearth, but prognoſticateth ſome enſuing miſchief to the Prince and State: Confirmed by the teſtimony of good and creditable Authors, who have told us that in the 10th. and 11th. years of Cleopatra, the River increaſed not at all; and that it was noted as a Foreteller of the Fall of thoſe two great, but unfortunate Princes, Cleopatra and her Sweetheart Antonius. A ſecond commodity which ariſeth from the overflowings of Nilus, is the health which it bringeth with it in moſt parts of the Countrey; the Plague which often-times miſerably rageth, upon the firſt day of the flood, abating inſtantly: inſomuch that whereas 500. may die of that diſeaſe in the City of Caire but the day before, there dieth not one of it on the day following. A third wonder in this River, is, that keeping its waters united in a body together, after it falleth into the Sea; it changeth the colour of the Mediterranean, further then any part of it can be ſeen from the ſhore. Add unto theſe the many living creatures which the ſlime thereof engendereth, on the withdrawing of the River to its natural channel: whereof Ovid thus,

Sic ubi deſeruit madidos ſeptemfluus agros
Nilus, & antiquo ſua flumina reddidit alv'o:
Plurima Cultores verſis Animalia glebis Inveniunt.

Which I Engliſh thus.

So when the Seven-mouth'd Nile the fields forſakes,
And to his ancient Channel him betakes;
The Plough-men many living Creatures find,
By turning up the mud that's left behind.

Amongſt which Creatures ſo ingendered, are ſaid to be ſuch innumerable heaps of Frogs, that if Nature, or Divine Providence rather, did not furniſh this Countrey with a proportionable number of Storks, by whom they are greedily devoured; the Plague of Frogs would come a ſecond time upon them, to their utter deſtruction. Now becauſe Nilus runneth in its certain Channels, and that the people have no other water to make uſe of, for all neceſſities; there are many By-trenches and deep Ditches cut in convenient places, (by the care and munificence of their Kings) to receive its waters, and to communicate them to the people; who know almoſt no other drink then the waters thereof, and indeed they need not; the water of this River being of ſuch excellent, both taſt and vertue, that when Peſcominus Niger ſaw his Souldiers murmure for want of Wine; What (ſaid he) do you grumble for Wine, having the waters of Nile to drink?

On the banks of the River ſtood that famous Labyrinth built by Pſamniticus, which we have touch'd upon before; ſituate on the South of the Pyramides, and North of Arſinoe, or the Citie of Crocodiles. It contained within the compaſſe of one continued wall, a thouſand houſes, and twelve Royal Palaces, all covered with Marble; and had onely one entrance, but innumerable turnings and returnings, ſometimes one over another; and all in a manner invious to ſuch as were not well acquainted with them: The building more under the ground, then above; the Marble-ſtones laid with ſuch art, that neither Wood nor Cement was imployed in any part of the Fabrick; the Chambers ſo diſpoſed, that the Doors upon their opening did give a report no leſſe terrible, then a crack of Thunder; the main Entrance all of White-marble, adorned with ſtately Columns, and moſt curious Imagery. The end at length being attained, a pair of Stairs of 90 ſteps conducted into a gallant Portice, ſupported with Pillars of Theban ſtone; which was the Entrance into a fair and ſpacious Hall, (the place of their general Conventions) all of poliſhed Marble, ſet out with the Statues of their Gods. A work which afterwards was imitated by Dædalus in the Cretane Labyrinth; though that fell as ſhort of the glories of this, as Minos was inferior unto Pſamniticus, in power and riches.

On the Banks of this River alſo grew thoſe ſedgy Weeds called Papyri, of which Paper was made in former times. They divided it into thin flakes, (into which it naturally parteth) then laying them on a Table, and moiſt'ning them with the glutinous waters of the River, they preſſed them together, and after dried them in the Sun. By means of this invention, books being eaſier to be tranſcribed and reſerved then formerly, Ptolomy Philadelphus made his excellent Library at Alexandria: and underſtanding how Attalus King of Pergamus, by the benefit of this Egyptian Paper, ſtrived to exceed him in that kinde of magnificence, prohibited the carrying of it out of Egypt. Hereupon Attalus invented the uſe of Parchments, made of the skins of Calves and Sheep; from the materials called Membranæ, and Pergamenæ from the place where they were invented. The convenience whereof was the cauſe, that in ſhort time the Egyptian Paper was worn out of uſe; in place whereof ſucceeded our Paper made of Rags; the Authours of which excellent invention, our Progenitors have forgotten to commit to memory. Before the uſe of theſe Papers and Parchments were firſt made known, I obſerve three wayes of writing amongſt the Ancients, (I hope I ſhall be pardoned this ſhort digreſſion.) 1. On the inward ſide of the Bark of a Tree, which is in Latine called Liber; and whence Books have the name of Libri. 2*ly*. On Tables framed out of the main body of a Tree, which being called Candex, gave the Latines occaſion to call a book Codex. 3*ly*. They uſed to cover their Tables over with Wax, and thereon to write what they had to ſignifie; from whence a Letter-carrier was named Tabellarius. The inſtrument wherewith they wrote, was a ſharp-pointed Iron, which they called Stylus; a word now ſignifying (the Original derived from hence) the peculiar kinde of Phraſe which any man uſeth: as, Negligens ſtylus, in Quintilian; and Exercitatus ſtylus, in Cicero. I ſhould have alſo noted, that they uſed ſometimes to write in Leaves; That the Sibyls Oracles being ſo written and ſcattered abroad, had the name of Sibyllæ Folia; and that from thence we have the phraſe of a Leaf of Paper. But of this Argument enough.

Having thus done with the Rarities concerning Nilus, and that great increaſe of wealth which accrued thereby to all the Countrey, in the improvement of the natural Commodities of the Earth: let us next look on the Red Sea, and the great Riches which that brought unto this Kingdom, in the way of Trading. A Sea whereof we have ſpoke already, as to the reaſon of the name, the extent thereof, and the ſeveral Iſlands contained in it; and therefore ſhall not need to repeat it here. That which is proper to this Countrey, and to this alone, is the fame it hath for the miraculous paſſage of the Iſraelites through it as upon dry-land, and the drowning of Pharaohs Cenchres and all his people, at large commemorated in the books of Holy Scriptures: as alſo for that through it Spices of India, and Arabia, were brought to Alexandria; and thence by the Venetians diſperſed through all Europe, Africa, and Aſia. I ſuppoſe I ſhall not do amiſſe to ſet down Hiſtorically out of Galuano, a relation of the beginning, continuance, and period of the Traffick through this Sea, by which all Europe formerly received ſo great Commodity. Know then (ſaith he) that Ptolomy Philadelphus, 277 years before the Incarnation, was the firſt that ſet on foot this Navigation: Coſir (of old called Myos: Hormos) on the Sea-ſide being the ordinary Haven, out of which they hoyſed ſail for India; and into which they returned, full fraught with their Commodities. From hence they were by land conveighed to Coptus, and ſo down the Nile to Alexandria: by which Traffick the Citie grew exceeding rich; inſomuch that the Cuſtom-houſe there yielded Ptol. Auletes 7 Millions and an half of Gold yearly. The Romans being Lords of Egypt, enhanſed the Cuſtomes to double that ſum: they ſent into India every year (as Pliny witneſſeth) 120 ſhips, whoſe lading was worth 1200000 Crowns; and there was made in return of every Crown, 100. When the Vandals, Lombards, Goths, and Moors had torn in pieces the Roman Empire, all Commerce between Nations began to ceaſe. At laſt perceiving the inconvenience, they began anew; conveighing the Indian Commodities, partly by land, partly by water, unto Capha in Taurica Cherſoneſus, belonging to the Genoeſe. Next Trabezond was made the Mart-town, then Sarmachand in Zagataie, where the Indian, Turkiſh, and Perſian Merchants met to barter wares: the Turks conveighing their merchandiſe to Damaſcus, Baratti, and Aleppo; from whence the Venetians tranſported it to Venice, making that the common Emporium of Chriſtendom. Once again, viz. Anno 1300. the Soldans of Egypt reſtored the paſſage by the Red-Sea; which having continued more than 200 years, is now diſcontinued by the Portugal, Spaniards, Engliſh and Dutch, which bring them to their ſeveral homes by the back ſide of Africk: So that not onely the Traffick of Alexandria is almoſt decayed, and the Riches of the Venetians much diminiſhed; but the Drugs and Spices have loſt much of their vertue, as impaired by too much moiſture. So much ſaith he, touching the courſe and alteration of this Trading: to which I ſhall take leave to add, That for the better and more quick return of ſuch Commodities as were uſually brought into this Sea, ſome of the Kings of Egypt attempted formerly to cut a main Channel from it, to the River Nilus, paſſable by ſhips of greateſt burden; the marks of whoſe proud attempts are remaining ſtill. Seſoſtris was the firſt who deſigned the work, having before with good ſucceſſe cut many Trenches from the River, and ſome Navigable, into many places of the Countrey; by which unprofitable Mariſhes were drained, the Countrey ſtrengthened, Trade made eaſie, and the people better furniſhed with water than in former times. Darius the great Perſian Monarch, ſeconded the ſame Project; ſo did one of the Ptolomies; The like is ſaid of a Capricious Portugal in theſe later times. But they all gave it over on the ſame conſideration; which was a fear, leſt by letting in the Red-Sea they might drown the Countrey, and perhaps make a ſecond Deluge in the parts of Greece and Aſia Minor which lay neareſt to them: that Sea being found to be much higher than the Mediterranean, and the flats of Egypt.

But here we are to underſtand, that all which hitherto hath been ſpoken concerning Egypt, relates to Egypt ſtrictly, and ſpecially ſo called; containing onely ſo much of the Countrey of Egypt, as lieth upon the Banks and Channels of the River Nilus: and not to all that tract of ground, which lay betwixt the Red Sea, and the borders of Libya, which was reckoned in the compaſſe of the Kingdom of Egypt, much leſſe as comprehending Libya and Cyrene alſo, though now accounted Members of that great body, and anciently parts, or Provinces of the Dioceſe of it. For Egypt, in the largeſt ſenſe and acception of the word, may be, and generally is divided into theſe three parts, viz. 1. Egypt, in the general Notion, or the Kingdom of Egypt, extended on the Mediterranean from the borders of Idumæa to the Roman Libya, or Marmarica, lying Weſtward of the mouth of Nilus, called Heracleoticum: and on the Borders of Æthiopia Superior, from the ſaid Red-Sea, to the Countrey of Libya Interior. 2. Libya, or Marmarica, lying betwixt Egypt properly ſo called, and the Province of Cyrene, or Pentapolis. And 3. Cyrene, or Pentapolis, reaching from that Lybia, to the greater Syrtis; where it bordered with that part of the African Dioceſe, which is now called the Kingdom of Tunis. And in this firſt acception of it we ſhall now proceed to a Survey of the Mountains, and Chief Cities; which done, we ſhall deſcribe the other in their proper places; and then unite them all in the General Story.

As for the Mountains of this Countrey, there are very many: there were no living elſe for the people in the time of the overflowings of the River. The principal of thoſe, 1. Thoſe called Montes Libyci, lying in a long chain on the Weſt of Nilus; 2. Alabaſtrinus; 3. Porphyritus; 4. Troigus; 5. Baſanitus on the Eaſt thereof. Betwixt theſe Hills the courſe of the River is ſo hemmed in on both ſides, that at the upper part of the ſtream, where it firſt entreth into Egypt, the ſpace betwixt the Mountains is not above four miles broad; enlarging afterwards to eight, then about Caire to thirty ſeven; then opening wider and wider, till we come to the breaches of the Delta, as the Countrey doth increaſe in breadth. On theſe and other of the Mountains and leſſer Hills, ſtand moſt part of the Towns, the receptacles of the Countrey people in the time of the Floud, riſing when leaſt, to fifteen cubits, or ſeven yards and an half.

in

Rivers of note here are none but Nilus, nor indeed any one but that; that being ſufficient of it ſelf to enrich this Countrey, which otherwiſe would be nothing but a Sandy Deſart. But what they want in Rivers, is ſupplied with Lakes and Trenches, which ſerve for watering their Cattel, tempering of Mortar for their buildings, and other ſuch inferior uſes; ſometimes perhaps for drink for the poorer ſort, who cannot be conveniently furniſhed with the waters of Nile. Amongſt the Trenches (which were many, as before was ſaid) thoſe of moſt eſtimation were the Works of Ptolomy, and the Emperour Trajan: the firſt falling into that branch of the Nile, which maketh the Iſle called Heracleotis; the other into the main body of it, not far from Caire. Theſe two, by reaſon of the many freſh ſprings which fall into them, have the name of Rivers in old Authours: and betwixt theſe was ſeated the Land of Goſhen, extending from Nilus to the Red-Sea, on the Eaſt and Weſt. The chief of note amongſt the Lakes, were thoſe called, 1. Marcotis, not far from Alexandria, by Pliny called Arapotes, Maria by Ptolomy; all which names are now loſt, and changed into that of Lagodi Antacon, from a Town of that name near unto it. 2. Laccus, ſuppoſed to be the ſame which in the book of Maccabees is called Aſphar, lib. 1. cap. 9. And 3. Moeris, now called Buchaira, more memorable than the reſt. In compaſſe 3500 furlongs, 50 fathom deep, in the midſt whereof were two Pyramides 50 fathoms above the water, and as much beneath it: the Fiſh of this Lake, for one ſix moneths in the year, ſaid to be worth twenty of their pounds a day to the Kings Exchequer; for the other ſix, each day a Talent. 4. The Lakes called Amari, into which the Trench, or River called Ptolomeus, doth diſcharge its waters, conveyed from thence into the Red-Sea.

The whole divided anciently into two parts onely. 1. That called Delta, betwixt the two extream branches of the River Nilus, the form of which letter it reſembleth to him who ſtanding on the Sea-ſhore could take a view of it. 2. That called Thebais, from Thebe the principal Citie of it, comprehending all the reſt of the courſe of that River, ſhut up on both ſides with the Mountains ſpoken of before. But this Diviſion leaving out all thoſe parts hereof, which lay on the Eaſt-ſide towards the Arabian Golfs, and on the Weſt, as far as to the borders of Libya Marmarica: the Macedonians laying it all together, divided it into 18 Cantreds, or Diſtricts, by them called Nomi; increaſed in the time of Ptolomy the Geographer, to 46. Ortelius out of divers Authours hath found 20 more. When conquered by the Romans, and made a Dioceſs of the Empire, it was divided into four Provinces, (not reckoning Marmarica, and Cyrene into the accompt:) that is to ſay, 1. Ægyptus ſpecially ſo called, containing all the Delta, and the Diſtrict or Nomus of Mareotica, bordering on Marmarica. 2. Auguſtanica, ſo called from Auguſtus Cæſar, on the Eaſt of the Delta, betwixt it and Arabia Petræa. 3. Arcadia, ſo called from the Emperour Arcadius, in whoſe time it was taken out of Thebais, lying on both ſides of the River, from the Delta to the Citie of Antinous. 4. Thebais, extending on both ſides of the River from the borders of Libya Marmarica to the Red-Sea, (as the other doth) from Antinous, unto Æthiopia. Divided otherwiſe by ſome, into Superiorem, reaching from Æthiopia to the Citie of Antinous, Mediam, ſtretching thence to the point of the Delta; and Inferiorem, which comprehendeth all the reſt. But at this time, that part hereof, which lieth on the South and Eaſt of Caire, is called Saud, or Salid; honoured heretofore with the dwelling of the ancient Pharaohs, becauſe neareſt unto Æthiopia their moſt puiſſant neighbour. 2. That betwixt Caire, Roſetta, and Alexandria, hath the name of Errifia, wherein the Ptolomæan Princes did moſt reſide; becauſe moſt convenient for receiving ſupplies of men, from the States of Greece. And finally, that from Caire, to Teneſe and Damiata, is now called Maremna, in which the Turks and Mamalucks made the ſeat of their Empire; becauſe more neighbouring to the Chriſtians, whom they ſtood in fear of, as likelieſt to invade them upon that ſide. In the whole Countrey there was reckoned in the time of Amaſis the 2d. no fewer than 20000 Cities; but if the Towns and Villages be not reckoned in, I ſhould much doubt of the accompt. By Diodorus Siculus it is ſaid that there were 3000 in his time: but Ortelius, on a diligent ſearch, findes 300 onely.

Thoſe of moſt note in the Provnice of Auguſtanica, 1. Peluſium, the moſt eaſtern Citie of Egypt towards Idumæa, ſituate on the moſt Eaſtern Channel of Nilus, called hence Peluſiacum; by Ammianus ſaid to be the work of Peleus the Father of Achilles, commanded by the Gods to purge himſelf in the Lake adjoyning, for the murder of his brother Phocus. Accounted for the chief door of Egypt towards the Land, as Pharos was to thoſe who came thither by Sea; the Metropolis of the Province of Auguſtanica, the birth-place of Ptolomy the Geographer, and the Epiſcopal See of S. Iſidore, ſirnamed Peluſiotes, whoſe eloquent and pious Epiſtles are ſtill extant. Out of the ruines hereof (if not the ſame under another title) aroſe, 2. Damiata, memorable for the often Sieges laid unto it by the Chriſtian Armies; for none more than that under John de Brenne, the titulary King of Jeruſalem, and the Princes of Europe, An. 1220. During which (being of 18 moneths continuance) the Famine and the Peſtilence ſo extreamly raged, that the Town in a manner was diſpeopled, before the Beſiegers knew any thing of their condition: till in the end two venturous Souldiers, admiring the ſilence and ſolitude of ſo great a Citie, in a Bravado ſcaled the walls; but found no man to make reſiſtance. The next day the whole Army entred, where they found in every houſe, and every corner of the ſtreets, whole heaps of dead bodies, none to give them burial; A lamentable and ruthfull ſpectacle! 3. Heros, or Civitas Heroum, in the Arabian bian Iſthmus, at the very bottom of the Golf; remarkable for the firſt interview betwixt Jacob and Joſeph, after his coming into Egypt. 4. Heliopolis, or the Citie of the Sun, now called Betſames, in the Scriptures On, of which Potiphar the Father of Aſenath (whom Pharaoh married unto Joſeph) was Prieſt, or Prince, as is ſaid *Gen.*41.45. Given (as Joſephus telleth us) for an habitation to the ſons of Jacob; by conſequence one of the chief Cities of the Land Rameſes, or Goſhen: and memorable in times ſucceeding for a publick Temple built for the Jews, with the conſent of Ptolomy ſirnamed Philadelphus, by Onias the High-Prieſt, then diſpoſſeſſed of his Authority and Office by the power of Antiochus: a Temple much eſteemed by the Helliniſts, or Grecizing Jews; and though Schiſmatical at the beſt in its firſt original, yet not Schiſmatical and Idolatrous too, as was that of Mount Garizim. 5. Bubuſtis, ſomewhat more North then Heliopolis, by ſome of the ancients called Avaris, by the Scriptures Pibeſeth, another Citie of that tract; now better known by the name of Zioth: ſuppoſed to be the ſame which the Notitia calleth Caſtra Judæorum; memorable in times of Paganiſme, for a famous Temple of Diana. 6. Arſinoe, on the ſhore of the Red-Sea, ſo called in honour of Arſinoe, ſiſter of Philadelphus, and wife to Lyſimachus King of Thrace; afterwards called Cleopatris, in honour of Queen Cleopatra; now better known by the name of Sues? Of great commerce and trading in the time of the Ptolomies; Now almoſt abandoned; and would be utterly deſerted, were it not made the ſtation of the Turkiſh Gallies, that command the Gulfe: which being framed at Caire of ſuch Timber as it brought thither by ſea from the Woods of Cilicia, and ſometimes from the ſhores of the Euxine Sea; are again taken in peeces, carried from Carie unto this City on backs of Camels, and here joyned together. Conceived to be the ſame which in former times was called Baal Zephon (of which ſee *Exod.*14 9.) the laſt incamping-place of the Tribes of Iſrael, who from hence paſſed through the Red Sea, as upon dry land. 7. Gleba Rubra, by the Greeks called Hiera Bolus, and ſometimes Erythra Bolus alſo, more neer the Latine; the redneſs of the ſoyl giving name unto it: ſituate on the River or Trench of Tralan: more memorable for a misfortune that befell it than for any thing elſe; purpoſely burnt by Amenophis the fift, upon this occaſion? Being blinde, he was aſſured by ſome of his Wizards, that if he waſhed his eyes with the Urine of a Woman, which had never known any but her own husband, he ſhould be reſtored unto his ſight. After a long ſearch and many vain tryals, he met with one whoſe water cured him; whom he took to wife: and cauſing all the reſt whom he had made tryal of, to be brought together to this Town, he ſet fire on the City, and burnt both it and all the women there aſſembled; which tale, if true, is little to the credit of the Dames of Egypt.

Places of moſt note and obſervation in the Province of Egypt, ſtrictly and ſpecially ſo called, are 1. Alexandria ſituate Weſtward of the Delta, over againſt the Iſle of Pharos; and built upon a Promontory thruſting it ſelf into the Sea; with which on the one ſide, and the Lake Mareotis on the other, it is exceeding well defended: the Work of Alexander the Great, and by him peopled with Greeks, immediatly after his conqueſt of Egypt. The Regal Seat of the Ptolomies, whilſt Egypt did maintain the State of a Kingdom: and afterwards the Metropolis of it, when a Roman Dioceſe. Adorned with many ſtately buildings; of which moſt memorable the Serapium, (or Temple of their God Saparis) for ſumptuous workmanſhip, and the magnificence of the Fabrick, inferiour to none but the Roman Capitol: and next to that, the Library erected by Philadelphus, who had ſtored it with 700000. Volumes; unfortunately burnt in the War againſt Julius Cæſar? A City of great trading, and infinite Riches; μέγιστον ἐμπόριον τῆς οἰκουμένης, the greateſt Empory of the World, as is ſaid by Strabo. Wanton with which, the Citizens ſo abounded in all licentiouſneſs both of life, and ſpeech, that they ſpared not the Emperour himſelf, if he came in their way. But they paid dearly for their folly. For Caracalla not ſo patient of a Contumely as ſome wiſer Princes, having felt the laſhes of their tongues, when he was amongſt them; aſſembled all the youth of the City, as if out of them he would have choſen ſome to attend his Perſon: and ſuddenly gave command to this Souldiers, to put them all to the ſword. A ſlaughter ſo great and univerſal, that the River Nilus coloured with the blood of the ſlain, might not improperly at that time be called a Red Sea. In this City, Anno 180. Gantenus read both Divinity and Philoſophy to all ſuch as would come to hear him: which as it is conceived to give the firſt hint to the inſtituting of Univerſities, in the reſt of Chriſtendom; ſo from that ſmall beginning the Schools of Alexandria grew ſo great and eminent, that Nazianzen calleth them παντὸς παιδεύσεως ἐργαστήριον, the ſhop, or work-houſe, as it were, of all kinds of Learning. Much ſhort of what it was even in point of trading, eſpecially ſince the diverſion of the Trading from the Bay of Arabia; and utterly diveſted of thoſe beauties which once it had. Inhabited at the preſent by a mixture of Nations, Moors, Jews, Turks, Greeks, and Chriſtian Cophtives; more for ſome little gain which they reap by Traffick, than any pleaſure in the place? Now called Scanderia by the Turks, remarkable onely for the houſe of the Patriarch (though he dwell for the moſt part in Caire) and a Church in which S. Mark their firſt Biſhop was ſaid to be buried. 2. Canopus, ſituate eaſt of Alexandria, and on the principal branch of the Nile, called Heracleoticum; ſo called from Canopus the Pilot of Menelaus, who having ſuffered ſhipwrack upon this coaſt, was there interred by his Maſter? A Town ſo branded in old times, for varieties of all kinde of beaſtlineſs, and luxury; that as Seneca very well obſerved, he that avoided the viciouſneſs and debauchery of it, could not ſcape the infamy: the very place adminiſtring matter for ſuſpicion. 3. Roſetta, on the ſame branch of the River, and not far from Canopus, out of whoſe ruines it aroſe; built by a Slave of one of the Egyptian Caliphs; unwalled and deſtitute of all Fortifications, but plentifully accommodated with all ſorts of commodities, and well frequented by the Merchant. 4. Nicopolis, now called Munia, the Monument of ſome eminent Victory, and probably of the conqueſt of Egypt by the Macedonians; the name being Greek, and the Town ſtanding within 30. Furlongs of Alexandria. 5. Aphrodites and Aphoditopolis, ſo called from Venus who was here worſhipped: ſituate betwit the two middle branches of the Nile.

Nile. 6. Sais, betwixt the ſame branches of the River alſo; whence that Nomus or Diviſion had the name of Saites. It is now called Sibnit, or Signiti. 7. Plinthine, on the Sea-ſide; and 8. Hierax, more within the land: the chief Towns of the Region called Maræotica.

In Arcadia, called alſo Heptanomus, becauſe it contained ſeven of the Nomi or Diviſions, into which Egypt was diſtributed by the Macedonians, the Places of moſt note were and are 1. Memphis, on the Weſtern bank of Nile, not far from the ſharp point of the Delta, where the River firſt beginneth to divide it ſelf; the Regal City of the old Egyptian Pharaohs: by one of which who removed the Seat Royal from Thebo hither, it is ſaid to be built; and called thus by the name of his daughter. In compaſs, when it flouriſhed, about 20. miles; Great, populous, and adorned with a world o. An iquities; amongſt others with the Temples of Apis, Venus, and Serapis, beſet with Sphynxes: now nothing left of the Ruines of it, but the Statues of ſome monſtrous Reſemblances, ſufficient to ſhew that it hath been formely. The Pyramides before deſcribed, ſtood not far from hence; to which the Poet relateth, ſaying, Barbara Pyramidum ſileat miracula Memphis.

Let barbarous Memphis brag no more
Of her Pyramides, as before.

2. Babylon, called for diſtinctions ſake, Babylon Ægyptiorum, built on the other ſide of the River, and ſomewhat more unto the North: ſaid to be founded by Cambyſes the Perſian Monarch, the firſt that made this Kingdom ſtoop to the yoke of a forreiner; and by him peopled with ſome Babylonians or Chaldæans, tranſplanted hither. Great, as appeareth by the ruines; amongſt which many of the Chriſtian Temples and Monaſteries do lie there in rubbiſh; the Caſtle whereof ſerved long after for the Garriſon of the three Legions, appointed to defend this Countrey in the time of the Romans. This, thought by ſome to be the Babylon mentioned by S. Peter, in his 1 Epiſtle cap. ult. which the following words, and Mark my ſon, (S. Mark being the firſt Biſhop of the Alexandrians, and the Apoſtle of Egypt) may make ſomewhat probable, but the truth and reality hereof, I diſpute not now. Out of the ruines of this City aroſe, 3. Caira, now, and for many Ages paſt, the chief of this Countrey: raiſed from the aſhes of old Babylon by the Chaliphs of Egypt, and by the Mamalucks made the Seat-Royal of their Kingdom. In compaſſe not above eight miles, but full of Streets, the number of which ſaid to be 18000. every one of them fortified with a Gate at each end; which being well barred, made every ſeveral ſtreet an impregnable fortreſſe. Found ſo by Selymus the firſt, when he conquered Egypt, who ſpent three dayes in forcing his way through it, with his numerous Army. The private buildings very mean; the publique, ſpecially the Moſques, beyond thought magnificent. Viſited every ſeventh year with a dreadful Peſtilence; yet ſtill ſo populous, that it is conceived to be in good health, if there die not above a thouſand in a day, or 300000 within that year. Adorned with many delicate Orchards, both within the City, and without; full of variety of contentments, and neighboured by a pleaſant Lake; but made more pleaſant by the company which meet there in Boats, for their mutual ſolace and delights. Fortified at the South end with a ſtately Caſtle (the Palace of the Mamaluck Sultans) ſituate on the top of a Mountain; overlooking the City, and a great part of the Countrey alſo. So large, that it ſeemeth a City of it ſelf, immured with high walls, divided into many partitions or ſeveral Courts, in times paſt the places of exerciſe; and entred by dores of iron Deſtroyed for the moſt part, by Selimus, for fear of giving opportunity to ſome rebellion; or envying the Mamalucks the glory of having been the Maſters of ſo brave a Manſion: that which is left, now ſerving for the habitation of the Turkiſh Baſſa, who hath the Government of this Kingdom. 4. Matared, or Matarea, not far from Caire; the ſoile whereof is ſaid to be ſo rich and fertile, that the People are fain to cover it with ſand or gravel, ſo moderating the extreme rankneſſe of it. 5. Arſinoe, on the Weſt ſide of the Nile, and ſomewhat South of the famous Labyrinth before deſcribed; called alſo (to difference it from another of the ſame name on the ſhore of the Red-Sea) the City of Crocodiles, in regard of the divine honours there done that Monſter. 6. Nilopolis, or Nili Civitas, in the Iſland called Heracleotis, made by the imbracements of the River: moſt memorable for being the Epiſcopal See of Cheræmon, a right godly Prelate; of whom ſee Euſebius in the 6 Book and 34 Chap. of his Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory. 7. Troia, on the Eaſtern ſtream which makes that Iſland, not much obſervable but for giving name to the Montes Troici lying neer unto it; out of which were digged the ſtones which made the Pyramides. 8. Cynopolis, in a little Iſland up the water. 9. Hermopolis, or the City of Mercurie; called alſo Hermopolis magna, to difference it from another of that name not far from Alexandria, to which they give the Adjunct of Parva. 10. Antonius, now Antius, founded by Adrian the Emperour, in honour of Antinous his eſpecial favourite; the moſt Southern City of this Province, on the banks of the Nile. 11. Dionyſias, or the City of Bacchus, ſituate on the Southern end of the Lake of Moeris, in the Nomus or Diviſion called Oaſis parva. 12. Cly ſma, upon the ſhores of the Golf, a Roman Garriſon.

Cities of moſt note in the Province of Thebais, 1. Panopolis, the Panos of Antoninus, one of the greateſt of this part. 2. Ptolomais, the foundation of one of the Ptolomies, and the goodlieſt City of this Province, ſucceeding unto Thebe both in power and greatneſſe. 3. Saiet, a fair and large Town, ſix dayes journy from Caire, going up the water; but by what name called amongſt the Antients, I do no where find. Affirmed (erroneouſly, I think) to be the dwelling-place of Joſeph and Mary, when they fled with CHRIST our Saviour from the fury of Herod. Beautified with a goodly Temple, but now ſomewhat ruinous, of the foundation of Helena the mother of Conſtantine. The City much reſorted to (on the ſtrength of this Tradition onely) by many aged Chriſtian Cophties, who deſire to die there. 4. Dioſpolis, or the City of Jupiter; all of them on the banks of the River. 5. Tentyra, in a little Iſle ſo called, made by the circlings of the Nile: The inhabitans whereof were the onely men who durſt encounter the Crocodile, A creature of a terrible name, but a cowardly nature; of which it is ſaid by Ammianus Marcellinus, that it aſſaulteth thoſe which flie from it, and flieth from thoſe who do aſſault it: In that point very like the Devil, of whom it is ſaid by the Apoſtle James, 4, 7. that if he be reſiſted, he will flie from us. Or as the good old Poet hath it, Eſt Leo, ſi fugias; ſi ſtas, quaſi Muſca recedit.

Give ground, a Lyon he will be;
Stand to it, and away flies he.

6. Coptos, upon the head of a Trench or water-courſe, which falleth into the Nilus, on the South of Tentyra, but on the other ſide of the River; in old times a moſt noted Emporie for Indian and Arabian wares: from whence not onely the Chriſtians of this Countrey, are thought to have the name of Cophties; but the whole Countrey to be originally called Ægyptus, from Ai-Coptus, or the land of Coptus.

7. Thebe, the reſidence and foundation of that great Tyrant Buſiris, in compaſs 140 furlongs, or 17 miles and an half; called alſo Hecatompylæ, from the number of an hundred Gates which were ſaid to be in it. So beautified with Coloſſes, Temples, Palaces, the Sepulchres of the old Egyptian Pharaohs, and other Ornaments of State; that it was thought μηδεμίαν ἧσσ' ὑπὸ τὸν ἥλιον' ὅτω κεκοσμῆσθ, to be the Noneſuch of the world. Decayed on the removing of the Court to Memphis, it became a ruine ſo long ſince, that there was nothing left of it in the time of Juvenal; as he telleth us, ſaying, Atque vetus Thebe centum jacet obruta portis.

Old Thebe, yielding to the Fates,
Lies buried with its hundred Gates.

8. Abydus, now called Abutick, once the ſeat-royal of Memnon, from thence called Memnonium, renowned for the Temple of Oſiris; more for the Statue of Memnon, which though made of ſtone, did at the riſing of the ſun yield a vocal ſound. 9. Elephantis, on the banks of Nile, neighboured by Crophi and Mophi, two ſharp Rocks, betwixt which the River falling down with a violent current, makes the Leſſer Cataract; of which, and of the greater, we ſhall ſpeak more fully in Æthiopia. The City ſeated in an Iſland of the River Nile, on the borders of Æthiopia ſub Ægypto, (as the Antients called it) known unto Ptolomie by the name of Elephantina, but to our Eccleſiaſtical writers by the name of Tabenna. Memorable in times of Heatheniſm for the Town and Temple of Onuchis, wherein ſtood the Nilometrium or ſtanding pillar, by which they did obſerve the increaſe of the River; removed ſince to the Caſtle of Michias, two miles from Caire: in times of Chriſtianity, for the dwellings of infinite numbers of Monks and Hermits, called from this place Tabeniſiotæ. 10. Syene, (now Aſna) a little North of Elephantis, ſituate directly under the Tropick of Cancer, and memorable for a deep Well there digged by ſome Aſtronomers; which when the Sun entred into that Sign, was wholly enlightened with his beams, without any ſhadow: ſo perpendicularly did the body of it ſtand over the pit. This the laſt City of Egypt, towards Æthiopia.

And now I ſhould proceed, according to my Method in other places, to the Storie of Egypt: but being that Libya, and Cyrene, are now accompted Members of it; the fortunes whereof they have alſo followed in all or moſt of the mutations of State and Government; I ſhall firſt take a view of them as the limbs of this body, and ſhew you how they were united under that one Head, by which now directed.

2. MARMARICA.

2. LIBYA or MARMARICA, hath on the Eaſt, Egypt, properly ſo called; on the Weſt, Cyrene; on the North, that part of the Mediterranean Sea, which was hence called Mare Libycum, and ſometimes Parthenium; and on the South, ſome part of Æthiopia Superior.

It had the name of Libya, from the old Greek word λίβυς, ſignifying black, agreeable to the complexion of the people, which is black and ſwarthie; λίβυς, antiqua lingua Græca niger, ſaith a learned Writer: or poſſibly enough from Lub, an Arabian word ſignifying thirſt, as ſuitable unto the nature of the ſoile, which is drie and ſandie, in which reſpect called by the Greeks Xero-Libya, or Libya ſicca. From hence the South-wind, blowing from theſe Coaſts towards Greece; and Italy, had the name of Lybs; and the Promontorie in Sicilie oppoſite unto it, that of Lilybæum. It was alſo called Marmarica, perhaps from the Marmaridæ, a chief People of it, though placed by Ptolomie in Cyrene: and ſometimes Barca, from Barce a chief City in it; of late times Barca Mamarica, by both names united.

The Countrey for the moſt part very dry and barren, and but meanly peopled; inſomuch as Alexander paſſing through part of it towards the Temple of Jupiter Hammon, in the ſpace of four dayes ſaw neither Man, Beaſt, Bird, Tree, nor River. Covered over in moſt places with a thick, light ſand, which the winds remove up and down continually, turning vallies into hils, and hils into vallies. Found by Cambyſes byſes to his coſt, who as baſely eſteeming of the Gods as he did of his Subjects, ſent part of his Army into this Countrey to deſtroy the Temple above mentioned: but in the paſſage towards that prohibited place, fifty thouſand of them were overwhelmed and ſmothered in a ſtorm of ſand; the reſt with much adoe eſcaping. Called therefore Xero-Libya, or Libya Sicca, as before was noted; and Libya ſitiens, thirſty Libya, (—— per calidas Libyæ ſitientis arenas) in that Verſe of Lucan.

The people, Neighbours unto Egypt; and conſequently much of the ſame condition. Said by Herodotus, (by whom they are called Adyrnachidæ) to be governed by the like Laws and Cuſtomes, as the Egyptians were; but to differ from them in their habit. Of colour dark and black, of conſtitution lean and dry, and inclining to Melancholy; angry on every light occaſion, very litigious, and eager proſecutors of their dues. By an old obſervation among themſelves, they abſtained both from Beef and Hog-meat. So obſtinate in denying their accuſtomed Tributes, that he who could not ſhew the marks of his ſufferings for it, either black, or blue, was accompted no body: And ſo reſolved to conceal any thing diſgracefull to them, that if any of them were apprehended for a Robbery, no torment could compel him to tell his name. At this time, little differing in perſon, temper, or condition, from the Egyptians, Moors, and Arabes, intermixt amongſt them.

Converted to the faith of Chriſt, with, or not long after the reſt of Egypt, of which then reckoned for a Province, it became part of the Patriarchate of Alexandria; whoſe juriſdiction over it was confirmed by the Council of Nice: to the calling of which famous Council, this Countrey occaſionally concurred, by bringing into the World that wretched Arius; who with his Heterodoxies and contentious Cavils had diſturbed the Church. His Hereſie condemned in that famous Council; but his perſon, by the Divine juſtice of God, reſerved to a more remarkable puniſhment. Being ſent for by the Emperour Conſtantine to make a Recantation of his former Hereſies, he firſt writ out a Copy of his own opinions, which he hid in his boſom; and then writing out the Recantation expected from him, took Oath that he did really mean as he had written: which words the Emperour referred to the Recantation, he to the Paper in his boſom. But God would not be ſo cozened, though the Emperour was. For as he paſſed in triumph through the ſtreets of Conſtantinople, he drew aſide into a private houſe of eaſe, where he voided his guts into the draught; and ſent his Soul as an Harbinger to the Devil, to make room for his body.

Not more infamous for the birth of this Miſcreant, who denied the Divinity of Chriſt; than famous for the birth of one of the Sibyls, hence ſirnamed Libyca, by whom the ſame had been fore-ſhewn. Which Sibyls ſeem to have taken denomination from οἱο βόλας, i.e. Jovis conſiliorum conſciæ. They were in number ten, viz. 1. Perſica, 2. Libyca, 3. Delphica, 4. Cumæa, 5. Samia, 6. Helleſpontiaca, 7. Tiburtina, 8. Albunea, 9. Erythræa, and 10. Cumana; which laſt is affirmed to have written the nine books of the Sibyls. They were all preſented by an old Woman to Tarquinius Superbus; but he not willing to pay ſo great a ſumme of money as was demanded, denied them; whereupon the old woman burnt three of them, requiring as much money for the other ſix, as for all: which being denied, ſhe alſo burnt the other three, asking as much for the three remaining, as for the reſt; which Superbus, amazed, gave, and the old Trot vaniſhed. Theſe books contained manifeſt tokens of the Kingdom of Chriſt, his name, his birth, and death. They were burned by the Arch-traitor Stilico. So that thoſe Prophecies of theirs, which are now extant, are for the moſt part onely ſuch as had been extracted out of other writings, where their authority had been quoted. Concerning which, though Cauſabon and ſome other of our great Philologers, conceive them to be piæ fraudes; compoſed of purpoſe by the Fathers of the Primitive times, to win credit to the Faith of CHRIST: yet dare I not ſo far diſparage thoſe moſt godly men, as to believe they would ſupport ſo ſtrong an edifice with ſo weak a prop; or borrow help from falſhood, to evict a truth. Or if they durſt have been ſo impudently venturous, how eaſie had it been for their learned Adverſaries, Porphyrie, Julian, and the reſt of more eminent note, to have detected the Impoſture; and ſilenced the Chriſtian Advocates with reproach and ſcorn? But of this enough here, more at large elſewhere.

Rivers of note I finde not any. 'T is well, if in a Countrey ſo full of Sands, there be any at all: ſome Lakes I meet with in my Authors, the principal of which, 1. Laccus, 2. Lacus Lacomedis, now Linxamo, 3. Cleartus; ſufficient to preſerve their few Cattel from the taint of thirſt. The Mountains of moſt note, thoſe called Anogombri, 2. and that named Azar; this laſt extended Weſt and Eaſt in a ſtrait line, from the 51 degree of Longitude, to the 53. 3. Aliphus, 4. Ogdomus, 5. Tmodes, 6. Alpis, not much obſervable, but that they ſerve for Land-marks to diſcover the Countrey.

Towns of note there are none now in it. Of moſt eſteem in former times, 1. Batrachus, by ſome called Menelaus, an Haven-Town 2. Phthia, and 3. Aneſiſphyra, two Port-Towns alſo. 4. Tetrapyrgia, ſo called from its four Towers, the Antipyrgus of Ptolomy. 5. Meſuchis, more within the land. 6. Mazacilà, another midland Town. 7. Chereola, mentioned among the chief Cities of this tract, by Ammianus. 8. Parætonium, now Porto-raſſa, which with Peluſium are by Florus called the two Hornes of Egypt; which whoſoever held faſt, would be ſure to maſter it. By ſome old writers it had formerly been called Ammonia, as we read in Stephanus and Strabo; from the Temple of Jupiter Hammon, ſeated very near it. So anciently honoured with an Oracle, (if that were any honour to it) that Semiramis is ſaid to have come hither to enquire of her death; Perſeus, and Hercules, touching their adventures. The like, but not long after, was done by Alexander the Great: but the Oracle by that time had learnt to flatter, and puffed him up with a proud conceit of being the ſon of that God whom he came to worſhip. The Temple ſeated in the middle of a vaſt ſandy Deſart, environed with a pleaſant and delightfull Grove, about ſix miles, or more in circuit; watered with wholeſome ſprings, refreſhed with a temperate air, and ſhaded with fruit-bearing Trees, which carried in their leaves a perpetual ſpring. Fortified with a triple wall, within the firſt whereof was a Royal Palace of the Kings; within the ſecond a Seraglio for his women, in the third Lodgings for the Officers of Court; The Oracle fitly placed (ſo the Prieſts would have it) near the Seraglio of the Ladies; Before the entrance a fair Fountain, wherein the Oblations were firſt waſhed, then offered. A place of great repute in ſacred and civil eſtimate; all the adjoyning Countrey taking hence the name of Ammoniaca, and by that name reckoned amongſt the Provinces of the Patriarchate of Alexandria. 9. Antiphra, on the Eaſt border of it, towards Alexandria. 10. Barce, called afterwards Ptolomais, by the name of one of the Ptolomies, by whom repaired and beautified. Of ſuch accompt, that from hence the whole Countrey had the name of Barca, and the Inhabitants of Barcæi, (—— Lateque furentes Barcæi) as in that of Virgil.

The old Inhabitants hereof, were the Libyarchæ and Baſſachitæ, in the North; the Ogdoni, Buzes, and Adyrmachidæ, in the South; the Goniatæ, and Proſaditæ, in the midland parts; the Libyægyptii, bordering neareſt unto Egypt, with the people whereof ſo intermingled, as to make up betwixt them but one name and nation. Others there were of leſſe, or as little note, but all deſcended properly of Naphtuhim, the ſon of Miſraim; from whom the name of Neptune, orginally a Libyan Deity, ſeems to be derived: yet ſo, that Lehabin, his brother muſt come in for a ſhare; the founder, as it is conceived, of the Libyægyptii before mentioned. Being then of the ſame original with thoſe of Egypt, they followed the ſame fortunes alſo, till the times of the Ptolomies; by whom ſometimes given for portion, with the title of a Kingdom, to their younger Children. By the laſt will and teſtament of Apion, the laſt King hereof, a Baſtard-ſon of Ptolomy ſirnamed Euergetes, the ſeventh King of that houſe; bequeathed unto the Senate and people of Rome. By whom firſt ſuffered to live under them, as a Free-Eſtate, till the conqueſt of Egypt; then reckoned as a part of that, and ſo accordingly deſcribed by Ptolomy: where Libya, Marmarica, and Ammoniaca, occurre amongſt the Nomi, or Diviſions of it. Afterwards made a diſtinct Province of that Dioceſe, and governed by a Lord Preſident, under the Præfectus Auguſtalis, or Supream Commander for the Emperours.

3. CYRENE.

CYRENE is bounded on the Eaſt, with Marmarica; on the Weſt, with Africa Propria, or the Realm of Tunis, and ſome part of the Mediterranean, and the Greater Syrtis; on the North, with the Mediterranean wholly; on the South, with Libya Inferior, or the Deſarts of Libya.

It took this name from Cyrene the chief Citie of it, from whence ſometimes alſo called Cyrenaica; by Pliny and ſome other Roman Writers it is called Pentapolis, from five chief Cities which were in it, viz. 1. Cyrene, 2. Ptolomais, 3. Arſinoe, 4. Darnis, 5. Berenice: by Ammianus for the ſame reaſon Libya Pentapolis, the name of Libya extending over many of theſe Roman Provinces. And finally, at the preſent, it paſſeth with that laſt deſcribed by the name of Barca, or Barca Marmarica: the whole extent whereof in length from the Greater Syrtis, unto Egypt, is no leſſe then 1300 miles, but the breadth not above 200.

The Countrey in the South parts deſolate and barren, ſtored with few Towns, and not many Villages; the people living up and down in ſcattered houſes, and at ſuch a diſtance, as if it were in ſo many Iſlands. Deſtitute not of Springs and Rivers onely, but of Rain-water too, the Clouds not very often dropping: if any fell, it was dried up preſently by the ſands. But within fifteen miles of the Sea, indifferently fruitfull, and well inhabited.

The people in old times were ſaid to have been utterly ignorant of buying and ſelling, of fraud and ſtealing, not knowing, or not caring for the uſe of money; content with little, not ſuperfluous in their Cloaths, or buildings, their houſes for the moſt part (except onely in their greater Cities) made of Oſier-twigs. Much altered in the firſt part of their character, ſince the coming of the Arabians hither; now a Thieviſh Nation, given wholly to robbery and ſpoil. So lazie, that they will not manure, or till their Land, but provide themſelves with Corn from Sicily; laying their Children to pawn for it, till by their Thieving they can raiſe a ſufficient ſumme to diſcharge the debt.

One onely River I finde in it, but of fame enough to ſerve for many; By Ptolomy called Luthon, by Pliny Lethon, by the Poets Lethe. Swallowed by the earth not far from its firſt original, it riſeth up again about Berenice; fained therefore by the Poets to come from Hell, and to create forgetfulneſſe in all them that drink of it; it being the condition of the dead to remember nothing. Thence the occaſion of the fancie. Some Lakes I finde alſo in it, whereof one occaſioned by this River, not far from the Sea; another more within the land (where indeed more neceſſary) near Paliurus. With Mountains better ſtored, (though not much better for them) the principal whereof, 1. Thoſe called Herculis Arena, the Sands of Hercules, thwarting the Countrey Eaſt and Weſt; 2. Bucolicus, on the South of thoſe; and 3. Volpos, a long ridge of hills; bordering upon Africa Propria.

Cities of moſt note in it, 1. Apollonia, in the Eaſt parts, near the Promontory called Zephyrium, in the confines of Libya, or Marmarica. 2. Cyrene, in the Weſt of that; once of ſuch power, that it contended with Carthage for ſome prehemmencies: Then the chief Lady of this tract, which it gave this name to. The birth-place of Eratoſthenes the Mathematician, Callimachus the Poet, and of that Simon of Cyrene, whom the Jews compelled to carry our Saviours Croſſe. 3. Ptolomais, betwixt Cyrene and Arſinoe, built, or repaired by Ptolomy Philadelphus; the Epiſcopal Citie of Syneſius, a learned and religious Biſhop of the primitive times, as appears by his Epiſtles extant. 4. Arſinoe, on the Eaſt-ſide of the River Lathon; ſo called in honour of Arſinoe, the ſiſter of Philadelphus, and wife of Magas once King of this Countrey. 5. Berenice, on the Weſtern bank of the ſaid River; ſo called from Berenice the Mother, or (another of the ſame name) the daughter of Magas: the furtheſt Town of all this Countrey, bordering on the Promontory called Boreum, and the greater Syrtis. This laſt a Quick-ſand very dangerous to Mariners, in compaſſe 635 miles, and by them carefully avoided. 6. Paliurus, more within the land, but on the borders of Libya, or Marmarica, South to Apollonia. 7. Aptungis, now Lungifari, by Ptolomy called Aptuchi Fanum. 8. Herculis Turris, the Tower of Hercules, near the greater Syrtis; erected in the honour of Hercules, his killing of the Dragon, and robbing the Orchards of the Heſperides of their golden Apples. Thoſe Eſperides ſaid to be Aegle, Arethuſa, and Heſperethuſa, the three daughters of Atlas: their Orchard placed by Ptolomy betwixt this Tower and Paliurus; by Pomponius, in the Atlantick Iſlands; by Virgil, in Mauritania Tingitania; by Pliny, both in Mauritania and this Cyrene; and poſſibly in all alike. 9. Zemythus. 10. Acabis, in the midlands; all worn out of memory. 11. Feſſan, of greateſt name now, though ſcarce worth the naming.

The old Inhabitants of this Countrey, were the Aſbeta on the Eaſt, the Barcita near the Greater Syrtis, the Macatuta and Laganici, near the Mountains of Hercules; all probably deſcended from Naphtuhim the ſon of Mizraim; of whom there ſtill remain ſome foot-ſteps in Aptuchi Fanum, the Fane or Temple of Aptuchus. This Aptuchus by ſome miſtakingly called Autuchus, and by the Grecians ſaid to be the ſon of Cyrene, and the brother of Ariſtæus: who being ſent out to ſeek their fortunes, Ariſtæus fell into the Iſle named Caos; and Aptuchus, or Autuchus into Libya, both by them firſt planted. Neptune, the Deity of this Countrey, by the Egyptians called Neptitim, ſeems to come from Naphtuhim; moſt highly worſhipped by this people, becauſe he firſt taught them τὴν τῶν ἁρμάτων ἐλαύνειν, the Art of training horſes to the Coach, or Chariot; in which the Cyrenians after grew ſo expert, that they could drive their Chariots in a round, or circle, and alwayes keep their Chariot-wheels in the ſelf-ſame tract. Of no great power, till Battus a noble Spartan landing in this Countrey, had built the Citie of Cyrene; and found it in ſo good a courſe of life and Diſcipline, that in ſhort time it came to have dominion over the moſt part of this Countrey, and to contend with Carthage about their Territories. Warred on by Apryes King of Egypt, they ſued unto the Greeks for aid, and by their aſſiſtance overcame him. Long after which, falling at odds among themſelves, they craved aid of Ptolomy the firſt of that race; by whom they were finally ſubdued. Left by him at his death to Magus, a ſon of his laſt wife by a former husband, whom he had married to Arſinoe one of his daughters; it came again to the Crown of Egypt, by the marriage of Berenice the daughter and Heir of Magus, with the ſon of Ptolomy Philadelphus. Aliened from which Crown again, for the preferment of ſome of the younger Princes; and in the end given by one of the Ptolomies, the laſt King hereof, to the people of Rome. Reduced into the form of a Province by Auguſtus Cæſar, by whom united in one Government with the Iſle of Crete: but made a Province of it ſelf by the following Emperours: never ſince ſeparated from the fortune and affairs of Egypt, to which now we haſten.

That the Kingdom and Nation of Egypt was of great Antiquity, is not a matter to be doubted; the queſtion in this point, betwixt them and the Scythian, being not eaſily decided. Whether it were ſo ancient, as the Egyptians ſay, may perhaps be controverted. By them it was affirmed, that they had the memory and ſtory of 13000 years; and a ſucceſſion of 330 Kings in the time of Amaſis the ſecond, who was Contemporary with Cyrus. Which number of years, if underſtood of Solarie years, meaſured by the courſe of the Sun, muſt not be allowed of; becauſe it maketh them many thouſand years older than the Creation: but if of Lunarie, which is moſt agreeable unto the accompt of the Egyptians, who reckoned their years by moneths: it will amount unto no more than to 1000, or 1100 years, and ſo fall anſwerably to the times following after the Floud. But for their Kings, 330 in their reckonings, and thoſe of 24 or 25 ſeveral Dynaſties; the matter is not ſo ſoon made up. For either thoſe Kings, muſt not be all Kings, or Supream Lords of Egypt, as the Pharaohs were, but their ſeveral Regents, or Vicegerents, armed with Regal power; thoſe Dynaſties not the ſucceſſions of ſo many Regal families, but of their Subſtitutes and Lieutenants, many of which might live ſucceſſively under one Supream: or elſe we muſt needs look on Egypt, as diſtracted in thoſe times, into ſeveral Kingdoms, amongſt the Princes of thoſe Dynaſties before remembred; or finally, we muſt look for ſome of thoſe Kings and Princes before the Floud. By either of theſe wayes, the buſineſſe may be well agreed. For if that moſt of them were but the names of ſeveral Regents, (as probable enough it is) there might be many ſuch in the reign of one King; according to the Kings fancie, the merit of particular perſons, or the neceſſities of State: Changes of great Officers, eſpecially if grown too great, are not new nor ſtrange. If they were all Kings, or Supream Rulers, (as is alſo probable) we finde not any thing of moment to perſwade the contrary, but that many of them lived and reigned in their ſeveral parts (as in other Countreys in thoſe times) till the greater had devoured the leſſe. Or if they were the names of ſuch Sovereign Princes, as had the ſole command of Egypt before the Floud, (as ſome think they were) they might amount in all to ſo great a number, and ſo many Dynaſties; the iniquity of thoſe times, the ambition of great perſons, and conſequently the ſhort lives of the Kings being duely pondered. That Egypt and moſt part of the world was peopled before the Floud, hath been already proved in our General Preface: If peopled, then no queſtion under ſome form of Government: the names of which Governours (call them Kings, or Rulers, or what elſe we pleaſe) might be preſerved in Egypt on pillars of braſſe or ſtone; or otherwiſe tranſmitted by tradition unto Cham the Father of Mizraim, by whom this Countrey was firſt planted after the Confuſion of Babel. But that old ſtock of Kings and people being deſtroyed in the general Deluge, the Children of Mizraim ſucceeded next in their deſolate dwellings: yet ſo, that the poſterity of Chus and Lehabim, two others of the ſons of Cham, had their ſhares therein. From the firſt of which deſcended the Inhabitants of thoſe parts of Egypt, which lay along the ſhores of the Red-Sea, or Golf of Arabia: in which reſpect, not onely one of the Nomi, or diviſions bordering on the Iſthmus, had the name of Arabia: but the people dwelling on thoſe ſhores; were called Arabes; divided into the Arabes Azarei, and Arabes Adei. And from the other came that mixture of Nations, called Liby-Ægyptii, or Libyans and Egyptians intermixt together: inhabiting in Marœotica and the Western parts. But though these people were derived from several Ancestors, they made one Nation in the total: Subject to Mizraim as their chief, and after his decease, unto his Successors in the Kingdom of Egypt. Concerning whom we may observe, that in Cham, our greatest Antiquaries finde the name of Jupiter Hammon; Mizraim they guesse to be Osiris the great God of Egypt. To him succeeded Typhon, not by right of bloud, but by usurpation. Who dispossessed by Lehabim, the brother of Mizraim (whom the Greeks call Hercules Egyptius) the Kingdom was restored to Orus, the son of Osiris. During the time of these few Princes, hapned all those things which are recorded in the Scriptures concerning Egypt; from the first going down of Abraham, in the time of Osiris, to the advancement of Joseph, in the Reign of Orus: in which there passed the 15. 16. and 17. Dynasties of Regal Vice-Royes; Lieutenants onely, as I take it, to those mighty Princes. The Kings themselves called generally by the name of Pharaoh, though they had all their proper and peculiar names: as afterwards their Successors here had the name of Ptolomy, and the Roman Emperours, that of Cæsar. Not troubling our selves therefore with their many Dynasties, we will lay down the Succession of their Kings, as well as we can; the disagreement of Historians and Chronologers, touching this Succession, being irreconcileable.

The PHARAOHS, or Kings of EGYPT, of EGYPTIAN Race.

A. M.
	1 Mizriam, the son of Cham, by the Grecians called Osiris; in whose time Abraham went into Egypt,
	2 Typhon, an Usurper.
	3 Orus, the son of Osiris, restored unto the Kingdom by his Uncle Lehabim; the Advancer of Ioseph.
2207.	4 Amasis, Themosis, or Amos, in whose time Iacob went down into Egypt. 25.
2233.	5 Chebron. 12.
2245.	6 Amenophis, or Amenophthis. 21.
2266.	7 Amersis, the sister of Amenophthis, 22.
2288.	8 Mephres.
2300.	9 Mesipharmuthesis. 25.
2325.	10 Thamosis, or Thuthmosis, 10.
2335.	11 Amenophthis II. supposed to be Memnon, and the Vocal Statue, 31.
2366.	12 Orus II. the Busiris of the Grecians, a bloody Tyrant; who commanded the male-children of Israel to be slain, 37.
2403.	13 Acencheres, by some called Thermutis, the daughter of Amenophthis the second, and afterwards the wife of Orus; who preserved Moses, and survivid her Husband. 13.
2416.	14 Rathosis the son of Orus, 6.
2422.	15 Acencheres, 12.
2449.	16 Cenchres, by some called Arenasis, Bocchoris, by others; drowned in the Red-Sea with his horse & chariots, 16.
2453.	17 Acherres, 8.
2462.	18 Cherres, 10.
1472.	19 Armais, by the Grecians called Danaus, whose 50. daughters being married to the 50. sons of his brother Egyptus, murdered their husbands: for which cause Danaus being forced out of Egypt, passed into Greece; where attaining to the Kingdom of Argos, he gave unto the Grecians, the name of Danai.
1575.	20 Rameses, surnamed Egyptus, the brother of Danaus.
1550.	21 Amenophthis, III.
2590.	22 Sethos, or Sesothis; 55.
2645.	23 Rhapsaces, or Ranses, 66.
2711.	24 Amenophthis, IV. 40.
2751.	25 Rameses, II. 26.
2777.	26 Thuoris 7. After whose death succeeded a Race of twelve Kings, called the Diospolitani, who held the Kingdom for the space of 177 years. Their names we finde not, but that one of the latest of them, whose daughter Solomon married, was called Vaphra; and perhaps Ogdoos, who removed the Royal Seat from Thebes to Memphis, might be another, and the eighth, as his name importeth.
2961.	39 Smendes, the Sisac of the Scriptures, who made War upon Rehoboam the son of Solomon; conceived to be the Sesostris of Herodotus and others of the ancient Writers. Of whom it is reported, that being a King of great wealth and puissance, he had brought under subjection all his neighbouring Princes: whom he compelled in turns to draw his Chariot. It hapned that one of these unfortunate Princes cast his eye many times on the Coach wheels: and being by Sesostris demanded the cause of his so doing, he replyed: that the falling of that spoke lowest, which but just before was in the height of the wheel, put him in minde of the instability of Fortune. The King deeply weighing the parable, would never after be so drawn in his Chariot. He also was the first that that encountred the Scythians in battel; having already in conceit conquered them, before he led his Army against them. The Scythians much marvelled that a King of so great Revenues would wage War against a Nation so poor: with whom the fight would be doubtful, the Victory unprofitable; but to be vanquished a perpetual infamy and disgrace. For their parts they resolved to meet him; as an Enemy, whose overthrow would enrich them. When the Armies came to joyn, the Egyptians were discomfited, and pursued even to their own doors by the Enemy. But the Scythians could not enter the Countrey, because of the Fens, with whose passage they were unacquainted; and so they returned.

2987. 40 Pseusenes, conceived to be the Cheops of Herodotus; founder of the vast Pyramis before described, 41.

3028. 41 Nepher-Cherres. 4.

3032. 42 Amnoiphtis, V.

3041. 43 Opsochon, the Asychis of Herodotus.

3047. 44 Psamuchos, 9.

3056. 45 Pluſennes, II. 14.

3070. 46 Seſonchis, 21.

3091. 47 Usorthon, 15.

3106. 48 Takellotis, 13.

3119. 49 Patubastis, 40.

3159. 50 Osorchon, the second Hercules Ægyptius, as some will have it, 8.

3167. 51 Psamnis, 15.

3185. 52 Bochoris, called So, 2 King. 17. 4. taken and burnt by Sabacon the King of Ethiopia. 44.

3229. 53 Sabacon King of Ethiopia, 8.

3238. 54 Sevacus son of Sabacon, 14.

3252. 55 Tarachon, falsly supposed to be the Zerah of the Scriptures, 18.

3270. 56 Stephinates, 7.

3277. 57 Niclupses, 6.

3288. 58 Psamniticus, who first made the Grecians acquainted with Egypt. 54

3335. 59 Necho, who slew Josiah at the battel of Megiddo, 25.

3360. 60 Psamnis II. 6.

3366. 61 Aprios, called Hophra, Jer. 44. subdued by Nebuchadnezzar, and deposed by Amasis, 25.

3391. 62 Amasis II. 44.

3435. 63 Psamnites, or Psamniticus II. a King of six moneths onely; vanquished by Cambyses, the second Monarch of Persia, who united Egypt to that Empire, under which it continued till the time of Darius, the sixth King of the Medes and Persians: in the 11. year of whose reign it revolted from him, and became a Kingdom of it self, as in former times.

3555. 64 Amyrtæus, the first King after the Revolt, 6.

For in the 18th. of the reign of this King, Egypt was again recovered by the valour of Ochus the eighth Emperour of Persia. And when Alexander had overthrown Darius, he came, & without blows won this fertile Kingdom; which yielded him, during his life, the yearly value of 6000 talents. After his death, this Kingdom fell to the share of Ptolomeus the son of Lagus, from whom all the subsequent Kings of Egypt were called Ptolomies.

A. M. The second Dynastie, or the Ptolemean Kings of Egypt.

3641. 1 Ptolomy, one of Alexanders Captains, reputed the son of Lagus; but supposed to be the son of Philip of Macedon, and half-brother to Alexander, 40.

3681. 2 Ptol. Philadelphus, who filled the Library of Alexandria with 700000 Volumes, and caused the 72 Interpreters to translate the Bible.

3717. 3 Ptol. Euergetes, the son of Philadelphus, vanquished Seleucus Callinicus, and probably had subdued that Kingdom, if not called back by domestick dissentions. 26.

3743. 4 Ptol. Philopater, a cruel, voluptuous, and incestuous Prince; cruelly slew Cleomenes the last King of Sparta, who had fled to his father for relief, in the time of his exile. 17.

3760. 5 Ptol. Epiphanes, at the age of five years succeeded his father; protected by the Romanes against Antiochus the Great of Syria, who had an aim upon his Kingdom, 28.

3784. 6 Ptol. Philometor, the son of Epiphanes, by Cleopatra the daughter of the great Antiochus; protected in his nonage by the Romans also: caused himself to be Crowned King of Syria, but again relinquished it, 35.

3829. 7 Ptol. Euergetes II. for his deformity called Physcon, the brother of Ptol. Philometor: A wicked Prince, and one that spent the greatest part of his reign in a causeless war against Cleopatra, his wife and sister, 29.

3858. 8 Ptol. Lathurus reigned 16 years with Cleopatra his mother, by whom dispossessed of his estate for the the ſpace of ten years; after her death was ſole Lord of Egypt. His brother Alexander being taken by the Queen-mother as her Aſſociate, in the time of his deprivation, and paſſing in the Accompt of the Kings of Egypt.

3892. 9 Ptol. Auletes, the ſon of Lathurus, ſirnamed alſo Dionyſius, whoſe brother being ſetled by him in the Iſle of Cyprus, was moſt unjuſtly ſtripped of it by the power of the Romans: and he himſelf outed of Egypt by his own ſubjects, but reſtored by the aid & love of Pompey.

3922. 10 Ptol. Dionyſius, called alſo Junior, or the younger, together with Cleopatra his wife and ſiſter, ſucceeded Auletes in the throne, which they held together by the ſpace of three years. In the laſt of which,

A.M.

Pompey was barbarouſly ſlain on the ſhores of Egypt, by the command of Achilles the young Kings Governour; and the young King himſelf unfortunately ſlain in the Alexandrian tumult againſt Julius Cæſar.

Theſe Ptolomean Princes of Egypt, were for the moſt part in wars with the Kings of Syria, in which they were by turns victorious, and vanquiſhed; neither Prince having cauſe to boaſt of his bargain. After the death of Cleopatra, whoſe life and love with Marcus Antonius I will not now relate; this Countrey fell to the ſhare of the Roman Emperours, and was by them highly prized, and warily looked into. The Governour hereof was but a Gentleman of Rome: no Senator being permitted to come into it; it being a maxim of State, not to ſuffer men of great houſes to come into that Countrey, whoſe revolt may endanger the whole Empire. Of this nature was Egypt. For beſides the natural ſituation of the place, very defenſible; and beſides the abundance of money, with which it was ſtored; this Countrey alone furniſhed the Citie of Rome with Corn, for four Moneths yearly. Whence Veſpaſian being choſen Emperour by the Syrian Legions, and hearing of the defeat of his concurrent Vitellius, haſtened hither; to this end onely, that detaining the ordinary proviſion of victuals, he might by famine compel the Citie of Rome to ſtand at his devotion: Ut urbem quoque externa opis indigam fame urgeret, as the Hiſtorian hath obſerved. When made a Province of that Empire, it was counted as the Emperours ſole Peculiar: afterwards made (as well it might) an entire Dioceſe of it ſelf, ſubordinate to the Præfectus Prætorio Orientis. In the diviſion of the Empire allotted to the Conſtantinopolitans, whoſe Government being thought to be inſupportable by this wanton people, they called in the Saracens: by whom the Greek Garriſons were caſt out, and the Countrey made ſubject to Haumar the third of the Caliphs. Afterwards, weary of them alſo, they would have a Caliph of their own, revolting totally from the Caliph of Bagdat. So that from this time forwards we ſhall meet with two Caliphs at a time; the one reſiding at Caire in Egypt, to whom the Saracens, or Moors of Spain and Africk did ſubmit themſelves: the other at Bagdat, who Lorded it over all the reſt, at leaſt as to the ſupream title, and ſome chief Prerogatives; though the main power was cantonned and diſpoſed of among their Sultans.

being over-power'd by Almericus King of Hieruſalem, craved aid of Norradine the Turkiſh Sultan of Damaſcus; which he received under the conduct of Sarracon, or Shirachoch, a right valiant and ſtout Commander: who taking his advantages, not onely cleared the Countrey of Almericus, but got the whole kingdom to himſelf; daſhing out the brains of Elphaiz with his horſemans-mace. And though Etzar, his ſon aſſumed for a while the title of Caliph: yet the deſtruction of himſelf, and the whole Phatimean family, rooted out by Sarracon, ſoon put an end to that claim; and left the kingdom in the peaceable poſſeſſion of the Turkiſh Sultans.

The fourth DYNASTIE, or the Race of the TURKISH Kings or CALIPHS of EGYPT.

1163. 1 Aſereddin, firnamed Shirachoch, called Sarracon by the Chriſtian writers; the firſt of the Turks which reigned in Egypt: of the Noble family of Aiub.

1186. 2 Zeli-heddin, called Saladine by the Chriſtian writers, the ſon (or as ſome ſay, the nephew) of Sarracon or Shirachoch; confirmed in his eſtate by the Caliph of Bagdet, under whoſe juriſdiction he reduced the Egyptian Schiſmaticks. He obtained alſo the kingdom of Damaſcus, conquered Meſopotamia. and Paleſtine: and in the year 1190 regained the City of Hieruſalem. A Prince who wanted nothing to commend him to ſucceeding Ages, nor to glorifie him in the kingdom of Heaven; but the ſaving knowledge of CHRIST JESUS.

1199. 3 Elaziz, the ſecond ſon of Saladine, ſucceeded in the Realm of Egypt; which he exchanged afterwards with his brother Eladel for the kingdom of Damaſcus.

4 Eladel, or El-Aphtzel, by the Chriſtian writers called Meledine, ſucceeded upon this exchange, in the kingdom of Egypt: and overcame the Chriſtians, without the loſſe of a man, at the ſiege of Caire, by letting looſe the Sluces of Nilus; which drowned their Army, and forced them to covenant with him at his own pleaſure.

1210. 5 Elchamul.

1237. 6 Melech Eſſalach, by the Chriſtian writers called Melechſala, the ſon of Elchamul, who overcame Lewis the 9th. of France: & going with that King towards Damiata, was ſlain by the ſouldiers of his guard, called Mamalucks.

1242. 7 Elmutan, the ſon of Melech Eſſalach, ſucceeded, for a time, in his Fathers throne. But the Mamalucks being reſolved to obtain the kingdom for themſelves, inforced him to flie to a Tower of Wood, which they ſet on fire; the poor Prince, half burned, leaping into a River (which ran cloſe by it) was there drowned: & the Mamalucks ſetled in the kingdom, An. 1245.

Theſe Mamalucks were the ofspring of a People on the banks of the Euxine Sea, vulgarly called the Circaſſians: who Melechſala either bought of their Parents, or (at the ſecond hand) of the Tartars, then newly Maſters of thoſe Countries, to ſupply the want of valour in the idle and effeminate people of Egypt; and out of them ſelected a choiſe Band of men, for the guard of his perſon. Knowing their ſtrength, and finding their opportunity, they treacherouſly ſlew Melechſala their Lord and Maſter; appointing one Azeddin Ibek, a Turco-man by nation, and therefore by moſt Chriſtian writers called Turquimenetus, (one of their own number) a man of great ſpirit and valour, to ſucceed in the Throne. Unwilling to re-give the Supreme Authority into the hands of the Egyptians, and not permitting their own ſons to enjoy the name and priviledge of Mamalucks; they bought yearly certain numbers of Circaſſian ſlaves, whom they committed to the keeping of the Egyptians, by them to be inſtructed in the Egyptian language, and the Law of Mahomet. Being thus fitted for imployment, they were taught the Diſcipline of War, and by degrees advanced unto the higheſt Offices of Power and truſt; as now the Janizaries are in the Turkiſh Empire: in choice and ordering of whom, as the Ottoman Turks were Precedented by thoſe of Egypt; ſo it is poſſible enough that the Janizaries may take as great a Change in the Turkiſh Empire, as the Mamalucks did in the Egyptians. So unſafe a thing it is for a Prince to commit the ſole guard of his perſon, or the defence of his Dominions, to the hands of ſuch; whom not the ſenſe of natural duty, but the hopes of profit or preferment, may make uſeful to him. For thus we finde, that Conſtantius a King of the Britans, was murdered by his Guard of Prieſts: moſt of the Roman Emperours, by the hands of thoſe, whom they intruſted, either with the guard of their perſons, or the command of their Armies: And I think no man can be ignorant, how many times the Princes and Eſtates of Italy, have been brought into the extremeſt dangers, by truſting too much to the honeſty of mercenarie Souldiers and Commanders. Take we for inſtance the proceedings of Giacopo Picinino, who with his Followers firſt took Pay of Ferdinand the firſt of Naples; left him, to fight for his vowed Enemy, John Duke of Calabria, the ſon of Rene Duke of Anjou; whom alſo he forſook in his greateſt need. The like we finde of Franciſco Sforza, firſt entertained by the Duke of Millain, from whom he revolted to the Florentines, from them to the Venetians; and being again received into the Pay of the State of Millain, made uſe of their own Army to ſubdue that City.

Nor can I ſpeak better of the Switzers, or their dealing in this kinde with the French Kings, the Sforza's Dukes of Milan; and with whom not, (to ſay the truth) that ever truſted, or employed them.

Now as it is unſafe for a Prince to commit the cuſtody of his perſon, or the defence of his Eſtates to the faith of Forreiners; ſo is it dangerous to him to call in ſuch aids, and to commit his fortunes either wholly, or principally, unto their fidelity. A moderate ſupply of men, money, or munition, from a confederate King, is, I confeſſe, in moſt caſes convenient, in ſome neceſſary: as well to ſave their Natives from the ſword; as to trie a friend, and intereſt an Allie in the ſame cauſe. But to invite ſo great a number of Succours, as from Helpers may become Maſters, and oppreſſe the people whom they came to defend; is that Rock on which many Realms have ſuffered ſhip-wrack, and which a good Pilot of the State ſhould with all care avoid. For as in the ſickneſſe of the body natural, it is hurtfull to a mans health and life, to take more phyſick, than it may (after the effect thereof be wrought) either digeſt, or put out again: ſo in the body politick, it is a perilous matter to receive more ſuccours, than what (after they have done the deed they were ſent for) we may either with conveniency reward and ſettle with us, or at liberty expell Of all Surfeits, this of Forraign ſupplies is moſt uncureable; and Ne quid nimis, if in nothing elſe true, is in this caſe, oracle. There is no Kingdom (I am verily perſwaded) under the Sun, which hath not been by this means conquered; no Common-wealth, which hath not been by this means ruined. To relate all examples, were infinite and tedious; to inferre ſome, pleaſing to the Reader, and to illuſtrate the point, not unneceſſary. To begin with former times, Philip of Macedon, called into Greece to aſſiſt the Thebans againſt the Phocians; brought all that Countrey, in a manner, under his command. The Romans by aiding the Sicilians againſt the Carthaginians, poſſeſſed themſelves of that flouriſhing Iſland; by aſſiſting the Hedui againſt the Sequani, maſtered Gallia; by ſuccouring Androgeus againſt Caſſibelan, ſeiſed on Britain; by ſiding with the Ætolians againſt Perſeus, united to their Empire all the Kingdom of Macedon; and by the ſame courſe what not? In after-ages, the Britains called in the Saxons, and were by them thruſt out of all; the Iriſh called in the Engliſh, by whom they were in proceſſe of time totally ſubdued; and the Indians called in the Mogul-Tartars, who now Lord it over them. Theſe forrein ſupplies are invited, or let into a Countrey, commonly in four caſes. Firſt, when ſome one man upon diſcontent, or deſire of revenge, openeth them a way into a Countrey: upon which motives, Narſes invited the Lombards into Italy; and Count Iulian brought the Moors into Spain: the one to be revenged on the Empreſſe Sophia, who had deſpitefully reviled him; the other to revenge himſelf on King Rodorick, who had raviſhed his daughter. Secondly, when a weaker Faction makes way for them, to maintain their cauſe againſt a ſtronger. On which ground, the Duke of Burgundy being oppreſſed by the faction of Orleans, made way for Henry the fifth to paſſe into France; and the Leaguers drew the Spaniards in, to hold up their declining cauſe againſt Henry the 4th. Thirdly, when an ambitious Prince makes uſe of a forrein power, to uſurp upon the rights of another man. And for that cauſe Ludowick Sforze perſwaded Charles the 8th. to undertake the Conqueſt of the Realm of Naples; that by the countenance of his Arms, he might appropriate to himſelf the Dukedom of Millain. Fourthly, when a King overburthened by a forrein, or domeſtick force, which he is not able to reſiſt, requires the help of a forrein friend: in which caſe, Plus à medico quam à morbo mali, the phyſick proves many times worſe than the diſeaſe. For thus the Kings of Naples of the houſe of Aragon, being in danger of the French, drew in the Aids of Ferdinand the Catholique, the Couſin-German once removed of the King then being; And the Caliphs of Egypt, not able to withſtand the forces of Almericus, craved aid of the Turks: by which means, both thoſe Kingdoms were made a prey to their forrein friends, and by avoiding Scylla fled into Charybdis. Nay many times it ſo happeneth, that theſe forrein ſuccours joyn in deſign with thoſe, againſt whom they were called, and divide the conquered State between them. And ſo we finde that the Burgundians being called by Stilico into Gaul, to prevent the breaking in of the Franks, or French; joyned with them in a common league againſt the Romans, whom they diſpoſſeſſed at laſt of all that Countrey. Onely amongſt ſo many examples to this purpoſe, we finde the Low-Countrey-men to have proſpered by theſe forrein aids; who by the aſſiſtance of the Engliſh, ranſomed themſelves from that yoke of bondage, which was intended to be put upon them by the King of Spain. This I acknowledge to be true, and look upon it as a great Argument of the integrity and honeſty of the Engliſh Nation; although it be as true withall, that the Engliſh never had ſuch an Army there, as to be able to ſubdue them. But give me ſuch another inſtance, I will quit the cauſe: for the ſame Low-Countrey-men found it otherwiſe with the Duke of Anjou, brother to Henry the 3d. of France, whom they created Duke of Brabant, and their Governour-General; permitting him to bring in as many of the French, as either his authority, or their own monies were able to raiſe: who was no ſooner ſetled in that command, but he made it his chief buſineſſe to ſeize upon their ſtrongeſt Holds, and to be a more abſolute Prince amongſt them, than ever the Spaniards, or Burgundians had been before. So that I think I may conclude, that theſe forrein Succours are the laſt to be tried, and the leaſt to be truſted, of any remedies in State. But it's now more than time to return to the Mamalucks; and in them to 1255. 1 Turquimenenis, who being promoted to the kingdom, releaſed King Lewis, whom Melechſala his predeceſſor had taken priſoner; but performed not half of the conditions agreed upon.

2 Clothes (by ſome called Elmutahaz) taking advantage of the miſeries of the Turks, then diſtreſſed by the Tartars; ſeiſed on the greateſt part of Syria and Paleſtine.

1260. 3 Bandocader perfected the begun-conqueſts of Clothes, and took from the Chriſtians the ſtrong City of Antioch; carrying on his Armies as far as Armenia, where he did much ſpoil.

4 Melechſait, or Melechſares, reſtored the power of the Mamalucks in Syria and Paleſtine; where it had been much impaired by Edward the ſon of Henry the 3. of England, and Henry Duke of Mecklenburgh, &c.

1289. 5 Elpis, or Alphix, recovered from the diſſenting Chriſtians, the ſtrong Cities of Tripolis, Berytus, Tyre, and Sidon; all which he razed to the ground, that they might not be any more ſerviceable to the affairs of the Chriſtians.

7 Melechneſar, when he was Lieutenant to Araphus, was diſcomfited by Caſſanes, a great Prince of the Tartars, with the loſs of 40000 Egyptians: but Caſſanes being departed, he recovered again all Syria, and deſtroyed Hieruſalem; for which ſervice he was afterward made Sultan of Egypt.

continued ſeries (which I dare relie on) of his ſucceſſors in this kingdom, till I come to 9 Melecaella, or Melechnaſer, who in the year 1423. ſubdued the Iſle of Cyprus, and made the Kings thereof to be from thenceforth Tributaries to the Mamaluck Sultans.

1465. 10 Cathbeyus, who much reformed the State of Egypt, and was a profeſſed enemy of Bajazet 2d. the 8th. King of the Ottomans.

1499. 12 Campſon Chiarſeſius, ſucceeded on the depoſing of Mahomet.

13 Zanballat, who dethroned Campſon, and not long after was depoſed by 1500. 14 Tonombeius; outed of his Eſtate by the joynt-conſent of the Mamalucks, ſo to make way for Campſon Gaurus.

1501. 15 Campſon II. ſirnamed Gaurus, reformed the diſordered and factious eſtate both of Court and Countrey; and for the ſpace of 16 years governed very proſperouſly. But ſiding at the laſt with Hyſmael the Perſian Sophie, againſt Selimus the firſt of that name, the 3d. Emperor and ninth King of the Ottoman family; he drew his Kingdom into a war, in which his Armies were overthrown, and himſelfe ſlain in battel.

1517. 16 Tonombeſius II. ſucceeded Campſon Gaurus both in his Kingdom and misfortunes: vanquiſhed in his firſt year by the ſaid Selimus the firſt, An. 1517. Who having conquered this rich Kingdom, was uſed to ſay, That he had gotten a Farm to feed his Gomoglans, or young Souldiers. So Egypt became a Province of the Turkiſh Empire, as it ſtill continueth.

What the Revennes of it were in the time of the Pharaohs, I am not able to affirm. Great they muſt be, beyond the proportion of belief, or elſe they could never have been Maſters of ſufficient Treaſure, to finiſh thoſe vaſt Structures which they undertook. Twelve thouſand and five hundred Talents they amounted Annually unto, in the time of the Ptolomies; which of our money makes the ſumme of Two Millions and 347750 pounds. Which ſumme, Auguſtus Cæſar (appropriating this Province to himſelf) ſelf) is ſaid to have doubled: But whether he had it all in Money, or part hereof in Money, and the reſt in Corn, I determine not. Certain it is, that there was yearly ſhipped hence for Rome, in the time of that Emperour, Two hundred thouſand Meaſures of Wheat, every Meaſure weighing Twenty pound weight; which cometh to Seven Millions and an hundred forty thouſand of our Engliſh Buſhels; ſold by him, or diſtributed gratis amongſt the Poor, as he ſaw occaſion. So that there might be very well ſome abatement in Money, conſidering that the Corn amounted to ſo great a ſumme. Nor were they much leſſe, if ought at all, when the Mamalucks ruled in this Countrey. For Campſon Gaurus, at his coming to the Throne, gave no leſſe than Ten millions of Ducats, at one clap, amongſt his Souldiers. But the Turks at this day, partly through their Tyrannical government, and partly through the diſcontinuance of the uſual Traffick through the Red-Sea, receive no more than Three Millions: one of which is hoorded in his own Coffers; the ſecond is appropriated unto his Vicegerent Baſhaw, for ſupport of his charge; the third is diſtributed among his Garriſon-ſouldiers, and ſuch of them as by land guard his own Million to Conſtantinople; for by ſea he dareth not venture it, for fear of the Florentine, who with a few ſhips Lordeth it in the Mediterranean.

And ſo much for EGYPT.

BARBARY.

BARBARY is bounded on the East, with Cyrenaica; on the West, with the Atlantick Ocean; on the North, with the Mediterranean, the Straits of Gibraltar, and some part of the Atlantick also; on the South, with Mount Atlas, by which separated from Libya Inferior, or the Desarts of Libya.

It containeth in it the whole Diocese of Africk, and part of the Diocese of Spain: subject in former times to the Commonwealth of Carthage, and the great Kings of Mauritania, and Numidia. When conquered by the Romans, they gave to that part of it, which they won from the Carthaginians, the name of Africa; calling that Province by the name of the whole Peninsula; and afterwards extended it over all the rest of the Countrey, on the North of Atlas. Which name it held till the subjugation of it by the Saracens, by whom called BABARY: either from Barbar, signifying in their language an uncertain murmur, such as the speech of the Africans seemed to them to be; or from the word Bar, signifying a Desart, which doubled, made up first Barbar. and after Barbary.

It is situate under the third and fourth Climates: so that the longest Summers day in the parts most South, amounteth to thirteen houres three quarters, increased in the most Northern parts to fourteen houres and a quarter. In length extended from the Atlantick Ocean to the greater Syrtis, for the space of 1500 miles; in breadth from Mount Atlas to the Mediterranean, where narrowest, 100 miles; but towards the Straits, where broadest, almost three hundred.

The Countrey in such parts as lie neerest to the Mediterranean, is full of hils, covered with woods, and stored with plenty of Wild-beast; provided reasonably well of most sorts of Fruits; but unfit for Wheat, insomuch that most of the Inhabitants live of Barley-bread. Betwixt which and Mount Atlas is a Champain countrey, watered with many pleasant Rivers issuing from that Mountain, and liberally furnished with Cherries, Figs, Peares, Plummes: Apples of all kinds; abundance of Oile, Honey, Sugar; some Mines of Gold; and that for purity and fineness no where to be bettered. Here are also besides large Herds of Cattel, some Elephants; Lyons, Dragons, Leopards, and others of the like savage nature, and of Apes great multitudes; Horses good store, of excellent both strength and beauty. But taking it in the best parts, it falleth extremely short of that infinite fertility, which is ascribed to it by the Writers of elder times. For besides the miracle of five hundred Ears of Corn growing on one stalk, (whereof more anon) Pliny reporteth, that not far from the City of Tacape, in the way to Leptis, a man might see a great Date-tree overshadowing an Olive, under the Olive a Fig-tree, under that a Pom-granat, under that a Vine, and under all, Pease, Wheat, and Herbs; all growing and flourishing at one time. It is affirmed also by the same Author, that the Vine beareth twice a year, that some fruits or other are gathered in it at all times of the year; and that a peece of ground of four cubits square, was usually rented out at so many Denarii: by which accompt, (as the learned Budæus doth compute it) an Acre of that ground must be worth yearly, 12800 of the Roman Sestertii, which make 320 Crowns. An infinitie and unparallel'd increase of the Fruits of the Earth, if the Author were not out in his valuation.

The people are of a duskish colour, but inclining to blackness: much of the same nature with the Arabians, by whose numerous families formerly they were overspred; but the Africans of the two the better: active of body, well skilled in Horsmanship, but impatient of labour; covetous of honour, inconstant, crafty, and unfaithful; studious in matters of their Law, and in some of the Liberal Sciences, especially Philosophie and the Mathematicks, of which in many parts of the Mahometan Countries they are admitted to be Readers: They are also said to be stately of gate, exceedingly distrustful, in their hate implacable, and jealous of their women beyond all compare. The women of a comely body, and well featured, beautiful in blackness, of delicate soft skins; and in their habit and apparel beyond measure sumptuous: so dress, to make themselves more amiable in the eyes of their husbands; for otherwise not permitted to stir abroad, and seldome to see any body but those of their own houses.

The Language spoken at the present in most of the Maritime Towns, except those of Fesse and Morocco, is the Arabick tongue. In those two Kingdoms, and most part of the Countrey-villages, the Punick or old African, the antient languages of the Countrey: the Punick, spoken in all places where antiently the Carthaginians were of any power; the African (what soever it was) in the parts of Mauritania, not subject to them. Of the Latine there is no remainder; which though it was the Language of the Roman Colonies, yet never could it spread so far as to extinguish or suppresse the old natural tongues: and in the Colonies themselves so much degenerated in short time, so barbarously and imperfectly spoken; that a Sister of the Emperour Severus, who lived in Leptie, a Roman Colonie, coming to Rome to see her Brother, spoke it so incongruously; that the Emperour was ashamed to hear it. And though the Sermons of S. Augustine, an African Bishop, were preached in Latine, because preached in Hippo his Episcopal See, which was then a Colonie of the Romans; yet he confesseth that he was sometimes fain to use such words as were not Latine, to be the better understood of his Congregation.

The Christian faith was first planted, in that part hereof, which was called Africa Propria, by Epænetus, one of the 70 Disciples; by Dorotheus in his Synopsis, affirmed to be the first Bishop of Carthage: In Mauritania, by S. Simon the Apostle, firnamed Zelotes. Metaphrastes addeth, that S. Simon Peter preached here also, when by the Decree of Claudius Cæsar he was forced from Rome; and at his going hence, left Crescens his Disciple to promote the work. But by whomsoever planted first, it found good increase, and was so propagated in short time over all this Countrey, that in the year 250. or before, there were in it above 90 Bishops; for so many were assembled in the Synod of Labesitum: and in the year 398. when the faction of the Donatists was of greatest power, we find no fewer than 214 Catholick Bishops, met together in the Councel of Carthage. Which as it is an argument of the great increase of Christianity in those parts of Africa; so it shewes also that the Church was in ill condition; so over-power'd by the violence of that mighty faction, who had at least 270 Bishops of their own opinion; that the Orthodox party was necessitated to increase the number of Bishops, for fear of being over-balanced by the contrary side, if ever the difference should come to be examined in a publike meeting. These Bishops ranked into six Classes, according to the number of the African Provinces: the Bishops of each Province subject to their own Metropolitan, who in this Diocese (contrary to the usage of all other Churches) had the name of Primates: but all of them subordinate to the Primate of Carthage, originally invested with Patriachal jurisdiction over all these parts. Latius fusa est nostra Provincia: Habet enim Numidiam, & Mauritanias duas sibi cohærentes, are S. Cyprians words. Which shew, that Leo Africanus was a better Geographer, than an Historian or Divine. He would not else have told us in such positive terms, that those of Barbary remained in their old Idolatrie, till 250 years before Mahomets birth; at what time they received the Gospel, and not before. But the good man mistook the reviving of the Orthodox faith, in the time of Justinian, after it had been long suppressed by the Vandals of the Arian faction (who at one time banished hence 300 Catholike Bishops) for the first planting of the Gospel. Otherwise not to be excused. But after this Reviver, it held not long, when suppressed by the Saracens, and so suppressed, that except it be in some few Towns possessed by the King of Spain, and the Crown of Portugal, there is no tract of Christianity to be discerned in all this Countrey; Mahometism being elswhere universally embraced amongst them.

Amongst the men of most note for Souldiery, which have been born in this Countrey, we may reckon Amilcar the Carthaginian, and his three sons: 2. Annibal, 3. Asdrubal, and 4. Mago; men hardly to be parallel'd in any Ages: 5. Masinissa, King of the Numidians, one of their Cotemporaries: and in the following times, 6. Septimus Severus, the Roman Emperour. Amongst those addicted to the Muses, those of most note, 1. Terence, 2. Apuleius. But for Divines, no Region in the world afforded men of more eminent note, nor better deserving of the Church. 1. Tertullian, 2. Cyprian, 3. Julius Africanus, 4. Arnobius, 5. Lactantius, 6. Victorinus Afer, 7. Optatus Melevitanus, 8. Victor Uticensis, 9. Fulgentius, 10. Primasius. And above all, the most learned and divine S. Augustine; a man of such admirable abilities, and indefatigable industry, so constant a Defender of all Orthodox doctrines against the Hereticks of those times, that he deservedly got the name of Malleus Hæreticorum.

Principal Mountains of this Countrey besides Mount Atlas, (of which hereafter by it self) 1. Phocra, 2. Heptadelphus, and 3. Atlas minor in Mauritania Tingitania; 4. Cinnaba, 5. Garas, 6. Madethubadus, and 7. those called Gariphi, in Cæsariensis; 8. Thambes, 9. Mampsarus, 10. Usaletus, and 11. Zuchabarus, in Africa Propia. Of which, and others, we may speak more, if occasion be, in our description of the Provinces in which they are. And for the Rivers of most note, though none of any long course in so narrow a Countrey; we have in Tigintana, 1. Sala, falling into the Atlantick, out of Atlas minor; 2. another of the same name, and the same exit also, but far more to the North, towards the Streit of Gibraltar; 3. Mosocath, mollified by Salust the Historian into Mulucha, and by him placed betwixt the Numidians and the Moors; 4. Malva, the boundarie at this day, betwixt the Kingdoms of Fesse and Algiers; 5. Phthuth, of more fame than any, of which more anon: in Cæsariensis, 6. Nasabath, 7. Sisaris, and Sorbetos: in Africa Propria, or the Kingdom of Tunes, 8. Rubicatus, which issuing out of Mount Thambes, falleth into the Mediterranean near Hippo Regius; 9. Triton, which issuing out of the hill called Usaletus, and making the great Fen called Tritonia Palus, endeth its course also in the Mediterranean; and finally, 10. Bagradas, the greatest in all this tract, which rising out of Mount Atlas, first runneth towards the East, and then receiving from the hill called Mampsarus the addition of another Stream, passeth directly Northward to the City of Utica, and there ends his course.

Having thus laid together the chief Metes and Land marks, I should now proceed to the description of the several Provinces hereof, as in other places. But because each part almost hath had for these later times its particular History, and that it is divided at the present into several Governments, and under the command of several Princes: I will here lay down so much of the Storie of it as concerns the whole, before such division; and afterwards pursue the Historie and Chonographie of the several parts. And for the whole we are to know, that this Countrey was first peopled by Phut the third son of Cham: who leaving his brother Mizraim well setled in the Land of Egypt, passed towards the West; and leaving Lehabim his nephew betwixt him and Mizraim, possessed himself of all the rest from the greater Syrtis to the Ocean. Remainders of whose name we finde in the River Phut, (by Ptolomy called Phthuth, with but little difference, save that it favoureth more of the African roughnesse) near which Iosephus findeth a Region called the Countrey of Phut, a Nation called the Phuteans: seconded herein by S. Hierome, who speaking of this Regis Phutensis in Mauritania, (where the River Phuth is placed by Ptolomy) voucheth in generall terms the testimony of old Writers, both Greek and Latine. So that of this there is no question to be made. Such Nations as descended of this Plantation, shall be hereafter spoke of in their several Provinces. Governed at first by the Chiefs of their several families; but in the end, reduced duced under the command of the Kings of Mauritania, and Numidia, and the State of Carthage. The two firſt, Natives of this Countrey, of the race of Phut; the laſt deſcended alſo of the ſeed of Cham, their common Parent, by the line of Canaan: who on the conqueſt of their Countrey by the Children of Iſrael, forced to ſeek new dwellings; and having ſtore of ſhips to tranſplant themſelves and their Families; ſetled in the maritime parts of Mauritania, and Africa properly ſo called. For, that the people of thoſe parts, though loſt into other names and families, were anciently of a Canaanitiſh, or Phœnician race, may be made apparent, 1. By the nearneſſe of their Language, the Punick, or Phœnician, and old Hebrew tongue, differing onely in the dialect and pronunciation. 2*ly*. By the name Pœni, or Phœni, little differing from that of the Phœnices. 3*ly*. By this teſtimony of S. Auguſtine, who telleth us in the Comment on St. Pauls Epiſtle to the Romans, begun, but not finiſhed by him; Interrogati Ruſtici noſtri quid ſint, reſpondent Punici Chanani; that is to ſay, that when any of the Inhabitants of this Countrey (he himſelf was one) were asked what they were, they anſwered, Chanaanites. 4*ly*. We finde in Herodotus, how Cambyſes having totally conquered Egypt, intended a vvar againſt the Carthaginians, who were then a State (it ſeemeth) of ſome power: but the Phœnicians, being the onely Sea-faring men Cambyſes then had, abſolutely denied to be imployed in that ſervice; they being ſprung from the ſame Tree, that the Carthaginians were. 5*ly*. We read in Procopius, (out of which it is cited by Evagarius Scholaſticus) how on two marble-pillars, ſituate nigh unto Tingis, or Tanger, there was in the Phœnician language and Character engraved, Nos fugimus à facie Joſhuah prædonis, filii Nave; that is to ſay, We flie from the face of that Robber, Joſhuah the ſon of Nun. The ſetling of this people there, a great incitement queſtionleſſe unto Dido, to come thither alſo: who feared as much danger from her brother Pygmalion King of Tyre, whoſe hands had been embrued in the bloud of her husband; as the others did from the ſword of Joſhuah. Gathering together all her Treaſures, which were very great, accompanied with her brother Barca, and her ſiſter Anna, ſhe ſet ſayl for Africk; and landing in the Bay, where after ſtood the Citie of Carthage, ſhe obtained leave to build a Fort of no greater bigneſſe, than ſhe could compaſſe round about with an Oxes hide. This the beginning of that Citie; hence the name of Byrſa, which at firſt it had. Firſt founded in, or about the year of the world 3070. which was about 144 years after the building of Solomons Temple; 143 years before the building of Rome, and about 290 years from the deſtruction of Troy. By which accompt (I note this onely by the way) it is impoſſible that Dido, or Eliſa (for by both theſe names we finde her called) ſhould ever ſee the face of Æneas, unleſſe it were in picture, or imagination; and therefore as impoſſible ſhe ſhould either fall in love with him, or be got with Childe by him, or finally kill her ſelf on her being forſaken. All which being delivered by Virgil in his excellent Poem, did for long time obtain a general belief with moſt ſorts of men. Hereunto conſenteth Auſonius, who honouring the Statua of this abuſed Princeſſe with an Epigram of 18 verſes, among others gives us theſe four.

Invida cur in me ſtimulaſti Muſa Maronem,
Fingeret ut noſtræ damna pudicitiæ?
Vos magis Hiſtoricis (Lectores) credite de me,
Quam qui furta deum, concubituſque canunt.

Why didſt thou ſtir up Virgil, envious Muſe,
Falſly my name and honour to abuſe?
Of me let Hiſtories be heard, not thoſe,
Who to the World, Jove's theft and luſts expoſe.

Credible it is, that Æneas being driven on the Coaſt of Africk, was by ſome Prince there courteouſly entertained, as a man whoſe fame had been his harbinger: but why the ſtory ſhould be faſtned on Dido, I ſee not. Perhaps the unfortunate death of this Queen, who laid violent hands on her ſelf, gave occaſion to the Poet to fain, that it was for the love of Æneas: whereas it was indeed to avoid the luſt and fury of Iarbas, a potent King of the Getuli, a powerfull Nation of thoſe parts of Africa, in which Carthage ſtood, who violently deſired to have his pleaſure on her.

But to proceed. This Citie thus founded in a place commodious for Trade and Merchandiſe, in ſhort time grew exceeding wealthy. And having wealth enough to hire mercenary Souldiers (of which the needy Mauritanians, and Numidians, did afford good ſtore) they conquered all the Sea-Coaſts from Cyrene to the Streits of Hercules (now called the Streits of Gibraltar:) and ſo much alſo towards the South, as was worth the conquering; within which ſpace poſſeſſed of 300 Cities. Grown to ſuch height, that all the African Kings and Princes, and amongſt them the Kings of Numidia, and Mauritania, were at their devotion: They began to caſt their eyes on Sicily, a wealthy Iſland, lying near unto their Coaſt; which queſtionleſſe they had poſſeſſed, if the Romans, envious of their greatneſſe, and fearing their neighbour-hood, had not took upon them the defence of the Mamertines, and under that pretence got ſome footing in it. The end of this war, after many brave exploits on both ſides, was the driving the Carthaginians out of Sicil; their abandoning all the Iſlands, betwixt them and Italy, and the payment of 3200 Talents, amounting to about two Millions of Crowns. And ſuch end had the firſt Punick war, managed for the moſt part in Sicil. During which time, and the firſt war there managed by the Carthaginians, Africk it ſelf was twice invaded; firſt by Agathocles Tyrant of Syracuſe, (or ſo commonly call'd) & afterwards by Regulus a Roman General; but with no other great ſucceſſe, than the ſpoil of the Countrey. The ſecond followed not long after, but the Scene was altered; begun in Spain, proſecuted in Italy, and ended in Africk. Begun by Annibal the ſon of Amilcar, deſcended from Barca the brother of Dido or Eliſa: who having conquered a great part of Spain, and thereby both increaſed his reputation and experience, conducted his victorious Army through Gaul, and over the Alpes, into Italy it ſelf; defeated the Armes of the Romans, and ſlew ſome of their Conſuls: ſo proſperous in the battel of Cannæ, where the whole ſtrength of Rome was broken, that had he followed his good fortune, and made uſe of his victory, he might within four, or five dayes after have dined in the Capitol. Having for 18 years together held them work in Italy, he was called home to defend Africk from the forces of Scipio; who having driven the Carthaginians out of Spain, had very prudently tranſlated the war to Carthage. The iſſue was, that on the loſſe of the battel of Nadagara, the Carthaginians were neceſſitated to ſubmit themſelves to the will of the Conquerour: that is to ſay, to deliver up all their Elephants, together with all their Ships, and Gallies excepting ten; to make no war without leave of the Romans, to pay for the charges of the war, 10000 Talents; and ſuch other extremities. So ended the 2. Punick war, An. V. C. 602. And the third followed not long after, not any way occaſioned by thoſe of Carthage, but out of the inveterate hatred of the people of Rome; who would not think themſelves ſafe whileſt that Citie ſtood: and therefore ſent another Scipio to lay ſiege unto it. By whom, after a long and ſtout reſiſtance, it was at laſt taken and deſtroyed: the Treaſure which was found in it, notwithſtanding their former loſſes, and the low eſtate it was reduced to, beſides what was conſumed by fire, & reſerved by the Souldiers; amounting to 470000 pound weight of ſilver, which cometh to a Million, four hundred and ten thouſand pounds of our Engliſh money.

Dido

Such end had Carthage, and there with all the reſt of the States of Africa, who though in hatred to the Carthaginians they had armed againſt her, and aided the Romans in theſe wars; yet they ſoon found their own fortunes buried in the ſelf-ſame Grave. Subverted, one after another, as occaſion was, they became all ſubject unto Rome; their Kingdoms and Eſtates turned to Roman Provinces. Of theſe were reckoned ſeven in all, that is to ſay, 1. Africa Propria, called alſo Zeugitana, and Proconſularis, 2. Byzacena, 3. Tripolitana, 4. Numidia, 5. Mauritania Cæſarienſis, 6. Sitiſenſis, and 7. Tingitana. Of which the laſt (I know not why) was laid to the Dioceſe of Spain, called therefore Hiſpania Tranſretana, Spain on the other ſide of the Sea, by ſome elder Writers: the other ſix made up the Dioceſe of Africk, ſubordinate to the Præfectus Prætorius for Italy, who had here his Vicarius, or Lieutenant. In this condition it continued, till ſubdued by the Vandals, a German Nation, inhabiting beyond the Elb, on the Coaſt of the Baltick; where now lie the Dukedomes of Mecklenbourg & Pomerania. Their memory ſtill retained there in the ſtile of thoſe Princes, who call themſelves Duces Vandalorum; and in the Confederacy of the Hanſe-towns, called by ſome Latine Writers, Civitates Vandalicæ. A Nation of great power, & numbers, (the Burgundians being onely a part of theſe) one of the five into which Pliny doth divide the Germans. In the 11th. year of the Empire of Arcadius & Honorius, they were invited into Gaul, by the treacherous practices of Stilico, Lieutenant of the Weſtern Empire; and after an abode of three years, paſſed into Spain, together with the Suevi, and Alani, their Aſſociates. But after 18 years, the Goths made that place too hot for them alſo. So that they could not but willingly accept the offer of Bonifacius, the Emperours Vicegerent in Africa: who ſtomacking to ſee his Office beſtowed on Caſtinus an unworthy man, and his enemy; betrayed the Countrey to theſe Vandals, in the laſt year of the life and reign of Gundericus; an Arian in Religion, as were the reſt of the Nation, to which induced by their neighbourhood and acquaintance with the Goths: which Hereſie as they brought with them into Africk, driving thence all the Orthodox Chriſtians; ſo they continued in it till their extirpation.

The VANDAL Kings of AFRICA.

A. C.
412.	1	Gundericus, who firſt invaded Gaul, Spain and Africk. 16.
428.	2	Genſericus, who at the requeſt of Eudoxia the widow of Valentinian, invaded Italy, and ſacked the Citie of Rome, the ſpoil whereof for 14 dayes he gave to his Souldiers: but at the requeſt of Eudoxia, whom he afterward married, he did not burn it. This Eudoxia was wife to the Weſtern Emperour Valentinian; who having a minde to a Lady of Rome, the wife of one Maximus, he cunningly ſlipped the Ring of Maximus off his finger, and by that token ſent for the Lady to the Court; and when ſhe was come raviſhed her. To revenge this diſgrace, Maximus ſlew Valentinian, made himſelf Emperour, and forced Eudoxia to be his wife. But ſhe ſtomacking a match ſo unequal to her high birth, and having ſome incling of the manner of her husbands death, ſent for Genſericus into Italy. This Genſericus conquered Carthage, and Hippo, and reigned 48 years.
476.	3	Honoricus, ſon of Genſericus. 7.
484.	4	Gundebundus, ſon to Genzo the brother of Honoricus. 15.
499.	5	Traſimundus, brother to Gundebundus. 24.
523.	6	Hildericus, the ſon of Honoricus, depoſed by
530.	7	Gilmir, the ſon of Genzo, one of the Deſcendents of Genſericus; overcome by Beliſarius a worthy and politique Leader, whom the Emperour Juſtinian imployed in that ſervice.

And thus ended the Kingdom of the Vandals, (having continued in Spain, and Africa, 146 years) by the valour of Beliſarius. Who after this good ſervice, was imployed by Juſtinian againſt the Gothes, then reigning reigning in Italy; againſt whom he proceeded very fortunately: but being, on I know not what envy, called to Conſtantinople, his eyes were put out, and he was forced to beg his bread at the Gate of the Temple of S. Sophia. A bad reward for ſo good a ſervant. But to go on, Juſtinian having regained Africk, to honour his new Conqueſt, exempted it from the command of the Prætorio-Præfectus of Italy, to which formerly ſubject; and increaſing the number of the African Provinces by the addition of the Iſle of Sardinia, made it a Præfecture of it ſelf: appointing his Præfectus Præterio Africæ to reſide in Carthage, as the chief City of his charge; which he then alſo raiſed to a Conſular Province, having in former times been Proconſular onely. But long it held not in this ſtate: For in the year 647. the Romans were finally expulſed by Hucba, a famous Leader, whom Oſmen, the third Caliph of the Saracens, had deſigned to this ſervice. Africk, from that time forwards, reckoned amongſt the Provinces of the Saracenical or Mahometan Empire. But in the end, the Authority of the Caliphs growing leſſe and leſſe, and every one of their Sultans or Provincial Officers, getting what he could for himſelf; this Conntrey was diſtracted into many Kingdoms and Principalities, but all at laſt reduced to four of moſt conſideration: that is to ſay, the Kingdoms of 1 Tunis, 2 Tremeſen or Algiers, 3 Feſſo, and 4 Morocco. To the Chorography and Hiſtory whereof we do now proceed; adding hereto in the fifth place, the Iſles of Barbary.

1. TUNIS.

THe Kingdom of TUNIS (in Latine called Regnum Tunetanum) hath on the the Eaſt Cyrene; on the Weſt, the Kingdom of Algeirs, or Tremeſin; on the North the Mediterranean; on the South Mount Atlas. So called from Tunis the chief City of it; extended all along the Coaſt of the Mediterranean for the ſpace of 800 miles or thereabout, but the breadth not anſwerable.

The Countrey towards the Eaſt, barren and deſtitute of water; but in the Weſtern parts, ſufficiently plentiful of Corn, and other fruits, and generally well ſet with Trees. The people more patient of labour than the reſt of Barbary, and for that cauſe perhaps more healthy: but queſtionleſſe of ſo good conſtitution, that they live commonly to great Age, unleſſe a violent death prevent them; and are not much afraid of ſickneſſe, or much troubled with it.

It contains in it the two whole Provinces of Africa Propria (or Africa Minor, as ſome call it) and the Numidia of the Romans; called ſince Numidia Antiqua, to difference it from the preſent Numidia, lying on the other ſide of Mount Atlas. The principal Mountains of which Countries, beſides thoſe ſpoken of already, were 1 Audas, 2 Buzara, 3 Cinua, 4 Dios, or the Hills of Jupiter, 5 Gillius, by ſome named Gigion, and 6 thoſe called Thizibi. Rivers of moſt eſteem with them, though not much with others, beſides the [illegible]entioned before, 1 Ampſaga, now called Collo, and by ſome Sat Gemar, which divideth this King[illegible]m from that of Tremeſen; 2 Catuda; 3 Cyniphus, iſſuing from the hills called Zuchabarus, and falling into the Sea not far from Tripolis. Beſides which there were ſome great Lakes; the chief whereof, 1 Hipponites near Mount Cinna; 2 the Lake of Pallas, or that called Palus Tritonia, where Minerva was ſaid to have ſhewed herſelf the Inventreſſe of Spinning and of Oyle, and for that much worſhipped by this People; 3 Sylura, another great Lake, but not ſo famous as the former, becauſe not honoured by a Goddeſſe.

The whole divided by the Romans into theſe four parts, viz. 1. Africa ſpecially ſo called, lying on the Sea, from the River Ampſaga to the Leſſer Syrtis; 2. Tripolitana, from the Leſſer Syrtis to the Greater; 3. Numidia, lying on the Weſt of Zeugitana, or Africa Propria: and 4. Byzacena, ſo called from Byzacium, or Byzacina, a chief City of it; the territory whereof ſo extremely fruitful, that 400 Ears of corn were ſent to Rome in the time of Auguſtus, and 360 in the time of Domitius Nero, growing on one ſtalk. But this Diviſion being long ſince worn out of memory, it is divided at the preſent into the Provinces of, 1. Ezzab, 2. Tripolis, 3. Tunis, 4. Conſtantina, 5. Bugia.

1. EZZAB is that part of this Kingdom which lieth next to Cyrene: A ſmall Region, and not very fruitful; yet the Inhabitants hereof are conceived to be rich, (the richer, in regard they are free from tributes): their wealth not riſing from the commodities of their own Countrey, which affordeth them little elſe beſides Dates and Olives; but from ſuch merchandiſe which they buy of the Venetians, and ſell to the Numidians. The richeſt, thoſe of Meſrata, (a little Province of this Tract) which lieth near the Sea. Towns it hath ſome, but none of note: the chief of which, 1. Meſurata, 2. Sibeca, both upon the Sea; of which the firſt gives name unto that little Province ſpoken of before. Of more note in the former times was Phileni Villa, ſituate on the Greater Syrtis, near the Promontory then called Hippi, but now Cabo de Surta; memorable for the adjoyning Altars, called Phileni Aræ, erected by the Carthaginians upon this occaſion. Some controverſies being grown betwixt thoſe of Carthage and Cyrene, about their bounds; it was agreed, that two men at a ſet houre ſhould be ſent out of each City towards the other; and where they met, there to be fixed the Meer-ſtone of their ſeveral Territories. The Phileni, two brothers nominated for Carthage, were ſo quick of foot, that they had gotten a good way into the Countrey of the Cyrenenſes, before they were met; wherewith the Cyreneans much enraged, put to them this choice, either to go ſo much back again, or to die in the place. This laſt accepted by the Phileni, who preferred the common good of their Conntrey before their own; for preſervation of whoſe name and honour to ſucceeding Ages, the grateful Carthaginians did erect theſe Altars.

2. Weſt of the Province of Ezzab, lieth that of TRIPOLIS, which together with Ezzab made that Province which the Romans called Tripolitana. Not much more fruitful than the other, except in Barley; but more commodiouſly ſeated in regard of the Sea, which is here more ſafe for navigation; the former lying wholly on the greater Sirtis. Chief Towns hereof, 1. Leptis Magna, ſo called, to diſtinguiſh it from another, but of leſſe note, and therefore called Leptis Parva, ſituate in the (now) Province of Tunis. A town of ſo great wealth and trade, that it was worth a Talent daily to the Carthaginians. 2. Euphranta, called alſo Pyrgos Euphranta, from ſome ſtrong Tower in it on the Weſtern bank of the greater Syrtis. 3. Ciniſterna, on the Eaſtern ſide of the River Cyniphus. 4. Cabis, the utmoſt City of this Province weſtward; the ſame which Ptolomie calls Tacapa, ſituate at the fall of the River Triton into the leſſer Syrtis, 5. Sabratha, and 6 Heva; not elſe obſervable, but that together with Leptis Magna they made up that one City, which the Romans called from thence Tripolis. 7. Tripolis, founded by the Romans, and by them peopled with Colonies from thoſe three Cities before mentioned. A City of great name and riches, till deſtroyed by the Saracens. By whom rebuilt, adorned with many fair Temples, Colledges, and Hoſpitals; and flouriſhing in much wealth and luſtre, it became a Kingdom of it ſelf, but ſubject to the Kings of Tunis, till taken by the Genoes with a Fleet of 20 ſail, and by them ſold to the King of Feſſe. Recovered not long after by the King of Tunis, it came once more to have a King of its own; till by the valour of Peter of Navar, it was conquered for Ferdinand the Catholique, the firſt Monarch of Spain: whoſe Nephew Charles the 5. conferred it on the Knights of S. John of Hieruſalem, then expelled from Rhodes: whom the Turks under Sinan Beſa General of Selimus the ſecond, diſpoſſeſſed by force, An. 1551. Since that the ordinary Reſidence of the Turkiſh Begterbeg, for theſe African Provinces; and made an uſual retreat for Pyrats, who infeſt theſe Seas, and do much miſchief to the Coaſts of Sicile, Italy, and others of the Chriſtian Countries.

3. The Province of TUNIS, lying Weſtward to that of Tripolis, taketh up ſo much of this Kingdom, as antiently conteined the Province of Bizacena; and ſo much of the Roman Africk, as lieth on the Eaſt of the River called Gandilharbar, the Hipponites Lacus of the Antient writers. The Country antiently ſo fruitful, that it yielded uſually an increaſe of an hundred and fifty fold: For proof of which, beſides the teſtimony of approved Authors, the wonderfull, if not prodigious Ears of Corn, which before we heard of, may ſerve ſufficiently. Now indigent, and ſo unprovided of all Grain for the uſe of their families, that they are fain to furniſh themſelves out of other places: the People not daring to manure or ſow their land, for fear of the Arabians; who ever and anon fall into theſe parts, and ſpoil what they meet with.

Places of moſt note in it, in the elder times, 1. Adrumetum or Adrumyſtus, now called Machometta, once a Roman Colony, and the Metropolis of the Province of Byzacena, by conſequence, in the times of Chriſtianity, an Archbiſhops See: walled and repaired by the Emperour Juſtinian, and by his command called Juſtiniana. 2. Zama, the incamping place of Annibal, before his battel with Scipio. 3. Nadagora, memorable for the great battel, betwixt the two renowned Generals of Rome and Carthage; not parallel'd ſince their own times, nor in thoſe before them. In which the great Controverſie between thoſe Cities being to be tried, the fortune of the day fell unto the Romans: For though Annibal ſhewed his ſingular judgment in ordering his Souldiers, as Scipio could not but acknowledge; yet being far the weaker in horſe, and by an Order of the Senate of Carthage to fight in a place of diſadvantage, he could do no marvels: the Romans, with the loſſe of no more then 1500. of their own men, killing 20000 of the Carthaginians, in the fight and chaſe. 4. Salera the firſt place took by Scipio, after the landing of his Army. 5. Utica, a Tyrian Colony, beautified with an Haven capable of the greateſt ſhips; much ſpoke of in the wars of Carthage; and memorable for the death of Cato (hence ſirnamed Vtican) who here ſlew himſelf, for fear of falling into the hands of Cæſar. It is now called Biſerta. 6. Bizacium, ſeated in liberal and fruitful ſoils, as was ſhewn before; whence the Province had the name of Byzacena. 7. Ruſpinum, made by Cæſar the ſeat of his war in Africk, againſt the ſons and faction of Pompey; as memorable in the times ſucceeding, for being the Epiſcopal See of S. Fulgentius. 8. Thyſtrus, remarkable for the Tragedie of the Gordiani: Of which the Father in this City was ſaluted Emperour by the Souldiers, in hatred to Maximinus then their Emperour, whoſe Procurator they had ſlain in a tumult: but his party being diſcomfited by Capellianus, whom Maximinus ſent againſt him, and his ſon killed in the defeat; upon the hearing of the news, he here hanged himſelf. 9 Hippagreta, on a great Lake betwixt Carthage and Utica; one of the Towns which held out longeſt for the Mercinaries, in their deſperate Rebellion againſt the Carthaginians; by which the Eſtate of that great City was in danger of ruine, at the end of the firſt Punick war. 10. CARTHAGE, once the Lady and Miſtreſſe of Africk, ſituate in the bottom of a ſafe and capacious Bay, the entrances whereof were very ſtrongly fortified both by art and nature, environed with the Sea, except upon one ſide only, where joyned unto the Land by a narrow Iſthmus, about two miles and an half in breadth. In compaſſe 24 miles, but meaſuring by the outward wall, it was 45. For without the wall of the City it ſelf, there were three walls more, betwixt each of which there were three or four Streets, with Vaults under ground of 30 foot deep; wherein they had place for 300 Elephants and all their Fodder, with Stables over them for 4000 Horſe, and all their Provender, and Lodging in thoſe Out-ſtreets for the Riders of the ſaid Horſe, and for 20000 Foot beſides, which never came within the City, to annoy or peſter it. On the South-ſide ſtood the Caſtle called Byrſa, which took up two miles and an half in compaſſe: firſt built by Dido, on that ground which ſhe obtained of the Libyans, when ſhe got leave to buy only ſo much land of them, as ſhe could compaſſe round about with an Oxes hide. In that, the ſumptuous Temple of their antient Deities, Juno, Apollo, Æſculapius, Belus. On the Weſt-ſide, a ſtanding Pool made of the Sea-water, let into it by ſo narrow a paſſage, that there was but 70 foot open for the Sea to enter: On which they had a ſtately Arſenal, with their Ships and Gallies riding by it. Of the foundation and affairs of this mighty City we have ſpoke already. The Government of it firſt by Kings, thoſe abſolute enough at firſt, afterwards limited by the Senate; and finally made meerly titulary by the power of the People: which unproportionable mixture is much condemned by Ariſtotle, in the 2. of his Politicks. Their Territories, before the ſecond

Punick

Punick war, when they were at the greateſt, extended on the Sea coaſts of the Mediterranean, from the Greater Syrtis to the Streits, and ſo unto the River Iberus, for the ſpace of 2000 miles in length: their Revenues anſwerable, and readily brought in, by reaſon of their infinite trading. Which made the Roman people think themſelves unſafe, whilſt this City ſtood. Reſolved on the deſtruction of it, they ſent againſt it L. Martius and M. Manlius, their two Conſuls, with a puiſſant Army: to whom the Carthaginians willingly delivered up their Arms and Shipping, contracting only for the preſervation of the City it ſelf, which was faithfully promiſed. But when they had withall given up the ſons of their principal men, to be ſent to Rome for Pledges of their future loyaltie; they were told that a City conſiſted not in wals, but in lawes and government. Theſe with the Corporation, ſhould remain as formerly; the Town to be removed ten miles further off, where there was no Sea to thrive and grow rich upon. Enraged herewith, it was reſolved to abide the utmoſt: but they wanted neceſſaries for reſiſtance. That want ſupplied for want of Iron to make Arms, with Gold and Silver; the Houſes pulled down to fruniſh them with timber to build a Navy; the noble Ladies cutting off the hair of their heads, to make Ropes and Cordage; 25000 Women liſted to defend the wals. But the fatal moment being come, a ſecond Scipio is ſent thither to diſpatch the work; by whom at laſt the Town was taken, and for 17 dayes together conſumed with fire: the Queen and multitudes of the People burning themſelves in the Temple of Æſculapius, becauſe they would not fall into the hands of the Romans. Reedified by Julius Cæſar, and made a Colonie, it recovered ſome part of her former luſtre; but ſo, that her chief glory was rather to be ſought for in her antient, then her preſent fortunes. Populi Romani Colonia, olim Imperii ejus pertinax æmula, & priorum exidio rerum, quam ope præſentium clarior; was her character in the times of Ponponius Mela. But in this laſt Eſtate, accompted for the Metropolis of the Dioceſe of Africk, the Reſidence of the Vicarius or Lieutenant-General, and the See of the chief Primate of the African Churches; who had 164 Biſhops under him in that one Province wherein Carthage ſtood. Deſtroyed in the ſucceeding times by the Vandals, and after that by the Saracens; it revived again, and had the reputation of a Citie of no mean importance, till the year 1270. at what time being forced by the French, under Lewis the 9th. and thereupon deſerted by its old Inhabitants, it began to languiſh, and was at laſt reduced to nothing but a few ſcattered houſes, not above five and twenty ſhops, one Temple; all the reſt a ruine. So truly ſaid the antient Poet

Sic patet exemplis Oppida poſſe mori.
Thus by examples do we ſee.
That Towns may die as well as we.

Of chief note at the preſent, 1. Tunis, ſuppoſed to be the Themiſa or Thumiſa of Ptolomie; of ſmal accompt till the laſt deſtruction of Carthage, by whoſe fall it roſe. Situate not far from the ruines of that famous City, in compaſs about five miles, and in that compaſs ſaid to contain 10000 houſholds. Of great traffick; and well frequented by the Merchants of forreign nations; chiefly from Genoa, and Venice. Remarkable in the Story of the Holy Wars, for the ſieges and ſucceſſes of two of our Engliſh Princes; that namely of King Edward the firſt, in his fathers life time; and that of Henry the fourth, then but Earl of Darby: by both which (though the laſt ſerved only under the command of the French) the City was compelled to a Compoſition; Lewis the 9. commonly called S. Lewis, dying at the firſt ſiege of it 2. Goletta, a ſtrong Fort, built for defence of the Haven of Tunis, in a Demy-Iland, divided from the main Land by two narrow paſſages, but ſo that it commands them both. Taken, but not without extreme difficulty by Charles 5. An 1535. together with the Turkiſh Navy riding in the Lake faſt by it; but again recovered by the Turks about 40 years after, An. 1574. 3. Cairoan, built by Hucba, who firſt conquered Africk for the Saracens, in a ſandie Deſart, about 100 miles from Tunis, and 36. from any part of the Sea, to ſecure himſelf from any invaſion, which the commodiouſneſs of the Sea might bring upon him. Adorned by the firſt founder of it, with an admirable Temple raiſed on Pillars of Marble; who placed alſo in it a Colledge of Prieſts, and made it the chief Reſidence of his poſterity for the ſpace of 170 years, who reigned here nnder the great Caliphs as the Sultans of Africk. Deſtroyed by the Arabians, in the 424 year of their Hegira, but regained from them by the King of Morocco and ſtill of ſuch eſteem amongſt theſe Mahometans, that their chief men are brought thither to be buried from all parts of the Country; hoping by the prayers of thoſe Prieſts to find a ſhorter way to Heaven, than in other places.

4 More Weſtward yet lies the Province named CONSTANTINA, ſo called from Conſtantina the chief City of it. Extended from the Lake Hipponites, now named Guadilharbar, to Conſtantine a Mountain bordering on Bugia, which I conceive to be the ſame with Mons Audus in Ptolomie. The ſoil hereof ſaid to be very rich and fruitful both for Corn and Cattel, yielding abundance of Fruits, and great ſtore of Butter. Rubricatus, by Oroſius called Ordalio, now Ludog, the chief River of it.

Principal Cities of this Province, 1. Tabraca, on the Eaſt; and 2. Hippo Regius, on the Weſtern bank of Rubricatus: both Roman Colonies, but this laſt moſt famous, in being the Epiſcopal See of renowned S. Auguſtine. 3. Bona, the birth-place of that Father, built by the Romans about an hundred miles from the Sea; but ſituate in a large Plain, containing 40 miles in length, 25. in breadth: ſo rich and fertile, that the Town flouriſheth to this day; adorned with a ſumptuous Moſque, and never without the company of Merchants coming from Genoa, Tunes, and the Iſle of Zerby, for their Fruits and Butter. 4. Thuburnica another Colonie of the Romans. 5. Sicca Veneria, another Town of the ſame nature; by Solinus called Veneria only, and by Pliny, Sicca. 6. Culcua, another of the Roman Colonies, by the Moors now called Cucutina, but Conſtantina by the Latines, and moſt Nations elſe, now the chief City of this Province, ſituate near a Mountain of the ſame name, near the edge of Bugia An antient City, but containing ſtill 8000 families, many ſomptuous Buildings; amongſt which a large Temple, two Colledges, and three or four Monaſteries: frequently viſited by the Merchants, every Trade having here its peculiar Street; their chief commodities, Wool, Cloth, Silks, Oyl, and ſome ſorts of Fruits; which they exchange for Dates, or Slaves, who are here good merchandiſe. The City for the moſt part, fenced about with high craggy rocks; and where thoſe want, with ſtrong walls, of a great height, and moſt exquiſite workmanſhip, declaring the antiquity of it. A further argument whereof may be a fair Triumphal Arch not far from the City, and ſome Hot Bathes, after the manner of the Romans.

5. Moſt Weſtward lieth the Province of BUGIA, extended from Mount Conſtantine to the River Ampſa, now called Chollo, or Sef-Gemar: which with ſo much of Conſtantina, as lieth on the Weſtſide of Rubricatus, made up that Province, which the Romans called by the name of Numidia. The length hereof 150 miles on the Mediterranean, the breadth not above half ſo much. Narrower than Mauritania, as is ſaid by Pliny; ſed ditior & magis culta, but the richer of the two, and the better peopled. The Country of a fat ſoil, plentiful both in fruits and corn, but moſt fit for paſturage: to which the people were ſo addicted, that many of them cared not for building Houſes, (inſtead whereof they uſed the Hold of a Ship with the Keel turned upwards) but removed from one place to another, as their Paſtures failed them. From thence called Nomades by the Grecians, ἀπὸ τῦ νέμειν, ſignifying to feed or graſe. The people of good metal, ſwift of foot, and well skilled in horſmanſhip: but better in the onſet and to give a charge, than in ſtanding to it; ſuch as the wild Arabians are now ſaid to be.

Chief Towns hereof (beſides Thuburnica, Culcua, Bona, Hippo, ſpoken of before, belonging to Numidia, thougth not to Bugia) 1. Bugia, built by the Romans on the ſide of a lofty Mountain looking into the Sea; by ſome conceived to have been the Thebuaca of Ptolemy, now the chief City of this Province; adorned with many ſumptuous Moſques, ſome Monaſteries, and Colledges for ſtudents in the Law of Mohemet, and many fair Hoſpitals for relief of the Poor; fenced alſo with a ſtrong Caſtle. Secured by the ſtrength whereof, and growing rich by the fruitfulneſs of the ſituation, the Citizens began to grow proud and wanton; working much miſchief to the Spaniards by their Gallies, which they had at ſea; till taught more modeſty by Peter of Navar a Spaniſh Captain, A. 1508. by whom the Town was taken and the people plundered. 2. Chollo, upon the Sea-ſide, the Chollops Magnus (as I take it) of Ptolomie; reported for a wealthie City. 3. Nicaus, ſeated towards Mount Atlas, in a pleaſant and delightful country: which though interſperſed with many hils, yet being thoſe hils are clothed with woods, yield them good ſtore of Goats and Horſes, and feed the Vallies with freſh ſprings, which do iſſue from them; they rather adde than detract any thing from the pleaſures of it. 4. Madaura, by ſome called Madurus, the birth-place of Apuleius. 5. Tunudromum, another of the Roman Colonies. 6. Cirta, or Cirta Julia, the Metropolis of Numidia, when a Roman Province, and formely the Seat-royal of Sypax King of the Maſaſyli, within whoſe country it was reckoned in former times, though afterwards laid unto this Province. Situate near the mouth of the River Ampſaga, and memorable for the tragedie of Sophonisba, the daughter of Aſdrubal of Carthage; a Lady of moſt exquiſite beauty, and yet carried more charms in her tongne than in her eyes. Eſpouſed firſt unto Maſiniſſa King of the Numidians, but after, upon reaſon of State, married unto Syphax; who being took priſoner by his Rival, and brought to Cirta, the Lady upon hopes of liberty and honour both, beſtowed her ſelf on her firſt Lover: but Scipio fearing leſt that marriage might withdraw Maſiniſſa from the Roman party, cauſed the Lady to be ſeized on; which Maſiniſſa not being otherwiſe able to prevent or remedie, ſent her a Cup of poyſon, which ſhe drank and died.

Of theſe Numidians there is much mention in the Stories of Rome, and Carthage; imployed by this laſt City in all their wars, both in Spain, Italy, and Sicil. Siding at laſt with Scipio againgſt that State, they did good ſervice to the Romans in the weakening and deſtruction of that City: whoſe fall they did not long ſurvive: firſt conquered in the war of Jugurth; after the death of Juba, made a Roman Province. Their Kings, as far as I can trace the ſucceſſion of them, follow in this Oder.

The Kings of the NUMIDIANS.

1 Gala, the Father of Maſiniſſa.

2 Deſalces, the brother of Gala; according to the laws of the Country, which gave the Crown unto the brother, not the ſon of the former King, (like the law of Taniſtry in Ireland) ſucceded Gala.

3 N. N. a ſon of Deſalces, in the abſence of Maſiniſſa, then ſerving under the Carthaginians in the wars of Spain, poſſeſſed himſelf of the throne: ſlain not long after by a Rebel.

4 Maſiniſſa, ſon of Gala, recovered the kingdome of his Fathers; but again outed by Syphax and the Carthaginians, betwixt whom and Maſiniſſa, touching Sophonisba, there was deadly feud. Aided by Scipio and the Romans, with whom aſſociated againſt Carthage, he not only recovered his own kingdome, but was gratified with the greateſt part of that which belonged to Syphax. A profeſſed Enemy to Carthage, (the final ruine whereof he lived to ſee) till the time of his death, being then ninety years of Age.

5 Micipſa, the ſon of Maſiniſſa; of whom nothing memorable.

6 Jugurth, the ſon of Maſtanabilis, one of the Brethren of Micipſa, having wickedly made away the two ſons of Micipſa, uſurped the kingdom; & manifeſtly withſtood the Romans, whoſe attempts ſometimes by force, ſometimes by ſubtility, but chiefly by money and bribes, he overthrew and made fruſtrate: Et fuit in Ingurtha (ſaith Florus) quod poſt Annibalem

Annibalem timeretur. At laſt, being broken by Metellus, vanquiſhed by Marius, and by Bocchus delivered into the hands of Sylla; he was by Marius led in Triumph to Rome. In this Triumph was carried 3700 pound weight in Gold; in Silver-wedges, 5775 pound weight; and in ready Coin, 28900 Crowns: it being the cuſtome of the Romans in their Triumphs, to have carried before them all the riches and money, which they had brought out of the conquered Countreys, to put into the common Treaſury.

7 Hiempſal, ſon of Bocchus King of Mauritania, gratified for his Fathers treachery in betraying Jugurth, with the Kingdom of Numidia; Relieved Marius in his exile.

8 Hiarbas, another of the Marian faction, preferred to the Numidian Crown, but vanquiſh'd and deprived by Pompey, at that time one of Sylla's Captains.

9 Hiempſal II. preferred by Pompey to this Kingdom.

10 Iuba, the ſon of Hiempſal the ſecond, who ſiding with Pompey againſt Cæſar in the Civil wars, gave a great overthrow to Curio, one of Cæſar's Lieutenants; Curio himſelf ſlain, his whole Army routed, ſuch as were taken priſoners murdered in cold bloud. But being diſcomfited by Cæſar, after Pompey's death, Numidia was made a Province of the Roman Empire.

Thus by the fall of Carthage, and the death of Iuba, came the whole Provinces of Africa Propria, and Numidia (containing the now Kingdom of Tunis) into the power of the Romans. Of which, the Nations of moſt note were the Nigitimi, on the Eaſtern parts of the Mediterranean, the Machyni, near the leſſer Syrtis; the Libyæ-Phœnices and Medini, bordering upon Carthage; the Ionii, Navatræ, and Cirteſii, taking up all the Sea-coaſts of Numidia. Such as inhabited more South-wards on the back of theſe, not ſo much conſiderable: None of them to be ſtaid upon, but the Libyæ-Phœnices, a mixt people of the old Libyans, and new Phœnicians, as the Liby-Ægyptii were of the ſaid Libyans and the neighbouring Egyptians. The memory of all of them ſo defaced by the violent inundation of the Arabians, that there is ſcarce any tract, or footſteps of them in all the Countrey. When conquered by the Saracens, they were at firſt ſubject to the Caliph, or Sultan of Cairoan: after the ſpoil whereof by the Arabians, ſubdued by Abdul Mumen King of Morocco, and by him added to that Kingdom. In the diſtractions of that State, made a peculiar Kingdom by ſome one of the Relicts of the Stock of the Almohades, who took unto himſelf the title of King of Tunis, that Citie being his chief Seat. By him tranſmitted unto his poſterity, till the dayes of our Grand-fathers; when Muleaſſes, one of the youngeſt ſons of Sultan Mahomet, having firſt murdered Maimon his eldeſt brother, and put out the eyes of twenty of the reſt, uſurped the Soveraignty. Roſetta, the onely one of thoſe Princes who eſcaped this maſſacre, upheld a while by the Arabians, and by them deſerted was feign to put himſelf into the hands of Barbaraſſa, King of Algieres, and Admiral of the Turkiſh Navy; by whom he was carried to Conſtantinople, & ſo preſented to Solyman, who under colour of reſtoring him to the throne of his Fathers, conquered that Kingdom for himſelf; outed thereof not long after by Charles the fifth, appearing in favour of Muleaſſes, An. 1535. But the Tyrant did not long enjoy his ill-gotten Soveraignty, when his eyes were alſo put out by his own ſon Amida, and ſo committed to cloſe priſon: Nor did Amida enjoy it long, diſpoſſeſſed by Abdamelech his fathers brother. To Abdamelech Mahomet his ſon ſucceeded; who being a childe, and by affairs ill governed by his Tutors, and other Miniſters of State, gave opportunity to Arayda to regain the Kingdom. During which broils the Turks again recovered footing, poſſeſſed themſelves of a great part of the Countrey, and forced Arayda into exile, who flying to Don Iohn of Auſtria, then newly victorious at Trepanto, invited him to the conqueſt of Tunis, but he got little by the bargain; for Don Iohn having ſubdued the Kings conferred the ſame on Mahomet the brothers of Amyda, and carried Amida in bonds to the Iſle of Sicily, where he after died. Nor did Mahomet enjoy it long, for the next year the Turks beſieged and took the Citie of Tunis, with the ſtrong Fort of Galetta, with all the other Forts and holds of that Kingdom, made ever ſince a Province of the Turkiſh Empire; The poor King being carried priſoner to Conſtantinople at the end of the war, which was in the year 1574. and the laſt of Selymus the ſecond.

2. TREMESEN, or ALGIERS.

THe Kingdom of TREMESEN is bounded on the Eaſt, with the River Ampſaga, (now called Major) by which parted from the Kingdom of Tunis; on the Weſt, with the Kingdoms of Feſſe and Morocco, from which ſeparated by the River Malutha, or Malva. So called from Tremeſen, or Teleuſine, the chief Citie of it. Called alſo the Kingdom of Algiers, from the Citie ſo named, ſometimes the Seat Royal of their Kings.

In the flouriſh of the Roman Empire, it had the name of Mauritania Cæſarienſis: Mauritania, becauſe a part of the Kingdom of Iuba King of Mauritania, of which more anon; Cæſarienſis, from Cæſarea the chief Citie of it, as that ſo called in honour of Auguſtus Cæſar, on whom the Kings hereof depended. More antiently the Kingdom of the Maſæſyli, one of the moſt powerfull Nations in all this tract, over whom reigned Syphax before mentioned, called therefore by Strabo, Maſæſylilia, with good propriety; and corruptedly, Maſſylia.

The Kingdom extended in length from Eaſt to Weſt, for the ſpace of 380 Miles, but of breadth not anſwerable; Is generally of the ſame nature (as to the Soyl and Air) with the reſt of Barbary: ſufficiently fruitfull towards the Sea, more barren and uncomfortable in the Southern parts. But meanly peopled, by reaſon of the continual ſpoils made by the Arabians, who poſſeſſe the Deſarts; and the Cities of it much waſted by continual wars. Nor have the people any peculiar Character, but what belongeth to others of theſe Africans alſo.

Places of moſt importance in it, 1. Guagyda, inconveniently ſeated, as paying their accuſtomed Tributes to the King of Tremeſen, their natural Prince; and contribution to the Arabians, who are here ſo numerous and powerfull, that the Kings themſelves of this ſmall Kingdom were fain to buy their peace of them at exceſſive rates. 2. Tigedent, ſometimes famous, and abounding with men of learning; now almoſt forſaken, by reaſon of the ill neighbourhood of theſe Arabians. 3. Tebocrit, inhabited for the moſt part by Weavers. 4. Breſch, the Inhabitants whereof uſe to paint a black Croſſe on their cheek, and another on the palm of their hands: the reaſon of which cuſtom they are ignorant of, but ſome conceive it to be a remembrance of their Chriſtianity. 5. Ned-Roma, built as the people do pretend, by the antient Romans, as an Epitome, or Abridgement of that mighty Citie, to which it is ſaid to have ſome reſemblance; and that imported by the name, which ſignifieth in their language, Like to Rome. Perhaps the ſame which Ptolomy calleth Novum oppidum, or the New-Town, then a Roman Colony. 6. Batha, once a great Citie, ſince decayed by wars. 7. Oran, a noted Haven on the Mediterranean, ſaid to contain no fewer then 10000 Families. Powerfull at Sea, and much infeſting with their Gallies the Coaſts of Spain; till taken for Ferdinand the Catholick by Peter of Navar, An. 1506. ſince which time peopled and poſſeſſed by the Spaniards: In vain beſieged by the Turks, An. 1562. 8. Maſalquivir, a fair and capacious Haven on the ſame Sea alſo, and taken by the ſaid Peter of Navar, about the ſame time. 9. Hareſgol, in former times of much eſteem amongſt the Moors; but being deſtroyed by the King, or Sultan of Cairoan, it bequeathed his greatneſſe unto Tremeſen, which after grew into renown. 10. Tremeſen, once adorned with many beautifull Moſques, and five ſumptuous Colledges, curiouſly wrought with Moſuick work. So populous, that there were reckoned in it 16000 Families; and ſo well fortified, that it held out ſeven years againſt Joſeph the great King of Feſſe: not taken after that, though they were very much weakned by Abulthaſen, or Albohacen his ſon ſucceſſor, under a ſiege of 30 moneths. By thoſe, and the ſucceeding troubles it hath undergone, exceedingly impaired both in ſtrength and beauty. More antient, 11. Siga, an African Citie, and a Roman Colony; the retiring place of Syphax and Bocchus, ſometimes Kings of this Countrey. 12. Arſenaria, another Colony of the Romans. 13. Jol, the Seat-Royal of King Bocchus, after ſuch time as this Countrey was conferred upon him by the Romans, on the taking of Jugurth: called afterwards Cæſarea, in honour of Auguſtus Cæſar, whoſe Feudatories the Kings hereof were then accounted; or as ſome ſay, in honour of Claudius Cæſar, by whom made a Colony: the Metropolis of it alſo when a Roman Province, which from hence was called Cæſarienſis. Situate in, or near the place where Oran now ſtands, which ſeemeth to have riſen out of the ruines of it. 14. Saldæ, a Roman Colony alſo, out of whoſe ruines roſe Algiers. 15. Algiers, by the Arabians called Gezeir, now the chief Citie of this Kingdom, ſituate near the Sea, in the form of a Triangle, with an Haven to it; but neither great, nor ſafe from the North-winds, which do much annoy it. The buildings very beautifull; the publick Inns, Bathes, and Moſques, exceeding ſumptuous; every Trade having a ſeveral place, or ſtreet by it ſelf. But that which is the greateſt grace of it, is the ſituation of the houſes ſtanding in even ſtreets one above another, upon the riſing of a ſteep Hill; ſo that the windows of one ſtreet, or row of houſing do all along overlook the tops of the other next beneath, which yieldeth to the Sea a moſt pleaſant proſpect. A Citie not ſo large, as ſtrong; and not ſo ſtrong, as famous. Famous for being the receptacle and retrait-place of the Turkiſh Pirats, who domineer ſo infinitely over the Mediterranean, to the great damage of the Merchants of all Nations, that frequent thoſe Seas. Famous alſo for the ſhipwrack which Charles the fifth here ſuffered, who beſieging this Town, loſt in the Haven of it at one Tempeſt, beſides an infinite number of Karvels and ſmall Boats, divers ſtrong Gallies, 140 ſhips, a great many excellent pieces of Ordinance; ſuch a number of gallant Horſes, that in Spain the race of Horſes for ſervice had like to have been loſt for ever; and above half his men. It long enjoyed the benefit of proprietary Princes, (but Homagers, or Tributaries to the Kings of Tremeſen) till ſuch time as Selimes, and Mahomet, falling out, made the firſt, and that an irreparable breach in the Government. For Selimes, to ſtrengthen his ſide, implored the aid of Hairaccius Barbaroſſa, a noble Pirate; who taking his beſt advantage, ſlew the disjointed brethren, and ſetled himſelf in the Kingdom: which he had ſcarce made warm, when he left it to Hairadine Barbaroſſa his brother, An. 1514. This Hairadine drove the Spaniards out of Bugia, and was ſo renowned for Martial proweſſe, that Solyman the magnificent made him Lord High-Admiral of his Fleet: which Office, when to the prejudice of Chriſtendom he had fortunately and for long time undergone; he died lamented, and made the Turk the Heir of his Kingdom; the Kingdom of Tremeſen being made ſubject to the Turks much about that time. 16. Tetuan, and 17. Sargel, ſituate Weſtward of Algiers; Towns of Trade and Pyracy.

The old Inhabitants of this Kingdom, when a Roman Province, were the Herpiditani, Taladuſii, Thaluſſii, Malchubii, Maccurebi, Chituæ, and others of as little note; the moſt predominant Nation being the Maſæſyli, over whom (and in that over all the reſt) reigned Syphax, ſpoken of before, unfortunately famous for his tragical love to Sophoniſba: for whoſe ſake ſiding with the Carthaginians againſt the Romans, he was vanquiſhed and ſent priſoner to Rome. His Kingdom given to Maſiniſſa King of the Numidians, continued in his line till the death of Jugurth, and then beſtowed upon the Kings of Mauritania; part of whoſe Kingdom it was reckoned in the following times, till made a Province of the Empire by the Emperour Claudius. Won from the Romans by the Vandals, and then by the Saracens, it followed the fortunes of theſe laſt, while they ſtood and flouriſhed: But growing into many diſtractions, and every Sultan, or Provincial Governour ſhifting for himſelf, it became a Kingdom, under the ſtile and title of the Kingdom of Tremeſen. The Majeſty of it much impaired by Abulthaſen, or Albohacen King of Feſſe; who brought it, not long after, under his command. Recovering after ſome ſhort time its former liberty, it became a Kingdom once again, and ſo continued till the time of Abuchemen: who incurring the hatred of his people, becauſe by his ſupine neglect the Spaniards had ſurpriſed and taken Oran and Maſalquivir, their two beſt Havens; made an eaſie paſſage for his brother Abuzeiden to the Regal diadem. Abuzeiden ſcarce well ſetled, loſt it to Hairadine Barbaroſo, An. 1515. and he to Charles the fifth, by whom Abuchemen was reſtored, becoming Homager and Tributary to the Crown of Spain. But his ſucceſſor Abdulla, weary of the Spaniſh ſervitude, put himſelf under the protection of Solyman the magnificent, as a Prince of his own Religion; to whom at his deceaſe, he left the poſſeſſion of his Kingdom alſo; ever ſince ſubject to the Turks: whoſe Beglerbeg or Supreme Officer for theſe African Provinces, reſides for the moſt part in Algiers, and hath 40000 Timariots under his command,

3. FESSE, & 4. MOROCCO.

THeſe Kingdoms I have joyned in title, becauſe united for the moſt part in the ſtorie and affairs thereof, and of late times making but one entire Eſtate under the Xeriffes of Morocco: and therefore handled both together in the point of Hiſtory, though of a different conſideration in the way of Chorographie.

They contain in them the whole Country of Mauritania, truly and properly ſo called; divided antiently into Tingitana, and Sitifenſis; Cæſarienſis being naturally a Numidian Region, the Maſæſyli and the reſt of the Inhabitants of it, of Numidian breed; not laid to Mauritania, nor accompted any part thereof, till the death of Iugurth; when given to Bocchus King hereof, in reward of his treaſon, for betraying that unhappy Prince into the hands of the Romans.

It took this name from the Mauri, the Inhabitants of it, when that name firſt given; the word Tania, ſignifying a Nation, being added to it; as in Britannia, Luſitania, Aquitania, and perhaps ſome others, and the name of Mauri given them ἀπὸ τῆς Μαυρῆς, which ſignifieth amongſt other things obſcure or black, by reaſon of the darkneſſe of their complexion. Accompted in their times, an hardy, but a bloody people; careleſſe of life, fearleſſe of death; implacable, if once offended, their thirſt of revenge not to be quenched but by blood. Mauri ſunt genus hominum ſuapte natura cædis avidiſſimum, nihilque non facile audens, & deſperatis ſimiles, contemptu, viz. mortis & periculorum. A character given of them in Herodians time, and it holds good ſtill: notwithſtanding the intermixture of Goths and Saracens incorporated into the ſame nation with them, and paſſing by the ſame name in the Writers of the middle time. Poſt hæc Mauri totam Hiſpaniam & Provinciam Burgundiam &c. dominio ſuo manciparunt, as my Author hath it; where by Moors we are to underſtand the Saracens, which came out of Africk.

Chief Mountains of this Country, 1. Atlas Minor, ſo called, to difference it from the greater Mountain of that name, from which it is ſeven degrees more North, but ſhooteth, as that doth, with a point or Promontory into the main Atlantick Ocean, on the South of Salla. 2. Durdus, extended alſo into Cæſarienſis. 3. Diur. 4. Phocra, of which little memorable. Rivers of moſt note, 1. Sala. 2. Subur. 3. Zilia. 4. Phuth. 5. Diur. 6. Cuſa; all falling into the Atlantick: this laſt the ſame, as I conjecture, which our modern Writers call Ommirabili. And for the reſt, we muſt find amongſt them, 1. Siſelmel, 2. Tenſift, 3. Niffis, the names of the chief Rivers, as at this time called.

The old Inhabitants hereof in the time of the Romans, were the Metagonitæ neer the Streits, giving name vnto Metagonitis an adjoyning Promontory; the Succoſii, Verbicæ, Nectiberes, Vacuatæ, Voli; and on the Eaſt-ſide the Maureſii: Theſe laſt participating of that common name, in which all united. Called by the Latines, Mauri; by the Greeks, Mauruſii: The Etymologie as before. Their deſcent orignally from Phut, the ſon of Cham; whoſe memory preſerved here in the River Phut. To that, the coming of the Chanaanites, of the ſame extraction, ſerved but as an Acceſſory. From thoſe two fountains ſprang the whole Nation of the Mauri. Governed by Kings; the moſt conſiderable of which, when firſt known to the Romans, was that Bocchus, who betrayed Iugurth his friend and ſon in law, into the hands of the Romans: gratified for that treacherie with the Country of the Maſæſyli, (reckoned for part of Mauritania from that time forwards) as Hiempſal one of his ſons was, not long after, with the Kingdom of Numidia. The whole Eſtates of Bocchus, Syphax and Maſiniſſa united by this means in the perſon of Juba, one of his poſterity; the moſt potent Prince of all theſe parts: who falling in the African war againſt Julius Cæſar, Numidia was forthwith made a Province of the Roman Empire; Criſpus Saluſtius being made the firſt Governour of it. But Mauritania, extending at that time from the Ocean to the River Ampſagus, he gave to Bocchus, and Bogud, two of his Confederates, but deſcended of the old Regal family. Bogud unluckily taking part with Mark Antony againſt Auguſtus, was by Bocchus, who declared for the other ſide, diſpoſſeſſed of his part, (that which now makes the Kingdom of Feſſe); in which confirmed for his good ſervice, by the conquering Emperour. Juba, the ſon of the former Juba, grown famous for his eminent learning, was of a Priſoner made a Prince: inveſted after the death of Bocchus in all the Dominions of his father, except Numidia: and by the bounty of Auguſtus, a great Patron of Learning, advanced to the marriage of Selene, daughter of Antony and Cleopatra. After whoſe death, and the death of Ptolomy their ſon, murdered by Caligula, Mauritania was by Claudius added to the patrimony of the Roman Empire: divided into two Provinces, viz., Cæſarienſis, betwixt the two Rivers Malva and Ampſaga, now the Kingdom of Tremenſen; and Tingitana, from the River Malva to the Weſtern Ocean. This laſt divided into Tingitana, and Sitifenſis, (the River now called Ommirabili being the boundary betwixt them) by the Emperour Conſtantine: who leaving Sitifenſis to the Dioceſe of Africk, laid Tingitania (why I know not) unto that of Spain. Gained from the Romans by the Goths, after by the Saracens; they became members of thoſe empires; in the declining ning of the laſt, divided into the two Kingdoms of Feſſe and Morocco, to the deſcription and hiſtory whereof we do now proceed.

3. MOROCCO.

THe Kingdom of MOROCCO hath on the Eaſt the River Malva, by which parted from Tremeſen; on the Weſt, the Atlantick Ocean; on the South, Mount Atlas; and on the North the Kingdom of Feſſe. So called from Morocco, the chief City of it; in former times known by the name of Mauritania Sitifenſis, from Sitiphis, in thoſe times the principal City, as Procopius telleth us.

The Country ſaid to be fruitful of all things neceſſary to life, pleaſing to the ſight, and ſweet to ſmell to: particularly, well ſtored with Grain and Pulſe, plentiful of Oyl, Honey and Sugar, liberally furniſhed with Dates, Grapes, Figs, Apples, Pears, and all ſorts of fruits: exceedingly well ſtocked with Cattel, but with Goats eſpecially; whoſe skins afford a very excellent kind of leather, and of their fleece materials for the fineſt Chamlets, which are here made in moſt of their Cities. The whole Country divided commonly into theſe ſeven parts, viz. 1. Guzzula, 2. Sus, 3. Morocco ſpecially ſo called, 4. Hea, 5. Haſcora, 6. Duccala, and 7. Tedles.

1. GUZZULA, the moſt Southern Province of this Kingdom, hath on the Eaſt, ſome part of Tremeſen; on the Weſt, Sus or Suſa, from which parted by a rigde of Mountains called Ilda; on the South Mount Atlas; and on the North, part of the territory of Morocco, and the reſt of Suſa. The Country rich in Mines of Braſſe, Iron, and other metals, of which are made many Utenſils for domeſtick vſes, exported hence into other places.

The People Barbarous and rude, not eaſily acknowledging ſubjection to the Kings of Morocco; and at continual wars amongſt themſelves, except only for two moneths in the year; which being the time of their publike Marts, and then much viſited with Strangers from other Countries, they lay aſide their private quarrels, and cheerfully entertain ſuch Merchants as repair unto them. Walled Towns here are not any, but ſome very great Villages: the chief whereof, 1. Guzzula, on the Northern bank of the River Sus, whence the name of the Province. 2. Tagreſſa, not far off, but on the other ſide of the water, towards the foot of Mount Atlas. 3. Tedza, inclining towards the borders of Morocco. Of theſe nothing memorable.

2. Weſt of Guzzula, lieth the Province of SUS or SUSA, ſo called from the River Sus, (with which well watered) or giving name to it. Rich in Gold-Mines, the cauſe of continual wars amongſt the people: well ſtored with Sugar-Canes, which the Inhabitans know neither how to boyl nor purifie; and on the Sea-ſhores, furniſhed with great plenty of Amber, bought by the Portugals of the people at an eaſie rate. Chief Towns hereof, 1. Cape D'Aguer, on a Promontory ſo called; a place of ſuch importance to the Portugals, that the taking of it by Mahomet then King of Sus (after of Morocco alſo) made them quit all the Forts which they had in this Country. 2. Tagavaſt, a rich and wealthy Town; the greateſt in the Province, and ſituate in a large plain near the foot of Mount Atlas. 3. Teijent, ſituate in a ſpacious Plain alſo, but on the Banks of the River Sus: divided into three parts, each a mile from the other; which joyned together, make the exact figure of a Triangle. 4. Meſſa, or Maſſa, ſeated at the influx of the ſaid River, on the Promontory called Cape Gilon; three Towns in one: not much the better for the Sea, and but ill befriended by the Land, as ſeated in a barren and unpleaſing ſoile; remarkable for a fair Temple, the beams and rafters of which are made of the bones of Whales, which uſually are left dead on the ſhore. 5. Tarodant, a large Town, built by the Africans, before the conqueſt of this Country by the Goths or Saracens: the Reſidence of the Vice-Roy for the Kings of Feſſe, when the Lords of this Kingdom; but more enriched of late by the Merchants of France and England, who have here a Staple for their Sugars. By this Commerce, the people made more civil than in other parts of this Province: the whole number of them thought to amount to 3000. families. 6. Tedza, more within the land, bigger than Taradant, but leſs wealthy; the chief Ornament of it being a fair Mahometan Temple, liberally furniſhed with Prieſts and Readers of that Law, at the common charge. Not far from hence the Hill Anchiſa, where it ſnoweth at all ſeaſons of the year, and yet the people go extreme thin in the ſharpeſt Winter. Nothing elſe memorable of this Province, but that a little before the Xeriffe made himſelf King of Morocco, it had the title of a Kingdom; and gave the title of King to Mahomet the ſecond Xeriffe, made King of Taradant or Sus, before he diſpoſſeſſed his brother of the Crown of Morocco.

3. Northward of Sus, lieth the Province of MOROCCO, ſpecially ſo called, the moſt fruitful and beſt peopled part of Barbary; not much unlike to Lombardy in wealth, and pleaſures; the very Hills hereof as fruitful as the Vallies in other places. To which fertility of the ſoil, the Rivers 1 Tenſift, and 2. Aſifinuad, give no ſmall advantage; though much defaced by the frequent incurſions of the Portugals, who have extreamly ſpoiled this Country. Places of moſt obſervation in it, 1. Delgumaba, built upon a very high Mountain, and environed with many other Hills; at the foot whereof the Fountain of Aſifinuad. 2. Elgiumba, a ſmall but ancient Town, on the River Siſſeva. 3 Teſraſt, a ſmall Town upon Aſifinuad. 4. Imizmizi, ſituate on a Rock, ſpacious. and ſeated neer the entrance of a narrow way leading into Guzzala. 5. Tenezze, an old Town, but very well fortified. 6. Agnet, upon the River Tenſift, all ruined except the Fort, and ſome ſcattered houſes: formerly ſecond unto none but Morocco, (from which diſtant 24. miles); the Hils and Valley about it adorned with pleaſant Gardens, fruitful Vineyards, a fair River, and Fields ſo fertile, that they yield a fifty-fold increaſe. 7. Secſina, where they have ſnow at all times of the year. 8. Temnella, an Heretical Town, differing in opinion from the reſt of the Mahometan Sect; and ſo well-grounded in their Tenets, that they challenge all their Oppoſites to a Diſputation putation. 9. Hantera, very full of Jewes. 10. Morocco, the principal of this Province, and of all the Kingdom, ſituate in or near the place where once ſtood the Bocanum Hemerum of Ptolomy. Once reckoned amongſt the greateſt Cities of the World, at what time it was ſaid to contain 100000 families ſince ſo defaced and waſted by the depredations of the Arabians, and the removal of the Seat-Royal to Feſſe, when that Kingdom was in the Aſcendent, that it is hardly a thrid part ſo great as formerly. The founder of it Joſeph, ſirnamed Teſefinus, the ſecond King of the houſe of the Almoravides; but much enlarged and beautified by Abdul-Mumen, one of his ſucceſſors. The principal buildings in it, are the Church and the Caſtle: the Church or Moſque; one of the greateſt in the World, adorned with many ſumptuous pillars, brought out of Spain, when the Mores had the poſſeſſion of that Country: and beautified with a ſtately Steeple, in compaſs at the bottom an hundred yards, and of ſo great height; that the Hils of Azati (one of the branches of the Leſſer Atlas) being 130 miles diſtant, may be thence eaſily diſcerned: the Caſtle very large, and ſtrong, on a Tower whereof ſtand three Globes made of pure Gold, weighing 130000 Barbary Duckets: which divers Kings have gone about to take down, and convert into money, but all deſiſted in regard of ſome croſſe accident or other which befell them in it; inſomuch that the common people think them to be guarded with ſpirits.

4. North of Morocco, on the further ſide of Tenſift and Aſifinuad, is the Province of HEA: rough, mountainous, and woody, yet watered with many pleaſant Rils, and would be plentiful enough in all commodities, if the induſtry of the people were not wanting to it. A ſort of people little better than merely barbarous, without all Artiſts, either Ingenious or Mechanick; except ſome Chirurgeans, whom they keep to circumciſe their Children; and ſome few Teachers of their Law, which can hardly read. Their food a Pap made of Barley-meal, which in ſtead of Spoons, they claw forth with their fingers; the Ground they eat on, ſerving for table, ſtools and napkins. At endleſs feud with one another; yet ſo kind to ſtrangers, that in one of their chief Towns, called Tedneft, the Gentlemen uſed to caſt lots who ſhould entertain them. A town of good eſteem in former times, ſituate in a large Plain on the River Tenſift: but in the year 1514. almoſt wholly abandoned, upon a rumor that the Arabians had a purpoſe to ſell it to the Portugals. 2. Teculeth, ſeated on a good Port, and once very well traded, there being in it at that time 1000 families, ſome Hoſpitals, and a beautiful Moſque; in the year 1514. deſtroyed by the Portugals. 3. Tenent, a Sea-town in the hands of the Portugals. 4. Elmuridin, a ſtrong peece, as the name importeth, the word ſignifying the Diſciples Fort, ſo called, becauſe a certain Heretick in the Law of Mahomet (whereof this Kingdom yeilds good plenty) retired hither with his Diſciples; fortified it and defended it againſt the King of Morocco. 5. Iguillinguiguil, ſeated on the top of an hill, and fortified by the Country-people (or old African-Moors) againſt the Arabians. 6. Teſethne, beautified with a pretty Haven, but not capable of any great ſhipping. 7. Tagleſſe, a Den of Thieves and Cutthroats. 8. Teſegdelt; as courteous and civil, as the other barbarous; At the Gates whereof a Guard is ſet for entertainment of Strangers: whom, if they have no acquaintance there, they are to provide of Accommodation in ſome Genlemans houſe, where it coſts them nothing but thanks, and ſome kind acknowledgment.

5. Northwards of Hea, ſtands the Province of DUCALA, bounded on the Weſt, with the main Atlantick; and on the North, with the River Ommirobili, by which parted from the Kingdom of Feſſe. Of three dayes journey long, about two in breadth; thruſting into the Ocean with a craggy Promontory, which ſome of the Ancients called Ulagium, others the Promontory of the Sun; but by the Chriſtians of Europe called the Cape of Cantin; by the Moors, Gebelelhudid. Populous enough, the quality of the men conſidered; ignorant both of letters and of all good manners: Yet not ſo populous as it hath been in former times, much of the Country being abandoned for fear of the Portugals; who have taken all their beſt towns on the Sea-coaſt, and deſtroyed the reſt. Amongſt theſe, 1. Azaſi, at the foot of the hills ſo called; ſurpriſed by the Portugals, under colour of making a Storehouſe for their Merchandiſe. 2. Azame, ſeated at the mouth of the River Ommirobili, the furtheſt town of this Kingdom towards that of Feſſe; the people whereof were extremely addicted unto Sodomy, till ſubdued by the Portugeze. 3. Elmedina, once the Metropolis of this Province; but now for fear of thoſe Invaders, in a manner deſolated. 4. Conte of the foundation of the Gothes. 5. Tic, built by the old African Moors, but poſſeſſed by the Portugals. 6. Subeit, 7. Teneracoſt, 8. Centpuis, 9. Terga, 10. Bulahuan; all ſacked and ruined by the ſame people, when they took Azamor (the Key of this Province) which was in the year 1513. At which time it is ſaid, that Mahomet King of Feſſe paſſing through this Province with an Army, to repreſs theſe inſolencies, at every Altar (whereof here are many in the Roads) kneeled, and ſaid unto this effect: Lord, thou knoweſt that the cauſe of my coming into this wild place, is onely to free this people of Duccola from the rebellious and wicked Arabians, and their cruel Enemies the Chriſtians, which purpoſe, if thou doeſt not approve of, let the puniſhment fall upon my perſon, but not upon my followers, who deſerve it not. With greater piety, than could be looked for from a blind Mahometan.

6. Eaſtward of Duccala, along the banks of Ommirobili, lieth the Province of HASCORA, a fruitful Country, intermixt of rich fields and pleaſant gardens: furniſhed with moſt ſorts of choiſeſt fruits; and amongſt others, Grapes of ſuch extraordinary greatneſs, that they are ſaid to be as big as a Pullets egg. Good ſtore of Honey it hath alſo, and ſome Mines of Iron: Inhabited by a more civil people than any of the reſt, and conſequently more deſerving ſo rich a ſoil. Places of moſt importance in it, 1. Ezo, an old town, ſituate on a lofty mountain. 2. Elvinina, of a later erection. Alemdine, conquered for the King of Feſſe by a Merchant, whoſe Paramour the Prince or Governour hereof had taken from him: Situate in a pleaſant, but little Valley, but begirt with hils, and well inhabithed by Gentlemen, Merchants, and Artificers. 4. Togodaſt, on the top of an hill, environed with four others of equal height.

7. More Eaſt, betwixt Haſcora and the River Malva, is the Province of TEDLES, bounded on the Eaſt, with the Kingdom of Tremeſen; and on the North, with that of Feſſe: from which laſt parted by the River Servi, which on the North east border of it meets with Ommiroboli. The whole Province in form triangular, of no great either length or breadth, but sufficienly fruitfull, and well inhabited for the bigneſs. Some Towns it hath, and thoſe not meanly populous for ſo ſmall a Province; the chief whereof. 1. Teſza, built by the old African Moors, and beautified with many Mahometan Moſques; the walls of which made of a kinde of Marble, which they here call Teſza, whence the name of the Town. 2. Eſza, ſeated on the River Ommirobili, where it receiveth that of Deyme; which riſing out of Atlas Minor, and paſſing by Teſza laſt mentioned, doth here loſe its name. 3. Chythite, renowned for the ſtout reſiſtance, which it hath made from time to time againſt thoſe of Feſſe. 4. Ethiad, abounding in all ſorts of victuals.

Theſe Provinces make up the Kingdom of Morocco: infeſted miſerably while it remained ſubject to the Kings of Feſſe, by the Portugals on the one ſide, and the wilde Arabians on the other. Concerning which laſt people we are to know, that when the Saracens conquered Africk, they contented themſelves with the command, and left unto the Natives the poſſeſſion of it, forbidding the Arabians (with whoſe courſe of life they were well acquainted) to paſſe over Nilus. Elcaim the laſt of the Succeſſors of Hucba in the Kingdom of Cairoan, having ſubdued the reſt of Africk, and added it unto his Eſtate, paſſed forwards into Egypt, which he conquered alſo; aſſuming to himſelf the title of Caliph: But in his abſence, the Lieutenant, whom he left in Africk, rebelled againſt him; and acknowledging the Caliph of Bagdet for his lawfull Lord, received of him for this good ſervice, the Kingdom of Africa. Deſpairing to recover his loſt Eſtate, and yet not willing that it ſhould be uſefull unto his Enemies, he licenced the Arabians for a Ducat a man, to paſſe over the Nile with their Tents and Families. On which agreement, almoſt half the Tribes of Arabia Deſerta, and many of Arabia Felix, went into Africa; where they ſacked Tripolis, Cairoan, and the reſt of the principal Cities: tyrannizing over all Barbary, till reſtrained at laſt by Joſeph the founder of Morocco, (of whom more hereafter.) Since which time, though they loſt their unlimited Empire, yet they ſtill ſwarm like Locuſts over all the Countrey; and neither apply themſelves to tillage, or building houſes, or any civil courſe of life; nor ſuffer thoſe to live in quiet, who would otherwiſe manure and improve the Countrey. The reſt of the Story of theſe Kingdoms we ſhall have anon, when we have taken a Survey of the Kingdom of Feſſe.

4. FESSE.

THe Kingdom of FESSE is bounded on the South, with the Realm of Morocco, on the North, with parts of the Atlantick, and Mediterranean; on the Eaſt, with Malva, parting it from the Kingdom of Tremeſen; and on the Weſt, with the Atlantick wholly.

It takes this name from Feſſe the chief Citie of it. Known to the ancients by the name of Mauritania Tingitana, ſo called from the Citie Tingis (now Tanger) then of greateſt note. Called alſo Hiſpania Tranſfretana, Spain on the other ſide of the Sea, becauſe a part of that Dioceſe: and by ſome (Pliny amongſt others) Bogudiania, from Bogud one of the Kings hereof, to whom given by Cæſar: by others Ampeluſia, from its abundance of Vines. The Inhabitants of it, by the Spaniards, now called Alarbes.

The Countrey of good temperature in regard of the aire, if not in ſome places of the coldeſt: but very unequally diſpoſed of in reſpect of the earth; here being in it many Deſarts and large Forreſts, not well inhabited; but intermixt with many rich and delightfull Fields. So that taking the eſtimate in the groſſe, it may be ſaid to be a rich and flouriſhing Countrey, hardly inferior unto any. The particularities of which are to be conſidered in the Characters of the ſeveral Provinces, into which it now doth ſtand divided, that is to ſay. 1. Temeſna. 2. Feſſe, ſpecially ſo called. 3. Elchaus, or Chaus. 4. Garet. 5. Algara. 6. Erriffe, and 7 Habat.

1. TEMESNA hath on the South, the River Ommirabili, on the Weſt, the Ocean; extended in length from Weſt to Eaſt 80 miles, and in breadth 70. A champain Countrey, very level; and once ſo populous, that it contained 40 Cities, and 300 Caſtles; moſt of them ruined by the wars, and the wilde Arabians, the greater deſtroyer of the two. The principal of thoſe remaining. 1. Teyeget, near the River Ommirabili, once of greater note, but now inhabited onely by poor people, and a few Smiths compelled to live there for the making of Iron inſtruments to manure the Land. 2. Thagia, on the courſe of the ſaid River; much viſited by thoſe of Feſſe, for the Sepulchre of an holy Prophet, who was there interred; the Feſſans going thither in pilgrimage with ſuch numbers of men, women and children, that their Tents ſeem ſufficient to lodge an Army. 3. Adendun, more towards the Sea, but on a ſmall River called Guirla; well walled, and fenced on one ſide by a Lake, or Pool. 4. Amſa, on the ſhore of the Atlantick, once of great Trade, and well frequented, both by the Engliſh and the Portugals, by which laſt deſtroyed. 5. Munſor, deſtroyed in like manner by the wilde Arabians. 6. Nuchaiaa, ſituate in ſo fertile and rich a ſoil; that the inhabitants would have given a Camels burden of Corn for a pair of ſhooes. Nothing now left of it but one Steeple, and a piece of the wall. 7. Rabut, or Rubut, built by Manſor, or Almanſor, a King of Morocco, near the mouth of the River Burugrug; and by him made one of the beſt peopled Towns in Africk: built after the model of Morocco, but now ſo waſted, that there are not in it above 500 families; moſt of the ground within the walls being turned into Meadows, Vine-yards, and Gardens. 8. Fanzara, on the River Subu, the Subur of Ptolomy, falling not far off into the other. 9. Mahmora, in the ſame tract alſo, once poſſeſſed by the Spaniards; near which the Portugals received a great defeat by the King of Feſſe, for want of good intelligence betwixt them and the Caſtilians. 10. Salla, the Sala of Ptolomy, by the Inhabitants called Zale, in ordinary Maps by miſtaking, Cale; at the mouth of the River Rebato, which the ancient Writers called Sala, as they named the Town. Beautified by King Almanſor (who is here interred) with a ſtately Palace, a goodly Hoſpital, a fair Temple, and an Hall of Marble, cut in Moſaick works: intended for the burial-place of his poſterity. A Town much traded formerly by the Christian Merchants of England, Flanders, Genoa, and the Golf of Venice. Took by the Spaniards, An. 1287. and within ten dayes lost again: and of late times made a nest of Pirates, as dangerous to those which sailed in the Ocean, as the Pirates of Algiers to the Mediterranean. Whose insolencies the King of Morocco not able to suppresse for want of shipping, desired the aid of his Majesty Charls, King of Great Brittain: by whom the Town being blocked up by Sea, and besieged to the Landward by the King of Morocco, it was at last compelled to yield; the works thereof dismantled, the Pirates executed, and 300 Christian Captives sent unto his Majesty, to be by him restored to their former liberty; to the great honour of his Majesty, and the English Nation, An. 1632.

As for the fortunes of this Province, they have been somewhat different from the rest of this Kingdom: trained by a factious Prophet to revolt from the King of Fesse and Morocco, whose Estate they very much endangered; sending an Army of 50000 men to the Gates of Morocco. But being discomfited by Ioseph, sirnamed Telephinus, he followed them into their own Countrey, which he wasted with great cruelty for ten moneths together; consuming above a Million of them, and leaving the Province to the mercy of Wolves and Lyons. Repeopled afterwards by Almansor with Arabian Colonies: Given about fifty years after that, by the Princes of the Marine family, to more civil Inhabitants; by whom the Arabians were expelled, and the Province consequently reduced into some good order.

2. Westward of Temesna lieth the Province of FESSE, properly and specially so called. Extended in length from the River Burugrug to the River Inavis, for the space of 100 miles. A very fruitfull Province, well stored with Cattel, and exceeding populous; the Villages hereof as big as the better sort of Towns in other places: but contrary to the custom of other Countreys, better inhabited on the hills than amongst the vallies; the people making choice of the mountains for their habitation, as places of defence and safety, but husbanding the vallies which lie neareſt to them. Places of most consideration in it. 1. Macarmeda, on the River Inavis, in a goodly plain, but in a manner all ruined, except the walls. 2. Gualili, memorable for the Sepulchre of Idris, the first founder of Fesse. 3. Peitra Rossa, where they have some Lyons so tame, that they will gather up bones in the streets like Dogs, without hurting any body. 4. Agla, where they have brought their Lyons to so strange a cowardise, that they will run away at the voice of a childe; whence a Bracchadochio is called proverbially a Lyon of Agata. 5. Pharao, by reason of the name, thought by the Vulgar to be founded by some King of Egypt; but the Latine Inscriptions therein found, declare it to have been some work of the ancient Romans. 6. Maquille, of more antiquity than note. 7. Fesse, the Metropolis of this Province, and the chief of the Kingdom, supposed to be the Volubilis of Ptolomy, but much enlarged and beautified by some new Accessions. Situate for the most part upon little hillocks, and watered by a pleasant and gentle River (derived by Aquæducts and Conduits, into all parts of the Citie) which they now call the River of Fesse, conceived by some learned men to be that which was anciently called Phuth, from Phut the first planter of the African Nations. A Citie so beautifull and well seated, as if Nature and Art had plaid the Wantons, and brought this forth as the fruit of their dalliance. The Founder, or enlarger of it, one of the Race of the false Prophet Mahomet, his name Idris, who built on the East-side of the River; that on the West-side, being the Work of one of his sons: both so increasing, that at last they were joyned together. To these the Suburbs being added, have made a third. The whole called Fesse, from Fez, an Arabick word, signifying Gold; whereof great quantity was found when they digged the Foundations. Divided into three parts by the River, all of which contain 82000 houſholds, and 700 Moschees, or Saracenical Temples: the chief of which is Carne, or Carnven, being a mile and a half in compasse. It hath 31 Gates, great and high; the roof 150 yards long, and 80 broad: round about, divers Porches, containing 40 yards in length, and 30 in breadth; under which, the publike storehouses of the Town. About the walls are Pulpits of divers sorts, wherein the Masters of their Law read unto the people, such things, as they think to pertain to their salvation. The Revenue hereof is 200 Ducats a day of the old Rents; for so it was, An. 1526. when Leo Afer wrote. The Merchants have here a Court, or Exchange, inclosed with a strong wall, with 12 Gates, and 15 streets. There is also a Colledge called Amarodoc, a most curious and delicate building. It hath three Cloysters of admirable beauty, supported with eight square pillars of divers colours: The roof curiously carved, and the Arches of Mosaique work, of Gold and Azure. The Gates of brasse, fair wrought; and the doors of the private Chambers of inlayed work. This Colledge did cost the Founder, King Abuchenen, or Abu Henen, 480000 Crowns. Here are finally said to be in it many Hospitals, little inferior to the Colledges in building and beauty, all very liberally endowed; and about an hundred hot Bathes well built, with four Halls to each, and certain Galleries without, where they put off their Cloaths when they go to bath themselves: and besides these 200 Innes, built three stories high, each of them having 120 Chambers in it, with Galleries before all the doors for their Guests to walk in.

3. Eastward of the Territory of Fesse, lieth the Province of CHAUS, extended in length from the River Gurngrut, or Gurguigarn, by which parted from Temesna, and Fesse, to the borders of Tremesen, for the space of 190 miles, and 170 miles in breadth. So that it is thought to contain one third part of the whole Kingdom: but meanly populous for the bigneſse, the Countrey being poor and barren, and the Inhabitants fierce and warlike; more given to prosecute their quarrels, than to Trade, or Tillage. Chief Towns hereof, 1 Ham Lisnan, a Town built in the more mountainous parts of the Countrey, by the old Africans. Famous for the Temple of an Idol here worshipped; to which at certain times men and women resorted in the night; where, after their devotions ended, & the Candles put out, every man lay with the woman he first touched; the exact platform of the Family of Love, if all be true which is told us of them; and anciently, but falsly, charged on the Primitive Christians. 2 Tezza, adorned with three Colledges, many Baths, and Hospitals, and some beautifull Temples; one of them larger, though not fairer than that of Fesse; in both Towns men of the same Trade have a street by themselves; for greatness, wealth, and numbers of People, esteemed the third City of this Kingdom. 3. Dubdu, an ancient Town, but not much observable. 4. Teurert, seated on the top of an Hill, in the midst of a Plain, but compassed about with Desarts. 5. Beni Jesseten, neighboured by Iron Mines, in which their greatest bravery and wealth consisteth: the women here wearing Iron-rings, for ornaments to their ears and fingers. 6. Tezergui, subject to the Arabians. 7. Adaggia, the most Eastern Town of all this Region; situate in a Peninsula, made by the confluences of Muluso and Malva. In this Country is the head of the River Subur, which rising out of a great Lake in the woods of the Mountain Seligus, and receiving many lesser waters; with a large and Navigable stream falleth into the Ocean.

4. Northwards of Chaus lieth the Region called GARET, extended thence as far as the Mediterranean; and reaching East and West, from the River Malva, where it bordereth on Tremesen, to that of Nochor, where it toucheth on Errif, and Asgara. The length hereof 25 Leagues, the breadth but twenty. The soyl in most places dry and desart, like the Sands of Numidia: especially all along the banks of the Malva; neer unto which from the Mediterranean to Chaus, it is wholly desart and unpeopled, not well inhabited in the most fruitfull parts of it, being full of mountains; the worse for the ill neighbourhood of the Spaniards, possessed of 1 Chesusa, and 2. Medela, two chief Towns hereof. 3. Pennon de Veles, by some called Velez de Gomera, situate on the shore of the Mediterranean, betwixt two high Mountains; built by the Africans or Gothes; but now in the possession of the Spaniards also. 4. Jafferin, situate on the Sea also, founded by the Mahometans of the Marine Family, 5. Tezzora standing on an hill, to which there is but one passage only.

5. Westward of Garet lieth ASGARA, extended from thence unto the Ocean: Shut up on the South east-side with the great Mountains Zalaga, Zaron, and Gomara, out of which last runneth the River Luccus, called Lix by Ptolomy. The Aire hereof very temperate, and the soyl as fertile; supplying with the over-plus of its Commodities, the mountainous parts of Fesse, and the Desarts of Garet. Once full of Towns, till ruined and destroyed by the wars. A Monument whereof, 1. Giumba, built by the ancient Africans, of which remains nothing but the Ditches, 2 Larache, in Latine Larissa, the Lixa of Ptolomy, situate at the mouth of the Lix or Luccus, and furnished with a good Port, but of difficult entrance; garrisoned whan possessed by the Moors with 300 light horse, and 300 Harcabuziers; but better fortified than before, since possessed by the Spaniards, into whose hands it was put by Muley-Shek king of Morocco and Fesse, when worsted by Muley Sidan his younger Brother, in the beginning of the civil Wars betwixt them. 3. Cusar Elcabir, given by Almanser to a Poor Fisher, who had entertained him unknown, one night in his Cottage, when he lost his Company in Hunting: Adorned with many Temples, one Colledge of Students, and a stately Hospital.

6. On the North of Asgara is the Province of EL-HABAT, or HABAT coasting along the Atlantick Ocean to the mouth of the Streits, in length 100 miles, about 80. in breadth. The Country very plentifull of all manner of necessaries, and very well Peopled; the mountains which are here of a great height, being well inhabited. In former times replenished with many Cities, both of the foundation of the Gothes, Romans, and old African Moors, now much diminished by the Wars. Those of most note, 1 Ezaggen, the Inhabitants whereof by an ancient Priviledge granted by the Kings of Fesse, were licensed to drink wine, though prohibited by the Law of Mahomet. Situate on a mountain, neer the River Guarga, about 35 leagues from Fesse; and garrisoned with 400 Horse for fear of the Portugals, who sometimes make their excursions thither, 2. Basra, once a walled Town, and the Walls still standing, but very little or no Town in them. 3 Homar, sometimes wel-Peopled, but now little inhabited, by reason of the ill neighbourhood, of the Portugals, who command that Coast. 4 Banirendo, in a manner deserted for the same reason. 5 Alcazaer, to distinguish it from another of this name, called Alcazer Guer, taken together with Arzilla and Tangier by Alfonso the fift of Portugal, Anno 1470. Nigh to which Town the three Kings Sebastian of Portugal, Mahomet, and Abdemelech, Competitors for this Kingdom, were, slain in a day. There was also slain at the same time, the great English Rebel Stuckley, who fled out of Ireland to Rome, Anno 1570. Where he was lovingly entertained by the Pope then being, as a good Son of the Church: by whom appointed for the Conquest of Ireland, and for that end furnished with 800 Souldiers paid by the King of Spain; and by his Holiness created Marquis of Leinster, Earl of Wexford and Caterlogh, Viscount Murraugh, and Baron of Rosse. Thus furnished, he began his journey toward Ireland, Anno 1578. but hearing of these Wars, and desirous to make a party in them, he lost all his honours with his life. 6 Arzilla a Sea-Town, 70 miles distant from the Streits, now possessed by the Portugals. 7 Tanger, a great Town, and very ancient, distant from the Streits about 30 miles, belonging to the Portugals also. In former times it was called Tingis, a Colony of the Canaanites, and by them built at their first coming thither, when they fled from the sword of Josuah; testified by the two Pillars erected near this Citie, which before we spoke of: and from that name caused all this part of Mauritania to be called Tingitania. Made afterwards a Colony by the Emperour Claudius, who named it Traducta Julia; but the old name prevailed, and out-lived the new. Near to this Town it is said that Hercules overcame Antæus, a monstrous Giant of 64 Cubits high, as his Legend telleth us. And not far off was an high Mountain called Abyla, opposite to which in the Coast of Spain was another called Calpe, on which the said Hercules placed his so famous Pillars. 8. Septa, or Senta, situate on, or near that Mountain, unfortunately memorable for giving the title of an Earle to Julian, who first brought the Saracens into Spain; beautified in the following times with many Temples, Colledges, and Learned men: taken by the Portugals with the help of the English, An. 1415. and now in the possession of the King of Spain. The onely Town of all the Estates of Portugal, which in the late revolt of that Kingdom doth remain unto him. 9. Julia Constantia, so called, and made a Roman Colony, by Augustus Cæsar. 10. Laxus, a Roman Colony of the Plantation of Claudius, in old times said to have been the Court, or Palace of the Giant Antæus. Not far from whence (that Antæus might not dwell alone) the old Geographers have placed the habitation of Gerion, as proper a Gentleman as himself, in a small Island of the Streits, called Gerionis Insula, and by some Erythia.

revolt

7. Eastward of Habat is the Province of E R R I F, extended from the mouth of the Streits, where it joyneth to Habat, as far as to the River Nochor (supposed to be the Meluchath of the Ancient Writers) by which parted from Garet: A mountainous and cold Countrey in respect of the rest of Barbary, full of Woods and Forrests; but plentifull enough of Vines, Figs, and Olives; and not without some herds of Goats, though otherwise not well stored with Cattel. In length 140 miles, in breadth 40 onely; inhabited by a race of valiant men, but excessive Drunkards. The Towns hereof not many, though full of Villages; The chief of which, 1. Mazagon, near unto the Streits; a very strong Town, and of great importance, but possessed by the Portugals: in vain besieged by Abdalla the first, with an Army of 200000 men, *An.*1562. 2. Mezemme, seated on a mountain. 3. Beni-Jerso, of like situation, once beautified with a goodly Colledge for the Professors of the Mahometan Law, who here publickly taught it, as in an University; the inhabitants whereof were in that regard freed from all exactions. Destroyed together with the Library of it, by some wicked Tyrant, Anno 1509. the Books therein being valued at 4000 Ducats. 4. Terga. 5. Tegassa. 6. Gebbe; of which little memorable.

Thus having looked over the particular Provinces of these two Kingdoms, we must next look upon them also in the general story, from the time of the Saracenical conquest; First let into this Countrey by the Treason of Iulian, and for a while subject to the great Caliph, or Successor of Mahomet: afterwards to the King, or Caliph of Cairoan, who extended his Empire to the Ocean. But that Kingdom being overthrown by the coming in of the Arabians, these Provinces with the rest were afflicted by them; till the rising of the Kingdom of Fez: begun in the person of Idris, of the blood of Mahomet, by Hali, & his daughter Fatima; commonly called the Family of Alaveci; who persecuted by the opposite faction, fled into Mauritania; where he grew into such reputation, that in short time he got both swords into his hands. Dying about the 185 year of the Hegira, he left his power unto his son, of the same name with his father; the first founder of Fesse. Opposite whereunto on the other side of the water, one of his sons (but his name I finde not) built another Citie, which in time grew into emulation with it; and raising by that means a faction in the house of Idris, which occasioned the subversion of the Kingdom of Fesse, after it had continued in the family of the Alaveci, for the space of 270 years. The estate hereof first weakned by Abu Tesin, or Texifien, of the house of the Almoravides, or Lautunes, and so weakned, that he thereby gave an opportunity to Ioseph Aben Teifin, or Telephine, his son and Successour, then famous for bridling the Arabians, and founding the Citie of Morocca, to suppresse that family: Who killing the Princes of that line, and 30000 of their subjects, brake down the walls which parted the two Cities from one another, united them by bridges, and so made them one. Drawn into Spain by the dissention of the Saracens there amongst themselves, he added all which they held in that Kingdom, unto his dominions: held by his Successours, as long as they were able to hold Morocco: the Catalogue of which Princes, called the house, or family of the Almoravides, with that of the Race of the Almohades, is this which followeth.

The Kings, or MIRAMOMOLIMS of MOROCCO.

A. Ch.

1068. 1 Teifin, Texifien, or Telephine, the first of the Almoravides, that reigned in Africk.

2 Ioseph, firnamed Telephinus, the son of Teifin, founded Morocco, subdued the Kingdom of Fesse; and added the Estate of the Moors in Spain unto his Dominions, An.1091.

3 Hali, the son of Ioseph.

4 Albo-Halis, the son of Hali, supposed to be the publisher of the vvorks now extant in the name of Avicenne, compiled at his command by some of the most learned Arabian Doctors: vanquished and slain by

5 Abdelmon, or Abdel-Mumen, the first of the Almohades; of obscure parentage, but raised to so great power by the practises of Almohad a jugling Prophet of those times, that he overthrew the King, and obtained the Kingdom of the Almoravides, both in Spain and Africk, An.1150. to which he also added the Realm of Tunis and Cairoan.

6 Joseph II. or Aben-Joseph, the son of Abdelmon.

7 Jacob, or Aben-Jacob, firnamed Almansor; a puissant and prudent Prince, of whom much before; son of Ioseph II.

8 Mahomet, firnamed Enaser, or the Green, the brother of Almansor. Discomfited by the Christians of Spain, at the battel of Sierra Morena, An. 1214. lost his dominions; there being slain in this battel 200000 of the Moors, as some Writers say; who add, that the Spaniards for two dayes together burnt no other fewel but the Pikes, Lances, and Arrows of their slaughtered Enemies, yet could not consume the one half of them.

9 Caid Arrax, Nephew of Mahomet Enaser, by his son Buxaf: slain at the siege of Tremezezir, a Castle of Tremesin, which was held against him.

10 Almorcada, a kinsman of Caid Arrax, outed of his estate, and slain by Budebuz, of the same house of the Almohades.

11 Budebuz, the last of the house of the Almohades, setled in this estate by the aid and valour of Iacob Aben-Ioseph the new King of of Fesse: but dealing faithlesly and ungratefully with him, he was warred on by the said Jacob Ben-Joseph, vanquished and slain in battel; the soveraignty by that means translated unto those of the Marine family, An. 1270. or thereabouts.

But before I do proceed further with this Marine family, I must again look back upon Mahomet Enaser, whom I conceive (the putation of the time being so agreeable) to be the Admiralius Murmelius mentioned by Matthew Paris, to whom our King John, An. 1214. is said to have sent such a degenerous and unchristian Embassage. Which strange name of Admiralius Murmelius, was by that good Writer unhappily stumbled at, instead of Miramomolim (which also is corrupted from Amir Elmumenim, that is to say, Princeps Fidelium:) an Attribute which the great Kings of the Saracen-Moors did much affect, and retained it long time amongst them. The Story this. King John being over-laid by his Barons wars, and the invasions of the French; sent Ambassadours to this great Prince (then ruling over a great part of Spain, and Barbary) for aid against them: offering to hold his Kingdom of him, and to receive withall the Law of Mahomet. The Moor exceedingly offended at it, told the Ambassadours that he had lately read the book of Pauls Epistles; which he liked so well, that were he now to choose a Religion, he would have imbraced Christianity before any other: But every man (saith he) ought to die in his own Religion; the greatest thing which he disliked in that Apostle, being (as he said) the changing of the Faith in which he was born. This said, he called unto him Robert of London Clark, one of the Ambassadours (a man ill chose for such an Errand, if the tale be true,) of whom he demanded the form of the English Government, the situation and wealth of the Countrey, the manners of the people, the life and person of the King: in which being satisfied, he grew into such a dislike of that King, that ever after he abhorred the mention of him. This is the substance of the story in Matthew-Paris: But you must know he was a Monk, to which brood of men King John was held for a mortal Enemy; and therefore this Relation not to passe for Gospel.

But whatsoever opinion King John might have of the power of this King (to whom 't is possible enough he might send for aid) certain it is, that he was grown so low in his Reputation, after the losse of that great battel in Siera Morena: that not onely the Spanish Moors withdrew their obedience from him (as a Prince unable to support them, but those of Africk did revolt also from the Crown of Morocco (extreamly weakned by that blow) after his decease. For Gomoranca Aben Zein of the house of Abdaluad, seized upon Tremesen, in the time of Caid Arrax his Successour; as Bucar Aben Merin of the noble Marine Family (descended from a Christian stock) did the like at Fez. Setled in his estate by the vanquishment of Almorcada the Miramomolim; he left it to Hiaja his son, under the governance and protection of a brother of his called Iacob Ben-Ioseph. But the young Prince dying shortly after, left his new Kingdom to his Uncle: who aiding Budebuz (before mentioned) dispossessed Almorcada of the Realm of Morocco: and afterwards having just cause of quarrel against this Budebuz, invaded his Dominions, overcame and slew him; and once again transferred the Imperial seat from Morocco to Fez. In him began the Empire of the Marine Family, who held their residence in Fez, as the first seat of their power; Morocco being governed by an under-King, the rest of the Provinces of that Kingdom cantonned into several States; the Sea-coasts in some tract of time being gained by the Portugals. And in his line (but with great confusions) the Royal Dignity remained till the year 1500. and somewhat after. Three onely were of note in the course of businesse, that is to say, 1 Iacob Ben-Ioseph, the advancer of the Marine Family to the Realm of Morocco; the establisher thereof in that of Fesse; and of great power and influence in the affairs of the Moors in Spain, where he held Algarir and Tariffe, Towns of great importance; slain treacherously by one of his familiar friends, at the siege of Tremesen. 2. Aben-Ioseph the second, a younger son of this first Ioseph (the issue of Bucalo his elder brother being quite extinct) succeeded after Abortade, the sixth of the Marine Family, in the Throne of his Father; and had added thereunto the Realm of Tremesen, if not diverted by the revolt of Alboali his eldest son, continually in Arms against him. 3. Alboacen, the son of this Aben-Joseph, and the eighth of the Marine Family, who after a siege of 30 moneths took the Citie of Tremesen, and with that the Kingdom. But not so fortunate in his wars against the Christian Kings of Spain; against whom he led an Army of 400000 Foot, and 70000 Horse, with all other necessaries: but vanquished by the two Kings of Castile and Portugal, with far lesser forces; (their Army consisting but of 25000 foot, and 14000 horse) at the River of Salado, not far from Tariffe, An. 1340. Deposed soon after his return by his son Alboanen, who lost all which his Father and the first of the Aben Iosephs had gained in Spain; their Empire after this declining even in Africk it self: the Kingdom of Tremesen, and the greatest part of the new Kingdom of Tunis, withdrawing themselves from their obedience in the East parts of Barbary; as the Portugals prevailed upon them in the West. The Kingdom of the Marines thus approching near its fatal Period, it fortuned about the year 1508. that Mahomet Ben-Amet a Native of Dara, in the further Numidia, or Bilodulgerid, pretending a descent from their Prophet Mahomet, caused himself to be called Xeriffe; the name by which the kindred and Successors of that Impostor use to call themselves: and being a poor Hermit onely (with which Mountebanks and the high opinion of their Sanctity, this people have from time to time been extreamly fooled) plotted to make his sons the chief Princes of Mauritania. To this end he sent them in Pilgrimage to Meccha, whence they returned with such an opinion of Sanctity, that Mahomet King of Fesse, made Amet the second of them Governour of the famous Colledge of Amadurach; the youngest called Mahomet, Tutor to his children; the eldest named Abael, staying at home with his Father, to expect the issue; slain afterwards in the war undertaken by the other two against the Portugals. In those days the Portugals grievously infested the Provinces of the Realm of Morocco; to represse whose insolencies, Mahomet and Amet obtained obtained Commiſſion: though much oppoſed therein by Muley the Kings brother, who told him how unſafe it vas to truſt to an armed hypocriſie: aſſuring him, that if they once came unto any power (which under colour of Religion they might quickly raiſe) it would not be eaſie to ſuppreſs them. But this good counſel was rejected, and the war went forward. Furniſhed with an Army, they diſcomfit Lopes Barriga, Commander of the Portugal forces under King Emanuel; compell that King to abandon all his footing there; they ſubdue Duccala, Sus, and Hea, three Provinces of the Realm of Morocco; enter that City, poiſon the tributary King, and ſalute Amet King thereof by the name of the Xeriffe of Morocco, inveſting Mahomet the other brother in the Kingdom of Sus. In the career of their ſucceſſes died the King of Feſſe; and Amet his ſucceſſor, an improvident young Prince, confirms his Quondam-Tutors in their new Eſtates, conditioned they ſhould hold of him as the Lord in chief, and pay him the accuſtomed tributes.

The XERIFFES of MOROCCO.

A. C. 1 Amet denied both tribute and ſuperiority to the King of Fez, whom he overthrew in a ſet field; and was after vanquiſhed and diſpoſſeſſed of his Kingdom, (upon ſome quarell breaking out) by his brother Mahomet.

1544. 2 Mahomet King of Sus, having got the Kingdom of Morocco, united Feſſe unto it alſo by the vanquiſhment of Amet the King thereof; ſlain after all his Victories by the Turks of his Guard.

1557. 3 Abdalla, the ſon of Mahomet.

1572. 4 Abdalla II. Sonne of the former, had twelve Brothers, of which he ſlew ten: Hamet being ſpared by reaſon of his ſuppoſed ſimplicity, and Abdelmelech eſcaping to the Turks.

5 Mahomet II. Sonne of Abdalla the ſecond, expelled by Abdelmelech and the Turks, fled to Sebaſtian King of Portugal who together with the two Competitors were ſlain in one day at the battel of Alcazar Guer, Anno 1578.

1578. 6 Hamet II. the Brother of Abdalla the 2d. who added parts of Libya, and Numidia, to the Realm of Morocco, not abſolutely ſubdued before.

1603. 7 Muley Sheck the eldeſt ſon of Hamet, oppoſed in his Succeſſion by Boferes, and Sidan, his two younger brethren; in which War he dyed; as did alſo Boferes his Brother. From whom Abdalla, the ſon of Muley Sheck had regained Morocco.

1607. 8 Sidan the third ſon of Hamet, immediately on the death of his Father, cauſed himſelf to be proclaimed King of Fez, (where he was with his father when he died) and having won Morocco from Abdalla the ſon of Muley Sheck, became maſter of that Kingdom alſo. Stripped afterwards of Feſſe and Morocco both, by the oppoſite factions; diſtreſſed by Hamet Ben Abdela a Religious Hermit, who hoped to get all for himſelf; and aided by Side Hean one of like hypocriſie, who ſeemed to aim but at a Limb of that great Eſtate; by whoſe aſſiſtance he was once more poſſeſſed of Morocco. Theſe tumults on the Land being pacified in long tract of time, and the Country brought to ſome degree of peace and quietneſs, (though never abſolutely reduced under his command, as in former times;) a Rabble of Pyrats neſt themſelves in Salla, a Port-town of the Realm of Feſſe: creating thence great miſchief to him both by ſea and land; and not to him only, but to all the Merchants of other Countries, whoſe buſines led them towards thoſe Seas. Unable to ſuppreſs them for want of ſhipping, he craved aid of King Charles of England: by whoſe aſſiſtance he became Maſter of the Port, deſtroyed the Pyrates, and ſent Three hundred Chriſtian Captives for a Preſent to his Sacred Majeſty, An 1562. Nor ſtaid he here; but aiming at the general good of Trade, and Mankind, he ſent a Letter to His Majeſty to lend him the like aid againſt thoſe of Algiers, who did as much infeſt the Mediterranean, as the Pyrats of Salla did the Ocean. The tenor of which Letter, as ſavouring of more piety than could be poſſibly expected from a Mahometan, and much conducing to the honour of his Sacred Majeſty, I have here ſubjoyned.

The Letter of the King of MOROCCO, to the King of ENGLAND.

WHen theſe our Letters ſhall be ſo happy as to come to your Majeſties ſight, I wiſh the Spirit of the righteous God may ſo direct your mind, that you may joyfully imbrace the Meſſage I ſend; preſenting to you the means of exalting the Majeſty of God, and your own Reward amongſt men. The Regal power allotted to us, makes us common Servants to our Creator; then, of thoſe People whom we govern: So that obſerving the duties we owe to God, we deliver bleſſings to the World; in providing for the publike good of our States, we magnifie the honour of God, like the Celeſtial Bodies, which though they have much veneration, yet ſerve only to the benefit of the World. It is the Exellencie of our Office, to be

Inſtruments

Inſtruments, whereby happineſs is delivered unto the Nations. Pardon me Sir! This is not to inſtruct, (for I know I ſpeak to one of a more cleer and quick ſight than my ſelf) but I ſpeak this, becauſe God hath pleaſed to grant me a happy Victory over ſome part of thoſe Rebellious Pyrats, that have ſo long moleſted the peaceful Trade of Europe; and hath preſented further occaſion to root out the generation of thoſe, who have been ſo pernicious to the good of our Nations: I mean, ſince it hath pleaſed God to be ſo auſpicious to our beginnings in the Conqueſt of Salla, that we might joyn and proceed in hope of like ſucceſs, in the war againſt Tunis, Algier, and other places (Dens and Receptacles for the inhumane villainies of thoſe who abhor Rule and Government.) Herein whileſt we interrupt the corruption of malignant Spirits of the World, we ſhall glorifie the great God; and perform a Duty that will ſhine as glorious as the Sun and Moon, which all the Earth may ſee and reverence: A work that ſhall aſcend as ſweet as the perfume of the moſt precious Odours, in the noſtrils of the Lord; A work gratefull and happy to men. A work whoſe memory ſhall be reverenced ſo long, as there ſhall be any that delight to hear the Actions of Heroick and magnanimous Spirits; that ſhall laſt as long as there be any remaining amongſt men that love and honour the piety and vertue of Noble minds. This Action I here willingly preſent to You, whoſe piety and vertues equal the greatneſs of your power: that we, who are Servants to the Great and mighty GOD, may hand in hand triumph in the glory which this Action preſents unto us. Now becauſe the Ilands which you govern, have been ever famous for the unconquered ſtrength of their Shipping, I have ſent this my truſty Servant and Ambaſſador, to know whether in your Princely wiſdome you ſhall think fit to aſsiſt me with ſuch Forces by Sea, as ſhall be anſwerable to thoſe I provide by Land: which if you pleaſe to grant, I doubt not but the Lord of Hoſts will protect and aſsiſt thoſe that fight in ſo glorious a Cauſe. Nor ought you to think this ſtrange, that I, who much reverence the Peace and accord of Nations, ſhould exhort to a War. Your great Prophet CHRIST IESUS was the Lion of the Tribe of JUDAH, as well as the Lord and Giver of Peace: which may ſignifie unto you, that he which is a lover and maintainer of Peace, muſt always appear with the terror of his Sword, and wading through Seas of blood, muſt arrive to Tranquillity. This made JAMES your Father of glorious memory, ſo happily renowned amongſt all Nations. It was the noble fame of your Princely vertues, which reſounds to the utmoſt corners of the Earth, that perſwaded me to invite you to partake of that Bleſsing, wherein I boaſt my ſelf moſt happy. I wiſh God may heap the riches of his bleſsings on you, increaſe your happineſs with your dayes, and hereafter perpetuate the greatneſs of your Name in all Ages.

Such was the Letter of that King; whoſe motion in all probability might have took effect, had not the Troubles, which not long after brake out in Scotland, put off the deſigne. And therefore laying by the thoughts of his future purpoſes, let us take a view of the Revenues and Forces of this mighty Empire; before the late diſtractions made it leſs conſiderable. And firſt for the Revenues of it, the Xeriffes are the abſolute Lords of the whole Eſtate, and of his ſubjects, goods and bodies. The tenth and firſt fruits of all ſorts of Fruits, Corn and Cattel, he demands of courſe; though many times contented in the name of the firſts fruits, with one in twenty. The fifth part of a Ducat he receiveth for every Acre of Land, throughout his Dominions; the other four parts for every Fire, and as much for every Head whether male or female, which is above fifteen years of age. In Merchandiſe he receiveth of every Native two in the hundred, of an Alien ten; and hath a large Impoſt alſo upon every Mill. When any of his greater Officers or Judges die, he is ſole Heir of all their Goods: and yet advanceth great ſums by the ſale of thoſe Offices. And in the levying of ſuch Taxes as are extraordinary, he uſeth to demand more than he means to take; that the People finding him content to abate ſomwhat of his Due, may think themſelves to be fairly dealt with.

As for their Forces, it is evident in matter of Fact, that Abdülla the firſt, at the ſiege of Mazagon, a Town held by the Portugals, An. 1562. had no leſs then 200000 men; and that Abdel-Melech at the battel of Alcazar Guez, againſt King Sebaſtian, had 40000 Horſe and 80000 Foot, beſides Voluntaries, and wild Arabians; it being ſuppoſed that he might have raiſed 30000 Horſe more (nowithſtanding the ſtrong party wich was made againſt him) had he thought it neceſſary. It is ſaid alſo that Abdalla kept in conſtant pay 60000 Horſe, of which 15000 were quartered in the Realm of Sus, 25000 in Morocco, and the other 20000 in the Kimgdom of Feſſe: out of which he called 5000 of the beſt and ableſt for the guard of his perſon, well mounted and as richly furniſhed. Beſides theſe he hath bodies of Horſe in continual readineſs, maintained according to the manner of the Turks Timariots: and by Penſions given amongſt the Chiefs of the Arabians, who live like Outlaws in the mountains, and up and down in the skirts of his Country, is furniſhed at his need with ſupplies from them. Well ſtored with Ammunition alſo, there being 46 Quintals of Gun-powder laid up monethly in his famous Arſenal at Morocco: and yet not able to ſtay long (not above 3 months) upon any action, in regard that all his Souldiers live on his daily allowance; which maketh them, when his Proviſions are conſumed, to diſſolve and ſcatter.

THE ISLES OF BARBARY.

THe ISLES of BARBARY, which make up the fifth and last part thereof, are situate neer the African shores of the Mediterranean, assigned by Ptolomy to the Province of Africa Propria. In number sixteen: 1 Hydras. 2. Calathe. 3 Dracontias, now called Chelbi. 4 Ægymnus, by Strabo called Æginarus, and now Guietta. 5. Laruneſia, now Mollium. 6 Lapeduſa, now Lampedoſa. 7 Meſyrus, 8 Pontia, 9 Gaia; all of little note. 10 Inſula Glauconis, with a City of the same name in it, now called Goza, and subject to the Knigths of Malta. 11 Æthuſa, by some called Æguſa, and consequently mistaken for Ægates, which lieth neer Sicily. Of more note are the five that follow, viz.

1. COSYRA, now called Pantalaria, equally distant from Africk and the Isle of Sicil, 60 miles from each. In length about thirty miles, and in breadth not above ten: Mountainous for the most part, and full of a black kind of Stone: the soyl not very proper for Corn, and void of Rivers; but plentiful of Figs, Melons, and Cotton-wool; well stored with Kine and Oxen, but without Horses. The People poor, by Religion Christians, and subject to the King of Spain: very good Swimmers of both sexes, and in their speech and habit coming neer the Moors. It hath a Town in it of the same name with the Island, situate on the Sea-side in the Northern part of it, defended with a very strong Castle.

2. CERCINA, now with little difference called Carchana, situate neer the coast of Africk, at the entrance (as it were) of the lesser Syrtis: In length 25 miles, in breadth half as much, but in some places not above five. Exceeding fruitfull in old times, able to furnish (as they did) the wants of Cæsar and his Army, when he warred in Africk; Magno frumenti numero Cercinæ invento, naves onerarias, quarum ibi ſatis magna copia, complet, atque in caſtra ad Cæſarem mittit, are the words of the History. It hath a Town of the same name. Of no great note in way of story, but for an handsom piece of wit here shewed by Annibal. Who flying from Carthage, met here some Merchants of that City, who had there some shipping in the Haven, and standing in some doubt lest by their discovery of his flight he might be pursued, pretended a Sacrifice to Hercules the Tyrian Deity, to which he invited all the Sailers, and borrowed all their Sails to set up a tent for their entertainment; which having got into his hands, and leaving them asleep, he made on for Asia; secure enough not to be pursued untill out of danger.

3. LOTOPHAGITIS, now called Zerby, and by some Gerbe, is situate in the bottom of the Bay of Tripolis, divided from the main Land by a narrow Ford. The Iland full of Bogs and Marishes, without other water, and in the midst of it somewhat hilly; indifferently fruitfull, yielding Dates, Olives, Barley, Mill and the like commodities; inhabited by 30000 men, dwelling in low Cottages, and but simply apparelled. It had in it anciently two Cities, 1 Meninx, which sometimes gave name unto the Iland called Meninx by some elder Writers. 2 Gerrapolis, both now destroyed: instead whereof there is now one of more note than the rest, called by the same name with the Iland, and fortified with a very strong Castle. Subject unto the Turks, but governed by a poor King of its own. Both Fort and Iland taken by the Christian Fleet, in the year 1559. for the King of Spain, to whom Caravanus the King thereof did submit himself; conditioning to pay the yeerly Tribute of 6000 Crowns, one Camel, four Ostriches, four Sparrow Hawks, and four Falcons. But the Christians were scarce warm in their new possession, when besieged in the Castle by Pial Bassa, to whom after some extremities they were fain to yield: there perishing in this unfortunate Action, by sword, famine, and sickness, 15000 Christians.

4. GAULOS, or GAUDUS, by the Inhabitants called Gaudica, is distant about five miles from the Isle of Malta; to the Knights whereof it doth belong: given to them by the bounty of Charles the fift. The Iland 30 miles in compass, well watered and very fruitfull. So great an Enemy to Serpents and all venemous Creatures, that they neither breed here, nor will live here brought from other places. The People Christians, but they speak the same Language with the neighbouring Saracens. The chief Town is of the same name with the Iland, beautified with a Capacious Haven, lying betwixt the West and South. and strongly fortified. Cruelly pillaged by the Turks in the year 1551. who carried hence 3000 Souls, into endless thraldom.

5. MALTA, the chief of the African Ilands, lieth betwixt Tripolis in Barbary, and the Isle of Sicil: distant from this last about 60 miles, and from the other 180. In circuit about sixty miles, in length 20, and in breadth 12. situate in the beginning of the fourth Clime, and eighth Parallell; so that the longest day in Summer is but 14 hours.

*Anciently it was called Melite, and by that name occurreth not only in Ptolomy and other Writers, but also in the Book of the Acts, in the story of St. Pauls Ship-wrack; this being the place where he and all his company were cast on land: in memory whereof was built a little Chappell in the place of his Landing. So called most probably ἀπὸ τῆς μέλιτος, from the abundance of honey which it yielded in former times: Cicero charging it on Verres, that he came home loaded with 400 measures of honey, and store of Melitensian Rayments: Jam non quæro unde 400 amphoras mellis habueris, unde tantum Melitensium Veſtium, saith that famous Orator. The joyning of which two together, declare that he had robbed the same place for both; this Island being a neer neighbour of Sicil, which Verres governed then as Prætor. Nor is it strange that an Island of the coast of Africk, and using for the most part the Phœcinian or Punick Language, should borrow its Appellation from the Greek: many of that Nation coming hither from the Isle of Sicil, and inhabiting here; and the whole Island sometimes subject to the power of the Sicilian Greeks, though for the most part under the command of the State of Carthage.

It is ſituate wholly on a Rock, being not above three foot deep in earth; by conſequence, of no great fertility, the want of which is ſupplied with the plenties of Sicil. Yet have they here no ſmall ſtore of Pomegranats, Citrons, Oranges, Melons, and other excellent fruits, both for taſte and colour. They have alſo great abundance of Cotten Wool (Goſſypium the Latiniſts call it) which they ſowe as we do our Corn; the growth and ordering of which Wool, hath been ſhewn already, when we were in Syria. For the commoditie of this Wool, and the cloth made of it, the Romans had this Iland in great eſteem; thinking themſelves happy when they gained it from the Carthaginians.

The natural Inhabitants of it are ſaid to be churliſh and uncivil; of the African Language and complexion; but followers of the Church of Rome, the Religion whereof theſe Knights are ſworn to defend. The Women fair, but hating company, and going covered. The whole number of both Sexes, ſuppoſed to be 20000. poſſeſſed of 90 Villages, and four Cities. Places of note, 1 Malta, ſo called by the name of the Iland, in the middle of which it is ſituate; built on an hill, but counted of no great importance, the ſtrength and ſafety of the Iland lying in defence of the Shores and Havens. 2 St. Hermes a ſtrong Caſtle at the point of a long Languet or tongue of Rock, thruſting out betwixt the two beſt Havens, both which it notably defendeth. Took by the Turks, Anno 1565, but at no cheaper rate then 20000 ſhot of Cannon, and the loſſe of 10000 of their men. 3 Valette ſituate on the ſame Languet, not far from the Caſtle of S. Hermes, (or rather lying cloſe unto it) extended the whole breadth of the ſaid Languet from the one Sea to the other: and ſo commanding both the Havens. Built ſince the departure of the Turks, impregnably fortified, and called thus by the name of Valets, the great Maſter, who ſo gallantly repulſed their fury. In this Town the great Maſter hath his Palace, and the Knights their ſeveral Alberges or Seminaries; all very fair and handſome buildings. 4 Burgo, a little Town or City on another Languet, lying in the Eaſtern Haven: at the extremity of which Promontory in a Demy Iland ſtands the ſtrong Caſtle of 5 S. Angelo, built on a Rock, oppoſite to Valette, on the other ſide of the Haven; and found impregnable by the Turks, who in vain beſieged it. 6 Iſola a ſmall Citie and better deſerving the name of a Town, ſituate in another Promontory, on the South of the other, defended on the Weſt-ſide by a ſtrong Platform, at the point of the Foreland; and on the Eaſtſide, by the impregnable Caſtle of S. Michael; in vain aſſaulted by the Turks, who on their ill ſucceſſe at the Siege hereof, gave over the enterprize, and ſailed home.

The people of this Iland originally were a Tyrian or Phœnician Colony, but intermixt in tract of time with ſome Greek Plantations, coming hither out of Sicil, as before was ſaid. For the moſt part dependant on the Fortunes of Carthage, afterwards of Rome, till ſubdued by the Saracens: By the Spaniards taken from the Moors, and by Charles the fift given to the Knights of the Rhodes; not long before expelled thence by Solyman the Magnificent, Anno 1522. Theſe Knights are in number 1000; of whom, 500 are always to be reſident in the Iland. The other 500 are diſperſed thorow Chriſtendom, at their ſeveral Seminaries, in France, Spain, Italy and Germany; and at any ſummons, are to make their perſonal appearance. Theſe Seminaries (Alberges they call them) are in number ſeven, viz. one of France in general, one of Auvergn, one of Provence, one of Caſtile, one of Aragon, one of Italy, and one of Germany; over every one of which they have a Grand Prior, who in the Countrey where he liveth, is of great reputation. An eighth Seminay they had in England, till the ſuppreſſion of it by Henry the 8th. yet they have ſome one or other, to whom they give the title of Grand Prior of England. Concerning the orignal and riches of theſe Knights, we have ſpoken when we were in Paleſtine; now a word or two onely of their places, and the election of their great Maſter. None are admitted into the Order, but ſuch as can bring a teſtimony of their Gentry for ſix deſcents: and when the Ceremonies of their Admiſſion (which are many) are performed, they ſwear to defend the Church of Rome, to obey their Superiours, to live upon the Revenues of their Order, onely, and withall to live chaſtly. Of theſe there be 16 of great authority (Counſellours of State we may fitly call them) called the Great Croſſes; out of whom the Officers of their Order, as the Marſhal, the Admiral, the Chancellour, &c. are choſen; and who, together with the Maſter, puniſh ſuch as are convict of any crime, 1. by degrading him, 2*ly*. by ſtrangling him, and 3*ly*. by throwing him into the Sea. Now when the Great Maſter is dead, they ſuffer no Veſſell to go out of this Iland, till another be elected, leſt the Pope ſhould intrude on their election; which is performed in this manner. The ſeveral Seminaries nominate two Knights, and two alſo are nominated for the Engliſh: theſe 16 from amongſt themſelves chooſe eight; theſe eight chooſe a Knight, a Prieſt, and a Frier-ſervant; and they three, out of the 16 Great Croſſes, elect the great Maſter. The great Maſter being thus choſen, is ſtiled (though but a Frier) The moſt illuſtrious, and moſt reverend Prince, the Lord Frier N. N. Great Maſter of the Hoſpital of S. John of Jeruſalem, Prince of Malta, Gaules, and Goza. Far different I aſſure you, from that of the firſt Maſters of this Order, who called themſelves onely Servant to the poor Servitors of the Hoſpital of Jeruſalem; or that of the Maſter of the Templers, who was onely intituled The humble Miniſter of the poor Knights of the Temple.

This Iland is conceived to yield to the great Maſter the yeerly rent of 10000 Ducats, the greateſt part whereof ariſeth out of Cotten-wool: beſides which, he hath towards the maintaining of his Eſtate, the tenth part of the prizes which are won from the Turks; and certain thouſands of Crowns yearly out of the treaſure of the Order, which is great and rich; and one of the beſt Commanderies in every Nation. And for the ſcowring of the Seas, and ſecuring their Harbours, they have many good Gallies, each of them able to contain 500 Souldiers, and to carry 16 piece of Ordinance, with which they make excurſions many times to the coaſts of Greece.

And ſo much for BARBARY.

MOUNT ATLAS.

IN our way from Barbary to Libya Interior, we muſt paſſe over Mount Atlas, a ridge of hills, of exceeding great heighth, and of no ſmall length. So high that the top, or Summis of it is above the Clouds, at leaſt ſo high that the eye of man is not able to diſcern the top of it. Extat in hoc Mari mons cui nomen, Atlas (ſaith Herodotus) ita ſublimis, ut ad illius verticem oculi mortalium pervenire non poſſint. Yet notwithſtanding, it is alwayes covered with Snow in the heats of Summer. Difficult of aſcent by reaſon of the ſharp and craggy precipices, which occur in many places of it; the reſt where plainer, and more even, of ſuch wondrous ſteepneſſe, that the precipices of the Rocks ſeem the ſafer way. Full of thick woods, and yielding to the Countreys on the North-ſide of it, the greateſt part of the Rivers, which refreſh and moiſten them: and where it bordereth on the proper, or Roman Africa, of ſuch ſelf-fertility, that it affordeth excellent fruits of its natural growth; not planted, graffed, or inoculated by the hand of man. The beginning of it is on the ſhores of the Weſtern Seas, which from hence have the name of the Atlantick Ocean; in the 26 Degree, and 30 Minutes of the Northern Latitude: and paſſing on directly Eaſtward, draw near unto the borders of Egypt; part of Marmarica, or the Roman Libya, only interpoſing. It is now called Anchiſa, and Montes Clari: And took the name of Atlas from Atlas a King of Mauritania, who dwelt at the bottom of this Mountain; fained by the Poets to be turned into this hill by Perſeus, and the head of Meduſa. Of the daughters of this King, their golden fruit, and the famous Gardens of the Heſperides, we have ſpoke already; though ſome remove the place of their habitation more into the Weſt (then by us diſpoſed of) and others into certain Iſlands of the Weſtern Ocean, which we ſhall meet withall hereafter. He was ſaid to have been a man of ſuch wondrous height, that the Heavens reſted on his ſhoulders; of which, when weary, he diſcharged his burden on the ſhoulders of Hercules; the ground of the fiction either taken from the height of the Mountain, the top whereof ſeemeth to touch the ſky; or from his extraordinary knowledge in Aſtronomy (as the times then were) whereby he came to be acquainted with the motions of the Stars and Planets; In which knowledge he inſtructed Hercules, when he came unto him. But for the more Authentick deſcription of it, take it thus from Virgil.

Atlantis duri, Cœlum qui vertice fulcit.
Atlantis, cinctum aſſidue cui nubibus atris
Piniferum caput & vento pulſatur & imbri.
Nix humeros infuſa tegit, tum flamina mento
Præcipitant ſenis, & glacie riget horrida barba.

Which may be Engliſhed in theſe words.

Then flying, he the top and ſides deſcries
Of Atlas, whoſe proud head ſupport's the ſkies.
Atlas, whoſe Pinie head with Clouds incloſed
Is to the ſtorms of winde and rain expoſed.
Now hide's the Snow his Arms, now tumbleth down Upon his Chin; his Beard with ice ore-grown.

OF LIBYA INTERIOR.

LIBYA INTERIOR is bounded on the North, with Mount Atlas, by which parted from Barbary, and Cyrenaica; on the Eaſt, with Libya Marmarica, interpoſed betwixt it and Egypt, and part of Æthiopia Superior, or the Habaſſine Empire; on the South with Æthiopia Inferior, and the Land of the Nigro's; and on the Weſt with the main Atlantick Ocean.

The reaſon of the name we have ſeen before, given to this Countrey in regard of its contiguouſneſſe and reſemblance to the other Libya; or elſe becauſe deſcended from the Children of Lehabim, by which that Countrey was firſt planted. For of King Libs, or Queen Libya (the daughter of Epaphus, and Caſſiopæa) and other the like fictions of the Greeks, I ſhall take no notice. Diſtinguiſhed from the other, by the addition of Interior, as lying more within the main land of Africa; the other being partly a Maritine Countrey.

Of the nature of the ſoyl and people we ſhall ſpeak anon, when we come to take a view of its ſeveral parts. Look we now on it as it ſtood in the time of the Romans: when, though not ſo well travelled, or diſcovered as in theſe laſt times: yet have we more particulars of it, as to the names and ſituation of the Rivers, Mountains, and chief Towns, than any of our later Writers have preſented to us. The Rivers of moſt note. 1. Salathus. 2. Chuſarus. 3. Ophiodus. 4. Noius. 5. Maſſa. 6. Sobus. 7. Daradus. 8. Stachiris, and 9 Maſitholus; all of them paying tribute to the Weſtern, or Atlantick Ocean. Mountains of moſt note. 1. Mandrus, out of which floweth the River Salatus. 2. Sagapola, which gives being to the River Sobus. 3. Ryſſadius, from whence Stachiris. 4. the Mountain called Deorum Currus

(of which more anon) whence Maſſitholus; and Mount Capas, out of which Daradas, have their firſt Originals. Then there are, 5. Mount Uſurgala, and 6 Mount Girgiris, from the firſt of which the River Bagradas, and from the laſt that of Cyniphus do derive their waters: & paſſing through the breaches of Atlas (of which theſe Mountains ſeem to be ſome diſmembred limbs) croſſe the whole breadth of the Roman Africk, to make themſelves a way to the Mediterranean. Beſides theſe, more within the Land, we finde the famous Rivers of Gir, and Niger: of which the firſt maketh the two great Lakes of Nuba, and Cheloindas; the ſecond, thoſe as great, or greater, called Nigritis, and the Lake of Libya. Which makes me wonder by the way, that in a Countrey ſo well watered as this ſeems to be; our Modern Writers ſhould complain of ſuch want of water: as if there were neither Spring nor River, nor Pond, nor Lake, nor any thing to moiſten and refreſh the earth, but the dews of Heaven, or ſome Pits of Salt and brackiſh water, not worth the taſting. Ptolomy muſt either be miſtaken, which I hardly think; or our late Travellers not ſo punctual in their obſervations, which I rather credit: or elſe the Rivers which were here in the time of my Author, In his arenarum vaſtitatibus diſperduntur, muſt be dried up and ſwallowed in theſe ſandy Deſarts, as Maginus telleth us; or finally there hath hapned ſome later conflagration than that of Phaeton, to which the want of water may be better attributed, than it was to his. Of which thus the Poet:

Hinc facta eſt Libye, raptis humoribus æſtu
Arida. —— Which Geo. Sandys thus rendeth.
A Sandie Deſart Lybia then became,
Her full veins emptied by the thirſtie flame.

Places of note and name in thoſe elders times, 1 Salathes, on the River ſo named, 2 Bagaxi, 3 Iarzitha, and 4 Babiba, all honoured with the name of Cities. 5 Garama, 6 Gira, and Nigira, the Metropoles of their ſeveral Nations. Then there were two Havens of ſome good eſteem, the one called Magnus Portus, the other Portus Perphoſius; beſides 43 other Towns and Cities (twelve of theſe on the banks of the River Niger:) whoſe names and ſituation do occur in Ptolomy; which ſhews the Countrey not to be ſo unhabitable and void of people, as was pretended by ſome other (but leſſe diligent) Writers.

Nations of moſt note in it in the former times, were the Getuli, on the back of Mauritania, a reſolute and unconquered people, Genus inſuperabile bello, as we finde in Virgil: 2 the Garamantes, dwelling South of Cyrenaica, and giving name to a large and ſpacious territory, called Vallis Garamantica; ſuppoſed to be the moſt remote Nation towards the South, as the Indians were towards the Eaſt; whence we have ultra Garamantas & Indos, in another Poet. 3. the Pyrrhæi, an Æthiopick Nation, on the South of the River Gir: 4 the Nigritæ, originally Æthiopians alſo, inhabiting on the North of the River Niger; 5 the Odranguli, of the ſame original extraction, poſſeſſing the Countrey between the Mountains Capha, and Thala; 6 the Perorſori, dwelling neer the hills called Deorum Currus; 7 the Meinaci, at the foot of Mount Thala; 8 the Nabæ, on the Weſt of Vallis Garamantica. 9 the Derbici, dwelling on the weſt of the hill Aranga. And 10 the Pſylli, placed by Ptolomie amongſt the Inhabitans of Cyrene: but ſo neer the borders of this Countrey, and ſo far from the civilities of thoſe Nations which converſed either with Rome or Carthage; that they may more properly be thought to belong to this. Of a nature ſo venomous, that they could poyſon a Snake. Inſomuch, that when their wives were delivered, they would throw their children amongſt a bed of Serpents; ſuppoſing that childe to be born of an adulterate bed, the very ſmell of whoſe body would not drive away a whole brood of the like poyſonous vermine. Others there were of leſſe note, which that Author calleth Minores Gentes; many in number, of ſmall fame, and therefore not material to be here inſerted; thoſe of moſt note, the Africerones (whom ſome Authors call the Gampſaphantes) honoured with the Attribute of Gens Magna, the greateſt as it ſeems of thoſe leſſer Nations. None of them of much note in the way of ſtory, except they were theſe Libyans, which are ſo famouſed in Herodotus for an expedition they made againſt the South winde. For when this winde blowing abroad the hills and deſarts of ſand, had dried up thoſe many rills and waters they had among them; they to revenge this injury, by common conſent armed themſelves, and went to fight againſt him. But they took not the South winde unprepared. For he muſtered up his forces, incountred them with ſuch a brave volley of ſand, that he overwhelmed and ſlew them all. A better friend was the North winde to the Citizens of Rhegium, in Italy, and better was he rewarded for it: for having ſcattered a mighty fleet, which Dionyſius prepared againſt them, he was by the common-councell, made free of their City. That part of Cæſars war, which was managed here, we ſhall hereafter meet with on another occaſion.

Thus having took a view of the ſtate of this Countrey, as it ſtood of old; we will next look upon it in its preſent condition; as comprehending the whole Provinces of 1 Biledulgerid, or Numidia: 2 Libya Deſerta, or Sarra; and 3. a great part of that Countrey which is now called Terra Nigritarum. But becauſe the greateſt part of this laſt Countrey is to come under another Accompt, we will here onely take the two firſt into conſideration.

1. NUMIDIA.

1. NUMIDIA, is bounded on the Eaſt, with Egypt; on the Weſt, with the Atlantick Ocean; on the North, with Mount Atlas which parteth it from Barbarie, and Cyrene; on the South, with Libya Deſerta.

It

It was thus first called by John Leo, an African Writer, to whose description of all Africk we are much beholding; because of that resemblance which the people of it have to the old Numidians; which is after the custom of the Nomades, living without houses, under their Wagons, and Carts, as Lucan testifieth of them, thus:

Nulla domus, plaustris habitant, migrare per arva
Mos, atque errantes circumvectare Penates.

They dwell in wains, not houses; and do stray
Through fields, and with them lead their gods each way.

And worthily may they owe their names to them, from whom they borrow so much of their nature: for the people to this day spend their lives in hunting, and stay but three or four dayes in a place, as long as the grasse will serve the Camels. This is the cause why this Countrey is so ill peopled, the Towns so small in themselves, and so remote from others. An example hereof is Teffet a great City in their esteem, which yet containeth but 400 housholds, and hath no neighbours within 300 miles of it.

The Countrey aboundeth with Dates, whence it is called Dactylorum regio, and in the Arabick Biledulgerid, which signifieth also a Date-region. These Dates (to speak properly) the fruit of the Palm Trees, usually growing in hot Countries, of which some are male, some female; the first bringing forth onely flowers, the other fruit: and yet the male so beneficial to the increase of the Dates, that unlesse a flowred bough of the male be ingrafted into the female, the Dates never prove good, in case they bear any Dates at all, as before was noted. This fruit is the chief diet of the people: but this sweet meat hath sowr sawce; for it commonly rotteth their teeth betimes. As for the stones of these Dates, they feed their Goats with them, whereby they grow fat, and yield store of milk. The Aire hereof, of so sound a nature; that if a man be troubled with the French disease, he shall there, without any course of Physick, finde a present remedy.

The natural Inhabitants of this Countrey are said to be a base and vile people, Thieves, Murderers, treacherous, and ignorant of all things; feeding most commonly on Dates, Barley, and Carrion; accounting bread a Diet for their Festival dayes. But the Arabians, who are intermingled with them, in most part of the Countrey, affirmed to be (comparatively with the Natives) ingenuous, liberal, and civil. The Garments of these Numidians, of the courset cloath, so short, that they cover not half the body: the richer sort, distinguished by a Jacket of blue Cotton with wide sleeves. Their Steeds are Camels, which they ride on without stirrop, or so much as a saddle; a leather, thrust through an hole made in the nose of the Camel, serves them for a Bridle; and to save the charge of Spurs, they make use of a goad. Their Religion, Mahometisme, to which perverted (Christianity having once had some footing here) in the year 710. the Azanaghi and other people of those parts then subdued by the Saracens: who held them for a Nation of so little reckoning, that no man of accompt amongst them would descend so low, as to be their Prince; but left them to be ruled as in former times, by the Chiefs, or Heads of their several Clans!

The chief River which is left, hath the name of Dara, and possibly enough may be the Daradus of Ptolomy. The rest which are mentioned in that Author, rising out of Mount Atlas, and falling headily this way, finding these barren wildernesses to afford them the readiest Channels; are trained along by the allurements of the Sands; and are either swallowed up in great Lakes; or being too liberal to the thirsty Sands in their way to the Sea, die at the last for thirst in the midst of the Desarts.

The Principal of their Provinces (if capable of a distinction into better and worse.) 1 DARA; more cultivated than the rest, because of the River running thorow it, whence it hath its name: 250 miles in length, indifferently fruitful, where the River doth overflow and water it; and of so different a nature from all the rest, that here the Countrey people have some scattered Villages, the better sort their several Castles. 2 PESCARA, so called from the chief Town of it, exceedingly infested with Scorpions; the sting whereof is present death. 3 FIGHIG, so called from the chief Town also, inhabited by an industrious and witty people (in respect of the rest): some of which betake themselves to Merchandise; some to the studie of their Law, which they studie at Fesse, and grow rich upon it. 4 TEGORARIN, a large Region, and well inhabited, better than any except Dara; as having in it 50 Castles or Gentlemens houses, and 100 Villages. The people wealthy, in regard of the great trade which they drive with the Negroes; and pretty good husbands in manuring their land, on which they are forced to lay much soil; and will therefore let some of it Rent-free to strangers, reserving onely the dung of themselves and their cattell. 5 BILEDULGERID, specially so called, abundantly fruitful in Dates, whence it had the name; but destitute of Corn, by reason of the extream dryness of the soyle: and yet hath in it many Towns of good note among them. Of lesse note, 6 Tesset, 7 Segelmesse, 8 Zeb, 9 Tebelbeti, and 10 Fessen, so called from the chiefest of their Towns and Villages.

Towns of most note both now and in former times, besides those spoken of before, 1 Timugedit, in the Province of Dara, the birth-place of Mahomet Ben Amet and his three sons, the founders of the Xeriffian Empire. 2 Tafilete, in the said Province, to which place Mahomet the second of these sons, and second King of Morocco of that Family, confined his eldest brother Amet, having took him prisoner, Anno 1544. 3. Teffet, a great Town of 400 houses, but so poorly neighboured, that there is no other inhabited place within 300 miles of it; but of that before. 4 Techort, the inhabitants whereof are very courteous to ſtrangers, whom they entertain at free-coſt; and chooſe rather to marry their daughters to them, than to any of the Natives. 5 Eboacah, the moſt Eaſtern Town in all this Country, diſtant about 100 miles from the borders of Egypt 6 Debris, one of the chief Cities of the Garamantes, of great renown in former times for Wells or Fountain of the Sun. The waters whereof being luke-warm at the Sun-riſing, cooled more and more till noon, was then very cold, and ſo continued untill midnight; afterwards by degrees growing hotter and hotter; as if it had a natural Antipathy with the Sun, hotteſt when that was furtheſt off: and cold when neereſt, 7 Maſucha, ſeated on a Rock, garriſoned by Jugurth for a place of refuge, but taken by Maurius, in the proſecution of that War. 8 Capſa, the chief City of all this tract, ſaid to be built by Hercules; but queſtionleſs of very great ſtrength; anguibus areniſque vallata, made inacceſſible (ſaith the Hiſtorian) by the thick Sands, and multitudes of Serpents which were harboured in them; but eaſily forced by Marius in his Wars with Jugurth, and utterly deſtroyed by Cæſar in his war againſt Juba.

It ſeems by this, that thoſe people neighbouring Mount Atlas, were much at the diſpoſal of the Kings of Mauritania, in the times foregoing; and ſo they have been alſo in theſe latter times! For though neglected by the Romans, who thought it an high point of wiſdom not to extend their Empire beyond that Mountain; yet the Saracens had not long poſſeſſed themſelves of thoſe parts of Barbary, which was in the year 698; but within twelve yeers (Anno 710.) they ſubdued this Country, and planted their Religion in it, though not themſelves. Nor was Amet, the firſt Xeriffe of Morocco warm in that eſtate, when he thought it beſt for him to ſecure himſelf in it by the conqueſt of this: to whoſe ſucceſſors, the chiefes of the Tribes hereof render ſome acknowledgements.

2. LIBYA DESEETA.

2. LIBYA DESERTA, is bounded on the north with Numidia, or Biledulgerid, to which contiguous; on the Eaſt, with Nubia, a Kingdom and Province of the Land of Negroes; on the South, with the land of Negroes wholly; and on the Weſt, with Gualata, another Province of theſe Negroes interpoſed betwixt it and the Atlantick.

The reaſon of the name of Libya we have had before. To which Deſerta was added upon very good reaſons, as well to difference it from the other Libya, a Province of Egypt; as to expreſs the barren and ſandy condition of it: in which reſpect by the Arabians called Sara, ſignifying in their language a rude and inhabitable Deſart, as this Country is. So truly ſuch, that men may travell in it eight days together without finding water, or ſeeing any tree, and no graſs at all. The water which they have is drawn out of pits, exceeding brackiſh; and many times thoſe pits ſo covered with the Sands, that men die for thirſt: the Merchants therefore carrying their water with them on the backs of Camels; which if it fail, they kill their Camels, and drinke a water with they wring out of ther guts. And yet as dangerous and uncomfortable as theſe Deſarts be, they are very much travelled by the Merchants of Feſſe, and Tremeſen; tracing to Agades and Tombatum, in the land of Negroes.

The People differ not much from the Numidians in ſhape or qualities; but if a worſe of quality, it muſt be the Lybian. They did once worſhip a God called Pſaphon, who when he lived, taught divers Birds which he caught, and then ſet at liberty, to ſay theſe words, viz. Pſaphon is a great God: which the ſimple people hearing, and admiring at it, afforded him Divine honours. Converted at laſt to the Chriſtian Faith, they remained a while in the profeſſion of the Goſpel: exterminated by the Saracens about the year 710. who having added Numidia or Biledulgerid to their former conqueſts, planted their Superſtitions in this Country alſo.

This Country is divided (as others into Provinces) into five great Deſarts, to which thoſe of leſs note are to be referred.

1. ZANHAGA, beginning at the borders of Gualata (interpoſed betwixt it and the Atlantick Ocean) and extending Eaſtward to the Salt-pits of Tegaza; having on the South, Gualata and Tombutum in the land of Negroes; ſo deſtitute of water, that there is one pit only at the end of each hundred mile, brackiſh and unwholſom; and in the Deſarts of Azaoad and Araoan, which are parts of this, but one in an 150. or 200 miles riding.

2. ZUENZIGA, extended from the Salt-pits of Tegaza Eaſtward, to the Deſart of Targa: bounded on the North, with Segelmeſſe, and Tebelbeti, Numidian Provinces; and on the South, with the Deſarts of Ghir and Guber. So void of water, (eſpecially in that part thereof which is called Goguden) that in nine dayes travell there is not ſo much as one drop to be ſeen, but what they carry on their Camels.

3. TARGA, extended Eaſtward to the Deſart of Ighidi; and reaching from Tegorarin in the North, to the Deſart of Agader in the South: the beſt conditioned part of all this Countrey, well watered, of a temperate Aire, and a ſoyl reaſonably fruitfull. In length from North to South 300 miles; and liberally ſtored with Manna, which they gather into little veſſels, and carry to Agadez to ſell. Mingled in water or with pottage it is very cooling; and drank of in their Feaſts, as a ſpeciall dainty.

4. LEMBTA, extendeth from the Deſarts of Ighidi, unto that of Bordea.

5. BORDEA, which reacheth to the borders of Nubia. Of theſe two there is little to be ſaid in ſeveral, but that this laſt was diſcovered lately by one Hamar, a guide to a Caravan of Merchants; who blinded with the ſands wandred out of his way, and cauſing ſand to be given him at every twenty miles end, found by the ſmell at laſt that they begun to draw nigh ſome inhabited Place; and told them of it 40 miles before they came to it.

Cities

Cities of note we hope for none, where we finde no water. Of such as go for Cities here, the most considerable, 1 Tegaza, rich in veins of Salt, resembling Marble; which the Inhabitans, being 20 days distant from any habitation, and consequently many times in danger to die for famine; exchange for Victuals with the Merchants of Tombutum, who come hither for it. Much troubled with the South winds, which doeth so drive the sands upon them, that it causeth many of them to loose their sight. 2. Huaden, or Hoden, a known resting place, and a great refreshment to the Merchant in the midst of these Desarts. 3 Guargata on the brink of a Lake, fed by a River of hot water; affirmed to be a Town of elegant building, and inhabited by a wealthy people, 4 Toberaum, of little note, but that it serveth for a Stage or baiting place to the wearie Traveller. Of which kinde there are said to be others at the extremities or ends of each several Desarts; the Havens of such men as sail in these sandy Seas, but not else observable.

Nor is there much, if any thing, observable of them in the way of Story, but that not looked after by any of the great Conquerours, either Greeks or Romans; much of the Countrey was possessed by Arabian Colonies (men fit enough to plant in such barbarous Nations:) at such time as the Saracens planted their Religion here. The Government of the Countrey since, as it was before, by the Chiefs of their several Clans, or Families, who as they know no Law themselves, so do the people shew as much ignorance of it in their lives and actions: differing but little from brute Beasts, more than shape and speech.

And so much for LIBYA INTERIOR.

OF TERRA NIGRITARVM.

TERRA NIGRITARVM, or THE LAND OF NEGROES, is bounded on the East, with Æthiophia Superior; on the West, with the Atlantick Ocean, on the North with Libya Deserta; and on the South, with the Æthiopick Ocean, and part of Æthiopia Inferior. So called from the Nigritæ, the chief of the Nations here inhabiting in the time of Ptolomy: and they so named from the River Niger, of which more anon.

The Country very hot by reason of its situation under the Torrid Zone; yet very well inhabited, full of people, and in some places alwayes green: well watered, and exceeding fruitful, specially in those parts which lie within the compass of the overflowings of the River Niger; and on the further side of the River Sanaga: abundantly well stored both with Corn, Cattel, and Garden-ware for the use of their Kitchins; well Wooded, and those Woods well furnished with Elephants and other Beasts, both wild and tame. Their greatest want (but such a want as may be born with) is the want of Fruit-trees, few of which they have; and those they have, bear one kind of fruit only, which is like the Chesnut, but somwhat bitterer. Rain here doth neither hurt nor help; their greatest welfare consisting in the overflowings of Niger; as that of Egypt in the inundations of Nile. In some parts liberally enriched with Mines both of Gold and Silver, very fine and pure: so that had not the Portugals affected the honour of discovering New-Worlds as much as Wealth; they might have made as rich a Factory here, as at the Indies.

The Inhabitans, till the coming of the Portugals thither, were for the most part so rude and barbarous, that they seem to want that use of Reason which is peculiar unto man; of little wit and destitute of all Arts and sciences, prone to luxury, and for the greatest part Idolaters, though not without some small admixture of Mahumetans. When the Portugals first sailed into these Coasts, the People hereof took the Ships for great Birds whith white wings: and after, upon better acquaintance, they could not be brought to believe, but that the Eyes which were casually painted on the beaks of the ships, were the eyes by which they saw how to direct themselves in their course. Guns seemed to them, for their hideous noise, to be the works of the Devil; and for Bag-pipes, they took them to be living creatures; neither when they had been permitted to feel them, would they be perswaded but that they were the work of Gods own hands. The very Nobles (if so noble a name may without offence be given to such blockish people) are so dull and stupid, that they are ignorant of all things which belong to civil society: and yet so reverent of their King, that when they are in his presence, they never look him in the face, but sit flat on their buttock, with their elbows on their knees, and their hands on their faces. They use to anoint their hair with the fat of Fishes, which makes them stink more wretchedly than they would do otherwise. Of complexion they are for the most part Cole-black, whence the name of Negroes; but on the South-side of the River Senaga they are only Tawny: the Blacks so much in love with their own complexion, that they use to paint the Devil white; which I find thus versified.

The Land of Negroes is not far from thence,
Neerer extended to th' Atlantick Main;
Wherein the black Prince keeps his residence,
Attended by his jetty coloured Train:
Who in their native beauty most delight,
And in contempt do paint the Devil white.

They have tried all Religions, but agree in none. Idolaters at the first, as others the Descendants of Cham: Afterwards it is said that they received the Rites and Religion of the Jews, (but the time and occasion of it I do no where find); in which they continued very long: But that being worn out at the last, Christianity prevailed in some Kingdoms of it. In the year 973. Mahumetism began to get ground amongst them, by the diligence and zeal of some of the Preachers of that Law: the first who were seduced that way being those of Melli; after which Tombuto, and then Gualata, were infected with the same poyson also. In the end, all the rest of this Country followed their example, except the Kingdom of Borneo, some part of Nubia, and the Coasts of the Atlantick Ocean, which continue in their antient Gentilism: Christianity being confined to a corner of Nubia (if still there remaining) and some few Garrisons belonging to the Crown of Portugal. And as they are of different Religions, so are they also of several Languages: those of Gualata, Guinea, Tombutum, Melli, and Gugonti, speaking the Language called Sungai; the Guberoi, Canontes, Chæsenæ, and Gangrates, &c. that called Guber; Gualata, a language of its own; and those of Nubia, one resembling the Arabick, Chaldæan, and Egyptian.

Mountains of most note in it, in the former times, were those of 1. Arvaltes, and 2. Arangus, and 3. that called Deorum currus; this last supposed to be the same which is now called Punta de Lopes Gonsales, but that more probably, which they now call Cabo de Sierra Leona, a large Promontory, thrusting thrusting it self into the Sea; discerned afar off by the Saylor and the Country-people, as wel by reason of his height, reaching to the clouds, as the continual lightnings and thunders, which do issue thence.

Rivers of most note, besides Nile, which watereth it on the East, 1 Senaga, or Canaga, which riseth out of the Lake of Guoga, supposed to be the same which Ptolomy calleth Lacum Chelonidem. And if so, then must this be the River Gir, of which he saith, that having fallen into that Lake, and there swallowed up, it thence produced another River, whose name he telleth not; little inferiour unto Nilus for the length of its course, the variety of strange Creatures which are bred therein, or the distinction which it maketh in the face of this Country: the people on the one side of it, being Black, on the other Tawnie; the soyl on the one side very barren, on the other fruitfull. In the end having run his race, he falleth into the Atlantick by two great Out-lets. 2 Niger a River better known to Ptolomy by name, than nature; now found to have its rise from a great Lake, within two degrees of the Equinoctiall; whence running northwards for a time, he hideth himself under ground for the space of 60 miles together: when rising up again, and making a great Lake, called the Lake of Borneo, he bendeth his course directly Westward; and taking in many less Channels, he teareth the earth into many Islands, and at last falleth into the Sea. Of as long course, and the same wondrous nature as the River Nilus. For from the fifteenth day of June, it overfloweth all the adjacent fields, the space of 40 days together; and in so many more, recollecteth his waters, into their proper Channels: the whole Country being indebted to these inundations, for its fertility, which otherwise could be but small, since the dryness of the soyl can afford no exhalations, whereby clouds may be generated, and the earth refreshed with moystures, or revived with dewes.

Chief Cities of this Country in the time of Ptolomy, 1 Nigira, the Metropolis of the Country, 2 Panagra, 3 Malachath, 4 Anygath, 5 Thumondacana, 6 Suluce; and others to the number of 17 in all; situate all along the course of the River Niger: Of all which we have nothing now remaining but the situation and the names, which that Author giveth us. So that the memory of all the Ancient Towns and People being quite defaced; we must look upon it now as it standeth divided at this time into ferveral Kingdoms, 25 at the least in all (some say many more) the chief of which are these that follow.

1. ORA ANTEROSA, A large tract of ground on the Western Ocean, extended from Cape Blance to the River Carnuga, sandy and barren, but reasonably well peopled. The Inhabitants hereof called Azanaghi, were accompted formerly very rude and barbarous; much civilized since the Portugals and other Christian Nations began to trade there; of middle stature, complexioned between black and ash colour; great lyers, very treacherous, poor and parsimonious, and very patient in extreams both of heat, and hunger. The chief Towns, 1 Porto di Dio (we may call it Gods Port) and 2 Porto del Riscatto, two frequented Havens, thus named occasionally by the Portugueze, at their first coming thither. 3 Arquin, a strong Fortress of the Portugals, situate on or neer the Promontory now called Cape Blance; and giving name unto some Ilands, five or six in number, lying neer unto it, called the Isles of Arquin; inhabited by a barbarous People, named the Azanhays; but of no great note. These coasts discovered first by the Portugals, An. 1452. under the conduct of Prince Henry, son of John the first; or by his incouragement and directions.

2. GUALATA, distant from the Ocean 100 miles, (the Province of Ora Anterosa being interposed) is but a small Country, though a Kingdom; containing in it but three Burrough-Towns, with some Territorie of ground and petty Hamlets belonging to them. Fruitfull only in Dates, Mill, and Pulse; but of these two last no great abundance. The Inhabitans Cole-black, hospitable towards strangers to their power, but poor and miserable; without Laws, setled form of Governement, Gentry and Judges.

3. AGADEZ bordering on Targa, one of the five Desarts of Libya; the People of it generally given to grazing, their houses made of green boughs, which upon every change of Pasture they carry with them. So that we are to look for few Towns among them, but these moveable Villages. One of good note it hath, called Agadez, by the name of the Country, inhabited for the most part by Merchants Strangers, who drive a great Trade betwixt this and Tremesen. The Town well walled, the houses of a better building than the Country promiseth; the People civiller, and more fair conditioned than the rest of the Negroes, seated commodiously on a River which falleth into the Senaga, and by that means hath correspondence with the Ocean also. The King hereof, a Tributary to the King of Tombuto, payeth him 15000 Crowns of Annual tribute.

4. CANO, a large Province on this side of the River Canaga, full of woods, mountainous, and in some parts desart; but plentifull enough of Corn, Rice, Citrons, and Pomgranats, with good store of Cotton-wool. Well-watered besides that great River, with some lesser Streams. Sufficiently populous, and stored with good Towns and Villages, the habitations of the Shepherds and Husbandmen; as the chief Town called Cano, is of wealthy Merchants. This the Seat-Royal of their King, a Tributary also unto him of Tombuto, envir oned with a wall, built of a Chalk-stone, as most part of the houses are.

5. CASENA, on the East of Cano, but lesse fruitfull far; the Country over-grown with vast woods, and the soyl untractable; affording only Mill, and Barley; but of that good plenty. The People as black as any Coal, with great noses, and most prominent lips. Their houses very poor and mean, and their Towns accordingly, none of them numbring more than 300 Families.

6. SANAGA, lying on the other side of that River, from which thus named; extendeth to the Atlantick Ocean, as far as to the Promontory, which by Ptolomy named Arsinarium, is now called Cape Vert, or Caput Viride. The Country full of rich Pastures, goodly Trees, and most sorts of Fruits; plentifull enough of Mill and Pulse, but ill provided of other Corn, and no Grapes at all. Well watered both with Lakes and Rivers. No tame beasts about their fields, but Goats, Cows and Oxen; of Lyons, Leopards, Wolves, and Elephants, too great a plenty. The people extream black, much given to lying, treacherous, very full of talk, exceſſively venereous, and extreamly jealous. A King they have, but ſuch a one as holdeth but by courteſie onely, having no certain Rents, or Revenues, but what is given by his Nobles.

7. GAMBRA, or GAMBEA, a ſmall Kingdom on the River ſo named, but bordering in ſome places on the Atlantick. In thoſe parts very pleaſant, the Trees alwayes flouriſhing, the aire very hot; in other parts, of the ſame nature with Sanaga, but that this affords good ſtore of Rice, which the other doth not.

8. TOMBUTUM, on the further ſide of the River Sanaga: exceeding plentifull of Corn, Cattel, Milk, and Butter. Deſtitute of Salt, but what they buy of forrein Merchants at exceſſive rates; and ſmall ſtore of Horſes. Well watered by a branch alſo of the River Niger, and many wells of purpoſe made to receive ſuch waters, as by artificial Dikes and Channels are derived from both. The people courteous, rich, and pleaſant, ſpending whole dayes and nights in ſinging and dancing. Their food, Fleſh, Butter, Milk, and Fiſh, which they mingle together, and make it neither toothſom nor wholſom. The chief Towns. 1. Tombuto, which gives name to this Kingdom, ſituate about twelve miles from a branch of the Niger, and founded by the Saracens, or Arabians in the 610th. year of their Hegira. The houſes all of mud and thatch, except one fair Church, and the Kings Palace, both of lime and ſtone. Inhabited by wealthy Merchants, who manage a great trade betwixt this and Feſſe. 2. Gago, the reſidence of the King; large, without walls, the buildings very poor and mean, except ſuch as belong unto the King or the chief Nobility. The Merchants rich, and their wares ſumptuous and precious, but exceſſive dear. The Town about 400 miles diſtant from Tombuto, ſituate in a fruitfull Countrey for Rice, Fruits, and Fleſh, and well repleniſhed with freſh water. 3. Cabra, a large Town, but unwalled, and of no better building than the other two.

9. MELLI, lying on the Eaſt of Tombutum, is a ſpacious and fruitfull Province, ſituate all along on a branch of the River Niger, in breadth 300 miles, and abundantly fertile, eſpecially in Corn, Cattel, and Cotton Wool: the people generally very wealthy; of greater wit, civility and induſtry than the reſt of the Negroes. The chief Town of it is called Melli, unwalled, but large, as containing in it 6000 families; furniſhed with many Temples, Prieſts, and Readers of the Mahometan Law, which thoſe of this Countrey did firſt unhappily admit of. This the Seat-royal of their Kings, who are very curteous unto ſtrangers; but Homagers and Tributaries to the King of Tombutum.

10. GHENEOA, ſituate betwixt Gualata, Tombutum, and Melli, but ſo that it bordereth in one place on the Ocean alſo; is a wealthy Countrey: but hath neither Town, or Caſtle in it, except that wherein the King reſideth, who is a Vaſſal alſo to the King of Tombutum. That Town the reſidence alſo of their Prieſts, Doctors, and Merchants: of which the Prieſts and Doctors are apparelled in white, but all the reſt in black, or blue Cotton. The people have great traffick with the Merchants of Barbary; and though made very rich by the overflowings of Niger, and the wealth of the Countrey, they have great ſtore of Gold uncoined; yet in buying and ſelling at home, they uſe iron-mony.

11. GUBER lieth on the Eaſt of the former Province; of the ſame length, and naturally well fenced with lofty mountains. Exceeding populous, and thick ſet with Villages, in which dwell their Husband-men and Shepherds; rich in their numerous herds of all ſorts of Cattel, as alſo great quantities of Rice and Pulſe: the people very induſtrious, and good Artificers. Their principal Town is called Guber alſo, a Town of 6000 families, the uſual reſidence of their King; full of wealthy Merchants, and rich in Manufactures.

12. GIALOFI lieth betwixt the two great Rivers of Sanaga and Gambia. The people whereof are of ſuch admirable dexterity, that they can leap upon an horſe when he is in his full gallop, ſtand in the ſaddle when he runneth faſteſt; turn themſelves about upon his back, and ſuddenly down. Of their Countrey I finde little, of their Story nothing, but that Bemoin one of their Kings, being overlaid with Civil wars, in the year 1489. went for aid to the King of Portugal, and gave great hopes of his converſion to the Chriſtian faith. But being ſhamefully murdered by Pedro de Vas the Portugal General, the hopes of Chriſtianity in theſe parts fell together with him.

13. GUINEA, is a Sea-coaſt Countrey, extended from Sierra Leona (ſo called from the Lyon-like roaring of the Waves beating on that Promontory) in the tenth degree of Longitude; to the borders of Benin in the 30th. But the Portugals comprehend under this name the whole Sea-coaſt of Africk from Cape Blanco and the Countrey of Ora Anteroſa, to Angola, and Congo, incluſively, in the Lower Æthiopia. But take it in the proper ſenſe, as before limited, & we ſhall finde it to be rich in Gold, Ivory, Rice, Barley, Cotton-wool, and a ſort of Pepper, which the Portugals call Pimienta del Rabo, the Natives Melegneta, and we Guinie-pepper: of double the efficacy of the Pepper which comes from India; and therefore forbidden to be ſold by the Kings of Portugal, for fear their Indian trade ſhould be diſcontinued. Well ſtored with Sheep and Poultry, and of Dates good plenty. All other Fruits which they want, or care for, are brought thither from Gualata. Birds in abundance, and of Elephants and Apes too many. A Tree they have, by them called Mignolo, the Bark whereof being cut doth afford a moſt excellent liquor, more pleaſant, ſtrong, and nouriſhing, than the choiceſt Wines; which they drink of in their great Feaſts, even to drunkenneſſe. The people of both Sexes very rude and barbarous, as well in their habit, as their manners; yet amongſt many barbarous cuſtomes they have one moſt commendable, which is the breeding of their Maidens. When marriable, they place them in an houſe ſevered from the reſt of their Cities, like a Cloyſter, or Monaſtery; where for a years ſpace, they are trained up by ſome old man of beſt eſtimation. At the years end they are brought out well apparelled with Muſick & dances; where the young men pleaſe themſelves in the the choice of their wives: for whom having bargained with their Parents, they ſatisfie the old man for his care and pains in their Education. They keep one day of reſt weekly, but therein differ from all Nations in the world beſides, that they keep their Sabbath upon the Tueſday. Diſtracted into as many Kingdoms, as great Tribes, or Families: the Kings thereof ſubordinate unto one another, as they lie more within the Land, till they end all in a ſubjection to the King of Mandinga. Places of moſt note. 1 Songus, the principal of Mandinga, about 100 leagues Eaſtward from the Cape of Palmes. 2 Budomel, the chief Town of the Kingdom ſo called. 3 Uxoo, in the Center of all the Countrey. 4 Mina, a ſtrong hold of the Portugals, ſituate near the Cape, called Cabo de Trois pintas the three pointed Cape; named ſometimes alſo S. George de Mina, by the name of the Cappadocian Martyr, and the Mines of Gold, which they hoped to finde there. By which, and by the Fort of Arquin, which they have upon Cape Blanco, in the North part of this Land of the Negro's; they command all the Countreys which they call by the name of Guinea. This Town not built untill the year 1486, in the beginning of the reign of John the 2d. though the diſcovery of theſe Coaſts had been made before, An. 1452. under the conduct of Prince Henry Duke of Viſeo, Son of John the firſt. By whoſe incouragement the Portugueze did firſt imploy themſelves in forreign diſcoveries, and became enamoured of the Seas. For in this interval, the Portingals being more covetous of new diſcoveries, than of fortifying and ſecuring the old, gave opportunity to the Caſtilians to look after this Countrey, who having took a view of it, in the year 1477. purſued the Enterprize the next year with a Fleet of 35 ſhips, under the command of Pedro de Cobides, who brought thence great quantity of Gold: but in the year 1479. by an agreement, or capitulation between thoſe Princes, the trade hereof was again left free to the Portugals; who thereupon diſcovering the Iſle of St. George, and finding it a fit place to ſecure, and command the reſt, built in it the ſtrong Fort, or Caſtle of Mina, which before we ſpoke of.

14. BENIN, lieth directly Eaſt of Guinea, by the Portugals reckoned for a Province, or Kingdom of it: the King whereof is ſaid to have 600 wives, with all which twice a year he goeth out in Pomp. The Gentlemen (if I abuſe not the name) have moſt of them 80 wives, ſome more; he that is pooreſt, ten, or twelve, and the more the merrier. The people thereof do cut and raſe their skin with three lines drawn to the Navel; eſteeming it neceſſary to ſalvation. They uſe all, both men and women, to go naked till they are married; and then to be cloathed onely from the waſte to the knees: ſo that had our Sir Thomas Moor lived in theſe parts, he had in ſome meaſure had his deſire. For he among other ſtrange plots in his Utopian Common-wealth, telleth us, how there it is the cuſtome, for ſome reverend old Sire to bring in naked the young man; and ſome hoary old Matron, to preſent naked, the young woman; between whom a Marriage is propounded. For, ſaith he, in buying a Horſe, the chap-man not onely vieweth his naked carkaſe, but taketh off all his trappings and ſaddle, leſt under them ſome blame might be hidden: why then in chuſing of a wife, ſhould we take one, of whom we ſee no more than the face (unius Palmæ ſpatium) and perhaps ſcarce that. The learned and ingenuous Author of the New Atlantis, though he diſlike of Marriages made upon ſuch uncertainties, yet he would have this diſcovery made by ſome friends of the parties, not by them themſelves: it being, as he ſaith, very inconvenient, that after ſuch a plain and familiar ſight of each others perſon, there ſhould be a refuſal upon either ſide. But theſe new Projects I refer to your modeſt cenſures.

15. GUANGARA lieth on the North of Benin, a wealthy and well peopled Countrey; but their Towns and Villages very mean; except that called by the ſame name with the Countrey, where the King reſideth, which is ſomewhat better than the reſt, well traded, and full of rich Merchants. The King hereof of ſo great Revenues, that he keepeth ſeven thouſand Archers, and five hundred Horſe in continual pay; but Homager and Tributary to the King of Bornum.

16. BORNUM, a large and opulent Countrey on the Weſt of Guangara, is there extended to the length of 500 miles. Diſtinguiſhed equally in a manner into hills, and valleys: the hills inhabited by Neat-herds, and Sheepherds, breeding great flocks and herds of Cattel, with Mill, and many other fruits to us unknown; the Valleys repleniſhed with many Market-Towns, and as full of Corn. The people are of no Religion, but live like beaſts; without propriety ſo much as in their wives, or children: nor are they differenced by names, as in other places, but by ſome mark upon their bodies. Which though it ſeem ſtrange to us of this preſent age, yet was it thus in part, with our Saxon Anceſtors. Whence have we elſe the names of White, Brown, Black, Gray, Green, and Tawny; or thoſe of Long, Short, Low, Curle, Criſpe, and others, but from ſuch Originals? not to ſay any thing of the names of Trades, and Occupations, ſo familiar with us. The name of their chief Citie is Borneo, where the King reſideth. A potent Prince, who keepeth in continual pay three thouſand Horſe, and great numbers of Foot, and yet is ſaid to have no other Revenue, than what he getteth by ſtrong hand from his Enemies. Which if it be true, thoſe Kings muſt needs be good Warriours, and have great ſucceſſes alſo in their undertakings: it being alſo ſaid of theſe Kings of Borneo, that all the Furniture of their Horſes, all the Diſhes, Cups and Platters which they eat, or drink in, yea the very Chains for his Dogs, were of fineſt Gold.

17. Gaoga lieth betwixt Borneo, and the Deſarts of Nubia: the Countrey almoſt ſquare, each ſide thereof extended 500 miles. The people ignorant, rude, uncivil, but ſpecially thoſe which dwell in the Mountains: their houſes built moſt of boughs and leaves, which once dry, eaſily take fire; but the beſt is, they are ſoon repaired: their greateſt wealth is in their Cattel, which they keep moſt tenderly. About the year 1420. they were brought into ſubjection by a Negro-Slave, who having ſlain his Maſter, by the help of his wealth grew ſtrong enough to incroach on his Neighbours; and ſelling ſuch Captives as he took, for horſes of Egypt, became King of Gaoga, and in fine very gracious with the Mamaluck Sultans. His Succeſſors have ſince ſo enlarged their Territories, that they are ſecond unto none but the Kings of Tombutum.

18. NUBIA hath on the West Gaoga, bounded on the North with Egypt extended Eastward unto Nilus, by which parted from Æthiopia Superior, or the Habassine Empire. So called from the Nubæ, an ancient and potent people of this Tract, spoken of by Ptolomy: the great Lake, anciently called Nubæ Palus, being hence denominated. A distinct people from those of the same name, dwelling on the shores of the Red-Sea, near unto Sinus Avalites, who from the shortnesse of their stature passed in accompt for Pigmies; Νῆες Πυγμαῖοι, saith Hesychius an old Grammarian: these being a strong and potent Nation, and well skilled in wars. Insomuch as Cyriacus once a King hereof, understanding of some pressures laid upon the Christians of Egypt, is said to have raised 100000 Horse for their aid and succour; but by the perswasions of the Patriarch of Alexandria, went back unfought with. For at that time the Countrey was wholly Christian, and had been so from the very dayes of the Apostles; but are now fallen off again to their former Idolatries, or become Mahometans, for want of Ministers to instruct them. It is recorded by Alvarez, the writer of the Æthiopick History, that at his being in the Court of the Abassine Emperour, there came Ambassadours out of Nubia to intreat a supply of Pastors to instruct their Nation, and repair Christianity amongst them; but were unchristianly rejected.

Here is a Poison in this Countrey, of which the tenth part of a grain will dispatch a man in a quarter of an hour, and is sold for ten Ducats an ounce; the Customes, for which, unto the King is as much as the price unto the Merchant. But for this one ill commodity they have many good; that is to say, Corn, Sugar, Civet, Sanders, Ivory, all in great abundance; some store of Gold, and other Metals. The Countrey naturally sandy, but well refreshed with Lakes and Rivers, which do much inrich it; insomuch as the people generally are very wealthy, and manage a great trade with the Merchants of Caire and Egypt. Their chief Citie is called Dangala, large and well frequented; said to contain no fewer then 10000 families; but their houses built of nothing but thatch and mortar. In other parts, especially towards the River Nilus, they have many Villages; few, or none of them worth the naming.

There are many other Kingdoms in this Land of Negroes, besides those in Guinea, but of lesser note; as 19. BITO. 20. TEMIANO. 21. ZEGZEG. 22. ZANFARA. 23. GOTHAN, 24. MEDRA. 25. DAUM. Of which there is nothing to be spoken, but of their poverty, or riches, blessings, or curses common to them with the rest of these Nations; and therefore I purposely omit them.

This Countrey, or a great part of it, was anciently accounted part of Libya Interior; inhabited besides the Nubæ and Nigritæ spoken of before, by the Nabathræ dwelling about the hill Arvates, the Aroncæ, near the hill Arangus, the Agargineæ, Xylinces, and Alchalinces, Æthiopick Nations. Not much considerable in the businesse of former times; nor much discovered (not very perfectly at this day) till the year 973. at what time certain Mahometan Preachers, out of a superstitious zeal to propagate their Sect, first opened the way into these Countreys: the people then living like bruit beasts, without King, Law, or any form of Government; scarce knowing how to sow their Lands, clad in the skins of as very beasts as themselves, and challenging no propriety in wives, or children. First conquered by Joseph King of Morocco, of the race of the Almohades; and after that by the five Nations of Libya Deserta, who divided them into fifteen parts, every one of those five Nations possessing three of them. One of the Kings of these Libyans, named Soni Heli, being slain by Abuaci Ischia General of his forces, and the rest terrified with that blow, An. 1526. the Negroes once again recovered their long lost liberty, and instituted divers Kings of their own. Amongst them, Izchia was most deservedly made King of Tombutum, who managed his affairs so well, that he conquered the Kings of Guber, Agadez, Cano, Melli, Zanfora, Zegzeg, Ghenaoa, Gambea, and Casena; which he made his Tributaries. So that his Successors are now the greatest of those five Kings, who have the supream power over all the rest. The other four. 1. the King of Mandinga, lording it over the Realms of Benin, Gioloſi, and the Kings of Guinea; 2. the King of Borneo, the onely one that is descended of the Libyan race, in greatnesse of command next to him of Tombuto; 3. the King of Gualata, whose Kingdom is confined within that one Province, but therein absolute and supream; and 4. the King of Goaga, Paramount over all the rest of these Provinces.

But because the greatest power is in the hands of the King of Tombuto, who possibly enough may in short time bring all the rest under his command, we will take a more particular view of his estate; affirmed to be the richest Prince in these parts of Africk, and to have many Plates and Scepters of Gold, some of which weigh 1300 pound weight. When any of his Subjects do appear before him, they kneel on both their knees; and bowing their heads unto the ground, cast sand over their shoulders and upon their head, going forwards still upon their knees. His Court he keeps in a royal manner, continually guarded with 3000 Horse, but with many more Foot, all armed with Bowes and empoisoned Arrows. To the Jews a very bitter Enemy, whom he admitteth not to trade in his Kingdoms, and confiscateth the goods of all such of his Subjects as hold traffick with them. Zealous of the Mahometan Law, and liberal in stipends to the Doctors and Professors of it. Of greater power then any other beyond Atlas, but the Habassine Emperour. And though Amet the Xeriffe of Morocco, in the year 1589. had some hand upon him, and conquered a great part of this Kingdom, even as far as Gago, extending his Empire six moneths journey, by Camels, beyond Morocco; yet it held not long: this King again recovering what was taken from him; and being since that time in as eminent power, as ever in any times before.

And so much for TERRA NIGRITARUM.

OF AETHIOPIA SVPERIOR.

ÆTHIOPIA SVPERIOR, is bounded on the East, with the Red-Sea, and the Sinus Barbaricus; on the West, with Libya Interior, the Realm of Nubia, in the Land of the Negroes, and part of the Kingdom of Congo in the other Æthiopia; on the North, with Egypt, and Libya Marmarica; and on the South with the Mountains of the Moon, by which parted from the main body of Æthiopia Inferior.

It was first called Ætheria, and afterwards Atlantia, as Plinie telleth us. In the end, the Grecians gave it the name of Æthiopia, from the Greek words Αἴθω, signifying to burn, and ὤψ a Countenance; because the violent heats of the Sun had so scorched the Countenances of the Inhabitants. The additions of Sub Ægypto, Superior, and Interior, serve onely to distinguish it from the other Æthiopia, which lieth further off from Egypt, on the outside of this. It is called also Regnum Abyssinorum, from the Abaseni, or Abyssini, a people of Arabia Felix; who passing over the Red-Sea, (not above seven miles broad in the narrowest place) came and setled here. And in the Scripture it is stiled by the name of Ludim, from Lud the son of Mizraim, who first planted it; as hath been proved by many strong and concluding Arguments in our general Preface.

It is situate on both sides of the Equinoctial, extending from the South Parallel of seven Degrees, where it meeteth with some part of the other Æthiopia; to the Northern end of the Isle of Meroe, situate under the fift Parallel on the North of that Circle. And though by this Accompt it fall short of the dimensions assigned by some, who extend it from one Tropick unto the other; yet is it of a very great length, no lesse then 1500 miles; the breadth about half as much, the whole circumference amounting to 4300 miles. Yet so, that all this vast tract of ground, is not to be understood of that part of the Countrey, which is under the command of the Abassine Emperour, commonly but mistakingly called Prestor John: but of the whole Countrey of Æthiopia, as before limited and extended; containing besides his Estate, the Kingdoms of Adel and Adea, and the Provinces of Quiloa and Melindi; which two last are now reckoned of as parts of Æthiopia Inferior. The Isle of Meroe in the North is possessed by Mahometans, the most bitter enemies of this King: all on the West of Nilus, betwixt it and the South-east of Nubia, inhabited by the Anzichi, an Idolatrous and man-eating Nation, subject to a great Prince of their own: and all the Coasts of the Red-Sea, as well within the Streits of Babel Mandel as without, except the Port of Erocco onely, enjoyed by Arabians and Moors, who do acknowledge no subjection unto his commands; but are under the Kings of Adel and Adea before mentioned.

But taking it in the largest signification and extent hereof (according unto which we must here describe it) it comprehendeth the three Countries called antiently Æthiopia Sub Ægypto, Troglodytica, and Regio Cinnamomifera. Of these the two last are by some reckoned but as parts of the first: though certainly the Throglodites were a different Nation from the Æthiopians. For past all doubt the Troglodites were Originally an Arabian people, so called quia τρώγας subeunt, from their living in Caves and dens: in which respect their part of this Countrey had the name of Arabia Troglodytica, in Dioscorides, and some others of the Ancient Writers. Of these it is affirmed by Pomponius Mela, that they were not the Masters of any wealth, and that their speech was rather a gnashing of the teeth, then any articulate and intelligible Pronunciation. Nullarum apum Domini sunt Troglodítæ, stridentem magis quam loquuntur. As for their houses, they were (saith he) no better then Caves, and their food then Serpents. With whom concurreth Plinie also for their dwelling in Caves, and consequently for the reason of the name, saying positively, Troglodítæ spelúncas excavant. Called for the same reason in the holy Scripture, 2 Chron. 12. 3. by the name of Succhai; the word Succoth (whence that name derived) not onely signifying in the Hebrew, Tents, or Tabernacles, but Caves, and Dens: and so translated Psal. 10. v. 9. and Job 38. v. 40. As for that part hereof which was called Regio Cinnamomifera, taking up the Southern parts in the time of Ptolomy, it took that name from the abundance of Cinnamon, which was then growing by it; now not a tree of it to be found in all this Countrey, as the Portugals, who have looked narrowly for it, have affirmed unto us. Shipped at Mosylon, a noted Emporie, placed by Ptolomy in the ninth degree of Northern Latitude; it was thence transported into Egypt, and other Countries; as is said by Plinie, Portus Mosylitus quo Cinnamomum devehitur: the Spice in some Authors being called Mosulum, by the name of the Town. δεύτερον δὲ τὸ λεγόμενον Μόσυλον, τὸ ἀπὸ Μοσύλης πόλεως. Of Cinnamon the best is that which is called Mosulon, because brought from the City of that name in Æthiopia, saith Simeon Sethi in his Tract de Facultatibus Ciborum. As for this Cinnamon (I note this onely by the way) it is the inner bark of a Tree, as big as an Olive, with Leaves like Bay-leaves: the drying of which maketh it roll together, and every three years is renewed, and stripped off again. Some think it came first from the Sinæ or the Countrey which the Romans called Sinarum Regio, the Moderns China; and that it was so called, quasi Sinæ Amomum, the Amomum of the Sinæ; Amomum being the name of a sweet perfume growing in Assyria, and Armenia. But then it should be written Sinamomum, and not Cinnamomum: yet to give the greater credit to the former opinion, they of Ormus call it Bar-Chinæ, or the wood of China. But, of this enough.

To go on therefore unto Æthiopia it ſelf. The people of it in old times were ſaid to have been great Aſtrologers; the firſt ordainers alſo of ſacred Ceremonies, and in both to be Tutors to the Egyptians. They were alſo noted to be very good Archers, and to draw the longeſt and ſtrongeſt Bowes of any Nation: the Perſian Bow (though thoſe the greateſt of all Aſia) being onely three Cubits long; but theſe of Æthiopia, four. Utuntur etiam Æthiopes quatuor cubitorum arcubus, as we read in Strabo; the like is ſaid alſo by Herodotus, and Diodorus. Their Arrows ſmall, but ſtrong, for the moſt part poiſoned; Æthiopum geminata venenis Vulnera, as we finde in Clandian; and for that inhumanity very much condemned. But not to ſpend our time too much upon theſe particulars, Pliny reciteth two ſtrange things of this Countrey: 1. That the Air and ground are ſo parching hot, that the people not onely dare not go out of doors without ſhooes, but that they roſt their meat alſo by ſetting it in the Sun. 2. That there is a Lake, whoſe waters are thrice a day, and thrice a night, exceeding ſalt and unpleaſing; but at all other times moſt ſweet and delicate to the palate.

This Countrey being as big as Germany, France, and Italy laid together; is but meanly populous; the diſtemperature of the Climate, and the dry barrenneſſe of the ground, not admitting a multitude. For this cauſe Africk is by Strabo compared to a Leopards skin, the diſtance of whole ſpots ſheweth the diſperſedneſſe of the towns, and habitations in thoſe torrid countries. A Countrey ſcarce in Wheat, but ſufficiently plentiful in Rice, Barly, Beans, Peaſe, and the like; they have abundance of Sugars, Minerals of all ſorts, and infinite herds of Oxen, Sheep, Goats. Finally, there is no Countrey under heaven fitter for increaſe of Plants, and Living creatures, if induſtry were not deficient. But in regard of this defect, they are deſtitute of many neceſſary things, which otherwiſe the natural commodities of the Countrey would ſupply them with. For they have here great ſtore of Flax, but make no Cloth; plenty of Vines, yet make no wine, except it be to ſerve the palaces of the King and the Patriarch; Abundance of Sugar-canes, and Mines of Iron; but know not how to make uſe of either unto any advantage. Rivers and Brooks in many places, but will not take the pains to dig Channels or trenches, to derive their waters to the reſt of the land which want them; thoſe Rivers almoſt choaked with Fiſh, their Woods crammed with Veniſon, which they trouble not themſelves to catch.

By this we may conjecture ſomewhat of the people alſo; Lazie and given unto their eaſe, ill-clothed, and not much better houſed; extremely inclined to Barbariſm, deſtitute of all learning, not to be credited unleſſe they ſwear by the life of their Emperours; they hate a Smith equally with the Devill: their colour is generally olive-tawny, excepting onely their King himſelf, who is alwayes of a white complexion, (a wonderful prerogative, if true. This blackneſſe of their bodies, by the Poet arttributed to the burning of the world by Phaeton:

Sanguine tum credunt, in corpora ſumma vocato,
Æthiopum populos nigrum traxiſſe colorem.

Which may be Engliſhed:

Their blood (it's thought) drawn from the outward part,
The Æthiopians grew ſo black and ſwart.

But the true cauſe hereof, whatſoever it be, may perhaps be looked upon hereafter, when we come to America.

The Chriſtian faith was firſt made known in this Countrey, by the Eunuch of Queen Candace, who was baptized by Philip the Evangeliſt, and one of the Seven; more generally imbraced by the pains and preaching of S. Matthew the Apoſtle hereof; but not totally propagated over all this Empire, till the reign of Abraham, An. 470. who in his life entituled himſelf the Defender and Propagator of the Religion of CHRIST, and after his death was generally honoured as a Saint. Suppreſſed in part by the coming in of the Abaſenes and other Arabians, it was again revived and more univerſally received than in former times, in the reign of David king of the Axumite Æthiopians: who in a war againſt Dunmus king of the Homerites in Arabia Felix, ſolemnly vowed to the God of the Chriſtians to become one of his Followers, if he got the victory: And ſo accordingly he did, ſendings his Ambaſſadors to the Emperour Juſtinian, for ſome Biſhops and other learned men to inſtruct his people. The particulars of thoſe Opinions wherewith they have ſince corrupted the purity of the true Religion, I finde thus regiſtred. 1. They uſe to circumciſe their Children, both males and females; 2. They baptize the males 40. and the females 80 dayes after their circumciſion; 3. After the receit of the Sacrament, they are not to ſpit till Sun-ſet, 4. They profeſſe but one Nature, and one Will in CHRIST: 5. They accept onely three firſt General Councels; 6. Their Prieſts live by the labour of their hands, for they allow them nothing, and permit them not to beg; 7. They baptize themſelves every Epiphany-day in Lakes and ponds, becauſe that day they ſuppoſe Chriſt to have been baptized by John in Jordan. 8. They eat not of thoſe Beaſts, which in the old Law are reckoned for unclean; 9 They keep the Saturday of Jewiſh Sabbath equally ſolemn with the Lords Day; 10. They adminiſter the Euchariſt to Infants preſently after Baptiſm; 11. They teach, that the Reaſonable ſoul of man is derived from their parents by Seminal propagation: 12. That Infants dying unbaptized, are ſanctified in the womb, by vertue of the Euchariſt received by the Mother after her Conception. And finally, they ſhew a Book of eight Volumes, writ, as they ſay, by the Apoſtles aſſembled at Hieruſalem for that purpoſe; the Contents whereof they obſerve moſt ſolemnly. Theſe are the moſt material points in which they differ from the Tendries of the Catholique Church. And there are other points in which they differ onely from the Church of Rome, as viz. 1. Administring in both kinds; 2. Without either Elevation, or Reservation; 3. Rejecting massie Images, and 4. Extreme Unction; 5. Allowing the first marriages to their Priests & Bishops: and 6. In renouncing all relation to the Pope of Rome; who to the businesse of these Churches is a very stranger, and so hath been from the very first foundation of them. For it appeares by the Canons of the Nicene Council, extant in the Arabick, and translated into Latine by Pisanus, that the Patriarch (or Abuna, as they call'd him) of these Abassine Churches, was in those times subordinate to the Alexandrian, confirmed in that Supremacie by the Fathers, which were there assembled; and constantly ever since approved and practised by these Churches: in the Liturgies whereof, the name of the Alexandrian is remembred before their own. To this Patriarch, by an antient priviledge belongeth the seventh place in the Sessions of all General Councils; the Archbishop of Selencia (or Babylon) onely interposing betwixt him and the Patriarch of Hierusalem. Elected by the Abassine Monks of St. Antonies Order remaining in Hierusalem, and confirmed by the Patriarch of Alexandria, (of which Order, and of whose jurisdiction he must alwayes be) he is sent into this Countrey to take his charge: where in some points of Civil nature, he hath equal priviledge with the Emperour himself; and in Spiritual, hath the sole power of excommunicating an obstinate Sinner. All other Ecclesiastical Dignities, from the Bishoprick to the lowest Benefice, are conferred by the Emperour onely.

from

The principal Mountains of it in the former times, had the names of 1 Prionotus, 2 Isius, 3 Monodactylus, 4 Ganrus, and 5 Mons Satyrorum; all of them in that part which was called Troglodi-tica: 6 Garbala, 7 Elephas, and 8 Maste in the Isle of Meroe: the rest of the Countrey flat and level, or the hils not eminent. Rivers of most note, 1 Astapus (now Abanni) arising out of a great Lake called Coloe, now the Lake of Barcena. 2 Astaboras, now Tacassi; both falling into the River Nilus. 3 Nilus, of which before when we were in Egypt; whose spring unprofitably sought for in the elder times, is now said to be out of the Lake Zembre in the other Æthiopia, eleven Degrees beyond the Æquator: whence passing through spacious Desarts, large Lakes, and many great Kingdoms, he at last entreth into this. Here in some places strugling amongst broken Rocks, and lesse free passages, he falleth with such a wonderful noise into the Vallies beneath; that a Colony planted by the Persians neer one of these Cataracts, (so they call those huge falls of his) were so dulled and deafned with the noise, that they were fain to abandon their habitations. Nor doth it onely dull and deafen the neighbouring people, but the very hils do seem to tremble at the noise it maketh. Of which thus the Poet,

Cuncta tremunt undis, & multo murmure montis,
Spumeus invictis albescit fluctibus amnis.

Which may be Englished in these words;

The noise the Mountains shakes, who roar for spite
To see th' unvanquish'd Waves cloth'd all in white.

Of these Cataracts there are two most noted: the one called Catarractes Major, in the borders of this Countrey towards Egypt, but South of both the Cities of Philæ, and Pselcis, Æthiopian cities; the other called Catarractes Minor, not far from Elephantis a City of Egypt, neighbouring to Syens, the last City of that Countrey towards this. So turbulent is this River amongst the Hills. And yet as terrible as these Falls are supposed to be, one may divers times see the Countrey people in a little Boat not able to contain above two persons, to venture down them without fear; appearing after they have been long tossed in the waters a great distance off, as if they had been shot out of an Engine. Nor is he of such quiet passage in the open Countries, but that the Inhabitants of this Kingdom are fain to cut many Ditches, Sluces, and By-channels to receive his waters; which if not curbed and lessened by such wayes as these, might by some sudden overflowing much endanger Egypt: in respect whereof the Sultans of Egypt have paid for long time to the Abassine Emperours, an annual tribute. Which when the Great Turk, supposing it a needlesse charge, had once denied: this people, by the command of their Emperour, did open their Sluces, and break down the Dams; whereby the water fell so violently and so fast unto Egypt, that the Turk was not onely glad to continue the tribute, but to give them great sums of mony to make up their works. But others say, that this acknowledgment was paid by the Egyptian Kings, not so much for keeping up the waters from drowning Egypt, as for fear the Abassine Emperours should divert the Stream, and so deprive that Countrey of the benefit of it. But I incline rather to the former. Here are also said to be some Lakes of that poysonous nature, that whosoever drinketh of them, doth either immediately fall mad, or else is troubled for long time with continual drowsinesse. Of which thus Ovid, Æthiopesque Lacus; quos si quis faucibus hausit,

Aut furit, aut patitur mirum gravitate soporem.

Which may be paraphrased in these words:

Who doth not know the Æthiopian Lake?
Of which whoever drinks, his thirst to slake,

Either

Either grows mad, or doth his ſoul oppreſſe
With an unheard of heavy drowſineſſe.

To look upon the State, as it ſtood in the former times, we finde in it beſides the Lakes and Rivers before mentioned, three capacious Bayes, that is to ſay, Sinus Adulicus, 2 Sinus Avalites, and 3 Sinus Barbaricus; the two laſt neighboured by the now Countries of Aden and Quiloa. Havens of note, and Rodes for ſhipping, there were five in all, viz. 1 Bathus, or the deep Haven, 2 Dioſcorum Portus, or the Haven of Caſtor and Pollux, 3 Theon Soterum, or the Haven of the Saviour-Gods, 4 Portus Evangeliorum, Goſpel-Port, or the Port of good News. And 5 Serapionis, the Port of Serapion, with a Promontory of the ſame name neer adjoyning to it. For other Promontories, which in ſo long a tract of Sea muſt needs be many; the principal were, 1 Baſium, 2 Mnemium, 3 Dimetris, 4 Aſpis, 5 Ara Amoris, 6 Colobon, the Promontory of Saturn, 8 Moſylon, with a noted Empory of the ſame name, 9 Aromata, neer another well frequented Empory of the ſame name alſo; and 10 that of Noti cornu. Then for the Towns of greateſt Trading, beſides thoſe laſt mentioned, we have, 1 Avalites, 2 Malao, 3 Mundi, 4 Cube, and 5 Acane, in the Bay of Avalites, 6 Opone in the Bay of Barbaria, 7 Eſſina, on the South of the Æquinoctial. Then for their Cities, we have amongſt many others, the names of 1 Epitherias, by Ptolomy called Ptolemais Ferarum, 2 Adulis, and 3 Avalites, giving names unto their ſeveral Bays, 4 Rapta, the Metropolis of that part of this Countrey which was called Barbaria, lying along the ſhores of the Sinus Barbaricus; which as it taketh name from the River Raptus, upon which it is ſituate; ſo they do both agree in communicating it to the Promontory called Raptum. 5 Meroe, the chief City of the Iſle ſo called. 6 Sabath in the Bay of Adutis, which poſſibly might be ſome Colony of the Sabæans, in Arabia Felix. 7 Coloe, by Plinie called Tolen, not far from the great Lake ſo named, 8 Cambuſis, by Ptolomie called Cambyſi Ærarium, from ſome treaſures laid up here by Cambyſes the Perſian, in his invaſion of this Countrey. 9 Auxumi the chief City of the Auxumites, a moſt potent people of theſe parts; and the Seat Royal of the old Æthiopian Kings. 10 Napata, as Ptolomy; but by moſt others called Tanape, of old the reſidence of the Æthiopian Emperours, ſacked and ruined by Petronius, Preſident of Egypt. For when Candace (the Predeceſſour, I believe, of her whoſe Eunuch was baptized by Philip) had ranſacked and waſted Egypt with fire and ſword; Petronius, Lieutenant to Auguſtus, drave them home, harried the whole Countrey, put this City to the ſpoyle; and to prevent the like inrodes, fortified the Frontires of his Province. 11 Philæ, upon the borders of Egypt, garriſoned by the Romans till the time of Diocleſian, and by him abandoned. Of ſome of theſe, and others not here mentioned, we may have opportunity to ſpeak more hereafter; in the ſurvey of ſome of theſe particular Provinces, into which this Countrey ſtands divided at this preſent time.

And for the Provinces comprehended at this time within the bounds and limits of this Æthiopia, as before laid down, they are ſaid to make up 70 Kingdoms; moſt of them ſubject to the Abaſſine Emperour. The principal of which are, 1 Guagere, 2 Tigremaon, 3 Angote, 4 Amma, 5 Damut, 6 Goijami, 7 Bagamedrum, 8 Barnagaſſum, 9 Adel, 10 Adea, 11 Duncali, 12 Dobas, 13 Fatigar, 14 Xoa, 15 Barus. Concerning which I muſt premiſe, that I finde the Relations of them to be very imperfect, many times diſagreeing, ſometimes falſe: So that I muſt profeſſe my ſelf to be leſſe ſatisfied in the deſcription of this Countrey, than in any of the reſt which have gone before. Such as it is, I here preſent it to the Reader.

1. GUAGERE.

GUAGERE containeth onely the Iſland of Meroe, an Iland of much note and fame amongſt the Ancients; made by the confluences of Nilus and Aſtaborus, the two chief Rivers of this Countrey. The length hereof 350 miles, the breadth 125. abundantly plentifull of Gold, Silver, Braſſe, Iron, Ivory, Precious ſtones, and an excellent kinde of Mineral Salt. Well ſtored with moſt ſorts of beaſts, both tame and wilde; and of the laſt ſort with Lyons, Leopards, Rhinocerots, Elephants, and Dragons.

The people are of the ſame nature and complexion with the reſt; Mahometans by Religion, and the profeſſed Enemies of the Abaſſine Emperour; againſt whom they do not onely defend themſelves, by the advantages and benefit of their ſituation; but confederating with the Turks, and Arabians, fall many times with great forces into his Dominions. It is ſaid by Plinie of the Inhabitants of this Iland, that twice a year, viz. When the Sun is in the 16th. degree of Taurus, and the 14th. of Leo, they have the Sun ſo perpendicular above their heads, that he caſts no ſhadow. More anciently memorable for their long lives, than their great exploits, attaining ordinarily to 120 years of Age; and therefore called Macrobii by the old Greek Writers. The women ſaid to be of ſuch great breſts in the former times, that they did ſuckle their children over their ſhoulders (as ſome women are now ſaid to do neer the Cape of good Hope): the dug being bigger than the childe. Of which thus Juvenal.

In Meroe, craſſo majorem Infante mamillam.

In Meroe the Mothers pap
Is bigger than the childe in lap.

The Principal Cities hereof, 1 Meroe, which gave that name unto the Iland, but took the ſame from Meroe, a ſiſter of Cambyſes King of Perſia; or as Euſebius ſaith, from Merida, the mother of Chenephris, Chenephris, a King of Egypt. Josephus telleth us, that in former times it had been called by the name of Saba; on authority of whose mistake it hath been made the Regal Citie of that Queen of Sheba (the Queen of Egypt, and Æthiopia, as Joseph calleth her) who came to Solomon. An opinion so received amongst these Islanders, that the name of Meroe being laid by, they have restored the name of Saba to this Citie, as of greater eminence. The Citie said by some to contain about 5000 houses, great and sumptuous; the streets thereof to be large and spacious, with Galleries on each side before the doors of their houses, where men walk safe from all extremities of heat, or rain. Beautified with four chief Gates, (besides others of inferiour note) built of Alabaster and Jasper, wrought with Antick works: the doors belonging to those Gates, of Cedar, curiously wrought; the wayes which lead unto them, for the space of two Leagues, beset with Palms, Orange-trees, Cedars, Cypresses, and others no lesse usefull both for shade and fruit. In the place where the four streets going from these Gates, do crosse each other, a goodly Arch erected upon stately Pillars, fairly wrought and gilded; with the Statue of St. Matthew, made of brasse, but gilded, on the top thereof. Such it is said to be by some. Others think there is no such Citie; it may not be so beautifull, as some have made it. The other Towns of note and name in it, in former times. 2. Sacolche. 3. Darorum Vicus. 4. Eser; of which we have little but the names.

This Island was once a peculiar Kingdom; he being chosen for their King, who excelled the rest in strength, person, or in stock of Cattel; but those Kings so subject to their Priests, that by a Messenger, or Herald they were sentenced by them unto death, and others advanced unto the Throne. And thus it stood till one of the more provident Kings, forcing the Temple with his armed Souldiers, slew all these Priests; and freed himself and his Successours from so great a slavery. Afterwards made a Province of the Kingdom of Æthiopia; honoured for the most part with the Seat of those Kings, and memorable in those times for the Table of the Sun: which was a place near the Citie of Meroe, alwayes furnished with variety of rosted meats, set there by night at the charge, and command of the King (much taken as it seemeth with this costly vanity) and eaten in the day time by all that would; called therefore the Table of the Sun, because ascribed unto his bounty by the ignorant people. In the declining of this Kingdom, occasioned by the inundation of the Saracens and other Arabians, this Island was seized on by that people, and hath been ever since kept by them; together with the rest of the Countrey, lying betwixt it and Egypt; in which are contained, as some write, the Kingdom of Damote, Sua, and Jasculum, anciently belonging to this Empire, now dismembred from it: not much observable, but for being a thorowfare to great troups of Pilgrims, which every Lent passe by them out of the Abassine Dominions, to the Sepulchre, and other like places in and near Jerusalem.

2. TIGREMAON.

TIGREMAON, hath on the north, Guagere, and the River Marabo, by which last parted from Barnagasso; on the South, the Realm of Angote; on the West, Nilus. On the East it is said to extend to the Red-Sea; but the Sea-parts thereof possessed by the Turks, and the adjoyning Coasts by the Moors and Arabians: the inland parts promiscuously inhabited, especially more towards the Sea, by Christians and Ethnicks. Divided into many inferiour Regions, the principal whereof 1. Sabian, 2 Torrates, 3 Balgada, so called perhaps from the chief Towns of them, and 4 Tigrai, the most large and ample of all these subordinate Provinces; as containing in it 17 great tracts under so many Lieutenants, which rule all affairs both of Peace and War. The people black of colour, deformed of shape, in condition miserable, of conditions wicked. Some Rivers they have, but dried up in Summer; yet so that with a little digging they finde water in them. Their chief City Caxumo, or Cassumo, supposed to be the same which Ptolomie calleth Auxume, Stephanus Axomites, Procopius Auzomide: by all of them esteemed the Metropolitan City of Ethiopia, and the Seat Royal of their Kings. In witnesse whereof are many ancient buildings yet remaining, some Pillars which resemble the Ægyptian Obelisks, admirable for their height and workmanship: 60 foot high, and full of Characters, or Letters ingraven on them, which now none can read. The Æthiopian Auxumites, the most potent Nation of this Countrey, had their name from hence: more probably conceived to be the Regal Seat of Candace, (mentioned in the Acts) than any other of the Kingdom; and still affirmed to be honoured with the Court of their Emperours. Others I know have fixed his Court in Beimalechi, but I know not in what part to finde it: some in a Royal Palace near that Lake of Zembre, built in the year 1570. by some European Architects sent hither by Francis Duke of Florence: and many will allow him no fixed Seat at all, but tell us that he moveth with his Tents in a Royal Progresse from one place to another; which wandring Court, or moving Citie, is said to be no lesse than ten miles in compasse, when the Pavilions, which belong to it, are disposed of into rank and order.

This Kingdom is governed by a Prince of its own, but one who is an Homager and Tributary to the Abassine Emperour: to whom he payeth yearly 200 horses of the best Arabian breed, infinite quantities of silks, great store of Cotton-wool, and abundance of Gold; but the determinate proportion I have no where met with.

3. ANGOTE.

ANGOTE is bounded on the North, with Tigremon; on the West, with Nilus; on the South, with the Kingdom of Amara; on the East, with Dancali, and Xoa. Indifferently compounded of Hills and Vallies, both extreamly fertile, productive of the choiceſt fruits, and great herds of Cattel. The people eat but once in 24 hours, and for the moſt part make that meal in the night; their dyet raw Veniſon, or ſmoaked Beef: the money moſt in uſe amongſt them, Salt, Pepper, and Iron. Which cuſtome of uſing Salt, Pepper, and the like inſtead of money, was in former times amongſt moſt people the onely battery, or way of exchange. So in Homer, Glaucus golden Armour was valued at an hundred Kine, and Diomedes Armour at ten onely. Afterward in Juſtice commutative, it was deemed convenient, to have ſome common Judge, or valuation, of the equality, or inequality of goods: the invention of which the Jews attribute to Cain, the Grecians to Hermodice the wife of Midas, the Romans to Janus. It is called Nummus, or νόμισμα from νόμος, becauſe it was ordained by Law: Pecunia, either becauſe in elder times the chief of their wealth conſiſted in Cattel, as now among the Iriſh; or from a Cow (Pecus) which was ſtamped on it: and Moneta, à monendo, as Suidas ſaith; becauſe when the Romans ſtood in need of money, Juno monebat, Juno admoniſhed them that they ſhould uſe Juſtice, and there ſhould be no want of money. To this Goddeſſe, Dea Pecunia, the Romans erected a Temple, and worſhipped it in the figure of a Woman, holding a pair of Scales in one hand, and a Cornucopia in the other: by the Poet called Regina Pecunia, and not unfitly, the greatneſſe of her power conſidered.

But to return again to Angote, I finde not much ſpoken of the Countrey in the way of ſtory; nor meet I with the names of any of their Towns, or Cities; unleſſe that 1 Angote it ſelf, as alſo 2 Abugana, 3 Giannamora two of the principal Provinces of it, may poſſibly be ſo called from their principal Towns, as perhaps they are.

4. AMARA.

AMARA hath on the North, Angote; on the South, Damut; on the Weſt, it ſtretcheth towards the Nile, and on the Eaſt, bounded with the Realm of Xoa. The Countrey very plain and champaigne, little ſwelled with hills, ſufficiently fruitfull, and well ſtored with all ſorts of Cattel. The chief Citie of it called Amara, by the name of the Province, ſituate in the midſt of the Empire, and though not much diſtant from the Æquator, if not plainly under it, yet bleſſed with ſuch a temperate aire, ſuch a fruitfull ſoyl, ſuch raviſhing pleaſures of all ſorts, that ſome have taken (but miſtaken) it for the place of Paradiſe: So ſtrangely Heaven, Earth, Nature, and Humane induſtry, have joyned their helps together to enrich and beautifie it.

But that which is the greateſt Ornament of this Province, and indeed of the whole Empire of Æthiopia, is the Mountain Amara, ſituate in a large and delightfull plain: the bottom of the Hill in circuit 90 Miles, and a dayes journey high; the Rock ſo ſmooth and even (but leſſer and leſſer towards the top) that no wall can be more evenly poliſhed: the way up to it is cut out within the Rock, through which are divers holes forced to let in the light; ſo eaſie of aſcent, that one may ride up with great pleaſure, and in the midſt of the Aſcent a ſpacious Hall, as it were to reſt in: the top it ſelf is a large plain, 20 leagues in circuit, compaſſed with an high wall, to the end that neither man nor beaſt fall down upon any chance, beautified towards the South with a riſing hill, out of which iſſueth a ſweet Spring, which watering the ſeveral Palaces and Gardens of it, uniteth it ſelf into a Lake for the uſe of Cattel: the plain enriched with all ſorts, both of fruit and grain; adorned with two magnificent Monaſteries, in each of which are founded 1500 Knights of the Order of St. Anthony, a Religious Militia; and honoured with 34 Palaces, in which the younger ſons of the Emperour are continually incloſed, to avoid ſedition. They enjoy there whatſoever is fit for delight, or Princely education; and from hence ſome one of them, who is moſt hopefull, or beſt liked, is again brought out, if the Emperour die ſonleſſe, to be made ſucceſſour. This Mountain hath but one aſcent up, as before was ſaid, which is impregnably fortified; and was deſtinate to this uſe Anno 470. or thereabouts, by the Emperour Abraham Philip, adviſed hereunto, as he gave out, by an heavenly viſion. In one of theſe Palaces is a famous Library, wherein are ſaid to be many books, which with us are either in part, or totally loſt: as the Oracles of Enoch, with the myſteries which eſcaped the floud, being by him engraven on pillars; the whole works of Livy, and others. Which being heretofore tranſlated by the Saracens into the Arabick tongue (when having plundered all the moſt famous Libraries of the Eaſt and Weſt, they burnt the Originals, out of a plot to make that language as renowned and as generally ſtudied, as the Greek, or Latine) are ſaid by ſome good fortune to be here preſerved.

5. DAMUT.

DAMUT hath on the North, Amara; on the Weſt, Bagamedrum; on the South, Goiamy, and on the Eaſt, the great Lake of Barcena, and ſome part of Zanguebar, one of the Provinces of Æthiopia Exterior. The Countrey plentifully furniſhed with Gold, Ginger, Grapes, Fruits, and living Creatures of all ſorts. For none more famed than for their Slaves, ſold in great numbers into Arabia, Egypt, Perſia, India; and much eſteemed by them who buy them, for their abilities in war, dexterity in buſineſſe, eſpecially for their fidelity in all things which they undertake. For this cauſe placed in Offices of great truſt and power, by many of the Eaſtern Princes: who uſing a tyrannical Form of Government, and not daring to truſt the ſword into the hands of their Subjects, or to advance them unto places of Court, or Counſel; do for the moſt part arm theſe Slaves, and truſt them alſo with the conduct of their chief affairs. A truſt, in which they never falſified, or failed in a true diſcharge, but when preſuming of their power, and thoſe advantages, which ſo great a truſt and power had preſented to them; they got into their hands the Kingdom of Bengala: and kept it many years in a ſucceſſion of the Abaſſine Slaves, wherewith they ſtill made up their numbers; till outed not long ſince by the Great Mongal.

The Oxen of this Countrey are ſaid to be near as great as Elephants; their Horns ſo large that they ſerve as Tankards to carry, and as Barrels to keep either wine, or water. Here is alſo ſaid to be a kinde of Unicorn, very fierce and wilde, faſhioned like an Horſe, but no bigger than an Aſſe; but we muſt think theſe Unicorns to be but Rhinocerots, or elſe we ſhall very much miſtake the truth of the matter. And for the people (to go them both over once again) they are for the moſt part Gentiles; ſome Chriſtians intermixt amongſt them, who have ſundry Monaſteries.

To this Kingdom belongeth the Principality of Couche, ſaid to have more Gold in it than all Peru; a Mountain all of Gold, if the Friers ſay true. The people Gentiles, but the Prince not long ſince gained to the Chriſtian Faith; into which he was baptized by the Abbot, or chief Governour of the Monaſteries on the hill Amara: Gradeus the Emperour being his Godfather, by whom named Andrew. And here they have an hill of great height, and very difficult aſcent; from the top whereof they uſe to caſt headlong ſuch of the Nobility, as by the Emperours ſentence are condemned to die. What Towns they have either in that Kingdom, or this Principality, I am not able to reſolve, unleſſe, 1 Damut, and 2 Couche may be two, and the two moſt eminent, as giving name to thoſe eſtates.

GOIAMY, hath on the North, Damut; on the Weſt, Bagamedrum; on the South, and Eaſt, ſome Provinces of the other Æthiopia. The Countrey in the North parts full of Deſarts and Rocky Mountains, in the reſidue plentifully furniſhed with all things neceſſary. Great ſtore of Gold they finde, but droſſie; the people not knowing how to refine and purifie it; or loth here (as in other places of this Empire) to take pains that way; for fear of drawing in the Turks, and Arabians, to partake of the booty.

It containeth in it many Rivers, or rather Torrents, which come tumbling down the hills with a mighty violence, and a terrible fall; making a noiſe, not much inferiour to a clap of thunder: and amongſt other Lakes, two of ſpecial note, which for their greatneſſe ſeem to be Seas; in which, as ſome report, Mermaids, and Tritons, or Men-fiſhes uſe to ſhew themſelves; and out of which it is thought by others, that the Fountains of Nilus do ariſe; and both true alike. But paſt all doubt the Abaſſines themſelves are of this opinion; and therefore in the ſtile of the Negaz (ſo they call their Emperour) he is termed King of Goiamy, with this addition, In which are found the Fountains of Nilus. Deceived alike in their opinion touching this particular, the Springs, or Fountains of that River being further South: though poſſibly having loſt himſelf in theſe vaſt Lakes, and iſſuing hence into a more contracted Channel; he may be ſaid to have a ſecond birth from hence, though not the firſt. And theſe I take to be the Lakes, which were diſcovered by the Romans in the time of Nero. Who following the deſign of ſome other great Potentates, Seſoſtris, Cambyſes, Alexander, and Philadelphus, in diſcovering the true Original of this famous River; imployed two Centurions in that ſervice; who aided in it by the then King of the Æthiopians, are ſaid to have come at laſt unto certain great Mariſhes (moſt probably the lower and ſedgy parts of theſe Lakes now mentioned) of whoſe extent the Inhabitants themſelves were ignorant; nor poſſible to be diſcovered any further, the Weeds having ſo overgrown the water, that there was no further paſſage to be made by boat, and leſſe by wading.

Betwixt this Countrey and Damut, which we laſt paſſed thorow, is ſaid to be a Province of Amazons, warlike and fierce, and very expert at the Bow; whoſe Queen knoweth no man, and by the reſt honoured as a Goddeſſe. Theſe, they ſay, were firſt inſtituted by the Queen of Saba; as true, as that which ſome have added of the Phœnix viſible in this Countrey, of Griffons, and of Fowls ſo big that they make a ſhadow like a Cloud. Which ſtrange reports I have here added, to ſupply the defect of Towns and Cities, of which I meet not with ſo much as the naked names; as undiſcovered places in our Maps and Charts, are filled up with Monſters.

7. BAGAMEDRUM.

BAGAMEDRUM, or SAGAMEDRUM (for I finde both names) lieth on the Weſt of Goiamy; betwixt the Northern parts thereof, and the River Nilus: and keeping all along the courſe of that River, as far as Guagere, or Meroe, encountreth with the Southern point of Barnagaſſo. Some do extend it alſo beyond that Iſland, but making the whole length thereof but 600 miles, do confute themſelves. The greateſt Province of this Empire it may probaly be, cæteris hujus Æthiopiæ ampliſſimum, as they ſay it is; but if extended the whole length of it, it muſt be 1500 miles, not 600 onely.

The Countrey plentifull in Mines of the pureſt Silver, which they cannot draw thence but by fire, which makes it run like long rods, or Ropes of Metal. And yet as large, and wealthy as they ſay it is; I am more to ſeek for Towns and rich Cities in it, than in the Deſarts of Libya, or the ſands of Arabia.

Merchants and Travellers for the moſt part go no further than the Sea-coaſts of the Countrey, of which they give us more exact and full informations, knowing but little of the Inlands; and of the Natives, ſuch as have travelled abroad into other Kingdoms, rude and ignorant men, know little more of their own Empire, than the place they lived in. Or probably their beſt Cities not containing above 2000 houſes, few of them ſo many, and thoſe patched up of thatch, dirt, and hurdles (unleſſe ſome of the Nobility, or wealthier Merchants are provided better) they may have no great reaſon to ſpeak much of them; or to acquaint us with the names of ſuch ſorry places, as are indeed not worth the naming. Which I conceive to be the true condition of moſt, or all the Inland Towns in this large Eſtate.

8. BARNAGASSO.

BARNAGNES, or BARNAGASSUM, hath on the Weſt Guagere, or the Iſle of Meroe; on the Southweſt as ſome ſay, a point of Bagamedrum; on the South, Dangali, and Adel; on the Eaſt, the Red-Sea, or Bay of Arabia; on the North it ſtretcheth towards Egypt; the Kingdoms of Jaſculum and Sua, poſſeſſed by the Mahometans, being interpoſed.

The Countrey very fertile, full of Towns and Villages, and exceedingly well ſtored with pleaſant Rivulets, beſides the neighbourhood of the Red-Sea on the one ſide, Nile and Abanhi on the other. Remarkable for a Mountain in the Weſtern part of it, which being ſpacious in the beginning groweth ſtrait by little and little, and then enlargeth it ſelf again to a League in circuit. On the top thereof a Royal Palace, a Church, a Monaſtery, and two very large Ciſterns, with a piece of ground able to entertain and keep 500 men. To be aſcended one way onely, and that but to a certain mark; to which being come, they are drawn up with Cords and Baskets to the top of all; not to be took by force, by reaſon of the impoſſibility of aſcent; nor by long ſiege, or any extremity of Family, in regard it yields proviſion enough to maintain it ſelf. Accounted therefore the chief Hold of all this Province againſt Turks and Moors.

It containeth beſides Barnagaſſo it ſelf, the two Provinces of Canfila, and Dafila; though rather ſubject to the Governour, or Vice-Roy of it, than parts and members of the ſame. Towns of moſt moment in the whole. 1 Beroa, or Barua, conceived by ſome to be the Colony of Ptolomy, the Reſidence of the Vice-Roy, ſituate on a pleaſant and fiſh-full River. 2 Zameta, honoured ſometimes alſo with the Vice-Royes preſence; but rather as a retiring place in times of leiſure, than a Town of ſtrength. 3 Suachen ſituate in an Iſland of the Red-Sea, or Bay of Arabia, one of the richeſt Cities of the Eaſtern parts; and beautified with a goodly and capacious Haven, ſecured by nature from all ſtorms, of ſmooth tides, ſure Anchorage, and able to receive 300 great ſhips of burden. Situate in a little Iſland, the whole circumference whereof it taketh up; inſomuch that veſſels of all ſorts, both within the Haven and without, do uſually unlade themſelves at the doors of the Merchants, to which the Ship-beaks ſerve for bridges. A wealthy and well traded Town both by Sea and Land, to which from the more In-land parts of the Aabaſſine Empire, the Mountains open a ſafe paſſage for the carriage and re-carriage of their commodities. Taken by the Turks long ſince with all the reſt of the Countrey lying betwixt it and Egypt, and made the ſeat of a Turkiſh Beglerbeg, or Baſſa: whom, in imitation of the Romans, they call the Beglerbeg of Abaſſia; as if by the poſſeſſion of this ſmall part of that Empire, they would entitle the Grand Signeur unto all the reſt. The Town conceived by ſome, to be that which Ptolomy calleth Oſtium Sabaſticum, or rather Sabaiticum, as called by Strabo. Others will have it to be the Ptolomais Ferarum, or the Epitherias, as Pliny calleth it, of the Ancient Writers. And ſome again will have it to be the Succhæ of Plinie, by whom reckoned among the Cities of the Troglodites (who are called Succhæi in the Scriptures, as before was noted) in whoſe part of the Countrey it is ſeated, and to which name it hath ſome reſemblance. 4 Biſam, not far from Erocco, remarkable for a Monaſtery ſituate on the top of an high Rock, environed with dreadfull Precipices upon every ſide; in which live 3000 Monks, eating by three and three together, in a common Refectorie: this being the chief of ſix others in this Province of Barnagaſſo, the furtheſt not above 30 miles diſtant. For maintenance of whom, and a great number of poor Children which they dayly feed, beſides the Tythes of all the Mountain in which it ſtandeth (fruitfull and rich, & at leaſt 30 miles in compaſſe) they have many good Farms at the foot of the ſaid Mountain, and an hundred ſmall Villages appertaining to them, out of which they raiſe yearly great proviſion of Corn, and above 2000 head of Cattel; their Revenues out of Tigremaon being reckoned in. A Revenue able to maintain them and their Hoſpitality, in regard their Novices, or young Monks are ſent abroad to earn their living, or to manure their Lands, and attend the husbandry of the houſe: the elder onely being found at the charge of the Monaſtery, though all alike bound to the performance of Religious Offices. 5 Erocco, another noted Port on the Red-Sea, or Bay of Arabia, to which a paſſage openeth through the Streits of the Mountains, as it doth to Suachen, conceived to be the Adulis of Ptolomy, the Aduliton of Pliny: Now in poſſeſſion of the Turks, or at their command. 6 Santar, 7 Giabel, 8 Laccari, and 9 Abarach; theſe four laſt in the Province of Dafila.

This Countrey at the preſent, and for long time paſt, is ſubject both to the Great Neguz, or the Preſtegian of Æthiopia, and the Grand-Signeur of the Turks; naturally ſubject to the one, and tributary to the other. Governed by a King of their own, whom they call Barnagaſſus, by the name of his Province, a Vaſſal and Homager to the Æthiopian; to whom he payeth the yearly tribute of 150 of the beſt breed of Horſes, beſides ſome quantities of Silk, and ſome other commodities: but ſo ill neighboured by the Turks, that he is fain to pay alſo to the Beglerbeg or Baſſa reſident at Suachen, 1000 Ounces of Gold yearly for a compoſition. For the Turks having by the conqueſt of Egypt made themſelves maſters of thoſe Countries towards Æthiopia, which formerly were allied to, or confederate with the Mamaluck maluck Sultans; within short time (viz. An. 1558.) possessed themselves also of the town of Suachen and the parts adjoyning; made it the residence of one of their Beglerbegs or Bassa's, and gave him the title of Beglerbeg of Abassia, as before was said: Forgot by the industrious Collector of the Turkish History, in his enumeration of the Beglerbegs or Bassa's of Africk. To this they added not long after all the rest of the Sea-coasts, and the Port of Erocco; and not content therewith, after some short breathing made a further inrode; in which they did so waste the Countrey, that in the end they compelled the Barnagassian (not being aided by the Neguz) to this Composition.

9. DANGALI, & 10. DOBAS.

SOuth and South-east of Barnagasso, lie the two Kingdoms of DANGALI, and DOBAS; that of Dangali bordering on the Red-Sea, the other more within the Land: both of them held by the Mahometans or Arabian Moors, both in continual enmity with the Abassine Emperours; and both of like nature, in regard of the soil, and people.

DANGALI hath on the North, Barnagasso; on the South, some part of the Kingdom of Adel; on the East, the Red-Sea, or Gulf of Arabia; on the West, Dobas before mentioned. It taketh up some part of the Arabick Bay, within the Streits of Babel-Mandel; and without those Streits, the greatest part of that spacious Bay, which anciently was called Sinus Avaliticus, as far as to the Promontory then called Mosylon, (neighboured by a noted Emporie of the same) now the Cape of Docono; neer unto which the Sea makes a little Gulf, and suddenly streitneth it self again; so as the Channel cannot be above ten or twelve leagues broad. And in this Channel are five or six Ilands, which hinder the passage; so as Sailers must have good experience to avoid the Rocks which lie neer those Ilands.

Chief Towns hereof, 1 Bebul, or Babel, which gives name to the Streits of Babel Mandel; a narnow Frith, opening out of the Bay of Arabia into the Æthiopian Ocean. 2 Vella, a well-frequented Port, conceived to be the same which Strabo calleth Antiphila; not found by that name in Ptolomy. 3 Zagnani, and 4 Zama, in a Province of this Kingdom called Lacca. 5 Docono, neer the Cape so called, and therefore probably the Mosylon of the antient Writters. 6 Dangali, not far from the Sea-side, which gives name to the Kingdom. Nothing else memorable of this Kingdom, but that there are in it two great Lakes, wherein live Crocodiles, as in Nilus.

On the South-west of Dangali lieth the Realm of DOBAS, extended on the West to the borders of Angote. The Countrey large, containing twelve, or as some say, 24 several Prefectures: Of so good Pasturage, that the Kine hereof are of greater size than in other places, and those for number not easily matched in all this Empire. The people such professed Enemies of the Christian faith, that they suffer not any man to marry, till he hath killed twelve Christians. Some reckon them for Tributaries to the Prete, or Negus; but it is onely when they list: so far from being Contributioners towards the support of his estate, that they take from him what they can. The chief of their towns, 1 Doba, which gives name to the whole Kingdom. 2 Bally, upon the same River, on which Dobas standeth, but more neer the head.

11. ADEL.

ADEL is bounded on the North, with some parts of Dangali, and the Red-Sea; on the South, with Adea; on the East, with the Red-Sea, and the Indian or Arabian Ocean; on the West, with Fatigar: extended on the Sea-coast from the Cape of Docono, to the Cape of Guardafu, conceived most probably to be the Ardmata of Ptolomy, a noted Promontory in his time.

The Countrey plentiful of Flesh, Hony, Wax, Corn, Gold, and Ivory; great flocks of Sheep, and many of those Sheep of such burdensom Fleeces, that their tails weigh 25 pounds: some Kine they have, which have horns like a Stag; others but one horn onely, and that in the forehead, about a foot and an half long, but bending backwards. The people inhabiting on the Sea-coasts, are of Arabian parentage and of the Mahometan religion; those towards the Inland Countries, of the old Æthiopick race, and wholly Gentiles.

Chief towns hereof, 1 Zeila, a noted Port-town, situate in or neer the place where Ptolomy placeth Avalites: stored with variety of merchandise, and yielding some representation of Antiquity in the building thereof, being lime and stone; materials not much used amongst them in these later times. Of great both beauty and esteem, till the year 1516. when sacked and burnt by the Portugals; before that time the most noted Emporie of all Æthiopia for the Indian trade. 2 Barbora, seated on the same Sea-coast, well frequented by Merchants, and possibly may be the Mundi or Malao of Ptolomy; neighboured by a lofty Promontory, which they call Mount Fellez. 3. Mette, another of the Sea-towns neer the Cape of Guardafuni; supposed to be the Acane of the Antient writers. 4 Assam, 5 Selir, and 6 Bidar, on the Sea-coasts also. 7 Arar, the principal of the Kingdom, more within the Land, and about 38 Leagues from Zeila.

This Countrey formerly a member of the Æthiopian Empire, is of late grown to so great strength and reputation: that the Kings hereof have freed themselves from all signs of subjection to that Crown, and think themselves the mightier Princes of the two. Advanced to this repute and power, by Gradogna, or Gnadameth, who reigned here in the year 1540. by whom Claudius the Neguz was so overlaid, and his Countrey so destroyed by continal incursions; that he was forced to abandon his Frontiers, retire himself into the heart of his Estates, and crave aid of the Portugals. And though by their assistance and the help of their shot, he was twice victorious; yet in the third battel he was vanquished, and in the fourth *An.*1559. slain upon the place. This King accounted for a Saint by the Moors and Saracens, in regard of his continual wars against the Christians; did so establish the affairs of his little Kingdom, and left it so well setled unto his successors: that the Abassine Emperour hath ever since left it out of his Titles; though many other of those small Kingdoms are reckoned in the Imperial stile, in which he hath as little power as he hath in this. It is said also, that in the battel wherein Claudius was slain, and his Army routed, consisting of 60000 Foot and 500 Horse of his own Subjects, besides the Portugals: the King of Adel got into his possession the greatest masse of Coin and treasure that was ever seen. A victory obtained as well by policie, as force: the Abassines being seldom fought with, or their Countrey wasted and depopulated by the Kings of Adel, till by the strict observance of their Lenten Fast, they were grown so weak; that they were not able to discharge their domestick businesses, and therefore most unable to resist a prevailing Enemy.

12. ADEA.

ADEA, or ABEX, as some call it, hath on the North, the Kingdom of Adel; on the South, and West, some parts of the Abassine Empire; on the East, the Sea. Extended from the Cape of Guardafu, where it joyneth with Adel, along the greatest part of the Bay, called of old Sinus Barbaricus; of the reason of which name hereafter.

The Countrey plentifully fertile, shaded with Woods and spacious Forrests, and those Woods liberally furnished both with Fruits and Cattel; the Champagn Countrey not lesse fruitfull in Wheat, Barley, and other necessaries, besides a great store of Horses. The people of an Olive-colour, in some places more inclined to black: Not cloathed, but from the girdle downward; nor very well armed in time of war, but with poisoned Arrows; Mahometans in Religion, Arabians by original extraction, whose language they retain with some little difference in pronunciation.

Places of most observation in it. 1. Adea, which gives name to the whole Kingdom, because the old residence of the Kings. 2. Carfur upon the Sea-coast, sometimes called Opone, then a noted Emporie, and situate near the Promontory, called Zingis extrema. 3 Azun, and 4 Zazelle, supposed to be the Essina, and Tonica, of the Ancient writers. 5. Magadazo, a petit Kingdom of it self; a wealthy and well traded Town, situate in a fruitfull and delightfull soyl, and neighboured by a safe and capacious Haven: much traded by the Portugals, who bring from Ada in Arabia Felix, and Cambaia in India, their Spices, Silks, and other Indian commodities; which here they barter and exchange for Honey, Wax, Gold, and Abassine Slaves, which last they value as the chiefest merchandise which this Countrey yieldeth. First built by some Arabian Moors, who flying from the King of Laza, their mortal Enemy, under the conduct of seven brethren, came into these parts; where they founded this Citie, and that of Brava in the Province of Barus, of which more hereafter.

The Inhabitants are originally of Arabia, as before was said; who many hundred years ago became Lords of all the Sea-coasts of both Æthiopias, as far as to the Cape dos Corrientes, which is somewhat to the South of the Tropick of Capricorn. The Kings hereof in former times, Vassals to the Abassine Emperour, to whom they paid an yearly tribute; this Kingdom still remaining amongst his titles: but since the taking of Magadazo, made so obnoxious to the power and command of the Portugals; that the Estate of the Abassine in it is but meerly titular.

13. FATIGAR, & 14. XOA.

FATIGAR hath on the East, Adel, and some part of Adea; on the West, the little Realm of Xoa; on the South, Barus, another Province of this Empire. The Countrey Champagne, sufficiently fruitfull of Corn and Cattel, not meanly furnished with pleasant and delicious fruits. Most memorable for a Lake of twelve miles compasse, on the top of a Mountain, well stored with Fish; from whence and from the rest of the Mountain issue many Rivers, which much enrich the Vallies and Fields adjoyning. The chief Town hereof, (if any one be better than other) I conceive to be Fatigar, giving this name unto the Kingdom, or so called from it.

Westward of Fatigar, lieth the little Realm of XOA, bordering West on Amara; Southward upon Damut; furnished with great store of Corn and Cattel, but not much beautified with Towns of any consideration. Nothing observable in the History, or Description of it, but that together with Fatigar and others of the mid-land Provinces, it hath continued constant in obedience to the Abassine Emperours; notwithstanding all those misadventures which have hapned to that Empire in these later dayes.

15. BARUS.

ON the South East of Adea, lieth the Province of BARUS, extended Eastward to some part of Sinus Barbaricus; and touching at the Western point, upon that of Fatigar. The soyl and people much of the same condition, with the rest of Æthiopia. Mahometans upon the Shores, but Christians for the generality in the mid-land parts. Those Christians subject (as the rest) to the Abassine Emperour; but he hath neither place of strength, or consideration in all the Countrey; those of most note. 1. Brava, once a Free Town, and governed after the manner of a Common-wealth, by twelve Aldermen, or Common Councellors, descended from the seven Arabian brethren by whom first built; the founders of Magadora also, as before was said. But now, together with 2 Pate, and 3 Gogia, all all upon the Sea, made subject to the Portugals; by whom taken under the Conduct of Tristran de Cugna.

Besides these, there are many other Kingdoms mustered in the Stile Imperial, (the swelling vanity whereof we shall see anon) but of so little observation in the course of businesse, and so obscure in the esteem of such as have spoken of them, that it is enough to tell you where to finde their names: and having found their names, to bid you not to seek for more; there being nothing else in them which is worth the knowing.

As for the body aggregated of these several Members, it was first planted, as is noted and proved elsewhere, by Ludim the son of Mizraim, and the Nephew of Cham: from whence this Nation in the Scripture hath the name of Ludim. A Nation not much taken notice of in the first Ages of time, but by an Errour of Josephus: who giving too much credit to some Talmudical Tales, or willing to advance the reputation of the Jews to the highest pitch; telleth us a story, how the Æthiopians invaded and endangered Egypt, how they were beaten back by Moses; the Citie of Meroe besieged and taken by him, or rather delivered to his hands, by Tharbis the daughter of the King, who had fallen in love with him, and on the betraying of the Citie was married to him. All this not onely questioned, but rejected by discerning men, as a Jewish Fable, that hath no ground to stand upon in true Antiquity. With little better fortune, and as little truth, do the Æthiopians tell the story of their own Original. By whom we are informed, that Chus the son of Cham, first reigned in this Æthiopia; to whom succeeded his son Regma, and next after Dedan: that from the death of Dedan till the reign of Aruch (the certain time whereof they tell not) the people lived in Caves and holes digged under the ground; as did the Troglodites, an ancient Nation of this Countrey, in the times long after: that Arac first built the Citie of Aruma, and by that pattern taught them the use of Towns and Cities. But the main part of the Legend is the story of Maqueda a Queen hereof, and the fourth from Aruch, whom they will have to be the Queen of Sheba, famous in both Testaments, for the Royal Visit which she bestowed upon Solomon. Of whom they tell us, that being got with Childe by Solomon when she was in his Court, she was delivered of a Son, whom she caused to be called Melech, or Melilech; and at the age of 20 years, to be sent to his Father. By whom instructed in the Law, and circumcised, and called by the name of David; he was returned into his Countrey, with Azarias the Son of Zadok the Priest, who had stollen the two Tables of the Law, and carried them with him into Æthiopia; where the old Queen resigned the Empire to her Son. His Successours afterwards called David, till Indion (as they call him) the Eunuch of Queen Candace returning home, baptized the young Prince by the name of Philip. This is the substance of the Legend, as related by them in their own Chronicles (but we know that they are no Gospel.) That Chus planted in Arabia, hath been shewn already, as also what absurdities must needs arise from supposing the Land of Chus to be this Æthiopia. Therefore most probable it is, that this Countrey was first peopled by the Children of Ludim, as before was said. To whom the Abassenes coming out of Arabia Felix, might be after added: and in some tract of time be of such great power, as to put their name upon the Countrey. For that the Abassenes were originally an Arabian people, appeared by Stephanus, one of the old Chorographers, who out of Uranius (An ancienter Authour than himself) hath told us this, Ἀβασηνοὶ ἔθνος Ἀραβίας. Another Stephanus, and he a very learned Grammarian and Lexicographer, hath, as he thinks, decided the controversie, by making Sheba the Son of Chus the Progenitor of the Arabians; and Sheba the Son of Regma, the Father of the Æthiopians: and for this cause, hath fitted us with this pretty Criticism, that Sheba when it is written with Samech, must be rendred Æthiopia; and Arabia, when writ with Shin. But this by no means will be found to agree the controversie: it being evidently clear, that both Sheba the Son of Chus, and Sheba the Son of Regma, were originally setled in Arabia, as hath there been shewn; though I deny not but that some of the Posterity of Chus in those elder time, (before the coming over of the Abassine Nations) might either out of too much populosity, or desire of change crosse over the Arabian Gulf, and take up such parts of this Countrey as the Ludims had not fully peopled, with whom conjunct at last, both in name and government. And for Mayneda (supposing that to be her name) she was doubtlesse Queen of the Sabæans in Arabia Felix; not of the Æthiopians, in the waste of Africk. For besides the longsomnesse of the way, too much for a Woman and a Queen to travel; it is very probable, that the Son of Solomon by this Lady, would never have suffered Egypt to have layen in quiet, whilest Sesac the King thereof made war upon Rehoboam, the Son of Solomon also, and so by consequence his half brother. But to leave these uncertain Fables, the first action of moment which we meet with in unquestioned Story, touching these Æthiopians, is that which hapned betwixt them and Cambyses the Persian Monarch; who having by force of Arms united Egypt to Persia; conceived it to be worth his labour to unite Ethiopia unto Ægypt also. Upon this resolution, he sent Ambassadours to that King, to search into the passages of his Countrey, and discover his strengths; and by them sent a Tun of wine, some Bracelets, a purple habit, and a box of sweet oyntments, to present him with. Which Presents being tendred to him, he looked upon the Unguents and the purple Robe as too slight and effeminate: the Bracelets he conceived to be bonds, or fetters, and openly laught at them, as too weak to hold in a prisoner: but with the Wine he was very well pleased, and sorrowed that his Countrey yielded no such liquour. But understanding well enough what this visit aimed at, he gave the Ambassadours at their parting (amongst other gifts) an Æthiopian Bow of great length and strength; requiring them to tell their Master, that untill every Persian could bend that Bow (the Æthiopian Bows being a foot longer than the Persian, as before was noted) it would be no safe warring upon his Dominions; and that he had good cause to thank the Gods, for giving the Æthiopians so contented mindes, as not to think of conquering their Neighbours Kingdoms. Lying far off, and parted from Egypt by vast Mountains, we finde then not looked after by the Macedonians. Nor had the Romans medled medled with them, had they not been provoked by Candace, the Queen hereof, during the Empire of Auguſtus: who having made a War on Egypt, was by Petronius, Governour of that Province, brought to ſuch conformity; that ſhe was fain to ſue for peace, and to purchaſe it with the loſſe of ſome part of her Countrey. To keep them quiet for the future, Philæ an Æthiopian Citie, but on the borders of Egypt, is made a Garriſon by the Romans, and the Seat of their Deputy for theſe parts: held by them till the Empire of Diocleſian, and by him abandoned, becauſe the charge of keeping it did exceed the profit. After this, growing into power and reputation, the Æthiopian Kings were reckoned of as friends to the Roman Empire: in ſo much as Juſtinian ſent unto Heliſtheus, as Juſtin his Succeſſour did unto Archetas, the then Kings of this Countrey; to crave their brotherly aſſiſtance againſt the Perſians.

Of their Converſion to the Faith in the reign of a ſecond Candace, (unleſſe as Plinie thinketh, Candace was the general name of all their Queens) we have ſpoke already. To which the Æthiopians add, that after the baptizing of their firſt Philip (the Son of that Candace) by the hands of the Eunuch, the Emperours ſucceeding had the name of Philip. Till the religious life of John, a Cotemporary of the Emperour Conſtans, honoured as a Saint after his deceaſe; made them take his name. Some building upon this Tradition, have to the name of John prefixed that of Preſbyter, becauſe (as they affirm) he executeth as well the Sacerdotal as the Regal Office: Rex idem hominum Divumque Sacerdos, the very Anius of the Poet: And this ſo commonly received, that he is vulgarly called by the name of Preſter John, and his Eſtate the Empire of Preſter John; with no truth at all. Others more probably conceive, that this vulgar name of Preſter John, is but a corruption, or miſtake for Prætegian, or Precious John, and that the word Prete (by which his Subjects call him) importeth no leſſe. And yet I more incline to thoſe, who finding that the word Preſtegan ſignifieth an Apoſtle, in the Perſian tongue; and Preſtigani, an Apoſtlical man; do thereupon infer that the title of Padeſcha Preſtigiani, an Apoſtolick King, was given unto him for the Orthodoxie of his belief. Which not being underſtood by ſome, inſtead of Preſtegian, they have made Prieſt John, in Latine Preſbyter Johannes: as by a like miſtake, one Pregent (or Prægian as the French pronounce it) commander of ſome Gallies under Lewis the 12th. was by the Engliſh of thoſe times, called Prior Iohn. Preſtegian then, not Prieſt Iohn, is his proper adjunct; contractedly, but commonly called the Prete, by the Modern French, who uſually leave out ſ before a conſonant. Their Empire greater heretofore, than it is at the preſent, ſhrewdly impaired of late times by the Turks, and Arabians: of which the firſt have taken from him all his Countrey, from the Iſle of Meroe unto Egypt, with all the Sea-coaſts of Barnagaſſo; the later as much encroaching on them, on the reſt of the Maritine parts of his Dominions. But from none have they ſuffered more, than the Kings of Adel; who have divers times laid waſte, their Countrey diſcomfited ſome of them in the open Field, and in the year 1558. ſlain their King in batell. Not cured of thoſe wounds to this very day. For Adam, who ſucceeded Claudius that was ſlain in battel, was ſo far from being able to revenge the death of his Predeceſſour; that being ſuſpected to incline to Mahometaniſm, he was defeated by the under-King of Barnagaſſo. Since which time they have ſo languiſhed by inteſtine diſſentions, that though Alexander the third (if there were ever ſuch a King, which I finde much doubted) is ſaid to have ſetled his affairs by the aid of the Portugals; and that ſome ſtrange ſucceſſes have been ſince reported of a later Emperour: yet the truth is, that the Eſtate hereof hath been ſo imbroyled in civil Wars, and ſo many of their Emperours ſucceſſively murdered; that the power and reputation of it is exceedlingly weakned, and the Countrey made a prey to impuiſſant Enemies. For in the year 603. the Emperour Melech Gogad, who ſucceeded in the Throne by the depoſition and impriſonment of his Predeceſſour (under colour of baſtardy) was not long after ſlain by one Zezelezeus; and James, or Iacob advanced unto the Empire: Iames not long after vanquiſhed, and ſlain in the Fields of Guera, by one Sazinoſius (contractedly by ſome called Suſneas) his three Sons being forced to fly to provide for their ſafety. What became of the two eldeſt I have no where found. The youngeſt called Zaga Chriſtos, after many hazardous wandrings, and accidents arrived at laſt into Italy, and thence he came to Paris, An. 1638. where he was entertained in the quality of a Prince, but without hope of being reſtored to the Throne of his Fathers: For Sazinoſius, or Suſneas, immediately upon the victory had poſſeſſed himſelf of the whole Empire; though for a time ſo terribly diſquieted with Treaſons and Conſpiracies, that in the year 1607. he was fain to ſue for aide to the King of Spain, and tender a ſubmiſſion of the Abaſſine Churches to the Pope of Rome. But the ſpirit of Rebellion being conjured up, could not ſo eaſily be laid down (though there followed a long calm between) but that it brake out again within few years after (that is to ſay, about the year 1628) more violently than it did before: a powerfull Rebel ſtarting up, who followed by an Army of 50000. had queſtionleſſe diſpoſed the Prete of his whole Dominions, if not prevented and diſcomfited beyond expectation. For it hapned that one Vermeile a Frenchman, a Jueller by Trade, but exerciſed in the wars of Holland, underſtanding that the Abbaſſine Empreſſe was much delighted with the rarities and Jewels of Beraſe, found means to convey himſelf into the Court, where underſtanding the great danger which that great Emperour was in, and the ignorance as well of the good Subjects, as of the Rebels in the Arts of war, he gat leave to have the diſciplining, or training of 8000 men, with which ſmall Army he utterly diſcomfited and routed that vaſt body of Rebels, and was thereupon deſervedly made Commander in Chief of all the Forces of the Empire. This is the laſt news of any certainty that hath come from thence: (it being Anno 1634. in which that victory was obtained) but that there hath been a report of ſome new commotions, Anno 1648. the particulars and truth whereof muſt be ſought elſewhere.

Yet notwithſtanding theſe diſaſters, theſe later Emperours have ſtill preſerved their Majeſty amongſt their Subjects, whom they hold in ſervitude enough, though they keep not ſuch a diſtance as in former

Ages,

Ages; when the Prete was honoured as a God, and uſed to ſhew himſelf but thrice in a year, viz. on Chriſtmas, Eaſter, and Holyrood day: by which retiredneſſe it was thought that he made his preſence more acceptable; ſome holding nothing to be more derogatory from the Majeſty of a King, than to make himſelf too common an object for the eye of the vulgar. The like kinde of ſtate was once kept by thoſe Kings of France of the firſt Merovignian line; who withdrawing themſelves from all publike affairs, uſed onely to ſhew themſelves (as we have already ſaid) on May-day. A greater retiredneſſe than this, was that which Valleda Queen of the Tencteri (a people of the Rhene) is reported by Tacitus to have uſed; for when the reſt of the Germans then in arms, ſent Ambaſſadours to her, to inform her of their victory againſt the Romans, they were prohibited either to ſpeak to her, or to ſee her; Arcebantur aſpectu, quo venerationis plus ineſſet. Such a keeping of ſtate, the politick Prince Tiberius uſed, when the German legions mutined; for he daigned not himſelf to ſee them pacified, but ſent his Son; the reaſon was, quia majeſtati major è longinquo reverentia. And no doubt the ſame keeping of diſtance ſwayed much with him, when he forſook Rome, and kept Court privately at Caprea: though I deny not, but a propenſion to follow his unnatural pleaſures the more ſecurely, together with his deformities on his face, had alſo their powers upon his reſolution.

The title of this great and mighty Emperour, (but neither ſo great, or mighty in power, as title) runneth thus: N. N. Supream of his Kingdoms, and the beloved of GOD, the Pillar of faith, ſprung from the ſtock of Judah, the ſon of David, the ſon of Solomon, the ſon of the Columne of Sion, the ſon of the ſeed of Jacob, the ſon of the hand of Mary, the ſon of Nahu after the fleſh, the ſon of St. Peter and Paul after the ſpirit; Emperour of the higher and leſſer Æthiopia, and of the moſt mighty Kingdoms, Dominions, and Countries of Xoa, Goa, Caffares, Fatigar, Angotæ, Balignazo, Adea, Vangne, Goyami, where are the fountains of Nile, Amara, Banguamedron, Ambea, Vangucum, Tigremean, Sabaim, the birth-place of the Queen of Saba, Bernagaſſum; and Lord of all the Regions unto the confines of Egypt.

It ſeemeth by this title, that theſe Æthiopian Emperours, however the truth of ſtory goeth, conceive themſelves to be ſprung from Salomon, & Maqueda, (or Nizaule, as Ioſeph nameth her) the Queen of the South. For better confirmation whereof, it is by ſome reported, that the Arms of this Kingdom are the ſame with thoſe of the Tribe of Iuda, which are a Lyon rampant in a field Or: and that the Motto of them is to this effect, viz. The Lyon of the Tribe of Judah ſhall overcome. But Bara, an expert Herauld, giveth this Prince no ſuch Coat-armour; his Arms, according to him, being Luna, a croſſe portate Mars, charged with a crucifix Sol, between two ſcourges of the ſecond. And yet not altogether to diſcredit the old Tradition, ſo generally received amongſt them; it may be probable enough, that when the Abaſſens came into Æthiopia, ſome of the Sabæans their next Neighbours came along for company, and amongſt them ſome of the Royal race of the Queen of Sheba; with ſome of which, by reaſon of their great Nobility, ſome of the Abaſſine Emperours might think fit to match. Nor is it any matter of impoſſibility, but that Solomon (conſidering his courſe of life) might get a ſon upon the body of that Queen, from whom the Æthiopian Princes might be thus deſcended.

As for the Government of theſe Emperours, it is abſolutely Regal, or to ſay better, perfectly Deſpotical: the people being treated by them more like ſlaves, than ſubjects; taking away Signeuries, and giving them unto whom he pleaſeth, the deprived party not daring to expreſſe the leaſt diſcontent. By them ſo reverenced, that it was anciently a cuſtom, if the King were blinde, or lame, or maimed, for the ſubject to inflict on his own body the like impreſſion: ſtill had in ſo much honour by the greateſt ſubject, that at his bare name they bow their bodies, and touch the ground with one of their fingers; and reverence his Pavilion as they paſſe by, though he be not in it. He on the other ſide, ſeldom appeareth to his ſubjects, but with his Crown upon his head, and a Silver-Crucifix in his hand; his face then covered with a piece of Watchet Taffata, which he lifteth up and putteth down, according as he is minded to grace the party with whom he talketh.

As for his Forces and Revennes, ſome of our late Obſervators ſpeak nothing but wonders. Some ſay his Empire reacheth from the Red-Sea, to the Atlantick Ocean, and from one Tropick to the other: Some, that he is of ſo great Riches, that he is able to purchaſe a moyety of all the world, if it were to be ſold; others, that he is able to raiſe for any preſent ſervice, a Million of men. And he himſelf is ſaid to have offered to the Portugals, one Million of money, and another of men, if they would imploy it in a war againſt the Infidels. But notwithſtanding theſe great brags, I cannot think this Emperour to be ſuch a Miracle, as ſome of theſe Reports have made him. For they that ſpeak moſt knowingly of his Revennes, affirm that the ordinary expences of his Court and Army being diſcharged, he coffereth up but three Millions of Crowns per annum; which is no great matter: and upon extraordinary emergencies of war and trouble, will be eaſily waſted, or brought into a narrower compaſſe. And yet to make up this Revenue, beſides the Crown Lands, or Demain Imperial, he layeth ſome Tax, or other upon every houſe, receiveth the tenth of all that is digged out of their Mines; and levieth on the great Lords the Revenue of any one of their Towns, which he pleaſeth to chuſe, ſo it be not that in which the Lords themſelves inhabit.

This, though it be no great Intrado, conſidering the large extent of his Dominions, and form of his Government; yet it is greater in proportion than his Forces are. For notwithſtanding the report of Alvarez, and his own great brag, of raiſing a Million of men for preſent ſervice; it is well known that he was never able to advance half that number, in his greateſt neceſſity; and amongſt thoſe whom he can raiſe, there are but few who can deſerve the name of Souldiers. For the people being poor and beggerly, and brought up in a ſervile and baſe condition; are naturally deſtitute of that courage and alacrity of ſpirit, which ſhould be in men profeſſing Arms, or fit for noble undertakings: and are beſides, on certain jealouſies of State, ſo diſuſed from war, that they know not how to uſe their weapons when there is occation. So that for my part I conſider him as a weak and impuiſſant Prince, of no authority, or influence out of his Dominions; nor able to defend himſelf from the continual incurſions of his Neighbours (ſome of them mean and petit Princes) which lie neareſt to him. Land-locked on every ſide from Traffick and Commerce with the Seas; incroached upon Northward, by the Turks; confronted on the Weſt, by the King of Borneo, who poſſeſſeth not a tenth part of the Land of Negroes; on the Eaſt, continually bearded and baffled by the King of Adel, ſometimes a Vaſſal of his own; and on the South, with the Gallæ a barbarous Nation of the other Æthiopia, who lay all waſte before them whereſoever they come, and finally in theſe later times by his own ſubjects alſo. Injuries not to be indured, had he power to help it.

But the chief Stay of this Eſtate, is an Order of Knighthood, entituled by the name of St. Antony, to which every Father that is of the Degree of a Gentleman, is to deſtinate one of his ſons, if he have above two, but not the eldeſt. And out of theſe they cull about 12000 Horſe, which are to be the ſtanding Guard of the Emperours perſon: their Oath is, To defend the Frontiers of the Empire, to preſerve Religion, and to make head againſt the Enemies of the Faith. The Abbots of this Order (for it is partly Religious, partly Military) live in the Mountain of Amara; where they have two Monaſteries; as well for the training up of theſe Knights in the time of their youth, as their retirement when grown old and diſcharged from ſervice.

And ſo much for Æthiopia Superior.

OF ÆTHIOPIA INFERIOR.

ÆTHIOPIA INFERIOR is bounded on the East, with the Red-Sea (that name extending from the bottom of the Gulf of Arabia, to the Southern Ocean) on the West, with the Æthiolick Ocean; on the North, with Terra Nigritarum, and the higher Æthiopia; and on the South, where it endeth in a point or Conus, with the Main Ocean parting it from the Southern undiscovered Continent.

It was called Æthiopia for the reason before delivered. Inferior was added for distinctions sake, because somwhat of a lower situation than the other is. By Ptolomy called Æthiopia Interior, because lying more within the Land, and remote from knowledge than the neerer did: and by late writers for the contrary reason, called Æthiopia Exterior, because situate without and beyond the other.

It comprehendeth all Ptolomies Æthiopia Interior, part of his Æthiopia Sub Ægypto, and all those Lands to him unknown, which he giveth us under the name of Terra Incognita. The Contrey so little discovered in those elder times, that we finde mention onely of some eminent Mountains, as 1. Canchis, 2. Lon, 3. Ziphia, 4. Barditis, 5. Moschi, one onely Region known by name, called Agisimba, and of that nothing but the name, and that it was a Province of a large extent. The people not distinguished here, as in other places, by their Tribes and Families; but only by their kinde of diet; some of them being called Anthropophagi, from their eating of men, and others Ichthyophagi from their living on fish. Of these, the first inhabited on the Eastern shores, near the Bay of Barbaria; the principal of which had the name of Rapsij: the last on the shores of the Western Ocean, near Magnus Sinus, or the Great Bay; called also from their Western situation, by the name of Hesperij. Nothing else told us of these parts by the Ancient Writers, but that the Lakes or Fens of Nilus, were occasioned by the great abundance of snow which fell from the Mountains of the Moon: and that in many parts hereof, there were Rhinocerots, Tygers, Elephants, but these last all white.

Such was the face of this Countrey in those elder days. The Character of it at the present, generally and in brief, is thus given by Aubanus, viz. That it is mountainous in the West, sandy in the midst, and desart towards the East. But for the several qualities of the soyl and people, being of very different tempers; we shall give the better description of them in their several inclosures, than as presented thus in common. In the mean time to take a view of the Hills, and Rivers, of most reckoning in it; the principall of their Mountains are 1 those called Cantaberes in the Province of Angola; 2. Lunæ Montes, formerly accounted for the boundary of both Æthiopias, now found to belong unto this alone. A chain of Hills, but known by no particular name, lying under the Tropick of Capricon; full of sharp Rocks, of an incredible height, and inhabited by a barbarous and savage People: the valleys underneath of so great a depth, that they seem to emulate the Mountains.

In this Countrey is the Lake of Zembre, so much renowned for giving birth to the greatest Rivers of the world; though it self but 50 miles in compass. For out of the abundance hereof flow the famous Rivers, 1 Nilus, which passing thorow some part of this Countrey, and traversing the whole length of the Abassian and Egyptian Empires, endeth its long course in the Mediterranean. 2 Zaire the greatest of all Africk, but unknown to the Antients, which running Eastward thorow the Kingdoms of Manicongo, and taking in the lesser streams of 1 Vamba, 2 Barbela, 3 Coanza, 4 Lelunda, makes many Islands in his way; and at the last by a mouth of 28 miles wideness disgorgeth his full stomack in the Western Ocean. 3 Cuama, which making his passage towards the East, and much increased by the addition of six great Rivers; after a long course of 700 miles (in all which it is navigable) loseth it self in the Indian, or Æthiopick Ocean, and 4 Fluvius Spiritus Sancti, or the River of the Holy Ghost, which shaping a course opposite unto that of Nilus, endeth it in conclusion in the Southern Seas. It is divided most properly into these four parts, that is to say, 1 Zangnebar. 2 Monomotapa, 3 Cafraria, 4 Manicongo. Some also adde the Countrey of Aian, subdivided into the two Kingdoms of Adel, and Adea. But these we have ascribed, with better reason, to the other Æthiopia, within the bounds whereof they are wholly situate.

1. SANGUEBAR.

ZANGUEBAR, or ZANZIBAR is bounded on the East, with the Red-Sea, or the Indian Ocean; on the West, with the Kingdoms of Manicongo, and part of the other Æthiopia: on the North, with the higher Æthiopia only; on the South, with Monomopata. The reason of the name I finde not.

It containeth in it the great Province of Agisimba, placed by the old Writers in Æthiopia Interior, and in so much of the other also as lieth on the South of the River Raptus; now called Quilimanci, by which parted from the Kingdoms of Adel, and Adea. The Countrey on both sides of that River, known in old times by the name of Barbaria, giveth to a large adjoyning bay the name of Sinus Barbaricus; and was much famed in those elder times, for the best sort of Myrrhe: the Myrrha Troglodytica, & Myrrha Barbara, or Barbarica, being used for the same, by some of the Antients; because the Troglodites and the people of this Barbaria, joyned on one another. Here was also in those elder times a good race of Ginger of which saith Discorides, Μάκερ φλοιὸς ἐξ κομιζόμενος ἐκ τῆς Βαρβάρου, that it is the Bark of a Tree brought out of Barbara. Where by the way, the Scholiasts upon that Author, and Pline in the 12 Book have been much mistaken; of which the first takes this Barbara or Barbaria for some part of the Indies; the other thinketh that the Myrrha of these parts had the name of Barbara, from the drossiness and coursness of it, as if so called only because unrefined. The principal Town hereof called Rapta, by the name of the River; seated not far from the Sea; and by reason of the great Trade of it, esteemed the Metropolis of Barbaria in the time of Ptolomy. A noted Promontory of the same name was not far from hence.

To come again to Zanzibar, as it is now called, the Countrey is affirmed to be low and fenny, and very much overflown with unruly Rivers; and withall so full of Woods and Forrests, that for want of passage for the winde, the aire is generally (as in all Fenny Countreys of the like obstruction) exceeding pestilent. The people of complexion black, and of curled hair; Mahometans on the Sea-coasts; in the In-land parts Idolaters; extreamly given to Witchcraft, and Divinations. Naked above the waste, and beneath covered onely with the skins of beasts, or some such mingled colour stuffe as the Scottish Plad. The Moors which dwell on the Sea-coasts, use to adventure on the Seas in little Vessels, sowed together with leathern thongs, and calked with Gum; having no other sayls in them then the leaves of Palm-trees. Boats of as slight a making, as those used anciently by the Britans, whereof thus the Poet:

Primum cana salix, madefacto vimine parvam
Texitur in puppim; cæsoque induta juvenco
Vectoris patiens, tumidum superenatat Amnem.

Which I finde thus rendred to my hand:

The moistned Osier of the hoary Willow
Is woven first into a little Boat;
Then cloath'd in Bullocks hides, upon the Billow
Of a proud River lightly doth it float.

It containeth in it to the number of 15 Provinces, that is to say, 1 Melinde, 2 Mombaza, 3 Quiloa, 4 Mosambique, 5 Sofala, all along the Coasts; 6 Moenhemage, 7 Corova, 8 Calen, 9 Anzuga, 10 Monzalo, 11 Badin, 12 Mombra, 13 Mombizo, 14 Embroe, and 15 Macaos, more within the Land. Of the nine last, not being perfectly discovered, and therefore likely to yield nothing of note and credit, we shall now be silent. But the first six lying upon the Shores, or neer it, and consequently better known to Merchants, Travellers, and the like Adventurers, shall be surveyed in order as they lie before us.

1. MELINDE is the name of a little Kingdom, on the South of the Realm of Adea, in the Higher Æthiopia, from which parted by the River Raptus, now called Quilimanci: so named from Melinde, the chief Citie of it, well walled, and seated in a fruitfull and delightfull soyl; abundantly productive of Rice, Mill, Flesh, Limons, Citrons, and most sorts of fruits; but not well furnished with Corn, the greatest part whereof is brought out of Cambaia, a Province of India. The houses built of lime and stone, after the manner of Europe. The Inhabitants on the Sea-coasts, of Arabian breed, and of that Religion; those of the In-lands, which are of the original Natives, for the most part Heathens. Most of them of an Olive colour, but inclining to white; the Women generally of as white complexions as in other places; but they have some black people also: And all of them more civil in their Habit, course of life, and entertainment in their houses, than the rest of this Countrey. Great friends unto the Portugals, and befriended by them, ever since the kinde entertainment which they gave unto Vasques de Gama; whom they furnished with Pilots to direct him in his way to India, when first discovered by that people, An. 1497.

2. MOMBAZA is the name of another of these petit Kingdoms, of the same nature for the temper of the soyl and people, that Melinde is. So called from Mombaza the chief Citie of it, situate from Melinde about 70 miles, in a little Island of 12 miles compasse; but of good influence on some part of the Continent also. The Isle and Citie said to have some resemblance unto the Rhodes. The Town about a league in circuit, environed with a wall, and fortified with a Castle; the streets thereof very narrow, but well built, most of the houses being brick, and the Mosques capacious. The King hereof a Mehometan, as are most of his Subjects, and a bitter Enemy of the Christians. For which cause, and upon some discourtesies received from them, the Town was taken by Vasques de Gama, An. 1500. but abandoned again by reason of the unhealthy aire, not well agreeing with the constitution of the Portugals. Afterwards having taken in Alibeg and five Turkish Gallies, the better to enable themselves against the Portugals; the Town was taken and ruinated by Thomas de Cotigno, sent thither An. 1589. by the Portugal Vice-Roy residing in Goa; there being taken at that time (besides the spoyl of the Citie) all the Turkish Gallies, and in them 23 greater, and as many lesser Pieces of Ordinance. Such of the Turks and Citizens as escaped the slaughter, and had the opportunity of coming to them, yielded themselves into their power, to avoid the fury of the Imbians, a man-eating people, who had before befieged the Citie; and gathering up such gleanings as were left by the Portugals, devoured the King; and as many of the principal Citizens, as they could get into their hands. 2. Ampaza, the second Town of note, was taken by the Portugals, about two years after.

3. QUILOA lieth on the South of Mombaza. The Countrey rich and pleasant, the Inhabitants for the most part of Arabian Ancestry; of complexion near unto a white: their women comely, sumptuous in attire, and of civil carriage; neat in their houses, which are generally well built and richly furnished. Touching the ordering of this Sex (of whose honour they are very tender) the people of this Quiloa are said to have a strange custome amongst them, more to be mentioned for the rarity than the decency of it: which is the sowing up of the private passages of nature in their female Children, leaving onely a small vent for their urine. Thus sowed, they keep them carefully at home, till they come to be married. And she that is by her Husband found to want this sign of her perpetual Virginity, is with all kinde of ignominy sent back to her Parents, and by them as disgracefully received.

It

It took this name from Quiloa the chief Town thereof, ſituate in a little Iland, but neer the ſhore, from which parted by a narrow Fryth, oppoſite to the mouth of the River Coava, by ſome called Quiloa. Firſt built in the 400 year of the Hegira, by Ali, the ſon of Sultan Hiſchen; who not agreeing very well with his other Brethren, becauſe their Mothers were Perſians, and his an Abaſſine; ſought new Adventures in theſe parts, and bought this Iland. His Succeſſors grown rich and powerful by the trade of Sofala, extended their Dominions far within the Land: and ſo adorned Quiloa, the chief Town of their Kingdom, that for ſumptuous and magnificent buildings, there were few like it in thoſe parts. Proud of their many good ſucceſſes they provoked the Portugals, by whom under the conduct of Vaſques de Gama, An. 1500. the City it ſelf was taken, the King made a Tributary, and with his leave ſome Fortreſſes erected by them in convenient places. Secure and wanton by this means, they pick a quarrel with Abraham, then the King of this Countrey; whom in the year 1505. they depoſed from his Kingdom, and placed another in his Throne, under colour of not paying the conditioned Tribute. For which the Arabians roſe in Arms, diſplaced their new King, demoliſhed their Fortifications, and ſent them to learn better moderation in their proſperous Fortunes, An. 1509. The buſineſs coming after to a compoſition, the Quiloan covenanted for the yeerly Tribute of 1500 Marks of Gold paid unto the Portugals, to live in peace, and quietly enjoy his own without further trouble.

4. MOSAMBIQUE lieth on the South of Quiloa? So called of Moſambique the chief City of it, ſituate in a little Iland, the principal of three; oppoſite all of them to the mouth of the River Moghincats, and bordering on the Promontory of old called Praſſum, ſpoken of by Ptolomy, and by him made the furtheſt known place of all this Coaſt. In the Iland there are ſaid to be ſheep whoſe tails are 25. pound weight, as in other places of theſe Countries, and ſome parts of Syria; Hens, black in feathers, fleſh, and bone; and if ſodden make the water as black as ink, but yet ſweeter in taſte than any other. Of Pork good ſtore, the more, becauſe the people are for the moſt part of the Law of Mahomet, by which all hog-meat is forbidden. The in-land parts more barren, but very populous: ſo ignorant and rude when the Portugals firſt came among them, that for a Shirt, a Razor, and a little Bell, they ſold fifteen Kine; and then fell out among themſelves, who ſhould have the Bell. The Town conveniently ſeated on a large and capacious Haven, and fortified with a very ſtrong Caſtle, in the hands of the Portugals; who in their going to the Indies, and returning back, uſe to call in here, and fit themſelves with all things neceſſary to purſue their voyage. A Town of ſo great wealth and trading, that the Captain of the Caſtle in the time of his Government, (which continueth only for three yeares) is ſaid to lay up 300000 Ducats for his Lawfull gains, out of the Gold, that cometh from Sofala. A gain ſo great, that at the end of his three years, he is to ſerve for three years more at ſome place or other of the Eaſt Indies, at his own charge, without any allowance from the King or State of Portugal, and then permitted to return to his native Countrey. Such of that Nation as are ſuffred to inhabit here, are enjoyned to be married, to the end the Iland ſhould be well peopled, and as well maintained; which otherwiſe perhaps might have few elſe in it, but the Garriſon Souldiers, and the Factors of particular Merchants.

5. SOFALA lieth on the South of Moſambique, from which parted by the River Cuama, the greateſt River of thoſe parts, and thence extended to the mountains which they call Manica, by which ſeparated from Monomotapa. So called from Sofala, the chief City of it, ſituate in a little Iland (as the former are) but with great influence on the Land adjoyning. Both Town and Iland ſubject unto the power of the Portugals; who have a Fort, the better to ſecure the Factory by them here erected, one of the richeſt in the world; the People bringing hither great quantity of Gold (of which they have moſt plentifull Mines) which they exchange with them for their cloth, and other commodities. It is ſuppoſed that the Gold brought into this Town amounteth to two Millions yeerly. The ſuppoſition ſo agreable to all other circumſtances, that little queſtion need be made of the truth thereof. Inſomuch as this Countrey for its abundance of Gold and Ivory, is by ſome thought to be that land of Ophir, to which Solomon ſent; and of this opinion Ortelius in his Theſaurus was the firſt Author; but in my minde, upon no probable conjectures, and againſt very ſtrong preſumption. For firſt, Ophir the ſon of Joctan, of whom mention is made in the 10. of Gen. verſ. 29. and from whom the land of Ophir, in all likelyhood took its name; is in the next verſe ſaid to have planted in the Eaſt: whereas this Sofala is ſituate South-weſt from Chaldea; in which the confuſion of Tongues, and diſperſing of the People, began. And ſecondly, it is impoſſible for the Navie of Solomon which lay at Ezion Geber, in the Bay of Arabia; to have ſpent three years in coming hither, and returning: which we finde to have been the uſual time, of finiſhing the voyage to Ophir, 1 Kings ch. 10. Ophir then is ſome part of India; But whether it were the Iland of Sumatra, or that of Zeilan, or one of the Molucco's, or the land of Malaza, called by the Ancient Aurea Cherſoneſus, I dare not determine; conſidering what worthy men maintain theſe ſeveral opinions.

6. MOENHEMAGE, or MONOEMUG, the only inland Province of any note, hath on the Eaſt Mombaza, and Quiloa; on the Weſt, the famous River Nilus; on the North, ſome part of the Dominions of the Abaſſine Emperours; on the South, Moſambique. The Countrey very plentifull of Mines of Gold, yet the People uſe it not for money; but barter it in exchange with the Portugal Merchants for Silks and Taffatas, with which they uſe to cloath themſelves from the Girdle downwards; In ſtead of money, they make uſe of Red Counters, much reſembling Glaſs. Governed by a King of their own, who holds confederacie with the Kings of Mombaza and Quiloa, for the better ordering of their Trade. To whom are alſo ſubject a wild and cruel people, called Agag, inhabiting on Lake Zembre, and the banks of the Nilus; diſperſed about the fields in their homely cottages, black, Cannibals, and of an horrible aſpect, more horrible than otherwiſe they would be, by drawing lines upon their cheeks with an iron-inſtrument, and forcing their eye-lids to turn backwards. By the aſſiſtance of this people, the the King of Moenhemage hath hitherto preſerved his Eſtate againſt the King of Monomotapa: and they themſelves by ſome of their own Leaders did ſo diſtreſs the King of Congo, that they forced him to retire to a ſmall Iland, where he hardly ſcaped a violent and untimely death, moſt of his people being ſtarved. Of which more hereafter.

Touching the reſt of theſe Provinces, we can ſay but little, and that little of no great note or certainty; but that they differ for the moſt part from one another, both in ſpeech and behaviour; each Village under a ſeveral King, and each in continual quarrel with its next neighbours; whom if they overcome, they eat. At leaſure times they live by hunting, and the fleſh of Elephants. And amongſt theſe, but more upon the Borders of the Abaſſine Empire, I place the Gallæ; a Nationleſs nation, as it were, without houſe or dwelling, without Law or Government; as barbarous and horrid as the Agags (whom ſome call Jagge or Giacqui) are affirmed to be; who watching their advantages, and joyned together in ſome Arts of doing miſchief, have made of late ſuch deſolations in the Countries of the Preſtor-John.

2. MONOMOTAPA.

MONOMOTAPA, BENOMOTANA, or BENOMOTAXA (for by all theſe names it is called) is bounded on the North, with the River Cuama, by which and the Mountain of Magnice, it is parted from Zanzibar; on the Weſt, and South, by the River of the Holy-Ghoſt, by which ſeparated from Cafraria; and on the Eaſt, by the main Ocean. So that it is almoſt an Iland; ſaid to contain in compaſs 750 Spaniſh leagues, or 3250 Italian miles.

The Air hereof is ſaid to be very temperate, and the Countrey very good and pleaſant, yet full of Forreſts. Well watered, beſides the two great Rivers before mentioned, with the Streams of 1 Panami, 2 Luanga, 3 Arruga, 4 Mangeano, and certain others, which carry gold with them in their ſands. By means whereof, it hath not only abundance of Corn, but great ſtore of Paſturage; on which they breed infinite Herds of Cattel, and other Beaſts very large and great: ſuch ſtore of Elephants, that they kill 5000 yearly for no other reaſon, but to make merchandiſe of their Teeth: their Gold-Mines great and ſmall, reckoned to 3000; ſome in the hils of Magnice, others in the Provinces of Matuca, and Boro: the places where the Mines are, known without further Art in the diſcovery of them, by the dryneſs and barrenneſs of the ſoil; as if Nature could not hoord up gold in her ſpacious boſom, but ſhe muſt needs be barren of all good works.

The People are of mean ſtature, and black complexions; but ſtrong and active, couragious, and of ſuch footmanſhip, that they out-run horſes. Their Apparel Cotton-Cloth, which they make, or buy from ſome other place: their Diet Fleſh, Fiſh, Rice, Mill, and an Oil called Suſiman. Their Religion, Paganiſm for the moſt part; yet they worſhip not Idols, but believe in one God onely, which they call Mozimo; and ſeem not much averſe from the Chriſtian faith, to which one of their Kings was once converted. They puniſh nothing more ſeverely than Witch craft, Adultery, and Theft: and in the puniſhment of Delinquents they uſe no Priſons, but execute them as ſoon as apprehended; which is the reaſon that the Vulgar have no doors to their houſes, that being a priviledge for the Nobles. They may have as many Wives as they will, but the firſt the principal, and her Children only to be heirs: the women here very much reſpected (as a ſecond England) the Emperor himſelf, if he meeteth any of them in the ſtreets, giving them the way. Not to be married, till their Menſtrua or Natural purgations teſtifie their ability for conception; and therefore they ſolemnize the firſt Flux thereof with a liberal Feaſt.

Provinces of moſt note in it, and adjoining to it, but reckoned as Members of this Empire, are

1. Matuca, rich in Mines of Gold, the Inhabitants whereof are called Botonghi; who though they dwell between the Line and the Tropick, have in the winter ſuch deep ſnows on the tops of their Mountains, that if they come not ſpeedily down, they are frozen to death.

2. TORRA or BUTUA, extended from the mouth of the River of the Holy-Ghoſt, or di Spirito Santo, to Cabo Corrientes (Caput Currentium in the Latines) wealthy in fat paſtures, and great herds of Cattel; more in her unexhauſtible Mines of Gold. Moſt memorable for a large, and in thoſe times an impregnable Fortreſs, built formerly by ſome forrein Prince to ſecure the Mines; built of ſquare ſtones, and every ſtone of marvellous greatneſs, without any ſign of cement or other mortar; the walls hereof 25 ſpans thick, but the height not anſwerable; over the Gate certain characters written, which the moſt learned of the Moors could never read. Perhaps the work of ſome of the Æthiopian or Abaſſine Emperours, when their power and Empire was at the higheſt. By the Inhabitants, who conceive it to be a work beyond humane power, it is thought to have been built by Devils: but by thoſe who take Sofala for the Land of Ophir, aſcribed to Solomon; though ſituate 510 miles more Weſtward than Sofala, by their own accompt. The Air here very cold, by reaſon of the ſharp blaſts coming from the Pole-Antartick; ſo much the colder, in that they have no wood, or other fewel, but what they make themſelves of the dung of their Cattel.

3. BORO, and 4 QUITICUI, both furniſhed with Gold alſo in their Mines and Rivers, but not ſo pure as that of Torra and Matuca; yet ſuch as ſerve their turn ſo well, as to ſpoil all induſtry: the people here being very careleſs in providing neceſſaires, which they preſume the Moors (I mean the Arabian Moors) will bring them in exchange hereof.

5. INHAMBAN, governed by a King of its own, but Vaſſal and Tributary to the Emperour of Monomotapa; the King whereof in the year 1560 was Chriſtened by Gonſalvo Silveria a Spaniſh Jeſuite, by the name of Conſtantine; his Queen baptized by the name of Mary: but I find nothing of the further progreſs of Chriſtianity. Touching 6 Matana, 7 Melemba, 8 Quinbebe, 9 Berteca, and 10 Bavagul, five other Provinces of this Empire, I can meet with little but their names.

Cities

Cities of note here are not many, hardly Towns or Villages; the houſes being here ſo thin, that from the border of Sofala to the Fort of Torra, being 510 miles, as before is ſaid, there is no ſign of any building either old or new. The principal of thoſe that be, 1. Tongum in the Province of Inhamban, and the Seat-royal of thoſe Kings; memorable for the baptiſm of the King and Queen, which was there performed. 2 Simbus, ſuppoſed to be ſo called from the Agiſymba of Ptolomie, the chief town of the Province of Torre, or Batne; diſtant from Sofala one and twenty dayes journey, and neighboured by the remains or ruines of the old Fortreſs before deſcribed. 3 Benomotaxa, where the King or Emperour makes his uſual reſidence; giving this name to the whole Kingdom, but taking it from the King himſelf, whom they call Benomotaxa, or Monomotapa, the word in their language ſignifying a King or Emperour.

The King hereof, accounted one of the greateſt of Africk, hath under his command, beſides the Provinces deſcribed, ſome part of Cafraria. Of great riches in regard of his Mines of Gold, which ſo abundantly ſupply all the Royal occaſions, that he exacteth no kind of tribute from his Subjects, but ſome certain dayes ſervice in his Works; and from his Nobles gifts and preſents, without which none of them are to come before him. His forces great, the multitudes of men conſidered but weak, for want of skill to train them, and Arms wherewith to fit them for modern ſervice, the Arms they moſt uſe being only Darts and Targets. For which cauſe, (and in regard the people of the ſubject Kingdoms are ſo prone to Rebellions, that he is fain to keep the Heirs of the Tributary Kings as Hoſtages of their Fathers loyaltie) he wageth mercenarie Souldiers of other Nations, whom he diſtributeth abroad in his ſeveral Provinces: and amongſt theſe it is affirmed, that he hath a ſtrong Battallion of Amazons, a warlike race of women, who inhabit about the Lake of Zambre, and the out-skirts of Zanzibar; compared by ſome, for their fidelity and proweſs, to the Turkiſh Janizaries. And yet not truſting wholly to the faith of theſe Mercenaries, it is ſaid that he keeps 200 Maſtives for the Guard of his perſon. Much reverenced by his Subjects, by whom he is ſerved upon the knee; and when he cougheth or drinketh, all thoſe that are about him make ſuch a ſhout, that the town rings of it. In one particular they differ from moſt Nations elſe, which is, that ſuch as are admitted into his preſence are bound to ſit down, in token of reverence; to ſtand before him, being a ſign of the greateſt dignity, which can be afforded unto any. Once in a fair way to have advanced Chriſtianity in his Dominions, when in the year 1560. the King hereof was baptized by Gonſalvo the Jeſuite, by the name of Sebaſtian, (that being the name of the King of Portugal then reigning.) But afterwards on the ſuggeſtions of ſome Arabians then in great place about him, having cauſed the Jeſuite to be ſlain; he was warred upon by the King of Portugal with an Army of 1600 men, under the conduct of Franciſco Barretio; to whom he offered very honorable amends for the injury done: But Barretio having in hope ſwallowed all the Gold in the Countrey, would not admit of any peaceable agreement; but referred the buſineſs to a battel; in which being overcome himſelf, and his whole forces not long after conſumed by ſickneſs, the hopes of Chriſtianity, and the Portugals intereſſe in that Kingdom, fell together with him.

3. CAFRARIA.

CAFRARIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with Rio di Spirito Santo, or the River of the Holy Ghoſt; on the South, and Weſt, with the main Ocean; on the North, extended to ſome parts of Manicongo, and the Province of Zanzibar. So called from the word Cafras, which in the Arabian tongue ſignifieth an Heretick; a name by them given to Chriſtians, Heathens, and thoſe of their own Religion alſo, which differ in opinion from them; but given to this Region by ſome late Writers, becauſe deſtitute of another name.

The Countrey, for ſo much of it as hath been diſcovered, is ſaid to be full of great Herds of Cattel, and flocks of Sheep; abundance of Deer, Antilopes, Bahoons, Foxes, Hares, Oſtriches, Pelicans, Herons, Geeſe, Ducks, Pheſants, Partriges; in a word all things neceſſary for the life of man, were it ſomewhat better ſtored with Corn. Exceedingly well watered, and as liberally ſtored with Woods, and Forreſts: the Hils thereof ſo intermixt with graſſie Vallies, that pity 't is ſo beautiful and rich a Countrey ſhould be inhabited by ſo barbarous and rude a people; who being utterly unprovided of towns and houſes, live in woods like beaſts. Of colour black, thick lips, flat noſes, long-ſhaped heads, and moſt monſtrous ears; extended far beneath their ſhoulders, by hanging in them iron-chains, glaſſe, bullets, Bels, and ſuch ponderous bables. Theſe Ornaments common to both ſexes, who alſo uſe (for their greater beauty) moſt hideouſly to ſlaſh themſelves in all parts of their bodies, even their very bellies; as if no lace could better ſort with their naked skins; with which only, except ſome flap of an Hide, or other leather to hide their privities, they are here apparelled.

Their beſt habits for the moſt part are the Hides of Beaſts, undreſſed, unfaſhioned, juſt as they tear them from the fleſh; but when they cloath themſelves with Sheep-skins, they have ſo much wit as to wear the fleece next to their bodies in cold weather, which at other times they expoſe (with no ſmall pride and glory) to the open view. Their voice ſo inarticulate, that it is hard to be diſtinguiſhed into words and ſyllables; which, being compoſed with that bruitiſhneſſe, which commonly appeareth in all their actions, makes it hard to ſay, whether the people generally may be thought to be men in the skins of beaſts, or beaſts created in the likeneſſe, and ſhape of men. But they make a greater uſe of their Cattle, than for Garments onely, their raw fleſh ſerving them for food, and the Guts for Ornament, which hang about their Necks uncleanſed, and with all the filth in them in as great a bravery as Ropes of Pearle, or Chains of Gold in more civil Countreys. Gold here ſo vilified, that they exchange it gladly for Braſſe, or Iron, and that quantity for quantity, and weight for weight, but in ſuch ſenſeleſſe diſproportion, as rendreth Braſſe and Iron the more excellent metals.

But

But amongſt all the ſeveral Nations which inhabit this moſt flouriſhing *C*ountrey, none are more barbarous than thoſe, whom they call the Imbians, dwelling not far from the Cape of good Hope; tall, ſquare, and ſtrong, addicted alwayes to War and Rapine, and feeding on the fleſh both of their conquered Enemies, and their dying friends, whoſe death they haſten for the Shambles. The ſkulls of whom they uſe for their drinking Cups. Their Weapons poyſoned Arrows, and Poles burnt at the end: And in their Wars they alwayes carry fire before them, menacing thereby to roſte, or boyl all ſuch as they overcome. Their King (if ſuch a ſacred name become ſuch an impious Monſter) they account for Lord of all the earth; as the Portugals, of all the Seas: and he with the old Giant-like Arrogance, not onely threatneth the deſtruction of men, but ſhooteth his poyſoned Arrows againſt Heaven it ſelf, as often as the rain, or heat offends him. In the year 1589. about 80000 of them made an inrode into Zanzibar, laid deſolate all the Countrey as far as Mombaza, which Citie they beſieged, ſacked, and devoured the people of it; which Tragedy we have heard before, in our deſcription of Mombaza, a Realm of Zanzibar.

Towns here are none, ſcarce ſo much as houſes; and thoſe ſo mean that they deſerve not to be ſo called: except it be ſome ſheds on the Sea-ſides, for the uſe of Saylors. Of moſt note in it is, Soldania, a large and capacious Road, about fifteen, or ſixteen Leagues from the Cape of good Hope: not ſo much noted for the buildings adjoyning to it (if there be any ſuch) as the Bay it ſelf; environed on all ſides with a pleaſant Countrey, enriched with variety of Herbs, not onely pleaſing to the ſence, but very Medicinal alſo for many diſeaſes, eſpecially for thoſe that are troubled with the Scærbute (or Scurvy, as we uſe to call it,) the Hills adjoyning, ſtored with great multitudes of Cattle, both Sheep and Cowes, though leſſe in ſize than thoſe in theſe Northern parts: great helps unto our Sea-men in their Eaſtern voyages, for here ſuch as are to ſayl towards the Indies, uſe to take in freſh water, and make proviſion of things neceſſary for ſo long a voyage. I have heard that ſome of our Engliſh ſhips in their return from the Eaſt-Indies, ſeized on two Savages, living near this Bay, whom they brought on ſhip-boord, with an intent to carry them into England, to the end that having learned the Engliſh tongue, we might be more particularly informed by them of the Eſtate and Affairs of this Countrey. One of theſe who was called Coore, being brought to London (for the other died upon the way) was dieted and cloathed according to the Engliſh faſhion, gratified alſo with braſſe Rings, Beads and ſuch other things, by which they thought they might moſt gain upon him to affect the change of his condition. But home, is home, though it be but homely, as the ſaying is. For this poor wretch having learned ſo much Engliſh, as to bemoan his own misfortunes, would throw himſelf upon the ground, and cry out with great anguiſh, and vexation of ſpirit, Coore home go, Soldania go, Coree home go, out of which unquietneſſe of humour, when they could not get him, they ſent him back in the next ſhips which were bound for the Indies. After which time, as oft as he ſaw any ſhip with Engliſh colours, he would very joyfully make towards the Bay with Guts and Garbage hanging about his neck (as their cuſtome is) and readily perform all good Offices towards them; yet ſo that it was found withall, that by diſcovering to the Natives how low eſteem the Engliſh had of Braſſe and Iron, they thenceforth raiſed the value of thoſe richer Metals, which formerly they had parted with for ſuch ſorry trifles, as have been ſpoken of before.

But that which is of moſt conſideration in all this Countrey, is the Cape it ſelf; diſcovered by the Portugals, under the conduct of Bartholomew Diaz, in their firſt Indian undertakings; by whom, for the continual Tempeſts which he found about it, it was firſt called Tormentoſa. But afterwards the Portugal having doubled the Cape, and thereby finding good hopes of a proſperous voyage, they cauſed it to be called Cabo di Bunna Speranza, or the Cape of good Hope: Vaſques di Gama, the firſt diſcoverer of this way to the wealth of India, being then their Admiral, An. 1597. It conſiſteth of three great points or head-lands, of which that which is neereſt us, is the Cape of good Hope: the middlemoſt hath the name of Cabo Falſo, becauſe miſtaken for the other, by ſome of the Portugals, returning homewards; the third called Cabo della Guglia, or the Cape of Needles, by reaſon of thoſe ſharp points which ſhoot towards the Sea. On the top of the Cape, a large and pleaſing plain, adorned with great variety of flowers, and covered with a carpet of graſſe; it is called the Table of the Cape, and yieldeth a large proſpect over the Sea on all ſides. The Sea here is very rough and tempeſtuous, and hath to the Spaniards proved oftentimes very unkinde: whereupon a Spaniſh Captain being ſore vexed with a ſtorm, expoſtulated with GOD, why he ſuffered his good Catholicks to endure ſuch torments; and permitted the Engliſh Hereticks and Blaſphemers, to paſſe ſo eaſily.

The Countrey is not ſubjected unto any one Prince, the Natives being governed by the Chiefs of their ſeveral Glans; nor finde I hitherto that either the Portugals, or Spaniards, have took poſſeſſion of any one part of it, in the name of the whole. So that for ought I know, the beſt title to it doth belong to the King of England; for whom poſſeſſion was taken of it in the reign of King James, by one Captain Fitz-Herbert, who called the Aſcent unto the Table King James his Mount. But whether this Act of his beget any good title, or whether the title of a Countrey lying ſo far off be held worth the owning; I leave to be determined of by Lawyers and Stateſmen.

4. MANICONGO.

MANICONGO is bounded on the South, with Cafraria, and the Mountains of the Moon; on the Weſt, with the Æthiopick, or Atlantick Ocean; on the North, with the Realm of Bein, and other parts of the land of the Negroes; and on the Eaſt, with Zanzibar, and ſome part of the Abaſſine Empire. So called from Congo or Manicongo, the principal of thoſe many Kingdoms, which are united in this Name.

The

The Aire hereof ſo temperate, that their Winter is like the Autumn in Rome; inſomuch as the people do not uſe to change their garments, or make more fire then, than at other times: the tops of the Mountains free from cold, and the nights ſo equal to the dayes, that for the greateſt part of the year there is little difference; the Countrey being ſituate under the Æquator, though more of it on the North than the South thereof. Not over hot, notwithſtanding in the heats of Summer, by reaſon of the cool windes which then blow continually; and the great dewes, which falling in the night make ſome compenſation for the extream fervour of the day. The ſoyl ſo exceeding fruitfull in the production of herbs, plants, fruits, and ſuch ſtore of Paſturage; that they have here great herds of Cattel, large flocks of Sheep, plenty of Goats, Stags, Deer, Hares and Conies: Elephants of that bigneſſe, that their teeth weigh 200 pounds; and Serpents of ſo vaſt a bulk, that they will eat a whole Deer at once; not to ſay any thing of their fowl, both wilde and tame, which they have here in great abundance.

The people of mean ſtature, black of complexion, thick lips, and having the apple of the eye of divers colours, which makes them ghaſtly to behold; ſtrong and long-lived, with very little hair on their heads, but that all naturally curled. In Religion for the moſt part Heathens, ſome worſhipping the Sun and Moon, others the earth, as the Mother and Nurſe of all things; and ſome again, wilde Beaſts and Serpents. So populous, that without any ſenſible diminution of their infinite numbers, it is ſuppoſed that they ſell 28000 Slaves to the Portugals yeerly; by whom they are ſent into Braſil, there to work in the Mines, and Sugar houſes. The Chriſtian faith admitted in ſome few of their Provinces, but ſpecially in that of Congo; where firſt preached, in the reign of John the 2. king of Portugal, An. 1490. by Gonzalvo do Suſa; who having converted and baptized the Kings Uncle, and one of his Sons, prevailed ſo far upon the King, that in the end he and his Queen, and many of his principal Subjects, did imbrace the Goſpel. Received there by the people with ſuch infinite joy, that when their firſt Biſhop came to live amongſt them, they cauſed the wayes from the Sea-ſide to the City of Banza (being 150 miles) to be covered with Mats; and offered to him all the way as he went, Lambs, Chickens, Kids, Partriges, Fiſh, Veniſon, and other neceſſaries to teſtifie their rejoycings in that happy change. And though many of the Subjects in the other Provinces were baptized accordingly, and for a time imbraced the Faith; yet after ſome ſmall trial of it they relapſed to their former Heatheniſm; either unable or not willing to conform to ſo ſtrict a Rule.

Principal Rivers of this Countrey. 1. Bengo. 2. Coanza. 3. Dande. 4. Barbela. 5. Ambrizi. 6. Loza, 7. Zaire. This laſt the greateſt of them all, if not of all Africk alſo: Of which, though we have ſpoke already, we ſhall add this here, That it falleth into the Æthiopick Sea with ſo great a violence, that for ten miles commonly, for fifteen ſometimes, the waters of it do retain their natural ſweetneſſe; not intermingled nor corrupted with the ſalt Sea-waters. Nor can the people ſayl above five miles againſt the ſtream, by reaſon of the Cataracts, or huge falls which it hath from the Mountains; more terrible and turbulent than thoſe of Nile. And for the Mountains of moſt note, they are 1. Sierra, Complida, or the Long Mountain; 2. Mons Chriſtalli, or the Chriſtalline Mountain, ſo called from the abundance of Chriſtal, which is found therein; 3. Sierra de Sol, the Mountain of the Sun, of exceſſive height: 4. Montes Sal nitri, ſo called from their abounding in that kinde of Mineral; and 5. the Mountains of Cabambe, rich in Mines of Silver.

It containeth in it many large and ample Provinces, of which we have this general muſter in the ſtile Imperial; wherein their King calleth himſelf King of Congo, Bamba, Sango, Sandi, Bangu, Batti, Pemba, Abundi, Matana, Quiſoma, Angola, and Cacango; Lord of the Congemes, Amolaze, Langelungi, Anzuichi, Cucchi, and Zoanghi. Many of theſe not ſo well diſcovered, as to afford us any matter fit for our diſcourſe; the principal of thoſe that be, are

1. ANGOLA bounded on the South, with Cafraria; on the North, with the Provinces of Bamba and Pemba; on the Eaſt, with ſome part of Zanzibar; on the Weſt, with the main Atlantick Ocean. The Countrey rich in Mines of Silver, and moſt excellent Copper; ſome ſtore of Kine and Horſes brought out of Europe, which they kill rather for their tails, (the wearing whereof is held for a ſpecial ornament,) than keep for any other uſe: their chiefeſt diet being Dogs, which they fat for the Shambles; and ſo that dainty ſo affected, that at the firſt coming of the Portugals thither, they would give twenty ſlaves and upwards for a good large Dog. By this we may conjecture ſomewhat at the nature of the people; who beſides this, are ſaid to be much given to ſorcerie, and divinations by the flight of Birds, skilfull in medicinal herbs and poyſons, and by familiarity with the Devil, able to tell things to come. Permitted as moſt Pagans are, to have as many wives as they will: who with the reſt of the women, whether maids, or widows, uſe at the firſt ſight of every New-Moon to turn up their bare bums in defiance of her, as the cauſe of their troubleſom purgations.

In this Countrey are the Mountains called Cantaberes, rich in Mines of Silver; but thoſe Mines not ſuffered to be digged, for fear of drawing ſome unneceſſary war upon them: ſo that they uſe Glaſſe-beads for money, and therewith alſo do adorn the perſons of greateſt eminence. Their principal Citie called Cabazza, is about 150 miles from the Sea, and the Royal reſidence of their Kings; but not elſe obſervable.

This Countrey was firſt diſcovered by the Portugals, under the conduct of Diego Can, Anno 1486. the King hereof at that time Vaſſal unto him of Congo; and ſo continued till that King did imbrace the Goſpel: whereupon they revolted from him, and have ſince ſubſiſted of themſelves without ſuch dependance. At firſt they held good correſpondency with the Portugals, and allowed them free Traffick in their Dominions: But after their revolt from the King of Congo, with whom the Portugals were in league, they put to death as many of them as they found in Cabazza, An. 1578. under colour of ſome pretended treason. To be revenged of this foul murder, Paul Diaz, Governour of these parts for the King of Portugal, arming such people as he had, with two Gallies and some other Vessels passed up the River of Coanza, wasting the Countrey on both sides. Against whom the King of Angola raised an Army of a Million of men (as some Writers tell us:) but amongst those multitudes of men, there were so few Souldiers, that an handfull of the Portugals, aided with some of the Forces of the King of Congo, gave him a notable defeat, An. 1582. Since that, the Trade with Portugal was revived again, and the King hereof hath expressed some good affections unto Christianity; sending unto the King of Congo for some Priests to instruct him in it, but obtained them not; the state of Religion in that Kingdom being then declining. The Portugals having thus gotten the upperhand, built, or repaired a strong Fort, situate near a convenient bay, by which they did not onely serve their Trade, but command a great part of the Countrey, till dispossessed thereof by the treachery and falshood of the Hollanders, An. 1640. or thereabouts: For the Portugals having withdrawn themselves from the Crown of Spain, a Cessation from all Hostility with them, was proclaimed in Holland, and not long after a firm peace made between the Nations; in the Articles whereof it was conditioned, that this peace should not begin in the East-Indies, till the end of a year, nor in Brasil, till the end of half a year from the making thereof. Which being obtained, they gave order to their Fleets and Forces which were abroad, to make themselves Masters of any thing then belonging to the Portugals, which they could lay hold of, who following these instructions, and Anchoring near the Fort of Angola, was by the Portugals received with joy into the Castles as their special friends, which presently they possessed themselves of, turning the poor Portugals in a very weak Bark to seek new adventures. But of this more hereafter in the Isle of St. Thomas.

To this King belong also the two Provinces of Matana, and Quisoma, though both used in the titles of the King of Congo: of which the first lying towards the Sea, is said to be of a wholsom air, and a fertile soil; outwardly furnished with fruits, and inwardly with Mines of Christal and other metals; but not very rich, for want of some convenient Haven to bring on commerce. The other lying towards a great Lake called Aque Lunda, was once governed after the manner of a Commonwealth; but tributary at that time to the King of Congo, as of later times to the Kings of Angola, by whom brought under this new yoke, by reason of the aid they had given the Portugals in their warrs against him.

2. BAMBA hath on the South the River of Conza, by which parted from Angola; on the North the River Ambrize, by which divided from Songo, on the East, Pemba; on the West the Æthiopick, or Atlantick Ocean. The Countrey rich in Mines of Silver, well stored with Beasts and Birds, as wel tame as wilde. Amongst the Birds, Parrets both green and gray, and many which are taught to sing; not much inferior for their musick to the birds of Canaries. Amongst the Beasts of most note, is that called the Zebre, shaped like a Mule; but from the ridge of the back to the belly so streaked with lines of white, black, and yellow, and those streaks naturally set in such even proportion; as yieldeth to the eye a most pleasing object. But wilde, and of so swift a foot, that Velox ut Zebra, to be as swift as a Zebre, is grown into a Proverb amongst the Portugals. The men so strong, that it is said of them, that at one blow they will cut off the head of an Ox, or strike a Slave quite thorow the midle, into two pieces; and to be able to carry in their arms a vessel of wine, weighing 325 pound weight, containing the fourth part of a But; and hold it so till it be quite drawn out. It containeth in it many Signeuries, most of them called by the names of their principal Towns. The chief of which, 1 S. Paul, situate on the Sea-side, opposite to the Isle of Leanda; inhabited for the most part by Portugal families. 2 Bamba, which giveth name to this Province, and is situate about 100 miles from the Sea, betwixt the Rivers of Lose and Ambrizi.

3. PEMBA hath on the West, Bamba; on the East, the Lake Zombre, and the River Barbela; on the North, Batta, and on the South, Angola. Esteemed to be the richest and most pleasant Countrey of all Manicongo; the Fields in all parts thereof beset with Palm trees, but intermixt with other fruit-trees, which are always green. The water of so good a nature, that it never hurteth any that drink of it: the Aire exceeding wholsom, and the earth as fruitfull; productive of all sorts of grain, but specially of that which they call Luco, in form like mustard seed, but bigger, which they grinde in an hand-mill, and make thereof a Bread not inferiour to Wheat. The people much reclaimed from their ancient Barbarism since the coming of the Portugals thither; whom they imitate both in behaviour and apparell. So well skilled in the vertues of Medicinal herbs, that every one is his own Physitian, Chirurgian, and Apothecary. Antiently clothed with Mats, and trimmed up with Feathers; retained still by the Villagers and poorer sort, in some part of the Countrey. Their chief City, formerly had the name of Banza, so called, because the Kings Court (as the word doth signifie;) but since the receiving of the Gospel it is called S. Saviours: distant from the Sea 150 miles, beautified (since it became Christian) with a Bishops See, and a fair Cathedral, in which are 28 Canons, with other Officers, and Ornaments accustomably belonging to the like Foundations. The Town it self situate on the side of a large and lofty Mountain; on the top whereof is a spacious Plain, two Dutch miles in compasse, full of Villages, Burroughs, and scattered houses; which are thought to house 100000. persons, most of them Portugals, and their Servants.

4. BATTA hath on the West, and South, Pemba, on the East, the Mountains of the Sun, and those called Salnitri; on the North, Pango. Of the Soile and people there is nothing singular to be said, but that the Inhabitants hereof are more military, and better furnished for the Wars than the rest of these Provinces: necessitated thereunto by the ill neighbourhood of a fierce and savage people, dwelling about the spurs and branches of the Mountains before mentioned, whom they call Jagges or Giacchi. These naturally and originally of the Land of Negroes, abandoned the parts about Seirra Leona, where before they dwelt, and to the number of 12000 fell into the Mountainous parts of this Region, under the conduct of one Elembe, where they are since grown into a people, and and become a terrour to their neighbours. Greedy devourers of mans flesh, which they prefer before that of Beeves, or Mutton; not yet so qualified by the change of their Countrey, as to build houses, sow or plant, or to breed up Cattell; finding it far the easier life, to maintain themselves by the labour and spoil of others. And which is yet most strange of all, though they have each of them many wives, ten or twenty a piece, yet they have no children; but strangle them assoon as born, lest they should be an hindrance to their often wandrings. But as Plinie once said of the Essени, Gens aterna est in qua nemo nascitur; so we may also say of these, that they do not want succession, though they breed no children: selecting out of their Captives and stollen children, some of either Sex, (but neither steal nor take them captive, under twenty yeers old) to be the Seminary (as it were) of a new posterity. Against these Monsters those of Batta are armed continually, not otherwise able to defend themseves, their wives and children, from their hands and teeth: insomuch as this one Province, though none of the biggest, is able to raise 70000 men, well armed, and fit for any service. The principal of their Towns is Batta, which gives name to the Province; situate on the banks of the River Lelanda, and the Seat of the Vice-Roy; who is always of the blood Royal, honoured sometimes with sitting at the Kings own Table, which none else may do, and of so great authority in all consultations, that no body dares to contradict him.

5. PANGO, is bounded on the South, with Batta; on the East, extended to the Mountains of the Sun, which close up this Countrey; on the North, with Sunda; and on the West, with parts of Femba, and Sango. Of the people, little singular, of the Countrey lesse. Neighboured on the North-east towards Sierra de Christall, with the Languelungi, supposed by some to be the Æthiopes Hesperii, spoken of by Ptolomy; a barbarous Nation, but of so considerable power, that they are found amongst the rest in the Stile Imperial. This once a Kingdom of it self, not subject till of late times to the Kings of Congo. The chief Town of it called Pango, is seated on the Western bank of the River Barbele; the ordinary residence of the Vice-Roy, and the name-giver to the whole Province.

6. SUNDA, is bounded on the South, with Batta; on the North, with the great River Zaire; on the East, with Barbele; and on the West, with part of Songo. The Countrey rich in several Metals, but the Inhabitants prefer Iron befor any other; becaus it doth afford them Materials for Swords, Knives, and Armour; well furnished also with Martrons, Sables, and other Furrs of great esteeme amongst Forreigne Merchants. This is the best Region of this Kingdom, not above 40 miles in breadth, betwixt Batta and the River of Zaire; nor much more in length. Their chief City hath the name of Sunda, which it communicateth to the whole.

7. SONGO, is bounded on the East, with Batta, and Anzichana; on the West, with the Æthiopick, or Atlantick Ocean; on the North, with the Kingdom of Loanga; and on the South, with the River Ambrizi, by which parted from the Realm of Bamba. It lieth on both sides of the great River Zaire, which is here so turbulent and broad, and so full of Islands, that the one part of it hath little or no commerce with the other. The chief Town hereof called Songo, gives this name to the Countrey; in which is nothing singular for the Soil or people.

8. ANZICHANA, hath on the West, part of Songo and Loango; extended thence unto the East, as far almost as the Lake of Zembre; on the North, some part of the Land of Negroes; on the South, the Zaire. So called from the Anziqui, the Inhabitans of it: The cruellest Cannibals in the world; for they do not onely eat their Eenemies, but their Friends and Kinsfolk. And that they may be sure not to want these Dainties, they have shambles of mans flesh, as in other parts of Beef or Mutton. So covetous withall, that if their Slaves will yield but a penny more when sold joynt by joynt, than if sold alive; they will cut them out, and sell them so upon the Shambles. Yet with these barbarous qualities they have many good. Affirmed to be so cunning at the Bow and Arrows, that they will discharge 28 Arrows (for so many do their Quivers hold) before the first of them falls to ground: and of so great fidelity to their Masters, and to those which trust them, that they will rather choose to be killed, than either to abuse the trust, or betray their Master. For that cause more esteemed by the Portugals, than their other Slaves. And for the same and that onely, worthy of so good a Countrey; said to be rich in Mines of Copper, and very plentifull of Sanders, both red and gray; which tempered with Vinegar, is found by the Portugals to be a certain remedy against the Pox; as the smoak thereof against the head-ache. Towns they have none, or none at least of any reckoning, which deserve place here.

9. LOANGO hath on the East, Anzichana; on the West, the Æthiopick, or Atlantick Ocean; on the North, Benin, one of the Realms of Guiena, in the Land of Negroes; and on the South, the Province of Songo, from which parted by the River Loango, whence it hath its name. The Countrey very hot, as lying under the Line, but well peopled, indifferently fruitfull, and more stored with Elephants, than any other of these parts: stretching in length 200 miles within the Land, and for the most part very well watered. The Inhabitants, whom they call Bramas, by Religion Heathens, but of old accustomed (as the Anziqui and other of these barbarous Africans) unto Circumcision. Governed by a King of their own, once subject to the Kings of Congo: but of late times, both he and the King of the Anziqui (for they are also under the command of one Soveraign Prince) have freed themselves from that subjection: though still the King of Congo be called King of both. Their King they call by the name of Mani Loanga. Their Towns of note, 1 Penga, the Haven to the rest. 2 Morumba, 30 Leagues more Northwards, and within the Land; the Inhabitants of which Towns, being more civil than the rest, apparell themselves with the leaves of Palm trees; but not so well skilled in the nature of that excellent Tree, as the more civilized people of the Realms of Congo, who out of the leaves thereof well cleanſed and purged draw a fine long thred, of which they make Velvets, Damaskes, Sattens, Taffaties, Sarcenets, and the like fine Stuffes.

10. Having thus looked upon the chief Provinces of this Kingdom ſeated on the Continent, Let us next look upon the Ilands. The principal of which LOANDA, ſituate over againſt the Town of S. Paul, in the Province of Bamba; ſaid to be firſt made out of the ſands of the Ocean, and the mire of Coanza, caſt into an heap; and at laſt made into an Iland. Now beautified with a very fair Haven, of the ſame name with the Iland, poſſeſſed by the Portugals. The Iland deſtitute of Rivers, but ſo well furniſhed with waters, that every where within leſſe than half a yard digging, they finde ſweet and good Waters, ſo contrary to the Sea from whence they come, that when the Sea ebbs from it, they be ſalt and brackiſh; when it floweth towards the Iland, then moſt freſh and ſweet. But moſt remarkable is this Iland for the Cockle fiſhing, which the Women going a little into the Sea, take up together with the ſands, in baskets, and part them from the ſand, as they lie on the ſhore; the ſhels of which being naturally diſtinguiſhed into divers colours, ſerve over all the Kingdom of Congo, inſtead of money; which is a matter of ſuch moment unto this King, that he entertains a Governour in the Iland for no other reaſon, but to take care about this fiſhing.

Beſides this, there are many Ilands in the River of Zaire, now ſubject to the Kings of Congo, but heretofore in continual Wars againſt them: fighting in Boats which they made of the bodies of a Tree, by them called Liconde. The tree ſo big, that two or three men or more are not able to fathom it: inſomuch that many times a Boat is made of one of the largeſt of them, able to contain 200 men. Upon the ſhores of theſe Ilands, and in others of their Bays and Creeks, they have ſo great numbers of Anchioves, that in winter time they will leap upon the Land of their own Accord.

Compacted of theſe ſeveral Members, and of the reſt expreſſed in the Stile Imperial, is the Realm of Congo: ſo called from Congo the chief Province, but now diſtinguiſhed from the reſt by the name of Pemba; which being of more power, or of better fortune, than any of the other, or of all together, hath given both Law and name unto them. Diſcovered by the Portugals, under Diego Can, An. 1486. at what times theſe Kings were at the greateſt: called by their ſubjects Mani Congo, or the Kings of Congo, the word Mani, ſignifying in their Language a Prince or Lord; the name communicated ſince to the Kingdom alſo. Of their affairs before this time there is nothing certain. What hath ſince hapned in this Kingdom, may beſt be ſeen in the enſuing Catalogue of

The Kings of CONGO.

1486. 1 John, not ſo called till converted to the Faith of Chriſt; and then baptized by this name, in honour of John the 2. King of Portugal, Anno 1490. in whoſe reign this diſcovery and Converſion hapned.

2 Alphonſo, eldeſt ſon of John, zealous in the advancement of the Chriſtian Faith, and for that oppoſed by Panſe Aquitine his younger Brother: whom with a very ſmall Army, zealouſly invocating the aſſiſtance of Jeſus Chriſt, he is ſaid to have vanquiſhed. A Prince, who during his long reign of 50 years did ſeriouſly promote the Goſpel, and cauſed all Idols in his Kingdom to be overthrown: and Churches to be built, and furniſhed in convenient places.

3 Pedro, the ſon of Alphonſo, in whoſe time was founded the Colledge of 28 Canons, in the Cathedral Church of S. Croſſe, in the Town of S. Saviours.

4 Franciſco the ſon of Pedro, who reigned not long.

5 Diego, or James, one of the kinſmen of Franciſco, in whoſe time Religion growing into diſcredit, by the ſcandalous lives of ſome of the Secular Clergie; John the 3d. King of Portugal ſent four Jeſuits thither; who are ſaid to have converted in five moneths 5000 perſons, and to build three Churches.

6 Henry, the brother of Diego, after a ſharp War touching the Succeſſion, in which were ſlain all the Portugals of S. Saviours, except the Prieſts; at laſt ſucceeded: not long after ſlain in battel againſt the Anziques.

7 Alvarez, the ſon of Henry, forced by the Jagges or Giacchi to abandon Congo, and betake himſelf, together with the Portugal Prieſts, to an Iland of the River Zaire: where he continued, till reſtored to his Crown by the aid of Sebaſtian King of Portugal; after by famine he had loſt almoſt all his company.

8 Alvarez II. Son of Alvarez the firſt, who much ſollicited Sebaſtian and Henry Kings of Portugal, to ſend him a new ſupply of Preachers; the old ſtore being waſted in the Ilands of Zaire.

9 Alvarez III. Son of Alvarez the 2. not being born in Lawfull wedlock, was oppoſed by one of his Siſters and a younger Brother, both of lawfull birth; whom he overthrew, Anno 1587. and in the place of the victory founded a Church in honour of the Virgin Mary.

Touching the Forces and Revenues of theſe Kings of Congo, I am able to ſay nothing certain; but that he is a Prince of great power and riches. His Riches viſible by the great treaſures which he draweth from the Mines of ſilver, and of other Metals in his Kingdome; from the trade of Cockle ſhells, the onely money of his Realm, which he keeps wholly to himſelf; the great gain which he makes by Slaves, and from Elephants teeth; the preſents which he hath in way of Tribute, from the King of Angola.

gola. And though it be not easie to say what he layeth up yeerly, because he hath not his Revenues in Coin, as most Princes have; yet it is thought that he is as rich and well furnished with all things, as any Monarch in Africk.

As for his Forces, they consist most in the multitudes of his Subjects; which were they well armed and used to the Wars, would make him formidable to the rest of the African Princes. And though he hath no garrisons or Towns of war, but must trust, if once invaded, unto Castles of bones; yet he doth rest secure enough from all fear of danger, except out of Europe: being able to raise against his Rebels, or any of his invading neighbours; 400000 men out of Bamba onely; all armed according to their manner, and 70000 men at least, well exercised in Wars against the Jagges, from the Province of Batta; besides what may be drawn from his other Provinces.

The Arms of this King are Mars, five swords meeting in Base Sol, Which Coat was taken by Alphonso, the second King in this Catalogue, because in the battell which he fought against, Panse Aquitine; he and his Souldiers saw (or supposed they saw) such a number of shining swords hanging in the Aire, with their points turned directly upon the Enemy.

And so much for Æthiopia Inferior.

OF THE ISLES OF AFRICK.

IN tracing out the Isles of AFRICK, we must observe another course than that which we have taken in Europe and Asia: these Ilands not belonging to any part of the Continent, nor under the command of any great Prince in Africk, in the accompt of whose Estates they might be considered; but being all of them indepedent and sui juris, and therefore to be handled by themselves apart. In our Chorographie of which, and the stories of them, (as far forth as my Authors will direct me in it) I am now to travel; beginning first with those that lie in the Red-Sea, or Indian Ocean, and so proceeding by the Cape of Good Hope, through the main Atlantick Ocean to the Streits of Hercules: that from thence we may have the shorter passage into America, and there σὺν θεῷ χ̣ταῖς Μοναῖς, conclude our journey. These then we will consider either joynt, or separate, as delivered to us by the names of 1 The Æthiopick Islands. 2. Socotara. 3. Madagascar. 4. Mohelia. 5. St. Helens. 6. St. Thomas. 7. The Princes Island. 8. The Gorgades, or Islands of Cape Vird. 9. The Canaries, or the Fortune Islands. 10. Madera. 11. The Island of Holy Port, and 12. The HESPERIDES; of all which, the four first onely are dispersed in the Red-Sea, or Indian Ocean, all the rest scattered up and down in the main Atlantick, on this side of the famous Promontory, called the Cape of good Hope.

1. THE ÆTHIOPICK ISLANDS.

1. THE ÆTHIOPICK ISLANDS, so called, because they lie upon the Coast of Æthiopia Superior, together with all these which lie on the further side of the Cape of Good Hope, or scattered, or dispersed in the Red-Sea, or Indian Ocean (for by those names these mighty Oriental Seas are most commonly known) of which we have spoke more at large when we were in Arabia, and therefore shall say nothing here which concerns the same, but for the Islands of those Seas, such as we comprehend here under the name and notion of Æthiopick Islands, which were onely known unto the Ancients, they are more in number, than in weight: some of them situate within the Streits of the Red-Sea, or the Gulf of Arabia; others without those Streits, in the open Ocean.

1. Of those within the Streits, not reckoning such as lie upon the shores of Arabia Felix, of which we have already spoken; there is 1. Asiarte, or Astrata, now called Caiussa. 2. Ara Palladis, so called from some Altar of that Goddesse, which was there erected. 3. Gypseris, by Pliny called Cyris, but Gypsus in Justinians Code, renowned in former times for its plenty of metals. 4. Macaria, or the fortunate Islands, so called from the fertility and pleasures of it. 5. Orneon, or the Isle of Birds, from the great plenty of Birds which was found therein. 6. Daphnis, by Ptolomy called Daphnine, opposite to a famous Port-Town of the same name in the Continent. 7. Bacchias, so called from Bacchus, unto whom consecrated. 8. Anti-Bacchias, so named, because opposite to it. 9. Acanthine, supposed by some to be now called Anghotina. 10. Insula Diodori, conceived by the Learned to be the same which is now called Babel Mandel, and giveth name unto the Streits, or enterance of the Bay of Arabia, now called the Streits of Babel Mandel. 11. Isidis Insula, memorable for a Temple dedicated to the Godesse Isis; and for a well frequented Port called Portus Isidis; the same which is now called Pascua, as Bel-forest thinketh. 12. Mundi, an Island in the Bay of Avalitos, opposite to a noted Emporie of the same name on the shores of that Bay. Besides all which, we finde in Ptolomy two Islands by the name of Thrisitides; two more, called Chelonitides, or Cathratæ, two others passing by the name of Gomadæo; together with the Isles of Myron, Pan, and that called Insula Magorum: which make up one and twenty in all, but of no note, or observation in the course of businesse, or the conduct of humane affairs.

Those of most note in the open Ocean, which still preserveth the name of the Red-Sea, and is sometimes called the Indian, sometimes the Arabian Ocean, and by a particular name Pelagus Hypadis; are but four in number, that is to say, 1. Myrica, by the Translator of Ptolomy, called Myrsiaca; 2. 3. two Islands called by the name of Menan, a degree more Northwards than the other; and 4. Amicusia, as Stephanus; or Amici Insula, as called by Ptolomy, the most North of all; which I conjecture to be that which is now called by the name of Socotara, the most noted Island of this Sea. I know that many Learned men will have this Island to be that, which Ptolomy and others of the Ancients call Dioscoridis: but because Dioscoridis, by all those Ancients, is made to be an Island of Arabia Felix, and Socotara by all the Moderns affirmed to be an Isle of Africk; I can by no means yield unto it. Again, it is affirmed by our best modern Geographers, that Socotara lieth over against Cape Guardafu, (the Aromata of Ptolomy, as before is said) from which distant not above 30 leagues: which site and distance sort well with Amicusia, but can by no means be applied unto Dioscoridis: Amicusia being placed but two Degrees on the East of that Promontory, in the Longitude of 85. whereas Dioscoridis is situate from it almost four degrees, in the Longitude of 86. and 40 Minutes; besides as great, or greater difference in their several Latitude. So that supposing it for granted, that Socotara is that Island which was anciently called Amicusia; and having cleared my way so far; I now proceed to the Description and affairs thereof.

2. SOCO-

2. SOCOTARA.

2. SOCOTARA, the greateſt Iſland of theſe Shores, is ſituate, as before was ſaid, againſt Cape Guardafu, from which diſtant about 30 leagues; Abadalenry, a ſmall Iſland lying in the middeſt, that is to ſay, 15 leagues from the Cape, and 14 from the Iſland. The length hereof 60 miles, 25 the breadth; divided in the middle by craggy Mountains of great height, the top of which are for the moſt part covered with ſands. The Iſland extreamly vexed with windes, and moleſted with dryneſſe, inſomuch as it is deſtitute of moſt things neceſſary for the life of man; affording nothing towards it of the growth of the Earth, but ſome ſmall quantity of Mill, Dates, and ſome kinde of Fruits. Provided notwithſtanding of ſome good Paſtures for the breed of Cattel, and liberally furniſhed with Medicinal Drugs, as Cinnabar, Dragons bloud, which is a red Gum iſſuing from the bark of a Tree; and the beſt Aloes in the world, from hence called Aloes Socotrina.

The people of an Aſh-colour, very rude and barbarous; their bread for the moſt part of Dates; the reſt of their food being milk and butter; their hair long, and their cloathing onely enough to hide their nakedneſſe. The Women as good Souldiers as the Men, countenancing, or occaſioning the tradition of the Arabians, that they came from the Amazons; And the better Husbands of the two, governing all affairs both within and without. All of them by profeſſion Chriſtians, governed by a Biſhop of their own, with ſome few Prieſts; but ignorant enough of all things which concern Religion. More generally Circumciſed than Chriſtened, though both uſed among them. Jacobites in Sect, as the Abaſſines their Neighbours are; and zealous worſhippers of the Croſſe, which they alwayes hang about their necks. So pertinaciouſly addicted unto Magick, and therein ſo expert, that they bring incredible things to paſſe: not to be weaned from thoſe black Arts, though the Biſhop excommunicate all ſuch as uſe them. They hold opinion that St. Thomas ſuffered ſhipwrack upon their Coaſts, as he ſayled towards India; and that his ſhip being drawn to land, was turned into a Church: but it appeareth neither by their life, or Doctrines, that any Apoſtolical man hath ſet foot amongſt them.

They live for the moſt part in Caves, or Cabbins, of no other ſtuffe than the boughs of Trees; ſo that we are to look for few Towns among them. The principal. 1. Zocotara, giving name to the Iſland, the place of the Kings reſidence, and a Biſhops See. 2. Tamarind, and 3. Deliſha, two Port-Towns, and reaſonably well traded, in the hands of the Natives: as 4 Coro, and 5 Benin, two other Ports, poſſeſſed and garriſon'd by the Portugals. The King hereof a Vaſſal to the King of Fartac, one of the petit Princes of Arabia Felix, not far from Aden; in habit and Religion Turkiſh: Attended on when the Relater was there, An. 1614. by five Camels and five Horſes onely, yet thoſe all in the Iſland.

Nigh hereunto are two Iſlands, (thoſe poſſibly which Ptolomy calleth Monan) the one inhabited by men onely, and the other by women; who do meet at their accuſtomed times to preſerve their kinde, but make no long ſtay; the Aire of the one, being found unhealthy for the conſtitution of the other Sex. The other Iſlands of theſe Coaſts, ſcattered up and down in the Bay of Barbaria, (but not known by any name in the time of Ptolomy) as 1. Don Garcia. 2. the three brethren. 3. St. Brandon. 4. Francis, 5. Maſcadenna. 6. Comoro, and many others of as ſmall note, are not worth the ſpeaking of.

3. MADAGASCAR.

3. MADAGASCAR, the greateſt of the world, is ſituate over againſt Moſambique in Æthiopia Inferior: ſuppoſed to be the Menuthias of Ptolomy, the onely Iſland by him named on the Coaſt of that Countrey; but by the Portugals called the Iſle of St. Lawrence, becauſe diſcovered by them on the day of that Saint, An. 1506. The length hereof affirmed to be 1200 miles, (which is longer than Italy) and 4000 in compaſſe: the middle part hereof oppoſite to the Promontory, which Ptolomy calleth Praſſum, now the Point of Moſambique, from which diſtant 170 miles: in reference to the Heavenly bodies, ſituate from the 17 Degree of Southern Latitude, to the 26th.

The Countrey plentifull of all things neceſſary for the life of man, particularly of Mill, Rice, Hony, Wax, Cotton-wool, Sugars, Stags, Goats, Deer, and other Creatures both wilde and tame; Limons and other cooling fruits, ſome ſtore of Ginger, Cloves, but little different from thoſe of India, red Sanders, Saffron, Amber, and ſome Mines of Silver, Iron, Gold, and Copper: not to ſay any thing of their Beeves and Muttons, ſo large, and good, and ſo good cheap, that for a two-penny Bead, or ſome ſuch trifle, they will ſell Beeves and Sheep of good taſte and bigneſſe: ſuch numbers of Elephants, that they ſend thence yearly great ſtore of Ivory. And amongſt other rare fruits, they have plenty of thoſe, which they call Cocos, or Coconuts; a kinde of Date as big as a Cabbage; the liquor in it, about the quantity of a pint, taſtes like Wine and Sugar; the Kernel big enough to content two men: and like good Ale, it affords not onely meat and drink, but cloathing; as alſo furniture for their houſes, tackle for their ſhips, fewel for the fire, and timber for building; the body of the Tree being ſtrait and high, and towards the top diverſified into many branches. A Countrey far too good for ſo bad a people.

For they, as Travellers report, and moſt Writers teſtifie, are treacherous, inhoſpitable, ignorant, both of Prayers and Feſtivals; deſtitute of the diſtinction of time into years and moneths, not knowing any proper names for the dayes of the week, nor able to reckon above ten; naked, except their privities, which they cover with Cotton; Idolaters in the mid-land parts, and Mahometans upon the ſhores. Commendable onely for their hate to Polygamy, and reſtraining themſelves to one wife; the defiling of the marriage-bed ſeverely puniſhed: but otherwiſe ſo eager upon copulation, that their Boyes at the age of twelve years, and the Girls at ten, think they ſtay too long, if they keep their Virginities any longer; ſome ſome of them, like Quartilla in Petronius Arbiter, begin ſo early, ut nunquam meminerint ſe Virgines fuiſſe, that they remember not the time when they loſt their Maidenheads. Of colour they are black, and of ſtrong compoſition; their breaſts and faces cut and pinkt, to appear more beautifull. Much given unto the wars, well armed according to their Countrey manner, and exceeding good Archers. Amongſt them there are ſome white people, ſaid to come from China.

It hath in it many fair Rivers, but their names I finde not: and at the mouths of thoſe Rivers ſome convenient Havens, into which they admit the forrein Merchants, but ſuffer none to come on land; which the Merchant hath no cauſe to be ſorry for, finding himſelf not ſafe on ſhipboard from their treacherous practiſes. So that we can give but ſmall account of their Towns and Cities, except it be the bare recital of their names; as viz. 1. St. Auguſtines, on a fair Bay in the South-weſt point, as 2. Gangomar in the North-eaſt of it; 3. Antaboſta. 4. Point-Antogil. 5. Santo-Jacobo, 6. Matatana. 7. Angoda. 8. Herendo. 9. Andro-arco; and 10. Roma, or New-Rome, ſo entituled by ſome zealous Romaniſt, in hope to have it thought that the Popes of Rome have got ſome footing in this Iſland.

This Iſland known, but very imperfectly, in the time of Marcus Paulus Venetus, who telleth us many ſtrange things of it: but none more ſtrange than that of the Bird called Ruck, of ſuch incredible ſtrength and bigneſſe, that it could ſnatch up an Elephant as eaſily as a Kite doth a Chicken. Diſcovered by the Portugals in the year 1506, as before was ſaid; and ſince frequented by the Engliſh and Holland Merchants: by whom we are informed no further touching the Eſtate and Affairs thereof, but that it is divided into four parts, under ſo many Kings, each of them in continual Wars againſt one another, but well enough agreed to defend themſelves againſt the coming in of ſtrangers. Yet as ſome ſay, they would be well enough content with an Engliſh Plantation: either in love to our Nation, whom they acknowledge to be more courteous than the Portugals, and not ſo covetous as the Dutch; or elſe by the ſtrength of our ſhipping, and the reputation of our intereſſe in it, to keep off all others.

4. MOHELIA, & 5. MAURITIUS Iſland.

ADjoyning to Madagaſcar, and as it were attending on it, I finde divers Iſlands; ſome on the North-weſt, ſome directly Eaſt. On the North-weſt we have 1. Meottey. 2. Chamroe. 3. Mohelia, and 4. Joanna Iſland; on the Eaſt, 5. the Iſland of Mauritius, and 6. Englands Forreſt. Of theſe Mauritius is the greateſt, but Mohelia the beſt inhabited.

4. MOHELIA ſituate on the North-weſt of Madagaſcar, is about 20 miles in length, and 16 in breadth: abounding in Goats, Hens, Coconuts, Limons, Orenges, Pom-Citrons, Pulſe, Sugar-Canes; ſtore of Fiſh taken on the ſhores, and other neceſſaries. The people of complexion black, of compoſition large and ſtrong; couragious, affable, leſſe treacherous than their Neighbours of Madagaſcar. Of the ſame Language and Religion with thoſe of Arabia, from whence they ſeem to have deſcended; but by reaſon of their commerce and intercourſe with the Portugals, they ſpeak that tongue alſo. The Women of the like complexion, to amend which, and ſeem more lovely, they pink their arms and faces in ſeveral ſhapes. Both ſexes no otherwiſe apparelled than their natural Garments, with ſome Plantane Leaves about their middle to hide their ſhame.

Their Religon that of Mahomet, as before is ſaid: their Prieſts in great eſteem amongſt them; ſo their Temples alſo: which they keep clean and neatly matted, not ſuffering any man to enter with his ſhooes on his feet. Their chief Town Merianguea, at the Weſt-end of the Iſle, ſtrong and well garriſon'd. Heretofore under the command of one King alone; of late divided into two Principalities: one of the laſt Kings leaving two daughters, the one married to a Native, the other to an Arabian Lord.

5. Larger than this, on the Eaſt of Madagaſcar, is the Iſle of MAURITIUS, ſo called by the Hollanders in honour of Maurice Prince of Orange, in whoſe time they firſt ſet footing in it; but by the Portugals called De Cerne, and by ſome Cygnea. In compaſſe about 100 miles; well ſtored with Beeves, Hogs, Goats, moſt ſorts of Fiſh; and liberally endowed with all the bleſſings of Nature, ſweet Waters, moſt delicious Fruits, Woods fit for any uſe both of food and building; plenty of Ebony of all colours, but the beſt coal-black. Yet altogether deſtitute of humane Inhabitants: inſomuch as we may ſay of this, as the Poet of the World, before man was made:

Sanctius his Animal, mentiſque capacius altæ
Deerat adhuc, & quod dominari in cætera poſſet.

Which may be Engliſhed in theſe words:

But yet the Chief, with Supream power poſſeſt,
Was wanting, he that ſhould command the reſt.

Of the ATLANTICK OCEAN, and the Iſles therein.

Having thus looked upon ſuch Iſlands, as lie on the Eaſtern ſide of Africk in the Indian Ocean, let us come homeward by the Cape of Good Hope into the main Atlantick, the greateſt body of waters, which is given to us by one name in any of our Coſmographers, either old or new: A name peculiar to that part of the Weſtern Ocean, which lieth between the Streights of Gibralter, and the Land of Negroes, to which Mount Atlas ſheweth it ſelf with a cloudy top, and gives name to the Seas adjoyning, but generally communicated to all that vaſt Region of waters, which lieth between Spain and Africk, on the one ſide, ſide, and the new world, or America on the other ſide: Extended further by Strabo, and ſome others of the Ancient writers, who not knowing any thing of the interpoſition of America, carry the name of the Atlantick to the ſhores of India, which they make to be terminated by this Sea on the Eaſt & South. Macrobius goeth further in it, affirming poſitively, omnem terram, quæ a nobis colitur, Atlantico mari (quod Oceanum appellamus) circumfundi, that the whole habitable world (ſo far as it was then known, and peopled) was compaſſed round about with the Atlantick Ocean. The like affirmed by Julius Firmicus alſo, by Ariſtotle in his book de Mundo, and by others, who have took it up upon their Authourity. And though ſome parts hereof, which waſh the Weſtern-ſhores of Æthiopia Inferior, be called the Ethiopick Ocean; yet that doth derogate no more from the great extent that is given formerly to the main Atlantick, than that ſome parts of the Mediterranean ſhould be called Mare Ciculum, Sardoum, Tyrrhenum, Creticum, according to the ſhores of thoſe ſeveral places which it paſſeth by, which having ſaid in general of the Sea it ſelf, according to our Method in other places; we next proceed unto the reſt of the African Iſlands, which we named before, but could not meet with but in this Sea, and this ſide of Africa.

6. St. HELENS, and 7. the Iſles of ASCENTION.

And the firſt Iſle we meet with in this ſide of Africk is 6. the Iſle of St. Hellens, ſituate on the Weſt of the Cape of good Hope, and in the 16 degree of the Southernly Latitude, no other Iſland interpoſing betwixt Madagaſcar and it, except thoſe of Don Alvarez, and of Tiſtram de Acugna, near the Cape it ſelf; but of ſo little, note as not worth the naming. The Iſland very high and hilly, and mounting from the Sea with ſo ſteep an aſcent, that the Marriners have amongſt them a merry ſaying, that a man may chuſe whether he will break his heart going up, or his neck coming down.

It was thus called, becauſe diſcovered by the Portugals on St. Helens day; not then inhabited, nor ſince; the King of Spain ſuffering none to dwell there, becauſe it had been an unlawfull receptacle for uncuſtomed Goods; whereby he loſt exceedingly both in power and profit. Stored by the Portugals at the firſt Diſcovery, with Goats, Hogs, Hens, and other Creatures: as alſo with Figs, Limons, Orenges, and the like Fruits, which there thrive exceedingly; and grow all the year long. Intended by them for a Stage in their going and coming to and from the Indies: in which they might refreſh themſelves, and beſtow their ſick, whence they are taken off by the next years Fleet. Uſed for the ſame purpoſe by the Engliſh, and Hollanders, who ſo domineer about the Iſland, that the Portugals dare not Anchor near it, or own their property, if they ſee any ſhipping in the Rode. No buildings in it but the ruins of a little Chappel, deſtroyed by the Hollanders; and ſome fragment of a little Village begun by ſome Portugal Marriners, but demoliſhed by the King of Spain.

7. Northweſt from hence is the Iſle of Aſcenſion, ſo called, becauſe diſcovered on Aſcenſion day: but not inhabited, nor any uſe at all made of for ought I can finde. Of the ſame bigneſſe with St. Helens, 30 miles in compaſſe, and about 700 Engliſh miles diſtant from it.

8. St. THOMAS, 9. the PRINCES Iſland, and 10. the Iſle of ANNIBON.

8. THe Iſland of St. THOMAS is ſituate directly under the Æquator; of Orbicular form, the Diameter being 60 miles, by conſequence the Perimiter, or compaſſe 180. and juſt ſo many from the ſhore of the Realm of Congo. At the firſt diſcovery nothing but a continual Foreſt, now very well inhabited both by Portugals and Negroes; theſe laſt brought hither from the oppoſite Continent: with whom the aire agrees ſo well, that they attain generally to 110 years of age, few of the Portugals unto fifty. The aire ſo vehemently hot, that it ſorteth not with the conſtitution of the Europæans.

The Countrey deſtitute of Wheat, which if ſown here, turneth all to blade, and brings forth no Ear: nor will any fruits here proſper, that have any ſtone in them: but ſo abundant in Sugar-Canes, and well ſtored with Sugars, that 40 ſhips are hence loaded yearly, with that one commodity, for making which, they have here 70 Ingenios, or Sugar-houſes, and in each of them 200 Slaves, in ſome 300 which belong to the works. Six dayes in ſeven theſe Slaves work for their Maſters, and the ſeventh for themſelves; which they ſpend in ſowing and planting their Seeds, Fruits, and Proviſions. Where, by the way, theſe Sugar-works, or Ingenios are a late invention; the boyling and baking of Sugar (as it is now uſed) not being above 200 years old; and the refining of it more new than that: firſt found out by a Venetian in the dayes of our Fathers, who is ſaid to have got above 100000 Crowns by this Invention, and to have left his ſon a Knight; who (though he was no Knight of the Poſt) in very little time brought it all to nothing. Before which Art of boyling and refining Sugars, our Anceſtors not having ſuch luxurious Palates, ſometimes made uſe of rough Sugar, as it came from the Canes; but moſt commonly pleaſed themſelves with honey, more wholſome, becauſe more natural than theſe forced Inventions. But to proceed in the deſcription of this Iſland, in the midſt thereof there is ſaid to be a woody Mountain, over-ſhadowed continually with Clouds: which ſo moiſten the Trees that grow there in a great abundance, that from thence falleth a ſufficient quantity of waters to refreſh their fields, and feed their Sugar-Canes; notwithſtanding the extream heat of the Clime and Aire.

The Religion here allowed of is the Chriſtian onely, firſt preached here by the Portugals, or brought hither with them. The Church hereof governed by a Biſhop, his title the Biſhop of St. Thomas; but his charge extendeth alſo over all the Churches in the Realm of Congo. The principal Citie of it hath the name of Pavoaſan, a Colony of Portugals, conſiſting of 700 Families, or about that number: ſituate on a fine River, and a pleaſant Haven: ſeldom without the company of Portugal Merchants, who bring hither in exchange for Sugars, Wheat, Wine, Cheese, Hides, and other things more necessary than those Sugars, for the life of Man. Took by the Hollanders in the year 1599. but again recovered, or abandoned; and since possessed again by the Hollanders, not as before by force of Arms, but by fraud and falshood, at the same time, and by the same dishonests Arts by which they made themselves Masters of the Castle of Angola before mentioned. And though the Portugal Ambassadour presented this injurions dealing to the States of Holland, yet all the answer he could get at the present was, that their people had done nothing, but what was justified by that clause of the Article, that both side might take and keep, and whatsoever they could within such a time, and though the Ambassadour replied very rationally in behalf of his Countrey, and prest the restitution both of this Island, and that Castle, by all honest Arguments, yet he could then get no reason from them; and whether they have done the Portugals any Justice since, as to those particulars, I am not able to determine.

9. THE PRINCES ISLAND, (Insula Principis in the Latine) so called, for that the Revenues of it were alotted to the Prince of Portugal; is situate in three Degrees of the Northern Latitude. The Countrey very fruitfull for the bigness of it; but not much observable: except it be for being taken for the Hollanders by Julian Clerehagen, Anno 1598. abandoned not long after to the former Owner. Attended, as is fit for a Princes Island, by a Messe of Chaplains, viz. 1. the Isles of St. Matthew. 2. St. Crosse. 3. St. Paul, and 4. St. Conception: and waited on by seven servants (so many Islands near Cape Vero) all in Coats of Green, called by one common name, Barbacene. But because the former four yield no matter of History, and these last seven have no other Inhabitants but Birds; we may be thought, having said thus much of them, to have said enough.

10. South-west hereof, but on the other side of the Line, lieth the Isle of Annobon, (Insula Annaboni as the Latines call it.) So named, because discovered upon New-years-day. Inhabited, and of very good fishing all along the Coasts of it; but that fishing made unsafe by Crocodiles, and other venemous and hurtfull Creatures, which are said to be about the shores in great abundance.

11. The GORGADES, or Isles of CAPE VERD.

11. THe GORGADES, or Islands of Cape Verd (Insulæ Capitis Viridis, as the Latines call them) are 9 in number; called by the last name, because situate over against Cape Verd (Promontorium Capitis Viridis) in the Land of Negroes. Their names 1. St. Anthony. 2. St. Vincent. 3. Buenavista. 4. St. Lucies. 5. Insula Salis, the Isle of Salt. 6. Del Fogo, or the Isle of Fire. 7. St. Nicholas. 8. Maggio, or Majo. 9. S. Jago. Some add to these a tenth, called Brava. Discovered all in the year 1440. by a Geneose called Antonio de Noli, imployed therein at the charges and direction of Henry Duke of Visco, one of the younger sons of King John of Portugal, the first of that name. Of the most little to be said. The principal, and indeed the onely ones which are now inhabited, are Majo, Del Fogo, St. Jago. 1. Majo, is of most repute for a Lake of two leagues long; the waters whereof are by the heat of the Sun turned into Salt, which is here made in great abundance. 2. Del Fogo, is called from the Flakes of fire which it sends forth usually; and fell so thick upon the ship of Sir Antony Sherley when he took the Island, An. 1596. that one might have writ his name in the ashes on the upper Deck, with the top of his finger. 3. The principal of all St. Jago, yet but seven miles long; Rocky and Mountainous, but full of very pleasant Valleys, and well inhabited. The chief Town of it called Riblera, or Ribiera la Grande, a Colony of Portugals; situate on a fine River and a beautifull Haven: taken and sacked by Sir Francis Drake, in the year 1585. and after by Sir Anthony Sherley, An. 1596.

The name of Gorgades, as the more ancient of the two, is almost forgotten. Given to those Islands, as supposed (but I cannot see upon what grounds) to be the seat of the Gorgons; the proper habitation, or dwelling place of Meduſa, and her two fair sisters. This Meduſa said, or rather fabled by the Poets, to have been a Woman of great beauty; Who either for suffering her body to be abused by Neptune, in one of the Temples of Pallas, or for preferring her self before Pallas, had by the said Goddesse, her hair turned into Snakes; and this property annexed unto them, that whosoever looked on her, should be turned into stones: which quality is retained after she was slain, and beheaded by Perseus. Thus and far more fabulously the Poets. The Historians (for as some think, omnis fabula fundatur in historia) relate, how this Meduſa was indeed a Lady of such exceeding beauty, that all men that saw her, were amazed: and of such a wise and subtile brain, that for that cause onely men attributed unto her a Serpents head. She abounding in wealth, and by piracy molesting the Seas of Europe, was invaded by an Army of Grecians, under the leading of Perseus; who in a single combat slew her. Perseus when he plucked off her helmet, admiring that beauty which he had destroyed; cut off her head, and carried it into Greece: where the people beyond measure wondred at the rare composture of her face, and the exceeding beauty of her haire; and are therefore said to have by her head been metamorphosed into stones. Pausanias in his Corinthiacks so reports the story.

12. The CANARIES.

THe CANARIES are in number seven, situate over against the Coast of Libya Interior; so called from Canaria, one of the principal of the number. By Plinie, Ptolomy, and other of the Ancient Writers they were called Insulæ Fortunatæ, the fortunate Islands: and amongst them of greatest note, six being made the fixed place of the first Meridian; removed since to S. Michaels one of the Azores. But those Antients knew but six of them by name, and in the naming of these six do not well agree. By Plinie, whom Solinus followeth, they are said to be 1 Ombrio, 2 Junonia Major, 3 Junonia Minor, Minor. 4. Capraria. 5. Nivaria, and 6. Canaria. By Ptolomy thus reckoned. 1. Aproſitus. 2. Hera (or Junonia) 3. Pluitania. 4. Caſperia. 5. Canaria, and 6. Pincuria. Where we may note alſo to our purpoſe, that though theſe Authours diſagree in all the reſt of the names (Junonia being added by the Tranſlatour unto Ptolomies Hera) yet they agree in making Canaria to be one: which ſheweth that one to be of eminence enough, to give the name of Canarie Iſlands unto all the reſt. Called Fortunate, from an opinion which the ancients had of their fruitfulneſſe, and other excellencies; in which reſpects, ſeveral Countreys, in thoſe times had the names of Macaria, Felix, Fortunate. Now better known by the new names of 1. Canarie. 2. Palma. 3. Tenariffe. 4. Gomero. 5. Ferro. 6. Lanſerotte, and 7. Fuerte Ventura.

1. CANARIA, or Canaria Magna, becauſe the biggeſt of the Cluſter, is ſaid to be 90 miles in compaſſe, and to contain 9000 perſons: Plentifull in Barley, Honey, Wax, Sugar-Canes, Goats, Kine, and Camels; of which, and of their Cheeſe, and the skins of Beaſts they raiſe great profit: but from nothing more than from their Woad (whereof they have very great abundance) uſed by the Clothier for the well colouring of his Cloath. From hence and from the other of theſe Iſlands which bear this name, come the fine ſinging Birds called Canary birds; and ſo do alſo thoſe rich Wines, (the fruit of the Rheniſh Grape tranſplanted) which we call Canaries. A ſort of Wine, if not ſophiſticated and abuſed, which is ſaid to fume leſſe into the head, pleaſe the Palat more, and better help the natural weakneſſe of a cold ſtomack (if moderately and diſcreetly uſed) than any other Wines whatſoever. Brought hence in ſuch abundance to ſupply our luxury, that no leſſe than 3000 Tuns hereof are vended yearly into England and the Netherlands onely.

2. PALMA, one of the leaſt in circuit, but as rich as any; fruitfull in Wine and Sugars, abundantly well ſtored with Cattel, and great plenty of Cheeſe; and therefore made the victualling place of the Spaniſh Fleets, as they paſſe to Braſil, and Peru. This Iſland together with Canary, and Tenariffe, make up the Biſhoprick of the Canaries. One of the Biſhops whereof was that Melchior Canus a Dominican Frier; whoſe works now extant in defence of the Church of Rome, ſhew him to have been a moderate and learned man, and Maſter of a perfect Ciceronian ſtile. The reſidue of the Iſlands are of the Dioceſe of Madera.

3. TENARIFFE, ſomewhat leſſe than the Grand Canarie, but of the ſame fertility and condition with it, is moſt remarkable for a mountain of ſo great an height, that it may be ſeen 90 leagues at Sea, in a fair clear day. Some reckon it 15 miles high, others 15 leagues, and ſome advance it to 60 miles, but with little credit. With truth enough moſt of our Travellers and Geographers hold it to be the higheſt in the whole world. The Form, Pyramidal, in ſhape agreeing to theſe Prodigies of Art and Wonder, the Ægyptian Pyramides. The top whereof ending in a ſharp point, called the Pike of Tenariffe, is ſaid to be ſeldom without ſnow; and therefore probably conceived to be the Nivaria of Pliny.

4. HIERRO, or FERRI inſula, ſo called from the Iron Mines therein, is by ſome thought to be the Pluitalia, by others the Aproſitus of Ptolomy; and ſome again more probably, the Ombrio of Plinie, if this and Ptolomies Pluitalia be not one and the ſame, as for my part I think they be. And it might poſſibly have thoſe names in the Greek and Latine, becauſe it hath in it no freſh waters but what they do receive in ſhowres, and preſerve in Ciſterns: it being added by late Writers (which the ancients knew not) that theſe ſhowres do dayly fall upon them from the Leaves of a Tree, which alwayes covered with a Cloud doth diſtil theſe waters; preſerved in a large Ciſtern underneath the Tree, for the uſe of Man and Beaſt throughout the Iſland.

5. GOMERA, now as civil and well cultivated as any of the reſt, was the moſt barbarous of all when firſt diſcovered: it being here and here onely, the ordinary ſign and evidence of their Hoſpitality, to let their friends lie with their wives, and receive theirs in teſtimony of reciprocal kindneſſe: for which cauſe here as in ſome places of the Indies, the ſiſters ſon did uſe accuſtomably to inherit.

6. LANSAROTE the firſt of theſe Iſlands which was made ſubject to the Crown of Caſtile, diſcovered by ſome adventurous Biſcains, An. 1393. by whom ſpoyled and pillaged, and the poor King and Queen thereof, and 170 of their Subjects of better quality, brought away Priſoners into Spain. On this diſcovery the Kings of Caſtile challenged a propriety in all theſe Iſlands; of which more anon. In this of Lanſarote there was an Epiſcopal See erected by Pope Martin the 5th. removed unto the Iſle of Canary in the time of Ferdinand the Catholick.

7. FUERTE-VENTURA, of the ſame nature with the reſt, ſuppoſed to be the Capraria of Pliny, and the Caſperia of Ptolomy; but not elſe obſervable. Near unto theſe, but not within the name and notion of the Fortunate, or Canary Iſles, are certain others of leſſe note, that is to ſay. 1. Gratioſa. 2. St. Clara. 3. Roca. 4. Lobos. 5. Alegranco; and 6. Infierno, ſmall and of no accompt, nor yielding any matter of obſervation.

The knowledge of theſe Iſlands being loſt with the Roman Empire, they lay concealed and undiſcovered till the year 1330. or thereabouts, when an Engliſh, or as ſome ſay, a French ſhip, diſtreſſed by tempeſt, did in that misfortune fall upon them. Notice whereof being given in the Court of Portugal, in the reign of King Alphonſo the fourth, Lewis de Ordo was deſigned for the conqueſt of them. Who being repulſed at Gomera, Anno 1334. gave the enterprize over, though on this ground the Portugals build their firſt claim unto theſe Iſlands. But the news ſpreading by degrees to the Court of Rome, Clement the ſixt thought fit to make a grant of them to Prince Lewis of Spain, ſon of Alphonſo de la Cerde the right Heir of Caſtile, by the old name of the Fortunate Iſlands; and to aſſiſt him in the conqueſt, cauſed Levies of Souldiers to be made both in France and Italy. Which coming to the ears of the Engliſh Ambaſſadours in the Popes Court, they feared that ſome tranſport had been made of the Britiſh Iſlands (than which they thought that none could better deſerve the name of the Fortunate Iſlands) and in all haſte diſpatched a Poſt to the Court of England, for the preventing of the danger. The people at the time of this first discovery, were so rude and ignorant, that they did eat their flesh raw for want of fire; and tilled, or rather turned up the earth with the horns of Oxen, for want of Ploughs, or Tools of Iron; their Beards they shaved with a sharp flint, and committed the care of their Children to the nursing of Goats. To kill a beast was conceived to be the basest Office that could be possibly put upon them, and therefore commonly imposed on Prisoners and condemned persons; who being thus made the common Slaughter-men, were to live separate from the rest. Their Government by Kings, in each Island one: when at their deaths, they sit up naked in a Cave, propped against the wall with a staff in his hand, and a vessel of Milk fast by him, the better to enable him for his journey to the other world; and leaving him in the Grave with these solemne words, Depart in peace, O thou blessed Soul. The like Funeral they bestowed also on the chief of their Nobles. Yet was not the Government in those times so purely Regal, but that they had a Common Councel (as it were) out of all the Islands, consisting of 130 persons: who did not onely direct in Civil matters, but in Sacred also, prescribing to the people both their Faith and Worship; and for their pains were priviledged with the first nights lodging with every Bride, which the Husband was to offer to some one of them.

But to return unto the Story, nothing being done by Lewis de la Cerde, in pursuance of the Popes Donation, it hapned in the year 1393. that some Adventurers of Biscay, setting out certain Ships from Sevil to seek their Fortunes at Sea, fell amongst these Islands. And having pillaged Lanzarote as before was said, and observed the number, greatnesse, and situation of all the rest; returned into Spain, with great store of Wax, Hides, and other commodities, with which those Islands did abound: extremely welcom to King Henry, who then reigned in Castile, and did intend from that time forwards to possesse himself of them. By Catharine the Dowager of this King Henry, during the minority of John the 2d. the Conquest of them was committed to John of Betancourt, an adventurous French-men, (conditioned he should hold them under the soveraignty of the Crown of Castile) by whom four of the Islands were subdued, though he himself perished in the action, An. 1417. Young Betancourt the son, not able to subdue Canary, to which most of the Islanders had retired; fortified himself as well as he could in the Isle of Lanzarote, and took unto himself the title of King: which he left not long after to one Menault; in whose time the Islands under his command received the Gospel, and had a See Episcopal in the Isle of of Lanzarote. But this new King making money by the sale of his subjects, (as well of the new Christians, as the old Idolaters) complaint was made of him in the Court of Castile; and Pedro Barva de Campos with three ships of war is sent against him: with whom unable to contend, with the good leave and liking of the King of Castile, he sold his interesse in these Islands to one Fernando Peres a Knight of Sevil, who by the wealth and power of that City made good his purchase, and left it unto his Successors. But we must know that the posterity of this Peres enjoyed the four lesser Islands onely; Canaria it self, Tenariffe, and the Isle of Palmes, being under the command of their own Kings. And so continued till the reign of Ferdinand the Catholick, who in the year 1483. under the conduct of Alphonso of Muxica, and Pedro de Vera, two noble Captains, became master of them; and translated the Episcopal See from Lanzarote to the Great Canary. So that although the Portugals claim these Islands in right of the first discovery, yet the possession hath gone always with the Crown of Castile. Divided at the present into two Estates, (but the one subordinate to the other) Gomera, Lanzarote, and Hierra, being in the hands of some private Subjects, those which belong unto the Crown, being Canaria, Palma, Tenariffe, and Fuerte-Ventura, are said to yield yearly to the King 50000 Ducats; the Seat of Justice being fixed in the Isle of Canaria, unto which all the rest resort as they have occasion.

13. MADERA, & 14. HOLY PORT.

13. MADERA, the greatest Island of the Atlantick, is situate in the Latitude of 32. over against the Cape of Cantin in Morocco; in compasse 140 miles, some adde 20 more. So called of the wildernesse of Trees there growing, when first discovered; the Portugals naming that Madera, which the Latins call Materia, and we English Timber: with which the Isle was so overgrown, that the best way to cleer it and make it habitable, was by consuming them with fire; which raged so horribly for the time, that the people imployed in it were fain to go far into the Sea to refresh themselves. But the Husbandry was well bestowed; the Ashes making so good compost to enrich the soil, (as burning the Turf of barren lands, and ploughing the Ashes of it, on some grounds with us) that at the first it yielded sixty-fold increase. And though the first vertue of that experiment be long since decayed, yet still it yieldeth thirty-fold in most places of it; fruitful withal of a kind of Plant used in dying Clothes, which is hence called Mader; and of Sugar Canes in such a wonderful manner, that for a time the fifths of the Sugars herein made amounted yearly to 60000 Arnobes; now not half so much. The Isle wonderfully fruitfull also of Honey, Wax, rich Fruits, and the choicest Wines; the Slips whereof were brought from Candy, bringing forth here more grapes than leaves, and Clusters of two, three, and four spans long. The Hils well stored with Goats, the Plains with numerous Herds of Cattel; the Woods with Peacocks, Thrushes, Pigeons: these last so ignorant of the injury which Man might do them, that at the first coming of the Portugals thither, they would suffer themselves to be taken up; but now have wit enough to keep out of danger.

The whole Island in all parts well watered, having besides many pleasant Springs, eight handsome Riverets, wherewith the Earth refresh'd and moistned, yields the sweeter Herbage; which otherwise by reason of the heat of the Air (never very cool) might not be so nourishing. The chief City of it hath the name of Fouchial, the See of an Archbishop, and the Seat of Justice: known to the Romans by the name of Junonis, or Antolala, as many learned men conceive, and again forgotten; it was of later times discovered discovered by one Machan, an Englisb-man, who was cast upon it by a tempest, *An.*1344. who burying there his wife, or some other woman which he had in his company, writ on her tomb his name, and coming thither, with the cause thereof; which gave the Portugals occasion to look further after it. Desolate, and unpeopled at the first discovery, now exceeding populous: and of no small advantage to the Crown of Portugal, to which first united, *An.*1420. under the conduct of Prince Henry before mentioned.

14. INSULA PORTUS SANCTI, or the Isle of HOLY-PORT, is distant from Madera about 40 miles; neighbouring the Coasts of Mauritania Tingitana, and therefore probably conceived to be the Cerne of Ptolomie. So called, because discovered by some Portugal-Mariners (by the direction and encouragement of the said P. Henry) on All-hallows day, *An.*1428. Desolate and unhabited at the first discovery, but now very well peopled. In compasse about 15 miles; well stored with Corn and Fruits, great shoals of Fish upon their shores, plenty enough of Beeves and Goats: but such abundance of Conies (bred of one Doe Coney brought thither when great with young) that the Inhabitants were no lesse pestered with them in these later times, than the Baleares were of old; insomuch that they were out of hope to withstand the mischief, or repair the damages sustained by them. A little Island not far off, breedeth nothing else. The chief Town of it Porto-Santo, or Holy-Port, seated on a convenient Rode, but a sorry Haven; was taken by Sir Amias Preston, in our wars with Spain, An.1596. but being sacked and spoiled, was again abandoned. In former times called Cerne, as before was said, and reckoned for the most remote Colony which the Carthaginians or Phœnicians had in the Western Ocean; beyond which they conceived the Sea to be unnavigable, (proved otherwise by Hanno's voyage) choked with mud and weeds. Called therefore Cerne ultima (Æthiopum populos alit ultimâ Cernè) by Festus Rufus, and others of the Antient writers.

1. THE HESPERIDES.

15. THE HESPERIDES, by Pliny and Pomponius Mela, are said to be two in number, situate in the Atlantick Seas, but we finde not where. Much memorized and chanted by the Antient Poets, for giving a safe and pleasant habitation to the daughters of Atlas (which they call by the name of Hesperides also); the curious Gardens by them planted, and the Golden Apples of it which were kept by a Dragon, and took hence by Hercules. But the Historians remove these Gardens out of the Sea, into the main Land of Africk, and fix them in Cyrene, where already spoken of. Which notwithstanding, it is granted that there were antiently some Islands in the Atlantick Ocean, noted by this name, and said to be exceeding fruitful of their own accord: and therefore probably the same which Plutarch in the Life of Sertorius calleth Insulæ Atlanticæ, and describes them thus. "Αι δύο μὲν εισὶ, λίαν ὀλίγῳ πλείοσιν σταδίοις πορθμῷ διακεκριμέναι, &c. They are (saith he) two Islands parted by "a narrow Streit of the Sea, distant from the main land of Africk 10000 furlongs (which in our ac- "compt cometh to 1250 miles) called also the Isles of Blessed Souls, and the Fortunate Ilands. They have "rain there very seldom, but a fine sweet Dew, which makes the Earth exceeding fruitful both for tillage "and planting fruits, which sometimes grow without any care or labour of the husband-man; sufficient "by their plenty and sweetnesse to maintain the people, much given to ease, and hardly troubling them- "selves with any businesse. The Air for the most part very temperate, never extreme in any changes of "the season; the rigor of the Northern, and Eastern winds, being by so long a passage thither very "much abated; as on the other side the Western and South-Eastern winds do much refresh it with such "Mists, as they bring from the Sea, to the great comfort of the people. A place so generally sweet, that "the Barbarous people in it have a constant and approved opinion, that these should be the Elysian "Fields, the seats of the blessed souls departed, described by Homer: with the report whereof Sertorius "was so highly taken, that he intended to have given over the pursuit of the Civil wars, and there to "spend the rest of his dayes in peace and happinesse; which he had done, if the Cilicians, men accustomed "unto spoil and rapine, had not took him off. So far and to this purpose Plutarch. But what these Islands are, and where now to be found, (for in regard of their great distance from the Coast of Africk, they cannot be the Fortunate Islands spoken of before) I cannot easily determine: unlesse we should conjecture, as Ortelius doth, that they are the Islands of Cuba and Hispaniola, on the Coasts of America; to the Storie and Chorographie whereof we are now to hasten.

And so much for the Isles of Africk.

GOSMOGRAPHIE,

LIB. IV. PART II.

CONTAINING THE

CHOROGRAPHY & HISTORIE OF AMERICA,

And all the Principal Kingdoms, Provinces, Seas, and Isles of it.

Of AMERICA.

AMERICA, the fourth and last part of the World, is bounded on the East with the Atlantick Ocean, and the Vergivian Seas, by which parted from Europe, and Africa; which Seas, the Marriners call Mare del Nort; on the West, with the Pacifique Ocean, by the Marriners called Mare del Zur, which divides it from Asia; on the South, with some part of Terra Australis Incognita, from which separated by a long, but narrow Streit, called the Streits of Magellan; the North, bounds of it hitherto not so well discovered, as that we can certainly affirm it to be Island, or Continent.

It is called by some, and that most aptly, THE NEW WORLD: New, for the late Discovery; and World, for the vast greatnesse of it. The most usual, and yet somewhat the more improper name, is that of America; because Americus Vespacius an Adventurous Florentine, discovered a great part of the Continent of it. But since the first light he had to finde out those parts, came from the directions and example of Columbus, who first led the way; and that Sebastian Cabot touched at many places, which Americus Vespacius never saw: it might as properly have been called Columbana, Sebastiana, or Cabotia. The most improper name of all, and yet not much lesse used than that of America, is, the West-Indies: West, in regard of the Western situation of it, from these parts of Europe; and Indies, either as mistook for some part of India, at the first Discovery, or else because the Sea-men used to call all Countreys, if remote and rich, by the name of India.

Many are of opinion, but rather grounded on conjectural presumptions, than Demonstrative Arguments, that America was known long before our late Discoveries. Their Reasons drawn. 1. From the Doctrine of the Antipodes, which being maintained by many of the ancient Writers, inferreth (as they think) a knowledge of these parts of the world, which are opposite to us. But unto this it may be answered, that the knowledge of the Antipodes amongst the ancients was by supposition, at the best by Demonstration onely, and not in fact; or thus, that it was known that there were Antipodes, but the Antipodes were not known. 2*ly*. It is said that Hanno, a Noble Carthaginian, discovered a great Island in the Western Ocean, and after a long voyage returned home again, not wanting Sea-room, but Victuals, as he told the Senate. But he that writ the actions of Hanno in this famous voyage, (which some conceive to be Hanno himself) informs us that he sayled not Westwards, but more towards the South: and therefore this great Island, whatsoever it was, (whether Madera, or some one of the Fortunate Islands, I determine not) could not be America. 3*ly*. It is alledged that Plato in his Timæus speaks of a great Island of the Atlantick Ocean, Lybiam & Africam adæquans (as out of him Tertullian hath it) as big as Lybia, and Africk properly so called: which he confesseth to be drowned long before his time, and therefore possibly never extant but in some mens fancies. 4*ly.* That Aristotle in the book de Mundo (if that book be his) speaks of an Island very fruitfull, and full of navigable Rivers; discovered by the Carthaginians, and by them forbidden to be planted upon pain of death. Which Island being affirmed by that Author, to be Multorum dierum itinere à Gradibus remota, hath made some men conceive it to be this America, or some of the great Islands of it. As if it might not be as well one of the Azores, or perhaps Madera; or some other of the Islands in the Road of Hannos voyage. Certain I am, that one of the best friends the Phœnicians have, who would not gladly lose such an opportunity of enabling their performances in Navigation, (could any thing be built upon it) doth wave the whole Relation as of doubtfull credit; and knoweth of no such place as is there described by that Author, whosoever he were. 5*ly.* Some have produced these Verses of Seneca, to inferre a knowledge of this Countrey amongst the ancients, viz.

Veniunt annis secula seris,
Quibus Oceanus vincula rerum
Laxet, & ingens pateat tellus,
Novosque Typhis detegat Orbes,
Nec sit Terris ultima Thule.

Which may be Englished in these words:

In the last dayes an age shall come,
Wherein the all-devouring Fome Shall lose its former bounds, and shew
Another Continent to view.
New-worlds, which Night doth now conceal,
A second Typhis shall reveal;
And frozen Thule shall no more
Be of the Earth the furthest Shore.

But this Argument can bring no necessary, nor so much as a probable inference, of any such Continent as this, then known to Seneca: the Poet in that Chorus shewing as well the continual dangers, as the possible effects of Navigation; that there might be, not that there were more Lands discovered, than those formerly known. 6*ly.* Some hold this Countrey to be the Land of Ophir, to which Solomon is said in the holy Scriptures to have sent for Gold. But Ezion-Geber, which is there also said to be the station where his Navy lay, was situate in the bottom of the Red-Sea, or Bay of Arabia: whereas if he had sent this way, his shipping must have lain at Joppa, or some other Port of the Mediterranean, and from thence set forwards through the Streits of Gibraltar, and so plainly Westward. 7*ly.* Finally, in the History of Wales writ by David Powel, it is reported that Madoc the son of Owen Gwinedth Prince of Wales, of purpose to decline ingaging in a Civil war raised in that Estate, in the year 1170. put himself to Sea; and after a long course of Navigation, came into this Countrey: where after he had left his men, and fortified some places of advantage in it, he returned home for more supplies, which he carried with him in ten Barks; but neither he nor they looked after by the rest of that Nation. To which some add, that here is still some smattering of the Welch, or British tongue, to be found amongst them; as that a Bird with a white head is called Pengwin, and the like: in which regard, some sorry Statesmen went about to entitle Queen Elizabeth unto the Soveraignty of these Countreys; Others more wise, disswaded from that vain Ambition, considering that Welch-men, as well as others, might be cast upon those parts by force of Tempest; and easily implant some few words of their own among the people there inhabiting. And though I needs must say for the honour of Wales, that they have more grounds for what they say, than those which look for this new World in the Atlantis of Plato, the Atlantick Islands of Aristole and Plutarch, or the Discoveries of Hanno the Carthaginian: yet am I not so far convinced of the truth thereof, the use of the Marriners Compasse being not so ancient (without which such a voyage could not be performed;) but that I may conclude with more satisfaction, that this Countrey was unknown to the former ages.

But now, as Mela the Geographer said once of Britain, then newly conquered by the Romans; Britannia qualis sit, qualesque progeneret, mox certiora & magis explorata dicentur; quippe jam diu clausam aperit ecce Principum maximus (he means Claudius Cæsar) nec indomitarum modo sed & incognitarum ante se Gentium Victor: so may we say of America, on these late discoveries. What kinde of Countrey it is, and what men it produceth, we do, and shall know more certainly than in former times; since those puissant Kings of Spain have laid open all the parts thereof, inhabited not onely by unvanquished, but even unknown Nations. For God remembring the promise of his Son, that his Gospel before the end of the World should be preached to all Nations; stirred up one Christopher Colon, or Columbus, born at Nervy, in the Signeury of Genoa, to be the instrument for finding out those parts of the World, to which the sound of the Gospel had not yet arrived. Who being a man of great abilities, and born to undertake great matters, could not perswade himself (the motion of the Sun considered;) but that there was another World to which that glorious Planet did import both his light and heat, when he went from us. This World he purposed to seek after, and opening his Design to the State of Genoa, An. 1486. was by them rejected. On this repulse, he sent his brother Bartholomew to King Henry the seventh of England; who in his way hapned unfortunately into the hands of Pirats, by whom detained a long while, but at last inlarged. As soon as he was set at liberty, he repaired to the Court of England; where his Proposition found such a chearfull entertainment at the hands of the King, that Christopher Columbus was sent for to come thither also. But God had otherwise disposed of his rich purchase. For Christopher, not knowing of his brothers imprisonment, nor hearing any tidings from him, conceived the offer of his service to have been neglected; and thereupon made his desires known at the Court of Castile: where after many delayes, and six years attendance on the businesse; he was at last furnished with three ships onely, and those not for Conquest, but Discovery. With this small strength he sayled on the main Ocean more than 60 dayes, yet could see no Land, so that the discontented Spaniards began to mutiny; and partly out of scorn to be under the command of a Stranger, partly desirous to return, would not go a foot forwards. Just at that time it hapned, that Columbus did discern the Clouds to carry a clearer colour, than they did before: and probably conceiving that this clearnesse proceeded from some nigh habitable place, restrained the time of their expectation within the compasse of three dayes; passing his word to return again, if they did not see the Land within that time. Toward the end of the third day, one of the Company called Rodrigo de Triane (he deserves to have his name recorded, being no otherwise rewarded for such joyfull news) descried fire; an evident Argument that they drew near unto some shore. The place discovered was an Island on the Coast of Florida, by the Natives called Guahanani; by Columbus St. Saviours; now counted one of the Lucaios. Landing his men, and causing a Tree to be cut down, he made a Crosse thereof; which he erected near the place, where he came on Land; and by that Ceremony took possession of this NEW WORLD, for the Kings of Spain, Octob. 11. An. 1492. Afterwards he discovered, and took possession of Hispaniola; and with much treasure, and content, returned towards Spain: Preferred for this good service by the Kings themselves, first to be Admiral of the Indies, and afterwards to a Coat of Arms, for Castile and Leon, Columbus hath gotten a NEVV WORLD; and in conclusion unto the title of Duke De la Vega, in the Isle of Jamaica. News of this fortunate Discovery being sent to Pope Alexander the 6. by the Kings of Castile, he very liberally bestowed upon them all those Countreys, which they already had, or should afterwards discover in the Western world; advising them to use their diligence and indeavours for converting those people to the Faith, which was done accordingly. For the next year Columbus being furnished with 18 ships for more Discoveries, and his brother Bartholomew made Governour of the Countreys discovered by him, they took along with them one Bayl, a Benedictine Monk, as the Popes Vicar General, accompanied with the learned Clarks, which were to be assistants to him in the converting of that people to the Christian Faith. In this second voyage he discovered the Islands of Cuba and Jamaica, and built the Town of Isabella (afterwards better known by the name of Domingo) in Hispaniola; from whence for some severities used against the mutinous Spaniards, he was sent prisoner into Castile, but very honourably entertained, and absolved from all the Crimes imputed to him. In the year 1497. he began his third voyage, in which he discovered the Countries of Paria, and Camana, on the firm Land, with the Islands of Cubagna, and Margarita, with many other Islands, Capes, and Provinces, which shall be touched upon particularly in their several places. In the year 1500. he began his fourth and last voyage in the course whereof, coming to Hispaniola he was unworthily denied enterance into the Citie of Domingo, by Nicholas de Ovendo, the then Governour of it; after which scouring along the Sea-Coasts, as far as Nombre de Trias, but adding little to the fortune of his former discoveries, he returned back to Cuba, and Jamaica, and from thence to Spain, where about six years after (that is to say, An. 1506.) he departed this life, and was honourably interred at Sevil, where to this day remaineth this Epitaph on his Tombe, bald in it self, and otherwise exceeding short of so great a merit, of which I must tell you by the way, that the Philip, whom the Versifier (I do not say the Poet) called Philippus Hispanus, should rather have been called Philippus Austriagus, or Philippus Burgundus, as being meant of that Philip of Austria, Duke of Burgundy, who had then married Joan, Sole Daughter and Heir of the Kings of Spain, and after the death of Isabella succeeded in the Realm of Castile, or else the Epitaph must be written long after his death, and meant of Philip the 2. Son of Charles the fifth, who was not born untill the year 1527. and came not to the Crown above 20 years after. Now for this Epitaph, such as it is, it is this that followeth:

Christophorus genuit quem Genoa Clara Columbus,
(Nomine percussus quo nescio) primus in Altum
Descendens Pelagus, solem versusque cadentem
Directo cursu, nostro hactenus addita Mundo Litora detexi, Hispano potitura Philippo:
Audenda hinc aliis plura, & majora relinquens.

Which may be Englished in these words:

I Christopher Columbus, whom the Land
Of Genoa first brought forth, first took in hand
I know not by what diety incited
To scoure the Western Seas, and was delighted
To seek for Countreys never known before.
Crown'd with successe, I first descried the shore
Of the New World, then destined to sustain
The future yoke of Philip Lord of Spain,
And yet I greater matters left behinde
For men of more means and a braver minde.

Dying he left two Sons behinde him, of which the youngeſt called Ferdinand died unmarried, the eldeſt called Diego, ſucceeded his Father in the Admiralty of the Indies, and the Dukedom of Vega, and married Marie of Toledo, Daughter of Ferdinand Duke of Alva; but (having as it ſeemeth) no iſſue by her, he ſpent the greateſt part of his Eſtate in founding the Library at Sevil, ſpoken of before, which he furniſhed with 12000 Volumes, and endowed with a liberal revenue to maintain the ſame. But though his Family be extinct, yet his Fame ſhall live, renowned to all poſterities, as the firſt diſcoverer of this new world, and conſequently the greateſt and moſt Fortunate advancer of the Spaniſh Monarchy, though in his life time ſo maligned by moſt part of the Spaniards, that Bobadilla being ſent into thoſe parts for redreſſe of grievances, loaded him with Irons, and returned him priſoner into Spain. Nor did they onely ſtick after his death, to deprive him of the honour of this Diſcovery (attributing it to I know not what Spaniard, whoſe Cards and Deſcriptions he had ſeen) but in his life would often ſay that it was a matter of no ſuch difficulty to have found theſe Countreys; and that if he had not done it when he did, ſome body elſe might have done it for him. Whoſe peeviſhneſſe he confuted by this modeſt artifice, deſiring ſome of them, who inſolently enough had contended with him touching this Diſcovery, to make an Egg ſtand firmly upon one of its ends. Which when they could not do upon many Trials, he gently bruizing one end of it, made it ſtand upright; letting them ſee without any further reprehenſion, how eaſie it was to do that thing which we ſee another do before us.

But to proceed, Columbus having thus led the way, was ſeconded by Americus Veſpuſius, an adventurous Florentine, imployed therein by Emanuel King of Portugal, An. 1501. on a deſign of finding out a nearer way to the Moluccaes, than by the Cape of good Hope, who though he paſſed not further than the Cape of St. Auguſtines in Braſil, without ſo much as having a ſight of the great River de la Plata, which waſheth the South-Ports of that Countrey; yet from him (to the great injury and neglect of the firſt Diſcoverer) the Continent, or main Land of this Countrey, hath the name of America; by which ſtill known, and moſt commonly called. To him ſucceeded John Cabot, a Venetian, the Father of Sebaſtian Cabot, in behalf of Henry the ſeventh of England: who diſcovered all the North-East Coaſts hereof, from the Cape of Florida in the South, to New-found land, and Terra di Laboradar in the North, cauſing the American Roytelets to turn Homagers to that King and the Crown of England. Followed herein by divers private Adventurers and undertakers, out of all parts of Europe, bordering on the Ocean. Ferdinand Magellanus was the firſt that compaſſed the whole world, and found the South paſſage, called Fretum Magellanicum to this day: followed herein by Drake, and Cavendiſh, of England. Frobiſher, and Davies attempted a Diſcovery of the North-weſt paſſage; Willoughy and Burroughs of the North-eaſt. So that according to that elegant ſaying of the Learned Verulam, in his Advancement of learning, this great building the world, had never thorow-lights made in it till theſe our dayes: by which as almoſt all parts of Learning, ſo in eſpecial this of Navigation, and by conſequence of Coſmography alſo, hath obtained an incredible proficiency in theſe later times.

For in the Infancy and firſt Ages of the world, (pardon me I beſeech you this ſhort, but not unprofitable diſgreſſion) men lived at home, neither intent upon any Forreign Merchandiſe, nor inquiſitive after the lives and Fortunes of their Neighbours: or in the language of the Poet,

Nondum caſa ſuis peregrinum ut viſeret Orbem,
Montibus, in liquidas Pinus deſcenderat undas.

The Pine left not the Hils on which it ſtood,
To ſeek ſtrange Lands, or rove upon the Flood.

But when the Providence of God had inſtructed Noah how to build the Ark, for the preſervation of himſelf and his children from the general Deluge: the Poſterity, which deſcended from him, had thereby a pattern for the making of Ships and other Veſſels (perfected in more length of time) whereby to make the waters paſſable, and maintain a neceſſary intercourſe betwixt Nation and Nation. 'Tis true, the Heathen Writers which knew not Noah, attribute the invention of ſhipping to ſundry men, according to ſuch informations or traditions, as they had received: Strabo, to Minos King of Crete; Diodorus Siculus, to Neptune, who was therefore called the God of the Seas; and Tibullus, to the people of Tyre, a Town indeed of great wealth and traffick, and the moſt famous Empory of the elder times; ſaying

Prima ratem ventis credere docta Tyrus.

The Tyrians firſt the Art did finde
To make Ships travell with the winde.

And queſtionleſſe the Tyrians, and the reſt of the Phœnicians, enjoying a large Sea-coaſt, and many ſafe and capacious Havens, being in theſe times moſt ſtrong at Sea, and making ſo many fortunate Navigations into moſt parts of the then known World; might give the Poet ſome good colour for his affirmation. From the Phœnicians, the Egyptians (their next neighbours) might derive the Art of Navigation; though being an ingenous people, they did add much to it. For whereas the firſt Veſſels were either made of the body of ſome great Tree, made hollow by the Art of man; or elſe of divers boards faſhioned into a Boat, and covered with the ſkins of Beaſt; (ſuch as are ſtill in uſe amongſt theſe Americans:) the Phœnicians brought them firſt into ſtrength, and form; but the Egyptians added Decks unto them. By Danaus King of Egypt wen he fled from his brother Rameſes, the uſe of ſhipping was firſt brought amongſt the Grecians: who before that time knew no other way of croſſing their narrow Seas, but on Beams or Rafters tied to one anorher. Nave primus ab Egypto Danaus aavenit, ante enim Ratibus navigabatur, as it is in Plinie: where we may ſee the true and genuine difference betwixt Ratis, and Navis; though now both uſed indifferently for all ſorts of ſhipping. Amongſt the Grecians, thoſe of Crete were the ableſt Sea-men; which gave occaſion to Ariſtotle to call Crete the Lady of the Sea: and to Strabo to make Minos the Inventor of Ships. In following time, the Carthaginians, being a Colony of Tyre, were moſt conſiderable in this kinde; and by the benefit of their ſhipping much diſtreſſed the Romans. But ſo it hapned (as all things do and muſt concur to Gods publick purpoſes in the alteration of Eſtates) that a Tempeſt ſeparating a Quinqueremis or Gallie of five banks of Oars, from the reſt of the Carthaginian Fleet; caſt it on the ſhore of Italy: by which accident the Romans learning the Art of Ship-wrights, ſoon became Maſters of the Sea. That France, and Spain were taught the uſe of ſhipping by the Greeks, and Phœnicians; is a thing paſt queſtioning: Marſeilles in the one being a Phocean, and Gades in the other a Tyrian Colony. As for the Belgians. and the Britains, it is probable that they firſt learnt it of the Romans (though formerly they had ſome way to tranſport themſelves from one ſhore to the other.) For Cæſar telleth us of the Belgæ, Ad eos Mercatores minimè commeant, that they were not at all viſited by Forraign Merchants. And the ſame Cæſar found the Seas betwixt France, and Britain, ſo ill furniſhed with Veſſels; that he was fain to make ſhips to tranſport his Army: Singulari Militum ſtudio circiter ſexcentas & duodetriginta Naves invenit, as his own words are.

Having thus brought Navigation to the greateſt height which it had in thoſe days; let us look back again on the Inventors of particular Veſſels, and the Tackle unto them belonging. That the Phœnicians firſt invented open Veſſels, and the Egyptians Ships with Decks, hath been ſaid before: and unto them alſo is referred the Invention of Gallies, with two Banks of Oars upon a ſide; which kinde of Veſſels grew ſo large in the courſe of time, that Ptolomy Philopater is ſaid to have made a Gallie of 50 banks. Great Ships of burden, called Cirœra, we owe to the Cypriots; Cock boats, or Skiffs (Scaphas) to the Illyrians, or Liburnians: Brigantines, (Celoces) to the Rhodians; and Frigots or light Barks, (Lembos) unto the Cyrenians. The Phaſelis, and Pamphyli (which we may render Men of War) were the invention of the Pamphylians, and the Inhabitants of Phaſelis, a Town of Lycia, in Aſia Minor. As for Tackle, the Bœotians invented the Oar; Dædalaus, and his ſon Icarus, the Maſts and Sails: Which gave occaſion to the Poets to feign, that flying out of Crete, they made wings to their bodies; and that Icarus ſoaring too high, melted the Wax which faſtened his wings unto his ſhoulders, and thereby periſhed; the truth being, that preſuming too much on this new invention, he ran himſelf upon a Rock, and was caſt away. For Hippagines, veſſels for the tranſporting of Horſe, we are indebted to the Salaminians; for grapliug hooks, to Anarcharſis; for Anchors, to the Tuſcans; and for the Rudder, rielm, or Art of Steering, to Typhis the chief Pilot in the famous Argo: who noting that a Kite, when ſhe flew, guided her whole body by her Tail; effected that in the devices of Art, which he had obſerved in the works of Nature. By theſe helps ſome great Voyages were performed in the elder times; the greateſt, thoſe of Jaſon, Ulyſſes, and Alexander, with the Fleets of Solomon, and the Egyptian Kings. Of theſe, Jaſon and his companions, ſayled in the ſhip called Argo, through the Euxine Sea, and part of the Mediterranean; Ulyſſes, through the Mediterranean onely; ſmall gullets, if compared with the Ocean. Alexander's journey ſo famouſed, and accounted then ſo hazardous, was but ſayling down the River Indus, and four hundred furlongs into the Ocean. And for the Fleets of Solomon, and the Kings of Egypt, it is very apparent, that they went with great leiſure, and crawled cloſe by the ſhore-ſide: otherwiſe it had been impoſſible to have conſumed three whole years in going from Ezion-Geber into India, and returning again; which was the uſual time of theſe voyages, as appeareth in 1 King. 10. 22. After the fall of the Roman Monarchy, the moſt potent States by Sea in the Mediterranean, were the Genoſe, and Venetians; in the Ocean the Engliſh, and the Hanſ-towns; neither of which ever attempted any great diſcoveries.

But in the year 1300. one Flavio of Malphi in the Realm of Naples, found out the Compaſſe, or Pixis Nautica, conſiſting of 8 winds onely, the four principal, and four collateral: And not long after, the people of Bruges, and Antwerp, perfected that excellent invention; adding 24 other ſubordinate windes or points. By means of this excellent Inſtrument, and withall by the good ſucceſſe of Columbus, the Portugals, Eaſtwards; the Spaniards, Weſtward; and the Engliſh, Northwards; have made many glorious and fortunate Expeditions: which had been utterly impoſſible to have been performed, and had been fooliſhly undertaken, when that help was wanting. I know there hath been much pains taken by ſome learned men, to prove the uſe of the Mariners Compaſſe to be far more antient, than is now commonly pretended. Fuller, a very learned and induſtrious man, but better skilled in the Hebrew tongue, than the Philologie of the Greeks, and Latines, will have it known to Solomon, and by him taught unto the Tyrians and Phœnicians (the moſt famous Sea-men of old times): but he brings no Argument of weight to make good the cauſe. Nor is it poſſible that ſuch an excellent invention, ſo beneficial to the common good of all mankind, ſhould have been forgotten and diſcontinued, for the ſpace of more than 2000 years; if ever the Tyrians, and Phœnicians had been maſters of it: who could not poſſibly conceal it (had they been ſo minded) from the Common-Mariners, or they not have communicated it for gain, or deſire of glory, to the Greeks, and Romans, under whom ſucceſſively they lived. As little moment do I finde in ſome other Arguments, as that the Lapis Heraclius of the Antient writers, or the Verſoria of Plautus, ſhould be by them intended of the Mariners Compaſſe. For plainly the Verſoria of Plautus, is no other than that peece of tackle, which our Mariners now call the Bolin; by which they uſe to turn their Sails, and fit them to the change of every wind. And ſo much doth appear by the Poet himſelf, in the Comedie which he cals Mercator; ſaying, Hinc ventus nunc ſecundus eſt, cape modo Verſoriam. So called from Verſo, to turn often; or from Verſum the firſt Supine of Verto: whence Velum vertere is a common phraſe amongſt the Latines, uſed for the ſhifting of the Sail as the winde doth vary. As for the Load-ſtone, it is called indeed Heraclius Lapis, Ἡρακλεὼς λίθος by the Greeks: not becauſe Hercules Tyrius, whom the Phœnicians invocated when they were at Sea, had firſt found out the vertue of it, as our Fuller thinketh; but becauſe firſt found neer Heraclea, a City of Lydia, Κέκληται δ' οὕτως ἀπὸ Ἡρακλείας τῆς ἐν Λυδίᾳ πόλεως; ſaith Heſychius the old Grammarian. Called for the ſame reaſon Magnes, by the writers both Greek, and Latine; becauſe firſt found in the Territory of Magneſia, a City of Lydia alſo, whereof Heraclea was a part. So Suidas telleth us for the Greeks, Ἡράκλειον λίθον τινὲς δὲ Μαγνησίαν ἀπέδωσαν, διὰ τὸ τὴν Ἡράκλειαν τῆς Μαγνησίας εἶναι: Heraclium Lapidem quidam Magneſiam reddiderunt; quia Heraclea pars eſt Magneſiæ. Called for the very ſame reaſon Lydius Lapis alſo, but by them known onely as a touch ſtone. Thus old Lucretius for the Latines.

Quem Magneta vocant patrio de nomine Graii, Magnetum quia ſit patriis de finibus ortus.

Which Stone the Greeks do Magnes name, Becauſe it from Magneſia came.

But I have rambled further than I did intend, drawn by the vertue of the Load-ſtone too much out of my way. It is time now to return again into America; where the Spaniards at their firſt Arrival found the people without all manner of Apparel, nought skilled in Agriculture, making their bread either of a Plant called Maize, or a kind of Root called Jucca: a Root wherein is a venemous liquor, not inferior to the moſt deadly poiſons; but having firſt ſqueezed out this juice, and after dryed and prepared the Root, they made their Bread of it. They worſhipped Deviliſh Spirits, whom they called Zemes; in remembrance of whom they kept certain Images made of Cotton wool, like our Childrens Babies: to which they did great reverence, as ſuppoſing the Spirit of the Zemes to be in them; and to blind them the more, the Devil would cauſe theſe Puppets to ſeem to move, and to make a noiſe. They ſtood alſo in ſo great fear of them, that they durſt not diſpleaſe them: for if their wils were not fulfilled, the Devil ſtrait executed vengeance upon ſome of their Children; ſo holding this infatuated people in perpetual thraldom. So ignorant they were of all things which they had not ſeen, that they thought the Chriſtians to be immortal: wondring exceedingly at the Sails, Maſts, and Tacklings of their Ships; themſelves knowing no Ships or other Veſſels, but huge Troughs made of ſome great-bodied Tree. But this opinion of the Chriſtians immortality (in the ſenſe they meant it) did not long continue: for having taken ſome of them, they held their heads under the water, till they had quite choaked them; by which they knew them to be mortal like other men. Quite deſtitute of all good learning, they reckoned their time by a confuſed obſervation of the courſe of the Moon: and ſtrangely admired to ſee the Spaniards know the health and affairs of one another, onely by reading of a Letter. Of a plain and honeſt nature, for the moſt part, they were found to be; Loving and kinde in their entertainments, and apt to do good Offices both private and publick, according to their underſtandings: encouraged thereunto by an opinion which they had, that beyond ſome certain Hills (but they knew not where) thoſe which lived honeſtly and juſtly, or offered up their lives in defence of their Countrey; ſhould finde a place of everlaſting peace and happineſſe. So natural is the knowledge of the Souls immortality, and of ſome Ubi for the future reception of it, that we finde ſome tract, or other of it in moſt barbarous Nations. And as for Gold and Silver, which the new-come Chriſtians ſo adored, they eſteemed them no otherwiſe than as droſſe: though many times they adorned themſelves therewith for the colours ſake; as they did alſo with ſhels, feathers, and the like fine Gew-gawes.

Of complexion, moſt of theſe Americans were reaſonably fair and clear, little inclining unto blackneſſe: notwithſtanding that a great part of this Countrey lieth under the ſame parallel with Æthiopia, Lybia, and the Land of Negroes. So that the extraordinary heat of the Sun is not (as ſome imagine) the cauſe of that blackneſſe; though accidently it may turn the skin into ſuch a colour: as we ſee in many Countrey-Laſſes, even in colder Climates, whoſe faces are continually expoſed to the Sun and Weather. Others more wiſe in their own conceits (but in no bodies elſe) will have the natural Seed of the Africans to be black of colour; contrary both to ſenſe and reaſon, Experience and true natural Philoſophy being both againſt it. And ſome will have this Blackneſſe laid as a curſe on Cham, (from whoſe poſterity the African Nations do derive themſelves) becauſe, forſooth, he had carnal knowledge of his wife when they were in the Ark: a fancie as ridiculous, as the other falſe. So that we muſt refer it wholly to Gods ſecret pleaſure; though poſſibly enough the curſe of God on Cham and on his poſterity (though for ſome cauſe unknown to us) hath an influence on it.

Touching the Original of this people, it is moſt probable that they deſcended from the Tartars; for which there are ſome Arguments of eſpecial weight. For firſt, it may be proved in the way of Negation, that they came not from Europe; as having no remainder of the Arts, Learning, and Civilities of it. And ſecondly, that they came not from Africk, in regard they have no black men amongſt them, except ſome few which dwell on the Sea-coaſts over againſt Guinea in Africk; from whence they are ſuppoſed, to have been brought hither by ſome Tempeſt, or other. Thirdly, that they have not the leaſt token, or ſhew of the arts and induſtry of China, India, or any civil Region on that ſide of Aſia. The affirmative Arguments prove firſt, that they came from Aſia; next in particular from Tartarie. That they came came out of Asia, is more than manifeſt, in that the Weſt-ſide of the Countrey towards Asia, is far more populous, than the Eaſt towards Europe: of which there can be no other reaſon aſſigned, than that theſe parts were firſt inhabited, and that from hence the reſt was peopled. Next, the Idolatry of this people, and the particularities thereof, their incivility, and barbarous qualities, tell us that they are moſt like the Tartars of any. Thirdly, the Weſt-ſide of America, if it be not Continent with Tartary, is yet disjoyned by a very ſmall Strait, as may be perceived in all our Maps and Cards, as alſo in the Deſcription of theſe Countreys: ſo that there is into theſe Countreys a very quick and eaſie paſſage. And fourthly, the people of Quivira, which (of all the Provinces of America is the neareſt unto Tartary) are ſaid to follow in their whole courſe of their life, the ſeaſons and beſt paſturing of their Cattel, juſt like the Scythian Nomades, or Tartarian Hordes: an evident argument of their Original deſcent.

But from what Root ſoever they did firſt deſcend, certain it is that they had ſetled here many ages ſince, and overſpread all the parts and quarters of this ſpacious Continent; there being no place, which the Spaniards, or any other Adventurers, found deſolate, or waſte, and without Inhabitants. But their numbers much diminiſhed ſince theſe late Diſcoveries; the Spaniards behaving themſelves moſt inhumanely towards this unarmed and naked people: killing them up like ſheep appointed to the ſlaughter, or otherwiſe conſuming them in their Mines and works of drudgery. And had not Charles the fifth ordained with moſt Chriſtian prudence, that the Natives ſhould not be compelled to work in the Mines againſt their wills; but that the Spaniards ſhould provide themſelves of Slaves elſewhere: the Natives, in a little longer time had been quite exterminated, to the great reproach of Chriſtianity and the Goſpel. For ſo exceeding barbarous and bloudy were they at their firſt coming thither, that Haithney, a Nobleman amongſt them, being perſwaded to imbrace the Chriſtian faith; demanded firſt what he ſhould get by being of that Religion: and was anſwered, that he ſhould get Heaven and the joyes thereof: Then would he know, what place was deſtinate to ſuch as died unbaptized; and was anſwered, that they went to Hell, and the torments of it. Finally, asking unto which of theſe two places the Spaniards went, and being told they went to Heaven; he renounced his baptiſm: proteſting that he would rather go to Hell with the unbaptized, than to live in Heaven with ſo cruel a people. The reſt were driven unto the Font, like ſo many Horſes to the watering place; and received into the Church of Chriſt without any inſtruction: inſomuch that one old Frier (as himſelf confeſſed to Charles the fifth) had Chriſtened 700000 of them, and another of that rank 300000. never acquainting them with any of the Articles of the Chriſtian faith, or points of Religious converſation, (except it were to be obedient to their Paſtors and Teachers.) Yet here I muſt confeſſe, (for I am loath to defraud any man of his due) there hath been made a great improvement of Chriſtianity: the number of Chriſtians in this Countrey, being thought by ſome Learned man of the Church of Rome, to equal all thoſe of the Latine Churches in Europe. And though perhaps conſtrained at firſt unto it as a new Religion, and of a ſtricter Rule than that which before they had; yet by long time and education, it is now grown more plauſible and familiar to them. The Church hereof governed by the four Arch-biſhops of 1. Mexico. 2. Lima. 3. S. Foy, and 4. Dominico; who have under them 25 Suffragan Biſhops, all liberally endowed and provided for.

When this new world came firſt acquainted with the old, Iſabel Queen of Caſtile, would not permit any of her husband Ferdinando's ſubjects, to be planted here, viz. Arragonians, or Valentians; but licenſed the Caſtilians, Andaluſians, Biſcains, and the reſt of her own people onely, envying the wealth hereof to the reſt. When ſhe was dead, Ferdinando licenſed generally all the Spaniards, excluding onely the Portugals. But ſo rich a prize could not ſo warily be fenced, but that the Portugals, French, Engliſh, and now of late the Low-countrey-men have laid in their own Barns part of the Spaniards harveſt; who well hoped to have had a Monopoly of ſo wealthy a Region, and to have enjoyed without any rivall or competitor the poſſeſſion (I cannot ſay the love) of a Countrey ſo abundantly fruitful. For though ſome of the Kings of Spain, have been uſed to ſay, that they loved the Eaſt Indies as their Miſtreſſe onely, in whoſe favour they could patiently enough endure a Rival; but eſteemed America as their wife, in whoſe love they could not brook a Competitor, without foul diſhonour: yet by his leave (or without it rather) ſome of his neighbours have made bold with his wife, in theſe later times; though in the affections of his Miſtreſſe they have greater intereſt. But theſe attempts of the Engliſh and Hollanders, have been an occaſion of great ſtrength to the whole Countrey. For whereas in our firſt Wars with Spain, our private Adventures found the Sea-coaſts almoſt naked of defence, and thereupon made many a rich and proſperous voyage to theſe parts: the Spaniards upon ſight of that weakneſſe and diſadvantage, ſo ſtrongly fortified their Havens and Sea-Towns, that towards the later end of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, we were not able to accompliſh that with great and publick Forces, which before had been performed by ſmall and private. Which cauſed our Captains and Adventurers, failing oftentimes in the Continent, to make up their Market on the Seas, in the return of the Spaniſh Navies, as they yet do.

This New World is very plentifull of Spices, Fruits, and ſuch Creatures which the old World never knew; ſtocked with ſuch ſtore of Kine and Bulls, (brought hither out of Europe ſince the firſt diſcovery) that the Spaniards kill thouſands of them yearly, for their tallow and hides onely. Bleſt with ſuch abundance of Gold, that they found in many of their Mines, more Gold than Earth: a Metal which the Americans not regarding, greedily exchanged for hammers, knives, axes, and the like tools of iron; for before, they were wont to make their Canoes or Boats plain without, and hollow within, by the force of fire. Other particularities ſhall be ſpecified in the particular Deſcriptions of the ſeveral Countries. I ſhall now onely take a brief view of ſuch of their Beaſts and Fowls, as either this old World did not know, or knew not in ſuch ſhapes and qualities, as are there preſented. Their Lyons leſſe in great-neſſe than thoſe in Africa, are ſaid to be of colour gray, and ſo nimble as to climb Trees; their Dogs ſnowted like Foxes, but deprived of that property which the Logicians call Proprium quarto modo, for they could not bark: their Hogs with talons ſharp as Razors, and the navil of their bodies on the Ridge of their backs: their Stags, and Deer, without Horns; their Sheep (they call them Lamas) not onely profitable as with us, for food and raiment, but accuſtomed to the carrying of burdens, ſome of 150 pound weight. Amongſt ſuch ſtrange Beaſts as this old World knew not, we may reckon that deformed one (whoſe name I finde not) whoſe forepart reſembleth a Fox, the hinder part an Ape, except the Feet onely which are like a Mans: beneath her belly a Receptacle like a Purſe, where ſhe keeps her young, till they be able to ſhift for themſelves; never coming thence but when they ſuck, and then in again. The Armadilla is in form like a barbed Horſe, ſeeming to be armed all over, and that with Artificial (rather than natural) Plates, which do ſhut and open. The Vicugue reſembleth a Goat, but greater and more profitable; of the Fleece whereof they make Rugs, Coverings, and Stuffs; and in the Belly finde the Bezoar, ſometimes two or three, a ſoveraign Antidote againſt Poiſons and venemous Diſeaſes. A kinde of Hare reſembling a Want in his feet, and a Cat in his tail; under whoſe chin nature hath faſtned a little Bag, which ſhe hath alſo taught him to uſe as a Store houſe: for in this, having filled his Belly, he preſerveth the remnant of his Proviſion. The Pigritia, a little Beaſt (not ſo named for nought) which in fourteen days cannot go ſo far as a man may eaſily throw a ſtone. Then for their Birds, they have them there in ſuch variety of colours; that the Indians will perfectly repreſent in Feathers whatſoever they ſee drawn with Pencils: inſomuch as a Figure of S. Francis made of Feathers, was preſented to Pope Sixtus Quintus; whoſe eye could not diſcern them to be natural colours, but thought them pencil-work, till he made tryal with his fingers. One called the Tominejo, of all colours, ſo little that it ſeems no bigger than a Bee or Butter-flie; the mouth thereof no bigger than the eye of a needle; yet yielding not to the Nightingale in the ſweetneſſe of its note and Muſick: the Bird and Neſt put into Gold Scales, not weighing above 24. grains, yet beautified with Feathers of ſo many colours, eſpecially in the neck and breſt; that the Indians make great uſe of them in their Feather-pictures. Others as big, as theſe are little. The Condores of ſuch ſtrength and greatneſſe, that they will fall upon a Sheep or Calf, open it, and eat it. Like Miracles of nature have they in their Fruits and Plants, more proper unto Natural Hiſtory than to this Diſcourſe: and many medicinal Drugs of rare operation, which I leave to the conſideration of the Learned Herbaliſts. I am too much a Fool to be a Phyſitian, and therefore will not deal in ſuch things as are out of my Element. Yet ſomewhat of this kinde we may chance to meet with, in the Deſcription and Survey of the ſeveral Provinces, into which this new World is divided.

The whole is naturally divided into two great Peninſulas; whereof that towards the North is called Mexicana; from Mexico the chief City and Province of it, ſuppoſed (for the moſt Northern parts of it are not yet diſcovered) to contain 13000 miles in compaſſe. That towards the South, hath the name of Peruana, from the great Countrey of Peru; the circumnavigation whereof is reckoned at 17000 Italian miles. The Iſthmus which joyneth theſe two together, very long but narrow; in ſome places not above twelve miles from Sea to Sea; in many not above ſeventeen. By the Spaniards it is called the Streit of Darien, from a River of that name in Peruana, neer unto the Iſthmus: and is ſo ſmall a Ligament for ſo great a Body, that ſome have thought of turning theſe two Peninſulas into perfect Iſlands. Certain it is, that many have motioned to the Councel of Spain, the cutting of a navigable channel through this ſmall Iſthmus, ſo to ſhorten their common voyages to China, and the Moluccoes. But the Kings of Spain have not hitherto attempted it; partly becauſe if he ſhould imploy the Americans in the work, he ſhould loſe thoſe few of them, which his people have ſuffered to live; partly becauſe the Slaves which they yearly buy out of Africa, do but ſuffice for the Mines and Sugar-houſes; but principally, leſt the paſſage by the Cape of good hope, being left, thoſe Seas might become a receptacle of Pirats. Wich doubtleſſe was a very prudent and Politick conſideration. Many times I have read of the like attempts begun, but never of any finiſhed. Seſoſtris King of Egypt, Darius of Perſia, one of the Ptolomies, and a late capricious Portugal had the like Plot, to make a paſſage from the Red-Sea, to the Mediterranean: ſo had Cæſar, Caligula, and Nero, Emperours of Rome, upon the Corinthian Iſthmus. Another of the ſame nature, had Charls the great, to let the Rhene into the Danow; the like had Lucius Verus, to joyn the Rhene, and the Roſne: all which, in their peculiar places, we have already touched. Nicanor alſo King of Syria, intended to have made a channel from the Caſpian to the Euxine Sea; an infinite project. But neither he nor any of the reſt could finiſh theſe works; God it ſeemeth, being not pleaſed at ſuch proud and haughty enterpriſes. And yet perhaps the want of treaſure hath not been the leaſt cauſe, why the like projects have not proceeded: beſides the dreadfull noyſes and apparitions, which (as we have already ſaid) continually affrighted the workmen.

Not leſſe obſervable than this great but unſucceſſful deſign of cutting a paſſage thorow this Iſthmus, from one Sea to the other; was that notable, but a like ſucceſſeleſſe Attempt of John Oxenham, an adventurous Engliſhman, in a paſſage over it by Land. This man being one of the Followers of Sir Francis Drake, arriving in a ſmall Bark with 70 of his Companions, a little above Nombre di Deos, the chiefeſt Town of all the Iſthmus; drew his Ship on Land, covered it with boughs, and marched over the Land with his Company guided by Negroes, till he came to a River. There he cut down Wood, made him a Pinnace, entred the South Sea, went to the Iſle of Pearls, where he ſtayed ten days; intercepted in two Spaniſh Ships (who feared no Enemy on that ſide) 60000 pound weight of Gold, 200000 pound weight in bars of ſilver, and returned in ſafety to the Land. And though by the mutinie of ſome of his own Company, he neither returned into his Countrey, nor unto his Ship: yet is it an Adventure not to be forgotten, in that never attempted by any other; and by the Spaniſh Writers recorded with much admiration.

But to return to the Diviſion of this Countrey, and the two main parts thereof which this Streit uniteth; Mexicana, or the Northern Peninſula, may be moſt properly divided into the Continent, and Iſlands: the Continent again into the ſeveral Provinces of 1 Eſtotiland, 2 Nova Francia, 3 Virginia; 4 Florida, 5 California, 6 Nova Gallicia, 7 Nova Hiſpania, and 8 Guatimala; each of them branched into many ſub-diviſions, and leſſer Territories. Pernana, or the Southern Peninſula, taking in ſome part of the Iſthmus, as before we did, hath on the Continent the Provinces of 1 Caſtella Aurea, 2 Nova Granado, 3 Peru, 4 Chile, 5 Paragnay, 6 Braſil, 7 Guiana, and 8 Paria, with their ſeveral members, parts, and particular Regions. The Iſlands which belong to both diſperſed either in the Southern Ocean, called Mare del Zur; where there is not any one of note, but 1. Thoſe called Los Ladrones, and 2 the Iſlands of Solomon: or in the Northern Ocean, or Mare del Norte, reduced unto 3 the Caribes, 4 Porto Rico, 5 Hiſpaniola, 6 Cuba, and 7 Jamaica. In the ſurvey of which particulars we will begin with thoſe which lie on the North-eaſt of this great Continent, not poſſeſſed by the Spaniard: and paſſing thorow the Plantations of ſuch other Nations, as have any footing in the ſame, come by degrees to the Eſtates of the King of Spain; that we may lay them altogether without interruption: beginning with Eſtotiland, the moſt Northern part, and that which (as ſome ſay) was diſcovered firſt.

OF ESTOTILAND.

ESTOTILAND, as under that name we comprehend those Regions of Mexicana, which lie most towards the North, and East; hath on the East, the main Ocean: on the South, Canada, or Nova Francia; on the West, some unknown Tract not yet discovered: and on the North, a Bay, or Inlet of the Sea, called Hudsons Streits, and called so from Henry Hudson an English-man; who by this way endeavoured to finde out a more commodious and quick passage to Cathay and China, than had been formerly discovered. It comprehends. 1. Estotiland specially so called. 2. Terra Corterialis. 3. New-found-land, and 4. the Isles of Bacalaos.

1. And first Estotiland, specially so called, is the most Northern Region on the East-side of America, lying betwixt Hudsons Streits on the North; and Terra Corterialis, on the South. The soyl sufficiently enriched with natural endowments, said to have in it Mines of Gold and other Metals; but I doubt it lieth too much North for Gold, whatsoever it may do for Brasse and Iron. The people rude and void of goodnesse; naked, notwithstanding the extream cold of the Countrey; not having either the wit, or the care to cover their bodies with the skins of those Beasts, which they kill by hunting; though their bellies teach them to keep life by the flesh thereof. Said by the first Discoverers to sow Corn, to make Beer, or Ale, and to have many Barks of their own with which they traded into Groen-land; as also to have many Cities and Castles, some Temples consecrate to their Idols, where they first sacrificed men, and after eat them. The Language which they spake, expressed in Characters of their own; but some knowledge of the Latine tongue there had been amongst them, and Latine books in the Library of one of their Kings, understood by few.

Such were the Reports made of this Countrey by the first Discoverers, who were certain Fishermen of Freezland, cast by a Tempest on this Coast about the year 1350. Six of them only got on Land, where all died save one: who after a long wandring from one Princes Court to another, found means to return into his own Countrey: the King whereof called Zichumi, being a great Adventurer in the feats of Arms, prepared for the further Discovery and Conquest of it. Animated thereunto by the opportune coming of Nicolo and Antonio Zeni, two noble Gentlemen of Venice: who desiring to see the fashions of the World, furnished a ship at their own charges, and passing the Streits of Gibraltar held their course northward, with an intent to see England and Flanders. But driven by tempest on this Iland, An. 1380. they were kindly welcomed by the King, then newly prosperous in a War against those of Norway: who liked Nicolo so well, that he gave him a command in his Navie, and under his good conduct woon many Ilands, discovered Groen-land, and provided for the conquest of Estotiland also. But Nicolo in the mean time dying, the businesse was pursued by his brother Antonio, the King in person making one in the undertaking: who liked the Countrey so well, being once possessed of it, that he built a Citie in it; and there determining to spend the rest of his dayes, sent back Antonio unto Freezland, with the most of his people.

This is the substance of the story of the first Discovery, published long since by one Francisco Marcellino, out of the Letters of the Zeni: which had they been considered of as they might have been, we had not so long wanted the acquaintance of this part of the World. But whether it were that their reports were esteemed as fabulous by the States of Europe, or that the time was not yet ripe for this great Discovery; there was nothing done in pursuance of it: Zichumi never going back to his own Countrey, and Freezland not long after conquered by the Kings of Norway. So that the knowledge of it was quite lost again, till these later dayes. Said in the Letters of the Zeni, to be well stored with Fowl, and the Eggs of Birds, which they found there for their refreshing: the Haven where they landed, to be called Cape Trin; the people to be of small Stature, fearfull, and to hide themselves in Caves, at the sight of the Freezlanders: that there was a Mountain alwayes burning, or casting smoak; together with a certain Spring, whence issued a water as black as Pitch; but no such Cities, Forts, and Temples, as the Fisher-man spake of. The Countrey West from Freezland 1000 miles.

To give you the face of it as it stands at the present, it is said to be well cultivated, fruitfull of all necessaries for the life of man, and rich in metals, but extream cold: watered with four Rivers, which rising out of an high Mountain in the midst of the Countrey, disperse themselves over all parts of it. The people said to be more ingenious, of better judgements, and more skilled in most Mechanick Arts, than the rest of the Americans were at the first Discovery; which argueth some more civil people to have been formerly amongst them. Their Garments of the skins of beasts, or Sea-Calves; with which also they covered the out-side of their Boats, to keep out the water, and make them able to endure the Sea. What Towns they have, and whether the name of Cape Trin be still remaining, I am not able to discover; this Countrey lying still for the most part hidden in a Northern Mist. All we can say, is, that some English names have been imposed of late, on some Capes and Promontories, lying on the Northern shores hereof towards Hudsons Streits, by Hudson and such others of the English Nation who pursued that enterprise. Of which sort are Prince Henry's Foreland, towards the East, almost at the entries of those Streits: and then proceeding towards the West, Cape Charls, Kings Foreland; and last of all, Cape Wolstenham, at the end thereof, where these Streits open into a large and capacious Bay, called Hudsons Bay. But of these more particularly in another place; where we endeavour the Discovery of such parts of the world as are yet unknown, and so within the compasse of a Terra incognita.

2. TER-

2. TERRA CORTERIALIS hath on the North, Eſtotiland; on the South, Canada, or New-France. So called from Gaſpar Corterialis, who in the year 1500 left his name unto it. It is called alſo Terra di Laborodoro, both from the pains required of the Husband-man, and the great recompence which it gives him: in the ſame ſenſe, as Campania in the Realm of Naples, is named Terra di Lavoro. By the French, who ſucceeded in the poſſeſſion hereof after the Spaniard had forſook it, it was called New-Bretagne; with reference to Bretagne in France, their own natural Countrey.

The people at the firſt coming of Corterialis were found to be barbarous enough, well coloured, ſwift of foot, and very good Archers: their cloathing of Beaſts skins, their habitations Caves, or ſome ſorry Cottages; their Religion Paganiſm, or none; their directions, Sooth-ſaying. Not ſo forgetfull of the Law which Nature had planted in them, as not to know the neceſſary uſe of marriage; but extreamly jealous. Better conditioned at the preſent than in former times, by their near neighbour-hood to the French, and commerce with Forreiners: affirmed to be very well diſpoſed, to feed moſt generally on fiſh, and to adorn themſelves with Bracelets of braſſe, or ſilver. Their chief Towns. 1. Breſt. 2. Santta Maria. 3. Cabo Marzo, of which little memorable.

The Countrey firſt diſcovered by Sebaſtian Cabot, the ſon of John Cabot before mentioned: who in the year 1499. at the charges and encouragement of King Henry 7th. ſetting ſayl from Briſtol, firſt made the diſcovery of theſe parts, as far as to the Latitude of 67 and an half, (which brings Eſtotiland within the compaſſe alſo of his diſcoveries.) The Land which he firſt ſaw, he called Prima Veſta; and an Iſland lying before it he called St. Johns, becauſe diſcovered on the day of St. John Baptiſt. They found upon the Countrey plenty of white Bears, Stags greater than ours, Scut-fiſhes of a yard long, and ſuch ſtore of Cod fiſh (which the Inhabitants called Baccalaos) that their multitudes ſometimes ſtayed his ſhips: hence the occaſion of their name. Returning home, he found great preparations for a war in Scotland; ſo that nothing elſe was done in this Diſcovery by the Engliſh Nation. But three years after, Gaſpar Corterialis a Portugueze, ſetting ſayl from Lisbon, fell upon thoſe parts of Cabots Diſcoveries, which ſince bear his name: from whence he brought the piece of a gilded Sword of Italian workmanſhip, left there moſt probably by one of the Cabots. Returning again the next year, he was no more heard of: drowned in the Sea, or ſlain by the Salvages on the Land; as was his brother Michael, in the year next following. Neglected after this, till the French having planted in Canada, or Nova Francia, caſt an eye upon it; who gave the name of Breſt to a Town hereof, (according to the name of a noted Port in little Bretagne:) but whether they ſetled any Colony in it, or onely did reſort unto it in the way of trading, I am not able to determine.

3. NEW-FOUND-LAND, (Terra Nova, as the Latines call it) is a great Iſland, lying on the South of Corterialis; from which parted by a Frith, or Streit, called Golfe des Chaſteaux. So called from the late diſcovery of it, when diſcovered firſt, though it be ſome ſcores of years ago: as Wickhams Colledge in Oxford hath the name of New Colledge, though founded divers ages paſt; becauſe it was the Neweſt when that name was given.

The dimenſions of the Countrey I have no where met with. But for the quantity hereof, it is ſaid to be better inhabited in the North parts, than in the South; though the South the fitter of the two for habitation. Furniſhed upon the Sea-coaſts with abundance of Cod-fiſh, as alſo with Herrings, Salmons, Thornbacks, Smelts, Oyſters, and Muſcles with Pearls in them. Within the Land a goodly Countrey, naturally beautified with Roſes, ſown with Peaſe, planted with ſtately Trees, and otherwiſe diverſified, both for pleaſure and profit: the Aire hereof never very extream, more temperate in the depth of Winter than with us in England, the Brooks being never ſo frozen over, that the Ice is able to bear a Dog; and thoſe little froſts but ſeldom holding three nights together. The people of reaſonable ſtature, full-eyed, broad-faced, but beardleſſe, their faces coloured with Oker; their Houſes, Poles ſet round meeting together in the top, and covered over with skins; an hearth, or fire-place in the midſt; their Boats of Bark, twenty foot long, and four in breath, not weighing above 100 pound weight; every of which will carry four men, and is by them carried to all places of their Removes.

Places of moſt importance in it are the ſeveral Havens (of which it is conceived to have more, and more commodious, than any one Iſland of the world for the bigneſſe of it:) not beautified with Towns, or buildings, but yielding very ſafe ſtations to the greateſt ſhips. The chief whereof 1. Rennoſa, or Roigmenſe, on the North of the Promontory called Cape de Raz, the South-Eaſt Angle of the Iſland; of much reſort for fiſhing, from ſeveral Countreys. 2. Portus formoſus, or Fair-Haven, three miles North of the other; capable of great ſhips, and bearing into the main Land above 40 miles. Situate in the Latitude of 46. and 40 minutes. 3. Thornbay, by the Portugals named Enſeada Grande. 4. Trinity Bay on the North of Cape S. Francis, by the Portugals called Bahia de la Conception: a large Bay, five miles broad in the narroweſt place; yet ſafe withall and of very good Anchorage. 5. Bona Veſta, the name of a Port and Promontory. 6. White-Bay, or Bay-Blanche, as the French call it, ſafe and capacious, on the North of the Promontory of S. John. Betwixt which and Cape de Grat, on the North-Eaſt Angle of the Iſland, is no Port of note. Then on the South-ſide of the Iſland, and the Weſt of Cape de Raz, is 7 Port Treſpaſſez. 8. Port Preſenza, and 9 Port des Baſques (or the Biſcains Haven;) and on the Weſt ſide, having doubled the Cape de Raye, in the South-weſt Angle of the Iſland, there is 10 S. Georges Bay: all of them ſafe, capacious, and of great reſort.

4. Before the Iſland, at the diſtance of 25 leagues from Cape de Raye, lieth a long bank, or ridge of ground, extended in length many hundred leagues, in breadth 24 leagues where broadeſt, in other places but ſixteen: and all about it certain Iſlands, which Cabot by one common name called BACALAOS (that name peculiar now unto one alone) from the great multitudes of Codfiſh (by the Natives called Baccalaos) which ſwarmed hereabouts; ſo numerous, that they hindred the paſſage of his ſhips, as be-as before was noted, and lay in ſuch ſhoals upon the Coaſts, that the Bears caught them with their claws & drew them on land. The Government at that time by Kings, before whom the people in the moſt formal expreſſions of duty and reverence uſed to rub their Noſes, or ſtroke their foreheads: which if the King obſerved, or accepted of, and meant to grace the party which had ſo adored him, he turned his head to his left ſhoulder, as a mark of favour.

The firſt Diſcoverers of this Countrey (but not known then to be an Iſland) were the two Cabots, John, and his ſon Sebaſtian, imployed herein by Henry the 7th. 1497. as before was noted. The buſineſſe being laid aſide at his coming back, was afterwards revived by Thorn and Eliot, two of Briſtol: who taking a more perfect view of it than was took by the Cabots, aſcribed to themſelves the diſcovery of it, and animated King Henry the 8. unto the enterprize: which was done An. 1527. but with ill ſucceſſe. In the mean time the Normans, Portugals, and Britons of France had reſorted to it; and changed the names which by the Engliſh had been given to the Bayes and Promontories. But the Engliſh would not ſo relinquiſh their pretenſions to the Premier Seiſin. And therefore in the year 1583. Sir Humfrey Gilbert took poſſeſſion of it in the name of the Queen of England, interdicted all other Nations the uſe of fiſhing, and intended to have ſetled there an Engliſh Colony. But being wracked in his return, the ſending of the Colony was diſcontinued till the year 1608. when undertook by John Guy a Merchant of Briſtol, who moſt ſucceſſefully performed it: the Colony ſo proſpering in a little time, that they had Wheat, Rye, Turneps, Coleworts, of their own ſowing; ſome probability of Metals, a certainty of Sables, Muſk, and other precious Commodities, beſides their fiſhing; though that the great occaſion of their ſetling there. Such plenty is there found of Ling and Cod-fiſh, all about the Coaſts, that ordinarily our men take 200. or 300 of them within four hours ſpace; which they convey from hence to all parts of Europe.

OF CANADA.

CANADA is bounded on the North, with Corterialis; on the South, with New-England; on the East, with the Main Ocean; the Countries lying on the West, either not yet discovered, or not perfectly known. So called from the River Canada, the greatest, not of this Province onely, but of all this Peninsula. A River which hath its Fountain in the undiscovered parts of this Northern Tract: sometimes inlarged into great Lakes, and presently reduced to a narrower channell, with many great windings and Reaches in it. Having embosomed almost all the rest of the Rivers of this Countrey, it emptieth it self into the Great Bay of St. Lawrence, over against the Isle of Assumption; being at the mouth 40 Leagues in breadth, and 150 Fathom deep.

It is also called Nova Francia from the French, who following the tract of Cabot, and Corterialis, made a further Discovery of these parts, and planted several Colonies in them. The business first undertaken by Jaques Cartier, An. 1534. received here gladly by the Natives with singing, dancing, and expressing much signe of joy: pursued by Monsieur Roberval, sent thither in the year 1542. by King Francis the first, not onely to discover the Countrey, but to plant some parts of it, who built there a fair Fortresse for his greater safety; followed therein by divers others of that Nation, in their several times.

The nature of the soil, and people, we shall best discover in the several parts of it; each differing from one another, and so not easily conformed to a general Character. Look we now onely on the principal Rivers of the whole, 1 Canada, of which before, 2 Pemtegonet or Norumbegue, as some call it, of which more hereafter. 3 Quimbeque falling into the Ocean as the others do, 4 Rio S. Johan, ending its course in a large Bay called Bay Francoise, interposed betwixt Nova Scotia and the rest of this Countrey. 5 Les trois Riviers, which rising far north, and passing thorow two great Lakes, falleth into the Canada, 6 Sagnenay, of the same Original Course, and Fall. A River of so strong a Current, that it suffereth not the Sea to flow up its Channel; so deep, that in many places it attaineth to 100 Fathoms; and though but narrow at the mouth, yet groweth it broader and broader upwards; and having received many lesser streams, looseth it self at last, where the other doth.

It containeth in it the several Regions of Nova Francia, specially so called, 2 Nova Scotia, 3 Norumbegue, and 4 the Isles adjoyning.

1. NOVA FRANCIA specially so named, is situate on the South of Corterialis, and on the North of the great River Canada, towards the East; but on both sides of it, in the Western and more in-land parts. The Countrey naturally full of Stags, Bears, Hares, Matterns and Foxes, whose flesh the People did eat raw (till more civilized) having first dried it either in the smoak or Sun, as they do their Fish. They have also store of Conies, Fowle and Fish great plenty; one Fish more memorable than the rest, which they call Adothnel, whose body and head is like that of a Grey-hound. But their greatest Jewels are their Chains of Esurgnie; a shell-fish of the whitest colour, excellent for the stanching of blood: which they fashion into Beads and Bracelets, and so wear, or sell them. Not very plentifull of fruits, or fit for tillage; yet it becedeth some Corn, and of pulse good plenty. The Aire more cold than in other Countries of like height, partly by reason of the greatnesse of the River, which being wholly of fresh water, and so large withall, chilleth the Aire on both sides of it; partly because of the abundance of Ice, and those hills of snow, which the north-winde passeth over in the way to this Countrey.

The People, when the French first discovered them, very rude and barbarous; few of them furnished with houses, but removing from one place to another, as their food decayed; and carrying all their goods with them (a thing easily done) upon those removes. Such as lived towards the Sea, or the greater Rivers, somewhat better housed. For in the day time they fish in their Boats, which they draw unto the Land at night, and turning them upside down, sleep under them. As ill apparelled as housed; for they went all naked, except a little piece of skin before their Privities. Some of them had their heads quite shaven, excepting one Bush of hair on the top of the Crown; which they suffered to grow to the length of an horses Tail, tied up with Leather-strings in a knot. Each man allowed his two or three wives apiece; and they so constant to their Husband, that they never marry after his death, but keep themselves continually in a mourning habit: a vizard as it were, made of grease and Coal-dust, which they spread over all their bodies. The women labour more than the men, both in fishing and husbandry; digging the ground insted of Ploughing, with certain pieces of wood, where they sow their Maiz (a Plant of which they make their bread, in most parts of America.) Idolaters in general before the coming of the French, as they are most of them at this day; the French and others which have planted in these Northern parts, having added little more unto Christianity, than by the Colonies they brought with them. Yet in the midst of this darknesse they saw so much light, as to believe that when they died they went immediatly to the Stars; from thence conveyed to certain green and pleasant fields, full of flowers and fruits. Plain Evidence that they believed the immortality of the soul, and that there was some place appointed for reception of it.

The chief Towns of it at that time, 1. Hochelaga, round in figure, compassed about with three Course of timber Ramparts, one within the other; sharp at the top, about two Rods high, with one gate onely to give entrance, and that well fortified (in their kinde) with Piles and Bars. It had in it 50 great houses, in the midst of every one a Court, and in the middle of that Court a place which they made their fire on. Situate far within the Land, about six or seven Leagues from the banks of the River Canada, in the most pleasant part of the Countrey; and therefore made the seat of their King, whom they highly reverenced, and carried him on their shoulders sitting on a Carpet of skins. 2 Stadac, or Stadacone, and 3. Quebecque, which the French call S. Croix, on the course of the same River also; this last a Colonie of the French. 4 Tadonsac, a safe but small Haven, not capable of above 20 ships; at the mouth of Saguenay. 5 Franco-Roy, a Castle built by Monsieur Roberval, when he came first into this Countrey. 7 S. Lewis, designed for a French Colonie by Monsieur de Champlain, An. 1611. but never came to great effect: yet so much Champlain got by the undertaking, that he left his name to a great Lake of this Countrey (full of little Islands) in the Lands of the Uroqueis, inhabiting on the South of the river Canada, into which it emptieth it self at the last.

2. NOVA SCOTIA containeth that part of the Countries of Canada or Nova Francia, which the French call Accadie, or Cadie, (being a Peninsula or Demy-Island;) with so much of the main land as lieth between the River Canada and the large Bay called Bay-Francoise, from the River of S. Croix upon the West, to the Isle of Assumption on the East. So called by King James, in the Grant of these Countries to Sir William Alexander, after Lord Secretary of Scotland, and by King Charles for his approved fidelity most deservedly created Earl of Sterling. The Letters-Patents of which Donation bear Date Anno 1621. What time the French having been outed of their holds here, by Sir Sam. Argal Governour of Virginia; had abandoned the South-parts of Canada, and betook themselves more into the North, and the higher parts of the Course of that River. And in pursuance of this Grant, the said Sir William Alexander in the year 1622. sent a Colonie hither: and having procured a new Map to be made of the Countrey, caused the Peninsula, lying on this side of the Bay Francoise, to be called Nova Caledonia; that on the North thereof, to be called Nova Alexandria; giving new names also unto most of the Ports and Promontories. For the better accomplishment of which business, he obtained also a Patent for advancing a certain number of Persons to the hereditary dignity of Baronets, or Knights of Nova Scotia, as we call them commonly; distinguished from others by a Ribbin of Orange tawney: the money raised upon which Patent, was to be wholly imployed towards this Plantation. But being unable with those helps (as certainly Plantations are of too great burden for a private person) or willing to imploy his money to more profit, he sold Port-Royal to the French; and after discontinued his endeavours in it.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Port-Royal, in Accide or Nova Caledonia, on the Bay-Francoise, once made a Colonie of the French by Monsieur de Monts, An. 1604. continued with much difficulty till the year 1613. when destroyed by Sir Samuel Argal then Governour of the English Plantations in Virginia, by reason that the Jesuites, whose neighbourhood he liked not of, had begun to nest there. Sold since again unto the French, as before is said, by whom still possessed. 2 S. Lukes Bay, by the French called Port au Monton. 3 Gaspe, a noted Port in New-Alexandria, opposite to the Isle of Assumption. 4 Gachepe, on a fair Bay in the same Coast also.

3. NORUMBEGA hath on the North-east, Nova Scotia; on the South-west, Virginia. The air is of a good temper, the soil fruitful, and the people indifferently civil; all of them, as well men as women, painting their faces. The men are much affected to hunting, and therefore never give their daughters to any, unless he be well skilled in that game also. The Women are here very chast, and so well love their husbands; that if at any time they chance to be slain, the widows will neither marry, nor eat flesh, till the death of their husbands be revenged. They both dance much; and for more nimblenesse, sometimes stark naked. The Sea upon the Coasts so shallow and so full of sands, that it is very ill sailing all along these shores. The towns, or habitations rather, so differently called by the French, Portugals, and Spaniard, that there is not much certainty known of them. Yet most have formerly agreed upon Norumbegua, or Aranapec, as the Natives call it; said to be a large, populous, and well-built town, and to be situate on a fair and capacious River, of the same name also; But later Observations tell us there is no such matter; that the River, which the first Relations did intend, is called Pemtegonet, neither large nor pleasant; and that the place by them meant is called Agguncia, so far from being a fair City, that there are onely a few Sheds or Cabins, covered with the barks of trees, or the skins of beasts. Howsoever I have let it stand on the first reports, it being possible enough that the Town might fall into decay, deserted on the coming of so many several Pretenders; and that the Sheds, or Cabins which the last men speak of, may be onely the remainders of it.

4. Adjoyning to these Countreys of Canada, are several Islands not joyned in any common name, but yet deserving some consideration in this place & time. The principal whereof, 1. NATISCOTEC, called the Isle of Assumption, situate in the very mouth of the River, was first discovered by Jaques Carher, An. 1534. in length 35 leagues, seven, or eight in breadth. The Island very plain and level, of a fruitfull soyl, beautified with Trees of several sorts, repleniished with great plenty both of Fowl and Fish, and furnished with convenient Rodes, though with no good Havens. Not hitherto inhabited, for ought I can finde. 2. RAMEÆ, a srie of little Islands in the great Golf of St. Lawrence on the South of Natiscotec, first found out, or frequented by the Citizens of St. Malo in Bretagne, An. 1590. of great resort for the Morse fishing, used upon the Coasts, which is here so gainfull, that a French Bark in a very little time killed 1500 of them. These Morses (take this by the way) are a kinde of Sea-Horses, or Sea-Oxen; with two teeth of a foot long growing downwards out of the upper Jaw, sold dearer than Ivory, because esteemed a Soveraign Antidote against poysons. They have also four feet, no Ears, the Horns about half an ell in length; the skin when dressed, twice as thick as that of a Bull; their flesh when young, as sweet & tender as Veal. So fat and unctuous, that with the bellies of five of them, there is made usually an Hogs-Head of Train-Oil, as good as that of the Whale. 3. BRION, a small Island on the South of the Rameæ, about two leagues in length, and as many in breadth; of a rich soyl, fat pasturage, well shaded with tall and lofty Trees; and Neighboured by a smaller Island called Isle Blanche, of the like fertility. 4. BRITON, (Insula Britonum) so named from Jaques Breton a French man, in the time of Francis the first, called also the Island of St. Lawrence; is situate on the South-East of the Isle of Brion: in form triangular, in compasse about 80 leagues; pleasant and fruitfull, though for the most part swelled with hills. Destitute of Rivers, but interlaced with great Arms of the Sea, well stored with shell-fish; and in the midst thereof a great Lake full of little Islands: the Woods replenished with plenty of Deer, black Foxes, and a bird called Pengwin. Inhabited by the Natives onely, though the Portugals did sometimes endeavour a Plantation in it; but finding the Aire too cold for them, they again deserted it. The chief Haven is by the English called Newport; by the French Port aux Anglois, from the great resort of the English to it, in regard of their fishing. 5. ISLE DE SABLE, by the French so called from the sands which lie high about it; distant from the Breton-Isle about 30 leagues to the South; 15 leagues in compasse, but more long than broad, and of unsafe landing. The planting of it, in regard of the safety of the place, attempted twice by the French, and once by the Portugals; but without successe. 6. Others of lesse note, as Menego, and Les Isles des Oiseaux, I passe over purposely; there being nothing or but little to be spoken of them.

So it appears by this accompt, that though the French have given the name of Nova Francia, to all these Countreys; yet they never had the honour of the first discovery, wherein the English and the Portugueze had precedency of them: nor are possessed of any considerable part thereof, the Scots putting in for a large share; the English Masters of the best Ports, and all the Islands of the Countrey in the hands of the Salvages. Of these some great and powerfull Nations over-sway the rest. The chief whereof are the Iroquois on the North-East of Norumbegua, neighboured by the Ochataignins, the Albounequins, and the Nebicerines, the Souriquois, and Etechimins, of Accadie, and new Alexandria; the Montagnets, and the Attegovantans, on the banks of the Canada. All of them stout and hardy people, false of their words, treacherous in their practises, and mercilesse in their revenges. So well acquainted with the factions and divisions of Europe, that they know how to make use of one Nation against another; and by that means to keep themselves in their first estate, without being subject unto any. So that the footing which the English, French, or Scots have obtained amongst them, serve rather to secure themselves in the way of their Trading, than to entitle them unto any possession, or command in the Countrey; the French being shut up in a few weak Forts on the North of the Canada; the Scots pretending onely to a Bay, or two in the South of Accadie; and the English being onely Tenants at the will of the Natives, for such conveniency of fishing, as they have in the adjoyning Islands.

OF VIRGINIA.

VIRGINIA hath on the North, Canada; on the South, Florida; on the East, Mare del Noort; the Western boundaries not known, or not well discovered. So called in honour of Queen Elizabeth, that Virgin Monarch; when discovered (to any purpose) by Sir Walter Raleigh, An. 1584. By the natural Inhabitants called Apalchen, from a Town of that name; one of the chief in all the Countrey.

The Inland parts hereof are Mountainous and barren, full of thick woods, a Receptacle for wilde beasts, and the wilder Salvages. Towards the Sea more plain and fruitfull, as will appear by the Survey of its several Provinces; Premising first that Virginia in the full Latitude thereof extendeth from the 34th. Degree where it joyns with Florida, unto the 44th. where it quartereth on Norumbega.

The first Discovery hereof by the two Cabots, Father and Son, An. 1497. did first entitle the Crown of England to this Countrey. The Design after seconded by one Mr. Hare, bringing thence certain of the petit Kings, or Princes hereof; who did Homage to King Henry the 8th. then sitting in his Royal Throne in the Palace of Westminster: but nothing further done in pursuance of it. And though John Verazzani, a noble Florentine, at the incouragement and charge of King Francis the first, Anno 1524. discovered more of the Countrey than Cabot did; yet the French too much in love with the pleasures of France, or intangled in Civil wars amongst themselves, looked no further after it: Insomuch that the Countrey lying thus neglected, was re-discovered by the charges and direction of Sir Walter Raleigh, then Captain of the Guard, and in great power and favour with Queen Elizabeth, Anno 1584. who sending Master Philip Amadas, and Master Arthur Barlow upon this employment, did by them take possession of it in Queen Elizabeths name; in honour of whom he caused it to be called Virginia. The next year he sent hither a Colony, under the conduct of the noble Sir Richard Greenvile: who not supplied with necessaries for their subsistence, returned home again. In the year 1587. a second Colony is sent hither, but as successlesse as the first: the businesse being undertaken onely on a private Purse, not owned as the interesse of the State, or of publick moment, till the year 1606. In the mean time the North parts of this Countrey being more perfectly discovered by Captain Bartholomew Gosnold, An. 1602. and the middle parts being taken up by the Hollanders not long after, that is to say, in the year 1609. the whole became divided into these three parts. 1. New-England. 2. Novum Belgium. 3. Virginia strictly and specially so called. To which the Isles of the Bermudas shall come in for a fourth.

NEW-ENGLAND hath on the North-East, Norumbegua; and on the South-West, Novum Belgium. So called by the Adventurers by whom first planted, not so much because opposite to Nova Albion, as some men conceive; as in imitation of the like adjuncts of distinction, given by the French and Spaniards, to Nova Francia, Nova Hispania, Nova Gallicia, Nova Granada, and the like.

The Countrey situate in the middle of the Temperate Zone, betwixt the degrees of 41. and 44. equally distant from the Artick Circle, and the Tropick of Cancer; by consequence naturally of the same degree of heat, with France, or Italy: But by reason of the thick mists which arise from the Seas adjoyning, those heats so moderated; that the Aire is found to be exceedingly agreeable to an English body. The soyl not onely fruitfull of such Commodities as grow there naturally; but also of all sorts of Grain which were brought from England. Great store of Woods, and Trees, both for fruit and building; plenty of Deer within the Woods, of Salt and Fish upon the shores; and as for Turkies, Partriges, Swans, Geese, Cranes, Ducks, Pigeons, such a full variety, as serves not onely for necessity, but for Pride and Luxury. The Commodities of most note for maintaining of Traffick, rich Furs, and many sorts of Fish, some Amber, Flax, Linnen, Iron, Pitch, Masts, Cables, Timber fit for shipping: in a word whatsoever comes to England by the way of the Sound, might be at better rates, and with far lesse trouble be supplied from hence; at least, if we believe the Relations of it, published in the year 1622.

The people for the most part well enough disposed, if not roughly handled, hospitable, and more civil than the rest of their Neighbours. So tractable and docile in matters of Religion, that liking well the Rites and Ceremonies of the English, at their first setling there, An. 1608. they would use to say that King James was a good King, and his God a good God, but their Tanto naught. Which Tanto was an evil spirit, which did haunt and trouble them every Moon, and therefore they worshipped him for fear. Which notwithstanding, I finde not any great increase of Christianity amongst the Natives: our English Undertakers thinking it sufficient if they and their houses served the Lord, without caring what became of the Souls of the wretched people; which hitherto have sate in darkenesse and the shadow of death, notwithstanding those New lights which have shined amongst them. And as for those New-comers which have planted there, all English, though some immediately out of Holland; I cannot better tell you of what strain they were, than in the words of John de Laet, Novi Orbis lib. 3. cap. 8. where he observeth, Primos hosce Colonos, uti & illos qui postea accesserunt, potissimum aut omnino fuisse ex eorum hominum Secta, quos in Anglia Brownistas & Puritanos vocant, quales non pauci & in Belgium superioribus annis se receperunt, & hinc ad socios sunt profecti. They were (saith he) either for the most part, part, or altogether of that Sect, which in England are called Brownists or Puritans; many of which had formerly betaken themselves to Holland, but afterwards went thence to joyn with their Brethren in New-England.

Principal Rivers of this part, 1 Tamescot, where our men found Oysters of nine inches long. 2 Nansic, a River of the Tarentines, one of the chief Nations of this tract. 3 Sagahadoc, of most note, and deservedly too. Of a mile and an half broad at the mouth or influx, and so upwards for the space of a dayes journey: where it maketh a large Lake three dayes journey broad, with six Islands in it; nourished with two large Channels, the one from the North-east, the other from the North-west, each of them rising from a Lake, the least of which four dayes journey long, two broad, the other double it. Of lesse note; 4 Apanawapesk, 5 Ramassoc, 6 Ashamahaga, &c.

The Countrey on the Sea-side full of notable Havens, populous, and very well inhabited, insomuch as Captain Smith reckoned in the space of 70 miles above twenty Havens, some of them capable of 500 or 1000 sail: most of them sheltered from the furies of wind and sea, by the interposition of some Islands, of which about 200 lie upon that Coast. In the space of 70 miles he reckoneth forty Villages of the Barbarous people, the chief of which, 1 Macadacut, 2 Segocket, 3 Pemmaquid, 4 Nusconcus, 5 Kennebecque, &c. all called by the name of some Brook, or water, upon which they were seated. Since added by the English, 1 S. Georges Fort, the first Plantation of the English, built by them at the mouth of the River Sagahadoc, in a Demy-Island, An. 1607. 2 New Plimouth, seated in a large and capacious Bay; at the first building (An. 1620.) consisting of nineteen families only, but in short time improved to an handsom Town: which as it was the first Town, so it was the first Church which was setled there; modelled according to the form of Mr. Robinsons Church in Holland, (that notorious Separatist,) and after made a pattern to the rest of these Churches: each absolute and Independent in it self, without subordination unto any Superior. For my part, I behold Episcopacie as the Primitive Government of the Church of Christ. But if there were no other Pretenders to it, than Presbyterie, and Independencie; I should as soon look for the Scepter and Throne of Christ (as they please to phrase it) in the Co-ordination of New-England, as in the Presbyteries of Geneva, or the Kirk of Scotland. 3 Bristow, upon the Sea-side also, but more North than Plimouth. 4 Barstaple, so called with reference to a noted Sea-town of that name in Devonshire; as 5 Boston, with like reference to as noted a Sea-port in Lincolnshire. 6 Quillipiack, on the Bay of Massachusets; a Town of an old name, but a new plantation.

This part of Virginia first discovered by Captain Gosnold, An 1602. and the next year more perfectly surveyed by some of Bristol; was by King James An. 1606. granted unto a certain Corporation of Knights, Gentelemen, and Merchants, to be planted and disposed of for the publike: Sir John Popham, then Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, being one of the Chief also in that Commission. By his encouragement, and principally at his charge, a Colonie was sent thither An. 1607. under the Presidencie of Captain George Popham, and Ralegh Gilbert, who built the Fortresse of S. George at the mouth of Sagahadoc. But the President dying the next year, and not long after him the Chief Justice also, the Colonie despairing of good success, returned home again. Successlesly again attempted An. 1614. the Undertakers were resolved to make further trial of their fortune; and in the year 1616. sent out eight ships more: but it never setled into form till the year 1620. when by the building of New-Plimouth, and some encouragements sent thence to bring others on, it grew in very short time to so swift a growth, that no Plantation for the time, ever went beyond it. The growth of old Rome and New-England had the like foundation: both Sanctuaries, Ad quæ turbæ omnis ex finitimis gentibus novarum rerum cupida confluxit, as Livy telleth us of the one; resorted to by such of the neighbouring Nations, as longed for innovations in Church and State.

2. NOVUM BELGIUM or NIEU-NEDERLANDT, hath on the North-east New-England; on the South-west Virginia, specially so called. So named from the Netherlanders, who began their plantation in it An. 1614. the Countrey being then void, and consequently open to the next Pretender, according to that Maxime in the Civil laws, Quæ nullius sunt, in bonis dantur occupanti. And yet they had some better title than a bare Intrusion, having bought Hudsons Cards and Maps, and otherwise contented him for the charge and pains of his Discovery, An. 1609. Of which more anon.

This part of the Countrey extended from the 38. Degree and an half, to the 41. 15. of a good temperature both of Aire and soil: fruitfull of those things which the Earth brought forth of its own accord, abundance of wilde Grapes, and Nuts, Trees of great height and bulk for shipping; plenty of Herbage, store of Plants, the effects of nature: and where the People did their part, such increase of Maize (a Plant of which they make their Bread) as shewed their care and industry to be well bestowed. Since the planting of the Hollanders there, abundantly well furnished (within their command) with Wheat and other sorts of Grain; as also with Flax, Hemp, and such other Commodities, as were brought hither out of Europe. The Woods repleniſhed with Deer, and the Plains with Fowl; the Rivers not inferiour to any, in Sturgeons, Salmons, and other the best sort of Fish, which can swim in the water.

The People, though divided into many Nations, and of different Languages, are much of the same disposition with the other Salvages. Clad in Beasts skins, for the most part without certain dwellings; dwelling together many Families of them under one poor roof, made of Poles meeting at the top, and covered with the bark of Trees. Their houshold stuff a Tabacco Pipe, a wooden dish, and an Hatchet made of a broad flint; their weapons, Bow and Arrows, but their Arrows made or headed with the bones of fishes. Their Religion Idolatry, or worse, their chief God the Devil, whom they worship under the name of Menetto: but with lesse pomp and Ceremony than is used in Africk. Of manners, fearfull and suspicious (not without good cause) wonderfull greedy of revenge; but if well used, tractable and obedient unto their Superiours; fickle, but very faithfull unto those who trust them:

conceived to be inclinable to the Chriſtian Faith, if they had fallen into the hands and command of thoſe, who had ſtudied godlineſs more than gain.

Rivers of note they have not many. That want ſupplyed by many large and capacious Bays, all along the Coaſt; the principal of thoſe that be 1 Manhattes, by ſome called Naſſovius, but by the Dutch commonly Noordt Rivier, which falleth into the Sea at May-Port, ſo called by Cornelius May, the Maſter of a Ship of Holland, at their firſt Plantation: another channel of it, which from the noiſe thereof they call Hell-gate, emptying it ſelf againſt an Iland called the Iſle of Nuts. The River about 15, or 16. Fathom deep, at the mouth thereof, affordeth a ſafe Road for ſhipping, but of difficult entrance. 2 Zuid Rivier, ſo called, becauſe more Southerly than the other; as fair as that, but hitherto not ſo well diſcovered.

Towns here are few either of the old or New Plantations. The Natural Inhabitants live together in Tribes, many Families of thoſe Tribes under one Roof, as before was ſaid; but thoſe Families ſo remote from one another, that their Habitations are not capable of the name of a Town, and hardly of a ſcattered Village. Nor do I finde that either the Hollanders or the Engliſh (who now divide the whole among them) are much given to building: The title of the Dutch being ſubject unto ſome diſputes; and the Poſſeſſion of the Engliſh not confirmed and ſetled. Hudſon an Engliſhman, had ſpent ſome time in the Diſcovery of this Countrey, and given his name to one of the Rivers of it. With him the Hollanders, An. 1609. as before is ſaid, compounded for his Charts, and Maps, and whatſoever he could challenge in the right and ſucceſs of that his Voyage. But they were hardly warm in their new habitations, when Sir Samuel Argal, Governour of Virginia, ſpecially ſo called (having diſpoſſeſſed the French of that part of Canada, now called Nova Scotia, An. 1613.) diſputed the poſſeſſion with them; alledging that Hudſon, under whoſe ſale they claimed that Countrey, being an Engliſhman, and licenſed to diſcover thoſe Northern parts by the King of England, could not alienate or diſmember it (being but a part or Province of Virginia) from the Crown thereof. Hereupon the Dutch Governour ſubmits himſelf and his Plantation to his Majeſty of England, and the Governour of Virginia for, and under him. But a new Governour being ſent from Amſterdam in the year next following, not only failed in paying the conditioned Tributes; but began to fortifie himſelf, and entitle thoſe of Amſterdam to a juſt propriety. To which end, he gave unto the Countrey the name of New Netherland, conferred new names on all the Bays and Rivers of it; and poſſeſſed himſelf of a little Iland neer that Branch of the Noordt-Rivier, which themſelves call Hell-gate: where he laid the foundation of a Town, called New-Amſterdam; and built a Fortreſs by the name of Orange Fort, which he garriſonned, and planted with five pieces of Cannon, Complaint whereof being made unto King Charles, and by him repreſented to the States of Holland: it was declared by the ſaid States in a publick inſtrument, that they were no ways intereſſed in it, but that it was a private undertaking of the Weſt-Indian Company of Amſterdam; and ſo referred it wholly to his Majeſties pleaſure. Which being declared, a Commiſſion was forthwith granted to Sir George Calvert, Lord Baltimore to plant the Southern parts thereof, which lie next Virginia, by the name of MARY-LAND: the like not long after to Sir Edmund Loyden, for planting and poſſeſſing the more Northern parts which lie towards New-England, by the name of Nova Albion. And though the Hollanders did then ſeem willing to be gone, and leave all they had there, for the ſum of 2500. l. yet taking advantage of the troubles which not long after followed in England, they have not only raiſed their demands to a greater height; but furniſhed the Native Indians with Arms, and taught them how to uſe their Weapons. A moſt miſchievous and wicked Act; not only tending to the damage and diſcouragement of the preſent Adventurers, but even unto the extirpation of all Chriſtians out of all theſe Countries. But the beſt is, they were the firſt that ſmarted by it. The Salvages thus armed and trained, fell fowl upon them, deſtroying their Farme Houſes, and forcing them to betake themſelves to their Forts and Faſtneſſes. What hath been ſince done (for the giving of new names to ſome of the old places, I look on as a thing of nothing) either in getting out the Dutch, or planting Colonies of the Engliſh, I can hardly ſay: but I fear that little will be acted, or to little purpoſe, till it be made a Work of more publick intereſſe.

3. VIRGINIA ſpecially ſo called, hath on the North-eaſt Nieu-Netherlandt, on the South-weſt, Florida; the name reſtrained to this part only, ſince the two laſt Plantations, which before was common to the whole. The Countrey lieth extended from the 34. to the 38. degree of Northern Latitude: by conſequence the Aire inclined unto heats, if not refreſhed and moderated by a conſtant Gale of Eaſtern winds, which they call the Brize; and the blaſts driving on it from the open Seas. Diverſified moſt pleaſantly into hills and valleys; the Mountains clothed with woods, and the Fields with fruits. The ſoil ſo fruitfull, that an Acre of Land well ordered will return 200 Buſhels, or 25 Quarter of Corn. Said alſo to be rich in veins of Allom, as alſo Pitch, Turpentine, ſtore of Cedars, Grapes, Oile, plenty of ſweet Gums, ſeveral ſorts of Plants for the Dyers uſe, ſome Mines of Iron and Copper, of Timber trees almoſt infinite numbers; as alſo great abundance of Cattel, Fiſh, Fowl, Fruit, and of Maiz no ſcarcity. Some Chriſtall found amongſt the Mountains, on the ſhore ſome Pearls; nothing deficient either in the ſoil, or Aire, for the incouragement and reward of a thriving Nation.

The People are but few in number for ſo large a Countrey, and thoſe as different in ſize, as in ſpeech or manner: Some of them, whom they call Saſques-hanoxi, of ſo vaſt a greatneſs, that in compariſon of the Engliſh they ſeemed as Giants: clad with the skins of Bears, and Wolves in ſo ſtrange manner, that the head of the Beaſt hung before their breaſts inſtead of a Jewel; their Arms, Bows, Arrows, and a Club. Some on the other ſide, whom they call Wigcocomoci, of ſo low a ſtature, that in relation to the other, they appear as Pigmies. But generally they are all of tall ſtature, well limbed, for the moſt part without Beards, and the one half of the head kept ſhaven: clothed in looſe Mantles made of the skins of Deer, with an Apron of the ſame to hide their nakedneſs; the reſt of their bodies painted over with the figures of Serpents, or of ſome other Creature of as horrid ſhape. Strong and accuſtomed to the cold, which they patiently endure, or feel not: wavering and inconſtant, crafty, and ſomewhat more induſtrious than the reſt of the Salvages; but given to anger, and as greedy of revenge as any. Gods they have many, for they worſhip all things (and them onely) which are like to hurt them; as Fire, Water, Lightning, Thunder, &c. So that it may be ſaid of them, as once Lactantius ſaid of the ancient Romans (did not the ignorance of theſe poor Wretches render them excuſable, and make them fitter objects for our Prayers and pity, than our ſcorns) Digniſſimi homines qui Deos ſuos ſemper haberent præſentes. One Devil-God above all the reſt (they call him Oke) whom they worſhip, as themſelves confeſſe, more for fear than love. Not yet converted from theſe horrible and groſſe Idolatries, by the long neighbourhood of the Engliſh; accuſed in that reſpect moſt juſtly by thoſe of Rome.

No Countrey for the bigneſſe of it can be better watered, or yield fairer Rivers. The principal of which 1. Pawhatan (ſo called by the name of that petit Roite let, whoſe Territory it paſſeth through) which having run a courſe of an hundred miles, and Navigable all that way by ſmaller Veſſels; is at his fall into the Sea about three miles broad. 2. Apamatuck, 3. Nanſamund, and 4. Chikahamania, all Tributaries to Pawhatan. 5. Pamanuke, fourteen miles more North than Pawhatan, but of leſſer note. 6. Toppahanock, Navigable 130 miles. 7. Patawomeke, paſſable by Boat 140 miles, and ſix, or ſeven miles broad, where it falleth into the Sea; increaſed by many leſſer ſtreams which come out of the Mountains, and generally well ſtored with Fiſh. 8. Pawtunxut, of a ſhorter Race, but a deeper Channel than moſt of the former (16 or 18 fathom deep) and of more choiſe of Fiſh than the others are.

Along the Banks of theſe Rivers dwell their ſeveral Tribes, ſcarce any one of which making up an hundred men (that of Patawomeke excepted, which is able to arm after their manner 160) many not yielding above 30. and ſome not ſo many. Their habitations not containing above ten, or twelve houſes apiece, but in thoſe houſes ſundry particular families, are for the moſt part covered with the Barks of Trees; ſo placed, that the common Market place ſtandeth in the midſt, at an equal diſtance: the houſes of their Weroances (or the chiefs of their Tribes) and that which ſerveth them for a Temple, being ſomewhat finer than the reſt. And of theſe habitations ſome are preſented to us by the names of Ooanoke, by the Engliſh called the blinde Town. 2. Pemeoke. 3. Shycoake, ſaid by my Author to be Civitas ampla, a large Citie, but we muſt underſtand him with Relation to the reſt of this Countrey. 4. Chowanoak 5. Secatan. 6. Mattaken. 7. Weopomioke. 8. Pyſhokonok, ſaid to be inhabited by none but women. 9. Chipano. 10. Muſcamunge, both upon the Sea; moſt of them called by the name of thoſe ſeveral Tribes which inhabit in them.

In reference to the Engliſh and their Plantations, we are to know that they made choice of the South-ſide of a large and goodly Bay, for the place of their dwelling. A Bay which thrutting it ſelf a great way up into this Countrey, and receiving into it many of the Rivers before mentioned; is by the Natives called Cheſepoack, and yieldeth the onely ſafe entrance into this part of the Countrey: the Capes thereof for that cauſe fortified by the Engliſh; that on the Southern point being called Cape Henry, and the other Cape Charles, according to the names of the two young Princes. Towns of moſt note which have been either ſince built, or frequented by them. 1. James Town (Jacobipolis, ſo named in honour of King James, on the South-ſide of that Bay, not far from the River Chikahamania: firſt founded in the year 1606. at what time it was trenched about, and ſome Ordnance planted on the Works. 2. Henries Town (Henricopolis) ſo named in honour of Prince Henry, the eldeſt ſon of King James, built in a convenient place more within the Land, 18 miles from James Town. 3. Dales-gift, ſo called, becauſe built and planted at the charge of Sir Thomas Dale, An. 1610. 4. Bermuda, an open Burrough five miles from Henricopolis. 5. Ketoughtan, a noted and frequented Port in the Bay of Cheſepoack, very much traded by the Engliſh. 6. Wicocomoco the chief Town of Pawhatan, one of the Roitelets of this Countrey; much courted by the Engliſh at their firſt ſetling here, and a long time after: a Crown being ſent him by King James with many other rich preſents, the better to ſweeten and oblige him; but for all that he proved a treacherous and unfaithfull Neighbour.

The ſum of the affairs of this laſt Plantation, is, that the buſineſſe being reſumed in the year 1606. and a Commiſſion granted to certain Noblemen and Merchants to advance the work; they fell in hand, by the Counſel and incouragement of Captain Smith, with the building of James Town (having firſt fortified Cape Henry) in which Town he fixed a Colony of 100 men. Theſe being almoſt conſumed by famine and other miſeries, were the next year recruited with 120 more brought by Captain Newport: but a Fire having caſually conſumed their Houſes, once again diſcouraged them. But the Houſes being reedified, and a Church added to the Houſes, by the induſtry of Smith their Governour, the Colony began to flouriſh, and to increaſe in reputation amongſt the Savages: eſpecially having made (as they believed) a friend of Pawhatan. In the year 1609. the Lord De la Ware was appointed Governour, and Smith commanded to return; who left here 490 perſons, (and of them 200 expert Souldiers) 3 Ships, 7 Boats, 24 great Guns, 300 Muskets, with Victuals and Ammunition neceſſary; and 39 of their Weroances, or Petit-Kings Tributaries, and Contributioners to the Engliſh. Sir Thomas Gates and Sir George Summers, ſent thither with 9 ſhips and 500 men, loſt a great part of their numbers in the Iſle of Bermudaz: the reſt not well according with the old Plantation, were at the point of returning home, when happily the Lord De la Ware arrived with three ſhips more, Anno 1610. But falling into a deſperate ſickneſſe, and come home to England, he recommended the eſtate of the Engliſh there to Sir Thomas Dale, who furniſhed them with Men, Cattel, and other neceſſaries: after whom came Sir Thomas Gates with 300 men, and ſome heads of Cattel. And then the Government hereof being conferred on Henry Earle of Southampton, the affairs here began to ſettle in a proſperous way: when unexpectedly in the year 1621. the Salvages falling on them (fearing no ſuch treatherie) killed 340 of their men; and had also then surprized James Town, if one of the Savages, who had received the Christian faith, had not discovered their intention. Since that, recovered of that blow, it went happily forwards: and might by this time have been raised to some power and greatnesse, if the English by diverting on some by-Plantations, and by imploying indigent and necessitous persons in so great a work, had not discouraged the design. For certainly one might say of this Plantation, as the Scripture doth of the Camp of David in the time of Saul, that few, or none were sent unto it (except the principals) but such as were in distresse, or debt, or some way, or other discontented: men never likely to advance and pursue a businesse of such publick interesse. Commendable howsoever in this particular, (though perhaps that commendation do belong to their Governours) that being here, they kept themselves constantly to those Forms of Worship which were established and observed in the Church of England.

As for the Natives of the whole, they were divided (as was said) into several Tribes, every Tribe under the command of their several Chiefs: which Chiefs, though many in number, and of little power, knew well enough how to keep their State unto their Subjects, and to shew it also unto strangers. For when Powhatan was pleased to give audience unto Captain Newport, and the rest of the English sent from Smith, they found him on a Bed of Mats, his Pillow of Leather imbroidered with white Beads and Pearl, attired with a Robe of skins like an Irish Mantle: at his head and feet an handsom young woman: on each side of the room twenty others, with their necks and shoulders painted Red, and about their Necks a great Chain of Beads; his principal men sitting before them in like manner. Yet notwithstanding this great State, (and great it was indeed for such petit Princes) he and the rest became so subject to the English, that in Smiths time they did not onely pay their Tributes, or Contributions, but at his command would send their Slaves & Subjects to James-Town, to receive correction for wrongs done to the Colony. And it is probable enough that those of New-England, being the greater and more powerfull Plantation (as followed with the stronger zeal, and carried on by the united purses of a prevalent Faction) were of like influence also amongst the Natives, though I finde it not expressed in so many particulars.

4. The Isles of BERMUDAZ, many in number (some say 400 at the least) are situate directly East from Virginia, from which they are distant 500 English miles; 3300 of the same miles from the Citie of London. So called from John Bermudaz a Spaniard, by whom first discovered. Called also the Summer-Islands, from the shipwrack of Sir George Summers upon that Coast; so much delighted with the sadnesse of the misadventure, that he endeavoured what he could to settle a Plantation in it.

That of more fame and greatnesse than all the rest, to which the name is now most properly ascribed, is situate in the Latitude of 32. & 30 minutes. Well stored, when first discovered, with plenty of Hogs, divers fruits, Mulberries, Palmites, Cedars; as also of Silk-worms, Pearls and Amber, and such rich Commodities: of Fowl so infinite an abundance, that our men took a thousand of one sort, as big as a Pigeon, within two or three hours. The Aire hereof very sound and healthy, found by experience (the best Argument in such a point) to be agreeable to the body of an English man; yet terribly exposed to Tempests of Rain, Thunder, and Lightning. For which, and for the many shipwracks happening on the Coasts thereof, and want of other Inhabitants to be said to own it; the Marriners have pleased to call it the Island of Devils. The soyl affirmed to be as fertile as any; well watered, plentifull in Maize, of which they have two Harvests yearly: that which is sowed in March, being cut in July; and that which is sowed in August, being mowed in December. No venemous Creature to be found in all the Island, or will live, brought hither. And besides these Commodities, of so safe a being, so fenced about with Rocks and Ilets, that without knowledge of the passages, a Boat of ten Tuns cannot be brought into the Haven; yet with such knowledge, there is enterance for the greatest ships. The English have since added to these strengths of nature, such additional helps, by Block-houses, Forts and Bulwarks in convenient places, as may give it the title of Impregnable.

It was first discovered (but rather accidently than upon design) by John Bermudaz, a Spaniard, about the year 1522. and thereupon a Proposition made in the Council of Spain, for setling a Plantation in it; as a place not to be avoided by the Spanish Fleets, in their return from the Bay of Mexico, by the Streits of Bahama. Neglected notwithstanding, till the like accidental coming of Sir George Summers, sent to Virginia with some Companies of English by the Lord De la Ware, An. 1609. Who being shipwracked on this Coast, had the opportunity to survey the Island; which he so liked, that he endeavoured a Plantation in it, at his coming home. An. 1612. the first Colony was sent over under Richard More, who in three years erected eight, or nine Forts in convenient places, which he planted with Ordinance. An. 1616. a new supply is sent over under Captain Daniel Tucker, who applied themselves to sowing Corn, setting of Trees brought thither from other parts of America, and planting that gainfull Weed Tobacco. An. 1619. the businesse is taken more to heart, and made a matter of the Publick, many great Lords and men of Honour being interessed in it: Captain Butler sent thither with 500 men, the Isle divided into Tribes, or Cantreds, to each Tribe a Burrough; the whole reduced to a setled Government both in Church and State, according to the Law of England. After this, all things so succeeded, that in the year 1623. here were said to be three thousand English, ten Forts, and in those Forts fifty pieces of Ordinance; their numbers since increasing dayly, both by Children born within the Island, and supplies from England.

OF FLORIDA.

FLORIDA is bounded on the North-East, with Virginia; on the East, with Mare del Noort; on the South, and some part of the West, with the Gulf of Mexico; on the rest of the West, with part of New Gallicia, and some Countreys hitherto not discovered. Extended from the River of Palmes in the 25th. degree of Latitude, to Rio de Secco in the 34th. which evidently speaketh it for a Countrey of large dimensions.

It was first discovered by the English under the conduct of Sebastian Cabot, Anno 1497. afterwards better searched into by John de Ponce, a Spaniard, who took possession of it in the name of that King, Anno 1527. and by him called Florida, either because he landed there upon Palm-Sunday, which the Spaniards call Pascua di Flores, or Pascha Florida; or else quia Florida erat Regio, by reason of that fresh verdure and flourishing estate in which he found it. But by the Natives it is said to be called Jaquasa.

This Countrey lying Parallel to Castile in Spain, is said to be of the same temper both for Aire and Soyl, but that it is abundantly more fruitfull: the heart of the ground not being here worn out by continual Tillage, as perhaps it may be in the other. For here they have great abundance of Maize (the natural bread-Corn of the Countrey) which they sowe twice a year, viz. March and June, and reap in the third moneth after, laying it in some publick Barns, and thence distribute it to the necessities of particular persons. Well stored with several sorts of Fruit, as Mulberries, Cherries, Chesnuts, Grapes and Plums of both excellent taste and colour: Beasts wilde, and tame, of all kindes which these Countreys yield; and of like sorts of Fowl. The Woods and Forrests full of the largest Okes, and the loftiest Cedars; some Cypresse-Trees, and Bays, of a large proportion: with great plenty of that Wood which the Inhabitants call Pavame, and the French name Sassafras, the bark whereof is Medicinal against some Diseases; and another Tree which we call Esquine, affirmed to be a Soveraign & present Remedy for the French Disease It is also said to be enriched with some Mines of Gold, and Silver; neglected by the Natives, till the coming of the Spaniards, and French, put a price upon them: and to have in it Emeralds of great worth and beauty, with many Tarquoises and Pearls. Others report that all the Gold and Silver which they have amongst them, came from some ships which had been wracked upon those Coasts: contrary whereunto it is said by the Natives, that in the Hills which they call Apalatei, there are found great Veins of a reddish Metal, which the French concluded to be Gold, though they wanted time and opportunity to search into them.

The people are of an Olive colour, great stature, and well proportioned; naked, except their Privities, which they hide with the skins of Stags: their arms and knees stained with divers paintings, not to be washed off; their hair black, and hanging down as low as their thighs. Cunning they be, and excellent in the Arts of dissimulation. So stomackfull, that they do naturally love War and Revenge, insomuch that they are continually in War with one, or other. They are crafty also and very intelligent, as appeareth by the answer they gave to Ferdinando Soto, a Spaniard, who was here among them, An. 1594. For when he went to perswade the people that he was the son of God, and came to teach them the Law: Not so, replyed a Floridan, for God never bad thee to kill and slay, and work all kinde of mischief against us. The Women when their Husbands are dead, use to cut off their hair close to their ears, and strew it on his Sepulchre; and cannot marry again, till their hair be grown long enough to cover their shoulders. Hermophrodites are here also in great plenty, whom they use as beasts to carry their luggage, and put them to all kinde of drudgery. They have all a grosse belief of the Souls immortality, but are otherwise Idolaters.

Mountains this Countrey hath not many, as being generally plain, and level; the chiefest, those called Apalatei before mentioned, supposed by the Inhabitants to be rich in Mines of Gold. Rivers of most note. 1. Rio Secco. 2. Rio Grande. 3. Serravahi; the two first named so by the Spaniards, and the last by the Natives. 4. Garunna. 5. Ligeis. 6. Axona. 7. Sequana, and 8. Charente, so called by the French, according to the names of the best Rivers in France; both French and Spaniards having severally and successively the possession it. Here are also 9. Rio de Flores, or the River of Flowers; 10 Rio de Neives, or the River of Snow; and 11. Rio de Spirito Santo, or the River of the Holy Ghost; all of them falling into the Bay of Mexico. A particular description of these Rivers, their rise, course, and greatnesse, I finde not in any of my Authors. Onely Mercator telleth us of a twelfth River, called Porte Riale, reckoned the chiefest of this Countrey, the mouth whereof is three miles broad; where it openeth into the Sea betwixt two Promontories, the one towards the West, and the other pointing to the North. Some of these Rivers are affirmed to be haunted with Crocodiles, a Creature dangerous alike both by Land and Water.

The Countrey not so well discovered and planted hitherto, as to be divided into Provinces, is commonly distributed into several Tribes; as were all Nations of the World at their first Discovery. The principal of these they reckon the Quevenes, Marianes, Canagadi, Camoni, Avavares, and Malicones, the Susolas, Quitones, and other names not usual unto us of Europe; though these more passable than many which have gone before: mollified perhaps by the French, and Spaniards, and not presented to us in their natural roughnesse; all governed by their Paraconssi, or several Chiefs, and those at deadly Feuds, and continual Wars with one another. Some have adventured on the names of particular Provinces, as Panuca, Avanares, Abarduoſia, Joguazia, Apalchia, Anthia, Samovia, Colas; but they acquaint us neither with their ſite nor bounds: except it be that Panuca lyeth on the borders of Hiſpania Nova, beyond the large and ſpacious Bay of the Holy Ghoſt; and Calos near the Cape, called Cape di Florida. Others diſtinguiſh it by the names of the ſeveral Roitelets; which varying with the change of the perſon, makes that diviſion to be very variable and uncertain alſo. But it is generally agreed that the Peninſula, which pointeth on the Iſle of Cuba, hath the name of Tegeſta, or Florida ſpecially ſo called; the name of Florida being firſt given by John Ponce unto this part onely, though afterwards communicated unto all the reſt of this Countrey. A Demy-Iſland ſtretching in length from the South to the North, 100 leagues; in breadth where broadeſt 30 leagues, and in ſome places 20 onely. Well known by the Cape of Martyrs, looking into the Iſle of Cuba, the River of the Holy Ghoſt, and three goodly Bays; the chief whereof, that entituled to S. Joſeph, all opening into the Gulf of Mexico, or the Bay of New Spain. The whole environed about, ſave where it is joyned unto the Continent, with Bars of Sands, and ſcattered Iſlands, which ſerve unto it as the out-works to ſome notable Fortreſſe.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. S. Helens, on, or near a Promontory, ſo named, where this Countrey borders on Virginia: once fortified and poſſeſſed by the Spaniard, but not long ſince abandoned. 2. Fort de Charles, Arx Carolina in the Latine, built by the French upon the Banks of the River Maio; and ſo called in honour of Charles the ninth, in whoſe time the conqueſt of this Countrey was undertaken: but ruined by the Spaniard in the War between them. 3. Port Royal, a well frequented Haven, on the mouth of the River of that name; but whether there be any Town now remaining, I am not able to ſay. More in the Land (for theſe lie all upon the Borders towards Virginia) Apalche ſuppoſed to be a place of great conſideration, in regard of the opinion which was had of the wealth thereof; (but found to be a ſmall Town, of but 40 Cottages:) and therefore firſt attempted and took in by the Spaniard, in their invaſion of this Countrey under Pamphilus of Narvaez, An. 1528. recovered by the Natives after his departure. 5. Ante, an open Burrough, nine dayes journey from Apalche, where the Salvages gave the Spaniards a ſharp encounter, and ſlew many of them; but being vanquiſhed at the laſt, they forſook the Town, of it ſelf not tenable. 6. Ocalis, an unwalled Town, but conſiſting of 600 Sheds (for I dare hardly call them Houſes) the chief of the Kingdom of Acuera. 7. Oſachile, the chief Seat of the King ſo called; and 8 Vitacuchus, a Burrough of 200 Cottages, the principal of the Kingdom of Vitacuchus, both taken by the Spaniards at the ſame time alſo. 9. S. Matthews, on the Eaſtern ſhore of the Demi-Iſland above mentioned, poſſeſſed and fortified by the Spaniard. 10. S. Auguſtines on the ſame ſhore, but more South than the other; ſituate at the mouth of a ſmall River ſo named, fortified by the Spaniard with many a ſtrong Caſtle: but for all that taken by Sir Francis Drake, An. 1485. there being found in the Fort of S. John, in which the ſtrength of the Town conſiſted, 18 braſſe pieces, and 20000 Florents in ready money, for the pay of the Garriſon. Repaired afterwards more ſtrongly than ever formerly. The Spaniards have alſo Garriſons in two other places of this Countrey, viz. S. Philip, and S. Jago; but I cannot ſay diſtinctly in what part they are.

The Government of this Countrey, is of one kinde onely, though managed by ſeveral perſons: the Supream power reſiding in the Chiefs of their ſeveral Tribes; at ſuch continual enmity with one another, that they very ſeldom joyn together in any Counſels, wherein the publick is concerned. So that the Spaniards may affirm of the preſent Floridans, as the Romans did of the ancient Britans; Nec quicquam adverſus validiſſimas gentes utilius nobis fuit, quam quod in commune non conſulebant. The not communicating of their Counſels, haſtned on their bondage. Yet in the Government of theſe Chiefs there was ſomewhat of the Parliamentary way uſed with us in Europe. For as in all matters of concernment, thoſe Chiefs adviſed with their Council: ſo if it were a buſineſſe which concerned the publick, their Prieſts and others of moſt note for gravity and wiſdom, were admitted to the Conſultation. But being ſeverally too weak for a ſtrong Invader; and never joyned together to defend themſelves, they made themſelves an eaſie prey to the French and Spaniards. Et ſic dum ſinguli pugnabant, univerſi vincebantur; by truſting to their ſingle forces they were all ſubdued. For in the year 1512. John Ponce a Native of Leon in Spain, ſetting ſayl with three ſhips from the Iſland of Porto Rico, on Palm-Sunday fell on the Peninſula before deſcribed; & for that cauſe, or from the flouriſhing verdure of it, called it Florida: but did no more than ſcowre along upon the Coaſts, and give new names to ſuch of the Promontories and Rivers as he had diſcovered, and having onely a ſlight skirmiſh with ſome of the Salvages, returned back again. The buſineſſe eight years after was again revived by Vaſques de Ayllon, who ſetting ſayl from the Haven of Plata, in Hiſpaniola, attained unto the North-Eaſt parts of this Continent, bordering on Virginia, where he left names unto the Promontory of S. Helen, and the River of Jordan: and having treacherouſly enſlaved ſome of the Natives (whom he had invited to a Feaſt) prepared for Spain; where he obtained the Kings Patent for a new Plantation. But his perfidiouſneſſe could not proſper. For in the year 1524 coming with his ſhips upon this Coaſt, one of them periſhed on the Rocks; and 200 of his men being killed at their landing, he gave over the Enterprize: the Spaniards hitherto making no more uſe of theſe Diſcoveries, than wickedly to enrich themſelves by ſtealing men, whom as wickedly they ſold for Slaves. Nor had the voyage of Pamphilus de Narvaez, Anno 1528. any better end; though undertaken with a Band of 400 foot, and 80 horſe. For having took poſſeſſion of the Countrey, in the name of his Soveraign Charles the fifth, finding ſome hopes of great treaſures to be had at Apalche (diſtant above a moneths journey from the place of his landing) he would needs march thither. In which action, though he got that and ſome other Towns, yet he loſt himſelf; few of his men returning ſafe into their Countrey, and they not knowing what became of their General. As fruitleſſe, but more famous was the enterprize of Hernandes a Soto, begun in the year 1538. and continued till 1543. who with a little Army of 350 Horſe, and 90 Foot, overran a great part of the Countrey, and brought many of the Petit

Princes

Princes under the command of Spain. But making onely a Depradatorie War of it to enrich himself, and waste the Countrey, without setling any Colony, or building any Fortifications in it to make good his gettings; the Action ended with his life, which he lost by a Feaver: the remnant of his Souldiers, whom the War had spared, under the conduct of Ludovico Muscoso di Alvarado, recovering Mexico not without great difficulties.

And so the Spaniards leave the Stage, and the French enter; sent on this voyage by *Gaspar Colign*i Admiral of France, Anno 1562. under the conduct of Ribault; who falling on that part of the Continent, which lyeth on the East-side of the Peninsula, gave the first Promontory, which he touched at, the name of Cape Francois: and after running Northward along that Coast, new-named the Rivers thereof by the names of the Seine, the Loire, the Somme, the Garund, and others of most note in his own Countrey. Coming as far North as the great River of Porto-Royal, he there built a little Fortresse, which he called Fort Charles, where he left 26 of his men to keep possession, and returned for France: his Souldiers following not long after, as well as they could; destitute of supplies from home, and not able with so small a number to command them there. The Action re-inforced about two years after, under the conduct of Landonier, who had accompanied Ribault in the former voyage: by whom some further progresse was made in this undertaking, and a little Town built on the banks of the River Maio, (so called by Ribault, because in that moneth discovered by him) which he named Charles-Fort, Arx Carolina in the Latine. But a mutiny hapning amongst his men, and some complaints made of him in the Court of France; he was called home, and Ribault sent again to pursue the enterprize: Who entring on his charge in August, An. 1565. was presently set on by the Spaniards, both by Sea and Land; his ships forced violently on the Rocks, the new Town sacked, the Colony put unto the sword, very few escaping; Ribault himself murdered in cold bloud by the Enemy, after faith given him for his life. It was thought that above 600 French were slain in this action. So ended the French hopes in Florida, the King being then preparing for a new Civil War, and loath to engage himself against the Spaniard, till the year 1627. when at the charge of Dominicus Gurgius a private person, out of an honest zeal to the honour of his Countrey, and to cry quittance with the Spaniards for their treacherous cruelty, it revived again. And though he found the Spaniards, after the defeat of Ribault, had repaired and fortified Arx Carolina, and raised two Castles more on the banks of the Maio; which they had furnished with such Pieces as they took from the French, and Garrisoned with 400 Soldiers: Yet giving a couragious onset, by the aid of the Salvages, (to whom the name and neighbourhood of the Spaniards was exceeding odious) he forced them all, demolished the works, and hanged all such of the Souldiers as the sword had spared, and so returned into France; where in stead of honour and reward for so great a service, he was in danger of losing both his life and fortunes, compelled to lurk amongst his friends till the times were changed. The Spaniards after this, to keep some kinde of possession, though not finding it in riches answerable to their greedy desires, fortified S. Matthews, and S. Augustines, on the East-side of the Demy-Island, with the Castles of S. Philip, and S. Jago, in other parts of the Countrey towards the North-East: thinking himself so strong in the Gulf of Mexico, that no forrein forces dare appear on that side of the Countrey. So that it seems he playes the part of Æsops Dog in the Manger, neither resolved to plant there himself, nor willing that any others should.

Having thus taken a survey of the main Land of Florida, let us next take a view of such Islands, as lie dispersed up and down in the Seas adjoyning; called by one general name LUCAIOS, or LUCAIÆ INSULÆ; many in number, but reducible to these three heads. 1. The Tortugas. 2. The Martyres, & 3. The Lucaios specially so called.

1. THE TORTUGAS are seven, or eight little Islands, lying on an heap at the South-west point of the Peninsula, called the Cape of Florida, in the height of 25 Degrees; distant from the Port of Havana in the Isle of Cuba (opposite unto which they lie) about six leagues. Well known among the Saylers, because much avoided; or rather avoided because known; the danger of their company making their further acquaintance shunned.

2. THE MARTYRES, called also the Caios, are three great Rocks rather than Islands, covered with a white sand, and full of bushes; the middlemost of the three the greatest: situate over against the South-East Promontory of the said Peninsula, called from hence Cabeca de los Martyres, or the Cape of Martyrs. Denominated thus by John Ponce the Spaniard, in his first discovery of this Countrey, because they seemed afar off to have some resemblance to men impaled upon Stakes, as many of the Martyrs were in the Primitive times. Infamous for the many shipwracks which have since there hapned; but of great observation amongst Sea-faring men, because they know by leaving these Rocks, or Islands on the left hand of them, that they are already entred in the Streits.

3. THE LUCAIOS specially so called, lie dispersed on the East of the Peninsula; many in number, and so called from Lucaioneque, the greatest and most Northern of them, situate in the 27 degree of Latitude; of more length than breadth, but hitherto known by name onely. Of greater note, though not so big, is that called 2. Bahama, in the middle way betwixt Lucaoneam and the Peninsula; in length 13 leagues, and eight in breadth; memorable for giving name to the violent current interposing betwixt it and the Demy-Island, called the Streits of Bahama: yet not so streit but that they are 16 miles in breadth, though of so forcible a Course, that many times neither winde nor Oars can prevail against it. 3. Guanahani, the most famous of all these Islands, because the first that was discovered by Columbus, being then almost out of hope of proceeding further; who thereupon caused it to be called S. Saviours: well shaded at that time with Trees, full of fresh Springs, and very plentifull of Cotton; now overgrown with shrubs, and bushes. 4. Guanima, by Columbus when first discovered, called S. Maria de Conception; begirt about with Rocks and quick sands, but otherwise of a pleasant and fruitfull soyl, full of delicate Springs. Others there are to the number of 24. or thereabouts, whoſe names occur in many of our larger Maps: but being we finde nothing of them but their very names, I ſhall not trouble my ſelf with the Nomenclature.

Of all in general it is ſaid that they obeyed their King ſo ſtrictly (for a King they had) that if he commanded them to leap down from a high Rock, they performed the ſame; though he gave no reaſon but his Will. The Women of ſo perfect beauty, that many of the bordering Nations forſook their own Countreys, to enjoy their Loves: their ſhape and beauty the more diſcernable, in regard not ſuffered to wear any thing till their purgations; nor after that but nets of Cotton, filled with Leaves of Herbs. But now, and long ſince, there are neither men, nor women, to be found in any of them: the people being long ſince waſted by the Spaniards in the Mines of Cuba and Hiſpaniola; or conſumed by Famine and Diſeaſes, or otherwiſe made away in Priſons, and by ſeveral Torments; to the number of a Million and 200000. as ſome have told us. And ſo we paſſe unto the other ſide of thoſe Northern Countreys; oppoſite to Nova Francia, Virginia, and the main Land of Florida: that when we fall into the Countreys now poſſeſſed by the Spaniard, we may not wander out of them till this work be finiſhed; except it be to take a progreſſe into ſome of the Iſlands, which cannot otherwiſe be viſited but by ſuch a ſtart.

OF CALIFORMIA.

CALIFORMIA in the large and general acception of it, containeth all those Provinces of Mexicana, which lie on the West-side of that Northern Peninsula, beyond Nova Gallicia, and New Spain: though in the stricter, limited to that Province onely which lieth on the other side of a long and spacious Gulf, called Mer Vermiglio, and from hence the Bay of Californiia. But taking it in the largest sense, it hath on the West New Spain, and New Gallicia, and so unto those undiscovered parts which lie furthest North, to the Streits of Anian. So witnesseth John de Laet, lib. 6. cap. 11. CALIFORMIA cummuniter dicitur quicquid terrarum Novæ Hispaniæ atque Galliciæ ad Occidentem objicitur, ad extremos Americæ Septentrionalis terminos, & Fretum quod vulgo Anian vocant. Limited in the stricter sense and acception of it, to an Island (as it is now generally conceived to be) extended in a full length from North to South, on the West hereof. So that for our more regular proceeding in the Chorographie and Story of it, we must divide it into the Continent, and the Island: the Continent subdivided into the two large Provinces of 1. Quivira, and 2. Cibola; the Island into 3. Californiia specially so called, and 4. Nova Albion.

And first, the Continent of this part which we call Californiia, hath on the East some parts of Nova Gallicia; and besides that, those vast and undiscovered Countreys, which lie on the West-side of Canada and Virginia, on the opposite shore: bounded on the North with the unknown parts of this Mexicana; on the North-west, with the Streits of Anian, if such Streits there be; on the West, with the Sea interposing betwixt it and the Island, called Mer Vermiglio; and on the South, and South-west, with the rest of Nova Gallicia, from which parted by a great River called Rio del Noort. A River which rising in the 40. degree of Northern Latitude, first parteth Tignez a Province of Quivira, from that of New Mexico, one of the Provinces of Nova Gallicia; and after a long course falleth into the Sea, called Mer Vermiglio, above Cinoloa, another of the Provinces of that Division. Divided as before was said, into the two great Provinces of 1. Quivira, and 2. Cibola.

1. QUIVIRA, taking up the most Northern parts of this side of America, is said to be very plain and level; of few Trees, not many houses, nor much stored of people; quite destitute of fruits and Corn, and yielding nothing for mans life but the flesh of beasts, which they eat raw, and swallow down in great bits without any chewing. The men apparelled in Buls-skins, from the head to the feet; the women, though in a cold Countrey, with no other garment than their hair, which they wear so long, that it serveth them in stead of a vail to hide their nakednesse. They live in Hoords and companies, like the Hoords of the Tartars; not having any certain dwellings (except some chief men) but remove from one place to another, like the ancient Nomades. Neer Neighbours unto Tartary, from whence (not being much distant from it) it is supposed that the Inhabitants first came; and from hence by degrees peopled all America.

The Countrey being full of herbage, breeds great store of Cattel; differing not much in bigness from those of Europe, but that they have an high bunch betwixt their shoulders; bristled upon the back like Bores, with somewhat which resembleth the mane in Horses, and the beard in Goats; their legs short, and clad with fetlocks, their horns short, but sharp; the whole Beast of an aspect so horrid, that an Horse will not venture near them, till well acquainted. Yet in these Beasts lie all their Riches; these being to this people, as we say with us of our Ale to Drunkards, meat, drink, and cloth, and more too. For the Hides yield them Houses, or at least the covering of them; their bones, bodkins; their hair, thread; their sinews, ropes; their horns, maws, and bladders, vessels; their dung, fire; their Calveskins, budgets to draw and keep water; their bloud, drink; and their flesh, meat. There is thought to be some traffick from China, or Cathay, hither. For when Vasques di Coronado conquered it, he saw in the further Sea certain ships, not of common making, which seemed to be well laden, and did bear in their prows the figure of Pelicans; which could not be conjectured to come from any Countrey but one of these two. I know some place this Countrey more within the Land: and others are so far from letting it look towards any part of the Sea, that they have laid it close unto the back of Virginia. For my part, I have laid it along the Coasts, upon good authority; though I deny not but that some parts hereof may be more remote. Or else to reconcile the difference, it may thus be ended; that the maritime parts being known by other names, the Inlands might retain more specially the name of Quivira; as we have seen in many other Countreys before described.

And this I am the rather inclined to think, because I finde mention of three Provinces on the North of Cibola, but in the way unto Quivira; the one called Seio, the other called Cicuic, and the third Tignez: which I look upon as the maritime parts of the same one Countrey, but better peopled and frequented then the Inlands are, because lying in the way of traffick. The principal Towns of which Provinces: 1 Acus, or Acuco, a small Town, but situate in a strong and defensible place; about which groweth some store of Cotton, which from the place the Natives call by the name of Acuco. 2. Tignez, on the banks of a River so called; inhabited by a stout and couragious people; who being resolved not to fall alive into the hands of the Spaniards, when besieged by Vasques de Coronado, after they had held out above six weeks, laid all their household-stuffe and treasure in an heap together, which they set on fire; and taking their Wives and Children into the midſt of their ranks, made a deſperate Sally on the Enemy. A reſolution worthy of a better fortune, moſt of them being ſlain in the fight, and the reſt trod under the Horſes feet, or drowned in paſſing over the River. Yet would not thoſe few which were left give up the Town, till it was fired about their ears, and no longer tenable: the Spaniard buying this victory (notwithſtanding the great odds of their Arms) with the loſſe of moſt of their Horſes, the death of ſeven of their men, and the wounding of eighty. 3. Cicuick, a ſmall Burrough, but the chief of that Province, four dayes journey from Tignez: from whence the whole way unto Quivira, ſpecially ſo called, being 90 miles, hath in it neither ſtone nor Tree, nor any land mark; inſomuch as the Spaniards were fain to make heaps of Cow dung, to ſerve for their direction in their coming back.

The firſt diſcovery of this Countrey is to be attributed to the diligence of Antonio de Mendoza, Viceroy of Mexico, who deſirous to get wealth and honour by ſome new Adventures, imployed in the diſcovery of theſe Northern parts, Frier Marco de Niſa. By him and by a Negro which he had for his Guide, there was ſome light gotten of Cibola, the next Province to this; but ſo diſguiſed in lyes, and wrapt up in fictions, that that light was little more than darkneſſe. Yet by that glimmering, Franciſco Vaſques di Coronado, in the year 1540. vndertook the buſineſſe; and ſped ſo well, that having made his way through Cibola, he took the Town of Tignez, as we heard before, and laid his way open to Quivira. Moved to a further journey by the report of the Salvages, (who deſired to haſten him out of their Countrey) telling him of the wealth of Tatarax, who reigned in the In-land parts of Quivira: a bearded man (thoſe of this Countrey wearing none) of a white complexion, and one who in his Chappel worſhipped a Croſſe, and the Queen of Heaven. On went the Spaniards towards Quivira, and found out the Tatarax, a poor naked Prince; maſter of no more treaſure than a brazen plate hanging on his breaſt, and without any ſuch ſign of Chriſtianity as they did expect. So fruſtrated of all their hopes, and having got nothing but their labour for their pains, and the honour of a new diſcovery; with the loſſe of many of their men, they returned to Mexico, An. 1542. Some Friers made bold to ſtay behinde, but were all ſlain by the people of Quivira, except onely one; who like Jobs meſſenger was left to carry news of the murder: The Spaniards never looking into theſe cold Countreys, where nothing elſe was to be gotten but blows, and hunger.

2. CIBOLA hath on the North, Quivira; on the South, and South-Eaſt parts New Gallicia, from which divided by the River called Rio del Nort, as before was ſaid; the Weſt-ſide of it waſhed with the Mer Vermiglio, interpoſed betwixt it and the Iſland, or Califormia ſpecially ſo called. By the Natives it is called Zuni.

The aire hereof indifferently temperate, if not too much ſubject in the Winter, to froſts and ſnows. The Countrey for the moſt part level, rarely ſwelled with Hills, but thoſe very Rocky. No Trees that bear them any fruit; few Trees at all, except it be a Wood of Cedars, from which abundantly ſupplied both with fewel and timber: plenty of Maize, and ſmall white Peaſe, which they make their bread of; great ſtore of Veniſon, but they kill it onely for the skin; ſome quantities of Sheep, known for ſuch by their Fleeces onely, but otherwiſe as big each of them as an Horſe, or Ox, ſome of their Horns weighing fifty pounds. Of Lions, Bears, and Tygers ſo great a number, that they have more then enough for themſelves, and could well ſpare them to their Neighbours.

The people generally well limbed, and tall of ſtature, ingenious in reſpect of ſome other Salvages; and though naked except their privities onely, or covered onely with a Mantle, yet thoſe Mantles wrought in divers colours: which, with ſome quantity of Cotton which they have amongſt them (none of it growing in their Countrey) ſhew them to be an induſtrious Nation, and to maintain a courſe of trade with ſome of their Neighbours. A further Argument of which is thoſe painted skins, which they have from Cicuique, or ſome other Countrey which lies towards the Ocean; my Authour telling that they travel for them eight dayes journey towards the North: and probably enough may be ſome of thoſe Commodities, which the Inhabitants of the maritime Provinces of Quivira do receive from Cathay, or China, with which they are ſuppoſed to traffick, as before was ſaid. Like induſtry is noted in the women alſo, one of which will grind and knead more Maize in a day, than the women of Mexico do in four. In other things not differing from the reſt of the Salvages.

This Countrey was firſt made known to the Spaniards, by the Travels of Frier Marco de Niſa, employed on new Diſcoveries by Antonio de Mendoza, as before was ſaid. Leaving Couliacan, the moſt Northern Province of Nova Gallicia, he overcame a tedious Deſart four dayes journey long; at the end of which he met ſome people, who told him of a pleaſant Countrey four dayes journey further, unto which he went. And ſtaying at a place called Vacapa, he diſpatched the Negro, whom he took with him for his Guide, to ſearch towards the North; by whom he was advertiſed after four dayes abſence, that he had been informed of a large and wealthy Province called Cibola, a moneths journey thence: wherein were ſeven great Cities under the Government of one Princeſſe, the houſes of which were built of ſtone, many ſtories high, the Lintels of their Doors adorned with Turquoiſes; with many other ſtrange reports of their markets, multitudes, and riches. But neither the Frier nor the Negro had the hap to ſee it: the Negro being killed on the very borders, and the Frier ſo terrified with the news, that he thought it better to return, and ſatisfie the Vice-Roy with ſome handſome Fiction, than put himſelf upon the danger of a further journey. To that end he enlarged and amplified the Reports which the Negro ſent him; gave to the Deſarts in his way the name of the Kingdoms of Tonteac, and Marata; aſcribed unto this laſt a great Citie called Abacu, once well inhabited, but at that time deſtroyed by Wars; to the other a more civil and well-clothed people, than in other places. Inflamed with which reports, Vaſques de Coronado undertook the action, but found the Frier to be a Frier; nothing of moment true in all his Relations: the Kingdom of Marata to be found onely in the Friers brains; Tonteac to be nothing but a great Lake, on whose Banks had once been many Cottages, now consumed by Wars. And as for the seven Cities of such wealth and bigness, he found them to be seven poor Burroughs; all situate within the compasse of four leagues, which made up that so famous Kingdom which the Frier dreamt of. The biggest of them held about 500 Cottages; the rest of them not above half that number. One of them, lest he might be said to return without doing something, he besieged, and took; but found it such an hot piece of service, that he was twice beaten down with stones as he scaled the Rampiers: but having taken it at the last, he found in it great plenty of Maize to refresh his Army, and caused the Town (consisting of 200 houses, or thereabouts) to be called Granada, for some resemblance which it had to that Citie in Spain. Such as have since endeavoured the Discovery of these North-west parts, and sayled along the shores hereof on Mer Vermiglio, have added hereunto the names of some points, or Promontories: known in the Maps by the name of Po de S. Clara, not far from the mouth, or influx of Rio del Nort. 2. Las Plaias. 3. St. Michael. 4. Rio de Teron. 5. Laques del Oro bordering on Quivira; and 6. Rey Coronado, on the East of that.

Betwixt this Region and Quivira specially so called, lieth a Countrey, which the said Vasques names Tucayan, memorable for the famous River of Huex; on the Banks whereof for the space of 20 leagues stand 15 Burroughs well-built, and furnished with Stoves, (if he hath not in this part of the Story outlied the Frier) as in other cold but more civil Countreys, against the extremities of Winter. This Region stretching seven dayes journey to the River of Cicuique, I reckon to belong to the North-East parts of Cibola. As I do also the fruitfull Valley of Aroia de Corazones, which they passed in their way hither from Conliacan; with the Town and Territory of Chichilticala, and the Valley of Nuestra Sennora, or our Ladies Dale, in the South parts of it: not knowing otherwise what Province to referre them to.

Proceed we now unto the Island, the other general part of this Division, parted from Cibola and New Gallicia, by a narrow Sea called Mer Vermiglio; and by some the Golf of Californiа; environed on all other parts by the main Ocean. Extended in a great length from the 22th. degree of Northern Latitude, to the 42th. but the breadth not answerable. The most Northern point hereof, called Cabo Blance, of which little memorable. The most Southern, called the Cape of S. Lucas, remarkable for the great prize there taken from the Spaniards by Captain Cavendish, in his Circumnavigation of the World, Anno 1587. Supposed in former times to have been joyned, in the North parts of it, above the Latitude of 27. to the rest of the Continent; and so described in most of our later Maps, till the year 1626. and after that in the Chart, or Map of John de Laet, Anno 1633. which I wonder at: himself affirming, that in many of the old Maps it was made an Island; lib.6. cap.11. and that he had seen a fair Map in parchment, a very fair and ancient draught, Quæ Californiam in ingentis Insulæ modum, a Continente divideret, in which it was expressed for a spacious Island, lib.6. cap.17. The reason of the Errour was, that those who first endeavoured the Discovery of it, sayling up the Sea of Mer Vermiglio, found it to grow narrower and narrower towards the North; till it seemed to be no bigger than some mighty River; but that of such a violent current, that no Boat was able to passe upwards with winde, or Oar, unlesse haled up with Cords by the strength of men. And taking it to be a River, they gave it the name of Rio de Bona Guia; known by that name, and continued in the opinion of being a River, till the year 1620. or thereabouts. At what time some Adventurers beating on these Coasts, fell accidently upon a strait but violent passage, on the North hereof, which brought them with a strong current into Mer Vermiglio: discovering by that Accident, that the waters falling into that Sea, was not a River, as formerly had been supposed, but a violent breaking in of the Northern Ocean; by consequence that this part of Californiа was not a Demi-Island, or Peninsula, but a perfect Island. And looking on it as an Island, we have divided it into Nova Albion, and Californiа specially so called.

1. And first Californiа specially so called, containeth the Southern parts hereof, as far as to the Latitude of 38. where it bordereth on Nova Albion. Of which Countrey, though so near to New Spain, and New Gallicia, and though discovered so long since, we yet know but little: the Spaniards either wanting men for new Plantations, or finding small incouragements here to invite them to it. Furnished on the Sea-coasts with great plenty both of Fish and Fowl, which they finde in great Islands of Weeds, floating on the Seas: and more within the Land, with a kinde of Beast haired like a Goat, and with teats like a Cow, but otherwise resembling Deer; which they kill with their Dogs. Some Mountains in it said to cast Fire Ashes, which the Spaniards for that reason call Cacofogo. The people numerous, and thick set; insomuch that on the Banks of the supposed River of Bona Guia, were numbred three and twenty Nations, all of several Languages. In their persons like the rest of the Salvages; but of different dresses. Some of them painting their faces all over, some half way onely; other with painted Vizards resembling faces: holes in their Nostrils, for their Pendants; the tips of their Eares loaded, if not over-loaded, with the bones of Fishes hanging at them. A girdle about their waste, to which they fasten a bunch of Feathers that hang down behinde them like a Tail: the Women using the like bunches before them also. Their chief God the Sun, (as that of Cibola is the Water) which they most affectionately Worship, as the cause of the increase of their fruits and plants. Joyned in commission with which God, they were taught by Alarcon a Spaniard to Worship a woodden Crosse (the more irrational Idolatry of the two) which he caused to be erected at his coming away; with instructions to kneel before it every morning, at the first rising of the Sun: so teaching them to Worship their two Idols at once, or to translate their devotions from the Sun a Creature of God's, to a plain woodden Crosse (of which they knew nothing but the form) the work of a Carpenter.

It is also told us of this people, that each family is ordered by the Father of it, without other government: yet so well managed, that they allowed but one wife to a man, and punished Adultery with death; the Maids not suffered to converse, or talk with men before their marriage, but to abide at home & work; the Widows not to marry again, till they had mourned at least half a year for the death of their husbands. Matters more savouring an Utopian Common-wealth, than a Californian.

Places of most observation in it. 1. The Capes of S. Clara, and S. Lucas; the first on the South-East point of the Peninsula towards New Gallicia; the other on the South-West towards Asia. 2. S. Crosses, (Sinus S. Crucis) a capacious and convenient Haven near the Cape of S. Clara; so called becaus discovered upon Holy-Rood day. 3. Cabo di las Plaias, more within the Bay; so named, because the shore shewed in little Hillocks, without grasse, or shrubs; the Spanish word signifying as much. 4. Cabo Boxo, towards the bottom of the Gulf, (from whence the Land on the other side may be easily seen) in the Latitude of 29. 5. S. Andrews, a convenient Haven, and not far off an Island of the same name, with some Cottages in it. 6. S. Thome, an Island of 25 leagues in compasse, at the mouth of the Gulf; rising towards the South in an high Mountain, under which a convenient Road for shipping, the Sea being thereabouts 25 fathoms. Then on the other side towards the Sea, we have 7 S. Abad, a convenient Haven, surrounded with a Countrey which seemed rich and pleasant. 8. Cape Trinidado, a Promontory well known to Sea men. 9. Cape de Cedros, so called from the Cedars growing near it, in the Latitude of 28. and 15 minutes; with an Island not far off of the same name also. 10. Cape Enganno, in the Latitude of 31. 11. Puebla de las Canoas, so named from the multitude of Boats (by themselves called Canoes) which the people used; four degrees more Northward than that Cape. And 12 Cabo de Galera, so named from the resemblance which it had to an Hat, in the Latitude of 36. But these two placed by John de Laet within the Countrey of Seyo, one of the Provinces of Quivira. Understand here, that these are onely the names of places, not of Towns, or Villages, (for whether there be any such, I am yet unsatisfied:) and that there are many other Promontories, Bayes, Rivers and Islands on both sides of this Region, which I finde no names for.

The first discovery of this Countrey we owe to Ferdinando Cortez (of whom more hereafter) who in the year 1534. furnished out two ships from the Haven of S. Jago in the Western shores of Hispania Nova, to search these Seas: who making some small progresse in it, encouraged him the next year to pursue it in person; and passing up the Gulf as high as to the River of S. Peter, and Paul, (so called, because discovered on the 29 of June, the Annual feast of those Apostles) for want of victuals and other necessary provisions, returned back again. The businesse having slept awhile, was in the year 1539. awakened by Francisco de Ulloa, one that had accompanied Cortez the time before: who did not onely search to the bottom of the Gulf, but having throughly canvassed all the Eastern shores, he turned his course, and made as fortunate a Discovery also of the Western Coasts. Landing, he took possession of the Countrey with the wonted ceremonies, for the King of Spain; and in the place set up a Crosse to serve as a remembrance of his being there. After him followed Ferdinando the Alaroon, who discovered many leagues up the course of the supposed River of Buena Guia; where Naguacatus, one of the Chiefs of their Clans, or Tribes, did submit unto him: advancing so far towards the North, that at the last he heard news of Cibala; but unprovided at that time for a journey thither. And on the other side, Rodorico Cabrillo, in the year 1642. coasting along the Western shores of this Countrey, discovered two small Islands beyond Cape Galera; the one of which he called S. Lukes, and the other the Island of Possession: and beyond them a fair Haven, which he called Sardinas. But yet not finding what they looked for, which was Gold and Silver; and hungry honour yielding but a poor subsistence: the further search of these Countreys was quite laid aside; almost as little known now, as before Columbus first set sayl upon New Discoveries.

4. NOVA ALBION formerly conceived to be a part of the Continent, hath of late times been found to have taken up but some part of this Island; lying about the 38 degree of Latitude, and so Northwards as far as to Cape Blanco, as they call it now. Discovered by Sir Francis Drake in his Circumnavigation of the World, An 1577. and by him named Nova Albion, in honour of England, his own Countrey, which was once called Albion.

The Countrey abundantly repleniished with Herds of Deer, grasing upon the Hills by thousands: as also with a kinde of Conies, in their feet somewhat like a Want, and on each side a Sack where they keep such victuals as they cannot eat. The flesh of these Conies serves the people for food; and of their skins, the Kings, or Chiefs of their several Tribes, make their Royal robes. The men quite naked; the women with a piece of Mat instead of an Apron, chaste, and obedient to their husbands. Their houses made of Turf and Osier, so wrought together, as serves to keep them from the cold: in the midst whereof they have an Hearth where they make fire, about which they lye along upon Beds of Bulrushes. What Towns they have, and whether they have any, or not, and by what names called, if they have any, must be referred to a further Discovery: there being nothing to that purpose delivered hitherto. And yet not seated so far North, but that it may be capable of a further light, if any noble Undertakers would adventure on it.

The English were no sooner landed, but the Inhabitants presented themselves before the General, with presents of Feathers, and Kalls of Net-work made of Bull-rushes; which he received and requited with great humanity. The news of their Arrival being carried further, one of their Kings thought fit to bestow a visit on them. A person of a goodly stature, attired in Cony-skins, with many tall men attending on him; one going before him with a Mace, at which hanged three Crowns, with as many Chains; the Chains of bone, but the Crowns of knit-work, made of Feathers, very ingeniously composed. After him followed many of the common ſort, every one having his face painted with white, black, and ſome other colours; and every one with ſome preſent, or other in their hands, even the very boyes. Being brought into the Generals preſence, the Mace-bearer made a long Speech, which might be well meant, though not underſtood: and that being ended, the King cauſed the Crown to be put upon the Generals head, and the three Chains about his neck; the Common people offering ſacrifices about the Fields, in great ſolemnity. Not to be interdicted thoſe ſuperſtitions, though the Engliſh (whom they took for Gods) ſeemed offended at them. Finally, after much kindneſſe expreſſed on both ſides, the General promiſing in the name of the Queen of England, to take them into his protection; he cauſed a Pillar to be erected in the place: on which he faſtned the Arms of England, the Queens name, and his own; and ſo returned unto his ſhips. But the Countrey lying ſo far off that no benefit could redound by it to the Engliſh Nation, but the honour of the firſt Diſcovery; the name of Nova Albion by little and little was forgotten, and at laſt quite left out of the Maps, or Charts; onely a Point, or Promontory, by the name of Po de Franciſco Draco, being left unto us to preſerve his memory. And though we have cauſed the name of Nova Albion to be reſtored unto the Maps, as it was before: yet we muſt let the Reader know, that the name of New Albion hath been given lately with as much propriety, but more hopes of profit and advantage, to that part of Virginia, which lieth betwixt Mary-Land and New-England, as before was noted.

Oppoſite to Cape Blanco, and the extream North parts of America, the ſuppoſed Kingdom of ANIAN, from whence the Streits of Anian which are thought by ſome to part America from Aſia, do derive their name; is conceived to lie. Suppoſed, and ſuppoſed onely, for not certainly known: the very being of ſuch a Kingdom, and ſuch Streits, being much ſuſpected.

OF NOVA GALLICIA.

NOVA GALLICIA is bounded on the East and South with Nova Hiſpania, or New Spain; on the Weſt, with the River Buena Guia, and the Gulf of Californiа; the Countreys beyond it on the North not diſcovered hitherto. So called becauſe of ſome reſemblance which it was thought to have to Gallicia, a Province of Spain, in Europe; the word Nova being added to it for diſtinctions ſake.

It is ſituate between the 18th. and 28th. degree of the Northern Latitude, which meaſured from the Port of the Nativity (by the Spaniards called Natividad, and contractedly Navidad) where it confineth on New Spain, to the moſt Northern border of Cinaloa, makes 300 leagues: the breadth hereof, for ſo much as is poſſeſſed by the Spaniards, but an hundred onely. But taking in New Biſcay, and Nova Mexicana into the Accompt, the breadth will be greater than the length.

The Aire hereof generally very temperate, but more inclined to heat than cold; many times ſubject unto Thunders and great ſtorms of rain; but for the moſt part of ſo ſound a conſtitution, that the Inhabitants attain to a good old Age; contagious diſeaſes ſeldom known amongſt them. The ground by conſequence ſomewhat of the drieſt; if not moiſtned with the morning Dews, which fall very frequently, and whether by the temperature of the Aire, or Soyl, apt to produce a kinde of Gnat (which the Latines call Cimices) affirmed to be as big as a bean, which by their ſtings do very often plague the people, and raiſe bliſters on their bodies as big as Walnuts.

The Countrey more Mountainous than plain, and in moſt parts ſandy; Quarries of ſtone in many places, but little Marble, or any other ſtone of value. Good ſtore of Mines of Braſſe and Silver, few of Gold, or Iron; and amongſt all their Metals a great mixture of Lead. The ſoyl ſo rich, that it yields 60 meaſures of Wheat for one; and for one of Maize, above two hundred: the Rivers plentifull of Fiſh, and the Woods of Beaſts; great ſtore of Bees without ſtings, which make their Honey in the Forreſts without other Hives. And as for Apples, Pears, Citrons, Figs, Malcetons, and other Europæan Fruits, they thrive better here than they do in Spain, except the Cherry and the Olive: of which the laſt is moſt an end undermined by Emmets; and the firſt thruſts out ſuch an harveſt of Leaves (occaſioned by the natural rankneſſe of the ground) that they ſeldom come to their perfection.

The people wavering and inconſtant, apt upon any diſcontent to forſake their houſes, betake themſelves unto the Woods, and many times to return to their antient Barbariſme. Crafty, and docile even in matters which concern Religon: but ſlothfull and impatient of any labour, to which not to be hired but for very great wages. Much given to ſinging, dancing, and ſometimes to drinking; and were it not that they loved their Liquour, few of them would betake themſelves to the cares of Husbandry. Of ſtature reaſonably tall; their Garments for the moſt part a ſhirt of Cotton, with a Mantle over it, faſtned with two Buckles about their ſhoulders. They dwell in Villages and Towns, according to the greatneſſe of their ſeveral Tribes: thoſe Tribes commanded by their Chiefs, who ſucceed hereditarily; but ſubject to the Judges and other Officers of the King of Spain. As for the Spaniards who here dwell, they betake themſelves generally to merchandiſe, and the ſearch of Metals; ſome few to Husbandry and graſing, but make not the beſt uſe which they might of the Countrey: For though here be great plenty both of Sugar-Canes, and of Caccineel, yet they neglect to refine the one, and attend the ordering of the other; finding perhaps an eaſier, or a greater profit in the other Commodities.

The Mountain of moſt note in all this Countrey, is that betwixt Guadalaiara and Zacatecas; a league in height, but of ſuch a precipice withall, that no Horſe nor Cattel can aſcend it: their other Hills Rocky, but cloathed with woods, full of vaſt Pines, large Okes, and great ſtore of Wolves. The River of moſt name is that called Bazania, which riſing out of the Lake of Mechuacan in Nova Hiſpania, falls down a Cataract about four leagues from Guadalaiara, of ten fathoms deep, and ſo tumbleth into Mare del Zur: in no place fordable, nor having any paſſage over it but on Reeds and Rafts, on which the paſſenger ſitteth with his Commodities, his Horſe ſwimming by; not ſafe at any time, and at moſt times dangerous. Some Lakes here be of 20. ſome of 12 leagues compaſſe; environed with rich Paſtures on every ſide. Thoſe of leſſe note ſhall be remembred in their proper places.

It comprehends the Provinces of 1. Cinaloa. 2. Conliacan. 3. Xaliſco, and 4. Guadalaiara; on the Weſtern ſhores. 5. Zacatecas. 6. New Biſcay. 7. Nova Mexicana, more within the Land. Of all theſe ſomewhat ſhall be ſaid, though of each but little.

1. CINALOA, is the moſt Northern Province of New Gallicia, bounded upon the Weſt, with the River of Buena Guia, and ſome part of the Bay of Californiа; on the Eaſt, with a long chain of Mountains, called the Hills of Tepecſuan; on the North, with the South parts of Cibola; on the South, with Conliacan.

The Aire for the moſt part clear and healthy, the ſoyl fat and fruitfull, productive of Maize, Pulſe, a ſort of long Peaſe which the Latines call Phaſeoli, but we have no proper Engliſh name for; of which abundantly plentifull. Great ſtore of Cotton-wool, wherewith both Sexes are apparelled. Well watered with the Rivers. 1. Petatlan. 2. Tamochala. 3. Paſcua. 4. Taquim; of no long courſe, all of them riſing from the Hills of Teperſuam, and thoſe but 36 leagues diſtant from the Sea-ſhores. By reaſon of theſe Rivers here are very rich Paſtures, which breed great ſtore of Kine, Oxen, and other Cattel.

The people are generally tall, higher than the Spaniards by a hand breadth, warlike and ſtrong, not con-conquered by the Spaniard without great difficulty; their Arms a Bow and poiſoned Arrows, with great maſſie Clubs. Their Garments for the moſt part of Cotton-wool; their hair nouriſhed to a great length, which the men tye up in a knot, but the Women ſuffer to hang down to the full length of it. Both Sexes at the firſt coming of the Spaniards thither, without cloaths at all, but to hide their ſhame; moſt miſerably poor, worſhippers of the Sun, and not a few Cannibals amongſt them.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. S. Philip and Jacob, ſituate on the bank of a River, about 42 leagues from the Town of Couliacan, but of no great note. 2. S. Johns de Cinaloa, a Colony of the Spaniards planted here long ſince; and re-inforced by a ſupply brought thither in the year 1554. by Franciſco de Tharra; ſcarce able to defend themſelves from the old Inhabitants, who ever and anon diſturb them with a freſh Alarm. Beſides theſe here are onely ſome ſcattered Villages, and thoſe not many: the Spaniards finding onely 25 old Forts in all the Countrey, when they firſt made themſelves Maſters of it, under the Conduct of Nonnez de Guzman, Anno 1542. People every where ſubmitting without any reſiſtance, or if they gathered to an head, ſoon diſperſed again. For what could naked men do againſt an Army?

2. COULIACAN, or CULUCAN, lieth on the South of Cinaloa, coaſting along the Bay of California, which it hath on the Weſt; & part of New Biſcay, on the Eaſt. The Countrey well provided of fruits, inferiour unto none for all ſorts of proviſions; and not without ſome Mines of Silver found out by the Spaniards. The chief Rivers of it. 1. Rio de Mucheras, or the River of Women, in the North part of the Province; ſo called becauſe the Spaniards found there more women than men, occaſioning the opinion that it was inhabited by Amazons. 2. Rio de Sal, a goodly River; both ſides whereof are very well peopled. 3. Piaſtla, more towards Xaliſco.

The people not much different from the reſt of Gallicia, ſave that their Women were more handſom, both for dreſſe and perſonage: all cloathed in Garments of Cotton-wool, when firſt known to the Spaniards; and yet the men not free from the Sin of Sodom. Their houſes neatly thatched with ſtraw; and over the Lintels of the Doors ſome Paintings, as ſhameleſſe as the very fowleſt of Aretines Poſtures. Ignorant of Gold, which they had no Mines of; but of late times acquainted, to their coſt, with Silver; which they are compelled to dig, and refine for the Spaniards.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Piaſtla, on the River ſo called, about a dayes journey from the Sea; well built, and artificially contrived in reſpect of others; never recovered of that blow which it had from the Spaniards, who in the Conqueſt of this Countrey waſted all before them. 2. Quinola, near Rio des Mugeres. 3. Quatrabarrios, an old Town, but new named by the Spaniards, becauſe it conſiſted of four parts. 4. El Leon, an old Burrough which from a Lyon there found, had this new name alſo. 5. Couliacan, on a River ſo named, once the chief of this Province. 4. S. Michael, on the River of Women, built by Nonnez de Guzman, in the Latitude of 25. but afterwards deſerted, or removed rather to a fitter place: and now fixed in the Valley of Harroba, two leagues from the Sea, in a flouriſhing and wealthy ſoyl both for Corn and Paſturage. The whole Countrey conquered by the Spaniards, An. 1531. under Nonnez de Guzman, moſt barbarouſly burning down the Towns, and deſtroying the people; as if they came not to ſubdue, but root out the Nation.

3. XALISCO, or GALESCO, as ſome Writers call it, hath on the North, Couliacan; on the South, New Spain; on the Eaſt, the Province of Guadalaiara; on the Weſt, the large Bay of California. So called from Xaliſco the chief Town of it, when ſubdued by the Spaniards.

The ſoyl hereof very fit for Maize, which it yields good ſtore of, but not often herbage good for Cattel; which is reckoned for their greateſt want. The North parts called Chiametla, of the two moſt fruitfull, and better peopled; having in it ſtore of Wax and Honey, with ſome Mines of Silver. The people formerly Man-eaters, and much given to quarrel; from which Reformed ſince their Converſion to the Goſpel. Tenacious ſtill of one of their ancient Cuſtomes, which is to carry the ſmalleſt burden upon their ſhoulders, and not under their arms; which to do they think very much miſ-becoming.

Chief Rivers hereof, 1. S. Sebaſtians. 2. Rio de Spiritu Sancto, and 3. the great and famous River of Barania, ſpoken of before. Upon the banks of which are ſituate their moſt principal Towns, viz. 1. Xaliſco, giving name to the whole Province, and to a large Promontory, called by the Spaniards Sierra de Xaliſco, thruſting it ſelf into the Bay of Californiia, over againſt the Iſlands called the Three Maries; the Citie taken and deſtroyed by Nonnez de Guzman, An. 1530. 2. Compoſtella, now the chief Citie of the Countrey, and a Biſhops See; founded by the ſaid Nonnez de Guzman, An. 1531. when he had fully conquered the Countrey: by whom peopled with Spaniards, and by him called Del Spiritu Santo. But founded in ſo ill a place, and ſo bad an aire, deſtitute both of food for men, and graſſe for horſes; as plainly ſhewed him to have better judgement in Souldiery then in Architecture. 3. Purification, a ſmall Burrough on the Sea-ſide, and in the extremity of this Countrey towards Nova Hiſpania, near the Port of Natividad. 4. S. Sebaſtian in Chiametla, on the River ſo called, firſt built by Franciſco de Tharra above mentioned: who having found hereabouts ſome rich Mines of Silver, brought hither in the year 1554. a new Spaniſh Colony; and building houſes for his Miners in convenient places, occaſioned the whole Tract to be called de Tharra.

4. GUADALAIARA hath on the Weſt, Xaliſco; on the Eaſt and South, ſome parts of Nova Hiſpania; on the North, the Province of Zacatecas: well watered with the River Barania, which runneth through the midſt thereof, ſome of his by-ſtreams moiſtening the other parts. The Countrey very wealthy wealthy in Mines of Silver, plentifull of Maize, and fortunate in the production of Wheat and such other fruits, as were brought hither out of Europe. The Character of the people we have before, applied in general to all the Natives of New Gallicia, but most peculiar unto these.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Guadalaiara, so called with reference to a Town of that name in New Castile, and giving name unto the Province, situate on the banks of the River Barania, or some branch thereof, in a sweet aire and a most rich and pleasing soyl; where founded by Nonnez de Guzman, An. 1531. when he had perfected his Conquest: better advised in the choise of the place, than in that of Compostella before mentioned. A Citie of so good esteem, that it passeth for the Metropolis of all New Gallicia; honoured with the Courts of Judicature, the residence of the Kings Treasurers, and a Bishops See, removed hither from Compostella, An. 1570. Beautified on this last occasion with a fair Cathedral, a Convent of Franciscans, and another of Augustine Friers. 2. Del Spiritu Santo, built by the said Nonnez in that part of this Countrey, which is called Tepique: but not else observable. 3. Sancta Maria de los Lagos, built by the same founder, 30 leagues on the East of Guadalaiara; and the best defence of all this Province against the Chichimicas, a barbarous and untamed people on the North and East parts of this Countrey: who harbouring themselves in the thickest of the Woods, and some unknown Caves, do many times prey upon the Countrey; which they would utterly destroy, if not thus repressed.

5. ZACATECAS is abounded on the South, with Guadalaiara; on the North, with New Biscay; on the West, with Culnacan, and some part of Xalisco; on the East, with Panuco, one of the Provinces of New Spain.

The Countrey of a different nature. In the west parts called properly Los Zacatecas, rich in Mines of Silver, (no one Province more) but destitute of Wheat, Maize, Water, and all other provisions; as if it were designed for some wealthy Miser, who could live upon the sight of Treasure. The Eastern parts properly called Uxitipa, not so well furnished with Silver, but most abundantly provided with all sorts of fruits; their Woods repleniſhed with Deer, their Fields with Corn, and every Tree giving entertainment to some Bird, or other: in a word, nothing wanting in it, either for necessity, or pleasure. Of the people, I finde nothing singular, but that they are affirmed to be more industrious than the most of their Neighbours; whether by force, or nature (the Spaniards compelling them to drudge in their Silver-mines) I determine not.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Los Zacatecas, neighboured by most wealthy Mines, 40 leagues on the North of Guadalaiara; inhabited by about 500 Spaniards, who have here a Convent of Franciscans. 2. S. Martins, 27 leagues from Zacatecas, the Mines whereof were first opened by Francisco de Tharra, before mentioned; who with many slaves, and all things necessary for a War, was sent upon that errand by Lewis de Velasco, then Vice-Roy of Mexico, An. 1554. The Town inhabited by a Colonie of 400 Spaniards, besides women and children. 3. S. Lukes, and 4. De Avinno, built amongst Mines as wealthy as those before, by the same De Tharra: as also was 5. Erena, a small Town, but of the same estate for Silver; distant from Zacatecas 25 leagues towards the North-west. 6. Nombre di Dios, in the most Northern parts of this Countrey, 68 leagues from Guadalaiara; the foundation of the same De Tharra. Who having conquered the Natives, and quieted them after some Rebellions by gentle usage, built this Town in a pleasant and fruitfull soyl: and having got the Government of the Countreys which he had discovered, drew hither so many of the Spaniards and chief men of the Natives, by granting them the propriety of some Silver-mines; that it became the chief and best peopled Town of all this Province. 7. Durango, in the valley of Guadiana, about eight leagues distant from Nombre di Dios, peopled by a Colonie of Spaniards conducted thither by Alfonso Pacheco, at the appointment of De Tharra, to whom the Spaniards are indebted for all this treasure. 8. Xeres de Frontera, first built for the repressing of some of the Salvages, who used to infest the borders towards Guadalaiara, during the Regencie of the Marques of Villa Maurique, who then commanded in New Spain.

As for UXITIPA, it belonged once unto the Province of Panuco, subdued by Lopez de Mendoza, imployed therein by Nonnez de Guzman, An. 1529. at that time Governour of that Province. Dismembred from it since the conquest of Zacatecas, and made a Member of the Præfecture of New Gallicia. The chief Town of it called S. Lewis, built in a pleasant Valley by the said Pacheco, and by him peopled with a Colonie of Spaniards: the Town not distant from Panuco above twenty leagues.

6. NOVA BISCAIA, or New Biscay, hath on the South, Los Zacatecas; on the West, Cinalca; on the North, Nova Mexicana; the Countreys towards the East not discovered hitherto. So called by Francisco de Tharra, by whom first subdued, from the near neighbourhood which it had unto Nova Gallicia, of which since reckoned for a part.

The Countrey subject in the Winter to great frosts and snows; but notwithstanding well provided for all things necessary; and wonderfully enriched with Mines of Silver. They have also some of Lead, which serve very fitly for the melting and purifying of the other; used to this purpose not alone in these Mines of New Biscay, but in those also of New Spain. The people resolute and stout, not conquered at the first attempt, nor won so much by force, as by fair perswasions.

Places of most observation in it, 1. S. Barbara, and 2. S. Johns, about three leagues distant; built onely for the benefit of the Mines adjoyning. 3. Ende, the furthest Town which the Spaniards have towards the North; of whom a Colonie was there planted (by reason of the adjoyning Mines) by Roderico del Rio, who did also fortifie it, by the direction of De Tharra, under whom a Colonel. Distant from S. Barbara, and S. John about twenty leagues, and an hundred and twenty leagues from Los Zacatecas. More North by seventy leagues at least, and within this Region, but not within the power of the Spaniard, are said to be those four great Towns which the Spaniards call Las Quatro Cienagas; but I have nothing of them certain.

This

This Countrey firſt ſubdued by Franciſco de Tharra, who after he had built Durango in the North parts of Las Zacatecas, and aſſured that Province; advanced with a Troop of 130 horſe, for the Diſcovery and Conqueſt of his Northern Neighbours. Encountred at the firſt more with hunger and thirſt, than with any oppoſition of the Inhabitants; inſomuch that they were fain to eat their Horſes: and afterwards by the Rebellion of the Natives, who killed the greateſt part of ſuch Horſes as were left uneaten. But not diſcouraged herewith, nor with the many difficulties which he found in his way, being compelled to hew his paſſage thorow the Woods by the ſwords of his Souldiers; he prevailed at laſt; and having ſetled it in peace, returned by the way of Cinoloa, which he alſo Conquered; and planted there a Colonyie in the Town of S. Johns, as was ſaid before.

7. NOVA MEXICANA, is bounded on the South, with New Biſcay; on the Weſt, with Quivira; the Countries on the North, and Eaſt, not diſcovered hitherto; though ſome extend it Eaſtwards as far as Florida. Extended 250 L'eagues from the Town and Mines of S. Barbara, and how much beyond that none can tell; the Relations of this Countrey being ſo uncertain, and indeed incredulous, that I dare ſay nothing poſitively of the ſoil or People, but much leſs of the Towns and Cities which are ſaid to be in it. So named by Antonio de Eſpeio, a Citizen of Mexico in New Spain, by whom diſcovered and ſubdued.

For firſt, they tell us of the People, that they are of great ſtature (and that like enough, but not ſo probable) that they have the Art of dreſſing Chamois and other Leather, as well as the beſt Leather-Dreſſer in all Flandors: or that they have Shoes and Boots ſo well ſewed and ſoaled, that no Shoo Maker in all S. Martins could do it better. Then for their Towns, that they are very fair and goodly, the houſes well built of Lime and Stone, ſome of them four Stories, and in moſt of them Stoves for the Winter Seaſon. The Streets even, and ordered in an excellent Manner. Particularly they tell us of a Town called, 1 Chia, one of the five chief Towns of the Province of Cuames, which is ſaid to contain eight Market-Places, and all the houſes to be plaiſtered and painted in moſt curious Manner. 2. Of Acoma, that it is ſituate on the top of a Rock, a great Town, yet no way unto it but by Ladders; and in one place a paire of ſtairs but exceeding narrow, hewn out of the Rock; exceedingly well fortified by Nature (they ſay true in that, if any things were true which they tell us of it) and all their water kept in Ciſterns (but no body can tell from whence they have it.) 3. Of Conibas, on a Lake ſo called, the City ſeven Leagues long, two broad; (a ſecond Ninive) but the Houſes ſcatteringly built amongſt Hills and Gardens, which takes up a great deal of the room: Inhabited by a People of ſuch ſtrength and courage, that the Spaniards only faced it, and ſo went away. Much of this ſtuff I could afford you, but by this taſt we may conjecture of the reſt of the Feaſt.

The Countrey firſt diſcovered by Auguſtino Royaz, a Franciſcan Frier, Anno 1580. who out of Zeal to plant the Goſpel in the North, accompanied with two other Friers of that Order, and eight Souldiers, undertook the Adventure. But one of the Monks being killed by the Salvages, the Souldiers plaid the Poltrons, and gave over the Action. On their return, Beltram a Frier of the ſame Order (from whoſe mouth we muſt have the former Fictions) deſirous to preſerve the lives of his Fellows which ſtaid behinde, encouraged one Antonio de Eſpeio, a Native of Cordula, but a Citizen of Mexico, to engage in ſuch an holy Cauſe: who raiſing a Band of 150 horſe, accompanied with many Slaves, and Beaſts of Carriage, undertook the buſineſs. I omit the many Nations of the Conchi, Paſnugates, Toboſi, Patarabyes, Tarrahumares, Tepoanes, and many other as hard names, which he paſſed thorow in his way. But coming at the laſt to a great River which he called Del Nort there he made a ſtand; cauſed the Countrey on both ſides of it to be called Nova Mexicana; and a City to be built which he called New Mexico, ſituate in the 37th. degree of Northern Latitude, and diſtant from old Mexico five hundred Leagues: the name ſince changed to that of S. Fogie, but ſtill the Metropolis of that Province, the Reſidence of the Governour, and a pretty Garriſon conſiſting of two hundred and fifty Spaniards. Some other Towns he found at his coming hither, viz. 2 Socorro, ſo called by the Spaniards becauſe of that ſuccour and relief they found there for their half ſtarved Bodies. 3 Senecu, 4 Pilabo, and 5 Seviletta, old Towns but now Chriſtened by the Spaniards, when the Inhabitants thereof did embrace the Goſpel; each of them beautified with a Church. 6 S. Johns, built afterwards in the year 1599 by John de Onnate, who with an Army of five thouſand followed the ſame way which Eſpeio went; and having got a great deal of Treaſure laid it up in this place, that it might be no incumbrance to him in his Advance. This is the moſt I dare relie on for this Countrey: And this hath no ſuch Wonders in it, but what an eaſie Faith may give credit to: though I had rather believe the Friers whole Relations, then go thither to diſprove any part thereof.

OF NOVA HISPANIA.

NOVA HISPANIA is bounded on the East, with a fair and large Arm of the Sea, called the Bay of New Spain, and the Golf of Mexico; on the West, with parts of Nova Gallicia, and Mare del Zur; on the North, with the reſt of New Gallicia, ſome part of Florida, and the Golf; on the South, with Mare del Zur, or the South-Sea onely. So called with relation to Spain in Europe, as the chief Province of that Empire in this New World; with reference to which the Kings of Spain call themſelves Reges Hiſpaniorum, in the Plural number.

It extendeth from the 15th. Degree of Latitude to the 26th. excluſively, i. meaſuring it on the Eaſt-ſide by the Bay of Mexico to the North of Panuco; but ſix degrees leſſe, meaſuring it on the Weſt-ſide to the Port of Natividad, where it joyneth with Gallicia Nova. Or making our accompt by miles, it is in breadth from Panuco unto Mare del Zur, 200 Spaniſh leagues, or 600 Italian miles; but hardly half as much on the other ſide. The length hereof from the Eaſt point of Jucutan, to the borders of Gallicia Nova, 1200 Italian miles, or 400 leagues; which is juſt double to the breadth.

The aire exceeding temperate, though ſituate wholly under the Torrid Zone: the heats thereof much qualified by thoſe cooling blaſts, which fan it from the Sea on three ſides of it; and by thoſe frequent ſhowres which fall continually in June, July, and Auguſt, the hotteſt ſeaſons of the year. Abundantly enriched with inexhauſtible Mines of Gold and Silver, ſome of Braſſe and Iron; plenty of Coco-nuts, of which we have ſpoke before; great ſtore of Caſſia; ſuch a wonderfull increaſe of Coccineel, that 5670 Arrobas of it (each Arroba containing 25 Buſhels of our Engliſh meaſure) have been ſhipped for Europe in one year. Where by the way, this Coccineel groweth on a ſmall Tree, or ſhrub having very thick leaves; which they call a Tuna; planted and ordered by them as the French do their Vines: out of the ſeed whereof ariſeth a ſmall worm, at firſt no bigger then a Flea, and the greateſt not much bigger then our common Lady-cows, which they much reſemble; which feeding on the leaves, and overſpreading all the ground in which they are, are gathered by the Natives twice a year, ſtifled with aſhes, or with water (but this laſt the beſt) dried to a powder in the ſhade, and ſo tranſported into Europe. Here is alſo great plenty of Wheat, Barley, Pulſe of all ſorts, and of all ſuch Plants and Roots as we ſet in Gardens for the kitchin; Pomgranates, Orenges, Limons, Citrons, Malcotoons, Figs and Cherries, even to ſuperfluity; Apples and Pears in leſſe abundance, few Grapes, and thoſe few they have not fit for wine; Plenty of Maize, and other Plants unknown in Europe; Birds and Beaſts, wilde and tame of all ſorts, and of each no ſcarcity. Not thus in all places of it, nor in all alike; but ſome in one, ſome in another, according to the conſtitution of the ſoyl and aire: which is ſo different in this Countrey, that in ſuch parts hereof as are hot and dry, their ſeed-time is in April, or May, their Harveſt in October; but in ſuch places of it as are low and moiſt, they ſow their Corn in October, and reap in May: thus having two Harveſts in a year, and yet but one.

The people more ingenious then the reſt of the Salvages, exquiſite at ſome Mechanick Arts, eſpecially in the making of their Feather-pictures; and ſo induſtrious withall, ſo patient both of thirſt and hunger, that they will ſet at it an whole day without meat, or drink; turning every Feather to the light, upwards and downwards, every way, to ſee in which poſture it will beſt fit the place intended to it. No better Goldſmiths in the world, nor men more expert anywhere in refining Metals, curious in painting upon Cotton, whatſoever was preſented to the eye. But yet ſo barbarous withall, that they thought the Gods were pleaſed with the bloud of men, which ſometimes they ſacrificed unto them. So ignorant, that when they firſt ſaw the Spaniards on Horſe back, they thought the horſe and man to have been one creature; and would ask what the Horſes ſaid, when they heard them neigh. So careleſſe of the worth of Gold, that they would part with great quantities of it for Knives, Olaſſe-beads, little Bells, and ſuch petit trifles. But whatſoever they once were, is not now material: the Spaniards having made ſuch havock of this wretched people, that in 17 years they deſtroyed above ſix millions of them; roaſting ſome, plucking out the eyes of others, conſuming them in their Mines, and mercileſly caſting them amongſt wilde beaſts where they were devoured. And as for thoſe who do remain, beſides their own natural ingenioſities, they have ſince learned the Civilities and Arts of Europe. What elſe concerns this ſoyl and people, we ſhall ſhew more particularly, if we finde it neceſſary, in their proper places.

Amongſt the Rarities of this Countrey (though there be many Plants in it of a ſingular nature) I reckon that which they call Magney, or Meto, ſaid to be one of the principal: a Tree which they both plant and dreſſe as we do our Vines. It hath on it 40 kinde of Leaves fit for ſeveral uſes. For when they be tender, they make of them Conſerves, Paper, Flax, Mantles, Mats, Shooes, Girdles, and Cordage; upon them there grow certain Prickles, ſo ſtrong and ſharp, that the people uſe them in ſtead of Sawes. From the top of the Tree cometh a Juyce like Syrrup; which if you ſeeth it, will become Honey; if purified, Sugar; they may make alſo Wine and Vinegar of it. The Bark of it roaſted maketh a good Plaiſter for hurts and ſores; and from the higheſt of the Boughs comes a kinde of Gum, a ſoveraign Antidote againſt Poiſons.

Nor is it leſſe a Rarity, though leſſe uſefull to the good of Mankinde (except it be to keep them in continual minde of the Fires of Hell) that they have a Mountain in this Countrey, called Propocampeche, (ſituate

(ſituate in the Province of Mexico) which vomiteth flames of fire like Ætna: and another in the Province of Guaxaca, which ſendeth forth two burning ſtreams, the one of red Pitch, and the other of black; a fit reſemblance of thoſe Fountains of Fire and Brimſtone. Though they have many other Mountains, yet theſe moſt memorable. And as for Rivers, though very well provided of that watry commodity; yet here are none remarkable for length, or greatneſſe, but Panuco onely, of which more preſently. The want thereof ſupplied by ſome famous Lakes, and the neighbourhood of the Gulf of Mexico. Amongſt the Lakes, the principal are thoſe of Mexico (whereof more anon) and that of Chapala, bordering upon Gallicia Nova; which for its greatneſſe hath the name of Mare Chapalicum, out of which there is made yearly great abundance of Salt. But that which is of greateſt beauty is the Golf of Mexico, the greateſt and goodlieſt of the world: in form completely Circular, in compaſſe no leſſe than 900 miles; environed with the main land, the Peninſulas of Florida and Jucutan, and the Iſle of Cuba. Two onely paſſages in and out, and both well fortified; the one betwixt the Point of Jucutan, and the Iſle of Cuba, where the Tide with a violent current entreth; the other betwixt the ſaid Iſland and the Cape of Florida, where it makes as violent an exit: the Sea ſo heady in the middeſt, and yet ſafe enough, that ſhips are not to ſayl in it directly forwards, but muſt bend either towards the North, or South, as their journey lieth. Upon this Golf the King of Spain hath alwayes ſome ſhips in readineſſe; by which he more aſſureth his Eſtates in this part of America, then by all his Garriſons.

It comprehendeth the Provinces of 1. Panuco. 2. Mexicana. 3. Mechoacan. 4. Tlaſcala. 5. Guaxata. 6 Chiapa. 7. Jucutan. Some others of leſſe note, but reduced to theſe.

1. PANUCO, the moſt Northern Province of all New Spain, by ſome called Guaſteean, is bounded on the Eaſt, with the Golf of Mexico; on the Weſt, with Uxitipa, a Member of the Province of Zacatecas in New Gallicia; on the North, with Florida, and ſome Countreys not yet diſcovered, from which parted by the River of Palms; on the South-weſt with Mechuacan; and on the South, with Mexicana. So called from Panuco the chief River of it, which riſing out of the Hills of Tepecſuan, bordering upon Cinoloa and Couliacan, and dividing New Biſcay from the Province of Zacatecas, paſſeth through the middle of this Countrey, and ſo at laſt into the Golf.

The length hereof is reckoned to be 50 leagues, and the breadth as much. Divided into three Provinces. That towards Mexicana, called Aiotuxetlan, of a fruitfull ſoyl, and not without ſome Mines of Gold; once very populous, till in the year 1522. diſpeopled in a manner by Ferdinando Cortez in his War againſt them. The other called Chila, leſſe fruitfull, but poſſibly for want of people to improve the Land: for being formerly of a ſtout couragious nature, and truſting overmuch to their Fens and Faſtneſſes, they put the Spaniards to ſuch trouble when they warred upon them; that the Conquerours to ſecure themſelves from all future dangers, endeavoured to root them out and deſtroy them utterly. The third lieth towards the River of Palmes, inclined to barrenneſſe, and unpleaſant; but the name I finde not.

Chief Towns hereof at the coming of the Spaniards hither, 1. Las Caxas. 2. Yxicuyan. 3. Nachapatan. 4. Taquinite. 5. Tuzeteco, deſolate and laid waſte by the cruel Spaniards. Of moſt note now, 6. Tanchipa, and 7. Tameclipa, two ſmall Burroughs in the Province of the River of Palmes (for ſo I call it) inhabited by the Natives onely. 8. S. Kallap, another ſmall Town, but in the Province of Chila, inhabited by a few Chriſtians, with a Convent of Auguſtinian Friers; ſacked by the Savages in the year 1571. 9. Tampice, or S. Lewis de Tampice, a Colonie of the Spaniards, ſituate on the North banks of the River Panuco, and at the very mouth thereof; where it hath a very large Haven, but ſo barred with ſands, that no ſhip of great burden can make uſe of it: the River, otherwiſe ſo deep, that Veſſels of 500 Tun might ſayl 60 leagues at leaſt in it againſt the ſtream. 10. S. Stevan del Puerto, on the Southern ſide of that River, in the Latitude of 23. about 65 leagues on the North of Mexico, from the Sea eight leagues; now the Metropolis, and Town of greateſt trade in all this Countrey. Built by Ferdinando Cortez in the place where formerly had ſtood Panuco, once the chief Citie of the Province, but by him deſtroyed. Oppoſite hereunto on the other ſide of the River, lie great ſtore of Salt-pits, out of which the people of this Town raiſe their greateſt profit. 11. S. Jago de los Valles, or S. Iames in the Vallies 25 leagues Weſt-ward (but inclining to the South withall) from S. Scevan del Puerto; ſituate in an open Countrey, and therefore fenced about with a Wall of Earth: to the Inhabitants whereof (all Spaniards, as in that before) the King of Spain hath granted many fair poſſeſſions, to defend thoſe parts (then being the borders of his Eſtates) againſt the Salvages.

This Countrey firſt attempted by Franciſco Garaio, but the conqueſt of it finiſhed by Cortez, as before is ſaid: each ſtriving, as it ſeemeth, who ſhould moſt deface it, and be enrolled for the greateſt Manſlayer of the two. But having carried on the courſe of their Victories almoſt as far as to the River of Palms, they deſiſted there; either becauſe already glutted with humane bloud, or that the conqueſt of thoſe parts would not quit the charge. Inſomuch as in all that Countrey from the River of Palms to the Cape of Florida, though lying all along on the Golf of Mexico, the Spaniards have not one foot of ground ſecure enough, becauſe it lieth all along that Golf, that no other Nation can poſſeſſe it.

2. MECHUACAN hath on the North-Eaſt, Panuco; on the Eaſt, Mexicana; on the South part of Tlaſcala; on the Weſt, the main Ocean; and on the North the Province of Xaliſco in New Gallicia. So called from the abundance of Fiſh, which their Lakes and Rivers did afford them; the word in their own language ſignifying Locum Piſcoſum, or a Countrey of Fiſh.

The breadth hereof on the Sea-Coaſts is 80 leagues, in the borders towards Mexicana, but ſixty onely. The length I finde not yet agreed on. Bleſt with an aire ſo ſound and ſweet, that ſick Folk come hither out of other Countreys, to recover their health. Well ſtored with Rivers, ſome Lakes, innumerable ſprings of running water, and here and there ſome hot Bathes iſſuing from the Rocks. The ſoyl ſo plentifully productive of all ſorts of Grain (even to admiration) that in ſome parts hereof four meaſures of Seed have brought forth 600 meaſures of the ſame Grain, in the following Harveſt. Well wooded, and by reaſon of its Springs and Rivers, full of excellent Paſtures; and yet not yielding unto any part of all America, for Medicinal Herbs, and Plants, of very Soveraign Nature for the good of Mankinde. It affordeth alſo ſtore of Amber, Mulberry Trees, Silk, Wax, Honey, and ſuch other things, as chiefly ſerve for Pomp and pleaſure.

The people tall of ſtature, but ſtrong and active: of a good wit, and skilled in many excellent Manufactures. They ſpeak four languages of their own; but that moſt generally uſed, is by the Spaniards called the Taraſcuan tongue; which though it be an elegant and copious language, yet moſt of them ſpeak the Spaniſh alſo. More pliant to the manners and apparel of that Nation, than the reſt of New Spain (the Mexicans excepted onely) and ſo inclinable to the Goſpel, that they are almoſt all gained from their old Idolatries. Inſomuch that the whole Countrey being divided into 50 Pariſhes, every Pariſh hath its ſeveral Prieſts and inferiour Miniſters, who in the language of the place do inſtruct the people, in which they Preach to them, and hear their Confeſſions: beſides many Convents of Dominicans, and Auguſtine Friers.

It containeth in it upwards of 150 Towns, or Burroughs, beſides ſcattering Villages; 90 of which have Free Schools in them, and almoſt every one a Spittle for relief of the ſick. The principal thereof. 1. Zinzoutza, the ſeat of the old Kings of Mechuachan; in the firſt times of Chriſtianity in this Countrey, made a Biſhops See, till removed to Paſcuar. The firſt Biſhop, Vaſquez de Quiroga. 2. Paſcuar, of no great note at preſent, but that the Biſhops See was removed thither, becauſe nearer to Mexico; from which diſtant 47 leagues. 3. Valladolit, now the chief Citie of this Province, and the Biſhops See, removed hither from Paſcuar, and here finally ſetled in a fair Cathedral, An. 1544. ſituate nea a large Lake (ſaid to be bigger then that of Mexico:) which doth not onely afford the Citie great ſtor of Fiſh, but yieldeth them the opportunity of ſeveral pleaſures which they take in Boats upon the water. The Lake and Citie by the Natives called Guayangareo. 4. S. Michael, in the way from Mexico (from which diſtant about 40 leagues) to the ſilver Mines of Zacatecas. Firſt built by Lewis de Velaſco, then Vice-Roy of Mexico, to defend the people of this Province, from the Chichameehas; a barbarous, and hitherto an unconquered people who terribly moleſt the Nations upon whom they border. 5. S. Philips, built at the ſame time by the ſaid Velaſco. 6. Conception de Saylaa, ſeventeen leagues from Valladolit, 35 from Mexico; of the foundation of Martin Enriquez the Vice-Roy, An. 1570. to be a Stage for Travellers, in their journeys Northwards. 7. Guaxanato, bordering on Panuco, & not far from S. Jago de Los Valles, rich in Mines of Silver. Then on the Sea, we have 8. Acatlan, on the borders of New Gallicia, two miles from the Ocean; A Town of note above 30 houſes, with a little Church; but neighboured by a large and ſafe Road for ſhipping (by the Spaniards called Malacca) which makes it ſeldom without the company of Saylers. 9. Natividad, (or Portus Nativitatis) a noted and convenient Haven, from whence they commonly ſet ſayl to the Philippine Iſlands; pillaged and burnt by Captain Cavendiſh in his Circumnavigation of the World. 10. S. Jogo (or S. Jago de Buena Speranza) a little on the South of Natividad; the ſhores whereof are ſaid to be full of Pearls. 11. Colima, ten leagues from the Sea, but more South than the other, built in the year 1522. by Gonſalvo de Sandoval. 12. Zacatula, by the Spaniards called Conception, ſituate on the Banks of a large (but nameleſſe) River; which riſing about the Citie of Tlaſcala, paſſeth by this Town, and thence with two open mouths runneth into the Sea.

This Province, at the coming of the Spaniards hither, was a diſtinct Kingdom of it ſelf, not ſubject nor ſubordinate to the Kings of Mexico, as were moſt of the Princes of theſe parts: the Frontires of the Kingdom fenced with ſtakes of wood, like a Palizado, to hinder any ſudden incurſion of the Mexican Forces. The laſt King called Tangayvan Bimbicha, ſubmitted of his own accord to Cortez, An. 1522. and willingly offered himſelf to Baptiſm. But the Spaniards were not pleaſed with either, becauſe deprived thereby of the ſpoil of the Countrey. But at laſt Nonnez de Guzman, then Preſident of the Courts of Juſtice in Mexico, picked a quarrel with him, accuſed him falſly (as is ſaid by the very Spaniards) of ſome practiſes againſt his King, burnt him alive with moſt barbarous and unheard of cruelty, and ſo confiſcated his eſtate.

3. Mexicana, is bounded on the Eaſt, with the Golf of New Spain; on the Weſt, with Mechuachan: on the North with Panuco, and ſome part of Nova Gallicia; on the South, with Tlaſcala, and part of the Southern Sea. So called from Mexico, the chief Citie not of this Province onely, but of all America.

It is in breadth from North to South, meaſuring by the Bay of Mexico, 130 leagues; thence growing narrower in the midland parts hardly above ſixty; and on the ſhores of Mare del Zur, not above ſeventeen. The length hereof extendeth from one Sea to the other, that is to ſay, from the point of Lobos in the Province of Papantla, on the Golf of Mexico to the Haven of Acapulco, on the Southern Ocean: but the determinate number of miles I do no where finde. But meaſuring it from 17 degrees and an half of Latitude, unto the 22. and allowing ſomething for the ſlope; we may conclude it to be much of the length, as it is breadth, that is to ſay about 130 leagues.

The Countrey is inferiour to Peru in the plenty and purity of Gold and Silver, but far exceeding it both in the Mechanical, and ingenious Arts, which are here profeſſed, and in the abundance of fruits and Cattel: of which laſt here is ſuch ſtore, that many a private man hath 40000 Kine and Oxen to himſelf. Fiſh is here alſo in great plenty; that onely, which is drawn out of the Lake whereon Mexico ſtandeth, being reported worth 20000 Crowns yearly, to the Kings Exchequer. The people for the moſt part witty and induſtrious, full of valour and courage; good Handycraftſmen, if they ſtoop ſo low as to Trades and Manufactures; rich Merchants, if they give themſelves to more gainfull traffick; And hardy Souldiers, if trained trained up and employed in ſervice. Their ancient Arms were Slings, and Arrows; ſince the coming of the Spaniards practiſed on the Harenbuize. In a word, what was ſaid before of New Spain in general, as to the ſoyl and people of it, is moſt appliable to this.

Chief Rivers hereof 1. Los Topes, which parteth this Province from that of Tlaſcala. 2. Citala, and 3. Mitla, both running Eaſtward towards the Gulf. 4. Papagaio, in the way from Mexico to Acapulco; with a fair bridge over it 5. Las Balſas of a violent courſe, and in bigneſſe equal unto Tagus in Spain; paſſable onely by a bridge made of Rafts and Reeds, not very ſtrongly joyned together. 6. The River of S. Francis, both large and ſwift, but in ſome parts fordable. Mountains of note I finde not any which require a more particular conſideration; and ſo paſſe them over the more eaſily.

Towns of moſt note in it, 1. Mexico, the ſeat of an Archbiſhop, and of the Spaniſh Vice-Roy, who hath the power to make Laws and Ordinances, to give directions, and determine controverſies; unleſſe it be in ſuch great cauſes which are thought fit to be referred to the Council of Spain. This Citie was firſt ſituate in the Lakes and Iſlands, like Venice; every where interlaced with the pleaſant currents of freſh, and ſea-waters; and carrying a face of more civil government than any of America; though nothing, if compared with Europe. But the Town being deſtroyed by Cortez, it was built afterwards on the firm Land, on the Edge of the Lake, and bordering on a large and ſpacious Plain. The Plain on which it bordereth, is ſaid to be 70 leagues in compaſſe, environed with high Hills; on the tops whereof the ſnow lieth continually. In the middle of which Plain are two great Lakes, the leaſt of them fourty miles in circuit, the one ſalt, and the other freſh: each of them alternately ebbing and flowing up into the other. On the Banks of the ſalt Lake ſtandeth the Citie of Mexico, with many other goodly Towns, and ſtately houſes: on which Lake alſo, 50000 Wherries are continually plying. The Town in compaſſe ſix miles, & containeth 6000 houſes of Spaniards, & 60000 Indians. It is a by-word, that at Mexico there are 4. fair things, viz. The Women, the Apparel, the Horſes, and the Streets. Here is alſo a Printing-houſe, an Univerſity, and a Mint; the Cathedral Church, ten Convents of Nuns, ſeveral houſes of Ieſuits, Dominicans, Franciſcans, Auguſtinians, and other Religious Orders; ſome Colledges, many Spitles and Hoſpitals, and other publick buildings of great ſtate and beauty. By the Natives it was anciently called Temiſtatan, the name of Mexico being given on a new occaſion, of which more hereafter: moſt miſerably endammaged by the breaking in of the waters, An. 1629. which ſwelled ſo high that they not onely overwhelmed the meaner houſes, but the Vice-Roys Palace; drowned many thouſands of the people, and deſtroyed the houſhold ſtuff of the reſt. Occaſioned by the avarice of the Kings Miniſters, who had inverted the money to their private uſe, which ſhould have fortified the banks. 2. Tezcuco, ſituate on the ſame Lake, but ſix leagues from Mexico; heretofore twice as big as Sevil: and for the beauty of the ſtreets, and elegancy of the houſes not inferiour to any. Served with freſh water from the Hills, brought in Pipes and Conduits, though ſeated on the brink of a Salt Lake. 3. Quitlavaca, built wholly in the Lake like Venice, and therefore by the Spaniards called Venezuela; a Citie of 2000 houſholds: the way unto it over a Cawſey made of flints; half a league long, and about twenty ſpans in breadth. 4. Uztacpalapa, half in the Lake, and half without, with many Ponds of freſh water, and a beautifull Fountain. A Citie of 10000 houſholds, ſix leagues from Tezcuco, and two from Mexico. 5. Mexicaltzingo, a Burrough of 4000. and 6. Cuyocan. one of 6000 Families: both upon the Lake: beautified in the times of their Paganiſm with many Temples, ſo gorgeouſly ſet out to the eye, that afar off they ſeemed of ſilver; moſt of them now converted into Monaſteries, and Religious houſes. 7. Chulula, the faireſt of all the Lake, ſcarce excepting Mexico, with which it anciently contended both for ſtate and bigneſſe; ſaid to contain 20000 Families, and to be beautified with ſo many Temples, that their Turrets equalled the number of the dayes of the year. The people ſo addicted unto their Idolatries, and ſo barbarous in their bloudy and beaſtly Sacrifices; that no fewer than 6000 Infants of both Sexes were yearly murdered on their Altars. 8. Meſtitlan, ſeated on an high Hill, begirt about with moſt pleaſant Groves, and ſhady Woods. A Town of about 30000 Inhabitants, the Villages about the Hill being reckoned in: ſituate 14 leagues, or two dayes journey from Mexico, in the way to the Province of Panuco; the high way on both ſides ſet with fruitfull Trees, to the great comfort & refreſhment of the way-faring man. 9. Clantinolleper, twenty leagues from Meſtitlan, a Manour to which 40000 of the Natives do owe ſuit, and ſervice. 10. Antepeque, on the South of the Citie of Mexico, at the foot of the Mountain Propopampeche; a Town belonging to the Marquis of Valla, and ſeated in the moſt delicious place of all New Spain. 11. Acachicha, on the North-Eaſt of Mexico, betwixt it and the Golf, bordering on the Province of Pepantla. 12. Acapulco. an Haven Town of the South-ſea, ſituate on a ſafe and capacious Bay; at the entrance of it a league broad, and in the body of it full of convenient Stations & Docks for ſhipping: ſo that it is accompted the ſafeſt Haven of all thoſe Seas. At the bottom of it towards the Weſt, ſtands the Town and Caſtle, the Caſtle opportunely ſeated on a little fore-land both to command the Town, and ſecure the Port; well walled and fortified with four very ſtrong Bulwarks, on which are planted good ſtore of Ordnance; the Garriſon conſiſting ordinarily of 400 Souldiers: ſtrengthened the rather in regard of the uſual entercourſe, which is betwixt this Port and the Philippine Iſlands.

The Original Inhabitants of this Countrey (as far at leaſt as their Records are able to reach) were the Chichimecas, now the moſt rude and barbarous Savages of all theſe parts; together with the Ottomies, ſomewhat more civil than the reſt, but yet rude enough. By theſe poſſeſſed till about the year 902. as it is conjectured from their Annals, when vanquiſhed and diſſeized by ſome new comers, whom they called by one name Navatlacos: iſſuing as it is conceived from thoſe parts of Gallicia Nova, which are now called Nova Mexicana, An. 720. or thereabouts; but lingring in their march, and waſting all the Countreys as they lay before them. Of theſe there were ſeven Tribes in all, i. e. the Sachimilci, the Chalcæ, the Tepanecæ, the Culvæ, the Tlaſluici, the Tlaſcaltecæ; all of them ſetled in theſe parts, and the five firſt about the Lake, before the coming in of the 7. Tribe, which was that of the Mexicans, ſo called from Mexi their chief Captain; who much delighted with the situation and conveniences of Temistitan then a ruined town, caused it to be rebuilt and beautified, by the name of Mexico. This town from that time forwards was reputed the head-City of their Common-wealth; the six Tribes governing in common, or the Chiefs rather of those Tribes in the names of the whole, after an Aristocratical manner. But weary at the last of this equal power, which the prevalencie of some Tribes had made very unequal; the Mexicans, one of the weakest of the Tribes, oppressed by the rest, resolved to separate themselves, and to commit the ordering of their affairs to a King of their own. At first elected by themselves, but afterwards when they had conquered most of the other Tribes, the choice intrusted unto six, one for every Tribe, (the Tlascaltecæ which was the seventh of their Tribes, and the Founders of Tlascala, governing themselves long before, as a State apart:) who in their choice had an especial eye on those which were strong and active, and fit for military employments; the people holding it a commendable meritorious act to kill their Kings, if once they were reputed Cowards. The Politie and Institutes of this Mexican Kingdom, I forbear to write of, further then as they lie before me in the way of their Story: digested by the government and succession of their several Kings, whose names and actions do occurre in the following Catalogue, of

The Kings of MEXICO.

A. Ch.

1373. 2 Vitzovitzli, son of Acamapitzli, subdued the Tribe of the Suchimilchi, and others of the neighbouring Nations.

1394. 3 Huizilihuiel son of Vitzilovitli, conquered the Tribes of the Chalcæ and Culvæ, with many other Nations of the old Inhabitants.

1415. 4 Chimal Pupuca, son of Huizilihuiel, won the Town of Tequixsuiac, and reduced the rebellious Chalcæ under his command.

1425. 5 Iscoalt brother of Huizilihuel, by the valour of his Cousin Tlacaellec, freed himself from the yoke of the Tepanecæ, to whom the Mexicans had before been Tributaries; and added their dominions unto his estate, conquering all the Nations round about him. After whose death the Electors by a joynt consent chose Tlacaellec for their King, as a man of whose vertue they had formerly made trial. But he very nobly refused it, saying, that it was more convenient for the Commomwealth, that another should be King, and that he should execute that which was for the necessity of the State, than to lay the whole burden upon his back: and that without being King, he would not leave to labour for the publick, as well as if he were. Upon this generous refusal they made choice of Motecuma the first.

A. Ch.

1438. 6 Motecumo, one of the Brothers of Chimalpupuca, brought in the custom of using no other Sacrifices at their Coronations, but of such Prisoners as the new King should first take in the wars. By the valour and good fortune of Tlacaellec, he subdued so many of the Nations (whose names I hold unnecessary to be here repeated) that he extended his estate from one Sea to the other.

1467. 7 Axayacaci, the Nephew of Ischoalt by his son Tecozomoeliqueto, enlarged his Empire by the conquest of Tetentepeque, 200 miles from Mexico, to fit himself with Sacrifices for his Coronation; and brought the Lord of Tlatelulco who rebelled against him, to so hard a streit; that he was forced to break his neck from the top of a Temple.

1479. 8 Ticoicatzi, the son of Azayacaci, added twelve Cities, with their Territories, to the Mexican Empire.

1484. 9 Abuczozin, brother of Ticoicatzi, extended his borders to Guatimala, repaired or rebuilt a great part of Mexico, and brought thither a channel of fresh water.

1502. 10 Motecuma II. Son of Axaacaci, before his Coronation conquered 44 Cities. He ordained that no Plebeian should bear any Office in his Court, and in the 18. year of his Reign was subdued by Cortez.

As for this Cortez, to whom the Spaniards stand indebted for the Kingdom of Mexico, he was born in Medeline, a Town of Estremaduram, 1485. and in the nineteenth yeer of his Age, employed himself in the Trade and business of America, for the improvement of his Fortunes, Anno 1511. he went as Clark unto the Treasurer for the Isle of Cuba, where he husbanded his Affairs so well, by carrying over Kine, Sheep, and Mares, and bringing Gold for them in Exchange, that in short time he was able to put in 2000 Castellins for his stock, as Partner with Andrew de Duero, a wealthy Merchant. Grown richer, he was taken to be Partner with James Velasques, in the Discovery of Tabasco, and the parts neer Jucutan, An. 1518. And now resolved to venture all his stock both of friends & money, he furnished himself of eleven Ships, and with 550 men set sail from Spain, and arrived at the Iland of Acusamill (now called Santa Crux:)

and ſailing up the River of Tabaſco, ſacked the Town of Potonchon, the Inhabitants refuſing to ſell him victual. After this by the help of his Horſe and Ordinance, he diſcomfited 40000 of the naked Savages, gathered together to revenge themſelves for the ſack of that Town; and received the King thereof in vaſſallage to the Crown of Spain. Being told that Weſtward he ſhould meet with ſome Mines of Gold, he turned his courſe for the Haven of S. John de Ulloa; where landing he was entertained by Tendilli, Governour of the Town and Countrey for the King of Mexico: who underſtanding of his coming, and that he was the Servant of ſo great an Emperour (of which Tendilla had informed him by eſpecial Meſſengers) he ſent him many rich Preſents both of Gold and Silver. Inflamed at the ſight hereof, he reſolved to go unto the place where ſuch Treaſures were; took poſſeſſion of the Countrey in the name of Charles the fift King of Spain and Emperour; and building there the Town de la vera Crux, left in it 150 of his men. Attended by no more then 400 Foot, 15 Horſe, and ſix pieces of Ordnance, he purſued his Enterprize; by practice gained unto him thoſe of Zempoallan, and Tlaſcalla, whom he underſtood to be ill-affected to Motecuma: aſſiſted with whoſe Forces he paſſed on for Mexico, ſacked the Town of Chololla (a Town of 40000 houſholds) in his march, kindly received into Mexico by the frighted King, whom he cauſed to acknowledge himſelf a Vaſſall to Spain, and to preſent him in the name of a Tribute, with ſo much Treaſure, as amounted to 160000 Caſtellins of Gold. A quarrell growing not long after, Motecuma the unhappy King was by one of his own Subjects killed in the Tumult, and the Spaniards driven out of the Town. But aided with the whole Forces of the Tlaſcalans, and a recruit of more Spaniards (ſent thither on a Deſign againſt him) he made up an Army of 100000 Savages, 900 Spaniſh Foot, 80 Horſe, 17 pieces of Ordnance: and having with great diligence made ready a Navie of 13 Galliots, and 6000 Canons or Boats; laid ſiege unto the City both by Sea and Land. After a Siege of three moneths, the City is taken, ſacked and burnt, Auguſt 13. 1521. But afterwards rebuilt more beautifully then it was before. Thus fell this mighty Kingdom into the hands of the Spaniards, by the valour and good fortune of Cortez, a private Adventurer; endowed for that good Service by Charles the fift with the Town and Territory of Tecoantepeque, in the Province of Guaxaca, and many other fair eſtates in the Province of Mexico, and dignified with the title of Marqueſs of Valla.

As for the Kings of Mexico, they are ſaid to have worn a Crown reſembling that which is now uſed by the Dukes of Venice. His Coronation held with great pomp, but moſt bloody Sacrifices. His Revenues thought to be almoſt infinite, raiſed out of all Commodities and paid in kinde, whether Natural or Artificial only: the King participating of the fruits of all mens Labour, and ſharing with them in their wealth: ſome paying in, Cups full of powder of Gold, of two handfuls a piece; ſome, Diadems, and Beads of Gold; Plates of Gold of three quarters of a yard long, and four fingers broad; Turkeſſe-ſtones, Golden Targets, rich Feather-Pictures, &c. Not to ſay any thing of matters of inferior value: all which in ſuch a wealthy and large eſtate, muſt needs afford him a Revenue equall to the greateſt Monarch. And for the incouragement of his Souldiers and Men of War, here were ordained three Orders of Knighthood, (or at leaſt ſuch diſtinctions of perſonall merit, as had reſemblance to ſuch Orders:) the firſt diſtinguiſhed by a Red Ribband, the ſecond called the Lyon or Tiger-Knight, and the third the Gray Knight, all privileged amongſt other things to be clothed in Cotton, wear Breeches, to adorn themſelves with gold and ſilver, and to have Veſſell gilt or painted, high points, and not permitted unto any elſe. But it is time that I proceed to the reſt of the Provinces.

4. TLASCALA lieth betwixt Mexicana, and Guaxaca, extended from one Sea to the other. The length hereof from Sea to Sea an hundred Leagues; the breadth along the ſhores of the Gulf reckoned 80 Leagues, on the South Sea not above eighteen. So called from the abundance of Maize which they make their bread of; the word in that Language ſignifying Locum panis, or the place of Bread, the ſame with Bethlehem in the Hebrew.

The Countrey very plentifull both of Corn and Cattell, full of rich Paſtures, and wonderfully ſtored with Maize: Level and plain except towards the Sea, where occurreth a large chain of craggie Mountains. The richer in the fruits of Nature for thoſe fair and pleaſant Rivers, wherewith it is watered, the principal of which 1. Rio de Grijalva, ſo called from John de Grijalva, who firſt diſcovered it; employed herein by James Velaſques, the advancer of Cortez. 2 Rio de Zempoall ſo called from the Town of Zempoallan about which it riſeth. 3 Zahuate, which makes its way thorow the chain of Mountains before mentioned, and falleth with the former into the Golf. 4 Rio de Zacatula, a River of the longeſt courſe in all this Province; riſing neer Tlaſcala, and falling many Leagues off into Mare del Zur. The People much of the ſame nature with thoſe of Mexico, though upon jealouſies of State their moſt bitter enemies; of which the Spaniards made good uſe, to advance their Conqueſts on that Kingdom.

Places of moſt importance in it, Tlaſcala it ſelf, which gives name to the Province: in former times governed after the form of a Commonwealth, according to the Democratical Models. Situate on a little Hill betwixt two Rivers: and in the middle of a large, but pleaſant Plain, 60 miles in compaſs. So populous at the coming of the Spaniards hither, that it contained 300000 Inhabitants; now ſcarce 50000. It had four Streets (or rather Quarters) each of them governed by a Captain in time of war: and in the middeſt a Market-place ſo fair and ſpacious, that 30000 perſons might aſſemble in it, to buy and ſell, or for any other buſineſs. 2 Puebba de los Angelos, (the City of Angels) but moſt commonly Angelos; built by Sebaſtian Ramirez, An. 1531. in the way from Vera Crux to the City of Mexico, from which laſt 22 leagues diſtant. A Biſhops See, and thought to contain in it 1500 families. 3 Zempoallan, on the River ſo named, the Inhabitants whereof did great ſervice to Ferdinando Cortez in his conqueſt of Mexico. 4 Napulnca; of great reſort for a Fair of Cattel: and ſuch a kind of Court for ordering the trade thereof, as we call the Pie-powders. 5 Guaxocingo, a pleaſant and well-peopled town, ſituate at the foot of the burning Mountain before mentioned; by the aſhes and embers whereof the fields are many times annoied.

6 Segura,

6 Segura, or Segura de la Frontera, in the Region of Tepeac, built by Cortez the next year after the conqueſt of Mexico, with fair ſtreets and handſome houſes; by whom peopled with Spaniards. 7 Vera Crux, the firſt town built in this Countrey by the ſaid Cortez, now a Biſhops See: ſituate neer unto the Gulf, and a great thorow-fare from thence to the City of Mexico, from which diſtant about 60 leagues. 8 S. John de Ullua, the moſt noted Port of all this Province; fenced with a Peer againſt the fury both of winds and ſea; defended naturally by Rocks and Quickſands lying before it, and by two Bulwarks well fortified and manned on both ſides of the entrance. 9 Medellin, built by Cortez An. 1525. and planted with Spaniards: ſo called in memory of a town of the ſame name in Eſtremadara, in which he was born: ſituate on the banks of the River Almeria.

The Tlalſcallans were originally one of the ſeven Tribes, which drave the Chichimecas out of their poſſeſſions: and either finding no room left for them on the Banks of the Lake, or elſe willing to ſubſiſt alone; withdrew themſelves from the reſt, founded the City of Tlaſcala, and there erected a Democratical Eſtate. Stomacked for this by the other Tribes, and many times invaded by thoſe of Mexico, after they had ſubdued the reſt; they ſtill maintained themſelves againſt all attempts; and in the end aſſiſted Cortez, in the deſtruction of that Kingdom they ſo deadly hated. Privileged for that reaſon by the Spaniards, and exempted from all kind of tribute (except it be an handfull of Wheat for every perſon) and ſuffered to live under his protection in the former Government. The Province given us by this name, ſaid to contain 200 good Towns and Burroughs, 1000 Villages and upwards; and in them 150000 of the Natives, beſides Spaniſh Colonies. Deſtributed into 36 Claſſes or Rural Deanries, for Eccleſiaſtical Government, in which are thought to be 30 Convents and Religious Houſes.

5 GUAXACA is bounded on the Weſt, with Tlaſcala; on the Eaſt, with Jucutan, and Chiapa, one of the Provinces of Guatimala; on the North, with the Bay of Mexico; and on the South, with Mare del Zur. Extended on the South-ſea to the length of an hundred miles, but on the Bay to fifty only: in breadth from ſea to ſea where it bordereth on Tlaſcala, 120 leagues; not above 60 where it confineth on Chiapa. So called from Guaxaca once the chief town of theſe parts, now named Antequera.

The Air hereof very ſound and ſweet, and the Soil as fruitfull: plentifull not only of thoſe commodities which are common with the other Provinces of this Countrey; but of ſuch quantities of Silks, and ſtore of Mulberries, that if the Natives paid their Tithes as the Spaniards do, that very Revenue would ſuffice to endow five Biſhopricks, as good as that which is there already. Scarce any River of this Countrey, but hath Sands of Gold: ſuch plenty of Coccinele (a rich grain uſed in dying Scarlets, of which before) as alſo of Caſſia, Gold, Silver, and other metals; that if the people did but adde ſome induſtry to the wealth of the Countrey, they might be the richeſt men in all America. But being naturally ſlothfull, and impatient of labour, they loſe all opportunities of gathering riches, and live but from hand to mouth, as we uſe to ſay. Docile enough, and ſo indulgent unto thoſe who take pains to teach them, that here are reckoned 120 Convents of Dominican Friers, beſides other Schools: theſe laſt conceived the greater number.

It is ſubdivided into many particular provinces (we may call them Wapentakes or Hundreds) as 1 Miſteca, 2 Tutopeque, 3 Zapoteca, 4 Guazacoalco, 5 Gueztaxatla, and 6 the Vale of Guaxaca; this laſt moſt memorable, in that it gave the title of Marqueſſo del Valle, to the famous Cortez. Towns of moſt obſervation, 1 Teozopotlan, once the chief town of Zapoteca, and the ſeat of their King. 2 Cuertlavaca, of great note for a Labyrinth not far off, hewn out of the Rock, but by whom none knoweth. 3 Antequera, in the Vallie of Guaxaca, a ſtately City, and beautified with a fair Cathedral; as that with Marble-pillars of great height and thickneſs. 4 S. Illifonſo in the Province of Zapoteca. 5 S. Jago in the Valley of Nexapa, ſeated upon a lofty hill. 6 Del Spiritu Santo, diſtant about three leagues from the ſhores of the Golf, in the Province of Guazacoalco; the foundation of Gonſalvo de Sandoval, A. 1526. 7 Aguatulco, or Guatulco, a noted and convenient Port on the South-ſea; much uſed by thoſe which trade from Peru to Mexico, and from Mexico to any Port of the Southern ſeas. By conſequence rich, and therefore plundered to the purpoſe both by Drake, and Cavendiſh, in their voyages about the world. 8 Tacoantepeque a Port of the ſame Sea alſo, but of far leſs note. Burroughs and Villages in all 650. inhabited by 150000 of the Natives liable to tribute, beſides women and perſons under age, not reckoning the Spaniards in the number.

6 JUCUTAN, environed on three parts by the Sea like a Demi-Iland, is faſtened to the Continent only where it meets with Guaxaca the further point of it oppoſite to the Iſle of Cuba. Diſcovered firſt by Fernandes de Cordova, employed therein by Don Chriſtopher Morante, An. 1517. and called Jucutan, not as ſome conceit it, from Joctan the ſon of Heber, who they think came out of the Eaſt, where the Scripture placeth him (Gen. 10. 30.) to inhabit here; but from Jucutan, which in the language of the Countrey ſignifieth, What ſay you? For when the Spaniards at their firſt coming hither asked the name of the place; the Savages not underſtanding what they meant, replied Jucutan, that is, what ſay you? whereupon the Spaniards always after called it by this name.

The compaſs of it, taking the Province of Tabaſco into the accompt, is ſaid to be 900 miles, or 300 leagues. The Air hot, and the Countrey deſtitute of Rivers; not otherwiſe provided of water but by pits and trenches, which abundantly ſupply that want. Sufficiently barren, the ſoile not bearing Wheat, or any European fruits, nor many of the growth of America in other places. Nor have they Mines of Gold or Silver, or any other Metal, to enrich the people; who muſt either live by trades and labour, or elſe beg their bread. Nothing remarkable in the Countrey, but that here ſeemed to be ſome remnants of Chriſtianity, at the Spaniards firſt coming hither: the people conſtantly obſerving a kind of Baptiſm, which they call in their own language a ſecond birth, expreſſing by that word a Regeneration; not ſuffering any one to marry untill ſo initiated. And poſſible enough it is, that this may be the Countrey upon which Madoc ap Owen fell; who though he might by ſome good fortune be brought back to Wales, yet that he ſhould make any ſuch ſecond voyage hither, as is ſaid in their Chronicles, I by no means grant.

Towns of moſt obſervation in it, 1. Merida, almoſt in the navel of it, ſituate in the 20 degree of Latitude; the ordinary ſeat of the Governour, and the See of a Biſhop: diſtant from the Sea on each ſide, about twelve leagues; and called thus from a Town of that name in Spain, with which it is thought to have ſome reſemblance. 2. Valladolit, 30 leagues from Merida, beautified with a moſt ſumptuous Monaſtery of Franciſcan Friers. 3. Campeche, (or S. Franciſco, as the Spaniards call it) ſituate on the ſhore of the Golf. A Town when firſt known to the Spaniards, of 3000 Houſes, and beautified with ſuch monuments of art and induſtry; as ſhewed that there was ſomewhat in this people which was not barbarous, ſince that no more obſervable, than for being ſuddenly ſurprized by Parker, an Engliſh Capt. An. 1596. who carried away with him the Governour, the wealth of the Town, and many priſoners; beſides a great ſhip full of Gold, Silver, and other the like precious Commodities, deſigned for the King of Spains own uſe. 4. Tabaſco, ſituate in the beſt part of this Countrey, ſo different from all the reſt, that it is made by ſome a diſtinct province from it. By the Spaniards called Villa de Nueſtra a Sennora de la Victoria, moſt commonly Victoria onely; and that in memory of the firſt fortunate victory which Cortez had upon this people; arming themſelves againſt him for the ſacking of Pontonchan. 5. Pontonchan, ſacked by Cortez for denying to ſupply him with victual. 6. Salamanca, ſo called with reference to a Town of that name in Spain.

Along the Coaſt of this Countrey lie many Iſlands, viz. 1. La Zarza. 2. Deſconoſcida. 3. Triangulus. 4. Vermeia. 5. Los Negrillos. 6. Los Alacranes, all within the Golf. Without it, 7. Zaratan. 8. Pantoia. 9. Lamanay. 10. De Mucheres, or the Iſle of Women; 11. Cozamul, by ſome called Acuſamil. This laſt the biggeſt, as 15 leagues long, 5 broad; and the moſt remarkable, as being the uſual way which the Spaniards travelled in their diſcoveries of this Countrey, from the Iſle of Cuba. For here firſt landed Ferdinando de Corduba, An. 1517. who paſſing over to Jucutan (but four leagues diſtant) brought back nothing but ſtripes. Here the next year arrived John de Grijalva, in the ſame purſuit, who paſſing by Jucutan to the Province of Guaxata, left his name behinde him to a River. And finally here landed the moſt fortunate Cortez, who coaſting about the Demi-Iſland, landed near Tabaſco, and there firſt hanſelled his good fortune with a notable victory. Yet neither the Iſland nor Peninſula diſcovered perfectly, till the year 1527. when both ſubdued by Franciſco de Monteio, to the Crown of Spain. The Iſland now called Santa Crux.

OF GVATIMALA.

GVATIMALA is bounded on the North, by Jucutan, and the Golf of Honduras; on the South, with Mare del Zur; on the East, (or the South-east rather) with Caſtella Aurea; on the Weſt, with New Spain. Extended 300 leagues in length, upon the Coaſts of Mare del Zur; but meaſuring by a ſtrait line, not above 240: the breadth thereof 180 leagues, where broadeſt; in moſt places narrower. So called from Guatimala the chief Province; as that from the prime City of it, honoured with the ſeat of the Governour, and the Courts of Juſtice.

The nature of the ſoil and people (if differing in any material thing from thoſe before) we will conſider in the View of thoſe ſeveral parts, into which this Countrey is divided. The principal whereof, 1 Chiapa, 2 Verapaz, 3 Guatimala ſpecially ſo called, 4 Honduras, 5 Niceragua, 6 Veragua. The reſt of leſs note, eaſily reduced to theſe.

1 CHIAPA hath on the Weſt, New Spain; on the Eaſt, Verapaz; on the North, part of Jucutan; and Mare del Zur, upon the South. Extended 40 leagues in length, not much leſs in breadth; and antiently inhabited by four Nations, all of ſeverall Languages.

The ſoil not very natural for Corn or Fruits, though Pot-herbs brought from Spain thrive well, as do Beans and Lentils; yet Vines and other richer fruits ſeldom come to good. Wood-vines they have, which yield a very pleaſant pulp; and if well ordered, might be brought to afford more profit. Their trees, moſt of them, greater than in other places, as Pines, Oaks, Cedars, and the Cypreſs; whole Woods of Walnuts, but the Nut not ſo big as thoſe of Europe. Some of their Trees yield Roſin, ſome ſuch precious gums, as in other places are not uſual; and ſome there are whoſe Leaves being dried into a powder, afford a ſoveraign plaſter for exulcerate ſores. And they have need too often to make uſe of theſe Plaſters, the Countrey being full of Snakes and other venemous Creatures (ſome of the Snakes no leſs than 20 foot in length) whoſe poiſon being ſtrong and deadly, doth require ſuch helps. Of the People nothing ſingular, that I have met with; but that they are more muſical and exact in painting, than the reſt of the Natives.

Towns of moſt note in it, 1 Cividad Real, built by the Spaniards in the Countrey of the Chiapenſes, at the foot of an hill; ſituate in a round Plain, encompaſſed about with Mountains like an Amphitheatre: afterwards made a Biſhops See, and privileged by the Kings of Spain to be governed by ſuch City-Magiſtrates as they call Alcaides. 2 Chiapa, in a vale adjoyning; before the building of the other, of moſt note in this Province: yet ſtill before it in regard of its ſituation, this Valley being better fraught with Pears, Apples, Wheat and Maize, than all the reſt of the Countrey. 3 Tecpatlan, once the chief of the Zoaques, poſſeſſed of 25 Villages in this Province; now beautified with a Monaſtery of Dominican Friers. 4 Capanavatzla, the principall Town of twenty five, which the Quelenes held in this tract; remarkable for nothing but a Convent of the ſame Dominicans. 5 S. Bartholmews, another town in the territory of the ſame Quelenes: neer which is ſaid to be a great Pit, or opening of the earth, into which if any man caſts a ſtone, though never ſo little, there preſently followeth a loud and fearfull noiſe, like a clap of thunder. 6 Guevetlan, built by Pedro de Alvaridi, when he was Governour of theſe parts; the chief Town of a little Province called Soconuſco. 7 Caſapualca, a ſmall Burrough, but memorable for a Well in the fields adjoyning; the waters whereof are noted to riſe and fall, as the Ocean doth flow or ebbe, and at equall diſtances of time. Of thirteen Townſhips which the Zeltales were poſſeſſed of, I finde no one named; though painted all of them, and ſet forth to the eye of the Traveller, with Coccinele, of which their Territory hath good plenty.

And now I am fallen upon theſe Rarities of Nature, I cannot but take notice (though ſomewhat out of my Method) of a River by the Spaniards called Rio Blanco, which turns wood to ſtones: of a Spring in the Cantred of Taſixa, which in the Summer is full of water, in the Winter dry; of another in the ſame Cantred, which for one three years, though it rain never ſo little, is full of water, and the next three years hath none at all; and ſo ſucceſſively by turns: and finally, that the chief River of the Province, having received into it many leſſer ſtreams, is ſwallowed up neer a Village of the Chiapenſes, called Otztutan, never after ſeen. None of them famed for Golden Sands, as are thoſe of Guaxata; though it be thought there be ſome Veins of gold and ſilver, but hitherto neglected for want of Slaves to work the Mines.

2 VERAPAZ is bounded on the Weſt, with Chiapa; on the Eaſt, with Guatimala, and Hondura; on the North, with Jucutan; and on the South, with the Territory of Soconuſco. In Latine called Provincia Vera-Pacis, by the Spaniards Verapez; becauſe not conquered by the ſword, but won to the obedience of the King of Spain, by the preaching of the Dominican Friers.

The Countrey 30 Leagues in length, and as much in breadth, full of high Hills and deep Valleys, but no fruitfull plains; generally overgrown with Woods, very large and thick, which ſo hinder the free paſſage of the winds, that the Aire hereof is very ſhewery: Inſomuch that for nine moneths in the year they have always rain, not altogether free from it in the other three. By reaſon of this moyſture much annoyed with Mosquits, a kinde of Gnats, very injurious to their Fruits, with which otherwise (as with Fish and other necessaries) they were well provided. No Mines of Gold, or Silver discovered hitherto, though the Spaniards have many times in vain attempted it. Instead whereof some of their Trees drop a kinde of Amber, which they call Liquid amber; some, Mastick, and some other, Gums: they have also many Medicinal woods, as Sarzaparilla, that called China wood, and many others.

annoyed

The people tractable and conform to the Spanish Government, except the Lecandones, and Pachuteci, some Remainders of the ancient Salvages; who keeping in the Mountains and craggy Rocks of this Countrey, have hitherto retained both their Native freedom, and their old Idolatries. No Towns herein possessed by the Spaniard, and but fourteen Villages in all, in which they live mingled with the old Inhabitants. The principal of these St. Augustines, not so much memorable in it self, as for the neighbourhood of a Cave betwixt two Mountains; from which the Rain descending turns into Alabaster, naturally fashioned into Pillars and other Pourtraitures. Into which also many Springs do convey their waters, which there being joyned into a body, make an handsom River, able almost at the first appearance to bear a Boat. A Port they also have at the bottom of an Arm of the Sea, called Golfo Dulce: but of so little use and Trading, that I finde no name for it, unlesse it should be that Yztapa which Herrera speaks of, by whom placed in Guatimala.

3. GUATIMALA specially so called, is bounded on the West, with Verapaz, from which parted by the River Xicalapa; on the East, with Nicaragua; on the North, with Honduras; and on the South, with Mare del Zur, or the Pacificque Ocean. Extended 30 leagues from the North to the South, and on the shores of Mare del Zur, not above seventeen. But reckoning in Yzalcos, Chaluteca, and S. Saviours, three adjoyning Regions, by some made Provinces distinct; the dimensions of it must be much greater both for length and breadth.

The Countrey Mountainous, but withall very full of Rivers; by consequence commodious, both for fishing and hunting. Fruitfull of Wheat, Maize, and other Provisions, but those fruits not lasting. Not so much subject unto rain as they are in Verapaz, but more troubled with winds. Full of rich Pastures, and those Pastures of great Heards of Cattel. Good store of Cotton-wool, some Balsamum, and other Medicinal Liquors; as also of the best Sulphur, and many Apothecaries Drugs, which I have no skill of. The people Pusillanimous and fearfull, greater proficients in Christianity and Civility, than most of the Salvages: but so that it is thought they would relapse again to their ancient Paganism, and revive again their old barbarous customs, if not held in by the bridle of fear, and the curb of power. The men affirmed to be good Archers, and the Woman good Spinners.

Chief Rivers hereof 1. Guacapa, a River of a course but of 13 leagues, yet of great depth, and Navigable half the way; which falleth into Mare del Zur. 2. Lempas, watering the Burrough of St. Saviours, which hath its rise from a great Lake, and his fall in the same Sea also. Here is also said to be a Lake near the Village of Ystepeque, of the waters whereof are made both Sulphur and Allom. And here is said to be a Volcana, or burning Mountain, which though it hath vomited no Fire of late, the matter of it being spent; yet the said Monuments of his Furies do remain among them; another not far off which still casts out smoak.

Towns of most note 1. Guatimala, or St. Jago de Guatimala, the chief Town of the Province, situate on a little River betwixt both Vulcanos, by one of which most terribly wasted, Anno 1541. But being re-edified, it hath since exceedingly flourished, by reason of the Bishops See, the residence of the Governour, and the Courts of Justice. 2. St. Salvador, 40 leagues East-wards from Guatimala, by the Natives called Guzculan; situate on the River Guacapa, seven leagues from the Sea, and neighboured by a great Lake of five leagues compasse. 3. Acaxutla, at the mouth of the same River, the Port Town to St. Saviours. 4. St. Trinidad, by the Natives called Samsonate, the most noted Empory of this Countrey; the Place of Bartery betwixt the Inhabitants of New Spain, and those of Peru. 5. St. Michaels, two leagues from the Bay of Fonseca, which serves unto it for an Haven. 6. Xeres de la Fontera, the chief Town of the Cantred of Chulutecan (by which name it was formerly known) situate on the Frontiers towards Nicaragua, and to the South-East of the Bay of Fonseca: that Bay so named in honour of Roderick Fonseca Bishop of Burges, and President of the Councel for the Indies, An. 1532. by Giles Gonsales de Avila, who first discovered it. About and in this Bay are ten little Islands, four of which inhabited, and plentifully furnished with Wood, Water, and Salt.

4. HONDURA hath on the South, Guatimala, specially so called; on the West, the Bay or Arm of the Sea, called Golfo Dulce, by which parted from Verapaz: on the North, and East, the Sea called Mare del Nort; on the South-East, Nicaragua; on the South, Guatimala, specially so called. In length from East to West by the Banks of that Sea 150 leagues, and about 80 leagues in breadth from North to South. The name of Honduras, or Fonduras imposed upon it from the depth of the Sea, about the principal Headland of it, called the Cape of Honduras.

The whole Countrey either Hills, or Vallies, little Champagne in it; fruitfull of Maize and Wheat, and of very rich Pasturage; made so by the constant overflowings of their Rivers about Michaelmasse; which do not onely soyl their grounds, but water their Gardens. The principal of them. 1. Hungara. 2. Chamalucon. 3. Ulna, all neighboured by fertile fields, and pleasant Meadows. Some Mines of Gold and Silver are conceived to be here, but not yet discovered: the people being so slothfull and given to idleness, that they rather live on Roots, than take pains in tilling of their Land; and therefore not easily intreated to toyl for others, but where necessity and strong hand do compell them

Towns of moſt note, 1. Valladolit, by the Natives called Commyagna, 40 leagues diſtant from the Sea, Situate in a pleaſant and fruitfull Valley, on the banks of the River Chamalucon; and honoured with a Biſhops See, fixed here about the year 1558. built near the place where once Franciſco de Monteio, Governour of this Province had planted a Colony of Spaniards, Anno 1530. by the name of S. Maria de Commyagna. 2. Gracios di Dios, 30 leagues Weſt-ward of Valladolit, built by Gabriel de Royas, An. 1530. to be a place of defence for thoſe who worked in the Mines, againſt the Savages. But finding himſelf unable to make it good, he defaced and left it; Re-edified again by Gonſalvo de Alvarado, and ſince well inhabited. 3. S. Peters, eleven leagues diſtant from the Port of Cavallos, but ſeated in a moſt healthy aire; and therefore made the dwelling place of the Farmers of the Kings Cuſtomes, who have their houſes in this Town, and follow their buſineſſe in the other, as occaſion is. 4. Porto de Cavallos, ſo called from ſome horſes thrown over-board in a violent Tempeſt; the moſt noted Haven of theſe parts, and ſtrong by natural ſituation: but ſo ill guarded and defended, that in the year 1591. it was pillaged by Captain Chriſtopher Newport, and An. 1596. by Sir Anthony Sherley. Deſerted on thoſe ſpoils, and not ſince inhabited. 5. S. Thomas de Caſtile, 18 leagues from Cavallos, naturally ſtrong, and fortified according to the Rules of Art: to which, as to a place of more ſtrength and ſafety, Alfonſo Briado de Caſtilla Preſident of the Seſſions of Guatimala, removed both the Inhabitants and Trade of Cavallos. 6. Traxillo, ſeated on the riſing of a little Hill betwixt two Rivers (one of them that which is called Haguara) diſtant from Cavallos 40 leagues to the Eaſt, and 60 leagues to the North of Valladolit: ſurprized and pillaged by the Engliſh, An. 1576. Not far hence towards the North-Eaſt lieth the Cape of Honduras, from whence the ſhore drawing inwards till it joyn with Jucutan, makes up a large and goodly Bay called the Golf of Honduras. 7. S. George de Olancho, ſo named of the Vally Olancho, in which it is ſeated; a Vally noted heretofore for ſome golden Sands, which Guajape, a River of it, was then ſaid to yield.

5. NICARAGUA is bounded on the North, with Honduras; on the Eaſt, with Mare del Nort and the Province of Veragua; on the South, with Mare del Zur, on the Weſt, with Guatimala. By Didaco Lopez de Salſedo, who firſt ſubdued it, it was called the New Kingdom of Leon; but the old name by which they found it called at their coming thither, would not ſo be loſt.

The Countrey deſtitute of Rivers, except that part hereof towards Veragua, called Coſta Rica, reckoned a Province of it ſelf. The want hereof ſupplied by a great Lake, or a little Sea, called the Lake of Nicaragua, 120 leagues in compaſſe, ebbing and flowing like the Sea; upon the banks of which ſtand many pleaſent Villages and ſingle houſes. A Lake well ſtored with Fiſh, but as full of Crocodiles: and having made its way by a mighty Cataract, emptieth it ſelf into Sea about four leagues off. Not very rich in Corn, (moſt of which is brought them from Peru) but well ſtored with Cattel: level and plain, and ſhadowed with frequent Trees; one amongſt others of that nature, that a man cannot touch any part of it, but it withereth preſently. Affirmed to be as full of Parrets, as England of Crows; ſtored with great plenty of Cotton-wool, and abundance of Sugar-canes. In a word ſo pleaſing generally to the eye, that the Spaniards call it by the name of Mahomets Paradiſe.

The people for the moſt part, ſpeak the Spaniſh tongue, and willingly conform themſelves to the Spaniſh garb, both of behaviour and apparel: well weaned from their old barbarous cuſtomes, retained onely by ſome Mountainers, whom they call Chontales. All of good ſtature, and of colour indifferent white. They had before they received Chriſtianity, a ſetled and politick form of government. Onely as Solon appointed no Law for a mans killing of his Father, ſo had this people none for the killer of a King; both of them conceiting that men were not ſo unnatural, as to commit ſuch crimes. A Thief they judged not to death, but adjudged him to be ſlave to that man whom he had robbed, till by his ſervice he had made ſatisfaction. A courſe more merciſull, and not leſſe juſt, than the loſſe of life.

Chief Towns hereof 1 Leon, or Leon de Nicaragua, ſituate on the Lake aforeſaid, the Reſidence of the Governour, and the Biſhops See; built in a ſandy ſoyl, and begirt with Woods. 2. Granada, on the ſame Lake, ſixteen leagues from Leon; beautified with a fair Church and a ſtrong Caſtle, both founded by Ferdinando de Cordova: the Citie ſeated in a liberal and wealthy ſoyl, well furniſhed with Sugar-canes; for the refining of which here are many Work-houſes, which they call Ingenios. 3. Segovia, diſtant from the former about 30 leagues, rich in veins of ſilver. 4. Jaen, (all called according to the names of ſome Towns in Spain) ſituate at the end of the Lake aforeſaid; from whence by a long and narrow Channel it diſembogueth into the Sea, near the Port of S. John. 5. Realeio, about a league diſtant from the Port of Poſſeſſion, in the Latitude of 12 degrees and 40 minutes; inhabited for the moſt part, by Shipwrights and Marriners. 6. Nicoia, giving name to a little Territory, within the bounds whereof ſtandeth 7. Avarines alſo. 8. Cartago, 40 leagues from Nicoia, equally diſtant from both Seas, on each of which it hath a convenient Port: this Town the principal of that part, which is called Coſta Rica.

6. VERAGUA hath on the Weſt, Coſta Rica; on the Eaſt, bounded with the Diſtrict of Panama; waſhed on both other ſides by the Sea: extended 50 leagues in length from Weſt to Eaſt; not above 25. where narroweſt, from one Sea to the other. The name given to it from the River Veragua, of greateſt note in it at the firſt Diſcovery.

The ſoyl hereof Mountainous and exceeding barren, not fit for tillage, and leſſe uſefull in feeding Cattel; ſufficiently provided of Maize and Pot-herbs: but elſe of little neceſſary for the life of man; unleſſe the people could eat ſilver, or drink Aurum Potabile. Of both which Metals, but eſpecially of Gold, here are ſuch never-periſhing Mines, that the Spaniards think them able to ſupply all wants, and cure all Diſeaſes. Once being asked what made them ſo greedy of that Metal; it was anſwered, That they were much much troubled with grief of heart, for which Gold was a moſt Soveraign Medicine. And as the Countrey, ſuch the people, hardy, couragious, and warlike, and ſuch as bear the Spaniſh yoke with great impatience: the ſtouteſt and moſt untameable people, being bred moſt commonly in Mountainous and woody Countreys.

Chief Rivers of this little Province, 1. Veragua which gives name unto it. 2. Belen, by the old Inhabitants called Yebra; at the mouth of which Columbus purpoſed to have ſetled a Spaniſh Colonie, for the better tranſporting of his Gold. But finding that the Channel, on the ceaſing of ſome rain which had fallen before, was become ſo ſhallow, that no ſhip could go in, or out; he gave over that purpoſe. 3. La Trinidad. 4. La Conception; all falling into Mare del Nort. Their chief Towns, 1. Conception, on the Mouth of that River, the ſeat of the Governour. 2. La Trinidad, on the banks of that River, near the Port of Belen, and ſix leagues Eaſt-wards of La Conception. 3. St. Foy (oppidum St. Fidis) twelve leagues from Conception on the South; where the Spaniards melt, and caſt their Gold into Bars and Ingots. 4. Carlos, not far from the ſhores of Mare del Zur. 5. Philippina, on the Weſt of Carlos. Each ſeated on a large and capacious Bay. Before which Bays lie a Frie of Iſlands, which the Spaniards call Zebaco, from the chief amongſt them. Thirty in all; the principal, Zebaco, Cabaio, St. Marie, St. Martha, inhabited in former times, now not much frequented; the people being dragged into the Continent to work in the Mines.

This Countrey oweth its firſt Diſcovery unto divers men, according to the ſeveral Members and diviſions of it. The laſt in order, being the firſt that was diſcovered, but the laſt that was conquered, had the honour to be viſited by Columbus himſelf. Who driving up and down theſe Coaſts in the year 1502. hit on the entrances of the River, which afterwards he cauſed to be called Belen; where hearing that there was plenty of Gold in the Mines of Hurira not far off, he intended to fortifie. But the River failing him as was ſaid before, and finding nothing fit to ſuſtain his men; he bent himſelf, though unwilling, to a further ſearch. He had before touched upon Honduras alſo, but I finde not that he landed on it: the ſetling of theſe Countreys being deſtinated to another hand. Twenty years after this the moſt fortunate Cortez having fully quieted and compoſed the affairs of Mexico, reſolved to make his Maſter Lord of the reſt of America. And to that end ſent out his Officers and Commanders into ſeveral parts. By Pedro de Alvarado he ſubdued Guatimala; Hondura, by Chriſtopher de Olid: Veragua, and Nicaragua, by Conſalvo de Corduba. But fearing leſt the conquered Provinces might revolt again, he reſolved to viſit them in perſon. Attended by a choiſe Band of 150 horſe, and as many foot, and 3000 Mexicans, he began his journey in October 1524. and held on his progreſſe as far as to Truxillo: where finding thas Gonſales de Cordova had ſo plaid his Game, as there was no neceſſity of going further, he made a ſtand, having marched above 400 leagues with his little Army. Returning back another way, in April 1526. he came home to Mexico; with whoſe return we conclude alſo our ſurvey of the Northern Peninſula, containing all America Septentrionalis, or Mexica.

OF PERUANA.

PERUANA, the other of the two great Peninſulas, into which the vaſt Continent of the NEW WORLD doth now ſtand divided, hath the form of a Pyramis reverſed: more anſwerably thereunto than Africk, though that ſo reſembled. Joyned to the other by a ſtrait and narrow Iſthmus, called the Straits of Darien, whereof we ſhall have opportunity to ſpeak more anon: which looks but like a ſtone miſ-laid in ſo great a building; or the firſt ſtep, by which we are to climb the top, as in other Pyramids.

The name derived from Peru, the chief Province of it; the Circumnavigation ſaid to be 17000 miles. Nothing elſe to be ſaid in the general, but what will ſerve more fitly for particular places; except it be the deſcription of ſome prime Mountains and principal Rivers: which being of too long a courſe to be reckoned unto any one particular Province, may more properly deſerve place here. Of theſe the chief 1. Orellana, or the River of Amazons, called by the firſt name from Franciſco de Orellana, a Spaniard, who firſt diſcovered it; by the ſecond, from the Amazons, a kinde of ſtout and warlike Women, who are ſaid to have inhabited on the banks thereof. The Fountain of it in Peru, the fall in the North Sea, or Mare del Nort. A River of ſo long a courſe, that the ſaid Orellana is reported to have ſayled in it 5000 miles, the ſeveral windings and turnings of it being reckoned in: and of ſo violent a current, that it is ſaid to keep its natural taſte and colour, above 30 miles after it falleth into the Sea; the Channel of it of that breadth, where it leaveth the Land, that it is accompted 60 leagues from one point to the other. 2. Orenoque, Navigable 1000 miles by ſhips of burden, and 2000 miles by Boats and Pinnaces; having received into it an hundred Rivers, openeth into the ſame Sea with 16 mouths, which part the Earth into many Iſlands (ſome equal to the Iſle of Wight:) the moſt remote of thoſe Channels 300 miles diſtant from one another. By ſome it is called Raliana, from Sir Walter Raleigh, who took great pains in the diſcovery and deſcription of it; or rather in diſcovering it ſo far, as to be able to deſcribe it. 3. Maragnon, of a longer courſe than any of the other, affirmed to meaſure at the leaſt 6000 miles, from his firſt riſing to his fall; and at his fall into the Sea, to be no leſſe than 70 leagues from one ſide to the other. More properly to be called a Sea, than many of thoſe great Lakes, or largeſt Bays, which uſually enjoy that name. 4. Rio de la Placa, a River of a leſſe courſe than the other, but equal unto moſt in the world beſides; in length from its firſt Fountain 2000 mile, in breadth at his fall into the Sea, about 60 leagues: and of ſo violent a ſtream, that the Sea for many leagues together, altereth not the taſte of it. All theſe, as they do end their Race in the Atlantick, ſo they begin it from the main body of the Andes, or at the leaſt ſome Spur or branch of that great body.

But before we venture further on more particulars, we are to tell you of theſe Andes, that they are the greateſt and moſt noted Mountains of all America; beginning at Timama a Town of Popayan, in the New Realm of Granada; and thence extended South-wards to the ſtraits of Magellan, for the ſpace of 1000 leagues and upwards. In breadth about 20 leagues, where they are at the narroweſt; and of ſo vaſt an height withall, that they are ſaid to be higher than the Alpes, or the head of Caucaſus, or any of the moſt noted Mountains in other parts of the World. Not eaſie of aſcent, but in certain Paths, by reaſon of the thick and unpaſſable Woods, with which covered in all parts thereof which lie towards Peru (for how it is on the other ſide, or by what people it is neighboured, is not yet diſcovered:) barren, and craggy too withall, but ſo full of venomous Beaſts, and poyſonous Serpents, that they are ſaid to have deſtroyed a whole Army of one of the Kings of Peru, in his march that way. Inhabited by a people as rude and ſavage as the place, and as little hoſpitable. The moſt noted Mountain of America, as before was ſaid, and indeed the greateſt of the World. Of fame ſufficient of themſelves, not to be greatned by the addition of impoſſible Figments, or improbable Fictions. Among which laſt I reckon that of Abraham Ortelius a right learned man, who will have theſe Mountains to be that which the Scripture calleth by the name of Sephar, Gen. 10. 30. and there affirmed to be the utmoſt Eaſtern limit of the ſons of Joktan: the vanity and inconſequences of which ſtrange conceit, we have already noted when we were in India.

Proceed we now unto the particular deſcriptions of this great Peninſula, comprehending thoſe large and wealthy Countreys, which are known to us by the names of 1. Caſtella Aurea. 2. The New Realm of Granada. 3. Peru. 4. Chile. 5. Paragnay. 6. Braſil. 7. Guyana, and 8. Paria, with their ſeveral Iſlands. Such other Iſles as fall not properly and naturally under ſome of theſe, muſt be referred unto the general head of the American Iſlands, in the cloſe of all.

OF CASTELLA DEL ORO.

CASTELLA del ORO, Golden Caſtile, (Aurea Caſtella, as the Latines) is bounded on the East and North, with Mare del Noort; on the West, with Mare del Zur, and ſome part of Veragua, on the South with the New Realm of Granada. Called by the name of Caſtile, with reference to Caſtile in Spain, under the favour and good fortune of the Kings whereof it was firſt diſcovered: Aurea was added to it, partly for diſtinctions ſake, and partly in regard of that plenty of Gold which the firſt Diſcoverers found in it. It is alſo called Terra Firma, becauſe one of the firſt parts of Firm land, which the Spaniards touched at, having before diſcovered nothing but ſome Iſlands onely.

The ſoyl and people being of ſuch ſeveral tempers, as not to be included in one common Character, we will conſider both apart in the ſeveral Provinces, of 1. Panama. 2. Darien. 3. Nova Andaluzia. 4. S. Martha, and 5. the little Province De la Hacha.

1. PANAMA, or the diſtrict of Panama, is bounded on the East, with the Golf of Uraba, by which parted from the main land of this large Peninſula; on the Weſt, with Veragua one of the Provinces of Guatimala in Mexicana; waſhed on both the other ſides with the Sea. So called of Panama the Town of moſt eſteem herein, and the Juridical reſort of Caſtella Aurea.

It taketh up the narroweſt part of the Streit, or Iſthmus, which joyns both Peninſulas together: not above 7 or 8 leagues over in the narroweſt place, betwixt Panama and Porto Bello, if meaſured by a ſtraight line from one Town to the other; though 18 leagues according to the courſe of the Road betwixt them, which by reaſon of the Hills and Rivers is full of turnings. Of ſome attempts to dig a Channel, through this Iſthmus to let the one Sea into the other; and of the memorable expedition of John Oxenham over it by land, we have ſpoke already.

The aire hereof foggy, but exceeding hot, and conſequently very unhealthy, chiefly from May unto November: the ſoyl either mountainous and barren, or low and miery; naturally ſo unfit for grain, that it yieldeth nothing but Maize, and that but ſparingly; better for paſturage, in regard of its plenty of graſſe, and the goodneſſe of it: ſo full of Swine at the Spaniards firſt coming hither, that they thought they never ſhould deſtroy them; now they complain as much of their want, or paucity. As for the Inhabitants, whatſoever they were formerly, is not now material: moſt of the old ſtock rooted out by the Spaniards, and no new ones planted in their room; ſo that the Countrey in all parts, except towards the Sea, is almoſt deſolated, or forſaken.

The Countrey, as before was ſaid, of little breadth, and yet full of Rivers: the principal whereof, 1. Chagre, by the Spaniards called Rio de Lagartos, or the River of Crocodiles, (many of which are harboured in it) which falleth into Mare del Noort betwixt Nombre de Dios, and Porto Beleno. 2. Sardinilla. 3. Sardina. 4. Rio de Colubros, or the River of Snakes; and 5. Rio de Comagre, all falling into the ſame Sea. Then on the other ſide 6. Chepo, whoſe ſands in former times yielded plenty of Gold. 7. Rio de las Balſas, on the banks whereof groweth great ſtore of timber for the building of ſhips. 8. De Congos, emptying it ſelf into the Bay of S. Michaels.

Towns of moſt note, 1. S. Philip, ſeated on a ſafe and ſtrong Haven called Porto Belo: built in this place by the appointment of King Philip the ſecond, but by the counſel of John Baptiſta Antonelli, to be the ſtaple of the trade betwixt Spain and Panama: partly in regard of the unhealthineſſe of Nombre di Dios, where it was before; but chiefly becauſe that Town was found to have lien too open to the invaſions of the Engliſh. Fortified with two ſtrong Caſtles (on each ſide of the Haven one) but for all that ſurprized and pillaged by the Engliſh under Captain Parker, in the year 1601. 2. Nombre de Dios, conveniently ſeated in the Upper-ſea, for a Town of trade; and for that reaſon made the Staple of ſuch commodities, as were trucked betwixt Peru, and Spain; which brought from Spain, and landed here, were from hence conveyed over the Land to Panama, and there ſhipped for Peru; or brought from Peru, and landed at Panama, were by land brought unto this place, and here ſhipped for Spain. It took this name from Didaco Niqueſa a Spaniſh Adventurer, who having been diſtreſſed by tempeſts was driven in here, and bid his men go on ſhore en nombre de Dios, in the name of God. In reference hereunto by the Latines, borrowing a Greek word, it is called Theonyma. Of great trade once, on the occaſion before mentioned: but in the year 1584. the trade was removed unto Porto Belo, by the counſel of Antonelli before named; and ſome years after that, the Inhabitants alſo. To haſten which, the taking of this Town by Sir Francis Drake, ſerved exceeding fitly. 3. Acla, on the Coaſt of the ſame Sea alſo, but on the South-East of Nombre de Dios. 4. Nata, or S. Jago de Nata, ſituate on the lower Sea on the borders of Veragua, about 30 leagues on the Weſt of Panama. 5. Panama, the chief Citie of Caſtella Aurea, the Reſidence of the Governour, of the Courts of Juſtice, honoured with a Biſhops See, a Suffragan to the Arch-biſhop of Lima; and beautified with three fair Monaſteries, and a Colledge of Jeſuits. Seated in the 9 degree, or Northern Latitude; and ſo near the Sea, that the Waves come cloſe unto the Wall. A Town through which the Wealth of Spain, and Peru, paſſeth every year: yet not containing above 350 houſes; the number of the Souldiers greater than that of the Citizens. 6. S. Crux la Real, a league from Panama, inhabited totally by Negroes brought out of Guinea.

This

This Province was the first of those on the Firm land, which were discovered by Columbus. But I find not that he left any name unto it, or to any River or Promontory of it, but only to a little Iland lying on the shore neer Porto Belo, which he caused to be called Los Bastimentos; because being cast hereon by chance, he found good store of Maize and other provisions, called Bastimentos by the Spaniard. But the chief Ilands of this Province, are those which Columbus never saw, called the Ilands of Pearls; situate in the Southern sea, opposite to Panama, from which distant 17 leagues or thereabouts. In number above twenty, but two only inhabited, the one called Tarorequi, the other Del Rio; the rest of them rather Rocks than Ilands. Much famed not onely for the abundance, but the excellencie of the Pearls there found; fairer than those of Margarita, and Cubagna, so much commended. Once very profitable to the Spaniards, till by their cruelty and covetousness they unpeopled the Ilands, and destroyed the Pearls. Inhabited now only by a few Negroes, and some Slaves of Nicaragua, who live here to attend the grazing of their Masters Cattel, in the fields and pastures.

2 DARIEN hath on the North, the District of Panoma; on the South New Granada; on the East, the River of Darien, whence it hath its name, and the Golf of Vraba; and on the West, the main Southern Ocean.

The Countrey of a temperate Air, and a fruitfull Soil: so happy in the production of Melons and such other fruits, that within twenty dayes after they are sown, they are fully ripe. With like felicity it bringeth forth Grapes, and other fruits; either naturall hereunto, or brought hither from Europe. A tree here is called Hovo, not elsewhere known; the shade of which is conceived to be so wholsom, that the Spaniards seek them out to sleep under them. Out of the Blossoms of it they distill a perfumed Water; of the Bark a Bath or Lavatorie, good for the opening of the pores, and redress of weariness; and from the Roots they draw a Liquour which they use to drink of. Of Beasts and Fowl great plenty, whether wild or tame; and some of them not heard of in other places.

Principall Rivers hereof, 1 Darien, whence it hath the name; A clear water, and much drank of, but of a slow course and a narrow channel; able to bear no bigger Vessels than those of one peece of wood used among the Salvages; we may call them Troughs. But with this slow course it falleth at last into the Golf of Vraba, a large Arm of the Sea, which pierceth far into the Land, and at the mouth is said to be eight leagues over. 2 Rio de las Redas, & 3 De la Trepadera, both emptying themselves into the Golf of Vraba. 4 Corobaci, on the same side of the Countrey also, 5 Beru, a River of the South-Sea, not much observable, but that some have laboured to derive the Etymologie of Peru, from thence.

Towns of most note, though few of any, 1 Darien, on the Bank of the Golf of Vraba; oftentimes so unhealthy by the Mists which do thence arise, that the Inhabitans use to send their sick people to the fresh Air of Corobarie, to revive their spirits. By the Spaniards it was called S. Maria Antiqua, afterwards the Antique of Darien, being new built by one Eucisus a Spanish Adventurer. An. 1510. and grew so suddenly into wealth and reputation, that within four years it was made an Episcopal See. But being built too neer the Banks of the Darien, in a mooriish and unhealthy place, both the Episcopal See, and the chief Inhabitants were removed to Panama. Some other Colonies of the Spaniards have been planted here; but either forsaken by themselves, or destroyed by the Salvages: To that now from Acla to the bottom of the Golf of Vraba, the Spaniards have not in their own hands either Town or Village. Nothing but some few scattered houses in all that tract, for the use of the Natives; who formerly made their Nests like Birds, on the tops of trees. 2 Bizu, 3 Los Angadesos, two small villages on the other side of the Countrey, possessed by the Salvages. Besides these, and some sorry sheds here and there dispersed, all the rest a Desart. So that not being able to maintain the reputation of a distinct Province, the government hereof hath of late been devolved on the Prefect of Panama.

3 NOVA ANDALVSIA hath on the West, the River Darien, and the Golf of Vraba; on the East, the Province of S. Martha; on the North, the main Ocean; and on the South, the new Realm of Granada. So called with reference to Andalusia a Province of Spain. Called also by some Writers Carthagena, from Carthagena now the chief City of it.

It is in length from the Golf of Vraba to the River of Magdalen, 80 Leagues, and neerupon as much in breadth. Mountainous, and very full of woods, but in those woods great store of Rosin, Gums, and some kinds of Balsams. Here is also said to be a Tree, which whosoever toucheth, is in danger of poisoning. The Soil, by reason of the abundance of rain which falls upon it, very moyst and spewie; insomuch that few of our European fruits have prospered in it. Few veins of Gold in all the Countrey, except only in that part hereof which is called Zena; where the Spaniards at their first coming, found great store of treasure. But it was taken out of the graves and Monuments of the dead, not found in Mines, or digged for as in other places: such being the reputation of that Territory in former times, that the Nations far and neer did carry the bodies of their Dead to be buried in it, with great quantity of Gold, Jewels, and other Riches. The Natives very fierce and stout, whiles they were a People: But giving the Spaniards many overthrows before fully conquered, they have been so consumed and wasted by little and little, that there are not many of them left.

Chief Rivers hereof, 1 Rio de los Redos, & 2 Rio de los Anades, both falling into the Bay of Vraba. 3 Zenu, which passing thorow the Province above-mentioned, to which it gives name, falleth into the Ocean, over against the Iland Fuerte. 4 S. Martha, of long course, and much estimation. For rising in the most Southern parts of the New Realm of Granada, neer the Æquinoctial; it passeth thorow the whole length of that Kingdom, and at the last mingleth its streams with that of the River Magdalen, not far from Mopox. By the Natives it is called Cauca. And as for Mountains, those of most note are a continual Ridge of Hills, by the Spaniards called Cordillera, by the Natives Abibe; craggy, and difficult of ascent; in breadth affirmed to be 20 leagues, but the length uncertain, the furthest ends of them towards the South not discovered hitherto.

not

Places of most importance in it, 1. Carthagena, situate in a sandy Peninsula, ten degrees distant from the Æquator: well built, and for the bigness of it of great wealth and state; consisting of 500 houses, or thereabouts, but those neat and handsom. Beautified with a Cathedral-Church, three Monasteries, and one of the best Havens of all America. Well fortified on both sides, since the taking of it by Sir Francis Drake, who in the year 1585. took it by assault, and carried thence besides inestimable sums of money, 240 brasse pieces of Ordnance. 2. Tolu, by the Spaniards called S. Jago, twelve miles from Carthagena; memorable for the most soveraign Balsam of all these parts, called the Balsam of Tolu; little inferior, if at all, to the Balsam of Egypt. 3. Mopox, or Santa Crux de Mopox, near the Confluences of the Rivers of Martha and Magdalens. 4. Baranca de Malambo, on the banks of the River Magdalen, six leagues from the Ocean; where such Commodities as are brought by Sea for the New Realm of Granada, use to be unshipped, and carried by Lighters, or small Boats up the River. 5. Sebastian de Buena vista, built by Alfonso de Oieda, An. 1508. in his first attempt upon this Countrey; situate on a rising ground near the mouth of the Bay of Uraba, a league and a half from the Sea. 6. Villa de Maria, 30 leagues South of Carthagena, but of no great note.

4. S. MARTHA hath on the West, Nova Andalusia; on the East, Rio de la Hacha; on the North, the main Ocean; on the South, the New Realm of Granada: about 70 leagues in length, and as much in breadth. So called from S. Martha the chief Citie of it.

The Countrey Mountainous and barren, not fit for pasturage, or tillage; productive notwithstanding of Limons, Orenges, Pomgranates, and such other fruits as are brought hither out of Spain. The aire on the Sea-Coasts very hot and scalding, and in the midland parts as cold, because of the neighbourhood of some Mountains alwayes covered with snow. The principal of those Mountains, a long Ridge of Hills, by the Spaniards called Las Sierras Nievadas, or the Snowy Mountains; discernable by the Marriners 30 leagues at Sea; by whom called the Mountains of Tairona, from a Vally of that name beneath them; the Inhabitants whereof by the advantage of those Hills, have hitherto preserved their liberty against the Spaniards. The rest, though subject to the Spaniards, have their several Kings, affirmed to be an arrogant and ill-natured people; made worse perhaps than indeed they are, by reason of their hate to the Spaniards, whose government they live under with great unwillingness.

Chief Rivers of this Province, 1. Rio Grando de la Magdalena; which hath its fountain in the Hills of the New Realm of Granada, not far from the Æquator; but its fall into the Ocean betwixt Carthagena and St. Martha, in the Latitude of 12 degrees: where dividing it self, it maketh an Island of 5 leagues long, and after openeth into the Sea with two wide mouths; discernable for ten leagues space from the rest of the Main, by the taste and colour of the water. 2. Rio de Cazaze, which falleth into the Magdalen, as doth also 3. Cæsar, by the Natives called Pompatan: which having its fountain near the Citie of Kings in the Vale of Upar, passeth directly towards the South, till it meet with 4. Ayumas, another River of this Tract; accompanied with whom he runneth West-ward for the space of 70 leagues, and endeth in the great River of Magdalens, as before is said, near the Forrest of Alpuerte. 5. Bubia. 6. Piras. 7. Don Diego. 8. Palamini. 9. Gayza, falling into the Ocean.

Towns of most observation, 1. St. Martha, situate on the shores of the Ocean, in the Latitude of ten degrees and 30 minutes; neighboured by a safe and convenient Haven, defended from the winds by an high Mountain near unto it, and honoured with an Episcopal See. Small, and ill built when it was at the best; nor well recovered of the spoil it suffered by Sir Francis Drake, Anno 1595. and by Sir Anthony Sherley the next year after. 2. Tenariffe, on the Banks of the Magdalen, 40 leagues from St. Martha. 3. Tanalameque, by the Spaniards called Villa de las Palmas, twenty leagues to the South of Tenariffe. 4. Cividad de los Reyes, or the Citie of the Kings, situate in the Vale of Upar, on the banks of a deep and violent River, called Guatapori; which not far off falleth into the Cæsar: ill neighboured by the Inhabitants of the Vale of Toirona, not hitherto reduced under the command of the Kings of Spain. 5. Ramada, by the Spaniards called New Salamanca, in the same Valley of Upar; as liberally furnished with veins of Brasse, as it is with stones. 6. Ocanna, on the Western Reach of the River Cæsar, equally distant from its confluence with Ayumas, and its fall into Magdalen.

5. RIO DE LA HACHA is the name of a little Province lying on the North-East of S. Martha: environed on two sides with the main Ocean, and on the third (which is that of the East) with a large and spacious Arm of the Sea, called Golfo de Venezuela: the extremities hereof North-west, called Cabo la Vola; on the North-East, Cabo di Coqui boccoa.

It took this name from the Town and River of La Hacha, a small Town, consisting of no more than an hundred houses, but big enough to give name to so small a Province. Built on a little Hill about a mile from the Sea; the Haven inconvenient and exposed to the Northern winds, but the soyl about it very rich, fruitfull of all such Plants as are brought from Spain; well stored with veins of Gold, excellent Salt-wiches, and some Gems of great worth and vertue. Distant eight leagues from New Salamanca, and 18 leagues from the Cape la Vela: surprized and sacked by Sir Francis Drake, Anno 1595. 2. Rancheria, six leagues on the East of De la Hacha, inhabited for the most part by such as get their living by Peal-fishing. 3. Topia, five leagues from La Hacha, and almost as much from the Sea: the Fields whereof lying betwixt the Town and New Salamanca, were terribly wasted by the English, in the year aforesaid; because the Governour of New Salamanca, with whom they had contracted for 4000 Ducats not to burn that Town, would not stand to his bargain.

These Countreys discovered by Columbus, and by him called Terra Firma, as before was said; were afterwards brought under the power of Spain, by two several men, imployed in the subduing of their several parts, Anno 1508. To Didaco Niquesa was allotted the government and conquest of those parts hereof, which lie on the West of the Bay of the Uraba, containing the Præfectures of Darien and Panama, by the name of Castella del Oro: And to Alfonso Oreda, all that lay on the East of that Gulf, by the name of Nova Andalusia. But these two finished not the work, though they first begun it: Enciſus discovering further on the River of Dariene, than Niquesa had done before him; and Balboa finding out the way to the South-Sea, where Panama and the best of their trading lieth, which neither of the other had thought upon. Both afterwards joyned into one Province, the Præfectures of S. Martha and Rio de la Hacha (when conquered and subdued by the Spaniard) being added to it. One of their last Kings which held out against the Spaniards, was called Abibeia, who had his Palace on the top of a Tree, (as most of his subjects had their houses;) from which when Francisco de Vanques a Spanish Captain could by no other Rhetorick win him to descend, he laid his Axe to the Root, and began to fell it: which seen, the poor Prince was fain to come down, and compound both for his life and Palace at the will of his Enemies.

OF NOVA GRANADA.

NOVA GRANADA, or the New Realm of Granada, is bounded on the North, with Caſtella Aurea; on the Weſt, with Mare del Zur; on the Eaſt, with Veneznela. The Countreys lying on the South, are not yet diſcovered, ſhut up with vaſt Hills, and impaſſable Mountains; except onely in thoſe parts which lie near the Sea, where the way lieth open to Peru. Thus called by Gonſalvo Ximenez, the firſt Diſcoverer; who being a Native of Granada in Spain, gave this name unto it.

It is in length 130 leagues, and as much in breadth; reckoning Popayan for a part of it, though by ſome made a diſtinct government. So that we may divide the whole into theſe two parts, Granada ſpecially ſo called, lying on the Weſt; and 2. Popayana, lying towards Mare del Zur.

1. GRANADA, ſpecially ſo called, hath an Air, for the moſt part, well tempered betwixt heat and cold; with little difference (if any) betwixt Summer and Winter, and not much in the length and ſhortneſſe of dayes. The Countrey full of Woods, but of great fertility, well ſtored with Corn and Paſturage, many Herds of Cattel; ſome veins of Gold and other Metals, and in that part hereof, which is called Tunia, great plenty of Emeralds: and amongſt their Woods, that called Guajacan, Medicinable for the French diſeaſe, grows in great abundance. The people tall and ſtrong of body, not very induſtrious, the greateſt part of their time being ſpent in ſongs and dances. The Women of a white and more clear complexion than any of their neighbours, and more handſomly habited; apparelled in black, or party-coloured Mantles, girt about their middles; their hair tied up, and covered moſt an end with Chaplets intermixt with flowers, and artificially compoſed.

Rivers of note I finde not any, but thoſe of S. Martha, and S. Magdalen, deſcribed before: nor any diſtinction of it into ſeveral Provinces, but that the names of Tunia, Bagota, Panches, Colymæ, and Muſi, by which the Salvages were diſtinguiſhed, when firſt known to the Spaniards; with reference to which the principal of their Towns are by ſome deſcribed.

Towns then of greateſt note, 1. S. Foy de Bagota, but commonly S. Foy, the Metropolis of this new Realm, the See of an Archbiſhop, and the ſeat of the Governour. Built by Gonſalvo Ximinez de Queſada, at the foot of the Mountains, not far from the Lake of Guatavita, on the banks of which they uſed to ſacrifice to their Idols. The Town inhabited by 600 Families of Spaniards, beſides thoſe of the Natives; and ſituate in the fourth degree of Northern Latitude. 2. S. Michael, twelve leagues on the North of S. Foy, a well-traded Market. 3. Tocayma, in the Territory of the Panches, a barbarous and man-eating people, till reclaimed by the Spaniards; and Maſters of the richeſt part of all the Countrey. The Town about 15 leagues from S. Foy, toward the North-Eaſt; and ſeated on the banks of Pati, a little River, which not far off is ſwallowed up in the body of Magdalen. 4. Tudela, is the Countrey of the Muſi, and Colymæ, two warlike Nations; ſituate on the banks of the River Zarbi, and made a Colonie of the Spaniards at their firſt coming hither; but deſerted by them not long after, for fear of the Salvages, though the want of Proviſions was pretended. 5. Trinidado, on the ſame River, but ſomewhat lower, and more remote from the Salvages; by whom notwithſtanding much annoyed; the fields thereof full of veins of Chriſtal, Emeralds, Adamants, and Chalcedonians. 6. La Palma, built by the Spaniards in the ſame territory of the Muſi and Colymæ, An. 1572. 7. Tunia, ſo called according to the name of the Tribe, or Province, in which it is ſituate; built on the top of an high Hill, that it might ſerve for a retreat and Fortreſſe againſt the Salvages; now a well traded Emporie, and very wealthy, the Inhabitants being able to impreſſe 280 horſe for preſent ſervice. 8. Pampelona, 60 leagues from S. Foy, towards the North-Eaſt, rich in Mines of Gold, and Herds of Cattel. 9. Merida, on the North of Pompiana, the furtheſt Town of all this Province on the North-Eaſt towards Veneznela: As 10. S. John de Los Lianos, or S. John upon the Plains is in the South-Eaſt, 50 leagues from S. Foy, and ſeated in a corner full of veins of Gold.

2. POPAYANA lieth on the Weſt of New Granada, ſtrictly and ſpecially ſo called; from which parted by the River Martha, which hath its original in this Countrey; on the North bounded with Nova Andaluzia, or Carthagena; and with Mare del Zur upon the Weſt. Extended in length from North to South 130 leagues at the leaſt; and from the River to the Sea, betwixt 30 and 40.

The Countrey over-cloid with rain, breeds but little Maize, leſſe Wheat, and almoſt no Cattel; though in ſome places richer than it is in others. The people anciently Man eaters, and as rude as any, now more induſtrious and affable than the other Americans; eſpecially about Popayan, where the ſoyl is alſo better tempered than in other places. The Rivers of moſt note beſide that of S. Martha, which we have ſpoken of already; and ſome leſſer ſtreams which fall into it; are 1. Rio de S. Juan. 2. Rio de Cedres. 3. Rio de S. Jago; all falling into Mare del Zur.

Cities and Towns of greateſt note, 1. Popayan, called by the name of the King hereof, when firſt known to the Spaniards; ſituate on a nameleſſe but pleaſant River, in the midſt of a Plain, of great wealth, and a healthy aire, in two Degrees and 30 Minutes of Northern Latitude: the ordinary reſidence of the Governour, and See of a Biſhop. The building fair unto the eye, but ſlight; excepting the Cathedral, and a Monaſtery of the Friars called De mercede, which are ſtrong and laſting. 2. Antiochia, (or Sancta Fides de Antiochia) on the borders of Nova Andaluzia, 100 leagues distant from Popayan. Seated upon a little River which falls into the Martha, from which twelve leagues distant. 3. Caramanta on the Martha it self. 4. Patia in a pleasant Valley, on the banks of a small River, but of excellent water. 5. S. Anne in the Cantred of Anzerman, by which name it is sometimes called: Built on a little Hill betwixt two sweet Rivers, and compassed round about with a Grove of most pleasant fruits 6. S. Jago de Arma, the chief Town of the Cantred of Arma; situate in a territory very rich in Gold, but otherwise unprovided of all manner of necessaries: Fifty leagues to the North-East of Popayan. 7. Carthage, in the Province of Quimbaia, 22 leagues from S. Jago de Arma, seated in a Plain betwixt two Torrents, seven leagues from the River of S. Martha. 8. Cali, a league from that River, but on the banks of another, in the Latitude of four degrees: neighboured by a vast and mighty Mountain, at whose foot it standeth; where built by Sebastian de Betalcuzar, the first discoverer of this Countrey. 9. Bonaventure on a Bay so called in the Southern Ocean; a small Town, but of great use for the conveyance of the Commodities of New Spain, unto Popayan, and other Towns of this Province. 10 Timana, 80 leagues from Popayan towards the East, at the foot of that vast ridge of Mountains called the Andes; which hereabouts taking their beginning, extend as far South-wards as the Streits of Magellan. 11. S. Juan de Pasto, situate in a pleasant Valley, but one degree from the Æquator. 12. Sebastian de la Plata, so called of its Silver Mines. in the South-East confines of the Province. 13. Almagner, on the sides of a plain, but barren Mountain. 14. Madrigal, by the Natives called Chapan Chicu; in a barren soyl, were not Gold a supplement of all wants, which is there found in some abundance.

To this Province belong also some Islands in the Southern Ocean, that is to say, 1. The Isle of Palmes, South of the Cape of Corrientes, so called from the abundance of Palms which are growing in it. 2. Gorgona, opposite to the mouth, or outlet of Rio de S. Juan, an Island of three leagues in compasse; the Hills so high, the Vallies so extreamly low, the Sun so little seen amongst them, and the Woods so dark, that some have likened it to Hell. Not much observable, but that it did afford a lurking place unto Francis Pizarro, in his attempts upon Peru, when repulsed from landing on that Coast. 3. Del Gallo, a small Island, not a league in circuit, on the South of Gorgona.

This whole Countrey thus divided into two Præfectures, but both subordinate to the Juridical Resort in the Citie of S. Foy de Bagota; is indebted for its first Discovery to two several persons. Granada specially so called, was first discovered by Gonsalvo Ximinez de Quesada, employed therein by Ferdinand de Lugo, Admiral of the Canarie islands, An. 1536. who passing up the River of Magdalen without molestation (more than the difficulties of the wayes through Fens and Forrests) as far as the Cantred of Bagota, was there encountred by that King. whom he easily vanquished: and wasting all his Territories, carried with him thence great quantity of Gold, Emerals, and other Treasure. The residue of those Petit Princes which then governed in their several Tribes, either submitted to him without opposition, or else were vanquished at the first rising. Having discovered and subdued every several Province, and miserably murdered Sangipa the last King of Bagota, of whom he had made use in subduing the Panches; he caused it to be called The new Realm of Granada, for the reason formerly laid down: and summing up the spoils he had gotten in this easie war, he found them to amount to 1800 Emeralds, 191294 Pezoes of the finest Gold, 35000 of a courser and inferiour alloy. In his return he heard the news of Sebastian de Betalcazars marching on the other side of the River of S. Martha; who having at the same time discovered and subdued the Province of Popayana, was beating out his way towards the North-Sea, and from thence to Spain. This Betalcazar, being by Francisco Pezarro the Conquerour of Peru, made Governour of the Town and Province of Quito, and having secured all the Countrey to the very Sea; resolved to open a way homewards through those Regions, which lay betwixt his own Province, and Mare del Noort: And this he did resolve the rather, in regard that he had been informed, that a rich Countrey, full of Gold, was in that Tract possessed by Popayan and Columbaz, two Petit Princes, but yet the greatest in those parts. Encountred in his march by the Roytelets of Patia and Pasto, he soon made them weary, and retire themselves into the Woods and impassable Mountains; and passing slowly on, came at last to Popayan. Where though the Salvages entertained him with some frequent skirmishes, yet they grew quieter by degrees; giving the Spaniards leave to possesse themselves of their best Towns, and to build others in such places as they thought convenient. But this was after the first Conquest, according to the coming over of succeeding Colonies: The first Conquest being finished, An. 1536. when the New Realm of Granada was subdued by Ximinez.

OF PERU.

PERU is bounded on the East, with that vaſt ridge of Mountains which they call the Andes; on the Weſt, with Mare del Zur; on the North with Popayan, an Appendix of the New Realm of Granada; on the South, with Chile. So called from the River Peru, which being one of the firſt of note which the Spaniards met with in this Countrey, occaſioned them to give that name to the whole.

It is in length from North to South 700 leagues, but the breadth not equal. In ſome places 100 leagues broad, in others 60. in the reſt but 40. more or leſſe according to the windings of the Seas and Mountains. Divided commonly into three parts, all of ſo different a nature from one another, as if they were far diſtant both in ſite and ſoyl. Theſe parts the Plains, the Hill-Countreys, and the Andes: the Plains, extended on the Sea-ſhore, in all places level without Hills; the Andes, a continual ridge of Mountains without any Vallies; the Sierra, or Hill-Countreys, compoſed of both. Each part ſtretched out from North to South, the whole length of the Countrey; the Plains from the Sea-ſhore to the Hill-Countreys, for the moſt part ten leagues broad, in ſome places more; the Hill-Countreys 20 leagues in breadth where narroweſt, and as much the Andes. In the Plains it never raineth, on the Andes continually in a manner; in the Hill-Countreys rain from September to April, after that fair weather. In the Hill-Countreys the Summer beginneth in April, and endeth in September; in the Plains their Summer beginneth in October, and endeth in April. So that a man may travel from Summer to Winter in one day; be frozen in the morning at his ſetting forth, and ſcorched with heat before he come to his journeys end. Some other differences there are, as that the Andes are covered with Woods and Forreſts, whereas the Hill-Countreys are bare and naked; the Plains, where there are ſtore of Rivers, and the benefit of the Sea beſides, ſandy and dry, and in moſt places deſtitute both of Fruits and Corn; in ſome parts of the Hill-Countreys where there are no Rivers, and a rain but ſeldom, plenty of Roots, Maize, Fruits, and all other neceſſaries. In the Plains there never bloweth any but the Southerly winde, though it bring no rain with it; and in the Hills, winds from every Coaſt, and of every nature, ſome bringing Rain, ſome Snow, ſome claps of Thunder, and others fair weather at the heels of them. Inſomuch that it is obſerved, that ſuch of the Inhabitants of the Plains as go up to the Sierra, or Mountains, do finde ſuch pains in the head and ſtomack, as freſh-water Souldiers when firſt Sea-ſick.

Not to purſue theſe differences any further in the ſeveral parts, we will look upon the whole in groſſe: which we ſhall finde but meanly furniſhed for the bigneſſe, with thoſe Commodities which ſo large a Countrey might afford: inſomuch as many of the people live moſt on Roots, here being little Wheat, and not ſuch quantities of Maize (the ordinary bread-grain of the Americans) as to ſerve their multitudes. Nor finde I that the Cattel of Europe have been either brought hither in any great numbers, or are grown to any great increaſe. Inſtead of which they have in their Woods and Paſtures infinite numbers of beaſts ſomewhat like wilde Goats, (which they call Vicagues) and great ſtore of a kinde of Sheep, by them called Pacos, profitable both for fleece and burden; as big as a ſmall breed of horſes, but in taſte as pleaſing as our Mutton, and no leſſe nouriſhing. A Creature ſo well acquainted with its own abilities, that when he findeth himſelf over-loaded, no blows, or violence ſhall make him move a foot forwards, till his load be leſſened; and of ſo cheap a dyet, that he is content with very little, and ſometimes paſſeth three whole dayes without any water. The Camels of theſe parts, and not much unlike them.

This as it is by ſome accompted for a Creature proper to this Countrey onely (though in that miſtaken) ſo may it paſſe amongſt the Rarities hereof: many of which it hath both in Beaſts, and Plants, and in inanimate bodies alſo. Amongſt their Plants they have a Fig-Tree, the North part whereof looking towards the Mountains, bringeth forth its Fruits in the Summer onely; the Southern part looking to the Sea, fruitfull onely in Winter. Some as deſervedly do count the Coca for a wonder, the Leaves whereof being dried, and formed into Lozenges, (or little Pellets) are exceeding uſefull in a journey. For melting in the mouth, they ſatisfie both hunger and thirſt, and preſerve a man in ſtrength, and his ſpirits in vigour: and generally are eſteemed of ſuch ſoveraign uſe, that it is thought that 100000 Baskets full of the Leaves of this Tree are ſold yearly at the Mines of Potoſia onely, each of which at the Markets of Cuſco would yield 12.d. or 18.d. a piece. Another Plant they tell us of, but I finde no name for it, which if put into the hands of a ſick perſon, will inſtantly diſcover whether he be like to live, or die. For if on the preſſing it in his hand he look merry and chearfull, it is an aſſured ſigne of his Recovery: as on the other ſide, of death, if ſad and troubled. Amongſt their Beaſts, beſides thoſe ſpoken of before, they reckon that which they call the Huanacu: of which it is obſerved that the Males ſtand Centinel on the Mountains, while the Females are feeding in the Vallies: and if they ſee any men coming towards them, they ſet out their throats, to give their Females notice of ſome danger near; whom when they come up to them, they put in the front of the Retreat, interpoſing their own bodies betwixt them and their enemy. Nor want they Rarities of nature even in things inanimate: here being ſaid to be a round Lake near the Mines of Potozi, whoſe water is ſo hot, though the Countrey be exceeding cold, that they who bathe themſelves are not able to endure the heats thereof, if they go but a little from the Banks: there being in the midſt thereof a boyling of above twenty foot ſquare.

A Lake which never doth decreaſe, though they have drawn a great ſtream from it to ſerve their Metal-Mills.

More profitable, though leſs rare, thoſe Metals, which thoſe Mills are made for; and not leſs profitable, one of thoſe Vulgar Plants, I mean Tobacco, growing more abundantly here than in other Countries of America: for which cauſe, and the reſemblance which it hath to Henbane, in form and quality, it is called the Henbane of Peru, by Gerrad and ſome others of our Modern Herbaliſts. A Plant, which though in ſome reſpect being moderatly taken, it may be ſerviceable for Phyſick: yet beſides the conſumption of the purſe, and impairing of our inward parts, the immoderate, vain, and phantaſtical abuſe of this ſtinking weed, corrupteth the naturall ſweetneſs of the breath, ſtupifieth the brain; and indeed is ſo prejudicial to the general eſteem of our Coutrey-men, that one ſaith of them, Anglorum corpora, qui hnic plantæ tantopere indulgent, in Barbarorum naturam degeneraſſe videntur. The two chief Vertues aſcribed unto it (pardon me I beſeech you this ſhort digreſſion) are, that it voideth Rheume, and is found to be a ſoveraign Antidote againſt Lues Venerea, that loathſom Diſeaſe of the French Pox. For this laſt, like enough it is, that ſo unclean a Diſeaſe may be helped with ſuch an unſavory Medicine. But for the ſecond it may perhaps conſiſt more in opinion, than truth or reality; the Rheume, which it is ſaid to void, being no more than what it breedeth at the preſent. We may as well conclude that Botled Ale is good for the breaking of winde (which effect we finde commonly to follow on the drinking of it) though indeed it be only the ſame winde which it ſelf conveyed into the Stomack. But Tabacco is by few now taken as Medicinal; it is of late times grown a Good-fellow, and fallen from a Phyſitian to a Complement. An humour, which had never ſpred ſo far amongſt us, if the ſame means of prevention had been uſed by the Chriſtian Magiſtrates, as was by Morat Baſſa among the Turks: who commanded a Pipe to be thruſt thorow the Noſe of a Turk whom he found taking Tobacco, and ſo to be carried in deriſion all about Conſtantinople. It is obſerved that the taking of Tobacco was firſt brought into England, by the Marriners of Sir Francis Drake, An. 1585. And that it hapned not unfitly in the way of an Antidote to that immoderate uſe of drinking, which our Low Countrey Souldiers had brought out of the Netherlands much about that time, An. 1582. Before which time, the Engliſh of all Northern People were deemed to be moſt free from that Swiniſh Vice, wherein it is to be feared that they have much out-gone their Teachers, the Dutch. Certain it is, that it is taken ſo exceſſively by both theſe Nations, that I may juſtly ſay with a learned Fleming, Herbæ ejus, non dicam uſus, ſed abuſus, non modo in Anglia, ſed in Belgio, & alibi, inſanum in modum jam adolevit.

But the greateſt riches of this Countrey is moſt out of ſight, hid in the Bowels of the earth, but found in thoſe never-decaying Mines of Gold and Silver; more eminently abounding in this one Province than in all America. For inſtance whereof we may take the Silver Mines of Potozi, diſcovered in the year 1545. the fift of which, payable into the Kings Exchequer, amounted in forty years to a 111 millions of Pezoes, every Pezo being valued at ſix ſhillings and ſix pence; and yet a third part of the whole was diſcharged of that payment. By this one we may gueſſe ſomewhat of the reſt, as by the proportion of one member, the dimenſions of the whole body may be probably aimed at; unleſs the riches of theſe Mines be beyond conjecture; of which it is affirmed by ſome knowing men, that they yield in many places more Gold than Earth. Upon which ground it is conceived by Arias Montanus, and ſome other very learned men, that this Peru is that land of Ophir to which Solomons Navy went for Gold; induced thereunto by that Text of the Chron. lib. 2. cap. 3. ver. 6. That the Gold was the Gold of Paruaim. A fancy not of ſo ſandy a foundation, as many others of that kinde, if Peru had been the old name of this Countrey, and not newly given it by the Spaniards. By means whereof not only Spain, but all Europe alſo is better furniſhed with gold and ſilver, than ever formerly. For in the firſt Ages of the World our Anceſtors the Britains (I muſt digreſs here once again) had no other money than Iron-rings, and Braſs rings, which they uſed for inſtruments of Exchange; and in the Roman Provinces, we read that the moſt uſual Materials of their coyn, was moſt times Braſs, and ſometimes Leather. Corium forma publica percuſſum, as it is in Seneca. Of which laſt ſort we finde that Frederick the Emperour made uſe at the ſiege of Millain; and the Engliſh, in the time of the Barons Wars. And why not ſo? conſidering that no longer ſince in the year 1574. the Hollanders being then reduced to ſome extremities, made money of Paſt-boord. But this hapneth only in Caſes of neceſſity, the two Metals of gold and ſilver having for many hundred years (though not in ſuch abundance as in later times) been the chief inſtruments of Exchange and Bartery betwixt man and man, & queſtionleſs will ſo continue to the end of the World. I know Sir Thomas More in the ſecond Book of his Utopia, preferreth Iron before Gold, becauſe more neceſſary for all uſes; Ut ſine quo non magis quam ſine igne atque aqua vivere Mortales queant: and that he giveth us there a Plot to bring gold and ſilver into contempt, telling us how the Utopians uſe to employ thoſe Metals, in making Chamber-pots, and Veſſels of more unclean neceſſities, eating and drinking for the moſt part in glaſs or earth. He telleth us alſo how they make chains and fetters of Gold to hold in their rebellious ſlaves, and Malefactors; how they puniſh infamous perſons by putting Gold Rings upon their Fingers, Jewels of Gold in their ears, and chains of gold about their necks: how they adorn their little children with precious Jewels, which gayeties, when they come to Age, and ſee them worn by none but ſuch little children, they uſe to caſt away of their own accord; as with us our elder Boys leave off without conſtraint, their Babies, Cobnuts, and other Crepundia. He further telleth us how the Ambaſſadors of the Anemolij (a confederate State of the Utopians) coming amongſt them richly and gorgiouſly attired, were took for ſlaves, by reaſon of their Golden Chains, and the meaneſt of their Followers thought to be the Ambaſſadors: how the elder Boys derided the Strangers for wearing jewels, as if they had been children ſtill; and how the People laught at their chains of Gold, as being too weak to ſhackle ſuch ſturdy Fellows. Now though it pleaſed that wiſe State to have any Gold or Silver at all amongſt them, it was not (as he telleth us) out of any eſtee n which themſelves had of it; but therewith to provide themſelves of Forreign aids, and pay their Armies, when the neceſſities of their affairs, or other reaſon of State did require the ſame. How this device would ſort with the humours of thoſe People, whom Lucian antiently did Fable, and ſome of later times more really do fancy to have their dwelling in the Moon; I am not able to ſay, as having hitherto had no commerce, nor correſpondence with the Inhabitants thereof: though poſſibly I may endeavour it in the end of this Book, and finde it to ſort well enough with their condition. Certain I am this ſublunary World of ours will never brook it. And ſo I leave it, and look back again on the Mines of Peru: the extraordinary plenty of gold and ſilver, which thoſe and the reſt of the New-world have furniſhed the old World withall, being conceived by many knowing and judicious men, to be the cauſe of the dearneſs of all commodities at the preſent times, compared unto the cheapneſs of the times foregoing. For where much is, there greater prices will be given, than in other places. And yet there want not ſome that add alſo other cauſes, of the high prizes of our days: viz. Monopolies, Combinations of Merchants and Craftſmen; tranſportation of Grain, pleaſure of great perſonages, the exceſs of private men, and the like: but theſe laſt I rather take to be con-cauſes, the firſt being indeed the principal. For, (as that excellent Sir Henry Savil, hath it in the end of his notes on Tacitus) the exceſſive abundance of τὰ νόμῳ μόνον ὄντα, things which conſiſt meerly on the conſtitution of men, draweth neceſſarily τὰ φύσει ὄντα, thoſe things which nature requireth, to an higher rate in the Market. Capta ab Auguſto Alexandra (ſaith Oroſius) Roma in tantum opibus ejus crevit. ut dupla majora quam antehac, rerum venalium pretia ſtatuerentur. As for that queſtion, whether of the two Kingdoms be happier, that which ſupplieth it ſelf with money by Traffick and the works of Art; or that which is ſupplied by Mines growing, as the gift of nature; I finde it by this tale in part reſolved. Two Merchants departing from Spain to get gold, touched upon part of Barbary, where the one buyeth Moors to dig and delve with; the other fraughteth his veſſell with ſheep: and being come to the Indies, the one finding Mines, ſet his ſlaves to work, and the other hapning in graſſie ground, put his ſheep to grazing. The Slaves grown cold and hungry, call for food and cloathing; which the ſheep-maſter by the increaſe of his ſtock had in great abundance; ſo that what the one got in gold with toil, charges and hazard both of life and health; he gladly gave unto the other in exchange or Bartery, for the continual ſupply of Victuals, Clothes, and other neceſſaries for himſelf and his ſervants. In the end the Mines being exhauſted, and all the money thence ariſing exchanged with the Shepherd for ſuch neceſſaries as his wants required: home comes the Shepherd in great triumph, with abundance of wealth, his Companion bringing nothing with him but the Tale of his travels. But I dare not take upon me to dertermine this point. Only I add, that the Engliſh and the Hollanders by the benefit of their Manufactures and continual Traffick did in concluſion weary the late King of Spain, King Philip the ſecond, and out-vied him (as it were) in wealth and treaſure; notwithſtanding his many Mines of Gold and ſilver in Barbary, India, Mexicana, Guinea, ſome in Spain and Italy, and theſe of Peruana which now we handle, and which have given occaſion unto this Diſcourſe, or Digreſſion rather.

It is now time to take a view of the People alſo, affirmed to be (for the moſt part) of great ſimplicity; yet ſome of them (thoſe ſpecially which lie neer the Æquator) to be great diſſemblers, and never to diſcover their conceptions freely. Ignorant of Letters, but of good courage in the Wars, well ſkilled in managing ſuch weapons as they had been uſed to, and fearleſs of death; the rather prompted to this laſt by an old opinion held amongſt them, that in the other world they ſhall eat, and drink, and make love to Women. And therefore commonly at the Funeral of any great perſon, who was attended on in his life; they uſe to kill and bury with him one or more of his ſervants, to wait upon him after death. In the manner of their living much like the Jews; but not in habit: conform therein to the other Salvages, but that thoſe cover their upper parts with ſome decent garment, and leave the other Members bare. But this is only neer the Æquator; both Sexes elſwhere wearing Mantles to their very Heels. Habited in one faſhion over all the Countrey, except the dreſſing of their heads, wherein ſcarce any one doth agree with another, but hath his faſhion to himſelf. The Women leſs eſteemed here than in other places, treated as Slaves, and ſometimes cruelly beaten upon ſlight occaſions: the men (as S. Paul ſaith of the ancient Gentiles) leaving the natural uſe of the woman, and burning in their luſts towards one another. For which, if God delivered them into the hands of the Spaniards, they received that recompenſe which was meet.

Rivers of moſt note 1 S. Jago, on the borders towards Popayana; a River of a violent courſe, and ſo great a depth, that it is 180 Fathoms deep at the influx of it. 2 Tombez, opening into a fair and capacious Bay, over againſt the Iſle of Puna, on the further ſide of the Æquator; an Iland of twelve Leagues in compaſs, and exceeding fruitfull. 3 Guagaquil, of a longer courſe than any of the other two, and falling into Mare del Zur on the South of Tombez; over againſt the Iſle of Lobos. No Iland after this of note upon all this Coaſt. If any come in our way which runneth towards the Eaſt, we ſhall meet with them in the view of the ſeveral Provinces; and ſo we ſhall of the Hills or Mountains which are moſt conſiderable; the Andes having been already touched on. Take we now notice of the great Lake of Titicaca, in which twelve Rivers are reported to loſe themſelves; in compaſs 80 Leagues, and uſually Navigable with ſhips and barks. The waters of it not ſo ſalt as thoſe of the ſea, but ſo thick that no body can drink them; yet on the banks of it many habitations, as good as any in Peru. By a fair water courſe or River it paſſeth into a leſs Lake, which they call Aulaga; and thence moſt probably findeth a way into the Sea, or elſe is ſwallowed in the Bowels of that thirſty earth; but the firſt more likely.

It is divided commonly into three Juridical Reſorts, viz. of 1 Quito, 2 Lima, and 3 Charcos; each having having under it many ſeveral and ſubordinate Provinces, too many and of too ſmall note to be here conſidered. We will therefore look upon the chief, and of greateſt reckoning, 1 Quito, 2 Los Quixos, 3 Lima, 4 Cuſco, 5 Charcos, and 6 Collao; three on the Sea, and the other three in the midlands; to which the Ilands of it ſhall be joyned in the cloſe of all.

1. QUITO is bounded on the North with Popayan; on the Weſt, with Mare del Zur on the South, with the Province of Lima; and on the Eaſt, with that of Los Quixos. So named from Quito the chief Town and Province of the firſt diviſion.

The ſoil as fertile and as fit for the fruits of Europe, as any other in Peru: well ſtored with Cattell, eſpecially the Pacos or Peruvian ſheep; and plentifully furniſhed both with Fiſh and Fowl. In many parts great ſtore of Nitre, of which they make moſt approved good Gunpowder; and in ſome Rivers, eſpecially that of S. Barbara, many veins of Gold. The people generally induſtrious, eſpecially in the making of Cloth of Cotton, equal almoſt to ſilks for fineneſs; of conſtitution ſtrong and healthy, but given to lying, drinking and ſuch other vices: with which they are ſo much in love, that though they are conceived to be apt of Learning, yet not without great difficulty brought to the Chriſtian Faith; nor willingly reclaimed from their ancient Barbariſm. Extreamly puniſhed with the Pox, an hereditary diſeaſe amongſt them; the very Girls and untouched Virgins ſo infected with it, that neither Tobacco, Guajacan, nor Sarſa parilla, all which this Countrey doth afford in a great abundance, is able to preſerve them from it.

Towns of moſt obſervation in it, 1 Carangues, a large and ſumptuous Palace of the ancient Kings, ſo named becauſe ſituate in the Territory of the Carangues, a barbarous, bloody, and man-eating people; ſubdued by Guayanacapa, one of the mightieſt of the Kings of Peru; from whom revolting, and withall killing many of his Miniſters and Garriſon-Souldiers, they were upon a ſecond conqueſt brought to the banks of a great Lake into which 20000 of them being killed, were thrown. The Lake from thenceforth called Yaguarcocha, or the Lake of blood. 2 Otavallu, another Palace of the Kings, but far inferiour to the other; yet giving name unto the Cantred in which it ſtandeth. 3 Quito, the chief of this Reſort, and once the Regal ſeat of its proper Kings (till made ſubject by Guayanacapa before mentioned) the ruines of whoſe Palace are now remaining. By the Spaniards it is called S. Franciſco, built on the declivity of an Hill, not above 30 minutes from the Equinoctial; well fortified, and as well furniſhed with Ammunition: inhabited by about 500 Spaniards beſides the Natives. The ſtreets whereof ſtrait and broad; the buildings decent: the principal of which, the Cathedral Church, the Courts of Juſtice, and two Convents of Dominican, and Franciſcan Friers. The Town and Territory much annoyed by a Flaming Mountain, or Vulcano; which in the year 1560 caſt out ſuch abundance of cinders, that if a rain had not hapned beyond expectation, had made great ſpoil upon the place. 4 Tacunga fifteen Leagues from Quito; and 5 Rhiobamba in the Territory of the Purvaſij, 40 Leagues from that; each of them honoured with another of thoſe ancient Palaces. 6 Thomebamba neighboured by another of the Kings Palaces, but more magnificent than the former; ſituate in the Countrey of the Canares: amongſt whom anciently the Women tilled the Land, and did all without doors; whiles the Men ſtaid at home and ſpun, and attended houſewifry. 7 Cuenca 64 Leagues from Quito, on another Road, ſituate in a Countrey full of Gold, Silver, Braſs, Iron, and veins of Sulphur. 8 Loxa, ſixteen Leagues ſouthwards of Cuenca, ſituate in the fift Degree of Southern Latitude, and in a ſweet and pleaſant Valley called Guxibamba, between two fine Riverets. The Citizens well furniſhed with Horſe and Armour, but not otherwiſe wealthy. 9 Zamora, twenty Leagues on the Eaſt of Loxa; and 10 Jaen, 35 from that: both ſituate in the Province of Quachimayo, and both ſo called in reference to two Cities of thoſe names in Spain: Then on the Sea coaſts, there are; 11 Portus Votus (Puerto Veio as the Spaniards call it) not far from the Sea ſide, but in ſo ill an Air, that it is not very much frequented. Said to be one of the firſt Towns of this Countrey poſſeſſed by the Spaniards, who digged up hereabouts the bones of a monſtrous Giant; whoſe Cheek-teeth were four fingers broad. 12 Mantu the Port Town to Porto Veio, from whence the trade is driven betwixt Panuma and Peru; the town it ſelf ſituate in a rich vein of Emeralds. 13 Guayaquill, or S. Jago de Guayaquil, called alſo Gulata; ſeated at the bottom of an Arm of the Sea, neer the influx of the River Guayaquil; a noted and much frequented Empory. 14 Caſtro, a Colonie of Spaniards planted, An. 1568 in that part of this Countrey, which they call Provincia de los Eſmeraldos, bordering on Popayan. 15 S. Michael, by the old Natives called Piura, the firſt Colony which the Spaniards planted in Peru, but otherwiſe of no eſtimation. 16 Payta, a ſmall Town, but neighboured by the ſafeſt and moſt frequented Haven of all this Countrey; as guarded from the winde by the Cape of S. Helens on the North, and Punta Piurina on the South; two eminent Promontories. The Town burnt An. 1587. by Capt. Cavendiſh. Who at the ſame time alſo pillaged the Iſle of Puna, the moſt noted Iland of this Tract, ſituate in the Bay of Tombez, as was ſaid before. Fruitfull of all things neceſſary to the life of man; Parats for pleaſure, Sarſaparilla for his health. The people in preceding times ſo ſtout and Warlike, that they maintained a long War with thoſe of Tombez, till in the end compoſed by the mediation of the King of Peru, to whom the King hereof (for a King it had) became an Homager, as ſince their embracing of the Goſpel, to the Kings of Spain.

2 LOS QUIXOS, lieth on the Eaſt of Quito, and the Weſt of El Doradæ, (one of the Cantreds of Guiana, ſo called from its abundance of Gold:) little different in the nature of the ſoil and people from the Province of Quito; but that this is ſomewhat the more barren, and leſs ſtored with thoſe rich metals which the Spaniards come for. The People have alſo a diſtinct tongue of their own, though they both underſtand and ſpeak the Peruvian language.

Chief

Chief Towns hereof, 1 Baeza, built in the year 1559 (which was within two years of the first discovery of this Region) by Giles Ramirez de Avila; 18 leagues from Quito towards the East: now the seat of the Governour. 2 Archidona, 20 leagues on the South-east of Baeza. 3 Avila, on the North of Archidona; so called with reference to Ramirez de Avila before mentioned, or to a Town of that name in Spain. 4 Sevilla del Oro, a Colonie of the Spaniards, as the others are.

On the East of this Province lieth the Cantred of Canelam, inhabited by a blockish and ignorant People, and destitute of all things necessary for the comforts of life. Most mercilesly tormented, and cast to dogs to be devoured, by Pizarro, because they could not shew him the readiest way to some richer Countrey than their own; this being the most barren Region of that part of Peru, which they call La Sierra, or the Hill-Countries. More Eastwards yet in that part, which they call the Andes, lie the Cantreds of the Bracomori, commonly called Juan de Salinas, by the name of the first Discoverer of it: A Countrey not inferior unto many for the quantity of Gold, superior to any for the pureness of it. Chief Towns of which, 1 Valladolit, 2 Loiola, by the Natives called Cumbinama; 3 S. Jago de las Montannas (or S. James of the Mountains) all Spanish Colonies; and all of the foundation of John de Salinis à Loiola, once the Pro-Præfect of the Province, by whom first thorowly subdued to the Crown of Spain.

3 LIMA, called also LOS REYES, is bounded on the North, with Quito; on the South, with Charcas; on the West, with Mare del Zur; on the East, with Colloa and the Province of Cusco. So named from Lima or Los Reyes, the chief City of it. Extended from the 6. to the 16. Degree of Southern Latitude: or measuring it from the Promontorie del Aguja North, to Arequipa on the South, it reacheth to 250 leagues. The soil of the same nature with that of Quito, but more distributed into Vallies, and better peopled.

Places of most observation, 1 Miraflores in the valley of Zanu, 110 leagues on the North of Lima, and about five leagues distant from the Sea; on which it hath an Haven belonging to it, called Chencepen. The Town well seated, and inhabited by a wealthy people, made such by the abundance of Sugar-canes in the neighbouring Valley. 2 Truxillo, in the rich and flourishing Valley of Chimo, on the banks of a small, but pleasant River, and about two leagues from the sea; where it hath a large, but unsafe Haven, which they call El Azzecife de Trugillo. The Town it self situate in the 7. Degree and 30 minutes of Southern Latitude: well built and rich, one of the principal of Peru; inhabited by 1500 Spaniards, besides the Natives, and beautified with four Convents of several Orders. 3. La Parilla, in the valley of the Santa, in which it standeth, and by which it is furnished with a safe and convenient Road for shipping; 20 leagues Southwards of Truxillo, and neighboured by rich Mines of silver, not long since discovered. 4 Arnedo, seated amongst Vineyards in the Valley of Chancay, ten leagues North of Lima. 5 Lima, by the Spaniards called Civdad de los Reyes, or the City of Kings, situate in the Valley of Lima, the most fruitfull part of all Peru, in the Latitude of twelve Degrees and an half. Built with much art, for all the chief streets answer to the Market-place; scarce any private house which hath not water conveyed into it from the River; environed round about with sweet fields, and most pleasant gardens. The founder of it Francisco Pizarro, who laid the first stone on Twelf day (which the Spaniards call the Feast of Kings) whence it had the name, An. 1553. A Town of greater wealth than bigness, the Riches of Peru passing yearly thorow it; well housed, whether we respect the private, or publike edifices: the Cathedral Church, made after the model of that of Sevil; the Convents of Religious Orders, the Courts of Justice, and the Palaces of the Archbishop and Vice-Roy, being all fair and goodly buildings; the Cathedral Church so well endowed, that the Revenues of the Archbishop do amount yearly to 30000 Ducats, besides what belongeth to the Canons and other Ministers. 6 Collao, the Haven-town to Lima, from which two leagues distant, a Town of 600 families, for the most part Sea-men; every house having some Cellar in it for the stowage of Wine, Tobacco, Cables, Pitch, &c. for the use of Mariners; besides those, publike ware-houses for the several commodities, which pass from Lima hither, or from hence to Lima. Unfortified till the year 1579. when sacked and spoiled of infinite treasures by Sir Francis Drake; since that time strengthened by two Bulwarks, and a wall of earth, with 30 peece of Brass-Ordnance planted on the works. 7 Pachacama in the Valley so called, but four leagues on the South of Lima: memorable for a Temple, in which Pizarro found above 90 0000 Ducats of gold and silver, not reckoning in those infinite treasures which the Souldiers had laid hands on before his coming. 8 Guarco, a Colonie of 300 Spaniards, sixteen leagues on the South of Pachacama; environed with the best fields for Wheat in all Peru. 9 Valverde, in a Valley of the same name, so called from the perpetual greenness of it; best furnished with Vines, and those affording the best wines of all this Countrey. A large Town consisting of 500 Spaniards, besides women and children, and other inhabitants of the Countrey: well traded, considering its distance from the Sea (Puerto Quemado the Haven to it, being six leagues off) and beautified with a fair Church, an Hospital, three Frieries, and the handsomest women of these parts. Distant from Lima 35 leagues. 10 Castro Verreyna, in the Valley of Chocolococha, 60 leagues from Lima, enriched with Mines of the purest Silver, digged out of a dry and barren hill, alwayes covered with snow; and standing in so sharp an air, that the Spanish women will not be delivered in it, but are carried further off to be brought to bed. From hence, as I conjecture, comes that vein of Tobacco, which our Good-fellows celebrate by the name of the right Vereinas. 11 Arequipa in the Valley of Quilca, 120 leagues from Lima, a pleasing and delightfull town; which situate at the foot of a flaming mountain, from which in the year 1600 it received much harm) enjoyeth a fresh and temperate Air, and a soil alwayes flourishing. The silver of Plata and Potosi passeth thorow this town, and is shipped for Panama, at an Haven belonging to it; situate on the mouth of the River Chile (upon which Arequipa ſtandeth) but diſtant from the town about 14 leagues. 12 Caxamalca, more within the land, but more towards the North, heretofore beautified with a Royal Palace of the Kings of Peru; memorable for the impriſonment and murder of Atabilaba, or Athnalpa, the laſt King of this Countrey, vanquiſhed not far off by Franciſco Pizarro. 13 Cachapoyas, in the Cantred ſo called, the beſt inhabited of any one Cantred of thoſe parts, ſuppoſed to contain in it 20000 of the Natural Inhabitants, which pay duties to the King of Spain; and ſo eſteemed for beautifull women, that from hence the Kings were antiently furniſhed with their Concubines. 14 Leon de Guanuco, (the addition given it from the Province in which it ſtandeth) a Colonie of Spaniards, rich, ſweet, and very pleaſantly ſeated: beautified heretofore with a moſt magnificent Palace of the Kings; as now with ſome Religious houſes, a College of Jeſuites, and the dwellings of many of the Nobility. Many other midland Towns there are, but of no great note, and therefore purpoſely paſſed over.

4 CUSCO comprehendeth, as the chief, all thoſe ſeveral Provinces of the Hill-Countries, and the Andes, which lie Southwards of the Province or Cantred of Guanaco. Bleſt with a ſweet and temperate Air, not over-ſcalded with the Sun, nor dulled with the diſtempers of the Evening miſts: the Countrey full of freſh Rivers, notable good paſturage, and great herds of Cattel; well ſtored with Coca, which is gathered here in ſome abundance, and moſt excellent Veniſon.

Places of moſt repute in it, 1 Bombon, in the ſame Latitude with Lima; neighboured by a Lake called Laguna de Chinca cocha; ten leagues in compaſs, begirt about with pleaſant hils, and built upon with many rich and as pleaſant villages; out of which runneth the River Marannon, one of the greateſt of theſe parts, ſuppoſed by the Inhabitants to end his courſe in the Mare del Noort. 2 Parcos, once beautified with a Regal Palace, ſeated on the top of a little hill, and begirt about with craggie mountains. 3 Guamanga, by the Spaniards called S. Juan de la Vittoria, ſituate under the 13 Degree of Southern Latitude, on the banks of a freſh and pleaſing ſtream: well built, the houſes being all of ſtone, and tiled or flatted; three Churches, one of them a Cathedral, beſides divers Convents. 4 Bicar, ſuppoſed to be built in the very Center of Peru; where ſtill remain the ruines of a ſumptuous Palace. 5 Guancabelica, a new Town, or but newly raiſed into eſteem, ſuppoſed to contain at the preſent 2000 Spaniards, and double that number of the Natives. Increaſed ſince the year 1566. from a beggerly Village to this greatneſs, by the Mines of Quick-ſilver then diſcovered: Mines of ſuch Riches, that the Kings part out of them amounteth yearly to above 40000 Pezoes, which is about 13000 l. of our Engliſh money. And yet this is not all the benefit he receives from them neither; that Mineral being found ſo neceſſary for the purifying and ſpeedy extraction of their Gold that it is not ſaid without cauſe by the Chymiſts, that Quick-ſilver gives the matter to Gold, and Sulphur the form. 6 CUSCO, in the Latitude of 13 Degrees and 30 minutes, about 130 leagues on the Eaſt of Lima; and ſituate in a rugged and unequal ſoil, begirt with Mountains; but on both ſides of a pleaſant and commodious River. Once the ſeat-royal of the Ingas or Peruvian Kings; who the more to beautifie this City, commanded every one of his Nobility to build here a Palace for their continual abode; ſtill of moſt credit in this Countrey, both for beauty and bigneſs, and the multitudes of Inhabitants; here being thought to dwell 3000 Spaniards, and 10000 of the Natives, beſides women and children. The Palace of the King advanced on a lofty mountain, was held to be a work of ſo great magnificence, built of ſuch huge and maſſie ſtones, that the Spaniards thought it to have been the work rather of divils than of men. Now miſerably defaced, moſt of the ſtones being tumbled down to build private houſes in the City; ſome of the Churches raiſed alſo by the ruines of it, and amongſt them perhaps both the Biſhops Palace and Cathedral, whoſe annual Rents are eſtimated at 20000 Ducats. Yet did not this vaſt Building yield more luſtre to the City of Cuſco, than a ſpacious Market-place; the Center in which thoſe high-wayes did meet together, which the Ingas had cauſed to be made croſs the Kingdom, both for length and breadth, with moſt incredible charge and pains, for the uſe of their Subjects. Of which more hereafter. 7 S. Franciſco de la Vittoria, at the foot of the Andes, a Spaniſh Colonie, and about 20 leagues from Cuſco. 8 S. Juan del Oro, in the Valley of Caravayan, neighboured with rich Mines of the pureſt Gold, whence it had the name; a Colonie of Spaniards alſo. Beyond the Andes lie ſome Countries much famed for wealth: the diſcovery whereof hath often been attempted by the Spaniards, ſometimes with loſs, not ſeldom with ſome hopes of a better fortune, but hitherto without ſucceſs.

5 COLLAO lieth on the South of thoſe Provinces, which we have comprehended under the name of Cuſco; having on the Weſt, the reſt of Lima; on the South, Los Charchos; on the Eaſt, thoſe unknown Countries beyond the Andes. Shut up on the Eaſt and Weſt by two mountainous Ridges; which keeping in one main body till they come beyond the City of Cuſco, do there divide themſelves, and grow wider and wider, not to meet again.

The Countrey plain and full of Rivers, well ſtored with rich paſtures, and thoſe paſtures with great herds of Cattel, barren of Corn, and not well furniſhed with Maize; inſtead whereof they make their bread of a Root called Popa, dried in the ſun and bruiſed to powder; of which the Spaniards make great gain at the Mines of Potoſi. Yet notwithſtanding this great want, it is thought to be the moſt populous part of all Peru; the ſoundneſs and temperature of the Air (which is here very much commended) as much conducing to the populoſitie of a Countrey, as the richneſs and plenties of the Soyl. The people alſo of a clearer and more ſolid judgement, than the reſt of Peru: and ſo well skilled in the obſervation of the courſe of the Moon, that the Spaniards at their coming hither, found the year diſtinguiſhed into Moneths, weeks, dayes; for each of which they had a proper and ſignificant name. The famous Lake of Titicaca is within this Province.

Places

Places of greateſt note in it, 1. Chuquinga, naturally ſtrong and almoſt inacceſſible, invironed either with unſordable waters, or impaſſable Mountains: one Cauſey onely leading to it, which for the ſpace of three leagues, is ſaid to be capable but of one at once. 2. Ayavire, enobled with many fair and coſtly buildings; eſpecially with Monuments of the dead, which exceed the reſt both in coſt and number: for that cauſe by the Spaniards called Las Sepulturas. The Inhabitants of this Tract much waſted by the Civil Wars, which the Spaniards had among themſelves. 3. Hatuncolla, the Metropolis, or chief Town of this Province, as the name doth ſignifie: not far from which the famous River Caravaya, famous for the abundance of Gold in the ſands thereof, hath its firſt original. 4. Chiquita, a Colony of the Spaniards, on the banks of the Lake of Titicaca; a Town of ſo great trade and riches, that the Governour hereof is named immediatly by the King; his place being eſtimated at the worth of 50000 Ducats yearly. 5. Tiaguanaco, at the mouth, or out-let of that Lake; ſuppoſed to be the moſt ancient Burrough of Peru: now moſt remarkable for the ruines of certain great and ſtupendious buildings, ſome of the ſtones whereof are ſaid to be 30 foot long, fifteen foot in breadth, and ſix in thickneſſe: not to be brought thither without the help of Iron Engines (which this people had not till of late) but by ſome ſtrange Arts. 5. De la Faz, or Nueſtra Sennora de la Paz, by the Spaniards called alſo Pueblo Neuvo, and by the Natives Chiquiabo, according to the name of the Cantred in which it ſtandeth, is ſituate at the foot of a little Mountain, by which defended from the injuries of winde and weather, but over-looking a large plain of great fertility: well watered, and well wooded both for fruits and fewel. 7. Chilane. 8. Acos. 9. Pomata. 10. Cepita; and others of as little note.

6. LOS CHARCAS on the North is bounded with Lima, and Collao; on the South, with Chile; on the Weſt, with Mare del Zur; on the Eaſt, with ſome Countreys not yet well diſcovered, interpoſed betwixt it and the Province of Rio de la Plata. This alſo called by the name of Plata, according to the name of the chief Citie of it.

The Countrey extended in length from North to South, but 300 leagues; but meaſuring by the Sea-ſhores, above 400. Not very rich in Corn, or Cattel, though in many places furniſhed with good Paſture-grounds; but for the inexhauſtible Mines of Gold and Silver, not be equalled in Peru. Of theſe the principal thoſe of Porco and Potoſi, but theſe laſt the chief: out of which comes that maſſe of Silver, which yieldeth the King ſo much profit yearly, as before was mentioned. The Mine 200 Fathoms deep, to which they do deſcend by Ladders made of raw Hides, 800 ſteps: ſome of the workmen not ſeeing the Sun many moneths together; many fall down with their loads of Silver on their backs, pulling others after them; and many dying in the works for want of Air. For the refining of this Silver there are 52 Engines, or Silver-Mills upon a River near unto it; 22 more in the Valley of Tarapia not far off, beſides many which they turn with horſes. The Poets words never more literally verified than in theſe deep Mines; where ſpeaking of the Iron-Age, he deſcribes it thus:

Nec tantum ſegetes, alimentaque debita dives
Poſcebatur humus; ſed itum eſt in viſcera terræ;
Quæſque recondiderat, Stygiiſque admoverat umbris,
Effodiuntur opes, irritamenta malorum.

Which I finde thus rendred by George Sandys.

Nor with rich Earths juſt nouriſhments content,
For treaſure they her ſecret entrails rent.
That powerfull evil, which all power invades,
By her well hid, and wrapt in Stygian ſhades.

Places of moſt importance in it, 1. Plata, ſo called from the rich Mines of Silver; and found in Mount Porco near adjoyning, well emptied by the ancient Ingas, but ſearched into again by Franciſco Pizarro; who (it is thought) might have raiſed hence 200000 Ducats of yearly income, if hopes of greater at Potoſi had not took him off. The Town commodiouſly ſeated in a fruitfull ſoyl, in the 19th. degree of Latitude, and 180 leagues diſtant from the Citie of Cuſco; honoured with the ſeat of the Governour, and the Courts of Juſtice; and beautified (beſides many Religious houſes) with a fair Cathedral; the See of the beſt endowed Biſhoprick of all Peru; his Revenues being eſtimated at 80000 Ducats of yearly Rents. By the Natives it is called Chuquiſacay. 2. Oropeſa, twenty leagues from Plata, built by Don Francis de Toledo, when Vice-Roy here, in the rich and pleaſant Valley called Cochabamba, An. 1565. 3. Potoſi, neighboured by thoſe wealthy Mines already mentioned. Diſcovered firſt in the year 1545. before which time this Town was but a ſorry Village; now the beſt peopled and frequented in all the Province: ſaid to be conſtantly inhabited by four, or five thouſand Spaniards, many more of the Natives; not ſo few as 30000 workmen appertaining to it, but lodged in the Villages adjoyning: beſides the infinite reſort of Merchants in purſuit of profit, and idle Gallants, who come hither for their luſts and pleaſures. Situate in the 21 Degree, and 40 Minutes of Southern Latitude, in a cold and very barren ſoyl; yet plentifully furniſhed with all Commodities, both for neceſſity and delight. For as the money is, ſo the Market alwayes. 4. Miſque, a ſmall Town, but one which furniſheth Potoſia, with good plenty of Wine, as 5. Lagunilla, and 6. Tarixa, do with Wheat, Maize, Sugar, and choice of Fruits. 7. Arica, the moſt noted Haven of this Countrey, in the Latitude of 19 Degrees, and 80 Leagues, or thereabouts from the Mines of Potoſia; the wealth whereof brought hither on the backs of their ſheep, is here shipped for Lima; the truth hereof experienced by Sir Francis Drake, who seized here on three Spanish ships, in one of which was 57 Bars of silver, each of them twenty pound weight a piece. Few other Towns, if any, upon all this Coast, which is altogether Rocky, barren, and unfit for habitation; accordingly but little peopled, or not at all.

Come we now to the Peruvian story, which we shall sum up with as much brevity as we can: The people generally governed by the Chief of their Tribes, as in all Countreys else, where neither the Arms of Forreiners, nor the ambition of some few of the Natives, had not diminished any thing of those Natural rights. Not subject to any one Supream till these latter times; the Ingas, or Monarchs of Peru growing unto their greatnesse but a little before their fall. Their Territory at the first so small, that it was not above five, or six leagues in compasse; situate in that part of the Countrey where the Citie of Cusco now standeth. Opposed at their first incroachments by the Cannares, a valiant Nation, and likely to have had the better, if the Ingas had not helped themselves by a piece of wit: giving it out, that their Family had not onely been the Seminary from which mankinde came; but the Authors of that Religion also which was then in use; particularly that the whole World, having been destroyed by a Flood, except onely seven (so far they hit upon the truth) which seven had hid themselves in a Cave, called Paticambo; where having lived in safety till the fury of the waters had been asswaged, they came abroad at last and re-peopled the Countrey; that Viracocha the Creator, and great God of Nature, had appeared to one of them, and taught him how, and with what rites he would be worshipped; which rites were afterwards received over all Peru; And finally that the same Viracocha had appeared lately to the chief of their Family; assuring him that he would aid him with invisible forces against all their enemies. This tale soon gained belief amongst those Barbarians; and that belief drew many to take part with the Ingas; by that aid victorious. This is supposed to have hapned 400 years before the Spaniards put an end to this flourishing Kingdom, which was in the year 1533. Within which time they had brought all this Countrey, which we now call Peru, and many of the adjoyning Provinces, under their Dominion. Their Kings were called Ingas, as the Ægyptians Pharaoh, the Tartars Cham; the word Inga signifying an Emperour, as Capa Ingas (by which they also sometimes called them) the onely Emperours. Much reverenced by their Subjects, and so faithfully served, that never any of their Subjects were found guilty of Treason. Nor wanted they good Arts whereby to indeer their Subjects, and keep them out of leisure to foment new factions. The way of indeerment, by the fair and satisfactory distribution of the spoils gotten in the Wars, whether Lands, or Goods; all which they divided into three parts: allotting the first unto the service of the Gods; the second for the maintenance of the King, his Court, and Nobles; the third, to the relief of the common people. A distribution far more equal than that of Lycurgus, or the Lex Agraria of the Romans. But when there was no cause of Wars, they kept the people busied in their works of Magnificence; as building Palaces in every one of the Conquered Provinces; which served not onely as Forts to assure the Conquest, but were employed as Store-houses to lay up Provisions, distributed amongst the people in times of dearth. But that which was the work as of great trouble, so of chiefest use was the crosse-wayes they made over all the Countrey, the one upon the Mountains, and the other on the Plains, extending 500 leagues in length: a work to be preferred before any both of Rome, and Ægypt. For they were forced to raise the ground in many places to the heighth of the Mountains, and lay the Mountains level with the flattest Plains; to cut through some Rocks, and underprop others that were ruinous; to make even such wayes as were uneasie, and support the Precipices: and in the Plains to vanquish so many difficulties, as the uncertain foundation of a sandy Countrey must needs carry with it. Kept to these tasks, the people had no leisure to think of practises; yet well content to undergo them, in regard they saw it tended to the publick benefit. And for the Caciques (so they call the Nobility) the Inga did not onely command them to reside in Cusco, to be assured of their persons: but cauled them to send their Children to be brought up there; that they might serve as Hostages for the Fathers Loyalty. They ordered also that all such as repaired to Cusco the Imperial Citie, should be attired according to his own Countrey fashion; so to prevent those Leagues and Associations, which otherwise without any note, or observation, might be made amongst them. Many such Politick institutions were by them devised, which had little of the Barbarous in them; and clearly shewed that there were other Nations which had Eyes in their Heads, besides those of China. What else concerns the story of them, offereth it self in the following Catalogue of

The Kings of PERU.

1. Mango-Capac descended of the chief of the first seven Families, the first who laid the foundation of this puissant Monarchie; subdued the Cannares, and built the Citie of Cusco.

2. Sinchi-Rocha, eldest Son of Mango, subdued a great part of Collao, as far as Chancara.

3. Lonque-Yupanqui, the Son of Sinchi, conquered Chiquito, Ayavire, the Canus, and the Inhabitants about Titicaca; the first advancer of the service of Viracocha, from whom he did pretend to have many visits.

4. Mayta-Capac, the Son of Yupanqui, subdued all the rest of Collao, the Provinces of Chuquiapa, and a great part of the Charcas.

5. Capac Yupanqui, or Yupanqui II. the Son of Mayta, enlarged his Kingdom Westward unto Mare del Zur.

6. Ro-

6. Rocha II. or Yncha Rocha, eldeſt ſon of Yupanqui the ſecond, enlarged his Kingdom towards the North, by the conqueſt of the great Province of Antabuyallam, and many others.

7. Jahuar-Huacac, ſon of Rocha the ſecond, added to his Eſtates (by the valour of his brother Mayta) all the Southern parts from Arequipa to Tacaman. Depoſed by the practiſe of his ſon.

8. Viracocha, the ſon of Huacac, having ſetled and inlarged his Empire; raiſed many great and ſtately works, and amongſt others many Aquæducts of great uſe but charge. For fear of him, Hancohualla, King of the Chuncas, with many thouſands of his people, forſook their Countrey.

9. Pachacutec-Ynca, ſon of Virachoca, improved his Kingdom by the conqueſt of many Provinces lying towards the Andes, and South-Sea; with that of Caxamalcu Northwards.

10. Yupanqui III. or Yncha Yupanchi, ſon of Pachatucec, ſubdued the Conches, and Moxes, with ſome part of Chile.

11. Yupanqui IV. or Tapac Ynca Yupanchi, ſon of Yupanqui the third, extended his Dominions as far as Quito.

12. Huayna-Capac, or Guaynacapac, ſon of Yupanqui the fourth, the moſt mighty Monarch of Peru, conquered the whole Province of Quito; and is ſuppoſed to be the founder of thoſe two great Roads ſpoken of before.

13. Huaſcar, or Guaſcar Ynca, the eldeſt ſon of Guaynacapa, after a reign of five years depoſed and ſlain by his brother.

14. Athualpa, or Atubaliba, the third ſon Guaynacapa, by the daughter and Heir of the King of Quito: into which Kingdom he ſucceeded by the Will of his Father. Commanded by his brother to do Homage for the Kingdom of Quito, he came upon him with ſuch power, that he overcame him, and ſo gained the Kingdom. Vanquiſhed afterwards by Pizarro at the battle of Caxamalca, he was taken priſoner. And though he gave in ranſome for his life and liberty, an houſe piled up on all ſides with Gold and Silver, valued (as ſome ſay) at ten Millions of Crowns; yet they perfidiouſly ſlew him.

15. Mango Capac II. the ſecond ſon of Guaynacapac, ſubſtituted by Pizarro in his brothers Throne; after many viciſſitudes of Fortune, was at laſt ſlain in the Citie of Cuſco; and ſo the Kingdom of the Ingas began and ended in a Prince of the ſame name; as it had hapned formerly to ſome other Eſtates. 1533.

Let us next look upon the birth and fortune of that Pizarro, who ſubdued this moſt potent and flouriſhing Kingdom, and made it a Member of the Spaniſh Empire; and we ſhall finde that he was born at Truſiglio, a Village of Navar; and by the poor Whore his Mother, laid in the Church-porch, and ſo left to Gods providence: by whoſe direction (there being none found that would give him the breaſt) he was nouriſhed for certain dayes, by ſucking a Sow. At laſt one Gonſalles, a Souldier, acknowledged him for his ſon, put him to Nurſe, and when he was ſomewhat grown, ſet him to keep his Swine: ſome of which being ſtrayed, the boy durſt not for fear return home, but betook himſelf to his heels, ran unto Sevil, and there ſhipped himſelf for America, where he attended Alfonſo de Oioda in the diſcovery of the Countreys beyond the Golf of Uraba; Balboa in his voyage to the South Sea; and Pedro de Avila in the conqueſt of Panama. Grown rich by theſe Adventures, he aſſociated himſelf with Diego de Almagro, and Fernando Luques a rich-Prieſt: who betwixt them raiſed 220 Souldiers, and in the year 1525. went to ſeek their fortunes on thoſe Southern Seas, which Balboa had before diſcovered. After divers repulſes at his landing, and ſome hardſhip which he had endured, Pizarro at the length took ſome of the Inhabitants of Peru, of whom he learnt the wealth of the Countrey; and returning thereupon to Spain, obtained the Kings Commiſſion for the conqueſt of it: excluding his Companions out of the Patent, but taking in Almagro of his own accord. Thus furniſhed he landeth in Peru again, at ſuch time as the Wars grew hot betwixt the two brethren, for the Kingdom: and taking part with the faction of Guaſcar, marched againſt Atubaliba; whom he met with in the Plains of Caxamalca, but rather prepared for a parley, than to fight a Battel. Pizarro taking this advantage, picked a quarrel with him, and ſuddenly charged upon him with his Horſe and Ordnance, ſlaying his Guard without reſiſtance; and coming near the Kings perſon (who was then carried on mens ſhoulders) pulled him down by the Cloaths, and took him priſoner. With him they took as much Gold as amounted to 80000 Caſtellans; and as much Silver as amounted to 7000 Marks (every Mark weighing eight ounces) of his houſhold Plate; and in the ſpoyl of Caxamalca, almoſt infinite riches. This, with the Kings ranſom, came to ſo great a ſumme, that beſides the fift part which Pizarro ſent to the Emperour, and that which Pizarro and his brethren kept unto themſelves; every Footman had 7200 Ducats, and every Horſman twice as much, for their part of the ſpoil; beſides what they had gotten in the way of plunder. How they dealt afterwards with the miſerable King, their priſoner, hath been ſhewn already. Upon which Act, though they put many fair pretences, yet God declared that he was not pleaſed with their proceedings; few of the greateſt undertakers going to the Grave in peace. For though Pizarro in reward of ſo great a ſervice, was made the firſt Viceroy of Peru, and created Marqueſſe of Anatilla: yet having put to death Almagro, his chief companion, who had raiſed a ſtrong faction in that State; he was after ſlain at Lima, by ſome of that faction, in revenge of the death of their Commander. The like unfortunate end befell all the reſt; his brother John ſlain by the Peruvians; Martin, in Lima with himſelf; Ferdinando, ſecretly made away in priſon; and finally Gonſales the fourth brother (with the ſon of Almagro) ſeverally executed for their Treaſons and Inſurrections, which they had acted in this Countrey againſt their King. So little joy doth wealth ill gotten bring along with it, to the owners thereof. And here I am to leave Pizarro, whoſe ſtrange both fortunes & miſfortunes in the courſe of his life, are to be paralelled onely with the like of Sinan, a great Baſſa in the Court of Selimus the firſt; who being born of baſe Parentage, as he (being a Childe) was ſleeping in the ſhade, had his genitals bitten off by a Sow. The Turkiſh Officers which uſually provided young boyes for the ſervice of the Grand Signieur, being in Epyrus (for that was Sinans Countrey) and hearing of this ſo extraordinary an Eunuch; took him among others, along with them to the Court: where under Mahomet the great, Bajazet the ſecond, and his ſon Selimus, he ſo exceedingly thrived, that he was made the chief Baſſa of the Court; and ſo well deſerved it, that he was accounted Selimus right hand, and was indeed the man, to whoſe valour eſpecially, the Turks owe their Kingdom of Egypt; in which Kingdom, then not fully ſetled, he was alſo ſlain.

But to return unto Peru, no queſtion but the Forces and Revennes of it were exceeding great. For though we finde no particular muſters which they made of their men; or what great Armies they drew with them into the Field; yet by their great ſucceſſes, and many victories, we may conclude them to be maſters of great Bands of men, and skilfull in the Arts of conduct. Nor can we otherwiſe conjecture at the greatneſſe of their yearly income, but by the greatneſſe of their Treaſure; ſo infinite and almoſt incredible, that all the Veſſels of the Kings Houſe, his Table, and Kitchin were of Gold and Silver; Statues of Giants in his Wardrope, together with the reſemblances in proportion and bigneſſe, of all the Beaſts, Birds, Trees, Plants, and Fiſhes, which were found in that Kingdom, of the pureſt Gold; Ropes, Budgets, Troughs, Cheſts, all of Gold, or Silver; Billets of Gold piled up together, as if they had been Billets of Wood, cut out for the fire; three houſes full of pieces of Gold, and five full of Silver. All which, beſides infinite other Treaſures, fell into the hands of a few poor Spaniards: who grew ſo wanton hereupon, that they would give 1500 Crowns for an horſe, 60 Crowns for a ſmall Veſſel of Wine, and 40 for a pair of Shooes, : Conſuming all upon their luſts, and ſacrificing their Gods of Gold to their God the Belly.

OF CHILE.

CHILE is bounded on the North, with the Desart of Alacama, 90 Leagues in length, interposed betwixt it and Peru: on the West, with Mare del Zur; on the South, with the Streits of Magellan; and on the East as far as to Rio de la Plata, with the main Atlantick; the Countries lying on the East, betwixt it and Paragnay, not yet well discovered.

This Countrey lyeth wholly beyond the Tropick of Capricorn, by consequence in the temperate Zone: extended in length from the borders of Peru, to the mouth of the Streits, 500 Leagues; but the breadth variable and uncertain. Called Chile, from the word Chil (which in more tongues than ours doth signifie as much as cold) from the extream coldness of the Aire and Clime; so vehement here in our Summer Solstice, that many times both the Horses and the Riders are frozen to death, and hardned like a piece of Marble.

The soil hereof in the midland parts, Mountainous and unfruitfull; towards the Sea-side, levell, fertile, and watered with divers Rivers flowing from the Mountains: productive of Maize, Wheat, and most excellent pasturage; plenty of Gold and Silver, abundance of Honey, store of Cattel, and Wine enough for the use of the people; the Vines brought hither out of Spain prospering here exceedingly, as do also all the Fruits, and Plants, which are sent from thence into this Countrey. The people very tall and warlike, some of them, of a Gigantine stature, affirmed (but I believe it not) to be eleven foot high; yet well conditioned with this greatness, where not much provoked Their garments of the skins of Beasts, their Arms Bow and Arrows: white of complexion, but as hirsute and shagg e haired, as the rest of the Salvages.

Rivers of note there are not any but what will fall within the view of its several Provinces: Divided commonly into 1 Chile, specially so called, and 2 Magellanica.

1. CHILE specially so called, is bounded on the North, with the Desart of Alacama; on the South, with Magellanica; on the West, with Mare del Zur; and on the East, with some unknown Countries, lying betwixt it and Paragnay, or the Province of Rio de la Plata; not above 20 Leagues in breadth, but in length 300. The reason of the name, together with the nature of the soyl and people, we have seen before.

Principal Rivers of this part, 1 Rio de Copayapo, giving name unto a Promontorie near the influx of it, in the Northern borders of this Province. 2 Rio de Coquimbo, 3 La Ligua, 4 Topocalma, 5 Cacapool, 6 Canten; all falling into Mare del Zur; and besides these, a nameless, but more famous River, which in the day time runneth with a violent current, and in the night hath no water at all. The reason of it is, because this River having no constant Fountain, is both begun and continued by the Snow falling from the Mountains; which in the heat of the day melted into water, is precipitately carryed into the Sea; but congealed in the coldness of the night, yields no water at all, whereby the Channel becometh empty.

Places of most observation in it, 1 Gopiapo, giving name to a fertile Valley, in the most Northern tract hereof; and neighboured by a small, but commodious Haven. 2 Serena, a Colonie of the Spaniards, on the Sea-side, not far from the influx of Rio de Coquimbo, on whose banks it is seated, where built by Baldivia the Conquerour and first Governour of this Province, An. 1544. The territory round about it rich in Mines of Gold: the Town it self of 200 houses, but so well peopled, that at the landing of some of the English under Captain Drake, they presently sent out 300 Horse and 200 Foot to compell them back unto their ships, which they did accordingly. 3 S. Jago, the chief of all this Province, (though not above 80 houses in it) because the Residence of the Governour, and the Courts of Justice; adorned with a Cathedral Church, and some Convents of Dominican and Franciscan Friers; situate in the 34 Degree of Southern Latitude, on the banks of the River Topacalma, at the mouth whereof is the Haven of Val-paraiso, the best and most noted of this Countrey; out of which the English under Drake took a Spanish ship, and therein 25000 Pezoes of the purest Gold, besides other Commodities. 4 Conception, 70 Leagues on the South of S. Jago, situate on the shores of a large and capacious Bay (by the Natives called Penco) by which and the mountains on all sides so strongly fenced, that the Governour, when distressed by the Salvages (as sometimes they are) retireth hither for safety. Well fortified in such places as are accessible, and garrisoned with 500 souldiers, besides the Townsmen. Opposite hereunto lyeth the Isle of S. Marie, so near the shore, that it seems to have been rent from it by the force of the Sea; fruitfull, and very well provided of Swine and Poultrie, but the people so in fear of the Spaniards dwelling in Conception, that they dare not kill or eat either, but by leave from them. 5 Auraccoa (so I think they call it) a strong Fortress in the Countrey of the Auracans, the most potent Nation of these parts; who weary of the Spanish yoke, revolted against Baldivia, overcame him in a set fight, and at last killed him: this piece being thereupon forsaken, & of no more use. 6 De los Confines, built by Baldivia in the borders of the Countrey of those Auracans, to serve for a defence to the Mines of Ongol near adjoyning: distant from the Sea-shores about 18 Leagues, enlarged by Garsias de Mendoza, and by him called Villa Neuva de los infantes. 7 Imperiale, in the 38 Degree and 40 Minutes of Southern Latitude, situate on the banks of the River Cauten, an Episcopal See, and the best Fortress of the Spaniards in all this this Province. Fortified and made a Colonie of Spaniards in the year 1551. and by Baldivia called Al Imperiale, becauſe they found an Eagle with two heads made in Wood, on the doors of their houſes; a monument perhaps of ſome Germans, who had here been ſhipwrackt. A Town of ſo great wealth and power, before known to the Spaniards, that in a war betwixt them and the Araucans, ſpoken of before, they are ſaid to have brought into the field 300000 men. 8. Villa Rica, another Colonie of Spaniards, 16 leagues on the South-East of Imperiale, and 25 leagues from the ſhores of Mare del Zur. 9. Baldivia, the moſt noted Town of all theſe parts, ſituate in the Valley of Guadallanguen, in the Latitude of 40 degrees, or thereabouts: adorned with a ſafe and capacious Haven, and neighboured by Mines of Gold of ſuch infinite riches, that Baldivia (by whom built for defence of thoſe Mines) received thence dayly by the labour of each ſingle workman, 25000 Crowns a man, and ſometimes more. Sacked by the Salvages, An. 1599 ſince repaired by the Spaniards. 10. Oſorno, on the Banks of the Bay of Chilve, (or Ancud, as the Salvages call it) ſituate in a barren ſoyl, but well ſtored with Gold, and thought to be more populous than Valdivia it ſelf. 11. Caſtro, the moſt Southern Town of all this Province, in the Latitude of 44. built in a large and fruitfull iſland of the Bay of Ancud, ſaid to be 30 leagues in length; but the breadth unequal; in ſome parts nine, in others not above two leagues. 12. S. Juan de la Frontera, on the further ſide of the Andes towards Paraguay, or Rio de la Plata.

To this Province there belong alſo certain iſlands lying on the Coaſts and ſhores hereof. 1. S. Maries, ſpoken of before. 2. Mocha, upon the South of that, five leagues from the Continent, fruitfull of Grain, and very good Paſturage; ſufficient to maintain the Inhabitants of it, who being the deſcendants of thoſe Americans, who fled hither to avoid the tyranny of the Spaniards, hitherto have made good their liberty againſt that Nation: of which ſo jealous, that they would not ſuffer the Engliſh under Drake and Cavendiſh to land amongſt them, for fear they had been Spaniards, or ſome friends of theirs. 3. Caſtro, which we have ſpoken of already.

2. MAGELLANICA is bounded on the North with Chile, and the Province of Rio de la Plata; on the South, with Fretum Magellanicum, or the Streits of Magellan; on the Weſt, with Mare del Zur; on the Eaſt with Mare del Noort, or the main Atlantick. So called from Magellanus, by whom firſt diſcovered, of whom we ſhall ſpeak more hereafter.

It is in length from the borders of Chile to the mouth of the Streits, 300 leagues in breadth: from one Sea to the other, where broadeſt, above 400 leagues; in ſome but 90 onely, and in others leſſe, according as it draweth towards the point of the Pyramis. The inland parts of the Countrey not yet diſcovered: thoſe on the Sea-ſide obſerved to be rocky and unfruitfull, expoſed for the moſt part of the year to ſuch bitter colds, that the Snow lyeth alwayes on the Mountains. The people ſaid to be tall of ſtature, and ſome of them of a Gigantine bigneſſe, reported to be ten, or eleven foot high; and by the Spaniards for that reaſon are called Patagons. Both great and leſſe, ſufficiently rude and barbarous, quite naked, and unfurniſhed of any houſes, notwithſtanding the rigour of the cold.

No houſes doth imply no Towns, and therefore we muſt look for none in ſo rude a Countrey, as hath not hitherto converſed with more civil Nations. So that the moſt that we can do, is to Coaſt the ſhores, and ſee what names of Ports, or Promontories we can finde therein. And firſt upon the Sea-coaſts towards Mare del Zur, they place (beginning at the North, and ſo deſcending) 1. The Promontory called Cabo de las Iſlas. 2. The Port, or Haven of S. Stephen. 3. The Valley of Nueſtra Sennora, or our Ladies Valley. 4. The Promontory called Punta Delgado. 5. Porto de los Reyes. 6. Ancon Sinſalida, on the banks of a ſemi-circular Bay, the receptacle of many Rivers, and not a few iſlands. 7. Cabo de la Victoria, or the Cape of Victorie, ſituate betwixt that Bay and the mouth of the Streits; ſo called from the name of the ſhip in which ſome of Magellanes Souldiers did firſt compaſſe the World. For Ferdinand Magellano a noble Portugal, and well ſkilled in Navigation, at the perſwaſion, or command of Charles the fifth, to whom (upon ſome diſcontents received in the Court of Emanuel King of Portugal) he had made offer of his ſervice; undertook the finding out (if poſſible) a ſhorter cut to the Moluccos, than diſcovered formerly. In the year 1520 he began his voyage, his Fleet conſiſting but of 5. ſhips, whereof that called the St. Anthonio forſook him in ſome great diſpleaſure, and returned to Spain, another of them being loſt not long after in a ſtorm, keeping along the Coaſt to the South of Rio de la Plata, about the end of October, fell upon the Cape of Virgins, at the very enterance of this Streit, which on the doubling of this Cape he was fallen upon: and by the end of November (not before) was fully clear of theſe Narrow Seas, ſince called Fretum Magellanicum, and entered into Mare del Zur. Having refreſhed himſelf in a little Iſland called Iuvaganava he paſſed unto that alſo, but not far from the Philippins, the Prince whereof called Hamabar he perſwaded to become a Chriſtian, baptized him by the name of Charles, & finally engaging in a quarrel of his againſt the King of Mautan, or Mattan, an adjoyning Iſland, where he was there unfortunately ſlain, An. 1521. After his death Serran chief Pilot of the Navy, together with 70 of his men being treacherouſly ſlain by Hamabar, the other three ſhips departed with no more than 115 men aboard them, which put them to a neceſſity of burning one of their ſhips, that they might have men enough to make good the others, with theſe two ſhips they came at laſt to the Moluccos, where being kindly entertained by the King of Tidore, they divided themſelves; that called the Trinity, under Cape Spinoſa, deſigned for Panama in New Spain, from which driven back by contrary winds to the Iſle of Tedoro, was ſeized on, and ſpoiled by Anthonio Britoa Captain, commanding there a ſmall Navy of the King of Portugals. The other ſhip, which by a happy omen was called Villaria, having in her but 47 Spaniards, under the command of Sebaſtian del Cano, after a long and dangerous voyage, wherein it was thought that he had ſayled at the leaſt 14000 leagues, returned to Spain in ſafety, and brought the welcom news of their good ſucceſſe.

We

We use to say that Sir Francis Drake was the first that sayled round about the world, which may be true in a qualified sense; viz, that he was the first Captain, or man of note that atchieved this enterprise, Magellanus perishing in the midst of it; and therefore is reported to have given for his device, a Globe, with this motto, Tu primus circumdedisti me. This navigation was begun, An. 1577. and in two years and an half with great vicissitude of fortune, finished; concerning which his famous voyage, a Poet then living, directed to him this Epigram.

Drake pererrati novit quem terminus orbis,
Quemque simul mundi vidit uterque polus:
Si taceant homines, facient te sydera notum;
Sol nescit comitis non memor esse sui.

Drake, whom th'encompass'd earth so fully knew,
And whom at once both poles of heaven did view:
Should men forget thee, Sol could not forbear
To chronicle his fellow traveller.

This Fretum Magellanicum, these Magellan straits, are in the 52 degree; and are by M. John Davis, who professeth to know every Creek in them, thus described. "For 14 Leagues within the Cape of S. "Marie, lyeth the first strait, where it ebbeth and floweth with a violent swiftness: the strait not be-"ing fully half a mile broad, and the first fall into it very dangerous and doubtfull. Three leagues his "strait continueth, when it openeth into a sea, eight miles long, and as much broad; beyond which, ly-"eth the second strait, right West, South-west from the first; a perilous and unpleasing passage, three "leagues long, and a mile in breadth. This strait openeth it self into another sea, which is extended even "to the Cape of victory; where is the strait properly called the strait of Magellan; a place of that na-"ture, that which way soever a man bend his course, he shall be sure to have the wind against him. The "length hereof is 40 leagues; the breadth in some places two leagues over, in others not fully half a mile. "The Channel in depth 200 Fathoms, so no hope of Anchorage, the course of the water full of turnings "and changings; withal so violent, that when a ship is once entred, there is no returning. On both "sides of it are high Mountains continually covered with snow; from which proceed those counter-"winds, which beat with equall fury on all parts thereof. A place assuredly not pleasing to view, and ve-"ry hazardous to pass. So far, and to this purpose M. Davis.

But to proceed, the way thus opened, was travelled not long after, An. 1525. by Garsias de Loyasa; next in the year 1524. by Simon de Alcazavo, and four years after by three ships of the Bishop of Placenza in Spain, but none of them had the hap or courage to adventure thorow; till undertaken and performed by Sir Francis Drake, An. 1577. after which it grew more familiar amongst the seamen. However, we are so much debtors to the attempts of others, as that we owe to them the most part of the names of those Bayes and Promontories, which they discovered in the search: though many of them since new named by the English, and Hollanders. Those of most note, proceeding from Cabo de la Victoria, 1 Cabo de Quade. 2 Cape Gallant. 3 Cordes Bay. 4 Cape Froward, being the very point or Conus of this great Pyramis. 5 Porto Famine. 6 A little isle called Elizabeths Iland, and at the exit of the strait into Mare del Noort, the Cape of Virgins. Then bending Northward toward the great River of Plata, we find upon the main Ocean 1 Rio de la Crux, neighboured by a Promontorie called Cabo de las Bareras; where Magellano staid all September, and the greatest part of October, in expectation of an opportunity to discover further. 2 The Bay of S. Julian, out of which he set sayl for this adventure, about the later end of August, leaving there two of his companions condemned of mutinie. 3 The Port of Desire. 4 A large Promontorie called the Cape of S. George. 5 The outlets of a fair River, named Rio de los Camerones. 6 A goodly Haven entituled Puerto de los Leones. 7 The Cape called Punta de terra plana. 8 The Bay of Amegada. 9 The Promontorie called the Cape of S. Andrews. And 10 the River of S. Anne, beyond which lyeth the Province of the River of Plata. This is the most that I can say touching Magellanica, as to the Havens, Rivers, Points and Promontories; and this is nothing, (as we see) but a Nomenclator. It must be better peopled and more discovered, before it can afford discourse of more variety. All we can adde, is that the passage back again from Mare del Zur to the Atlantick, hath not been found so safe and easie, as from the main Atlantick unto Mare del Zur. Attempted first by Ladrilliro a Spaniard, at the command of Garcia de Mendoza, Governour of Chile; and attempted only: performed not long after the voyage of Sir Francis Drake, by D Pedro Sarmiento, imployed therein by Francis de Toledo, Viceroy of Peru, with much difficulty, and no less danger; so much, that few have since endeavoured to return that way.

As for the fortunes and affairs of the Province of Chile, to which we have made this an Appendix, we are to understand that it was first discovered by Almagro de Alvarado, one of Pizarro's chief friends and associates. But he having other designs in his head about Peru, which he intended for himself, and to out Pizarro, did discover it only: the conquest of it being reserved for Baldivia, whom Pizarro, on the setling of his affairs by the death of Almagro, had imployed in that action. He going souldierlike to work, not only did subdue the people; but as he gained ground, built some Fortress, or planted Colonies of Spaniards in convenient places. This done about the year 1544. his ill luck was to meet with a more stubborn and untractable people, than either Cortez or Pizarro had done before him; who quickly weary of the yoke, besieged one of his Forts, encountred Baldivia himself coming with too small a power to relieve his people, vanquished and slew him in the field. Some adde that they poured Gold into his throat (as the Parthians are reported to have done to Craſſus) bidding him ſatiate himſelf with that which he ſo much thirſted After this blow given in the year 1551. the Salvages recovered the rich vallies of Anranco, Tucapel. and Purene; which they keep from them till this day: The Towns of Los Confines, and Villa Rica, both on the borders of thoſe vallies, then deſerted alſo. Nor ſtaid they there, though they took time to breath a little. For in the year 1599. (having provided themſelves of 200 Corſlets, and ſeventy Muskets) they brake out again; ſurprized and ſacked the Town of Baldivia; forced Imperiale after a whole years ſiege, to ſurrender without any conditions; and in the year 1604. took Oſorno by famine. Of thirteen Cities, which the Spaniards had poſſeſſed amongſt them, they had taken nine; ſome of them ſince recovered, but the moſt demoliſhed. As ill it thrived with them in Magellanica, where Pedro de Starmiento undertook the planting of two Colonies, to command thoſe Streits, An. 1584. The one he ſetled near the mouth of the Streit, which he called by the name of Nombre de Jeſus, and left therein 150 of his men; the other he intended on the narroweſt place of the Streit, to be called Cividad del Roy Philip, which he reſolved to fortifie, and plant with Ordnance. But winter coming on, he left there others of his men, promiſing to relieve them ſhortly with all things neceſſary. But ſuch was his unhappy fate, that after many ſhipwracks and diſappointments which befell unto him, in the purſuit of his deſign; he was at laſt taken by the Engliſh, under the command of Sir Walter Rawleigh, who was there in perſon: and his two Colonies, for want of timely ſuccours, either ſtarved at home, or eaten by the Salvages, as they ranged the Countrey.

OF PARAGUAY.

PARAGUAY is bounded on the South, with Magellanica; on the East, with the main Atlantick; on the North, with Brasil; on the West, with some unknown Countreys betwixt it and Chile. So called from the River Paraguay (one of the greatest of the world) which runneth through it: the River and the Province both by the Spaniards called Rio de la Plata, from the great store of Silver they expected from it.

The Countrey (for so much as hath been discovered) is said to be of a fruitfull soyl; capable of Wheat and other of the Fruits of Europe, which thrive here exceedingly: nor do the Cattel increase lesse which were brought from Spain, both Kine and Horses multiplying in a wonderfull manner. Well stored with Sugar-Canes, and not unfurnished with Mines, both of Brasse, and Iron; some veins of Gold and Silver, and great plenty of Amethysts. Of Stags great plenty, and of Monkeys almost infinite numbers; not to say any thing of Lyons, Tygers, and such hurtfull Creatures, of which a few would be thought too many. Of the people there is nothing said, but what hath been before observed of the other Salvages.

Chief Rivers of it, 1. De la Plata, whose course we have described already. 2. Rio de Buenos Ayres, so called from the chief Town by which it runneth. 3. Zarcaranna, which riseth in the Countrey of the Diagnitas, and falling into a Lake at the end of his course, doth from thence passe into the body of De la Plata. 4. Estero, which rising in the Valley of Chalcaqui, and passing through two great Lakes, meets with 5. the Bermeio, and both together fall into De la Plata, near the Town of St. Foy. 6 Pilcomayo, which hath its Fountain near the Mines of Potosi, in the Province of Charcos; but his fall in the same River with those before. Then on the North side of that River, there is 7. that of St. Saviour, or St. Salvador, as the Spaniards call it; 8. Rio Nigro, or the Black River, of a longer course; but buried in the end, as the other is, in the deeps of La Plata. 9. Tquaan, and 10. several others, whose united streams make the great River Parana, the second River of esteem in all this Countrey: But swallowed in that of Plata. Besides these 11. Rio de St. Martin, and 12. Rio Grande, falling into the Ocean.

It comprehendeth the three Provinces of 1. Rio de la Plata. 2. Tucaman, and 3. La Crux de Sierra. The rest not conquered by the Spaniard, or not well discovered, cannot be properly reduced under any Method.

1. RIO DE LA PLATA, or the Province of De la Plata, lieth upon both sides of that River; ascending many leagues up the water, but not extended much upon either side. The reason of the name, the quality of the soyl and people we have seen before.

Chief Towns hereof 1. Buenos Ayres, or Neustra Sennora de Buenos Ayres, by others called Cividad de la Trinidad, seated on the Southern bank of the River of Plata, where built by Pedro de Mendoza, Anno 1535. Deserted by the Inhabitants, and again new-peopled by Cabesa de Vacca, Anno 1542. It was afterwards again abandoned; and finally in the year 1582. re-edified and planted with a new Colony. Situate on the rising of a little Hill, in the 34 degree and 45 minutes of the Southern Latitude, and about 64 leagues from the mouth of the River; fortified with a Mud-Wall, and a little Castle, with some Pieces of Ordnance; yet neither large, nor much frequented, containing but 200 Inhabitants. 2. S. Fe, or S. Fidei, 50 leagues up the River from Buenos Ayres, on the same side of the water, near the confluence of it with the River Estero: of the same bignesse as the other, but somewhat richer: the people here being given to clothing, which Manufacture they exchange with the Brasilians for Sugar Rice, and other necessary Commodities. 3. Neustra Sennora del Assumption, but commonly Assumption onely, higher up the River, from the mouth whereof 300 leagues distant: situate in the Latitude of 25. and almost in the midst betwixt Peru, and Brasil; well built and very well frequented, as the chief of the whole Countrey. Inhabited by three sorts of men, first natural Spaniards, of which here are accompted 400 Families; 2. The Mestizos, begotten by the Spaniard upon the Natives; and 3. Mulatos, born of the Spaniards and the Negroes; of which two last here are thought to be many thousands. Not far off is a great Lake, called Ytupuam, in the midst whereof an huge Rock, above 100 Fathom high above the water. 5. Cividad Real, by the Spaniards called also Ontiveros, by the Natives Guayra, 80 leagues North from the Town of Assumption; situate on the banks of the River Parana, in a fruitfull soyl, but a sickly Aire; for which cause, and the frequent insurrections of the Salvages, but meanly peopled. 6. St. Anne, on the banks of the same River Parana; 7. St. Salvador, on a River of the same name. Besides these, there are up the River above Assumption, three noted Ports. 8. Puerto de Guaybiamo. 9. Puerto de la Candelaria, and 10. Puerto de los Reyes; but whether Towns, or onely Havens on that River for dispersing and bartering their Commodities, I am not able to say. The last save one memorable for the defeat of John de Ayolas, and the death of 80 of his men, by the hands of the Salvages.

2. TUCUMAN lieth on the West of Rio de la Plata, extending towards the confines of Chile, through which they make their way unto Mare del Zur, as through the Province of Rio de la Plata unto Mare del Nort: the exact bounds hereof to the North and South, not yet resolved on.

The Conntrey, for so much hereof as lieth towards Chile, well manured and fruitfull; that towards Magellanica, barren, untilled, and not well discovered, no veins of Gold, or Silver in it, though situate in a temperate and agreeable Air. Watered by the two Rivers of 1. Salado, so called from the brackishnesse and saltnesse of it; and 2. Del Estero, spoken of before, so named, because sometimes it breaketh out of his banks. The Inhabitants now civilized both in manners and habit, in both which they conform to the Garb of the Spaniards.

Chief Towns hereof 1. S. Jago del Estero, on the banks of that River, by the natural Inhabitants called Varco: the principal of that small Province, honoured with a Bishops See, and the seat of the Governour; and distant about 180 leagues from Buenos Airez. 2. S. Michael de Tucuman, seated at the foot of a Rocky Mountain, but near a very fruitfull soyl, both for Corn and Pasturage, distant 28 leagues from S. Jago 3. Talavera or Nuestra Sennora de Talavera, but by the Natives called Esteco; situate on the River Salado, before mentioned, in a fruitfull soyl, and inhabited by an industrious people, grown wealthy by their Manufactures of Cotton-wools, which grow hereabouts in great abundance: with which they drive a great trade at the Mines of Potosi, from hence distant but 140 leagues. 4. Corduba, in a convenient place for trade, as being equally distant from S. Juan de la Frontera, in the Præfecture of Chile, & S. Foy, in Rio de la Plata; 50 leagues from each; and seated in a Road from Peru unto Buenos Airez; much travelled consequently by those who go from Peru to Brasil, or Spain. 5. New London, and 6. New Cordura, built at such time as Garsius de Mendoza, son of the Marquesse of Cannete, and Vice-Roy of Peru, was Governour of this Province: but both abandoned not long after. Besides these, 7. Morata. 8. Chacinoca. 9. Sococha, and 10. Calabinna; Townships belonging to the Natives.

3. S. CRUX DE SIERRA, is the name of a little Territory lying towards Peru, on the North of the River Guapay, and in the Countrey of the Chiquitos and Cherignanaes, two Tribes of the Salvages. By some accounted to Peru, because under the Juridical Resort of Charcos: but so far distant from the nearest bounds of that Province (100 Spanish leagues at least) that I think fitter to accompt it to the Province of Paraguay; betwixt the banks of which River and that of Guapay it is wholly seated.

The soyl abundantly productive of Maize and Wines, plenty of most sorts of American fruits, which I can give no English name to; a kinde of Palm, of whose trunk they make great store of meal, of good taste and nourishment. But neither soyl nor aire agreable to the fruits of Europe, which ripen slowly, and soon die. So destitute of Rivers, that the Inhabitants were fain to make use of Rain-water, preserved in pits: the cause of no small wants, and of many great murders, the people either dying for thirst, or killing one another for some water to quench it.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Sancta Crux, situate at the foot of a great Mountain, whence the name of the Province; but situate in open field, inlarging it self into many Plains, and thirsty Vallies: neighboured by a Brook, or Torrent breaking from the Rocks; which four leagues from the Town is become a Pond, and plentifully doth supply the Town with Fish. 2. Baranca, 60 leagues from the Mines of Potosi. 3. Tomina. 4. Lagunilla, and 5. Tarixa; three Forts erected for defence of this Province against the incursions and Alarms of the Cherignanaes. 6. Neyva Rioja, once a Colonie of the Spaniards, but sacked and dispeopled by the Cherignanaes, when the Count of Neyva was Vice Roy of Peru: at what time Nuflo de Chaves, who in the year 1548. first discovered those parts, was treacherously slain by one of the Salvages.

The principal Nations of this Countrey, when first known to the Spaniards, were the Querandies, Timbues, and Carcares, the Chanes, Chiminei, Guaranyes, the Guayacurves, Cacoves, Guaxarapi, &c. on both sides of the River of Plata: the Tucumanes, Juries, and Diagnitas, in the Cantred of Tucuman; more Northward, where the Spaniards have as yet no hold, the Chunesses, Xaquesses, Xacoaes, and the Xarayes, great and powerfull Nations, hitherto unconquered. The first discovery of this Countrey ascribed to John Dias de Solis, a Spanish adventurer; who in the year 1515. passing up the River to the Latitude of 34 Degrees, and 40 minutes, and unadvisedly landing with too small a power; was there unfortunately slain. The design after prosecuted by Sebastian Cabot, Anno 1526. who sayled against the stream as high as the River Parana: at the reception of which, the great River called till then by the name of Paraguay, begins to be called De la Plata. Here built he the Fortresse called Fort Cabot; and 30 leagues more up the River, that called St. Anne, (both long since ruined) where Diego Garcias a Portugal found him, in the year next following. In the year 1535. the businesse was resumed by Pedro de Mendoza, who built the Town of Buenos Ayres; and sent John de Aiolas to discover Northwards of whose unhappy end we have heard before. Not fully setled till the year 1540. when Alvares Nonnez, commonly called Cabesa de Vacca, made a more full discovery of it, and planted Colonies of Spaniards in convenient places. Nothing since done for the further planting of the Countrey, though some places have been marked out for new Plantations; here being little Gold and Silver, and consequently not much temptation to draw on the Spaniards to the work.

OF BRASIL.

BRASIL is bounded on the East, with Mare del Noort, or the main Atlantick; on the West, with some undiscovered Countreys, lying betwixt it and the Andes; on the North, with Guiana, from which parted by the great River Maragnon; and on the South, with Paraguay, or the Province of Rio de la Plata. The reason of the name I finde not, except it came from the abundance of that Wood called Brasil-wood, which was found amongst them; as the famous Isle of Cyprus, from its plenty of Cypresses.

It reacheth from the 29. to the 39 Degree of Southern Latitude; or measuring it by miles, it is said to be 1500 miles from North to South, and 500 miles in breadth from the Sea to the Andes; which must be understood with reference to the whole extent of it; for otherwise all that which is possessed by the Portugals under the name of Brasil, is so short of taking up all the breadth hereof, that they possesse nothing but the Sea-Coasts, and some few leagues (comparatively) within the Land; the greatest part of it being so far from being conquered, that it hath not hitherto been discovered.

The Countrey full of Mountains, Rivers, and Forrests, diversified into Hills and Plains alwayes pleasant and green. The aire for the most part sound and wholsom, by reason of the fresh winds which do reign amongst them; there being all along the Coasts certain quick winds rising from the South, about 2 hours before Noon, which do much benefit the Inhabitants: yet in regard it is somewhat moist, it is held to be more agreeable to old men than to young. The soyl in most parts very fruitfull, were it not cloied with too much rain; but howsoever liberally provided of Sugar Canes, (no one Countrey more) for refining of which they have their Ingenios (as they call them) or Sugar houses in most parts of the Countrey; in which they entertain many thousand slaves, brought hither yearly from Guinea, and Congo, and other maritime parts of Africk. A trade in which the Portugals are much delighted, and I cannot blame them; there being few years, in each of which they bring not out of Brasil to Portugal, 150000 Arrobes of Sugar, every Arrobe containing 25 Bushels of our English measure. Here is also infinite quantities of that red wood used in dying Cloath, which we commonly call Brasil-wood; (but whether the Wood took that name from the Countrey, or the Countrey rather from the Wood, I determine not:) the Trees whereof are of that incredible greatnesse, that whole families live on an Arm of one of them, every Tree being as populous as the most of our Villages. In other Commoditics common to them with the other Americans, we need not give particular instance.

Amongst the Rarities hereof, are reckoned 1. the Plant, called Copiba, the bark of which being cut doth send out a Balm, the soveraign vertue whereof is so well known to the very beasts that being bit by venomous Serpents, they resort unto it for their cure. 2. The Herb called Sentida, or Viva, which roughly touched will close the leaves, and not open them again till the man that had offended it be gone out of sight. 3. A kinde of Wheat in the Valley near unto S. Sebastian, which is continually growing, and alwayes ripe; or never wholly ripe, because alwayes growing: for when one Ear doth grain, another doth bloom; when one is ripe and yellow, another is green. 4. The Oxfish, with eyes and eye-lids, two arms a cubit long, and at each an hand with five fingers and nails, as in a man; under the arms two teats, inwards like a Cow, in every female. 5. A Creature found of late about the Bay of All Saints, which had the face of an Ape, the foot of a Lion, and all the rest of a man; of such a terrible aspect, that the Souldier who shot him fell down dead: but this I rather look on as an aberration of Nature, than a rarity in her. 6. Beasts of such strange shapes, and such several kinds, that it may be said of Brasil, as once of Africk, Semper aliquid apportat novi; every day some new object of Admiration.

The people here are endowed with a pretty understanding: as may seem by him, who tartly blamed the covetousnesse of the Spaniſh, for coming from the other end of the World to dig for Gold; and holding up a wedge of Gold, cried out, Behold the God of the Christians! But in most places they are barbarous, the men and women go stark naked, and on high festival dayes hang Jewels in their lips: these festival dayes are when a company of good neighbours come together to be merry, over the rosted body of a fat man; whom they cut in collops, called Boucon, and eat with great greedinesse, and much delectation. They have two vile qualities, as being mindfull of injuries, and forgetfull of benefits. The men cruel without measure, and the women infinitely lascivious. They cannot pronounce the Letters L. F. R. The reason of which one being demanded, made answer; because they had amongst them neither Law, Faith, nor Rulers. They are able swimmers, as well women as men; and will stay under water an hour together. Women in travel are here delivered without any great pain, and presently go about their businesse, belonging to good house-wives: The good-man (according to the fashion of our kinder sorts of Husbands in England, who are said to breed their Wives Children) being sick in their stead, and keeping their bed; so far that he hath broaths made him, is visited by his Gossips, or Neighbours, and hath Junkets sent to comfort him. And amongst these there are some Rarities, if not Monstrosities in nature: it being said of those which live towards the Andes, that they are hairy all over like beasts; such as Orson is fained to have been in the old Romance; and probably so ingendered also; that the Guaymares disbowel Women with Childe, and roast the Children; and finally that the Salvage Nation of Camucuiara have their Paps almost down unto their knees, which they tie about their waste when they run, or go faster than ordinary.

Rivers of note I finde not any till I come to Maragnon, though that a Boundary rather betwixt this and Guiana, than proper unto this alone. If any chance to come in our way, as we crosse the Countrey, we shall not passe them over without some remembrance. And so proceed we to the division of the Countrey, not into Provinces, or Nations, as in other places, but into Præfectures, or Captainships as the Portugals call them. Of which there are 13 in all, which we shall severally touch on as we trace the Coast, from the Province of Rio de la Plata, unto that of Guiana; that is to say,

1. The Captainship of St. VINCENT bordering on Rio de la Plata, inhabited by the most civil people of all Brasil. Chief Towns whereof 1. Santos, at the bottom of an Arm of the Sea, capable of good ships of burden, but distant from the Main three leagues. A Town of no more than 120 houses, yet the best of this Præfecture; beautified with a Parish Church, and two Convents of Fryers. Taken and held two moneths by Sir Tho. Cavendish, An. 1591. since that environed with a Wall, and fortified with two Castles. 2. St. Vincents better built but not so well fitted with an Haven; of about 70 houses, and 100 Inhabitants. 3. Itange, and 4. Cananea, two open Burroughs, but capable of lesser Vessels. 5. St Paul, upon a little Mountain, at the foot whereof run two pleasant Rivers, which fall not far off into the River of Iniambis. A Town of about 100 houses, one Church, two Convents, and a Colledge of Jesuits; neighboured by Mines of Gold found in the Mountains, called Pernabiacaba. 6. St. Philips, a small Town on the banks of Iniambis, which there begins to inlarge it self; and passing thence falleth at the last in the River Parana, one of the greatest Tributaries to Rio de la Plata.

2. Of RIO DE JANEIRO, or the River of January, so called, because entred into that moneth by John Diaz de Solis, An. 1515. neglected by the Portugals, it was seized on by the French under the conduct of Villegagnone, employed herein by Admiral Chastillon a great friend of the Hugonets, to whom it was intended for a place of Refuge (as New-England afterwards for the like:) but within three years after their first coming hither (An 1558) regained by the Portugals, and the French put unto the sword. Places of most consideration in it, 1. Collignia, the Fort and Colonie of the French, so named in honour of Gaspar Colligni (commonly called Chastillon) by whose incouragement it was founded. Situate on the Bay of the River Ianeiro, which the French called Ganabara. 2. St. Sebastians, built at the mouth of the same Bay by the Portugals, after they had expelled the French, and fortified with four strong Bulwarks. 3. Angra des Reyes, distant twelve leagues Westward from the mouth of the Bay; not long since made a Portugal Colonie. Besides these, there are two great Burroughs of the natural Brasilians, in which are said to be above 2000 Inhabitants.

3. Of the HOLY GHOST (del Spiritu Santo) one of the most fertile Provinces of all Brasil; well stored with Cotton wool, and watered with the River Parayba, large and full of fish. The onely Town of note in it, is Spiritu Santo, inhabited by about 200 Portugals. The chief building of it, a Church dedicated to St. Francis, a Monastery of Benedictines, and a Colledge of Jesuits; the chief conveniency, a safe and commodious Haven, capable of the greatest Vessels.

4. Of PORTO SEGURO, the secure Haven, so called by Capralis, who first discovered it; when being tossed at Sea by a terrible tempest, he had here refreshed himself. Chief Towns hereof 1. Porto Seguro, built on the top of a white Cliff, which commands the Haven; of more Antiquity than Fame, of more fame than bigness; as not containing fully 200 Families. 2. Santa Crux, three leagues from the other; a poor Town, with as poor an Harbour: the Patrimony and Inheritance of the Dukes of Avera, in the Realm of Portugal. 3. Santo Amaro, or St. Omers, once of great note for making Sugars, for which use here were five Ingenios, or Sugar Engines: deserted by the Portugals for fear of the Salvages, against whom they had not power enough to make good the place; and the Sugars destroyed of purpose, that they might not come into the hands of the barbarous people.

5. Of DES ILHEOS, or of the Isles, so named from certain Islands lying against the Bay on which the principal Town is seated, called also Ilheos, or the Island (with like Analogie as a Town of good note in Flanders, hath the name of Insula, or Lisle) The town consisting of about 150. or 200 Families, situate on a little River, but neighboured by a great Lake of 12 leagues in compasse (out of which that River doth arise:) full of a great but wholsom fish, which they call Monatos, some of which are affirmed to weigh 28 pounds. This Colonie, much endangered by the Guaymuri, a Race of Salvages more Salvage than any of their fellows: who being driven out of their own Countrey fell into this Præfecture, which they had utterly destroyed; if some of St. Georges Reliques, as the Jesuits tell us (but I binde no man to believe it) sent by their General from Rome, An. 1581. had not stayed their fury, and given the Portugals the better.

6. Of TODOS LOS SANTOS, or All Saints, so called from a large Bay of that name, upon which it lieth; in breadth two leagues and an half, 18 fathom deep, and full of many little Islands: but flourishing and pleasant, and well stored with Cotton-wool. A Bay in which are many safe Stations and Roads for shipping, and therefore of great use and consequence in those furious Seas. Memorable for the hardy Enterprize of Peter Heyns, a Dutch man, Admiral of the Navy of the United Provinces; who in the year 1627. seized on a Fleet of Spaniards, consisting of 26 sayl of ships (four of them being men of War) all lying under the protection of the Forts and Castles, built for the safety of that Bay. For thrusting in amongst them with his own ship onely (the rest not being able to follow) he so laid about him, that that having ſunk the Vice-Admiral, he took all the reſt, conditioning onely for their lives; notwithſtanding all the ſhot which was made againſt him from the ſhips and Caſtles, and 42 pieces of Ordnance planted on the ſhroe. Chief Towns hereof 1. S. Salvador, built on a little Hill, on the North-ſide of the Bay, by Thomas de Souſa; adorned with many Churches, and Religious houſes; and fortified (beſides the Wall) with three ſtrong Caſtles; the one called S. Anthony, the other S. Philip, and the third Tapeſipe. Yet not ſo ſtrong by reaſon of ſome Hills adjoyning which command the Town, but that it was taken by the Hollanders, An. 1624. recovered by the Spaniards the next year after, and ſince loſt again. 2. Paripe, more within the Land, four leagues from S. Saviours. 3. Seregippe del Rei, a ſmall Town, and ſeated on as ſmall a River, but amongſt many rich Paſtures, and ſome veins of ſilver.

7. Of FERNAMBUCK, one of the richeſt Præfectures for Tobacco, Sugar, and the great quantity of Braſil-wood, which is brought hence yearly for the Diers, in all this Countrey; but deſtitute of Corn, and moſt other neceſſaries, with which ſupplied from the Canaries, and ſometimes from Portugal. Chief Towns hereof 1. Olinda, the largeſt and beſt peopled of all Braſil: containing above 2000 perſons; not reckoning in the Church men, nor taking the great number of ſlaves which they keep for their Sugar-works into the accompt: for whoſe uſe they have here eight Parochial Churches, five Religious houſes, and ſome Hoſpitals. Situate near the Sea-ſide, but on ſo uneven a piece of ground, as makes it not capable of a Regular fortification; the Haven being little, and not very commodious, but defended at the entrance by a well built Caſtle; and that well planted with Braſſe pieces. Which notwithſtanding, in the year 1595. the Caſtle and the Suburbs along the Port (wherein they uſed to ſtow all their chief Commodities) were took by Capt. James Lancaſter, and ſome few of the Engliſh; who having tarried in the Haven above a moneth, brought home with him eight of his own ſhips, four French men, and three Hollanders which came in by chance; all laden with the choiceſt Merchandiſe of Braſil, and India. 2. Amatta de Braſil, ten miles from Olinda, the Inhabitants whereof live by ſelling the Braſil wood. 3. S. Laurenzo, a well frequented Village, but as yet unwalled. 4. Poincur, upon a River ſo named. 5. Antonio de Cabo, near the Cape of S. Auguſtines; both of good note for the great quantity of Sugars which are made in each. 6. Garaſu, about five leagues from Olinda, inhabited for the moſt part by poor and Mechanical perſons, till the year 1632 when taken by the Hollander, and planted with a people of higher quality. This Præfecture, belonging formerly to the Earls of Albuquerque (a great houſe in Spain) is now wholly in the hands of the States of the Provinces united: the Town of Olinda being took by them in the year 1629. the Port and all the Avenues unto it ſo ſtrongly fortified, that they have hitherto enjoyed it.

8. Of TAMARACA, ſo called from an Iſland of that name, diſtant about five miles from Olinda; of no great note but for the Haven, and an impregnable Caſtle on the top of an Hill for defence thereof. Which when the Hollanders could not take, they built a ſtrong Bulwark at the mouth of the Port, and ſo blocked it up, that it hath ſince been of no uſe to the Spaniard. This the leaſt Præfecture in Braſil, but withall the ancienteſt; extended three leagues onely in length, and but two in breadth: the Patrimony of the Earls of Monſanto in Portugal, who received hence yearly, when entire, thirty thouſand Ducats. But his Rents much diminiſhed, if not quite inverted, ſince the loſſe of the Haven.

9. Of PARAIBA, ſo called from a River of that name (but by the Spaniard called Domingo) of moſt note herein. On the banks whereof ſtandeth Paraiba, the chief Town of it, at the bottom of an Arm of the Sea, about three leagues from the Main, but capable of pretty good ſhips to the very Town. The Town inhabited not long ſince by 500 Portugals, beſides Slaves and Negroes. Not Walled, till they began to ſtand in fear of the Hollanders, on the loſſe of Olinda; but more ſecured by a ſtrong Caſtle on the Promontory, called Cabo Delo, which the Hollanders have in vain attempted, than by any works within the Land. A Caſtle which acknowledgeth the French for the Founders of it, who for a while were poſſeſſed of this Tract, and gave name to an adjoyning Haven, called Port Francois, but outed by the Portugal, An. 1584. who have ſince held their footing in it, but with fear of the Hollanders; eſpecially ſince their taking of a little iſland lying over againſt them, called the Iſle of Noronha.

10. Of RIO GRANDE, ſo called from the River Poteingi (as the Natives term it) which the Portugals call Rio Grande, or the great River. not made a Præfecture till of late. For lying open, as it were, to the next Pretender, ſome of the French began to fix here, An. 1597. But the King of Spain not willing to have any ſuch neighbour, commanded the Captain of Paraiba, to drive them thence; which was done accordingly. But then the Salvages beginning to riſe up in Arms, the Captain of Paraiba was fain to ſeek aid from him of Fernambuck; by whoſe help having ſlain five thouſand, and took three thouſand of them, the reſt became Vaſſals to the Portugals: who built here an impregnable Caſtle (which is all the footing they have in it) well manned and furniſhed with Ammunition and all other neceſſaries; very few Portugals, except thoſe of the Garriſon, being yet come over.

11. Of SIARA, a late Præfecture alſo, in which the Portugals have no more than a Caſtle, with a dozen houſes, or thereabouts, beſides that of the Governour adjoyning to it. So named from an Haven called Siara, but of no great note, and capable but of little Veſſels. Of ſome trade in regard of the Chryſtal, Cotton-wool, and ſome precious ſtones, found in the Countrey hereabouts: and certainly would be of greater, if once the Portugals would be active and purſue the Conqueſt; here being great plenty of Sugar-Canes, but no works to make it.

12. Of

12. Of MARAGNON, an Island lying in the mouth of the great River so called, in the furthest parts of Brasil Northwards, and many leagues distant from Siara, the last of their Prafectures; the Countrey intervening not yet discovered, or otherwise made known unto us, than by the names of the Ports and Promontories found upon the Coast. An Island of a fruitfull soyl, if pains and husbandry were not wanting: affording naturally Maize, and a Root called Maniot, both which the Salvages use for bread; good store of Cotton-wools, Saffron, Brasil wood, and the best Tobacco; and in some places Balm and Amber. Watered with many fresh Rivers, and pleasant Springs: well-wooded both for Timber and Fewel: and in a word, blessed with so temperate an Aire (though so near the Æquator) that no place can be more commodious for the life of man. The people strong of body, healthy and long-lived without any baldnesse; industrious in their Feather-works and Manufactures of Cotton; the Women curious in ordering their hair, fruitfull in Child-bearing, and that till 80 years old and sometimes more. Both Sexes naked till their marriage; and then apparelled onely from the waste to their knees.

The Villages hereof possessed by the Natives, consisted but of four great Houses; each of them two, or three hundred foot in length, and twenty, or thirty foot in breadth; so placed as they resembled a Quadrangular Cloyster: And in each house so many households, that commonly each of their Villages, or Taves (for so they called them) contained three hundred persons, and some twice that number: Of these were twenty seven in all, whose names I hold impertinent to be mustered here: The total estimate of the people when the French came thither, amounting to 12000 Souls. For the French trading in this Island, and carrying themselves courteously amongst the Natives, found them not unwilling to admit a Colony of that Nation, if sent over to them: by whose aide they might free themselves from all other Pretenders, and be instructed in the Gospel. Accordingly a Colonie, and four Capuchin Fryers, are sent over to them, An. 1612. Some Salvages gained unto the Faith, and a strong Castle, called S. Lewis commodiously built, and planted with 22 pieces of Ordnance; the effect of that Voyage. But long they had not rested there when dis-seized by the Portugals, sent thither under the Conduct of Hierome de Albuquerque, Anno 1614. Who to the Castle of S. Lewis, which the French had built, added those of S. Marie, and S. Francis, planted two Villages in the Island by the names of S. Andrew, and S. Jago, and ever since have held it without molestation.

13. Of PARA, the most Northern Prafecture of Brasil, towards Guiana; so called from the River of Para, (supposed to be a branch of the River of Amazons) which runneth through it. The River at the mouth of it, two miles in breadth, and in the middle of the Channel fifteen fathoms deep: on the banks whereof (but on an higher ground than the rest) the Portugals have built the Castle of Para, in form Quadrangular, and well Walled, except towards the River: the Countrey thereabouts inhabited by 300 Portugueze, besides the Garrison.

Now for the Fortunes of the whole, it never did acknowledge any one Supream. Divided into many Tribes, and each Tribe governed by their Chiefs, as in other Countreys. These Tribes so many, and the Muster of their names so useless, that I now forbear it. In this estate they lived when discovered first; but by whom first discovered, will not be agreed on. The Spaniards, to get some colour of a Title for the Crown of Castile, ascribe it to John Pinsone, and Diego de Lepe, two of their own Countrey; who as they say, had landed on it in the year 1500. before the coming of Capralis, though the same year also. The Portugals attribute the discovery of it to Pedro Alvarez de Caprali, sent by their King Emanuel to the East-Indies: who being driven over hither from the Coast of Guinea, took possession of it, and as a Monument thereof, advanced a Crosse, giving the name of Sanctæ Crucis, or the Holy Crosse, to this new discovery. That name changed afterwards to Brasil from the abundance of that Wood (as it is conceived) which was found amongst them. Notice hereof being given to the Court of Portugal, Americus Vespucius a Noble Florentine. An. 1501. and after him John de Empoli, another of that Nation in the year 1503. were by Emmanuel employed in a further discovery. Who speeding fortunately in it, the Portugals did accordingly send over some Plantations thither. But a great controversie growing betwixt them and the Spaniard, to whether of the two it of right belonged: the Spaniard was content to yield it to the Crown of Portugal, though by the Bull, or Edict of Pope Alexander the sixt (by whom the whole undiscovered World was divided betwixt those two Kings) it seemed to fall within the Grant made to the Crown of Castile. Enjoyed by this Emmanuel, and the Kings succeeding till the death of Sebastian (which Sebastian the Jesuits look on as the Founder of all their Colledges in this Countrey) and by the Spaniards since the death of Henry whose reign continued but a year) though in the name and right of the Crown of Portugal; that Nation being so prudently jealous of their interesse in it, that they would suffer any of the Subjects of Spain to grow great amongst them. By them possessed entirely without any Rivals (I mean for so much of the Countrey as they had subdued) till of late years the Hollanders put in for a part; and got the Prafectures of Fornanback, and Todos Los Sanctos (or the Bay) by the Right of War. The rest with all the other Members of the Crown of Portugal, in the late Revolt of that Nation from the King of Spain, submitting unto John the 4th. of the house of Bragance, whom the Portugueze had made their King, Anno 1639.

OF GUIANA.

GUIANA is bounded on the East with the Main Atlantick; on the West with the Mountains of Peru, or rather some undiscovered Countreys interposed betwixt them; on the North with the River Orenoque, and on the South with that of the Amazons. The reason of the name I finde not, unlesse it be so called from the River Wia, of which more anon.

It is situate on both sides of the Line, extended from the fourth Degree of Southern, to the eighth of the Northern Latitude. The Air, notwithstanding this situation under the Æquator, affirmed to be temperate, the Eastern winds (which they call the Brizes) constantly blowing about Noon, and mitigating the extreme heats thereof by their cooler blasts. The Countrey towards the Sea side flat and level, the inland parts more mountainous and swelled with hils: in all places so adorned with Natures Tapestrie, the boughs and branches of the Trees never unclothed or left naked, fruit either ripe or green growing still upon them) that no Countrey in the world could be better qualified. The particular Commodities of it we shall see anon, when the particular parts hereof come into Discourse.

Of the People it is said in generall, that they have amongst them no setled Government; and though they acknowledge some superiority in the Chiefs of their Tribes, yet it is only voluntary, as long and as little as they please. Adultery and Murder, which are only punishable, not otherwise expiated but by the death of the Offender. The richer sort have two or three Wives, and somtimes more; the poor but one, and hardly able to keep her: they that have more, and they who have but one, alike jealous of them; and if they take them in Adultery, without any further ceremony or formalities of Law, they beat out their brains. Their wives, especially the elder, they use for Servants; and he which hath most such, is the greatest man. Without Religion, or any notion of a Godhead; not so far onwards on the way to the worship of the true God, as to be Idolaters: for though Idolatrie be mistaken in the proper Object, it supposeth a Deitie; and they who have this Principle, That there is a God, have learned one, and not the least of the points of their Catechism. Their Accompts amongst themselves they keep with a bundle of sticks; which they diminish or increase according to the times of their contract. Their Funerals they solemnize with a Feast, but with such diversity in the deportment of both Sexes, that whiles the Women howl extremely, the Men perform the Obsequies with singing and excessive drinking; the one as improper for a Feast, as the other for a Funeral.

Rivers of most note in it, besides 1 Orenoque, and 2 the River of Amazons, and those rather boundaries betwixt this and the neighbouring Provinces, than proper unto this alone. 3 Arrawari, 4 Conawini, 5 Casipurough, or Cassipure, all falling into the same main Atlantick, betwixt the River of Amazons and Wiapoco: the last arising out of the Lake of the Arachosi, half a mile broad at the mouth or influx into the Sea, and but five spans deep. 6 Wiapoco, of which more hereafter. 7 Wia, 8 Cajane, 9 Marwine, 10 Essequebe, a River of twenty dayes journey long, betwixt Wiapoco and the River of Orenoque or Raliana.

The whole divided commonly into these four parts, 1 Rio de las Amazones, or the River of Amazons, 2 Wiapoco or Guiana specially so called, 3 Orenoque, and 4 the Isles of Guiana.

1. RIO DE LAS AMAZONES, or the River of Amazons, containeth that part of this Countrey which lieth along the tract of that famous River. The soil in some places dry and barren, in others fertile and productive of the choicest fruits. Full of large Woods, and in those Woods most sort of Trees which are to be found in America: One amongst others of most note, (and perhaps peculiar to Guiana) which they call the Totock; a tree of great bulk, and as great a fruit; this last as big as a mans head, and so hard withall, that when the fruit grows ripe and ready to fall, the people dare not go into the woods without an helmet or some such shelter over their heads, for fear of beating out their brains. The kernels of it, for the most part ten or twelve in number, have the taste of Almonds, and are said to be provocative in point of Venerie. Of which the Salvages have this By-word, Pigue secke in Saccowe pingean Totocke; that is to say, Eat Totock, if thou wouldst be potent in the Acts of Venus. Here are also Sugar canes in some places; and the Plant called Pita, the taste whereof is said to be like Strawberries, Claret-wine, and Sugar.

The principal Inhabitants of this part of the Countrey, the Yaos, Cockettuway, Pattecui, Tockianes, Tomoes, and Wackehanes dwelling on the Continent; the Maraons, and Arowians possessed of the Ilands. Towns of note I have met with none amongst them; though every house (most of them 150 foot in length, 20 in breadth, and entertaining at the least an hundred persons) might pass sufficiently for a Village. Yet they are safer housed than so, for otherwise their houses would afford them but little comfort in the overflowings of the River, which drown all the Countrey: and therefore they betake themselves to the tops of trees, and there remain, like Birds, with their several families, till the waters be drawn in again, and the earth become more comfortable for habitation. Yet I find some of these their dwellings called by proper names, as 1 Matarem, 2 Roakery, 3 Anarcaprock, 4 Haaman, 5 Womians, and 6 Cogemymne. But I find nothing but their names, and enough of that.

The first Discoverer of this River and the parts adjoyning, was Orellana the Lieutenant of Gonsales Pizarro, whom his brother Francisco Pizarro, then Viceroy of Peru, had made the Governour of Quito. Moved with the noyse of some rich Countreys beyond the Andes, he raised sufficient Forces, and passed over those Mountains; where finding want of all things for the life of man, they made a boat, and sent this Orellana to bring in provisions. But the River which he chanced into, was so swift of course, that he was not able to go back; and therefore of necessity to obey his fortune in following the course of that strong water. Passing along by divers desolate and unpeopled places, he came at last into a Countrey planted and inhabited; where he first heard of the Amazons (by those Salvages called Comapuyaras) of whom he was bidden to beware as a dangerous people: And in the end having spent his time in passing down this River from the beginning of January to the end of August 1540. he came at last into the Sea; and getting into the Isle of Cubana, sayled into Spain: the course of his voyage down the water he estimated at 1800 leagues (or 5400 English miles) but found no Amazons in his passage, as himself affirmed; onely some masculine women shewed themselves intermixt with the men, to oppose his landing; and in some places he found men with long hair like women; either of which might make these parts believed to be held by Amazons. But to proceed, arriving at the Court of Spain, he got Commission for the conquest of the Countreys by him discovered; and in the year 1549. he betook himself unto the service. But though he found the mouth of the River, one of them at least, he could never hit upon the Channel which brought him down, though attempted often. Which ill successe, with the consideration of his losse both in fame and fortunes, brought him to his grave; having got nothing but the honour of the first discovery, and the leaving of his name to that famous River, since called Orellana. The enterprize pursued, but with like successe, by one Pedro de Orsna, A. 1560. after which the Spaniards gave it over. And though the English and the Hollanders have endeavoured an exact discovery, and severally begun some Plantations in it, yet they proved as unfortunate as the others; their Quarters being beaten up by the neighbouring Portugals, before they were sufficiently fortified to make any resistance.

2. WIAPOCO, or GUIANA specially so called, taketh up the middle of this Countrey, on both sides of the River of Wiapoco, whence it hath his name. A River of a long course, but not passable, up the stream above 16 miles, by reason of a Cataract, or great fall from the higher ground; in breadth betwixt that Cataract and the Æstuarium, about the tenth part of a mile; at the Æstuarium, or influx a whole mile at least, and there about two fathoms deep.

The Countrey on both sides of this River very rich and fertile; so natural for Tobacco, that it groweth to nine handfuls long. Sugar-Canes grow here naturally without any planting, and on the shrubs great store of Cotton, and the Dye by some called Orellana. Plenty of Venison in their Woods, and of Fish in their Rivers; their fields well stored with Beasts, which themselves call Moyres, in shape and use resembling Kine, but without any horns. The people generally of a modest and ingenious countenance; Naked, but would wear cloaths, if they had them, or knew how to make them. Their bread is made of a Plant called Cassavi; of which also being dried and chewed, and then strained through a wicker-vessel, they make a kinde of drink in colour like new Ale, but not so well tasted, and of lesse continuance. The greatest part of their food is Fish, which they intoxicate with a strong-sented wood, and so take them up as they lie floating on the top of the water. Much troubled with a Worm like a Flea, (by the Spaniards called Nignas) which get under the Nails of their Toes, and multiply there to infinite numbers, and the no lesse torture of the Patient, without speedy prevention: No better remedy found out, than to pour Wax melting hot on the place affected; which being pulled off, when its cold, draws the Vermin with it, sometimes 800 at a pull. The Women of such easie child-birth, that they are delivered without help, and presently bring the Childe to his Father (for they have so much natural modesty as to withdraw from company upon that occasion) who washeth it with water, and painteth it with several colours, and so returneth it to the Mother.

Rivers of note here are very many; no Countrey under Heaven being better watered, nor fuller of more pleasant and goodly streams. The names of some of them on both sides of the Wiapoco we have had before: the chief of which I take to be Wia, affirmed to be of a long course, a goodly River all the way, and at the mouth thereof to be large and broad; which passing through the heart of the Countrey, in the fourth degree and 40 minutes of Northern Latitude, may possibly occasion both the whole, and and this part more specially to be called Wiana, and by the Dutch, who cannot pronounce the W, Guyana. Certain I am that by the name of Wiana I have found it written in approved Authours. But what need further search be made after lesser Rivers, (which will offer themselves to us of their own accord) when we have a Lake to passe over like a Sea for bignesse, (magnum, famosum, & vastum instar maris, as my Author hath it) by the Yaos, or Jaos called Raponowinin, by the Caribes (the old Inhabitants of this Countrey) Parimen: Situate about a dayes journey from the River Essequebo: and neighboured by the great and famous Citie Manoa, which the Spaniards call El Dorado (or the Golden Citie) from the abundance of Gold in Coyn, Plate, Armour, and other Furniture, which was said to be in it. The greatest Citie, as some say, not onely of America, but of all the World. For Diego de Ordas, one of the Companions of Cortez in his Mexican Wars, and by him condemned for a mutiny, put into a Boat alone without any victual, and so cast off to seek his fortune; affirmed at his return, that being taken by some of the Guianians, and by them carried to their King, then residing at Manoa, he entered the Citie at high noon, travelled all the rest of that day, and the next also untill night before he came to the Kings Palace; but then he saith that he was led blind-fold all the way: And therefore possibly enough this Citie might be no such miracle as the story makes it; Don Diego being either abused by the reports of the Salvages, or willing to abuse the world with such empty fictions. For though the Spaniards and the English have severally sought, and that with incredible diligence to find out this City, yet none of them have hitherto had the fortune to fall upon it. So that I fear it may be said in the Poets language, ——— Et quod non invenis usquam,

Esse putes nusquam ——— i. e.

That which is no where to be found,
Think not to be above the ground.

Nor is there much more credit to be given unto his Relations of the great Court kept here by one of the Ingas; who being foorsook, one of the younger Brethren of Atabaliba the last King of Peru, at the conquest of that Kingdom with many thousands of his Followers came into this Countrey, and subduing the Caribes, erected here a second Peruvian Monarchy. For besides that Atabaliba had no brethren but Guascar and Mango who both died in Peru, how improbable must it needs appear, that this Guianian King, knowing so well the thirst of the Spaniards after Gold, would either suffer him to return and disclose the secrets of his State; or send him away loaded with Gold, as tis said he did; Who sheweth his Treasure to a Thiefe, doth deserve to lose it. And therefore letting pass these dreams of an El Dorado, let us descend to places of less Magnificence, but of greater reality. Amongst which I reckon 1 Caripo, most memorable for a Colonie of English there planted by Captain Robert Harcourt, An. 1608. situate on the banks of the Wiacopo, near the mouth thereof, on the advantage of a Rock, and that Rock so difficult of access, that they feared no danger from an Enemy. The Ayr so sound and answerable to the constitution of an English body, that of 30 which were left there for three years together, there dyed but six, and those six rather by misfortune, and some cross accident, than by any diseases. 2 Gomeribo, on the top of an hill near the mouth of the Bay of Wiacopo, possessed awhile by some Hollanders, but soon deserted. 3 Moyemon, a Village of the Paragoti, on the banks of the River Marwinen. 4 Crewinay, on the other side of the same River, possessed by the Caribes: the King of the first (for each Tribe had its several Princes) being named Maperitaka, affirmed to be a vertuous man, and kind to strangers; of the later, Minapa. 5 Tanparamunen, about an hundred Leagues from the mouth of that River. And 6 Moreshego, four dayes journey from the other; both possessed by the Caribes. The King, or Cacique of those last, at Captain Harcourts being there (of which time we speak) named Areminta; affirmed to have a skin like a piece of Buff.

The principal Families of this part, besides the Yaos, or Jagos, and the Maraons spoken of before, who possess almost all the Sea-coasts of this Countrey, are said to be Arwaccæ, the Sapayoy, the Mayos, and the Aracouri; of different Languages, and Customs, though neer neighbours unto one another. Originally inhabitants of the Iland of Trinidado, and the River of Orenoque: whence driven by the Spaniards they came into this Tract, and beating the old Inhabitants, whom they call by the common name of Caribes, higher into the Countrey, possessed themselves of the Sea-shores, and the parts adjoyning: each Tribe or Family being governed by its several Chief, as before was intimated. The Netherlanders for a time had some footing in it, but they quickly left it; endeavouring nothing more in the time of their short stay amongst them, than to make the People dis-affected to the English; of whose pretensions to these parts, and designs to plant them they had good Intelligence. And so much was confessed by some of the Natives, when they had found by good experience and acquaintance, how much the English were abused in those mis-reports. Afterwards in the year 1604. Captain Charles Leigh set Sail from Woolwich on the Thames, and in May fell upon the River of Wiapoco, where he was kindly entertained, gratified with an House and Garden, and his Aide craved against the Caribes and their other Enemies. He took possession of the Countrey in the name of King James and the Crown of England; and caused the River of Wiapoco to be called (by his own name) Caroleigh: but that name ended with his life, and that shortly after, he dying in his return on Ship-board. The design went forwards notwithstanding, and in the year 1608. an English Colony is brought hither by Captain Harcourt, a new possession taken in the name of King James, the Colony planted at Carpo before mentioned; the Countrey further searched into by that Noble Gentleman, than ever formerly by any, or by many since. After three years, the Colony wanting fit supply, returned home again; the Plantation never since pursued, though by some projected. Yet so far are these Salvages beholding to the English Nation, that as they did defend them at their being there against the Caribes, so at their going off they taught them the use of Arms, and put them into a posture of defence; inabling them thereby to preserve themselves against all their Enemies.

3. ORENOQUE, or the Province of the River of Orenoque comprehendeth the North parts of Guyana, lying upon and towards the Banks of that famous River of which we have already spoken. The Countrey very rich and pleasant, consisting of large Plains, many miles in compass, adorned with the embroydery of Flowers, and unknown Plants, exceeding pleasant to the eye; and sometimes interlaced with Hills, reported to be furnished with rich Mines of Gold and Silver. The Rivers liberally stored with Fish, and the Forrests both with Beasts and Fowls. No Countrey in America, not Peru it self, said to be comparable to it for abundance of Treasure. Some also add a whole Mountain of Chrystall to be seen afar off from Winecaporo: and tell us (but in generall terms) of more goodly Cities than elsewhere in all Peruana, but neither the Spaniards nor the English could ever see them, though they diligently searched into most parts of this Countrey.

The People, as of ſeveral Nations, ſo of ſeveral Natures: The Capuri, and Macureos, for the moſt part Carpenters, live by making Cunoas or Boats, which they ſell into Guiana for Gold, and to Trinidado for Tobacco, in the immoderate taking whereof they exceed all Nations. When a Cacique or Commander dyeth, they make great lamentation; and after the fleſh is putrified and fallen from the bones, they take up the Skeleton, and hang it up in the houſe where he dwelt, decking his ſkull with Feathers of all colours, and hanging gold Plates about the bones of his arms and thighs. Of the Tivitivas dwelling upon ſome of the Northern branches, it is affirmed by Sir Walter Raleigh, that they are a goodly and valiant People, and to have the moſt manly and moſt deliberate ſpeech of any Nation in the World. A People which eat of nothing that is ſet or ſown: the children of Dame Nature, and therefore will not be beholding for their lively-hood unto Art, or Induſtry; uſing the tops of the Palmito Tree for Bread; Fiſh, Deer, and Swines-fleſh, for the reſt of their ſuſtenance. The Aſſawy, Saymæ, Wikeri, and Aroras, affirmed to be as black as Negroes, but with ſmoother hair: And to uſe Arrows dipt in ſo ſtrange a poyſon, as doth not only bring death, but death with moſt unſpeakable torments, eſpecially if the wounded party be permitted to drink. Of the Arwacæ of this Tract I finde nothing ſingular, but that when any of their Kings or Caciques die, their wives and neereſt of the kindred beat their bones to powder, and mingle it with their drink like ſpice.

Places of moſt importance in it (for to ſpeak any thing particularly of thoſe many Rivers which fall into the Orenoque, were an endleſs labour) 1 Comolaha, on the South of Orenoque, but ſomewhat diſtant, in which they keep ſome Annual Fairs for the ſale of Women. One of our Engliſh men, left by Sir Walter Raleigh, Anno 1595. affirmeth that he bought eight of them (the eldeſt not above eighteen) for a half penny red-hafted knife, which he brought from England: But withall telleth us for his credit that he gave them to ſome Salvages of his acquaintance. 2 Morequito, a known Port upon ſome branch of the Orenoque; of much uſe to the Engliſh in their firſt Diſcovery of theſe parts. 3 Wenicapora, ſo called from another branch of that River bearing this name; from whence was ſhewed an high Hill ſaid to be of Chryſtall, but ſo far off, that it was thought better to believe than to go and ſee. Others report of this Mountain that above it there is a mighty River, which falling down this Cataract on the lower grounds, makes a terrible noiſe, as if 1000 Bells were knocked one againſt another. And poſſible enough it is, that this great fall of water diſcerned far off, may (with the help of Sun-ſhine) carry ſome reſemblance of a Chryſtalline Mountain. 4 S. Thome, ſituate on the Main Channel of the River Orenoque, a Town of 140 houſes ſtretched out in length for half a mile, but ſlightly built, a Pariſh Church in the midſt of it, and at the Weſt end a Convent of Franciſcan Friers. The only Town of all Guiana poſſeſſed by the Spaniards; not fortified till againſt the laſt coming of Sir Walter Raleigh, Anno 1617. but taken by him at that time, and ſince that by the Hollanders, An. 1629. though by both quitted not long after, it returned to the Spaniards.

The ſeverall Nations of this Tract have been named before, Diſcovered firſt by Diego de Ordas, Anno 1531, furniſhed with a Patent for the conqueſt of it by Charles the fift. But not hitting on the right Channel, or otherwiſe not able to overcome the difficulties which lay before him, he returned to Spain: effecting nothing but the opening of the way to others. Followed herein by Hierom de Ortal, Anno 1533. and after by Herrera, who proceeded further than the others, Anno 1536. and finally by Gonſalvo Ximenez de Queſada and Antonio Berreo with far better fortune; who beginning their journey from the New Realm of Granada in the ſearch of Guiana, fell caſually into this great River, as Orellana did before into that of the Amazons. But yet not perfectly diſcovered till the year 1595. in which Sir Walter Raleigh having taken Priſoner this Antonio Berreo, and learning of him the ſucceſs of his Expedition, reſolved upon the undertaking: and ſearched ſo far into the Countrey by the courſe of this River, that ſome have ſince called it Raliana. The buſineſs followed the next year (after his return) by Captain Lawrence Keymis, employed by Raleigh in that ſervice, who at his coming found the Countrey poſſeſſed by the Spaniards, by whom 20 or 30 of the moveable houſes of the Salvages had been laid together like a Town; and all the Natives, who wiſhed well to the Engliſh, diſperſed and ſcattered. So that without any other effect of his journey, than the finding out the true mouth of the Orenoque (which he firſt diſcovered) he ſet ſail for England. In the mean time it had been moved at the Court, that a Colony of Engliſh ſhould be planted there, and ſome porportionable force ſent over to make good the Action. But the motion upon good advice rejected, firſt in regard of the diſtance of it from the main body of our ſtrength: and 2ly. becauſe the Spaniards bordering neer upon it, might eaſily caſt out ſmall Forces and make the enterpriſe diſhonourable to the Engliſh Nation, who had then the better of him in the point of Honourable Atchievements. It was permitted notwithſtanding unto private Adventurers to try their Fortunes on it, without engaging of the State: whereupon followed the Voyages of Leigh, and Harcourt, before ſpoken of. But they not being able to go thorow with ſo great a buſineſs, let it fall again. And ſo it reſted till the laſt unfortunate Voyage of Sir Walter Raleigh, licenſed by Commiſſion under the great Seal to ſearch into ſome Mines of Gold and Silver, which he was credibly informed of when he was in this Countrey. A deſign followed with great hopes, by the Undertakers, moſt of them being perſons of honour, and well attended: but ſo unfortunate in the iſſue (the Spaniards being made acquainted with it before his coming) that at the taking of S. Thome, he loſt his own Son, and a great part of his Forces; and after his return (not able with the reſidue to make good his ground againſt the Enemy) was executed on a former Attaindure, in the old Palace of Weſtminſter, Octob. 29. Anno 1618. Of whom I cannot chooſe but note what is ſaid by Camden Clarentieux, in his Annals: Vir erat nunquam ſatis laudato ſtudio & Regiones remotas detegendi, & Navalem Angliæ gloriam promovendi. And ſo I leave him to his reſt in the bed of peace.

4. THE

4. THE ISLANDS which properly are accompted of as parts of Guiana, lie either ſcattered on the ſhore, in the mouths or bodie of the greater Rivers: ſome of them not inhabited, others of no name; and none at all of any reckoning. Onely the Iſle of 1. Trinidado, and 2. Tabago, are of ſome eſteem: which though ſomewhat further off from the ſhores of this Countrey, yet being that of Trinidado lieth in the mouth of the Orenoque, and that both of them with Guiana paſſe but for one Præfecture, or Provincial Government, we ſhall deſcribe them in this place.

1. TRINIDADO, or Inſula S. Trinitatis, lieth at the mouth of the River Orenoque over againſt Paria, from which ſeparated by a Frith, or Streit, by Columbus, who firſt diſcovered it, called Boca del Drago, or the Dragons mouth, becauſe of the dangerouſneſſe of the paſſage. Extended from the ninth to the tenth Degree of Northern Latitude; the moſt Southern Angle of it, called Punta del Gallo, as that on the North-Eaſt Punta de Galera. The Frith, or Streit, but three miles over, yet made more narrow by the interpoſition of four, or five little Iſlands, which the Sea breaketh through with great violence, leaving onely two entrances for ſhipping into the Golf, called the Golf of Paria. The length hereof 25 leagues, the breadth 18. of a cloudy and unhealthy aire, but a fertile ſoyl, abundantly well ſtored with ſuch commodities as are of the natural growth of America, viz. Maize, Sugar-Canes, Cotton-wool, and the beſt kinde of Tobacco, much celebrated formerly by the name of a Pipe of Trinidado. Here is alſo a ſufficiency of Fruits and Cattel for the uſe of the Natives; and here and there ſome veins of Gold, and other Metals: ſuch ſtore of Pitch, that innumerable ſhips might be laden with it; but that it is conceived to be unfit for the calking of ſhips, becauſe it ſoſtneth in the ſun. The place in which it groweth, by the Spaniards called Terra de Brea, by the Natives Pichen.

The people of the ſame nature and diſpoſition with the other Americans: diſtinguiſhed into ſeveral Tribes, but moſt of them reduced under the power of two petit Princes. But the greateſt part of the Inhabitants, to avoid the Tyranny of the Spaniards, forſook their Countrey, and ferried over into Guiana, where before we found them. The chief Town of it called S. Joſephs, ſituate on the South-ſide of the Iſland, on the banks of a little River which the Natives call Carone, the ordinary reſidence of the Governour, who hath under him beſides this Iſland the Provinces of Guiana and El Dorado (for ſo go his titles) yet a ſmall Town, conſiſting but of 40 houſes, when it was taken, An. 1595. by Sir Walter Raleigh; Antonio Berreo the Governour of it being then made priſoner, who furniſhed his taker with many notions (and ſome meerly fabulous) towards the diſcovery of Guiana.

This Iſland firſt diſcovered by Chriſtopher Columbus in his third voyage, An. 1497. was by him called La Trinidad, it may be with ſome reference to the form hereof, ſhooting into the Sea with three Points or Promontories. Nothing elſe memorable in the fortunes and ſtory of it, but what is touched upon before.

2. TABAGO lieth on the North-Eaſt of La Trinidad, from which 8 miles diſtant: full of ſafe Harbours for the bigneſſe, watered with 18 little Rivers, and well ſtored with Woods; amongſt which ſome Palmito Trees, ſome like that of the Braſil-wood, others not elſewhere to be found. Of Fowl and Fiſh ſufficient to maintain it ſelf. Now called New Walcheren, with reference to an Iſland of that name in Zealand, by ſome of the Low-Countrey-men, who begin to plant there.

OF PARIA.

PARIA is bounded on the East with Guiana, and the Islands in the mouth of the Orenoque; on the West with the Golf, or Bay of Venezuela, and part of the new Realm of Granada; on the North, with the main Atlantick Ocean, or Mare del Noort; the Countreys lying on the South not discovered hitherto.

It took this name from a mistake of the Spaniards (as Peru, and Yucatan on the like) who asking, as all men do, the names of those new Regions which they discovered, and pointing to the Hills afar off, were answered Paria, that is to say, high Hills, or Mountains (for here begins that ledge of Mountains which are thence continued for the space of 3600 miles, to the Streits of Magellane) and so hath it ever since held the name of Paria. By some Writers it is also called Nova Andalusia; but I adhere unto the former.

The nature of the soyl and people being very different, will be more properly considered in the several parts: The whole divided into the Continent and the Islands, which with their subdivisions, may be branched into these particulars, viz. 1. Cumana. 2. Venezuela. 3. S. Margarita. 4. Cubagna, and 5. the lesser Islands.

1. CUMANA hath on the East the Golf of Paria, and the River Orenoque; on the West Venezuela: on the North and South bounded as before. So called from Cumana, one of the Rivers of it; on the banks whereof some Dominican Fryers (who first set footing in this Countrey) built themselves a Monasterie; that name communicated afterwards unto all the rest of this Tract.

It is extended East and West to the breadth of 110 leagues; the length thereof from North to South, said to be 400. But there is little of it known, and lesse of it planted by the Europæans; except some places near the Sea: there being no part of all America, the description whereof hath come so imperfectly to our hands, as they have of this. For except it be the names of some Bayes, or Promontories, and of two, or three most noted Rivers, there is not much that doth require our consideration.

The Countrey, for so much as hath been discovered, neither rich nor pleasant; and consequently the lesse looked after: covered with shrubs, and overgrown with unprofitable bryers and bushes. Heretofore famed for Pearl-fishing, all along the Coast, from the Golf of Paria to that of Venezuela, called therefore Costa de las Perlas; but that gainfull trade hath long since failed it. Now onely of esteem for a vein of most excellent Salt, found near the Promontory of Araya, and the Bay of Cariaco; gathered and digged up thereabouts in great abundance, and yet never diminishing. The parts adjoyning take from hence the name of Salina; the Promontorie bordering on the Frith, called Boca del Drago, the title, or appellation of Cape Salinus. Of some strange Creatures in this Countrey, as the beast called Capa, the soles of whose feet are like a shooe; a kinde of Hog, which lives altogether upon Ants, or Pismires; Parrots, and Bats, of more than ordinary greatnesse, I forbear to speak.

Of the people I finde nothing singular, except it be, that having plenty of good fruits, as of fish and flesh, they use themselves to a far worse dyet, feeding on Horsleeches, Bats, Spiders, Grashoppers, Worms, Lice, and such other Vermin. In other things they seem to have a mixture of all ill customs used amongst the Salvages of Asia, Africk, and America; as multitudes of Wives, prostituting these Wives for the first nights lodging, to the Piacos, or Priests; and for any after, to their Guests; taking great pains to black their Teeth, and putting strange colours on their bodies instead of Garments; high-minded, treacherous, & revengefull; accustomed to the use of poysoned Arrows, which they envenom with Snakes bloud, and other mixtures. In one thing onely different from the rest of their neighbours, which is the fencing of their Grounds, or Orchards with a Cotton-thred, as high as ones Girdle; and an opinion which they have, that whosoever breaketh it, or goes over, or under it, shall die immediatly. More safe in that perswasion, than by brazen Walls.

Rivers of most note, though of little, 1. Rio de Cumana. 2. Rio de Neveri. 3. Cumana de Bardones. The chief Havens, or Roads for shipping, 1. Moxino. 2. S. Foy. And 3. that called Commenagot. The places of most consideration, 1. Cumana, a Colonie of Spaniards, on the bank of the River of that name; but distant about two miles from the Sea, on which it hath a safe and convenient Harbour; the Town so hedged about with Woods, that nothing can be seen of it till one come into it, except it be the Governours house, seated upon the top of a lofty Mountain. 2. S. Jago, a strong Fortresse built by the Spaniards for defence of the Salt Lake, or Salinas, in the year 1622. on some intelligence that the Hollanders had a purpose to take them from him; fortified by the rules of Art, and planted with 30 pieces of Ordnance, the one half of Brasse. 3. S. Michael de Neveri, on the River so called, a Fort of the Spaniards. 4. Guaniba, a Village of the Natives.

The Countrey first discovered in the third voyage of Christopher Columbus; but the possession of it was first taken by two Dominicans; who out of a Religious zeal to plant the Gospel in these parts founded themselves a little Cell in the place where the Burrough of Cumana was after built, Anno 1513. and doubtlesse had sped very well in their holy purpose, if some covetous Spaniards had not treacherously seized upon one of the Chiefs of their Tribes, and carried him with his Wife and Train into Spanish bondage.

For

For this the poor Monks ſuffered death; I may call it martyrdom; their death revenged by Alfonſo de Oieda, Anno 1520. and he not long after ſlain by the Salvages, who alſo at the ſame time deſtroyed two Convents of Dominican and Franciſcan Friers, which had been founded in the year 1518. A ſecond force ſent hither under Gonſalvo de Ocampo, waſteth a great part of the Countrey, beheads one of their Kings, and hangs ſome of his people. But that ſtrength being withdrawn, or defeated alſo, Diego de Caſtellon is ſent over by the Councel reſident in Hiſpaniola, to ſecure the poſſeſſion of the Countrey: by whom the Caſtle firſt, and after the Burrough of Cumana, was built and planted. Some other attempts there were for a further conqueſt, but they proved nothing but attempts; except the building of the Caſtle of S. Michael de Neveri, by Hierome of Ortal, and the diſcovery of ſome of the in-land Provinces 150 leagues from the Sea-ſide, by Antonio Sedenno, An. 1537. of which nothing followed, but the Regiſtring of that tedious march.

2. VENEZUELA is bounded on the Eaſt with Cumana; on the Weſt with the Bay of Venezuela, the Lake of Maracaybo, and the new Realm of Granada. So called by Alfonſo de Oieda, one of the firſt Diſcoverers of it, An. 1599. becauſe he found a Burrough of ſome of the Salvages ſituate in the middeſt of the waters, to which was no paſſage but by boat: the word importing as much as Little Venice.

It is in length from Eaſt to Weſt 130 leagues; in breadth where broadeſt about 80. The ſoyl ſo plentifull of all ſorts both of Fruit and Grain; the Countrey ſo repleniſhed with all kinde of Cattel, and excellent Paſtures to maintain them, that the neighbouring Nations call it by the name of the Granarie. Such ſtore there goeth from hence of Wheaten meal, Biſcoct, Cheeſe, Hogs-fleſh, Ox-hides, and Cloath of Cotton ready made, as very well deſerves that title. Here is alſo very great plenty of Fiſh, Wilde beaſts for hunting, Mines of Gold and other Metals; beſides an infinite deal of Sarzaparilla ſent to Europe yearly.

The people of the ſame nature and diſpoſition with thoſe of Cumana, with whom they do participate in all points of that Character. The Women (which was there omitted) trained up to ride, run, leap, and ſwim, as well as the men; to till the Land, and look to the buſineſſe of the houſe, whileſt the men hunt, or fiſh, to bring in proviſion. They count it a great part of beauty, to have very thick thighs; which they effect, by binding their legs hard below the knee, from their very Childhood. Shameleſſe enough till married, after more reſerved; though rather for fear of a divorce, than for love of modeſty.

Rivers of note I meet with none; inſtead of which many convenient Harbours and capacious Bayes. The chief, that called Golfo triſte, from ſome ſhipwracks, or the like misfortune hapning to the Namer of it. 2. The Bay of Coro, or Venezuela, large and ſpacious, which by a Frith, or Streit of half a league over, receiveth the tribute of, 3. The great Lake called the Lake of Maracaybo, by the Spaniards called Lugo de Nueſtra Sennora, or our Ladies Lake, in compaſſe about 80 leagues; on the banks whereof dwel many Nations of the Salvages, and into which there falleth a River from the Realm of Granada, by which the two Provinces maintain commerce with one another.

Places of moſt importance in it, 1. Maracapana, the furtheſt Port upon the Eaſt, and one of the beſt on all this Coaſt; in which the Spaniards of Cubagna had once a Garriſon, under colour of defending the Countrey againſt the Salvages, but in plain truth to uſe it for an opportunity to ſeize upon their perſons, and carry them away for Slaves. Thoſe parts hereby unpeopled, or but meanly populous. 2. Venezuela, the moſt Weſtern Town of all the Province, commonly called Coro ſituate in the Latitude of 11 Degrees: built on the Sea, where it hath an Haven on each ſide; the one capacious, but not ſafe; the other ſafe enough, but not very capacious. But being built in a ſweet and healthy aire, and neighboured by the richeſt ſoyl of all the Countrey, it hath been long the ordinary ſeat of the Governour, and the See of a Biſhop (Suffragan to the Arch-biſhop of Domingo in Hiſpaniola.) Once ſuddenly ſurprized by the Engliſh, An. 1595. and burnt to aſhes, but as ſuddenly repaired again. 3. Caravalleda, or Nueſtra Sennora de Caravalada, 80 leagues from Coro towards the Eaſt, ſeated upon the Sea near an unſafe Haven, and defended from aſſault by the Caſtle of Caracas, ſo called from the name of the Tribe in which it ſtandeth. Near unto which the Hills ariſe to ſo great an height, that they ſeem to equal the Pike of Tenariffe ſo much talked of. 4. S. Jago de Leon, in the ſame tribe of the Caracas, took by the Engliſh the ſame year. 5. Nova Valentia, 25 leagues from S. Jago de Leon, and from Coro 60. 6. New Xeres, lately built, fifteen leagues on the South of New Valentia. 7. Nova Segovia, one league onely from New Xeres; ſituate on the banks of Baraquicemiti, the moſt noted River of this tract. 8. Tucuyo, in the Valley ſo called; not very large, but plentifully loaded with rich Sugar-Canes, for which ſome Sugar-works, or Ingenios are here lately built. 9. Truxillo, or Nueſtra Sennora de la Paz, eighteen leagues on the South of the great Lake of Maracaybo, on which the Inhabitants hereof have a Village which belongs unto it, where they hold a Factorie for the ſale of their wares. 10. Laguna, on the bottom of the Lake it ſelf; not elſe obſervable but for the multitude of Tygers which do haunt about it.

This Countrey diſcovered by Columbus, and named by Alfonſo de Oreda, as before is ſaid, was firſt pretended to for Neighbourhoods-ſake, by the Spaniards planted in Cubagna. Afterwards John de Anpuez, by order from the Council reſident at Domingo in Hiſpaniola, was employed in the Diſcovery of it, Anno 1527. But Charles the fift having taken up great ſums of money of the Velſeri a wealthy Family of Augſpurg, pawned this Countrey to them; by whom Ambroſius Alfinger was ſent with 400 foot and 80 horſe, to take poſſeſſion. But he and his Succeſſors in that imployment, not minding ſo much the Conqueſt as the ſpoyl of the Countrey; the Council of Domingo undertook the buſineſſe once again; and in the year 1545. ſent over one John de Caravayal, who treading in the ſteps of the Germans, or rather outgoing them in all ſorts of Rapine, was outed on a ſecond order by one John Perez de Toloſa, by whom the Province was reduced into ſome good order. In the year 1550. the Negroes, brought hither in great multitudes out of Africk, began to mutiny; but their Deſign diſcovered, and themſelves all ſlain. Peace and contentment following after all theſe troubles, the Countrey was in little time ſo thorowly planted, and the Natives ſo incouraged in their ſeveral Tribes, that notwithſtanding the deſtructions made by the Germans and Spaniards, here were reckoned not long ſince above 100000 of the Salvages, not numbring thoſe above fifty or under eighteen years of Age; who by an Order of the Councell of Spain for theſe parts of America, are exempt form Taxes.

3. MARGARITA is an Iland ſituate over againſt the Salina or Salt-Lake in Cumana; from the Main-land whereof it is diſtant about ſeven Leagues. So called from the abundance of Pearls which the Spaniards found at the firſt Diſcovery, which the Latiniſts call Margaritas, and from them the Spaniards. Which though it ſignifie no other than the Vulgar or common Pearl, yet here were alſo ſtore of thoſe of the greater eſtimate, ſuch as the Romans by the figure of Antiphraſis called Uniones, becauſe they always grew in couples. Nulli duo reperiuntur indiſcreti, ſaith Plinie, unde nomen Unionum ſcilicet Romanæ impoſuere delicie.

The Iſle affirmed to be 16 Leagues in length, and ſix in breadth; ſituate under the 11. Degree of Northern Latitude. Well ſtored with Pearls upon the Shores, when firſt diſcovered; but even then when moſt plentifully ſtored with that Commodity, ſhe had not water of her own to quench her thirſt; compelled to fetch it from Cumana. Otherwiſe plentifull enough both of Maize, and Fruits. The People obſequiouſly ſervile to their Lords, the Spaniards; ſo long accuſtomed unto bondage, that it is now grown another nature. Places of moſt importance in it, 1 Monpater, in the Eaſt corner of the iland, a Fort of the Spaniards, built for ſecuring their rich Trade of Pearl fiſhing, and to defend their ſhips which lie there at Anchor: within the command whereof is a little Burrough, and the houſe of the Governour. 2 El valle de Santa Luzia, two Leagues from the Sea, a Spaniſh Colony. 3 Makanao, the chief Village of the Natives.

This Iland firſt diſcovered in the third Voyage of Columbus, Anno 1498. grew ſuddenly into great eſteem, by reaſon of the rich Pearl fiſhing, which they found on the ſhores thereof. And in regard the Natives were ſo ready to betray their Treaſures (of which themſelves made little reckoning) they found more favour from the Spaniards, and obtained more liberties from the King, than the reſt of the Salvages. Inſomuch that the Spaniards either could not or would not compell them to dive into the Sea for Pearl; but bought Negro ſlaves from Guinea, and the Coaſts of Africk, whom they inforced with great Torments to dive unto the bottom of the Sea, many times ſeven or eight Fathom deep, to bring up the ſhels, in which that Treaſure was included: where many of them were drowned, and ſome maimed with Sharks, and other Fiſhes. But that rich Trade is much diminiſhed of late, if it fail not quite. The cauſe thereof to be imputed to the unſatiable avarice of the Spaniards, ſo greedy upon Pearl, that they deſtroyed the very Seed, and making gain of whatſoever they could meet with, for a little preſent profit loſt the hopes of the future. The Iland ſince leſs famous, and not much frequented. Viſited to its coſt in the year 1601. by the Engliſh under Captain Parker, who received here 500. l. in Pearls for the ranſom of Priſoners; and took a Ship which came from the Coaſt of Angola, laden with 370 Negroes, to be ſold for Slaves.

4. CUBAGNA is an Iland lying betwixt Margarita and the Promontory of Aroya upon the Continent; from the firſt diſtant but one League, from the other ſix; it ſelf in compaſs about three. Rich on the ſhores, by the abundance of Pearls which were found about them, but very beggerly on the Land. Deſtitute both of graſs and water, by conſequence of Cattel alſo, except only Conies, and but few of thoſe. So that like many a Gallant who ſpend all upon the back, and nothing on the belly, ſhe had her out-ſide laced with Pearls, but within nothing to be found but want and hunger. Their bread and water brought them out of other Countries; and their Fruits too, if they deſired to have any; here being very few Trees, and thoſe moſt of Guyayacan. But ſo abundant in this Treaſure, that the Kings Fifths for many years amounted to 15000 Ducats yearly out of this poor Iland.

In this reſpect it was preſently reſorted to, and poſſeſſed by the Spaniards, who planted here a Colony which they called New Cadiz: and grew in ſhort time unto ſo great power, that they made themſelves Maſters of the Port of Maracapana Venezuela, one of the beſt upon thoſe Seas. But in the year 1521. hearing that the Salvages of Cumana had deſtroyed the Convent of Franciſcans on the oppoſite Shore, they cowardly forſook the Iland, and fled to Hiſpaniola. Sent back again by the Councel there, under the conduct of James de Caſtellon, by whom the Town was made more beautifull and ſtrong than ever formerly. In great eſteem as long as the Pearl-fiſhing did continue; now, with that decayed. Yet ſtill the Iland doth deſerve ſome conſideration, for a Fountain on the Eaſt part of it neer unto the Sea: continuing, though the Pearls be gone; which yieldeth a Bituminous ſubſtance like oyl, Medicinable for diſeaſes, and is found two or three Leagues off, floating on the Sea: more profitable for the good of Mankinde, and more eaſily found, than the Pearls which ſunk unto the bottom, and maintained our pride.

Four miles from hence, but appendant to it, lieth a little Iland called Coche, three miles in compaſs, but ſo abundantly ſtored with Pearls, that it hath been worth in that one commodity for ſome moneths together, above a thouſand pounds a moneth of our Engliſh money. Firſt peopled, upon that occaſion, An. 1529. but the occaſion failing, the Plantation ended, the Iſle being now unpeopled, as not worth the looking after.

5. THE

5. THE LESSER ISLANDS of this Præfecture or Provincial Government, lie all along upon the Coast of Venezuela, from East to West; the principal of which 1 Torgula, 12 or 14 miles on the West of Margarita: four miles in length, hardly one in bredth; but yielding such good store of Salt, that three or four ships are laded with it every yeer. Well furnished with Goats and Guayacans; but not else considerable: except for being naturally fenced about with Rocks, and yielding a convenient Harbour for the use of Mariners. 2 Catelina, by the English called the Isle of Providence, as the former is by the name of Association; both which being void of all inhabitants and tame beasts, were possessed by them about the yeer 1619. at such time as there was often war between England and Spain; After which, not being claimed by the Spaniards in making up the peace ensuing, they were granted by King Charles by his Letters Patents under the great Seal of England, to certain Noble men and Gentlemen, and their Successors, who for the space of 20 yeers, or there abouts, have enjoyed them quietly; the Ilands being planted by them with their several Colonies, and all things necessary to maintain and enrich the same. 3 Bonaire, opposite to the Bay of Golfo triste, in the Latitude of twelve Degrees; wel-furnished with Sheep and Goats, and other Cattel brought out of Spain, and peopled with some Savages out of Hispaniola, whom the Spaniards Christned and sent thither: some Spaniards with their Governour intermixt amongst them. The Iland 16 miles in compass; not fruitful naturally but in trees, which are great and numerous. 4 Curacaos, nine miles on the West of Bonaire; and as many in compass. Of a more fertile soile by far, and of very rich Pastures: the People given to grazing, and make good store of Cheese, transported thence to other places; the Iland having toward the North, a convenient Harbour. 5 Aruba, on the North-east of Curacaos, from which nine miles distant; in compass not above five miles, for the most part level. One hill it hath (amongst some others) fashioned like a Sugar-loaf. Inhabited by few Savages, and fewer Spaniards.

The other Ilands on this Coast, as the Tostigos, lying Eastward of 1 Margarita, 2 Blanca, 3 Orchilla, 4 Rocca, and 5 the Isle des Aves, or of Birds, interposed betwixt Tortuga and Bonaire; some of them rather Rocks then Ilands: few stored with any living creatures for the use of men; and none of them at all with men to manure and dress them, I pass over here: and so proceed from these Ilands of the Province of Paria, to those which are subordinate to the Councel of S. Domingo, and make a Province of themselves. But first we must go back, and bring up some of the Ilands of Mare del Zur, which could not be reduced to any of the former Provinces.

And so much of PERUANA.

OF THE AMERICAN ILANDS: And first of those which are in MARE DEL ZUR.

THe AMERICAN ILANDS, scattered up and down the shores of this New World, are commonly divided into those of Mare del Zur, or the Pacifique Ocean; and those of the Atlantick, or Mare del Noort. The first so called by Magellanus, the first Discoverer: who passing thorow those troublesome and tempestuous Streits which now bear this name, found such a change upon his comming into the Main, that he gave it the name of Mare del Zur (quod à tranquillitate vocavit Mare del Sur, saith the Author of the Atlas Minor) from the calm and peaceable temper of it. By the Latines called Mare Pacificum, in the same regard. Called also the Southern Ocean, because of its situation on the South side of America, in reference to some part of the Golf of Mexico, and the Streits of Anian. Not known unto the Spaniards till discovered by Nonnius Vasques de Balboa, conducted hither by one of the Caciques or pety Kings of the Countrey about Nombre di Dios; Who seeing the Spaniards so greedy after Gold, told them that he would bring them to a place where their thirst should be satisfied. Accordingly he brought them to the opposite shore, this Balboa being the chiefe man in that Adventure: who discovering further on the Sea, opened the way unto Pizarro, and the rest that followed to the golden treasures of Peru: Executed notwithstanding this good service by Don Pedro de Avila, within short time after. But the more full discovery of it is to be ascribed unto Magellanus and some later Adventurers, though the Spaniards got nothing by the bargain. For formerly, as long as the Southern sea was unknown to any but themselves, they conveyed their Gold and treasures from one place to another, from Panama to Peru, from Peru to Panama, without losse or charge, and thought their Ports upon that shore to be unaccessible. But after the way unto this sea was found out by Magelanus; Drake, Cavendish, and the rest of our English Adventurers did so scoure these Coasts, that they left them neither Port nor ship, which they did not ransack; as hath been evidenced before in some particulars.

As for the Ilands of this Sea, they lie most of them so neer the shores, as if placed there by Nature to serve as Outworks to defend the Continent. Many in tale, but few of consideration; and of those few some of the chiefe have been described already in their proper places, as parts and members of the Province upon which they lie. The residue which lie too far off to come under such consideration, must be mentioned here; and those reduced to these two heads, 1 Los Ladrones, & 2 the Ilands of John Fernandes.

1. LOS LADRONES are certain Ilands situate betwixt the main Land of America and the Philippine Ilands, in the Longitude of 185. and the 4 Degree of Northern Latitude. So called by Magellanus who first discovered them, because of the thievishness of the Inhabitants (Insulæ Latronum is their name in Latine) who had stoln his cock-boat, which he was forced by main force to recover from them. And they continue still both their name and nature. Found such by Cavendish & Noort in their severall voyages, to whom they came under colour of buying Iron (a commodity which they highly prize) but either closely or openly stealing whatsoever they met with. The people tall of stature, brown of complexion, and inclining to corpulency; extreamly active, and good Divers, continuing a long time under the water, as if alike fitted to both Elements; in so much as the Holanders then with Noort, to make triall of it, cast five pieces of Iron into the sea, all fetched out by one of them. The Women as good at it as the men. Both sexes given to filthy and promiscuous lusts; for which branded (many of them) with the marks of their incontinency, the Pox having eaten up both their Lips and their Noses.

Their Religion is worshipping the Divel, whose Images they have in wood on the head of their Boats: the Chappel and the Saints fit for such devotions. But for the nature of these Ilands, and what subjection the Inhabitants of it yield to the King of Spain, I am yet to seek. But like enough they yield as little as some others do, which yet are reckoned by our Authors to be parts of America.

2. The Ilands of John Fernandes, are two in number: so called from John Fernandes the first Discoverer, An 1574. each of them five or six miles in compass, and about 300 miles distant from the shores of Chile. Situate in the 33 Degree of Southern Latitude; rocky and barren, but well woodded, and those woods replenished with Goats, but their flesh not so savory as in other places. Some store of Sanders there is in them, and of Palms no scarcity. Plenty of Fish upon the shores, for which cause visited sometimes by the Spaniards lying in Peru: and fitted with commodious Harbours and Roads for shipping, which makes them not neglected by other Nations as they pass this way. None else of note in all this Sea, but such as lie upon the shores of their severall Provinces; which we have looked upon already. And therefore passing thorow the Streits, and comming up unto the Ilands of Paria, where before we left; we will now look on those of Mare del Noort, or that part of the Atlantick which washeth the shores of this New world (the reason of which names we have seen before) subordinate ordinate to the Counſell or Government of S.Domingo, viz. 1 the Caribes, 2 Porto Rico. 3 Hiſpaniola, 4 Cuba, and 5 Jamaca. The reſt already ſpoken of in their proper places.

1. THE CARIBES.

THe CARIBES or Canibal Ilands are in number many; 27 of them known by their proper names; the reſt, of leſſe note (though ſome of theſe of little enough) not yet ſo diſtinguiſhed. Called thus in general, becauſe inhabited by Cannibals and Man-eating people (at their firſt Diſcovery) as the word Caribes doth import. They lie extended like a Bow from the coaſt of Paria unto the Iſle of Porto Rico: of different temper, as muſt needs be in ſuch variety; and therefore not within the compaſs of a generall Character. Some of the principal we ſhall conſider more diſtinctly; and for the reſt it will be trouble enough to name them, or elſe paſſe them by.

1. GRANADA the neereſt of this crew to the Main-land of Cumana, is ſituate in the Latitude of 20 degrees and 15 Minuits; in form like a Creſcent or half Moon, the two horns not a mile a ſunder, the whole length but ſix. Shaded all over with thick Woods, but notwithſtanding of a rich and fruitfull ſoil. A Haven in it of good uſe, but no Town of note. The people of the ſame ill condition with the other Savages, but more wit to hide it; moſt miſchievouſly intended when they ſeem moſt kind; and then the more to be avoyded.

2. S. VINCENT 18 miles on the North of Granada, is of ſo bleſſed a ſoil, that it brings forth abundance of Sugar-Canes without charge to the Husbandman, Watered with many pleaſant Rivers, and full of ſafe and convenient Bayes for the uſe of Marrines. In figure Circular, the Diameter being ſix miles over; the Circle by conſequence eighteen. The people but of mean ſtature, ſlothfull, and ſtudious only for their Belly: their love to which makes them to adventure in their ſmall Boats, hewn out of the body of a Tree, to paſs into the Continent, and return again, without help of the Compaſs; though diſtant from it at the neereſt, above 30 miles.

3. BARBADOS no the North-eaſt of S. Vincent, in the Latitude of 13 Degrees, and 20 Minutes. Of an Oval form, 17 or 18 miles in compaſs. The ſoil in ſhew like that of England, but far more fruitfull: on the Eaſtſide thruſting out it ſelf with Points and Angles, which yield ſome Bayes, but full of Quick-ſands, and unſafe for ſhipping; on the South furniſhed with a large and commodious Harbour: Not very well provided of for fruits or Cattel, till made a Colony of the Engliſh; who have brought thither from their own Countrey, Swine and Kine; Orenges, and the like from others. The chief Commodity made hitherto of this Plantation, comes by the planting of Tobacco; and by a kind of courſe Sugar called Barbadoes Sugar, which muſt be quickly ſpent, or will melt to nothing. Were they in ſtock, and not forced to make a quick return of their Commodities, they might make here as good Sugars as in other places. Yet this Plantation ſaid to be worth all the reſt which are made by the Engliſh; who (as I take it) are the ſole Colony in it. The Iland but at the courteſie of the Spaniard; without whoſe leave and liking not of force to hold it.

4. MATININO on the North-weſt of the Barbados, by the Salvages called Madanina, with little difference. Everywhere ſwelled with Hils, of which three moſt eminent for height: one of them, which way ſoever a man looks upon it, carrying the reſemblance of an Hat. Inhabited in the time of Peter Martyr the Hiſtorian, with none but Women: afterwards, with a more fierce and barbarous people then the reſt of theſe Ilands: but neither Men or Women to be ſeen of late: whether deſtroyed, or removed further from the ſhores for fear of their deſtruction, is a thing uncertain.

5. DOMINICA, ſeated on the North of Matinino, twelve Leagues in length; exceeding fruitfull of Tobacco, which they ſell unto the Europeans for Hatchets, Knives, and other Inſtruments of Iron. Famed for two Fountains of Hot-water, and a commodious Haven at the Weſt ſide of it, into which falleth a River 20 paces broad. The people as barbarous as ever Cannibals or Man-eaters to this very day: At deadly enmity with the Spaniards, and to no man truſty, but where they cannot hurt or dare not. Both ſexes weare their hair long, and colour their bodies over with Oaket. Yet bloody and barbarous though they be, they are ruled by a King of their own, diſtinguiſhed from the reſt in his dreſſe or habit, whom they moſt readily obey.

6. DESSEADA, or the Land of Deſire, on the North-eaſt of Dominica, Diſcovered by Columbus in his ſecond Voyage; naked of Trees, and at the firſt ſight afar off, not unlike a Galley. Of great uſe to the Spaniards, who alwaies take it in their way from the Canaries to the parts of America, and back again at their return.

The like uſe doe they make of 7. The Iſle of GUADALUPE, parallel to this, but directly Weſtward: at which the Fleets which come from Spain uſe to take freſh water, and there diſperſe themſelves to their ſeverall Ports. Eight miles in length, and of good Anchorage in moſt parts of the Sea adjoyning. North-eaſt from hence lieth

8. S. Maria del Antigna, commonly called ANTIGNA onely, and by ſome miſtakingly ANTEGO. Seven Leagues in length, and as much in breadth; difficult of acceſſe, and deſtitute of freſh water, but well repleniſhed of woods, and provided of Fens. Of late times made a Colonie of the Engliſh, who do ſtill poſſeſſe it.

9. S. CHRISTOPHER, on the North-west of Guadalupe in the Latitude of 17 Degrees and 20 Minuits. The length six miles, the bredth in many places four, and in some but two: much swelled with hils, and towards the East provided of several Salt wiches. The French and Englisb had sometimes in it several Colonies: by whom the Natives were destroyed, or otherwise compelled to forsake their dwellings: convict, as was pretended, of some manifest treacheries. But the two Colonies did not long enjoy the sole possession; ejected by Frederick de Toledo, as he passed this way with his Navy; though suffered to return to their former dwellings, as rather profitable then dangerous to the Crown of Spain. Their chief employment and commoditie lies in their Tobacco, by some much commended. Joyning hereto, or but a League from it at the most, is

10. The Isle of NIEVES, affirmed to be five leagues in compass; well wooded, and as pleasantly watered; insomuch as the inhabitants of the Isle of Dominica used to come hither for their pleasures, but for hunting chiefly. Now famed for some Bathes or Hot-waters, found out by the English, who in the year 1528. placed a Colonie in it. But whether subsisting of it self, or a part of their Plantation in S. Christophers, I am yet to learn.

11. SANCTA CRUX, by the inhabitants called Ayay, on the North-west of S. Christophers, and the South-east of Porto Rico, from which last distant 15 leagues. Woody and mountainous; not well provided of fresh waters; but on the West-side furnished with a safe and commodious Road, under the covert of the mountains. Amongst their fruits some that resemble a green Apple; which tasted, so inflames the tongue, that for 24 hours it swelleth in so great extremity, as makes it altogether useless, but after that by little and little it abates again. The like hapneth also to the face, if washed before sun-rising with their Fen-waters, which are very frequent in this Iland; after the rising of the sun, without any harm at all. In this there is a Colonie of the English also, but of later standing then those of S. Christophers and Barbados.

Some of the principal of the rest, 1 Anguilla, 2 Barbada, 3 S. Bartholmews, 4 S. Lucies, 5 S. Martius, 6 Montserrat, 7 Rotunda, 8 Saba, 9 Virgo Gorda, & 10 Sumbrero; of which we have little but the names: the rest, though known by several names, are not worth the naming. Onely we are to add concerning the whole Nation of Caribes, once here inhabiting, that they did usually hunt for Men, as Men for Beasts, roving as far as Porto Rico to seek after their prey; and what they caught, was sure to go to the pot, in the worst sense too. Columbus, when he was at the Isle of Guadalupe, found 30 Captive Children which were reserved to be eaten, and in their houses divers vessels filled with Mans flesh, and some upon the spit ready to be roasted. Nor had they laid aside this diet, till after the year 1564. but how long I know not: For at that time, a Spanish ship coming to water at the Isle of Dominica, they cut her Cables in the night, haled her to the land, and devoured all that were in her. But the Ilands have been of late times well cleered of those Monsters; some of them brought unto better order, but the most destroyed as the common Enemies of mankind; the Ilands where they dwelt being either totally deserted, or taken up by the Europæans and their several Colonies.

2 PORTO RICO. And 3. MONICO.

PORTO RICO lyeth on the North-west of Sancta Crux, from which distant about 15 Leagues, and near upon as many from Hispaniola, 136 Leagues from the main Land of Paria, and not much less from the Cape of Coquibocco in Rio de la Hacha, a Province of Castella Aurea. It took this name from the chief Town and Hayen of it; but was called by Columbus at the first discovery S. Johannis Insula, or the Isle of S. Johns; by the Natives Boriguen.

It is situate under the 18 and 19 Degrees of Northern Latitude; in form quadrangular, but of a greater length then breath, such as the Geometricians call oblongum: The length thereof being 30 Leagues, and the breadth but 20. The Ayr hereof very pleasant and temperate, not scorched with furious heats in Summer, nor made offensive by the fall of continual rains; exposed sometimes (chiefly in August, and September) to the troublesomness of sudden tempests, called Hericanes. The soyl indifferently fruitful, though somewhat Mountainous; here being (besides other Hils of inferiour note) a ridge of high Hils which run cross the Country from the one end unto the other. Their chief commodities Sugar canes, Ginger, Cassia, and great store of Hides: the European Cattle having so abundantly increased, that they kill thousands for their skins, leaving the flesh to be a prey unto Dogs and Birds. Some Mines here were of Gold and silver, but consumed long since. And so are all the Natives also; of whom, in that respect, impertinent to give any Character.

Chief Rivers of the Iland, 1 Cairobon, 2 Bayaman: of divers fountains, and of severall and divided courses. 3 Luysa, & 4 Toa, two Rivers growing out of one. The Spring of that one in the Mountains of Guayame, whence running Northwards in one Channel 16 Leagues together, doth afterwards divide it self into those two streams. 5 Guiano. 6 Arezibo. 7 Guadiabo; of lesser note; but all of them, as well as all the rest before, concluding in some safe and capacious Haven.

Places of most importance in it, 1 Porto Rico the chief town, built in a little Iland, on the North side of the greater, but joyned unto it with huge piles, and vast expences, by the command of Philip the first, Ann. 1514. Well built, with large streets, and convenient houses, according to the model of the Cities of Spain; and beautified with a fair Cathedral; the Bishop one of the Suffragans of the Archbishop of S. Domingo in Hispaniola. The town unwalled, but fortified with two strong Castles: the one of which secures the Haven, and the other the Town. In vain attempted, and with the loss of 40 or 50 men, by Sir

Sir Francis Drake, An. 1595. but taken two years after by George Earl of Cumberland, who had a purpoſe to have peopled it with an Engliſh Colonie. Diſcouraged from it by the death of 400 of his men, by change of Ayr, and ſome intemperance of Diet; he ſet ſayl for England, doing no other hurt to the Town or Iland, but the diſfurniſhing it of 70 piece of Ordnance, and ſome part of their treaſure, which he brought home with him. 2 S Germans, in the Weſtern part of the Iland, but four Leagues from the Sea; once the chief of the Iland, now both unfortified, and ſmall. 3 Arezibo, on the River ſo called. 4 Luyſa, the moſt noted Port of the Eaſtern parts, ſituate on the mouth of the River ſo named.

Eaſtward hereof betwixt it and Hiſpaniola, lies the Iland of Mona, (might not this think we be ſo called by Madoc ap Owen Gwinedth, of whom before?) three leagues in compaſſe; rocky and of a brackiſh earth; but fit for the production of Limons, Orenges, and ſuch kind of fruit, which are here in plenty. Not far off, but more towards the Weſt, Monico, or Monetta, as our Engliſh call it, where they found ſuch infinite ſtore of Fowl, that they flew over their heads as thick as hail, & made them almoſt deaf with the very noiſe; their Eggs ſo thick upon the ground, that they loaded two boats with them in three hours, and could hardly paſſe forwards without treading on them.

But to reeurn to Porto Rico, or the Iſle of St. Johns, it was firſt touched upon by Columbus in his ſecond voyage, An. 1493. but firſt inhabited by John Ponce of Leon, An. 1510. who being courteouſly entertained by Aiguabana, the chief Prince therof, planted a Colonie of Spaniards in the North part of the Iſland, which he called Caparra. The Colony ten yeers after that removed to Guanica, and from thence to S. Germans: carrying with it the repute of the chief town of all the Iland, upon every remove till the building of Porto Rico, where it ſince hath fixed. The Iland very populous for the bigneſs of it, when the Spaniards came to it: but the Natives long ago conſumed by ſeveral Butcheries; and as ſome write, not above 1500 Spaniards in all the Country. What elſe concerns the ſtorie of it, we have ſeen before.

HISPANIOLA.

HISPANIOLA lyeth on the Weſt of Porto Rico; the diſtance we have ſeen already. By the Inhabitants called Haitia, and by ſome Quiſqueia; but by Columbus it was honoured with the name of Hiſpaniola, or little Spain; and of late times beginneth to be called S. Domingo, from the chief Town of it.

The form thereof Triangular, extended in a ſharp Angle, called Cabo del Engarno, towards Porto Rico: the Weſtern end faſhioned like a large Bay, or Semicircle; the Northern point of which is named S. Nicholas; the Southern, Cabo de Donna Maria. The length affirmed to be 150 Leagues, the breadth in ſome places 60. in ſome but 30. thence growing leſs and leſs till it come unto the Eaſtern Angle; the whole compaſs eſtimated at 400. Situate betwixt the 18 and 20 Degrees of Northern Latitude. Of an Air much infeſted with Morning-heats, but cooler in the Afternoon by the conſtant blowing of a Sea-gale, which they there call Viraſon.

The Country for the moſt part beautiful and flouriſhing; the Trees always in their Summer-livery, and the Meadows green, as if it did enjoy a perpetual Spring. In many places ſwelled with high craggie Mountains, whence the name of Hayty, that word ſo ſignifying in the natural language of the Natives. Of ſuch an excellent herbage, that the Cattel brought hither out of Spain have increaſed almoſt beyond Arithmetick; grown wilde for want of proper Owners; and hunted unto death like the Stags of the forreſt, though onely to rob them of their skins. The ſoil ſo fertile, that in the ſpace of ſixteen dayes Herbs and Roots will grow ripe, and be fit to be eaten. So plentifully ſtored with Ginger, and Sugar-canes, that in the year 1587. there were ſhipped hence 27500. pound weight of Ginger, and 900. Cheſts of refined Sugar; an evident argument of the riches and fertility of it. A further proof hereof may be, the rich Mines of Gold, in which they uſed to find Gold without mixture of droſs or other metals. 2 The great increaſe of Sugar, one Cane here filling twenty, ſometimes thirty meaſures. 3 The wonderful yield of Corn, amounting in ſome places to an hundred fold. But the Mines were long ago exhauſted, inſomuch as the Inhabitants are fain to uſe braſs-money: but inſtead of thoſe of Gold, they have found out others of Braſs and Iron, and ſome few of Silver; but not much ſearched into of late for want of Workmen.

The reaſon of that want to be aſcribed unto the Covetouſneſs and Crueltie of the Spaniſh Nation: who out of an unſatiable thirſt for Gold, conſumed the people in their Mines; and out of the like thirſt for Blood, killed ſo many of them, that in few years they deſtroyed three Millions of the Natives. And it is probably ſuppoſed, that had not Charls the 5. reſtrained them by a Penal Edict from compelling the Natives againſt their wils to thoſe works of ſervitude, there had not been one Native left in all this Iſland, nor in any other part of their Plantations. Such as are left, are ſaid to be of low ſtature, of black hair, and a complexion ſomewhat inclining to that colour: not differing in manners, habit, or Religion from the Spaniards there.

Rivers of moſt note, 1 Ozama, on whoſe Banks ſtands Domingo, the chief Town of the Iſland, capable of the greateſt ſhips to the very Wharf. 2 Nigua, which paſſing thorow rich Paſtures, or making the Paſtures rich, by its ſecret vertues, runneth towards the Weſt: as do alſo, 3 Yaquimo, 4 Nizao, and 5 Neyba. 6 Haynas of a contrary courſe to the other three. 7 Yaqui, or Jacbo, which falleth into the Northern Seas. 8 Nicayagua, 9 Cocitemico, 10 Xanique. Theſe three laſt famous heretofore for their Sands of Gold. Some ſpeak of 30000 Brooks and Rivers, which are found in this Countrey; two parts of which vaſt number had their Golden Sands. A thing ſo far beyond the charity of the ſtrongeſt Faith, (though reported by a grave and Reverend Author) that I know not what Interpretation to put upon it, except every Water-courſe, Ditch, and Gutter, may be reckoned in.

The

The whole divided, when the Spaniards first came amongst them, into several Provinces or Kingdoms, as 1 Higuey, 2 Jacuaguia, 3 Samana, in the Eastern parts. 4 Yaquimo, 5 Boaruco, and 6 Xaragua, towards the South. 7 Guahabu, and 8 Cabaya, in the West: and in the North, 9 Cibao, rich in Mines of Gold; 10 Marien, the Landing place of Columbus; and 11 Maguana in the center of the Iland, the King whereof in the time of Columbus was named Conabo, of greatest power of any of those petit Roytelets. Another division of it hath been made by Nature, parting it by four Rivers, all rising from one Mountain in the midst of the Island into four Divisions: the River Jache running towards the North; 2 Nubiba hastning to the South; 3 Yuna, or Junna towards the East; and 3 Hatibonico to the West. But these divisions being long since grown out of use, we will survey the chief of the Towns and Cities of it, as they come before us,

And they are 1 S. Domingo, first built by Bartholomew Columbus Anno 1484. on the East bank of the Ozama; and afterwards (in the year 1502) removed by Nicholas de Obando, then Governour of the Iland to the opposite shore. Situate in a pleasant Country, amongst wealthy Pastures, and neighboured with a safe and capacious Haven: the houses elegantly built, most of them of stone, and the whole well walled, beside a Castle at the West end of the Peer to defend the Haven: enriched by the residence of the Governour, the Courts of Justice, the See of an Archbishop (and besides many Convents and Religious houses) an Hospital endowed with 20000 Ducats of yeerly Rent. Esteemed of greatest Trade and concourse of Merchants till the taking of Mexico, and the Discovery of Peru; since that time sensibly decaying; and now reduced unto the number of 600 Families of Spaniards; the greatest part of the City, and all the Suburbs, inhabited by Negros, Mulatos, and other Strangers. Not yet recovered of the hurt it had by Sir Francis Drake, who in the year 1586. took it by force, and held it for the space of a moneth, burning the greatest part of the houses, and suffering the rest to be redeemed at a certain price. 2 St Salvador, 28 Leagues to the East of Domingo. 4 Jaguana, called also Sancta Maria del Porto, from a safe and beautiful Haven adjoyning to it; situate in the West part of the Iland, of no great bigness, consisting of no more then 150 houses, when it was at the greatest; but made much less by Captain Newport, who in the year 1591, burnt it to the ground. 4 Cotuy, in the North of the Island, opposite to S. Domingo, from which distant almost 60 Leagues: a little Town, but formerly of great esteem for its Mines of Gold. 5 Conception de la Vega, the foundation of Christopher Columbus; for whose sake afterwards adorned with a See Episcopal. 6 Puerto de la Plata, 40 Leagues from Domingo on the Northern shore; where built on a commodious Bay by Nicholas de Obando before mentioned, by whom also fortified: the second Town of Wealth and Trade in all the Iland. 7 Azua, now called Compostella, a noted Haven, and resorted to for Sugars, which it yields abundantly.

This Iland was first discovered by Colmmbus (for I believe not that it was any of the fortunate Ilands which we read of in the life of Sertorius) in the first voyage which he made: conducted hither by some of the Inhabitants of the Isle of Cuba. Landing, and gaining the good will of the Savages, by gentle usage, he obtained leave of one of their Kings or Caciques to build a Fortress in his Country, which he called Navidad, or Natividad, leaving in it 36 Spaniards to keep possession: whom he found both mastered & murdered at his coming back. Being now better furnished for a new Plantation, he built the Town called Isabella, (in honour of Isabella Queen of Castile) near the Mines of Cibao; which afterwards was deserted also, and the Colonie removed unto S. Domingo: the Spaniards sending one Colonie after another, till at last their number was increased unto 14000. besides women and children. But having rooted out the Natives by their infinite cruelties, and exhausted the riches of the Country with as infinite covetousnesse, they betook themselves to fresher Quarters, abandoning the Iland to devour the Continent. Once had the Ilanders rebelled, and fortified themselves in the Province of Baoruco; a place so naturally strong, that there was little need of the helps of Art. Not brought to leave that fastnesse but on such conditions as made the Spaniards less insolent, and themselves less slaves.

5. CUBA.

CUBA lyeth on the West of Hispaniola, from which parted by a Frith or narrow Channel, interposed betwixt the two Capes of S. Nicholas, and that of Mayzi, Backed on the North with a trie of Ilands, called the Lucaios, and some part of the Peninsula of Florida; extended towards the East to the extream point or Foreland of Jucutan, called Cape de Cotache, from which distant about 50 Leagues, and neighboured on the South with the Isle of Jamaica.

It is in length from East to West, that is to say, from Cape Maxie towards Hispaniola, to the Cape of S. Anthony, 230 Leagues; in breadth where broadest hardly 40, but fifteen in others. For the fertility of the soil contending with Hispaniola for the preheminence; but in the temperature of the Aire a great deal before it. Liberally stored with Ginger, Cassia, Mastick, Aloes, Cinamon and Sugar, (not reckoning such commodities as are common unto this with others) besides great plenty of Flesh, and Fish; and of Fowl no scarcity. The Gold more drossie in the Mine, then in Hispaniola, but the Brass more perfect. Hilly, and full of lofty Mountains; but those Mountaines clad with divers trees, some of which drop the purest Rosin, and the Hills sending to the Valleys many notable Rivers. Pestered with many sorts of Serpents, not so much out of any ill condition of the Soyl and Air, as by an old Superstition of the Savages: in former times not suffered to kill them when they might (this being a Dish reserved for the higher Powers) not able afterwards to destroy them when it would have been suffered.

What other Savage Rites they had, is not now material, the Spaniards having took an Order that they should not trouble us in that particular. Yet thus much we may add in memory of the first inhabitants, that an old man of 80 years, one of the Caciques of the Iland, addreſſed himſelf unto Columbus at his firſt coming hither, adviſing him to uſe his Fortune with moderation, and to remember that the ſouls of men have two journeys when they leave this world; the one ſoul and dark, prepared for the injurious and cruel perſon; the other delectable and pleaſant for the men of peace. It is ſaid alſo of them they knew not the uſe of money, nor underſtood the niceties of Meum and Tuum: Tenants in common to the bleſſings which the earth brought forth, and Coheirs of Nature.

Amongſt the Rarities of this Iland, they mention a Fountain out of which floweth a pitchy ſubſtance, which is found frequently on the Seas into which it falleth, excellent for the Calking of ſhips: Secondly, a Navigable River (but the name not told us) the waters of which were ſo not, that a man could not endure to hold his hand in them. They tell us alſo thirdly of a Valley 15 Leagues from S. Jago, which produceth ſtones exactly round, as if made for pleaſure; but yet meerly natural. But theſe no greater Rarities then in other places: nor altogether ſo great as in Hiſpaniola. Of which they tell us of a fair River, whoſe waters are Salt, and yet none but freſh ſtreams fall into it: Of another Lake (three Leagues in compaſs) on the top of the Mountains, into which many Rivers were known to run without any Exit. Neither of theſe ſo ſtrange or rare as the Cucuyo, a kind of Scarabe or Beetel: the eyes and wings whereof when opened give ſo great a light, in the darkeſt places, that a man may ſee to read and write by it, as well as by a Candle.

Rivers of moſt note, 1 Cante, much annoyed with Crocodiles (a Beaſt not common in theſe Ilands, nor elſewhere in this) exceeding dangerous to ſuch as repoſe themſelves on the Banks of the River. 2 Arimao, which diſburtheneth it ſelf neer the Port of Xagua. 3 Ria de Porcos, full of Rocks and quick-ſands, at the entrances of it. 4 Rio Eſcondida, paſſing betwixt Habana, and the Port of Marcanas, 5 Marien, and 6 Tanne, of leſs note: Beſides theſe there is Xagua, a ſafe Station and Road for ſhipping; of a narrow entrance, but large and ſpacious when once entred, above ten Leagues in length, and of breadth proportionable. So fenced on all ſides from the winds, that ſhips lie here in ſafety without any Anchor. Some other Baies there be as uſefull, though not ſo conſiderable.

Towns of moſt conſequence, 1 S. Jago in the South part of the Iland, ſituate about two Leagues from the Main, but in the bottome of a large and capacious Gulf, the moſt noted Port of all theſe Seas. Built by Don Diego de Velaſques, An. 1514. Afterwards made a Biſhops See, beautified with a Cathedral; ſome Religious houſes; once not inferiour unto any for numbers of People, though now few enough. Baracao, 30 Leagues on the Eaſt of S. Jago, the ſame Foundation as the other; and neighboured by great quantities of Eben-wood. 3 S. Salvador, by ſome called Baymo, according to the old name of the Province in which it ſtandeth; built by Velaſco in the moſt pleaſant and richeſt part of all the Iland; but not ſo fitly, as the other, for Trade and Merchandiſe. 4 Porto del Principe, an Haven Town in the North parts: not far from which is the Fountain of a pitchie or bituminous liquor, ſpoken of before; which I conceive to be much of the ſame nature with the Fountains of Naphta in the Eaſt. 5 Trinidad, another of Velaſcos foundations, nine or ten leagues Eaſtward of the Port of Xagua: once well frequented, but now forſaken, and meer nothing. 6 Havana in the North parts, oppoſite to Florida, a noted and wel traded Port; ſo ſtrongly ſituate & fortified both by Nature and Art, that it ſeems impregnable. The Entrances defended with two notable Caſtles; a greater then either oppoſite to the mouth of the Haven; all ſo commodiouſly built, and well planted with Ordnance, that they are able to keep out and ſcatter the greateſt Navy. Neer one of them ſtandeth an high Tower, from the top whereof notice is given unto the Guards, of every ſhip that cometh within view of the Watchmen. The beſt aſſurance, not only of this Iland but the Bay of Mexico; and therefore honoured for the moſt part with the ſeat of the Governour, and the greateſt Trade of all theſe Seas: the ſhips which are bound for Spain from all parts of the Gulf, tarrying here for one another, till all met together, and ſetting ſail from hence by the Streits of Bahama, amongſt the Iſles of the Ducaios.

This Iland one of the firſt which was diſcovered by Columbus: who having almoſt tired the Spaniards with the expectation, firſt fell upon the Iland of Guahanani, one of the Lucaios, to which he gave the name of S. Savious. From thence he ſailed to Baracoa, on the North of this Iland, which he cauſed to be called Fernandina, in honour of Ferdinand the Catholick, King of Caſtile and Aragon; at whoſe charge and the incouragement of Iſabella his Heroick Queen, he purſued this enterpriſe. Landing, he asked the People if they knew Cipango (by which name Paulus Venetus calls the Iſle of Japan) and they conceiving that he enquired after Cibao (of great note for the richeſt Mines in Hiſpaniola) pointed towards Hayty; ſome of them going with him to conduct him thither. Cuba by this means laid aſide, and all the thoughts of Spain upon Hiſpaniola, where they found many golden provocations to invite their ſtay; till hungring after more Gold, and ſome new Plantations, they paſſed over hither: and in few years by the prudent conduct of Velaſco, got ſuch footing in it, and made that footing good by ſo many Colonies; that their title and poſſeſſion was beyond diſpute; and ſo continued to this day.

6. JAMAICA.

JAMAICA lyeth on the South of Cuba, from which diſtant 20 Leagues, and as much, or very little more, from Hiſpaniola. Diſcovered in the ſecond voyage of Columbus, by whom named S. Jago; that name changed afterwards to Jamaica.

It is in length from Eaſt to Weſt about 50 Leagues, and in breadth 20. the whole compaſs eſtimated at 150. the middle of it under the 18 Degree of Northern Latitude. Of a rich ſoyl, abundantly provided of all things neceſſary: well ſtocked with Cattle, and no leſs plentifully ſtored with moſt ſorts of Fruits, which either Induſtry or Nature have ſupplyed it with. Great ſtore of Cotton wool; and ſuch abundance abundance of Jaccu (a Root whereof the Savages once made their bread) that it was deemed the Granarie of the neighbouring Ilands. And were it not disfurnished of convenient Ports (which is all the want of it) would be as much frequented by the sea-faring men, as any other in those parts. Once very populous, now destitute of all the natural Inhabitants: this Iland, and that of Porto Rico, losing in few years 60000 by the Spaniards cruelties. Cruelties which not only raged upon the men, but destroyed posterity: the Women, here and elsewhere so abominating their sad condition, that they strangled their Children in the birth, to the end they might not live to serve such a cruel Nation.

Chief Towns hereof (for though it be well waterd, it hath no great Rivers) 1 Sevilla, in the North-part of the Iland, beautified with a goodly Monasterie, the Abbot whereof hath all Episcopal juridiction, and is priviledged to wear a Miter; in nothing more enobled, then that Peter Martyr the Historian (to whose Decades all succeeding Ages are to be beholding, for the Chorography, and History of these parts of the World) was once Abbot here. 2 Melilla, a small Town, but memorable for the unfortunate shipwrack of Columbus, on the shores adjoyning. 3 Oristan, on the South of the Iland, fourteen Leagues from Sevil. 4 De la Vega, now a ruine only, once a Spanish Colonie; and of great fame for giving the title of Dukes to Christopher Columbus, and his brother Bartholomew. Since whose time nothing hapned prejudicial to the State of this Iland by the hands of any but the Spaniards; till conquered, but not held by Sir Anthonie Sherley, An. 1596.

Thus having took a short Survey of the several parts of this great Body; we now briefly take a view of the Government and Forces of it. The Government committed chiefly to two great Vice-Royes, the one of Nova Hispania, who resides at Mexico; the othe of Peru, who abideth at Lima; the principal Cities of those Kingdoms. The first hath jurisdiction over all the Provinces of Nova Galitia, Nova Hispania, Guatimala, Castella Aurea, and the Provinces of the Mexican Ilands; the other over those of Peru, Chile, Rio de la Plata, and the new Realm of Granada. Such scattered pieces as they hold in Guyana, Paria, and the Caribes, with their Forts in Florida, being reduced to some of these. Of these the Vice-Roy of Peru is of greatest power, because he hath the nomination of all the Commanders and Officers within his Government: which in the other are reserved to the King himself. But that of New Spain counted for the better preferment, because of its nearness unto Spain (in respect of the other) the beauties of the City of Mexico, and the Civilities of the People. For the administration of Justice, and ordering the Affairs of the several Provinces, there are ten chief Courts, from which there lyeth no Appeal: that is to say, 1 Guadalaiara, for Gallicia Nova. 2 Mexico, for New Spain. 3 S Domingo, for the Province of the Ilands. 4 Guatimala, for the division so named. 5 And Panama, for Castella Aurea. Then for the other Government, Quitos, Lima, and Charcas, in the Realm of Peru. 9 Imperiale, for Chile. 10 S. Foy, for the New Realm of Granada. From these, though no Appeal doth lie in matter of justice; yet both from them and the two Vice-Royes an Appeal may lie in affairs of State, or point of Grievance. And to this end there is a standing Counsel in the Court of Spain, which is called the Counsel of the Indies, consisting of a President, eight Counsellors, two Proctors Fiscal (which we call the Sollicitors General) and two Secretaries, besides other Officers: to whom it appertaineth to take care of all matters which concern the Government of these Countries; to appoint the Vice-Royes, to dispose of all the great offices (except those of the Government of Peru) and spiritual Dignites; to appoint Visiters to go into those Provinces for the examining the actions of all Officers, hearing the grievances of the People, and to displace or punish as they find occasion; but with the Kings privity and consent.

As for the Estates of private men, they which hold Lands or Royalties from the Crown of Spain, hold them but for life (except it be the Marquesse of Valsa in New Spain, of the race of Cortez) after their deaths returning to the King again; who gives them commonly to the eldest son or the next of blood; but so that they receive it as a mark of his favour, and not for any right of these. And though they have many times attempted to make these Commanderies and Estates hereditary, and offered great sums of money for it, both to Charles the Fifth, and Philip the second; yet they could never get it done; the Kings most prudently considering, that these great Lords having the command of the Estates and Persons of their several Vassals, would either grinde them into powder without any remedy; or upon any Inquisition into their proceedings, take an occasion to revolt. Both dangers of no small importance, both by this uncertainty of their present Tenure, exceeding happily avoided.

The Revenue which the King receiveth hence, is said to be three Millions of Ducats yeerly: most of it rising out of the Fifths of the Mines of Gold and Silver: the rest by Customs upon Manufactures and all sorts of Merchandise, and the Acknowledgments reserved upon Lands and Royalty. But out of this there goeth great Exits, that is to say to the two Vice-roys 12000 Ducats; to the President and Officers of the Counsel of the Indies in Spain 20000 Ducats; to the Judges and Officers of the several Courts of Judicature very liberall Pensions; to every Arch-bishop and Bishop, of which there are 29 in all, 2000 Ducats at the least, and to some much more to mend their Benefices. Then reckoning in the infinite Charges, in maintaining Garrisons, and entertaining standing Bands both of Horse and Foot, in several parts of this Estate; and the continual keeping of a strong Armada, to conduct his Plate fleets to Spain, there must be made a great abatement, and the sum will bear it. For howsoever at the first his Revenue came from thence without any great charge more then the keeping of a few Souldiers to aw the Savages; yet after he fell fowl with England, and startled the Hollanders to Rebellion, he was compelled to fortifie all his Havens, and secure his Ports, and to maintain a strong Armada at the Sea to Convoy his Treasures. Before which time, the English (as is instanced in several places) did so share in his Harvest, that they left him scarce enough to pay his Workmen; which if they should attempt again upon any breach, they would finde it very difficult, if not impossible, to effect any thing on the Coasts, as in former times; or indeed any other way but by making themselves too strong for him at Sea, and thereby either intercept his Fleets, or hinder them from comming to him to supply his needs. And so much for the AMERICAN Ilands.

Having thus travelled over (with Gods blessing) the known parts of the World, and sailed through the most difficult Seas which embrace the same: we should now man our Barque again, and try what discovery we can make of the Parts unknown, or not so fully known to us as the others are.

——————atqui
Quo properas mea cymba? redi, satis ardua Ponti
Navimus; ecce Auster pluvias jam cogere nubes
Incipit, hic tutum non est (mihi crede) morari.
Dum licet in Portum tendamus; nubila clarum
Reddiderint ubi pulsa diem, revocabit ab Alto
Nos Triton Scopulo, atq; iterum tentabimus aquor.

That is to say,

But whether goes my Bark? Return, for we Have sliced the capering Brine enough; see, see,
The Southwind 'gins to gather clouds apace,
Tis no safe tarrying in so fierce a place.
While thou hast time retire thou wearied Bark
Into safe Harbour; when the clouds which dark
The Worlds bright eye shall be dispelled away,
And shining Phœbus make a lightsome day,
Tritons shrill Trump shall thee recall again,
From the safe Harbour to the foaming main;
And we with all our powers will boldly try,
What of this UNKNOWN WORLD we can descry.

A TABLE

An Advertiſement to the Reader, concerning the enſuing TABLES.

SHort Tables may not ſeem proportionable to ſo long a Work, eſpecially in an Age wherein there are ſo many that pretend to learning, who ſtudy more the Index then they do the Book. But to this Work ſhort Tables will be long enough, conſidering that the Running Titles on the top of each leaf, direct the Reader to a view of thoſe Countreys wh.ch he is to travel; and conſequently to as much knowledge of thoſe things which concern thoſe Countreys as this work can give him. Howſoever, that I may not be wanting in any point to the Readers eaſe, I have drawn thoſe Title into Method by the courſe of the Alphabet; and added all the reſt of the Provinces both great and ſmall, which are herein mentioned and deſcribed: with the names of thoſe Eſtates and Nations, whether old or new, the ſum of whoſe affairs is here drawn together. This being done in the firſt of theſe Tables, I have reduced into a ſecond, the names of thoſe particular Nations, with their ſeveral Tribes (the principal of them at the leaſt) which anciently inhabited thoſe Kingdoms, Provinces, and Iſlands, the Chorography and Hiſtory whereof is my chief endeavor: that being marſhalled by themſelves, they be no hinderance to the Reader in the ſearch of thoſe places, which he hath more deſire to viſit. And finally whereas there are many things in this work looking towards Philology, and ſome particulars not eaſily reducible to the other Tables, I have digeſted the chief of them into a third; leaving the reſt unto the conſideration of the ſtudious Reader, who poſſibly might take it ill if nothing ſhould be left to his care and memory.

A Table of the principal Countreys, Provinces, Mountains, Seas, and Iſlands, contained and deſcribed in this Book.

WORLD.

AN APPENDIX To the Former VVork,

Endeavouring a Diſcovery Of the UNKNOWN PARTS of the VVORLD.

AND here we are upon a new and ſtrange Adventure, which no Knight Errant ever undertook before. Of things unknown, as there is commonly no deſire, ſo leſs diſcourſe can probably be made upon them. By unknown therefore we muſt underſtand leſs known, or not well diſcovered; and in that ſenſe we may as well endeavour to ſay ſomewhat of them, as others with more pains and hazard to attempt the diſcovery. And to ſay truth, even in the known parts of the world there is much unknown; as in the beſt & moſt flouriſhing Kingdoms of the Earth there is ſome waſt ground, either not cultivated at all, or not ſo well inhabited as the reſt of the Country. For beſides many vaſt tracts of ground in the North and North-weſt parts of Tartary, and ſuch parts of India as lie Northwards towards Delanguer, Nangrocot, the Eaſt parts of Caucaſus, & the Realms of Cathay; it is conceived that the greateſt part of the midlands of Africk are undiſcovered to this day, or the knowledge of them ſo imperfect as comes near a neſcience. And for America, not reckoning in the Northern Borders (which are in part to be the ſubject of this enquiry) it is affirmed of the Midlands by John de Laet (who hath made the moſt exact deſcription of it that was ever extant) Minima, ſui parte perluſtratum eſſe, that the leaſt part of them hath been diſcovered hitherto to any purpoſe. Leaving theſe therefore as before without further ſearch, we will divide the UNKNOWN WORLD into theſe two parts, 1. Terra Incognita Borealis, and 2. Terra incognita Auſtralis; which with their Subdiviſions we will now purſue.

TERRA INCOGNITA BOREALIS.

TERRA INCOGNITA BOREALIS, is that part of the Unknown World which lieth towards the North; and is to be conſidered in theſe three notions. 1. As directly under the Pole, which for diſtinctions ſake we will call Orbis Arcticus; 2. As lying to the North-Eaſt on the back of Europe, and Aſia; or 3. on the North-weſt, on the back of America.

1. ORBIS ARCTICUS is that part of Terra Borealis incognita, which lyeth under or about the Arctick Pole; the ſituation and dimenſions of which being taken with the Aſtrolabe by an Oxford Frier, are by Mercator thus deſcribed out of the Itinerary of James Cnoxe of Bois le duc, or the Boſche a Town of Brabant.

"Under the Arctick Pole (ſaith he) is ſaid to be a black Rock of wondrous height, about 33 leagues "in compaſs, the Land adjoyning being torn by the Sea into four great Ilands. For the Ocean violent-"ly breaking thorow it, and diſgorging it ſelf by 19 Chanels, maketh four Euripi, or fierce Whirl-pools, "by which the waters are finally carried towards the North, and there ſwallowed into the Bowels of "the Earth. That Euripus or Whirlpool which is made by the Scythick Ocean hath five Inlets, and by "reaſon of his ſtreight paſſage, and violent courſe, is never frozen: the other on the back of Groenland, "being 37 leagues long, hath three inlets, and remaineth frozen three months yearly. Between theſe "two there lieth an Iland, on the North of Lappia and Biarmia, inhabited as they ſay by Pygmies, the "talleſt of them not above four foot high. A certain Scholar of Oxford reporteth, that theſe four Eu-"ripi are carried with ſuch furious violence towards ſome Gulf, in which they are finally ſwallowed up, "that no ſhip is able with never ſo ſtrong a Gale to ſtem the Current, and yet that there is never ſo "ſtrong a wind as to blow a Windmill. The like reported by Giraldus Cambrenſis in his Book De mirabilibus Hibernia. So far and to this purpoſe he. But Blundevile our Countryman is of another opinion, as indeed who not?) neither believing that Plinie or any other of the Roman writers came hither to describe this Promontory: or that the Oxford Frier, without the assistance of some cold Devil of the middle Region of the Air (and consequently able to endure all weathers) could approach so near as to measure these cold Countries with his Astrolabe, or take the height of this Black Rock with his Jacobs Staff. Leaving this therefore as more fit for Lucians Dialogues, than any serious discourse, we will proceed to matters of more truth and certainty.

2. The NORTHWEST parts of Terra Incognita Borealis, are those which lie on the back of Estotiland, the most Northern Province of America: by which it hath been much endeavoured to find out a passage to Cathay and China, and not to goe so far about as either by the Cape of Good Hope, or the Streights of Magellan. Attempted first by Sebastian Cabot, An. 1497. at the charge of Henry the 7th of England. But having discovered as far as to the 67 Degree of Northern Latitude, by the mutinie of his Mariners he was forced to return; where finding great preparations for a War with Scotland, that busines for the present was laid aside. Resumed by Gasper Corteriaglis, a Portugal, An. 1500, and after by Stephen Gamez, a Spaniard, in the year 1525. but neither of them went so far to the North as Cabot. The Spaniards notwithstanding would not so give over, but first with 5 ships from the Groyn, and afterwards by two from New Spain, sent out by Cortez, pursued the enterprize, which proving as succesless as the former had been, occasioned Charls the 5th. then preparing for Italie, on the payment of 35000 Ducats by King John the third, to suspend the prosecution of it. Followed with greater industry, but as bad succes by Sir Martin Frobisher, who made three Voyages for these parts (the first of them in the year 1579) and brought home some of the Natives, a Sea Unicorn horn (still kept in the great Wardrobe of Windsor Castle) and a great deal of the Ore of that Country, found upon tryal, when in England, not to quit the cost. A great Promontory which he passed by, he called Queen Elizabeths Foreland, in whose name he took possession of it; and the Sea running not far off, he called Frobishers Streights. The Seas full set with Icy Ilands, some of them half a mile about, and 80 Fathoms above water; the people like the Samoeds, the worst kind of Tartars, in their lives and habit. John Davies followed the design, An. 1585. at the incouragement of Sir Francis Walsingham, then principal Secretary of Estate: and having in 3 Voyages discovered to the Latitude of 73. by reason of the many difficulties which he found in the enterprize, and the death of Mr. Secretary, he was fain to give over; leaving unto a narrow Sea on the North of Estotiland, the name of Fretum Davies, in the Latitude of 65 and 20 Minutes, by which name still called. After him followed Weymouth, Hall, Hudson, Buton, Baffin, Smith, all English. The result of whose endeavours was the finding of some cold Isles and points of Land, which they named King James his Cape, Queen Anns Cape, Prince Henries Foreland, Saddle Iland, Barren Iland, Red-goose Iland, Diggs his Iland; all of them betwixt 80, and 81. and the imposing on some passages and parts of the Sea, the names of Hackluyts Headland, Smiths Bay, Hudsons Streights, Maudlins Sound, Fair Haven, and the like marks and monuments of their undertakings. Nothing atchieved of publike moment but the Discovery of an Iland called Cherry Iland in the Latitude of 74, and the shores of a large piece of the Continent, which they caused to be called King James his New Land, most commonly Greenland; where they found many white Bears, with white, grey, and dun Foxes, Patriges, Geese, and some other Provisions, Sea Unicorns Horns, great store of Morses, (or Sea-horses) the Oyl and Teeth whereof yeeld no small commoditie. But most considerable for the Trade of Whale-fishing, which our men use yearly upon those Coasts; of whose Oil, Bones, and Brain (this last supposed to be the true Sperma Cœti, now used as Medicinal) they raise very great profit.

3. The NORTHEAST PARTS of Terra Incognita Borealis, are those which lie on the North of Russia and Tartaria; by which the like passage towards Cathay and China hath been oft attempted; and hitherto with like succes. Endeavoured first by Sebastian Cabot, the son of John Cabot, so often mentioned before, by whom trained up in the Discovery of the North east parts of America. His employment failing here in England, he betook himself unto the service of the King of Spain; and coming out of Spain, An. 1549 was by King Edward the sixt made Grand Pilot of England, with an Annual Pension of 166 l. 13 s. 4. d. In the year 1553 he was the chief Dealer and Procurer of the Discovery of Russia, and the North-East Voyages, undertaken and performed by Sir Hugh Willoughby, Chancellour, Burrough, Jenkinson, and after prosecuted by Pet and Jackman. Some of which perished in the Action, and were frozen to death; their ship being found the next year hemmed about with ice, and a particular accompt of all things which had hapned to them. Others with better fortunes found the way to Russia (since that time made a common voyage, without dread or danger) and passing down the Volga to the Caspian Sea, and by that to Persia, were kindly entertained in the Court of the Sophie. The Hollanders in the year 1594, and in some years after, tried their Fortune also, under the conduct and direction of one William Barendson, their chief Pilot; but went no further than the English had gon before them; yet gave new names unto all places as they passed, as if they had been the first Discoverers; with pride and arrogance enough. Nothing since done of any note or consideration for the opening of this North-east passage, or giving us any better accompt of the North of Tartarie, or any Countries beyond that; but what we had many ages since out of Paulus Venetus; so that we are but where we were, in a Terra Incognita. And though I would not willingly discourage any noble Actions, or brave and gallant undertakings; yet when I look upon the natures of those Shores and Seas, those tedious winters of ten moneths, with no Summer following; the winds continually in the North, and the Main Ocean paved with Ice so long together: I cannot choose but rank the hopes of these Northern Passages amongst those Adventures which are only commendable for the difficulties presented in them.

TERRA AUSTRALIS INCOGNITA

Terra Australis.

WIth better hopes we may go forwards on the next Discovery, and try what may be done on TERRA AUSTRALIS, or the Southern Continent, though hitherto INCOGNITA also, almost as much unknown as the Artick Ilands, which none but my good Frier of Oxon had the hap to meet with. A Continent conceived by our learned Brerewood, to be as large as Europe, Asia, and Africk: and that upon such strength of Reasons, as cannot be easily over-born by any opposite. His arguments in brief are these, 1. That as touching Latitude, some parts thereof come very near to the Æquator, if they come not also on this side of it: and as for Longnitude, it keepeth along, though at several distances, the whole continual course of the other Continents. 2. It is clearly known, that in the other two Continents, the Land which lyeth on the North-side of that Line, is four times at the least as large as that which lies South thereof; and therfore since the earth is equally poized on both sides of her Center; it must needs be that the Earth in answerable measure and proportion must advance it self in some places above the Sea, on the South-side of the Line, as it doth in others on the North. By consequence, what is wanting in the South-parts of the other two Continents, to countervail the North-parts of them, must of necessity be supplyed in the Southern Continent.

The Country being so large, so free from the Incumbrances of Frosts and Ice, and endless Winters; I have oft marvelled with my self that no further progress hath been made in Discovery of it: considering chiefly by the site and position of the Country, especially in those parts which lye neareſt Asia, that there is nothing to be looked for elswhere, either of profit or of pleasures, but may there be found. Whether it be, that there is some Nil ultra put to humane endeavours; or that this people are not yet made ripe enough to receive the Gospel; or that the great Princes of the Earth think it no good Policy to engage themselves in New Discoveries, till the Old be thorowly planted, and made sure unto them; or that the Merchant, who in matters of this nature hath a powerfull influence, thinks his hands full enough already; and being setled in so many and so wealthy Factories, will not adventure upon more. Which of all these, or whether all of these together be the cause of this stop, I am not able to determine. Certain it is that here is a large field enough for Covetousness, Ambition, or Desire of glory to spend themselves in; enough to satisfie the greatest and most hungry appetite of Empire, Wealth, and Worldly pleasures; besides the Gallantry and merit of so brave an Action. Most which hath hitherto been done in it, hath been by the incouragements of the Vice Royes of New Spain and Peru: by the first of which we came acquainted with the Coasts of Nova Guinea; by the latter, with those Countries called the Ilands of Solomon, but whether Continents or Ilands, not yet fully known.

And yet we must not rob Magellanus of his part of the honor, who passing thorow the Streights, which now bear his name, discovered those parts of it which from the fire thence seen he called Terra del Fuego, found by the Hollanders of late under James le Maire to be an Iland. Nor do the English or the Dutch want their parts herein, though what they did, was rather Accidental, than upon Design. For in the year 1593. Sir Richard Hawkins being bound for the Streights of Magellan, was by a cross wind driven on some parts of this Continent, to which he gave the name of Hawkins his Mayden Land; A Promontery of it shooting into the Sea with three points he called Point Tremontein; and a pleasant Isle not far off, by the name of Fair Iland. Sayling along these Coasts in the 50 Degree of Southern Latitude, for the space of 60 miles and upwards, he found the Country as he passed to be very pleasant; and by the fires which he saw in the night to be well inhabited. By the like accident, Anno 1599. Sibald de Weert, a Hollander, in his return from the Streights of Magellan fell upon some Ilands of this Southern Continent, in the Latitude of 50 Degrees and 40 Minutes, which he caused to be called Sibalds Ilands. And besides these we owe to the Portugals the discovery of such parts hereof, as they fell on in their way to the Eastern Indies; of which we have little but the names, as Psittacorum Terra, so called from the aboundance of Parrats which they saw on the Coasts, over against the Cape of good Hope. 2. Beach, a Region yielding Gold, and possessed by Idolaters; with the two Kingdomes of 3. Lucach, and 4. Maletur; all three against the Isles of Java, from which little distant.

But the greatest light we have to see by into this dark business, is by the Voyages and Adventures of the Spaniards, employed by the two Vice-Royes of Peru and Mexico, as before was said. For in the year 1543 the Governor of New-Spain then being, sent Villa Lobos with a Fleet towards the Moluccos, who in that Voyage made a Discoverie of a rich and flourishing Countrie which he named Nova Guinea, by others since his time called Terra de Piccinacoli; and in the year 1563, Castro the Licentiate, then Vice-Roy of Peru, sent a Fleet from Lima, which under the conduct of Lopes Garcia de Castro, discovered the Ilands of Solomon. To which if we subjoin the success of the Hollanders in the Discovery of Fretum le Maire, and the Lands adjoining; The best Descripriion we can make of this Southern Continent, must be in the Chorography and Hsstory of their Adventures; viz. 1. Terra del Fogo, 2. Insula Solomonis, 3. Nova Guinea: beginning first with Terra del Fogo, because neareſt to us.

1. TERRA DEL FUEGO, lies on the other side of the Streight of Magellane, heretofore thought to be a part of Terra Australis Incognita, or the Southern Continent, but is now discovered to be an Iland by one Jacob Mayre of Amsterdam, accompanied by Cornelius Schouten of Horn, both Hollanders. They began their Voyage on the 15 of June, Anno 1615. and on the 19 of January following they fell even with the Streight of Magellan. On the 24 of the same Month they had the sight of ano-

another Streight, which seemed to separate this Terra del Fuego from the rest of the Southern Continent; and on the 25 they entred into it. That part of the Land which (being entred into the Streight) they had on the West, they called Terra Mauritii de Nassaw; that on the East, Statenland; the Streight it self, Fretum le Maire. The entrance into the Streight they found to be in 55 degrees of Southern Latitude, and 50 Minutes; the Waters running into the North-Sea with so violent an Eddie, Ut adversum maris æstum difficulter superare possemus, saith he, who in the way of Journal or Ephemerides, hath described the whole course of this Voyage. In the whole course whereof nothing so much observable (besides this Discovery) as that they found that at their coming home they had lost a day (as must needs happen unto such, as in so tedious a voyage had travelled Westward) that being Saturday to them which was Sunday to the Hollanders, and the rest of Europe; though they had calculated the days since their going out with all exactness. So that if there were any such Morality in the Sabbath, as some men pretend, these men must either keep their Sabbath on a different day from the rest of their Countrymen; or otherwise to complie with them, must be guilty of the breach of the Sabbath all the rest of their lives. But of this more at large elsewhere. To return therefore to this Streight, it is said to be seven Dutch miles, or 28 of ours in length, and of a fair and equal breadth; plentifull of good fish; especially of Sea-Calves and Whales. About the inserting of which Streight into the third Edition of my Microcosm, I received a Letter at such time as the Parliament was held in Oxon, An. 1625 subscribed G. B. and a little under that, Sub granda floridus: which whether it were the Gentlemans Motto, or the Anagram of his name, I am not able to say, having never heard more of him from that time forwards, though his desires were satisfied in the next Edition of that work. "For my encouragement "wherein he gave me this direction following, The News (saith he) of this New Streight coming in- "to Spain, it pleased that King in the year 1618, to send and search whether the truth were answera- "ble unto the Report. And finding it to be much broader than the other, and not above seven Dutch "miles long; decreed, that being the more ease and compendious way for Navigators, and less sub- "ject to dangers; his Auxiliary Forces should be sent that way into the East-Indies, to defend to Phi- "lippinæ and Molucco Ilands, and the way by the Cape of good Hope to be left. In regard that every such "voyage, requireth twice as much time: besides the variety of winds, and often change of the Air, "not only troublesom, but full of diseases, consumeth the one half of the men before they return. "Whereas this way gaineth time (and if need be, they may dispatch business in the West as they travel "into the East) without any extraordinary danger or losse of men. So far the very words of my letter. The intelligence given me in this Letter, I find confirm'd in a Relation of the Voyage made by Captain Don Iuan de More, Anno 1618. at the command and charge of the King of Spain, who presently arm'd and furnish'd eight tall ships to send this new way unto his Philippines and Moluccos; under the conduct of Petrus Michaelis de Cordoelen. Since it hath been found by experience, that even from our parts to the Moluccos, through this Fretum de Mayre, is but a passage of eight moneths: Sine ulla insigni navigantium clade, saith the Narrator. But of this streight enough, to satisfie my unknown well willers request, and enform my Reader: extremely sorry that the Gentleman was not pleased to impart his name, that so his memory might have lived in these Papers, if they themselves be destinate to a longer life.

Now for the nature of the soil, it is said to be very full of Mountains; but those Hills apparelled with woods, intermixt with Vallies; the Vallies for the most part full of little Brooks which fall down from the Mountains, and afford good pasturage; the Sea-coasts well provided of Bays and Roads, not unsafe for shipping: though the Air every where, but chiefly near the Sea, be much subject to Tempests. As for the People, they are said to be of a white complexion; but their Face, Arms, and Thighs, coloured with a kind of Oker: of full stature and well-proportioned, their hair black, which they wear long to seem more terrible. The men most generally naked, the women only shaded on their secret parts, with a piece of Leather.

Towns they have none, nor any Habitations which deserve the name of houses; so that the most which we can doe is to Coast the Iland. In which we find towards Mare del Noort, 1. A large Arm of the Sea, called Entrado de S. Sebastian. 2. The Cape of S. Ives. 3. Mauritius land. 4. Promontorio de de Buen Suseio, or the Cape of Good Success. Opposite whereunto in another Iland is the Cape of S. Bartholomews; and betwixt them the Streight called Fretum le Maire. Then in the New South Sea, as they call it, there are 5. Barnwelts Island. 6. The Ilands of S. Ildefonso. 7. Cape Horn on a fair Promontory, in the South-west Ande: which doubled, the Country goes along with a strait shore, on which I find some Bayes and Capes, but no names unto them; till we come to the Western entrances of the Streight of Magellan, opposite unto Cape Victoria, so often mentioned.

2. INSULÆ SOLOMONIS, or the Ilands of Solomon, are situate on the West of Terra del Fogo, 11 degrees on the South of the Equinoctial. Discovered in the year 1567. by Lopes Garcia de Castro, sent by the Vice-Roy of Peru to find out new Countries. By whom thus named, in hope that men would be rather induced to inhabit in them; imagining that Solomon had his Gold from these Lands of Ophir.

In number they are many, but 18 the principal: Some of which 300 miles in compass, others 200, and others of them less, till we come to fifty, and beneath that, none. All liberally furnished with Dogs, Hogs, Hens, Cloves, Ginger, Cinamon, and some veins of Gold. The chief of these eighteen are, 1. Guadalcanal, supposed to be the greatest of them; upon the coast whereof the Spaniards sailed 150 Leagues, where they found a Town which they burned and sacked, because the People of it in a sudden surprize, had killed fourteen of their men. 2. S. Isabella 150 leagues in length, and 18 in breadth; the Inhabitants, ſome black, ſome white, ſome of brown complexion. 38. Nicolas, 100 Leagues in compaſs, inhabited by a People which are black of hue, but ſaid to be more witty than the other Salvages. All of them ſituate betwixt the Streights of Magellan, and the Ilands of Theeves; and yet not well agreed upon amongſt our Authors, whether to be accompted Ilands, or a part of the Continent: The Spaniards having ſailed 700 Leagues on the Coaſts hereof, and yet not able to attain unto any certainty. But being they paſſe generally in accompt for Ilands, and by that name are under the Vice-Roy of Peru, who appoints their Governours, let them paſſe ſo ſtill. Nova Guinea

3. NOVA GUINEA lyeth beyond the Ilands of Solomon, in reſpect of us, proceeding as we have begun from the Land of Fire. Diſcovered, as before was ſaid, An. 1543. by Villa Lobos (Herrera attributes the diſcovery of it to Alvarez de Saavedra, and ſets it higher in the year 1527.) more perfectly made known, if I gueſs aright, by Fernando de Quir. Who being ſent with two Ships to make a more full diſcovery of the Ilands of Solomon, and taking his courſe about the height of the Magellan ſtreights, diſcovered a main Land coming up cloſe to the Æquinoctial, on the Coaſts whereof he ſailed 800 Leagues, till he found himſelf at laſt in the Latitude of 15 Degrees, diſcovering a large Bay into which fell two great Rivers, where he purpoſed to ſettle a Plantation, and to that end preſented a Petition to the King of Spain. This Country I conceive by the ſite and poſition of it to be Nova Guinea, coming up cloſe as that doth, to the Æquinoctial; and after turning to the South towards the Tropick of Capricorn, where it joyneth with Maletur. And taking it for granted, as I think I may, I ſhall afford the Reader this Deſcription of it, out of his Memorials; in which it is ſoberly affirmed to be a Terreſtrial Paradiſe for wealth and pleaſures. The Country plentifull of Fruits, Coco-nuts, Almonds of four ſorts, Pom-citrons, Dates, Sugar-canes, and Apples: plenty of Swine, Goats, Hens, Partiges, and other Fowl, with ſome Kine and Buffals. Nothing inferiour (as it ſeemeth) to Guinea, in the Land of Negroes; and from thence ſo named. For, as he ſaith, he ſaw amongſt them Silver and Pearls, and ſome told him of Gold; the Countries on the Coaſt ſeeming to promiſe much felicity within the Land. The Air he found to be whole and temperate, the Sea ſhores to be full of Baies, Havens, and the Exits of Rivers, making ſhew as of another China. The Inhabitants he affirmeth to be innumerable, ſome white, ſome like the Mulatos, others like the Negros; diverſified in Habit, as well as Colour. Their bread made of three ſorts of Roots: without Government, but not without Religion; for they had their ſeveral Oratories and places of burial, but neither King, nor Laws, nor Arts. Divided by that want, and in dayly wars with one another; their Arms, Bows, Arrows, and other weapons, but all made of wood. Of this Country, whatſoever it was (if not Nova Guinea) he took poſſeſſion in the name of the Catholike King, and ſet up both a Croſs and a Chapel in it; the Chapel dedicated to the Lady of Loretto.

The preciſe time of this Diſcovery I have no where found, but that the time ſpent about it is by him affirmed to be 14 years, to the no ſmall endamagement of his health and fortunes. Nor do I find that any care was taken of his Petition, or any thing elſe done by others in purſuance of his Propoſitions. Whether it were on any of the reaſons before laid down; or that there was no credit given to his affirmations, I determine not. Nor find I that he gave any names to the Baies or Promontories, as he paſſed along; but either took ſuch names as were given before, or found not any thing worth the naming. And for ſuch names as were given before (ſtill taking Ferdinando Quir's new Country for Nova Guinea) we find a Promontorie called Cape Hermoſo, in the Eaſt parts hereof near the Ilands of Solomon, and not far from the Æquator. 2. Another in the Weſtern part, but as near the Æquinox called Point Primiro. A third in the firſt bendings of the Coaſt towards the South, called Cape de Buena Deſeada, or the Cape of good deſires. 4. Rio de Valcanes. 5. Rio de Lorenzo. 6. Rio de S. Auguſtino, on the Eaſt of Cape Formoſo towards the Streights. 7. The Rivers of S. Peter. 8. S. Paul. 9. S. Andrew. And 10. S. James, betwixt Cape Formoſo and Primiro.

But being there is little certain of theſe laſt diſcoveries, and the greateſt certainty we have of that little, is nothing but a Liſt of names without any thing obſervable in the ſtate and ſtory of the ſame, they may ſtill retain the old name of Terra Incognita. And therefore I will try my fortune, and without troubling the Vice-Royes of Peru, and Mexico, or taking out Commiſſion for a new Diſcovery, will make a ſearch into this Terra Auſtralis for ſome other Regions, which muſt be found either here or no where. The names of which, 1. Mundus alter & idem, 2. Utopia, 3. New Atlant's, 4. Fairy Land, 5. The Painters Wives Iland, 6. The Lands of Chivalrie, And 7. The New World in the Moon.

1. MUNDUS ALTER ET IDEM, another world, and yet the ſame, is a witty and ingenious invention of a learned Prelate, writ by him in his younger days (but well enough becoming the auſterity of the graveſt head) in which he diſtinguiſheth the Vices, Paſſions, Humours, and ill Affections moſt commonly incident to mankind, into ſeveral Provinces; gives us the Character of each, as in the deſcriptions of a Country, People, and chief Cities of it: and ſets them forth unto the eye in ſuch lively colours, that the vitious man may ſee therein his own Deformities, and the well-minded man his own imperfections. The Scene of this deſign laid by the Reverend Author in this Terra Auſtralis; the Decorum happily preſerved in the whole Diſcovery; the ſtile acutely clear, the invention ſingular. Of whom and his New World I ſhall give you that Eulogie, which the Hiſtorian doth of Homer, Nec ante illum quem ille imitaretur, nec, poſt illum qui eum imitari poſſet inventus eſt.

2. UTOPIA is a Country firſt diſcovered by Sir Thomas More, after Lord Chancellor of England; and by him made a Scene of a Commonwealth, which neither Solon, nor Lycurgus, nor any of the Legiſlators of former times did ever dream of; nor had been fancied by Plato, Ariſtotle, Tullie, or any who have written the Ideas of a form of Government, though not reducible to practice. Some of his Plots we have took notice of already, as viz. his device to bring Gold and Silver into contempt by making making of those metals, Chains and Fetters for their Malefactors, Pans of Close-stools, Camber-pots, and Vessels of such unclean use; by imposing it as a penalty on infamous persons, to wear Gold Rings upon their Fingers, and the like devices: as also his device to prevent mistakes and dislikes in mariages, by giving the parties a full view of each other, naked. Many more projects of this nature, some of them possible enough, but so unpracticable, so beyond hope of being looked on in the modelling of a Commonwealth, that we may reckon this device amongst those strange fancies, quæ nunquam antea spe concepta, ne dum opere tentata erant. The man indeed (considering the times he lived in) of rare abilities; but this Utopia fitted only to the Meridian of this Southern Continents, this Terra Australis Incognita, in which now we are, and to no place else.

3. NEW ATLANTIS is an Iland of this Southern Continent discovered by Sir Francis Bacon, the learned Viscount of S. Albans; one of Sir Thomas Mores successors in the place of Lord Chancellour, but far before him in the Excellency and feasibility of his invention. It had this name with reference to Atlantis, an Iland of the Western or Atlantick Ocean, mentioned in the Works of Plato, both alike invisible. But for his falling on this Iland, his description of it, the City of Ben-Salem, and the manner of his reception there, such handsom probabilities, and so fairly carried, that to one not acquainted with the State of the World, it would seem a Reality, but above all things, the inventions and designs of Solomons House, for perfecting the works of nature, or rather improving nature to the best advantages of life, and the benefit of mankind, are beyond comparison. The man I must confess had his personal errours (I know none without them) of good and bad qualities equally compounded, Mores ejus vigore & levitate mixtissimi, as Paterculus once said of Piso: not one amongst many thousands (to pursue that Character) qui aut otium valdius diligat, aut facilius sufficiat negotio. A man of a most strong Brain, and a Chymical Head. Who if he had been entertained with some liberal Salarie, abstracted from all Affairs both of State and Judicature, and furnished with sufficiency both of means and helps, for the going on in his design, would I am confident, have given us such a body of natural Philosophie, and made it so subservient to the publike good, that neither Aristotle or Theophrastus amongst the Antients, nor Paracelsus, or the rest of our later Chymists, would have been considerable.

4. FAERIE LAND, is another part of this Terra Incognita; the habitation of the Faeries, a pretty kind of little Fiends, or Pigmey Devils, but more inclined to sport than mischief, of which old Women who remember the times of Popery, tell us many fine stories. A cleanlier and more innocent cheat was never put upon poor ignorant people, by the Monks and Friers. Their habitation here or no where; though sent occasionally by Oberon and their other Kings to our parts of the World. For not being reckoned amongst the good Angels, nor having malice enough to make them Devils (but such a kind of middle Sprites, as the Latines call Lemures Larvæ) we must find out some place for them, neither Heaven or Hell, and most likely this. Their Country never more enobled, than by being made the Scene of that excellent Poem, called the Faerie Queen. Intended to the honour of Queen Elizabeth, and the greatest persons in her Court: but shadowed in such lively colours, framed so exactly by the Rules of Poesie, and representing such Ideas of all moral goodness; that as there never was a Poem more Artificial; so can no Ethical discourse, more fashion and inflame the mind to the love of virtue. Invisurum facilius aliquem quam imitaturum, shall be Spencers Motto; and so I leave him to his rest.

5. The PAINTERS WIVES ILAND, is an Iland of this Tract, mentioned by Sir Walter Raleigh, in his History of the World. Of which he was informed by Don Pedro de Sarmiento, a Spanish Gentleman, imployed by his King in planting some Colonies on the Streights of Magellan, (which we have touched upon before) Who being taken Prisoner by Sir Walter in his going home, was asked of him about some Iland which the Maps presented in those Streights, and might have been of great use to him in his undertaking. To which he merrily replied, that it was to be called the Painters Wives Iland, saying, that whilst the Painter drew that Map, his wife sitting by, desired him to put in one Country for her, that she in her imagination might have an Iland of her own. His meaning was, that there was no such Iland as the Maps presented. And I fear the Painters wife hath many Ilands and some Countries too upon the Continent in our common Maps, which are not really to be found on the strictest search.

6. The LANDS OF CHIVALRIE are such Ilands, Provinces and Kingdoms, in the Books of Errantry, which have no being in any known part of the World, and therefore must be sought in this. A gross absurdity, but frequent in those kind of Writers, who in describing the Adventures of their Knights, in despight of Geographie (with which indeed they had no acquaintance) have not only disjoyned Countries which are near together, and laid together Countries which are far remote; but given us the description of many Ilands, Provinces, and mighty Kingdoms, which as the ingenious Author of the History of Don Quixot, merrily observeth, are not to be found in all the Map. Of this sort is the Isle of Adamants in Sir Huon of Burdeaux; the Firm Iland in the History of Amadis de Gaul; the hidden Iland, and that of the Sage Aliart in S. Palmerin of England; the Ilands of Lindaraza, and the Deviliſh Fauno, with the Kingdom of Lyra (of which the Amazonian Lady Archisilora was the rightfull Queen) and many others of that kind in the Mirrour of Knighthood; and divers of like nature in Palmerin de Oliva, Primalion, and Belianis of Greece, Parismus, the Romance of Romances, and indeed who not of all that Rabble? Handsomely humoured by Michael de Cervantes in his Iland of Barutaria, of which the famous Sancho Panca was sometimes Governour, and the Kingdom of Micomicona. And yet I cannot but confess (for I have been a great Student in these books of Chivalrie) that they may be of very good use to children or young boys in their Adolescency. For besides that they divert the wind from worſe cogitations, they perfect him that take pleaſure in them in the way of reading, beget in him an habit of ſpeaking, and animate him many times to ſuch high conceptions as really may make him fit for great undertakings.

7. THE NEW WORLD IN THE MOON, was firſt of Lucians diſcovering; a man of eminent parts, but as ill a conſcience, apoſtatizing from the faith in which he was bred. Ariſtophanes had before told us in one of his Comedies of a Nephelococcygia, or a City of Cuckoes in the Clouds. But Lucian was the firſt who found out this New World in the Moon; of which, and of the Inhabitants of it, he affordeth us in one of his Dialogues a conceited Character. But of late times, that world which he there fancied, and propoſed but as a fancy only, is become a matter of a more ſerious debate: and ſome have laboured with great pains to make it probable, that there is another World in the Moon, inhabited as this is by perſons of divers Languages, Cuſtoms, Polities, and Religions: and more than ſo, ſome means and ways propoſed to conſideration for maintaining an intercourſe and commerce betwixt that and this. But being there are like endeavours to prove that the Earth may be a Planet, why may not this Southern Continent be that Planet, and more particularly that Moon, in which this other World is ſuppoſed to be? Certainly there are ſtronger hopes of finding a New World in this Terra Auſtralis, than in the Body of that Planet; and ſuch perhaps as might exceed both in profit and pleaſure the later diſcoveries of America.

But I am no diſcourager of induſtry and ingenuity, which I love and honour whereſoever I find it. I know great Truths have many times been ſtarred upon leſs preſumptions. Nor would I be miſtook, as if in my purſute of this Terra Incognita, I put ſcorn on any of ſublimer thoughts; or that I would have any man ſo much in love with the preſent World, as not to look for another World in the Heaven above. It is reported, that in ſome controverſie betwixt the Polander and the Duke of Muſcovie, the King of Poland ſent the Muſcovite a curious Globe, repreſenting the whole Heavenly Bodies, with the particular motion of each ſeveral Sphere. To which the Muſcovite returned this unworthy Anſwer, Tu mihi Cœlum mittis, Redde mihi Terras de quibus contendimus; You ſend me Heaven, ſaith he, but that will not ſatisfie, unleſs you give me back thoſe Lands which are now in queſtion. And much I fear there are too many of this mind, who would not loſe their part on Earth for all Heaven it ſelf. Whom I deſire, if any ſuch peruſe theſe Papers, to conſider, that as much as the moſt flouriſhing Country which is here deſcribed, doth fall ſhort of that Paradiſe wherein God placed our Father Adam, ſo much and infinitely more did that Earthly Paradiſe fall ſhort of the unſpeakable glories of the Kingdom of Heaven. To the diligent and carefull ſearch of which Heavenly Kingdom I heartily commit the Reader: not doubting but the Works of GOD which are here preſented, and that viciſſitude of Humane affairs which is herein touched at, may prompt him to ſome ſerious thoughts of that mighty GOD who made all theſe Works, in whom is no ſhew nor ſhadow of change. To whom be given all Glory, both in this World, and that to come.

Quicquid enim Lunæ gremio complectitur Orbis,
Permutat variátque vices, trepidóque tumultu
Æſtuat, & nunquam ſentit pars una quietem.
Nam ruit in ſeſe, & civili vulnere ſemper
Aut cadit, aut perimit; alióque renaſcitur ore,
Rurſus ut intereat; ſic non eſt omnibus unum
Partibus ingenium, non vis nativa. Sed Orbes
Aſtriferi, & nitidi ſublimis Regia Cœli
Immunis ſenii, & vultu immutabilis uno
Perpetuum ſervat ſolida & ſincera tenorem.

The Verſes are G. Buchanans, in his Book De Sphæra. Which I thus tranſlate, and therewithall conclude this Work.

The World beneath the Moon its ſhapes doth varie,
And change from this to that; nor can it tarie
Long in one ſtate: but with it ſelf doth jar,
Kils, and is kill'd, in endleſs Civil war.
New form'd again, 'tis but to die. The frame
Neither of Bodies nor of Minds the ſame.
But That above the Spheres, the Heavens on high,
In which GOD reigns in glorious Majeſty,
Free from old Age, unchang'd, and of one face,
Alwaies preſents it ſelf in equal Grace.

Non nobis*, Domine, *non nobis, ſed Nomini tuo detur Gloria.

FINIS.
